The Bolivian govt publically thanked the American people for their loans and grants.. But it pointed out that Bolivia COULD NOT fight Russian Imperialism ALONE.... Of course Bolivia's plight is not just caused by Moscow. But IT IS clear that at least the Bolivian government knows what the score is.. And that those who shout aBout SENDING american troops and CUTTING-OFF aid to Bolivia, should remember that Vice President Nixon received his warmest latin-american reception in Bolivia just a few months before russia declared economic war... This is Larry LeSueur-- I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the News-- first G.B. on the wet

Like many a tourist at a fair, Premier Kruschev looked tired after his second day of tramping around the grounds at Leipzig...He sank into a chair at one exhibit, glanced at a brandy bottle on the table, and temporarily forgot his campaign against drinking...He sighed and said: "What a pity that bottle is empty." [redacted] asked if he'd like to try some medicine, [redacted] who has admitted to liver trouble..accepted [redacted]

This is Larry LeSueur...Ed Murrow will be back on Monday...Goodnite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 6, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening everyone...Here's what happened today:

The leaders of Congress voiced unanimous support of a firm policy regarding Berlin. The congressional leaders went to the White House this morning at President Eisenhower's invitation, and received a briefing that lasted an hour and a half. Among others attending the conference were: Vice President Nixon, Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter, Secretary of Defense Neil McElroy and Allen Dulles, director of Central Intelligence. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said after the White House meeting, "There is no thought of yielding to pressure." But at the same time, he said, we are willing to explore every avenue for peace. Senator Johnson told reporters that he had discussed with the President the need for "gathering our strength as quickly as possible." With this in mind, Johnson said, the Senate Preparedness Subcommittee will review the military situation, probably next week. Members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and other defense officials will be asked to testify.

House Speaker Rayburn said after seeing the President, "We want the world to know that we are unified when it comes to foreign affairs and in getting ready to do the things that ought to be done." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen and House Republican Leader Halleck of course advocated firmness...but emphasized that the door to negotiations with Russia is not closed. This, Dirksen declared is so that it may not be said of us that we are rigid, instead of firm. And Halleck said that anything that can be done with honor to maintain the peace will be done.

The meeting at the White House came just three hours after it was announced that British Prime Minister Macmillan will come to Washington on March 19th for a series of conferences with President Eisenhower on the German situation.

Mr. Macmillan will be accompanied by his foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. And it is assumed that they will also call on Secretary Dulles in Walter Reed Army Hospital.

President Eisenhower drove out to the hospital this afternoon and talked with Mr. Dulles for about half an hour. Democratic Senator Fulbright says he has a "hunch" that a decision on whether Dulles can resume the full dutues of his office will come in the next two weeks. Fulbright...the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee...hastens to add that he has no "real"information on the subject...just a hunch.

When the British prime minister is in Washington, he will fill in Mr. Eisenhower on his recent mission to Moscow. CBS News in Paris learns that the report that President DeGaulle may also go to Moscow is not correct. A high French source says that even if DeGaulle did receive an invitation from Khrushchev he would not accept---one, because DeGaulle is chief of state and would refuse to accept an invitation from a head of government...and two, because he believes it would be a grave sign of weakness if the Western leaders, demonstrating their anxiety and confusion, were to go off to Moscow, one by one.

In his talks with Premier Khrushchev, Mr. Macmillan discussed the possibility of disengagement in Central Europe---a possible "pull-back" of troops of both sides of the Iron Curtain. It was something, the two leaders agreed, which ought to be looked into. Today...in Bonn...an official spokesman for the West German government said that Chancellor Adenauer opposes the idea of disengagement. And the spokesman indicated that President DeGaulle opposes it, too.

In East Germany today, Premier Khrushchev continued his tour of the Leipzig Trade Fair...predicted there will be no war and called again for expansion of trade. He ordered 100-thousand dollars' worth of British machine tools at one of the exhibits.

The Indian parliament was in a turmoil today...as Communist deputies questioned Prime Minister Nehru about the new defense treaty between the United States and India's neighbor, Pakistan. The treaty says that, to prevent aggression, the United States will take "such appropriate action, including the use of armed forces, as may be mutually agreed upon." The Communists claimed that this was a threat to India. Prime Minister Nehru promised to obtain clarification from the United States ambassador.

Meantime...in Pakistan...a foreign ministry spokesman said the treaty would be invoked by his government in the event of aggression from any quarter. And that, he said, includes India and Kashmir. In Washington, a State Department spokesman says that the treaty threatens no country... that it is "entirely defensive in nature."

There was violence in Nyasaland today for the fourth straight day. Colonial security forces opened fire on a crowd of rioting Africans, killing one and wounding three.. The Africans are described as being armed with spears, axes and clubs. Nyasaland is a British protectorate, in Southeast Africa.

America's artificial planet...Pioneer IV...lost its "voice" today, more than 400-thousand miles out in space. For all practical purposes, the batteries of the radio transmitter went dead at 10:15 A.M. Eastern time. The small goldplated capsule was then 406 thousand miles from Earth...traveling at a speed of 3-thousand, 899 miles an hour. The few radio signals received after that were "just a flicker."

In Congress today, Democratic leaders cleared the Hawaiian statehood bill for Senate action before Easter. The measure probably will be taken up next Thursday.

In Montgomery, Alabama today...a federal judge dismissed the Justice Department suit...designed to force the registration of qualified negro voters in Macon County. U.S. District Judge Frank Johnson ruled that since the members of the Board of Registrars had resigned, there was no one left for the Justice Department to take action against. He also held that the Civil Rights Act... passed in 1957....does not give the Federal Government authority to sue individual states, accused of violating voting rights. The Justice Department says the ruling will be appealed.

Well, we're told the Americans are moving back into the United States Embassy in La Paz,Bolivia...the explosion of anti-American demonstrations appears to be over. It's a pity that the anti-American riots in poverty stricken Bolivia occurred over nothing more significant than some indiscreet words in the Latin-American edition of Time Magazine, which as the world now knows, quoted a U.S. Embassy spokesman in La Paz, as saying in jest that the best thing to do with Bolivia was to abolish it, and to divide its territory and problems among its neighbors.

But if the disturbances are to be regretted, the significance of the riots stretches far beyond the lofty peaks of the Andes. It is fresh evidence that latent hostility to the United States, lies close to the surface in many countries south of the border, yet this is surely not extraordinary, since the rich and powerful are traditionally more respected than loved. But those who patronize are just aksing to be disliked.

The history of Bolivia fifth largest, but least populated Republic of South America has been a series of bloody wars and of territory lost to its more powerful neighbors. And thus, what the American magazine clearly labelled as a wise-crack, touched upon a raw, exposed nerve in Bolivia. No nationally minded people, of course could entertain even a poor joke about having their state divided up among its neighbors. In the case of Bolivia, it's never even become reconciled to its land-locked position, especially the loss of its pacific seacoast to Chile in the 19th century "war of the pacific." That was a long time ago, of course, in 1884. But a lot of modern Bolivians and Americans too for that matter, can remember the bloodiest modern war ever fought in South America. The chaco jungle war between Bolivia and Paraguay that lasted from 1932 to 1935 with Bolivia seeking to capture a river outlet across the continental divide to The Atlantic, that war was an unmitigated disaster for Bolivia. She not only lost upward of 60 thousand men killed, but she was bled white and left bankrupt with the 1938 treaty finally reducing Bolivia to about half the territory she originally possessed when Simon Bolivar first liberated her from Spain.

There are those in the United States who think Bolivia's present government is graft-ridden and inept. Mistakes certainly have been made in the past. Bolivia did seize the properties of the tin barons, nationalizing its only big industry, tin-mining. It still hasn't paid for them, and in general its economic policies since then, have led to a raging inflation. Bolivia's story has exemplified that of other backward countries dependent on a single commodity, in this case tin, the boom and bust cycle in the price of raw commodities has been disastrous. In the past five years this country has poured well over a hundred million dollars into that unhappy land. However, this hasn't been done purely for reasons of charity. The heads of the Bolivian labor unions are known as communists, although not necessarily followers of Moscow, and the plight of Bolivia has not escaped the attention of Russia.

The government of President Siles Suazo may have been slow to realize the danger, but he has since reacted firmly, it may be well to recall that on October 2nd of this year, the Bolivian government took a full-page ad in the New York Times proclaiming that Bolivia was the victim of Soviet aggression in the Americas.

The advertisement, appealing to the American people to understand the facts of economic life, pointed out that Soviet Russia had committed economic aggression, by dumping large quantities of cheap tin on the world market.

The Bolivian appeal underscored the fact that by maliciously by-passing the International Tin Council which was created to help stabilize tin prices, the Soviet Union succeeded in collapsing the world tin market within fifteen days... at a cost to Bolivia of almost one-fifth of its meagre yearly revenues. The Bolivian government warned that this deliberate attempt to collapse the Bolivian economy, might lead to a second phase of communist attack...the undermining of the poverty-stricken Bolivian people.

The Bolivian government publicly thanked the American people for their loans and grants, but it pointed out that Bolivia cound not fight Russian imperialism alone. Of course Bolivia's plight is not just caused by Moscow. But it is clear that at least the Bolivian government knows what the score is, and those who shout about sending American troops and cutting off aid to Bolivia, should remember that Vice President Nixon received his warmest Latin American reception in Bolivia just a few months before Russia declared economic war.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: Like many a tourist at a fair, Premier Khrushchev looked tired after his second day of tramping around the grounds at Leipzig. He sank into a chair at one exhibit, glanced at a brandy bottle on the table, and temporarily forgot his campaign against drinking. He sighed and said: "What a pity that bottle is empty."

This is Larry Le Sueur....Ed Murrow will be back on Monday....Goodnite.

Edward R. Murrow Mon., March 9, 1959

This is the news:

Premier Khrushchev today modified his proposal for converting West Berlin into a "free city". / Khrushchev said the independence of West Berlin might be guaranteed by Soviet troops stationed in the city, along with troops of the United States, Britain and France. / Or, he said, the guarantee might be implemented by neutral forces. / He said again that Russia would not object to the United Nations taking part. / This is the first time Khrushchev has suggested that Western troops might stay in Berlin. / It is noted, however, that Russian troops would also be garrisoned in West Berlin. (There are none there now). / And Khrushchev stipulates that these forces, including those from the West, would have no right to "interfere" with the internal life of the city. / He also says that only a "minimum" of troops would be allowed. / Khrushchev made the offer in a speech...delivered at a Communist rally in East Berlin.

—)

In Washington, the State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, has declined comment. He said, "There have been so many conflicting statements over the past few days that it is difficult to differentiate between one and the other."

During the day, Khrushchev conferred with Erich Ollenhauer, head of the West German Socialist Party. / Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin is reported to have rejected an invitation from Khrushchev for a similar meeting.

British Prime Minister Macmillan flew to Paris today to report to French leaders on his recent talks in Moscow. / Macmillan conferred at length this morning with the French premier, Michel Debre (DEH-BRAY'), and tomorrow he will see President DeGaulle. / The French...as well as the West Germans... want to know where Macmillan stands on the issue of disengagement, the thinning out of nuclear weapons and troops on both sides of the Iron Curtain. The joint communique, issued after the Macmillan-Khrushchev talks, advocated that the question be given careful study. / Apparently

Mr. Macmillan is giving the French some reassurance. A British spokesman in Paris took pains today to point out that agreeing to "study" a proposal is not the same thing as "agreeing" to it. ~~British The prime minister will fly to Bonn on Thursday to see Chancellor Adenauer...and then later this month he will come to Washington.~~

A revolt has broken out in Iraq, and victories are being claimed by both sides. None of these claims, however, has been confirmed. The revolt reportedly was led by Colonel Shawaf (SHAH-WAHF'), commander of an Army brigade at Mosul (MO'-SEL), in Northern Iraq. He is believed to be anti-Communist and pro-Nasser...and has accused the Kassem government of betraying the revolution of last July. The government radio in Baghdad said early today that Colonel Shawaf's (SHAH-WAHF'S) headquarters had been destroyed in a bombing attack and that Shawaf was dead. "The government," the Baghdad radio said, "is in complete control." The rebel radio---identifying itself as the Mosul (MO'-SEL) radio---says this is nonsense. Shawaf is alive, it says, and leading his troops toward Baghdad, 200 miles to the south. It claims that a government force sent against Mosul (MO'-SEL) has been completely wiped out. According to Israeli sources, the rebel radio probably is operating from somewhere in Syria, which is part of Nasser's United Arab Republic.

The State Department has withheld comment, pending clarification.

Democratic Senator Proxmire today made another speech critical of the role played by Lyndon Johnson as Senate leader. Proxmire again denied anything personal in his criticism. The junior senator from Wisconsin spoke of Johnson's "proven political genius." But, he said, there has been too little debate of national issues on the floor of the Senate. He warned, "Unless we stop this trend, more and more crucial matters will be decided over the telephone, in the cloakroom or almost any private place where dissent can be silenced without public knowledge." Proxmire blamed Johnson for not meeting with Democratic senators to draft a broad fiscal policy that could be offered as an alternative to the budget policy advanced by the President. ~~He said, "We may think the President's budget proposals are wrong, but we can't escape the fact that it is the only budget that has been proposed by the responsible head of either party."~~

Senator Johnson made no immediate reply. He said that his preparedness subcommittee would begin hearings on Wednesday "to get the truth with the bark off" concerning the defense budget. Congress, Johnson said, has the right to know whether the civilian officials of the Budget Bureau know more about the nation's defense needs than the military experts. If so, he said, "then we have been wasting money on West Point for a long time." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen and Republican Senator Cooper of Kentucky cautioned Democrats against going "too far" in their statements regarding this country's defense posture.

The Senate Armed Services Committee today approved a four-year extension of the draft in its present form. The measure may now be called up for consideration by the full Senate.

Edward R. Murrow: March 9, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

One might say that the best-publicized fact in Washington today is that President Eisenhower wants to balance the budget. Certainly there is nothing reprehensible in that. As Senator Dirkson has pointed out, polls show that voters are seven-to-one, for a balanced budget. It is not unlike being for motherhood and against sin. The question that troubles Washington is whether at this time the budget can be balanced without weakening national defense. To say that this troubles Washington is an understatement. It troubled Washington before the Berlin crisis reached its present pitch. Now the strength of the military establishment has become a critical factor in the coming test with the Soviet Union.

When the President sent his budget to Congress it had the approval of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, a fact that does not quite mean what it implies. For the Joint Chiefs either had to approve, or come out in open revolt against their Commander-in-Chief. They undoubtedly felt that an open revolt would sensationalize the situation beyond need, and might do serious damage to American prestige abroad and to morale at home. There are other ways of bringing out the essential facts about national defense. So long as Congress knows that the approval of the Joint Chiefs has been general, rather than specific, it can learn the specific views. Secretary McElroy told a Senate Committee that the chiefs had "found no serious gap in the key elements in the budget" but that all had made reservations. The Senate committee thereupon asked the chiefs to put their reservations in writing. Their memoranda were published today.

The one that attracted the most immediate attention, because of the Berlin crisis, was by General Taylor, who pointed out the absence of any anti-missile defense. He said that his reservation in this area arose from the unopposed I.C.B.M. threat, and from his conviction that the importance of obtaining a defensive weapon outweighed any financial risk from going into immediate production. Research is being done on the Nike-Zeus missile, which is the only system under development capable of defending against inter-continental missiles, and those launched by submarines. But not a cent has been set aside to produce the missile or its equipment. General Taylor also noted that funds for surface-to-air missiles fall short of what is needed to reach the goals recommended by the Joint Chiefs.

He further raised a serious question about modernizing the army on the current budget. Simply to replace the existing army inventory costs about ten percent of its value a year, or ten percent of fourteen billion dollars. The inventory, however, needs to be extended to twenty billion if the army is to be kept up to date. At present the replacement of existing inventory and the cost of industrial mobilization are not fully covered by the budget. The shortage is two hundred million dollars. No funds whatever are budgeted for the larger sum needed for modernization.

General Taylor also records that he asked for an army of fifteen divisions, with 925,000 men and 700,000 paid-drill reserves. He got one division less, a reduction in army strength of 55,000 and of reserve strength of 70,000. This,he says, comes at a time when army commanders in Europe and Korea are obliged to put large numbers of foreign nationals into combat and support units. This, he said, incurs heavy dependence on foreign personnel which might have serious consequences in an emergency.

The memo of General White, Air Force Chief of Staff, is terse and restricted to a listing of certain shortcomings in the Air Force. B-47's are not being replaced as rapidly as requested; the work on a prototype of a nuclear-powered airplane is not proceeding; not enough is being spent on the long-range Bomarc interceptor; funds for Air Force operations and maintenance are being deferred in some cases till later budgets.

Admiral Burke complains that the Navy is not being modernized. General Pace objects to the cutdown of the Marine Corps from 200,000 to 175,000 men, and to the failure to modernize amphibious techniques and keep the naval airpower constant.

President Eisenhower told congressional leaders last week that economic stability is as essential to national security as defense. He also told his news conference that nobody is better ~~XXXXXXX~~ fitted than he to judge the requirements of defense. But the judgment of the President on defense spending has been overridden by Congress before, and now that the Joint Chiefs have quietly said their say, it seems likely to happen again.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

The Joint Chiefs of Staff have put down...in black and white... their "reservations" with regard to the defense budget recommended by the ~~Administration.~~ President. They might in support of their argument quote this observation made by Will Rogers...who said, "All we got to go by is history. And history don't record that economy ever won a war."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 9, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Premier Khrushchev today modified his proposal for converting West Berlin into a "free city." Khrushchev said the independence of West Berlin might be guaranteed by Soviet troops stationed in the city, along with troops of the United States, Britain and France. Or, he said, the guarantee might be implemented by neutral forces. He said again that Russia would not object to the United Nations taking part. This is the first time Khrushchev has suggested that Western troops might stay in Berlin. It is noted, however, that Russian troops would also be garrisoned in West Berlin. (There are none there now.) And Khrushchev stipulates that these forces, including those from the West, would have no right to "interfere" with the internal life of the city. He also says that only a "minimum" of troops would be allowed. Khrushchev made the offer in a speech...delivered at a Communist rally in East Berlin.

In Washington, the State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, has declined comment. He said, "There have been so many conflicting statements over the past few days that it is difficult to differentiate between one and the other."

During the day, Khrushchev conferred with Erich Ollenhauer, head of the West German Socialist Party. Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin is reported to have rejected an invitation from Khrushchev for a similiar meeting.

British Prime Minister Macmillan flew to Paris today to report to French leaders on his recent talks in Moscow. Macmillan conferred at length this morning with the French premier, Michel Debre, and tomorrow he will see President DeGaulle. The French...as well as the West Germans want to know where Macmillan stands on the issue of disengagement, the thinning out of nuclear weapons and troops on both sides of the Iron Curtain. The joint communique, issued after the Macmillan-Khrushchev talks, advocated that the question be given careful study. Apparently Mr. Macmillan is giving the French some reassurance. A British spokesman in Paris took pains today to point out that agreeing to "study" a proposal is not the same thing as "agreeing" to it.

A revolt has broken out in Iraq, and victories are being claimed by both sides. None of these claims, however, has been confirmed. The revolt reportedly was led by Colonel Shawaf, commander of an Army brigade at Mosul, in Northern Iraq. He is believed to be anti-Communist and pro-Nasser...and has accused the Kassem government of betraying the revolution of last Judy. The government radio in Baghdad said early today that Colonel Shawaf's headquarters had been destroyed in a bombing attack and that Shawaf was dead. "The government," the Baghdad radio said, "is in complete control." The rebel radio---identifying itself as the Mosul radio---says this is nonsense. Shawaf is alive, it says, and leading his troops toward Baghdad, 200 miles to the south. It claims that a government force sent against Mosul has been completely wiped out. According to Israeli sources, the rebel radio probably is operating from somewhere in Syria, which is part of Nasser's United Arab Republic. The State Department has withheld comment, pending clarification.

Democratic Senator Proxmire today made another speech critical of the role played by Lyndon Johnson as Senate leader. Proxmire again denied anything personal in his criticism. The junior senator from Wisconsin spoke of Johnson's "proven political genius." But, he said, there has been too little debate of national issues on the floor of the Senate. He warned, "Unless we stop this trend, more and more crucial matters will be decided over the telephone, in the cloakroom or almost any private place where dissent can be silenced without public knowledge." Proxmire blamed Johnson for not meeting with Democratic senators to draft a broad fiscal policy that could be offered as an alternative to the budget policy advanced by the President.

Senator Johnson made no immediate reply. He said that his preparedness subcommittee would begin hearings on Wednesday "to get the truth with the bark off" concerning the defense budget. Congress, Johnson said, has the right to know whether the civilian officials of the Budget Bureau know more about the nation's defense needs than the military experts. If so, he said, "then we have been wasting money on West Point for a long time." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen and Republican Senator Cooper of Kentucky cautioned Democrats against going too far in their statements regarding this country's defense posture.

The Senate Armed Services Committee today approved a four-year extension of the draft in its present form. The measure may now be called up for consideration by the full Senate.

One might say that the best-pubiicized fact in Washington today is that President Eisenhower wants to balance the budget. Certainly there is nothing reprehensible in that. As Senator Dirksen has pointed out, polls show that voters are seven-to-one, for a balanced budget. It is not unlike being for motherhood and against sin. The question that troubles Washington is whether at this time the budget can be balanced without weakening national defense. To say that this troubles Washington is an understatement. It troubled Washington before the Berlin crisis reached its present pitch. Now the strength of the military establishment has become a critical factor in the coming test with the Soviet Union.

When the President sent his budget to Congress it had the approval of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, a fact that does not quite mean what it implies. For the Joint Chiefs either had to approve, or come out in open revolt against their Commander-in-Chief. They undoubtedly felt that an open revolt would sensationalize the situation beyond need, and might do serious damage to American prestige abroad and to morale at home. There are other ways of bringing out the essential facts about national defense. So long as Congress knows that the approval of the Joint Chiefs has been general, rather than specific, it can learn the specific views. Secretary McElroy told a Senate Committee that the chiefs had "found no serious gap in the key elements un the budget" but that all had made reservations. The Senate committee thereupon asked the chiefs to put their reservations in writing. Their memoranda were published today.

The one that attracted the most immediate attention, because of the Berlin crisis, was by General Taylor, who pointed out the absence of any anti-missile defense. He said that his reservation in this area arose from the unopposed I.C.B.M. threat, and from his conviction that the importance of obtaining a defensive weapon outweighed any financial risk from going into immediate production. Research is being done on the Nike-Zeus missile, which is the only system under development capable of defending against inter-continental missiles, and those launched by submarines. But not a cent has been set aside to produce the missile or its equipment. General Taylor also noted that funds for surface-to-air missiles fall short of what is needed to reach the goals recommended by the Joint Chiefs.

He further raised a serious question about modernizing the army on the current budget. Simply to replace the existing army inventory costs about ten percent of its value a year, or ten percent of fourteen billion dollars. The inventory, However, needs to be extended to twenty billion if the army is to be kept up to date. At present the replacement of existing inventory and the cost of industrial mobilization are not fully covered by the budget. The shortage is two hundred million dollars. No funds whatever are budgeted for the larger sum needed for modernization.

General Taylor also records that he asked for an army of fifteen divisions, with 925,000 men and 700,000 paid-drill reserves. He got one division less, a reduction in army strength of 55,000 and of reserve strength of 70,000. This, he says, comes at a time when army commanders in Europe and Korea are obliged to put large numbers of foreign nationals into combat and support units.

This, he said, incurs heavy dependence on foreign personnel which might have serious consequences in an emergency.

The memo of General White, Air Force Chief of Staff, is terse and restricted to a listing of certain shortcomings in the Air Force. B-47's are not being replaced as rapidly as requested; the work on a prototype of a nuclear powered airplane is not proceeding; not enough is being spent on the long-range Bomarc interceptor; funds for Air Force operations and maintenance are being deferred in some cases till later budgets.

Admiral Burke complains that the Navy is not being modernized. General Pace objects to the cutdown of the Marine Corps from 200,000 to 175,000 men and to the failure to modernize amphibious techniques and keep the naval airpower constant.

President Eisenhower told congressional leaders last week that economic stability is as essential to national security as defense. He also told his news conference that nobody is better fitted than he to judge the requirements of defense. But the judgment of the President on defense spending has been overridden by Congress before, and now that the Joint Chiefs have quietly said their say, it seems likely to happen again.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Joint Chiefs of Staff have put down...in black and white...their "reservations" with regard to the defense budget recommended by the President. They might in support of their argument quote this observation made by Will Rogers...who said, "All we got to go by is history. And history don't record that economy ever won a war."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., March 10, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower told Republican congressional leaders today that when it comes to the defense requirements of the country, and a balanced budget, the defense requirements come first. He insisted, however, that in the new budget these military requirements are met. House Republican Leader Halleck explained the President's position. When you spend more than you need, he said, you weaken the country through inflation.

[~~Senator Saltonstall, chairman of the Republican Senate Conference, told reporters that in Administration planning "the defense of our country will always come first."~~]

Republican lawmakers who attended the weekly White House conference said Mr. Eisenhower "definitely" is opposed to a one-year extension of the special unemployment compensation program...as advocated by some Democrats. The program "liberalizing" unemployment benefits was passed last year at the peak of the recession. The President, Halleck said, would like to see these benefits continued on a temporary basis.

Former Secretary of State Dean Acheson said today that accepting inferiority to Russia in the field of long-range ballistic missiles is a policy of "national suicide". Acheson told a news conference in Washington that such a policy makes "no sense at all."

The Defense Department announced today that it has awarded contracts... in the amount of 27-million dollars...for extending the "Dew Line" across the top of the North American continent to Greenland. The "line" consists of a string of radar stations, set up to warn against attack by enemy aircraft. It now extends from the Aleutian Islands to Baffin Island, off the Canadian east coast. Under the new contracts, four new radar stations would be built in Greenland by Danish and American firms.

In California today, the experimental rocket ship...X-15...left the ground for the first time.. It did not fly but was attached under the wing of a B-52 jet bomber. In the cockpit of the X-15 was a test pilot, Scott Crossfield...who checked instruments with the pilot of the "mother" aircraft. The X-15 has a jet engine of 50-thousand pounds thrust...and is designed to take a man a hundred miles out in space. Its first "space flight" is scheduled...tentatively...for sometime next summer.

The Atomic Energy Commission revealed today that it has succeeded in setting off a "baby" nuclear explosion...possessing a force equivalent to only one ton of T.N.T. ~~The commission made the disclosure in a report on the series of tests carried out at the Nevada proving grounds last fall.~~

President Eisenhower today ordered mandatory controls placed on the import of gasoline and crude oil. The President said he was putting restrictions on the importation of oil in the interest of national security...and to insure a "healthy, stable" domestic petroleum industry. A voluntary control program has been in operation since the middle of 1957. And Mr. Eisenhower says that while the oil industry generally had cooperated, some importers had not. The new controls are effective tomorrow in the case of crude oil and on April first in the case of gasoline and other finished products.

The President today nominated Ogden Reid of the New York Herald Tribune to be ambassador to Israel. George M. Johnson, former dean of the Howard University Law School, was named to succeed the late J. Ernest Wilkins as a member of the Civil Rights Commission.

British Prime Minister Macmillan today conferred with President DeGaulle in what are officially described as "fruitful talks." Britain and France are said to have agreed...with the United States...on a time and place for an East-West meeting of foreign ministers. The West is insisting that the foreign ministers discuss not only the German problem but the over-all question of European security. In talking with Macmillan today, DeGaulle reportedly stressed the importance of maintaining a firm policy on Berlin.

Today... in East Berlin...Premier Khrushchev discussed the question of a separate peace treaty with East Germany. Khrushchev conferred with East German leaders. And tonight, at a banquet, he made it plain that if any Western troops stay on in West Berlin, comparable Soviet forces must also be stationed there. Khrushchev was referring to his proposal yesterday that the status of West Berlin be guarenteed, either by troops belonging to the Big Four powers, or by neutral forces. Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin has called Khrushchev's proposal unacceptable.

In a speech today in Warsaw, Polish Communist leader Gomulka denounced the leaders of West Germany as "militaristic butchers". Gomulka accused the West Germans of plotting to recover the territory obtained by Poland after World War Two. And he predicted that a peace treaty would be concluded with East Germany, whether the West likes it or not.

The government of Iraq said today that the revolt in the northern part of the country has been crushed. However, the Damascus radio...in Syria... claims that air attacks against rebel positions in Northern Iraq are continuing. And the semi-official Middle East News Agency in Cairo says that a Syrian village, just across the border from Iraq, has been strafed by Iraqi aircraft. None of these reports have been confirmed.

Edward R. Murrow: March 10, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The Senate today voted to authorize forty-eight million, three hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars for civilian space research during this fiscal year. The vote was ninety to nothing; and the sum is exactly what the Administration asked for.

The last space vehicle to fly was Pioneer IV, payload 13.4 pounds. It went out past the moon, transmitter working perfectly beyond four hundred thousand miles. It is now silent and orbiting the sun.

Pioneer IV was blasted aloft by the Army Ordinance Missile Command, commanded by General Bruce Medaris. To this reporter the humans were more interesting than the hardware. The nose cone on the payload, about the size of a two-quart coffee tin, looking like a foreshortened ice-cream cone. Striped gold & silver The whole missile assembled, resembled an over-size fifty caliber cartridge, bathed in the glare of white searchlights. The check list, the items that had to be checked and re-checked, ran to seventy-six pages - some fifteen hundred items. The blockhouse, or control room, about sixty yards from the Pioneer IV, was of steel and concrete six feet thick, roughly the size of a moderate ranch house....About fifty people locked inside. Between eight and nine hundred dials and meters. The man in charge of the firing was

Dr. Kurt Debus, once of the University of Darmstadt, later with the Guided Missile Center at Peenemunde, where the Germans developed the V-2. He has probably fired more missiles than any other man; wearing grey suede shoes, grey suit, red tie, and saber scars on his left cheek, he looks out over that field of dials and graphs with the satisfied look of a prosperous farmer observing his crops after a gentle rain. He knows that a loose screw, a bit of dust on a relay, or a bit of solder in the wrong place will mean failure. The countdown moves along through the weary hours, the messages being checked and called off by Bob Moser, from Vanderbilt University, an ex-GI, who is the countdown co-ordinator -- tall, six-foot-four, calling out the count in a clear flat voice, with no more emotion than he would employ in reading a laundry list.

Five men sit at a panel resembling the control room in a television studio. You notice that things are quieter and more restrained here than they frequently are in a television control room. Both orders and responses where humans are involved are repeated by two men in an effort to eliminate the possibility of human error. Ice cream is being eaten, mostly chocolate, milk is drunk out of paper containers as the checking continues. When they begin to check the delicate telemetering devices, all motors in the area must be stopped. Word comes in from the roadblock about a mile away that Wernher von Braun and Professor Pickering, head of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory at Pasadena where the payload was constructed, have been stopped and refused permission to proceed. Everyone seems to find this mildly amusing. Most of the men in the blockhouse are wearing sport shirts and slacks - an ordinary oldfashioned telephone man comes in with his pliers and screwdrivers and seems very much out of place.

You are told, with some pride, that the Pioneer IV was built by the Army Ordinance Missile Command, the only service that can do that all the way from the drawing board to the moon.

Bob Moser continues his countdown - "twenty-nine and counting." There is a thin veneer of sweat on the faces of most of the men. The scars on Debus's face seem to deepen a little; someone says: "This should be called a hothouse, not a blockhouse". The laughter that greets this witticism seems a little louder than it should be, but otherwise there are no signs of tension.

There is a five-minute hold in the countdown, and you are told that there is practically no turnover of personnel in this outfit. A young, small,boy with a big cigar asks: "If you had a chance to work on this sort of thing, would you be willing to do anything else?" There are more than a thousand men involved in the shooting and tracking that thirteen-pound payload. You get the feeling that they are not excited but that they are a new "brotherhood" engaged in stretching the fingertips of science out into the unknown. Kurt Debus is quietly and courteously running the whole show. The questions go to him. Bob Moser continues to count. And then something went wrong - only one tiny wire. Debus decided not to shoot. That meant draining the liquid oxygen, replacing the faulty part, and going through the whole process again the next day. The following night Pioneer IV took off, and sent back more information, ranging all the way from vibration to radiation. It missed the moon. The brotherhood of missile men knew it would miss, and by how much within an hour of the time it growled and roared up into the Florida sky. It added another layer to the pyramid of knowledge from the top of which man may someday leap into outer space.

In these days of confusing initials, of duplicating and competing agencies, organizations and commands. it is perhaps not redundant to report again, that the job was done by the Army Ordinance Missile Command.

Back in a moment. -

George Burfan -

WORD FOR THE DAY

While at Cape Canaveral, ~~waiting for Pioneer IV~~, I remembered a story told me by Professor James T. Shotwell, ~~the eminent historian.~~ His taxi driver in Washington asked him for an explanation of the sentence: "What's past is prologue". Professor Shotwell explained ~~at great length the meaning,~~ that it was by Shakespeare, from "The Tempest", and then asked his driver whether he understood. The driver said he did, he guessed it really meant: "You ain't seen nothin' yet!"

Good Night + Good luck"

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower told Republican congressional leaders today that when it comes to the defense requirements of the country and a balanced budget the defense requirements come first. He insisted, however, that in the new budget these military requirements are met. House Repubiican Leader Halleck explained the President's position. When you spend more than you need, he said, you weaken the country through inflation.

Republican lawmakers who attended the weekly White House conference said Mr. Eisenhower definitely is opposed to a one-year extension of the special unemployment compensation program...as advocated by some Democrats. The program "liberalizing" unemployment benefits was passed last year at the peak of the recession. The President, Halleck said, would like to see these benefits continued on a temporary basis.

The Defense Department announced today that it has awarded contracts...in the amount of 27 million dollars...for extending the "Dew Line" across the top of the North American continent to Greenland. The "line" consists of a string of radar stations, set up to warn against attack by enemy aircraft.

In California today, the experimental rocket ship...X-15...left the ground for the first time. It did not fly but was attached under the wing of a B-52 jet bomber. In the cockpit of the X-15 was a test pilot, Scott Crossfield...who checked instruments with the pilot of the "mother" aircraft. The X-15 has a jet engine of 50-thousand pounds thrust...and is designed to take a man a hundred miles out in space. Its first "space flight" is scheduled...tentatively...for sometime next summer.

Tha Atomic Energy Commission revealed today that it has succeeded in setting off a "baby" nuclear explosion...possessing a force equivalent to only one ton of T.N.T.

President Eisenhower today ordered mandatory controls placed on the import of gasoline and crude oil. The President said he was putting restrictions on the importation of oil in the interest of national security...and to insure a "healthy, stable" domestic petroleum industry. A voluntary control program has been in operation since the middle of 1957. And Mr. Eisenhower says that while the oil industry generally had cooperated, some importers had not. The new controls are effective tomorrow in the case of crude oil, and on April first in the case of gasoline and other finished products.

The President today nominated Ogden Reid of the New York Herald Tribune to be ambassador to Israel. George M. Johnson, former dean of the Howard University Law School, was named to succeed the late J. Ernest Wilkins as a member of the Civil Rights Commission.

British Prime Minister Macmillan today conferred with President DeGaulle in what are officially described as "fruitful talks." Britain and France are said to have agreed...with the United States...on a time and place for an East-West meeting of foreign ministers. The West is insisting that the foreign ministers discuss not only the German problem but the over-all question of European security.

Today...in East Berlin...Premier Khrushchev discussed the question of a separate peace treaty with East Germany. Khrushchev conferred with East German leaders. And tonight, at a banquet, he made it plain that if any Western troops stay on in West Berlin, comparable Soviet forces must also be stationed there. Khrushchev was referring to his proposal yesterday that the status of West Berlin be guaranteed, either by troops belonging to the Big Four powers, or by neutral forces. Mayor Willy Brandt of West Berlin has called Khrushchev's proposal unacceptable.

In a speech today in Warsaw, Polish Communist leader Gomulka denounced the leaders of West Germany as "militaristic butchers." Gomulka accused the West Germans of plotting to recover the territory obtained by Poland after World War Two. And he predicted that a peace treaty would be concluded with East Germany, whether the West likes it or not.

The government of Iraq said today that the revolt in the northern part of the country has been crushed. However, the Damascus radio...in Syria...claims that air attacks against rebel positions in Northern Iraq are continuing. And the semi-official Middle East News Agency in Cairo says that a Syrian village, just across the border from Iraq, has been strafed by Iraqi aircraft. None of these reports have been confirmed.

The Senate today voted to authorize forty-eight million, three hundred and fifty-four thousand dollars for civilian space research during this fiscal year. The vote was ninety to nothing; and the sum is exactly what the Administration asked for.

The last space vehicle to fly was Pioneer IV, payload 13.4 pounds. It went out past the moon, transmitter working perfectly beyond four hundred thousand miles. It is now silent and orbiting the sun.

Pioneer IV was blasted aloft by the Army Ordinance Missile Command, commanded by General Bruce Medaris. To this reporter the humans were more interesting than the hardware. The nose cone on the payload, about the size of a two-quart coffee tin, looking like a foreshortened ice-cream cone, striped gold and silver. The whole missile assembled, resembled an over-size fifty caliber cartridge, bathed in the glare of white searchlights. The check list, the items that had to be checked and re-checked, ran to seventy-six pages - some fifteen hundred items. The blockhouse, or control room, about sixty yards from the Pioneer IV, was of steel and concrete six feet thick, roughly the size of a moderate ranch house...about fifty people locked inside. Between eight and nine hundred dials and meters. The man in charge of the firing was Dr. Kurt Debus, once of the University of Darmstadt, later with the Guided Missile Center at Peenemunde, where the Germans developed the V-2. He has probably fired more missiles than any other man; wearing grey suede shoes, grey suit, red tie, and saber scars on his left cheek, he looks out over that field of dials and graphs with the satisfied look of a prosperous farmer observing his crops after a gentle rain. He knows that a loose screw, a bit of dust on a relay, or a bit of solder in the wrong place will mean failure. The countdown moves along through the weary hours, the messages being checked and called off by Bob Moser, from Vanderbilt University, an ex-GI, who is the countdown co-ordinator - tall, six-foot-four, calling out the count in a clear flat voice, with no more mention than he would employ in reading a laundry list.

Five men sit at a panel resembling the control room in a television studio. You notice that things are quieter and more restrained here than they frequently are in a television control room. Both orders and responses where humans are involved are repeated by two men in an effort to eliminate the possibility of human error. Ice cream is being eaten . mostly chocolate, milk is drunk out of paper containers as the checking continues. When they begin to check the delicate telemetering devices, all motors in the area must be stopped. Word comes in from the roadblock about a mile away that Wernher von Braun and Professor Pickering, head of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory at Pasadena where the payload was constructed, have been stopped and refused permission to proceed. Everyone seems to find this mildly amusing. Most of the men in the blockhouse are wearing sport shirts and slacks - an ordinary old-fashioned telephone man comes in with his pliers and screwdrivers and seems very much out of place.

You are told, with some pride, that the Pioneer IV was built by the Army Ordinance Missile Command, the only service that can do that all the way from the drawing board to the moon.

Bob Moser continues his countdown - twenty-nine and counting. There is a thin veneer of sweat on the faces of most of the men. The scars on Debus's face seem to deepen a little; someone says; "This should be called a hothouse, not a blockhouse." The laughter that greets this witticism seems a little louder than it should be, but otherwise there are no signs of tension.

There is a five-minute hold in the countdown, and you are told that there is practically no turnover of personnel in this outfit. A young, small boy with a big cigar asks: "If you had a chance to work on this sort of thing, would you be willing to do anything else?" There are more than a thousand men involved in the shooting and tracking that thirteen-pound payload. You get the feeling that they are not excited, but that they are a new brotherhood engaged in stretching the fingertips of science out into the unknown. Kurt Debus is quietly and courteously running the whole show. The questions go to him. Bob Moser continues to count. And then something went wrong - only one tiny wire. Debus decided not to shoot. That meant draining the liquid oxygen, replacing the faulty part, and going through the whole process again the next day. The following night Pioneer IV took off, and sent back more information, ranging all the way from vibration to radiation. It missed the moon. The brotherhood of missile men knew it would miss, and by how much within an hour of the time it growled and roared up into the Florida sky. It added another layer to the pyramid of knowledge from the top of which man may someday leap into outer space.

In these days of confusing initials, of duplicating and competing agencies, organizations and commands, it is perhaps not redundant to report again, that the job was done by the Army Ordinance Missile Command.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moemtn with the word for today. But first a word from George Bryan.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW:While at Cape Canaveral, I remembered a story told me by Professor James T. Shotwell. His taxi driver in Washington asked him for an explanation of the sentence: "What's past is prologue." Professor Shotwell explained that it was by Shakespeare, from "The Tempest," and then asked his driver whether he understood. The dirver said he did; he guessed it really meant: "You ain't seen nothin' yet!"

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., March 11, 1959

This is the news:

The Senate has just passed a bill to make Hawaii the 50th state. The vote was 76 to 15 after six hours of general debate. The House voted today to take up a similar statehood measure, and its final vote is due tomorrow.

~~This is the news:~~

President Eisenhower's news conference today dealt mainly with the Berlin crisis and the adequacy of this country's defense. It was the eighth news conference the President has held in the past eight weeks. One of the questions he was asked was whether the United States is prepared to resort to nuclear war...if necessary...to defend West Berlin. He said he did not know how you "free" anything with nuclear weapons. But nuclear war, he said, was not a "complete impossibility". Our ground forces could not hope to match Russia's 175 divisions. But, he warned, the United States is "never going to go back on its rights and its responsibilities." Mr. Eisenhower said that he did not "think much" of Premier Khrushchev's proposal for making West Berlin a "free city"...and garrisoning it with Soviet as well as American, British and French troops. He said this country needs to avoid hysteria and stand steady in its shoes. He thought the American public is more "soberly" aware of the situation than a lot of people in Washington. "We are so close to ourselves here," he said, "that we have a great possibility of stirring ourselves up." The President said he was tired of talking about the idea of "balanced budget against national security."... and challenged members of Congress who want more military manpower to show their courage and call for the taxes necessary to foot the bill.

When asked about this, Democratic Senator Symington said he would vote for higher taxes, if they are needed. But higher taxes would not be necessary, he said, if Mr. Eisenhower would reorganize the Defense Department. House Speaker Sam Rayburn said he was the same way about defense as he had always been about foreign aid---"I've voted for the maximum amounts." And then he added, "I think that's what I'll do this year."

The question of military manpower came up today when the Army chief of staff, General Taylor, testified before Senator Johnson's preparedness subcommittee. The testimony was given behind closed doors, but Johnson...who is Senate Democratic leader...said afterward that there could be only one conclusion. "That is," he said, "that the size and composition of the Army does not reflect the judgment of the men who must lead the Army in the event the Army must be used." General Taylor...in talking to reporters... said that he had twice recommended an Army of 925-thousand men. The Administration wants to reduce the Army to 870-thousand men. And when Taylor was asked whether he still wants 925-thousand men, he nodded his head.

Khrushchev concluded his talks with East German leaders tonight with the issuance of a joint communique...promising to keep the roads open to West Berlin, if it becomes a "free city". They indicated that in return for this guarantee, they would expect the Western powers to recognize East Germany.

President Nasser made a speech in Damascus today...charging that Premier Kassem of Iraq is a "stooge" of international communism, working against Arab unity. It was the Communists, Nasser said, who set off the Iraqi revolt...which, by all indications, has been crushed.

The Senate today approved a four-year extension of the draft...after rejecting a move by Democratic Senator Morse to have the extension limited to two years. A proposal for a special commission to study possible alternatives to the draft also was turned down. Morse had argued that Congress was being stampeded into passing "ultimatum-type" legislation because of the Berlin crisis. Democratic Senator Russell...who is chairman of the Armed Services Committee...urged passage, saying that it would show America "means what it says" when it speaks of maintaining its military strength. The final vote was 90 to 1...with Republican Senator Langer the lone dissenter. The measure now goes back to the House, which already has passed a bill that is almost identical.

The House Space Committee today authorized an additional 48-million dollars for civilian space research the rest of this fiscal year. The Senate passed the measure yesterday, and it must now be approved by the full House.

The government today reported "no significant change" in the unemployment situation. It said 4-million, 749-thousand persons were unemployed last month, or about 25-thousand more than in January. This "stability", government experts said, marks the usual seasonal "pause" between heavy winter ~~contraction~~ Reduction in employment and the normal expansion that comes in the spring. One and a half million more persons were unemployed last month than in February, 1957, before the recession began. And George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, has again called for a one-year extension of the special unemployment compensation program...as advocated by some Democratic leaders. At his news conference, President Eisenhower indicated that he might go along with a brief extension of the program---he was willing to listen to arguments---but the prime responsibility, he said, rested with the states.

Democratic Senator Mansfield today objected to any delay in the confirmation of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil. Senator Morse has asked that the Foreign Relations Committee put off action on the nomination...pending further consideration. This refers to the recent Bolivian riots, which were set off by an article in Time Magazine...published by Henry Luce. In counselling against delay, Mansfield said that while no one condones the "flippant remarks" that appeared in Time's Latin American edition, "they certainly cannot be laid at the door of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce." He said that as ambassador to Italy, Mrs. Luce had done "an outstanding job."

Edward R. Murrow: March 11, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

A man to become President of the United States has, of course, to be nominated and then elected. But before either of these can happen he has to take a distinct and very special shape in the public mind. In this day of perfected communications, the maker of presidents no longer can be a party boss like Mark Hanna. A president, first of all, is made by the projection of his personality upon the public attention, which must happen long before convention time. In a sense, a president is self-made, then chosen by his party and people, through the aid of television, radio and the printed and spoken word. He is a potential president because of his talent, character, policies and attainments. No maneuver can get him into the White House if the public does not know him for these attributes, and prefer him to all others.

Looking at the presidency in this perspective it is tempting to say that the next presidential nominees - and therewith the next president - already are on the way to be chosen. The nation in two years not only has to choose a leader, it has to choose its future role at home and abroad. It must maintain its security, and it must be girded for the economic rivalry of the expanding communist world. So it must grow to be able to remain strong, to hold its own in developing the uncomitted countries, and to keep its liberties at home. And in doing all this it must escape bankruptcy. A man who has the grasp of these problems and the practical ability to get things done through our democratic institutions is going to be elected president.

This reporter is not pretending he knows who the next president will be. Nobody can outguess the future. But he is saying that a personslity is now being projected on the public mind that appears to provide some of the answers to the basic political questions. This man believes in growth; so he believes in spending. But he also believes in financial integrity; so he believes in taxing his way. And he is demonstrating his capacity to cope with such vast issues through American institutions. This man, of course, is Governor Rockefeller of New York, who today got his Republican majority in the New York Assembly + Senate to pass his tax program.

What Rockefeller said to the Legislature, and by television and radio to the people of the State of New York, was: If you want roads, schools, hospitals, and some of the other good things of life, you'll have to pay for them and that means increased taxes - a twenty-three percent increase in personal income tax. He was advocating a pay-as-you-go policy. It wasn't orthodox politics. His own Party staged a brief revolt, but Rockefeller won. This is his first budget. He had an easy out. He could have blamed the financial woes of the State on the preceding administration. What Rockefeller did was to apply and make work what President Eisenhower has been advocating. Again today the President said that people who wanted more money spent on defense ought to have the courage to advocate higher taxes at the same time.

No one can be sure whether Mr. Rockefeller has an appetite to run for the presidency in 1960. But whether he does or doesn't, he has pretty well embezzled Mr. Nixon's principal campaign issue. For it must be assumed that Mr. Nixon will defend and support the Eisenhower record. Mr. Rockefeller can stand on his own record as Governor, where he has ~~succeeded in~~ successfully applied the pay-as-you-go policy advocated by Mr. Eisenhower. Rockefeller's courageous and successful gamble in proposing an expanded budget and a higher tax program, have made him the most interesting governor among the presidential possibilities. A few months ago Mr. Nixon appeared to have the nomination for 1960 nailed down. He had behaved with admirable dignity during Mr. Eisenhower's illnesses - had worked hard and served wisely on missions abroad. There was much talk of the new Nixon, moderate, liberal, and a believer in the American destiny to lead and defend the free world. Democrats admitted privately that he would be a hard man to beat. He may still be. But the Rockefeller image and the Rockefeller record are beginning to take shape, and that shape is already of sufficient size to cast a big shadow across Mr. Nixon's path.

Back in a moment. -

Jack Bryan. -

In asking for higher taxes, Governor Rockefeller took an unpopular course...but demonstrated political leadership and courage. His tax program has finally been approved, and this is something which in the political sweepstakes will reflect in his favor. As Horace said two thousand years ago, "A decent boldness ever meets with friends."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate has just passed a bill to make Hawaii the 50th state. The vote was 76 to 15 after six hours of general debate. The House voted today to take up a similar statehood measure, and its final vote is due tomorrow.

President Eisenhower's news conference today dealt mainly with the Berlin crisis and the adequacy of this country's defense. It was the eighth news conference the President has held in the past eight weeks. One of the questions he was asked was whether the United States is prepared to resort to nuclear war...if necessary...to defend West Berlin. He said he did not know how you "free"anything with nuclear weapons. But nuclear war, he said, was not a "complete impossibility." Our ground forces could not hope to match Russia's 175 divisions. But, he warned, the United States is "never going to go back on its rights and its responsibilities." Mr. Eisenhower said that he did not "think much" of Premier Khrushchev's proposal for making West Berlin a "free city"... and garrisoning it with Soviet as well as American, British and French troops. He said this country needs to avoid hysteria and stand steady in its shoes. He thought the American public is more "soberly" aware of the situation than a lot of people on Washington. "We are so close to ourselves here," he said, "that we have a great possibility of stirring ourselves up." The President said he was tired of talking about the idea of "balanced budget against national security"... and challenged members of Congress who want more military manpower to show their courage and call for the taxes necessary to foot the bill.

When asked about this, Democratic Senator Symington said he would vote for higher taxes, if they are needed. But higher taxes would not be necessary, he said, if Mr. Eisenhower would reorganize the Defense Department. House Speaker Sam Rayburn said he was the same way about defense as he had always been about foreign aid---"I've voted for the maximum amounts." And then he added, "I think that's what I'll do this year."

The question of military manpower came up today when the Army chief of staff, General Taylor, testified before Senator Johnson's preparedness subcommittee. The testimony was given behind closed doors, but Johnson...who is Senate Democratic leader...said afterward that there could be only one conclusion. "That is," he said, "that the size and composition of the Army does not reflect the judgement of the men who must lead the Army in the event the Army must be used." General Taylor...in talking to reporters...said that he had twice recommended an Army of 925 thousand men. The Administration wants to reduce the Army to 870-thousand men. And when Taylor was asked whether he still wants 925-thousand men, he nodded his head.

Khrushchev concluded his talks with East German leaders tonight with the issuance of a joint communique...promising to keep the roads open to West Berlin, if it becomes a "free city." They indicated that in return for this guarantee, they would expect the Western powers to recognize East Germany.

President Nasser made a speech in Damascus today...charging that Premier Kassem of Iraq is a "stooge" of international communism, working against Arab unity. It was the Communists, Nassar said, who set off the Iraqi revolt...which by all indications, has been crushed.

The Senate today approved a four year extension of the draft...after rejecting a move by Democratic Senator Morse to have the entension limited to two years. A proposal for a special commission to study posiible alternatives to the draft also was turned down. Morse had argued that Congress was being stampeded into passing "ultimatum-type" legislation because of the Berlin crisis. Democratic Senator Russell...who is chairman of the Armed Services Committee...urged passage saying that it would show America "means what it says" when it speaks of maintaining its military strength. The final vote was 90 to 1...with Republican Senator Langer the lone dissenter. The measure now goes back to the House, which already has passed a bill that is almost identical.

The House Space Committee today authorized an additional 48-million dollars for civilian space research the rest of this fiscal year. The Senate passed the measure yesterday, and it must now be approved by the full House.

The government today reported "no significant change" in the unemployment situation. It said 4-million, 749-thousand persons were unemployed last month, or about 25-thousand more than in January. This "stability," government experts said, marks the usual seasonal "pause" between heavy winter reduction in employment and the normal expansion that comes in the spring. One and a half million more persons were unemployed last month than in February, 1957, before the recession began. And George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO has again called for a one-year extension of the special unemployment compensation program...as advocated by some Democratic leaders. At his news conference, President Eisenhower indicated that he might go along with a brief extension of the program, he was will to listen to arguments, but the prime responsibility, he said, rested with the states.

A man to become President of the United States has of course, to be nominated and then elected. But before either of these can happen he has to take a distinct and very special shape in the public mind. In this day of perfected communications, the maker of presidents no longer can be a party boss like Mark Hanna. A president, first of all, is made by the projection of his personality upon the public attention, which must happen long before convention time. In a sense, a president is self-made, then chosen by his party and people, through the aid of television, radio and the printed and spoken word. He is a potential president because of his talent, character, policies and attainments. No maneuver can get him into the White House if the public does not know him for these attributes, and prefer him to all others.

Looking at the presidency in this perspective it is tempting to say that the next presidential nominees - and therewith the next president - already are on the way to be chosen. The nation in two years not only has to choose a leader, it has to choose its future role at home and abroad. It must maintain its security, and it must be girded for the economic rivalry of the expanding communist world. So it must grow to be able to remain strong, to hold its own in developing the uncommitted countries, and to keep its liberties at home. And in doing all this it must escape bankruptcy. A man who has the grasp of these problems and the practical ability to get things done through our democratic insitutions is going to be elected president.

This reporter is not pretending he knows who the next president will be. Nobody can outguess the future. But he is saying that a personality is now being projected on the public mind that appears to provide some of the answers to the basic political questions. This man believes in growth; so he believes in spending. But he also believes in financial integrity; so he believes in taxing his way. And he is demonstrating his capacity to cope with such vast issues through American institutions. This man, of course, is Governor Rockefeller of New York, who today got his Republican majority in the New York Assembly and Senate to pass his tax program.

What Rockefeller said to the Legislature, and by television and radio to the people of the State of New York, was: If you want roads, schools hospitals, and some of the other good things of life, you'll have to pay for them and that means increased taxes - a twenty-three percent increase in personal income tax. He was advocating a pay-as-you-go policy. It wasn't orthodox politics. His own Party staged a brief revolt, but Rockefeller won. This is his first budget. He had an easy out. He could have blamed the financial woes of the State on the preceding administration. What Rockefeller did was to apply and make work what President Eisenhower has been advocating. Again today the President said that people who wanted more money spent on defense ought to have the courage to advocate higher taxes at the same time.

No one can be sure whether Mr. Rockefeller has an appetite to run for the presidency in 1960. But whether he does or doesn't, he has pretty well embezzled Mr. Nixon's principal campaign issue. For it must be assumed that Mr. Nixon will defend and support the Eisenhower record. Mr. Rockefeller can stand on his own record as Governor where he has successfully applied the pay-as-you-go policy advocated by Mr. Eisenhower. Rockefeller's courageous and successful gamble in proposing an expanded budget and a higher tax program, have made him the most interesting governor among the presidential possibilities. A few months ago, Mr. Nixon appeared to have the nomination for 1960 nailed down. He had behaved with admirable dignity during Mr. Eisenhower's illnesses - had worked hard and served wisely on missions abroad. There was much talk of the new Nixon, moderate, liberal, and a believer in the American destiny to lead and defend the free world. Democrats admitted privately that he would be a hard man to beat. He may still be. But the Rockefeller image and the Rockefeller record are beginning to take shape, and that shape is already of sufficient size to cast a big shadow across Mr. Nixon's path.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In asking for higher taxes, Governor Rockefeller took an unpopular course, but demonstrated political leadership and courage. His tax program has finally been approved, and this is something which in the political sweepstakes will reflect in his favor. As Horace said two thousand years ago, "A decent boldness ever meets with friends."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., March 12, 1959

This is the news:

Hawaiian statehood has finally been approved. / The House completed congressional action this afternoon...when it passed the statehood bill by a vote of 323 to 89. / The House had met an hour earlier than usual to act on the measure approved last night by the Senate. / There was some debate, but the issue was never in doubt. / Representative Davis of Georgia opposed the legislation on racial grounds...pointing out that 56 percent of the Hawaiian population is non-white. / The chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, Representative Walter, said that Communist labor unions have "a very strong hold" on the economy of Hawaii. / But he thought that...once Hawaii was a state...the situation would improve.

→

In the final hour, Speaker Sam Rayburn...long-time opponent of Hawaiian statehood...gave his support to the measure, saying that the territory "deserved" membership in the Union and would, in his phrase, be an asset to the United States. When Rayburn announced the final vote, there was a burst of applause. And Representative Albert of Oklahoma, the Democratic whip, hailed Hawaii as "the brightest star in the West."

It may be six months before Hawaii is formally admitted as the 50th state...less than a year after Alaska was admitted as the 49th. After President Eisenhower signs the bill, the people of Hawaii will have to approve statehood in a referendum, elect state officials and choose two senators and a representative to send to Congress. Nevertheless, in Honolulu, there is dancing in the streets.

The House also gave final congressional approval today to a bill extending the peacetime draft for four years. There was no debate.

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said today that the defense issue is much broader than Berlin. "The real crisis," he said, "may erupt elsewhere, even before Berlin comes to a head." Johnson named no other potential flash-points...but said the American problem goes far beyond one city.

"We must know," he said, "whether our paralyzing punch is still within our capacity...and whether we will have it in the foreseeable future."

~~Lyndon~~ Johnson made these remarks as his preparedness subcommittee began hearing testimony from General Thomas D. White, the Air Force chief of staff, behind closed doors. ~~General White~~ has gone on record...~~expressing concern~~ that bombers of the ~~Strategic Air Command are not being replaced as~~ rapidly as ~~requested...and that work on a prototype of a nuclear powered~~ airplane ~~has been suspended.~~

Today...on the Senate floor...Democratic Senator Yarborough of Texas said that President Eisenhower was endangering the American position in West Berlin by insisting on cutting back our armed forces. Republican Senator Keating of New York spoke in the President's defense. He said that keeping another 25 or 30 thousand men in uniform...as proposed by Democratic leaders...would have no effect.

The White House announces that when British Prime Minister Macmillan comes to the United States a week from today, ~~he and President Eisenhower~~ will confer at Camp David, the ~~presidential retreat in the Catoctin~~ Mountains...~~near Thurmont, Maryland~~. Mr. Eisenhower hopes that Secretary of State Dulles will be able to join in the talks, which are scheduled...tentatively...to last for three days. ~~That is, next Friday, Saturday and Sunday.~~

—7

Today, Mr. Macmillan met for more than three hours with West German Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn...and the question of disengagement was discussed. A British Foreign Office spokesman said that Macmillan does not have in mind any disengagement of forces...involving a military vacuum in Central Europe without inspection and control. What the British contemplate, he said, is a system of arms reduction in some yet undefined part of Europe that would ease tension in both the military and political fields. Macmillan is assumed to have reassured Adenauer today on this point.

~~Premier Khrushchev flew back to Moscow today...after spending eight days in East Germany. He said...upon leaving...that if anyone tried to "break through" anywhere---he did not specifically mention Berlin---the action would be met with "appropriate resistance". Khrushchev said, "We would like to believe that no one will commit such an irresponsible act."~~

President Nasser of the United Arab Republic made another speech today, accusing the leaders of Iraq ~~as~~ of being pro-Communist. Premier Kassem of Iraq, he said, is trying to bring all Arab peoples under a Communist "reign of terror." /And he denied that he---Nasser---had insitgated the abortive Iraqi revolt.

—)

Britain's colonial secretary of state...Lord Perth...flew to Nayasaland today...to make a first-hand study of the nationalist movement in that British protectorate. /Forty-one Africans have died in violence there in the past eight days. More than 400 nationalists have been placed under arrest. /The most militant African leaders in Northern Rhodesia also were arrested today.

In Washington...the Eisenhower Administration today declared itself on the issue of the basic minimum wage. /Testifying before a Congressional committee, Secretary of Labor Mitchell said that the Administration opposes any increase in the present minimum wage of a dollar an hour. /While he was testifying, Dr. Arthur Flemming...secretary of health, education and welfare...was telling another committee that it would be "a mistake" to give the executive branch responsibility for desegregating the public schools.

Edward R. Murrow: March 12, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

When the President told his news conference yesterday that there would be no ground war in Europe over Berlin, he seemed to be trying to put out a brush-fire in Congress. He was telling the Senators who are troubled over defense economies, that increasing the army isn't going to affect the Berlin crisis. To say this to Congress is one thing. But to say it to Russia is something else. By itself, it might encourage the Russians to expect no resistance on the ground at Berlin. Mr. Eisenhower, however, quickly added that he did not rule out the "possibility of nuclear war."

It may be unwise to put together a President's remarks at a news conference and try to read policy into them. But without further statement it would appear that Mr. Eisenhower has sharpened the deterrent policy of the United States. He seemed to be saying that we would not uphold our rights in Berlin by the use of ground forces, but might do so with nuclear weapons, in other words by all-out war. That is saying that if the Russians or the East Germans refuse to pass our supply trucks into West Berlin, we might answer by bombing the targets in the Soviet Union selected for attack in nuclear war.

There was a similar though milder hint from Secretary McElroy on Sunday, when he said that "it would be very difficult to keep hostilities over the Berlin issue restricted to a so-called local war". However, he also said that we planned to use the ground forces of our allies as well as our nuclear striking power.

It may be that there is an analogy between the Quemoy crisis and the Berlin crisis. Both started as a conflict of wills. The Chinese Communists hoped to get their way by a bluster of power. It didn't work. Even though the United States at that time had little support from its allies, it stood staunchly by itself, and in due time the crisis passed. Negotiations began in Warsaw. And though they led to no agreements, concessions subsequently were made by both sides.

In the Berlin crisis we may be coming to the end of the bluster stage. Khrushchev started out with a virtual ultimatum. He tried to leave us no alternative but to get out of West Berlin. In the conflict of wills this time, the United States did not have to stand alone. France, Britain and West Germany, in fact all the NATO powers, were just as uncompromising on maintaining the rights of the West in Berlin. So Khrushchev has been toning down his bluster. Now a Foreign Ministers conference is to be expected, to be followed by a summit meeting. The details about neither of these conferences ~~has~~ have been agreed to. But now that the conflict of wills is ending in a draw, it is hard to believe that they won't be. / Khrushchev is still trying to limit the Foreign Ministers conference to the Berlin issue and a peace treaty with the two Germanys. / We insist on discussing all aspects of the German problem. / Khrushchev already has whittled down his Berlin demands, in particular the deadline in May. Since he is a tough bargainer, he did not start by asking his final terms, and further concessions about Berlin and a Foreign Ministers conference are to be expected.

The West has said that it will not go to a summit meeting without a prospect of some success. / This means that the Foreign Ministers must have some promise of success too. / Indeed, if the Foreign Ministers fail, the world will indeed find itself at the brink of all-out war. / Since this is something the Russians want as little as we do, the situation makes a summit conference appear fairly certain.

Assuming that nothing upsets this course of events, it is quite possible that the ominous date of May 27th will be ~~XXXXXXX~~ indefinitely postponed. Khrushchev would hardly sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany, and turn controls over to the East German regime, while the Foreign Ministers were sitting. / That would at once throw the issue into the United Nations. / And if the Foreign Ministers were getting anywhere and a summit meeting were to follow, Khrushchev probably would wait on Berlin so long as the summit meeting was in prospect or was sitting. And since a summit meeting is what he wanted all along, he would not lose face if the Western troops continue to live in their barracks in West Berlin.

This may sound unduly optimistic, but in reality it is nothing to be optimistic about. Postponing trouble does not solve it, and the German question is the most difficult trouble there is. But the crisis nowadays may have an anatomy of its own. It may have to start out to sound more immediate than it is, simply to arrive at the stage of negotiations. And that stage, at the moment, seems to be the best to be hoped for.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

So far, the dispute over Berlin has been a conflict of wills... but now the time would seem to have come for negotiation. In his comedy, Measure for Measure, Shakespeare described a certain quarrel as "a war 'twixt will and will not." But Shakespeare also wrote---in another play, I believe---that "the will of man is by his reason swayed."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Hawaiian statehood has finally been approved. The House completed congressional action this afternoon...when it passed the statehood bill by a vote of 323 to 89. The House had met an hour earlier than usual to act on the measure approved last night by the Senate. There was some debate, but the issue was never in doubt. Representative Davis of Georgia opposed the legislation on racial grounds...pointing out that 56 percent of the Hawaiian population is non-white. The chairman of the House Un-American Activities Committee, Representative Walter, said that Communist labor unions have "a very strong hold" on the economy of Hawaii. But he thought that...once Hawaii was a state...the situation would improve.

In the final hour, Speaker Sam Rayburn...long-time opponent of Hawaiian statehood...gave his support to the measure, saying that the territory "deserved" membership in the Union and would, in his phrase, be an asset to the United States. When Rayburn announced the final vote, there was a burst of applause. And Representative Albert of Oklahoma, the Democratic whip, hailed Hawaii as "the brightest star in the West."

It may be six months before Hawaii is formally admitted as the 50th state, less than a year after Alaska was admitted as the 49th. After President Eisenhower signs the bill, the people of Hawaii will have to approve statehood in a referendum, elect state officials and choose two senators and a representative to send to Congress. Nevertheless, in Honolulu, there is dancing in the streets.

The House also gave final congressional approval today to a bill extending the peacetime draft for four years. There was no debate.

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said today that the defense issue is much broader than Berlin. "The real crisis," he said, "may erupt elsewhere, even before Berlin comes to a head." Johnson named no other potential flash-points...but said the American problem goes far beyond one city. "We must know," he said, "whether our paralyzing punch is still within our capacity...and whether we will have it in the foreseeable future." Johnson made these remarks as his preparedness subcomittee began hearing testimony from General Thomas D. White, the Air Force chief of staff, behind closed doors.

Today...on the Senate floor...Democratic Senator Yarborough of Texas said that President Eisenhower was endangering the American position in West Berlin by insisting on cutting back our armed forces. Republican Senator Keating of New York spoke in the President's defense. He said that keeping another 25 or 30 thousand men in uniform...as proposed by Democratic leaders...would have no effect.

The White House announces that when British Prime Minister Macmillan comes to the United States a week from today, Mr. Eisenhower hopes that Secretary of State Dulles will be able to join in the talks, which are scheduled... tentatively...to last for three days.

Today, Mr. Macmillan met for more than three hours with West German Chancellor Adenauer in Bonn...and the question of disengagement was discussed. A British Foreign Office spokesman said that Macmillan does not have in mind any disengagement of forces...involving a military vacuum in Central Europe without inspection and control. What the British contemplate, he said, is a system of arms reduction in some yet undefined part of Europe that would ease tension in both the military and political fields. Macmillan is assumed to have reassured Adenauer today on this point.

President Nasser of the United Arab Republic made another speech today, accusing the leaders of Iraq of being proCommunist. Premier Kassem of Iraq, he said, is trying to bring all Arab peoples under a Communist "reign of terror." And he denied that he---Nasser---had instigated the abortive Iraqi revolt.

Britain's colonial secretary of state...Lord Perth...flew to Nyasaland today...to make a first-hand study of the nationalist movement in that British protectorate. Forty-one Africans have died in violence there in the past eight days. More than 400 nationalists have been placed under arrest. The most militant African leaders in Northern Rhodesia also were arrested today.

In Washington...the Eisenhower Administration today declared itself on the issue of the basic minimum wage. Testifying before a Congressional committee, Secretary of Labor Mitchell said that the Administration opposes any increase in the present minimum wage of a dollar an hour. While he was testifying, Dr. Arthur Flemming...Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare...was telling another committee that it would be a mistake to give the executive branch responsibility for desegregating the public schools.

When the President told his news conference yesterday that there would be no ground war over Berlin, he seemed to be trying to put out a brush-fire in Congress. He was telling the Senators who are troubled over defense economies, that increasing the army isn't going to affect the Berlin crisis. To say this to Congress is one thing. But to say it to Russia is something else. By itself, it might encourage the Russians to expect no resistance on the ground at Berlin. Mr. Eisenhower, however, quickly added that he did not rule out the possibility of nuclear war.

It may be unwise to put together a President's remarks at a news conference and try to read policy into them. But without further statement it would appear that Mr. Eisenhower has sharpened the deterrent policy of the United States. He seemed to be saying that we would not uphold our rights in Berlin by the use of ground forces, but might do so with nuclear weapons, in other words, by all-out war. That is saying that if the Russians or the East Germans refuse to pass our supply trucks into West Berlin, we might answer by bombing the targets in the Soviet Union selected for attack in nuclear war.

There was a similar though milder hint from Secretary McElroy on Sunday, when he said that "it would be very difficult to keep hostilities over the Berlin issue restricted to a so-called local war." However, he also said that we planned to use the ground forces of our allies as well as our nuclear striking power.

It may be that there is an analogy between the Quemoy crisis and the Berlin crisis. Both started as a conflict of wills. The Chinese Communists hoped to get their way by a bluster of power. It didn't work. Even though the United States at that time had little support from its allies, it stood staunchly by itself, and in due time the crisis passed. Negotiations began in Warsaw. And though they led to no agreements, concessions subsequently were made by both sides.

In the Berlin crisis we may be coming to the end of the bluster stage. Khrushchev started out with a virtual ultimatum. He tried to leave us no alternative but to get out of West Berlin. In the conflict of wills this time, the United States did not have to stand alone. France, Britain and West Germany, in fact all the NATO powers, were just as uncompromising on maintaining the rights of the West in Berlin. So Khrushchev has been toning down his bluster. Now a Foreign Ministers conference is to be expected, to be followed by a summit meeting. The details about neither of these conferences have been agreed to. But now the conflict of wills is ending in a draw, it is hard to believe that they won't be. Khrushchev is still trying to limit the Foreign Ministers conference to the Berlin issue and a peace treaty with the two Germanys. We insist on discussing all aspects of the German problem. Khrushchev already has whittled down his Berlin demands, in particular the deadline in May. Since he is a tough bargainer, he did not start by asking his final terms, and further concessions about Berlin and a Foreign Ministers conference are to be expected.

The West has said that it will not go to a summit meeting without a prospect of some success. This means that the Foreign Ministers must have some promise of success too. Indeed, if the Foreign Ministers fail, the world will indeed find itself at the brink of all-out war. Since this is something the Russians want as little as we do, the situation makes a summit conference appear fairly certain.

Assuming that nothing upsets this course of events, it is quite possible that the ominous date of May 27th will be indefinitely postponed. Khrushchev would hardly sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany, and turn controls over to the East German regime, while the Foreign Ministers were sitting. That would at once throw the issue into the United Nations. And if the Foreign Ministers were getting anywhere and a summit meeting were to follow, Khrushchev probably would wait on Berlin so long as the summit meeting was in prospect or was sitting. And since a summit meeting is what he wanted all along, he would not lose face if the Western troops continue to live in their barracks in West Berlin.

This may sound unduly optimistic, but in reality it is nothing to be optimistic about. Postponing trouble does not solve it, and the German question is the most difficult trouble there is. But the crisis nowadays may have an anatomy of its own. It may have to start out to sound more immediate than it is, simply to arrive at the stage of negotiations. And that stage, at the moment, seems to be the best to be hoped for.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: So far, the dispute over Berlin has been a conflict of wills...but now the time would seem to have come for negotiation. In his comedy,"Measure for Measure," Shakespeare described a certain quarrel as "a war 'twixt will and will not." But Shakespeare also wrote---in another play, I believe---that "the will of man is by his reason swayed."

Goodnight and good luck!

FEATURE SERVICE FROM CBS RADIO

Publicity

Press Information Department, 485 Madison Ave., New York 22, N.Y.
Phone: PLaza 1-2345

March 12, 1959

BEHIND THE SPACE MISSILE LAUNCHINGS

(To the laymen, the launching of a space missile is still wrapped in mystery. The countdown still seems like some implausible ritual of latter-day magic, rather than a scientific procedure. On a recent visit to Cape Canaveral, Edward R. Murrow witnessed the launching of Pioneer IV. His report of the event on CBS Radio's "Edward R. Murrow with the News" strips space rocketry of none of its drama, but makes this new field of human activity more real to average Americans. The text follows:)

The Senate today voted to authorize $48,354,000.00 for civilian space research during this fiscal year. The vote was ninety to nothing; and the sum is exactly what the Administration asked for.

The last space vehicle to fly was Pioneer IV, payload 13.4 pounds. It went out past the moon, transmitter working perfectly beyond 400,000 miles. It is now silent and orbiting the sun.

Pioneer IV was blasted aloft by the Army Ordinance Missile Command, commanded by General Bruce Medaris. To this reporter the humans were more interesting than the hardware. The nose cone on the payload, about the size of a two-quart coffee tin, looking like a foreshortened ice-cream cone. The whole missile, assembled, resembled an over-size fifty caliber cartridge, bathed in the glare of white searchlights. The check list, the items that had to be checked and re-checked, ran to seventy-six pages - some 1,500 items. The blockhouse, or control room, about sixty yards from the Pioneer IV, was of steel and concrete six feet thick, roughly the size of a moderate ranch house....About fifty people locked inside. Between eight and nine hundred dials and meters.

(More)

The man in charge of the firing was Dr. Kurt Debus, once of the University of Darmstadt, later with the Guided Missile Center at Peenemunde, where the Germans developed the V-2. He has probably fired more missiles than any other man. Wearing grey suede shoes, grey suit, red tie, and saber scars on his left cheek, he looks out over that field of dials and graphs with the satisfied look of a prosperous farmer observing his crops after a gentle rain. He knows that a loose screw, a bit of dust on a relay, or a bit of solder in the wrong place will mean failure. The countdown moves along through the weary hours, the messages being checked and called off by Bob Moser, from Vanderbilt University, an ex-GI, who is the countdown co-ordinator - tall, six-foot-four, calling out the count in a clear flat voice, with no more emotion than he would employ in reading a laundry list.

Five men sit at a panel resembling the control room in a television studio. You notice that things are quieter and more restrained here than they frequently are in a television control room. Both orders and responses where humans are involved are repeated by two men in an effort to eliminate the possibility of human error. Ice cream is being eaten, mostly chocolate; milk is drunk out of paper containers as the checking continues. When they begin to check the delicate telemetering devices, all motors in the area must be stopped. Word comes in from the roadblock about a mile away that Wernher von Braun and Professor Pickering, head of the Jet Propulsion Laboratory at Pasadena where the payload was constructed, have been stopped and refused permission to proceed. Everyone seems to find this mildly amusing. Most of the men in the blockhouse are wearing sport shirts and slacks. An ordinary old fashioned telephone man comes in with his pliers and screwdrivers and seems very much out of place.

(More)

You are told, with some pride, that the Pioneer IV was built by the Army Ordinance Missile Command, the only service that can do that all the way from the drawing board to the moon.

Bob Moser continues his countdown - twenty-nine and counting. There is a thin veneer of sweat on the faces of most of the men. The scars on Debus's face seem to deepen a little; someone says: "This should be called a hothouse, not a blockhouse". The laughter that greets this witticism seems a little louder than it should be, but otherwise there are no signs of tension.

There is a five-minute hold in the countdown, and you are told that there is practically no turnover of personnel in this outfit. A young, small, boy with a big cigar asks: "If you had a chance to work on this sort of thing, would you be willing to do anything else?" There are more than a thousand men involved in the shooting and tracking that thirteen-pound payload. You get the feeling that they are not excited but that they are a new brotherhood engaged in stretching the fingertips of science out into the unknown. Kurt Debus is quietly and courteously running the whole show. The questions go to him. Bob Moser continues to count. And then something went wrong - only one tiny wire. Debus decided not to shoot. That meant draining the liquid oxygen, replacing the faulty part, and going through the whole process again the next day. The following night Pioneer IV took off, and sent back more information, ranging all the way from vibration to radiation. It missed the moon.

(More)

The brotherhood of missile men knew it would miss, and by how much within an hour of the time it growled and roared up into the Florida sky. It added another layer to the pyramid of knowledge from the top of which man may someday leap into outer space.

In these days of confusing initials, of duplicating and competing agencies, organizations and commands, it is perhaps not redundant to report again, that the job was done by the Army Ordinance Missile Command.

* * *

Edward R. Murrow Fri., March 13, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will make a nationwide broadcast Monday night concerning Berlin. He will speak for 30 minutes, starting at 9:30 p.m., Eastern time, on all networks. The White House says that it will be a report on "the evolving Berlin situation and the general security position of the United States and its allies." When a reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty whether the President's decision to speak had been prompted by a new development in the Berlin crisis, Hagerty said no, it had not.

Mr. Eisenhower referred to Berlin today in a special foreign-aid message to Congress. Russia, he said, has made demands regarding the future of Berlin which...if unmodified...could have "perilous consequences."

The President asked for 3-billion, 900-million dollars for foreign aid in the next fiscal year...starting July first. / Of this amount, 1-billion, 600-million would go for military aid to our allies. / And because of the Soviet threat, he said, this figure may have to be revised---upward. Another 800-million dollars is earmarked for defense support. / The balance...amounting to one and a half billion dollars...is allocated for economic assistance. In support of this economic aid, Mr. Eisenhower cited the countries that have been taken over by International Communism and said that those peoples...as well as the peoples in the uncommitted countries...must be convinced that it is possible to have "both bread and the ballot." / The military position and economic prosperity of the United States, he warned, are inter-dependent with those of the free world. Chairman Fulbright...of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee...says that he will support the main provisions of the Eisenhower program. / But he deplored what he called the "over-emphasis" on military aid as contrasted to economic assistance. / He said his committee would need to engage in "considerable surgery", if the bill were "fully to serve the national interest." / Chairman Morgan...of the House Foreign Affairs Committee... said the President had given "a clear and unanswerable argument" for the extension of foreign aid. But Congress, he said, will not consider it on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The ranking Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee...Senator Wiley of Wisconsin...predicted that some members of both parties would try to cut the program. Nevertheless, he said, every dollar spent on foreign aid means fewer dollars spent on defense at home.

In the President's message...and in the reaction of Congress...there was repeated reference to our allies. Our ally, France, has made an important decision...altering its role in NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. For a report on the nature of that decision, we switch to Paris and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs 4:50
Ends on cue: "---to Edward R. Murrow in N.Y.")

That was David Schoenbrun, reporting a story with which he was first. Democratic Senator Mansfield...a member of the Foreign Relations Committee... said tonight that the French decision was one "for which President DeGaulle and his government have the responsibility." However, Mansfield said, it appeared to him that the move reflected an absence of coordination. He said that from a psychological point of view, the position of the West might...as a result...be made "more precarious".

On Wednesday, General Maxwell Taylor, Army chief of staff, testified before a closed session of the Senate preparedness subcommittee. Some of that testimony was made public tonight, and the transcript quotes General Taylor as saying that the United States should be ready "to go to war, if necessary, for Berlin." The effect of such an attitude, he said, would deter the Soviets from having a final showdown at this time. The transcript was given to reporters by Senate Democratic Leader Johnson...who is chairman of the subcommittee. Johnson said that the Army, Navy and Air Force chiefs have all indicated...in their secret testimony...that this country has "adequate strength to support and execute the foreign policy of the United States." Johnson emphasized that this appraisal applies to the present state of preparedness. "Now and on down the road," he said, "are two different things."

The Republicans today organized a committee of 43 members...designed, according to its chairman, to give the party "a forward look". / The chairman is Charles H. Percy, president of the Bell & Howell Company. The "forward look", he said, does not mean that the Republican Party is going back on its basic principles. / National Party Chairman Meade Alcorn said, "We want to get the elephant out of his stall, help point him in the direction of progress, and let the people know where he is going." He said the new committee is not charged with the responsibility of drafting a Republican Party platform...but, rather, is instructed to come up with a realistic, long-range program of objectives in all of the areas of political responsibility. / The program, he said, should be drawn up in the light of social, technological and economic developments which can "reasonably be anticipated during the years immediately ahead." Alcorn called for a report by the committee by September first. / Members of the committee were chosen from various fields, including business, labor, and education...and at a White House luncheon today, they were told by President Eisenhower to meet the problem with open minds. The President gave no other advice.

The Long Island, New York, newspaper Newsday said today, that former Republican National Chairman Leonard Hall has been chosen to manage Vice President Nixon's campaign for the Republican presidential nomination. Newsday attributes its information to "well informed Republican sources". Asked for comment on the story, Hall said, "It's news to me."

The President's son...Major John Eisenhower...has been recommended for promotion to the rank of lieutenant colonel. Major Eisenhower's name appeared today on a list of more than one thousand Army officers, tentatively selected for promotion. He is now serving as liaison officer on the White House staff.

President Eisenhower went to Walter Reed Hospital today...and visited with both Secretary of State Dulles and General George Marshall, his old Army chief. General Marshall was transferred to Walter Reed earlier this week from the Army hospital at Fort Bragg.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

The full effect of the French action...with regard to NATO... is yet to be determined. But there comes to mind the observations made by two notable Romans in the first century B.C. Sallust said, "By union the smallest states thrive. By discord, the greatest are destroyed." And Virgil warned, "Whatever the issue, we share one common danger, one safety."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, March 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In the President's message and in the reaction of Congress, there was repeated reference to our allies. Our ally France has made an important decision, altering its role in NATO - the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. For a report on the nature of that decision, we switch to Paris and my colleague David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: A very serious crisis, in the Atlantic alliance, is pending here in Paris as a result of a French decision taken this week. France informed its NATO allies, on Wednesday, that the French Mediterranean Fleet will be withdrawn from NATO Command, from the integrated Western defense forces. This important and possibly grave decision was communicated to the NATO Council in Paris and shocked the Atlantic representatives, who had not been consulted nor informed on a decision of such fundamental importance to them. The French government had consulted with the American and British governments, in the course of tri-partite meetings in Washington the past few months. But this was on a political level, in America, outside of the NATO Council. It did not include the 12 other allies of the three big powers. The decision is to put all French naval units, in the Mediterranean area, under French Command in time of war, instead of under the integrated NATO Command. The explanation is that France feels that Algeria is of vital national interest and that all French ships are needed to supply Algeria and to maintain communications on the north-south axis between the metropole and the African territories. Whereas NATO units must defend a much broader area on an east-west line, from Gibraltar to Suez. The French feel that in case of an emergency their commanders and their commanders only can decide a matter of the highest national interest, which is maintenance of communications between France and Africa. That's the French argument. It is, however, not supported by other allies to whom this correspondent has talked. What it adds up to, in the view of other diplomats here, is a French move that seriously challenges the basic NATO concept of integrated forces and the consultation system among allies. This could rock NATO to its foundations if no way is found to accomodate French concern about Algeria with NATO strategy. Several well informed and technically expert officials believe that it is quite possible to maintain NATO principles while giving the French the protection they need in Algeria. What surprises them is the fact that the French have made no attempt to find such a solution inside NATO, and have in fact presented NATO with a fact accompli. The political implications of this move are perhaps more serious than the purely military consequences. The French Mediterranean Fleet is only a small part of NATO's total naval strength in that region, about 10% if one counts only conventional craft and as little as 1% of the combat power if one includes America's atomic units. Thus, no immediate military loss of vital strength. Politically, however, the removal of French forces may open up several dangerous developments. It sets a precedent for other nations pulling out their forces for national reasons, such as the Turks or the Greeks in the Eastern Mediterranean, or some day perhaps for the Germans to say that their new 12 divisions are needed to liberate Berlin, or Leipzig, in the German national interest. The French are opening Pandora's box. Politically, too, this move inevitably weakens the alliance, for it was made without consultation. Indeed, even worse than that, the French did consult the Anglo-American and not the others whereas the other 12 have been dead set against any ruling directorate of the Big Three, which is a favorite de Gaulle objective. It leaves people here to suspect that this is perhaps the real aim of this maneuver, to achieve two long-standing French goals. One is more support from France's allies in Algeria; and secondly, coordination among Britain, France and America of global policies. De Gaulle has been demanding this ever since he's back in office. He has not received satisfaction on either demand. On one occasion de Gaulle was extremely angry when the Americans failed to support France in the United Nations. He has also not been satisfied by the tri-partite conversations in Washington which he feels does not answer his request for global strategy among the Big Three. Some people think perhaps this is what the move means. But that is only pure speculation. What we know as a fact is that France has taken a national decision to remove its Mediterranean Fleet from NATO Command. And this is going to be the subject of feverish negotiations and comments among the NATO capitals in the next few days.

This is Paris. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was David Schoenbrun reporting a story with which he was first.

Ed. trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower will make a nationwide broadcast Monday night concerning Berlin. He will speak for 30 minutes, starting at 9:30 PM, Eastern time, on all networks. The White House says that it will be a report on "the evolving Berlin situation and the general security position of the United States and its allies." When a reporter asked News Secretary Hagerty whether the President's decision to speak had been prompted by a new development in the Berlin crisis, Hagerty said no, it had not.

Mr. Eisenhower referred to Berlin today in a special foreign aid message to Congress. Russia, he said, has made demands regarding the future of Berlin which...if unmodified...could have "perilous consequences."

The President asked for 3-billion, 900 million dollars for foreign aid in the next fiscal year...starting July first. Of this amount, 1-billion, 600-million would go for military aid to our allies. And because of the Soviet threat, he said, this figure may have to be revised---upward. Another 800-million is earmarked for defense support. The balance...amounting to one and a half billion dollars...is allocated for economic assistance. In support of this economic aid, Mr. Eisenhower cited the countries that have been taken over by International Communism and said that those peoples... as well as the peoples in the uncommitted countries...must be convinced that it is possible to have "both bread and the ballot." The military position and economic prosperity of the United States, he warned, are inter-dependent with those of the free world. Chairman Fulbright...of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee...says that he will support the main provisions of the Eisenhower program. But he deplored what he called the "over-emphasis" on military aid as contrasted to economic assistance. He said his committee would need to engage in "considerable surgery" if the bill were "fully to serve the national interest." Chairman Morgan...of the House Foreign Affairs Committee...said the President had given "a clear and unanswerable argument" for the extension of foreign aid. But Congress, he said, will not consider it on a take-it-or-leave-it basis. The ranking Republican on the Senate Foreign Relations Committee...Senator Wiley of Wisconsin...predicted that some members of both parties would try to cut the program. Nevertheless, he said, every dollar spent on foreign aid means fewer dollars spent on defense at home.

In the President's message...and in the reaction of Congress...there was repeated reference to our allies. Our ally, France, has made an important decision altering its role in NATO, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. For a report on the nature of that decision, we switch to Paris and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: A very serious crisis, in the Atlantic alliance, is pending here in Paris as a result of a French decision taken this week. France informed its NATO allies on Wednesday, that the French Mediterranean Fleet will be withdrawn from NATO Command, from the integrated Western defense forces. This important and possibly grave decision was communicated to the NATO Council in Paris and shocked the Atlantic representatives, who had not been consulted nor informed on a decision of such fundamental importance to them. The French government had consulted with the American and British governments, in the course of tri-partite meetings in Washington the past few months. But this was on a political level, in America, outside of the NATO Council. It did not include the 12 other allies of the three big powers. The decision is to put all French naval units, in the Mediterranean area, under French Command in time of war, instead of under the integrated NATO Command. The explanation isthat France feels that Algeria is of vital national interest and that all French ships are needed to supply Algeria and to maintain communications on the north-south axis between the metropole and the African territories. Whereas NATO units must defend a much broader area on an east-west line, from Gibraltor to Suez. The French feel that in case of an emergency their commanders and their commanders only can decide a matter of the highest national interest, which is maintenance of communications between France and Africa. That's the French argument. It is, however,not supported by other allies to whom this correspondent has talked. What it adds up to, in the view of other diplomats here, is a French move that seriously challenges the basic NATO concept of integrated forces and the consultation system among allies. This could rock NATO to its foundations if no way is found to accommodate French concern about Algeria with NATO strategy. Several well informed and technically expert officials believe that it is quite possible to maintain NATO principles while giving the French the protection they need in Algeria. What surprises them is the fact that the French have made no attempt to find such a solution inside NATO, and have in fact presented NATO with a fact accompli. The political implications of this move are perhaps more serious than the purely military consequences. The French Mediterranean Fleet is only a small part of NATO's total naval strength in that region, about 10% if one counts only conventional craft and as little as 1% of the combat power if one includes America's atomic units. Thus, no immediate military loss of vital strength. Politically, however, the removal of French forces may open up several dangerous developments. It sets a precedent for other nations pulling out their forces for national reasons, such as the Turks or the Greeks in the Eastern Mediterranean, or some day perhaps for the Germans to say that their new 12 divisions are needed to liberate Berlin, or Leipzig, in the German national interest. The French are opening Pandora's box. Politically, too, this move inevitably weakens the alliance, for it was made without consultation. Indeed, even worse than that, the French did consult the Anglo-American and not the others whereas the other 12 have been dead set against any ruling directorate of the Big Three, which is a favorite de Gaulle objective. It leaves people here to suspect that this is perhaps the real aim of this maneuver, to achieve two long standing French goals. One is more support from France's allies in Algeria and secondly, coordination among Britain, France and America of global policies. DeGaulle has been demanding this ever since he's back in office. He has not received satisfaction on either demand. On one occasion deGaulle was extremely angry when the Americans failed to support France in the United Nations. He has also not been satisfied by the tri-partite conversations in Washington which he feels does not answer to his request for global stretegy among the Big Three. Some people think perhaps this is what the move means. But that is only pure speculation. What we know as a fact is that France has taken a national decision to remove its Mediterranean Fleet from NATO Command. And this is going to be the subject of feverish negotiations and comments among the NATO capitals in the next few days.

This is Paris. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was David Schoenbrun, reporting a story with which he was first. Democratic Senator Mansfield...a member of the Foreign Relations Committee... said tonight that the French decision was one "for which President DeGaulle and his government have the responsibility." However, Mansfield said, it appeared to him that the move reflected an absence of coordination. He said that from a psychological point of view, the position of the West might...as a result...be made "more precarious."

On Wednesday, General Maxwell Taylor, Army chief of staff, testified before a closed session of the Senate preparedness subcommittee. Some of that testimony was made public tonight, and the transcript quotes General Taylor as saying that the United States should be ready "to go to war, if necessary, for Berlin." The effect of such an attitude, he said, would deter the Soviets from having a final showdown at this time. The transcript was given to reporters by Senate Democratic Leader Johnson...who is chairman of the subcommittee. Johnson said that the Army, Navy and Air Force chiefs have all indicated...in their secret testimony...that this country has "adequate strength to support and execute the foreign policy of the United States." Johnson emphasized that this appraisal applies to the present state of preparedness. "Now and on down the road," he said, "are two different things."

The Republicans today organized a committee of 43 members...designed, a according to its chairman, to give the party "a forward look." The chairman is Charles H. Percy, president of the Bell & Howell Company. The "forward look," he said, does not mean that the Republican Party is going back on its basic principles. National Party Chairman Meade Alcorn said, "We want to get the elephant out of his stall, help point him in the direction of progress, and let the poeple know where he is going." He said the new committee is not charged with the responsibility of drafting a Republican Party platform, but, rather, is instructed to come up with a realistic, long-range program of objectives in all of the areas of political responsibility. The program, he said, should be drawn up in the light of social, technological and economic developments which can "reasonably be anticipated during the years immediately ahead." Alcorn called for a report by the committee by September first. Members of the committee were chosen from various fields, including business, labor, and education...and at a White House luncheon today, they were told by President Eisenhower to meet the problem with open minds. The President gave no other advice.

The Long Island, New York, newspaper Newsday said today that former Republican National Chairman Leonard Hall has been chosen to manage Vice President's Nixon's campaign for the Republican presidential nomination. Newsday attributes its information to "well informed Republican sources." Asked for comment on the story, Hall said, "It's news to me."

The President's son...Major John Eisenhower...has been recommended for promotion to the rank of lieutenant colonel. Major Eisenhower's name appeared today on a list of more than one thousand Army officers tentatively selected for promotion.

omotion. He is now serving as liaison officer on the White House staff.

President Eisenhower went to Walter Reed Hospital today...and visited with both Secretary of State Dulles and General George Marshall, his old Army chief. General Marshall was transferred to Walter Reed earlier this week from the Army hospital at Fort Bragg.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The full effect of the French action..with regard to NATO...is yet to be determined. But there comes to mind the observations made by two notable Romans in the first century B.C. Sallust said, "By union the smallest states thrive. By discord, the greatest are destroyed." And Virgil warned, "Whatever the issue, we share one common danger, one safety."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., March 16, 1959

This is the news:

Less than two hours from now...at 9:30, Eastern time...President Eisenhower will speak to the country on "the evolving Berlin situation and the general security position of the United States and its allies." Mr. Eisenhower has spent most of the day working on the broadcast with members of his writing staff. News Secretary Hagerty says, "I would characterize it as being a firm speech." Besides reviewing the Berlin situation and the state of this country's preparedness, the President is expected to stress the importance of foreign aid.

Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter told Congress today that the foreign aid program...proposed for the next fiscal year...is "fundamental to the peace of the world." Herter testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. He warned that any deep cut in the four-billion-dollar aid program would indicate to Russia that we are weakening in the world struggle against Communism. The United States, he said, can do much to meet Russia's economic competition among the less developed countries by replenishing the Development Loan Fund. And he said any cut in military assistance would be "short-sighted"...since it would mean higher military expenditures at home and "many more American boys in uniform." A member of the committee...Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio...said the warning about more Americans in uniform did not seem to him to jibe with President Eisenhower's statement last week that the United States "certainly" is not going to fight a ground war in Europe. Representative Hays said, "I am sure the American people are just as confused as I am." Secretary Herter deferred answering. He was not trying to "duck" the question, he said, but he thought that military officers...due to testify later...could make a more informed reply. Republican Representative Judd wondered why in the administration of the aid program there is so much difficulty in obtaining better personnel. This was due in large part, Herter said, to lack of certainty that the program would continue from year to year. "Then," said Judd, "it is up to Congress to face up to the fact that this is a continuing task." Herter's reply was that if Congress would make foreign aid "more than a year-to-year" program, it would be a "vast" help. Committee Chairman Morgan predicted...after hearing this testimony...that the foreign aid program "as a whole" will fare "very well" at the hands of Congress this year. There may be a "small" cut in the program, he said, because of reports of "waste and inefficiency" in some Asian countries. He said, "We will make it more efficient by eliminating the waste."

Democratic Senator Fulbright said today that there may be a suspicion among some Europeans that the United States is weakening in its position on Berlin. Fulbright said...in a Senate speech...that there are some points on which the United States will not yield. The United States, he said, is united on these propositions: "The United States will make no separate...or unilateral...deals with the Soviet Union. The United States will not be driven or enticed from either Berlin or West Germany. Nor, said Fulbright, can the United States in honor "accept, even tacitly, any proposition designed to formalize the subjugation of the once free satellite peoples." On the other hand, he said, we must not be "unreceptive to fresh, soundly reasoned ideas." He thought the danger of war might be reduced if both the Russian and free world forces in Germany would "move back an equal distance, however slight." Fulbright is chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Admiral Arleigh Burke has told Congress that the strength of the United States...at the moment...is greater than that of Russia and will "still be greater a year from now." Burke told the Senate preparedness subcommittee...in testimony delivered last Friday but released today...that, in his opinion, the Berlin crisis is getting worse. The chief of naval operations warned against "knuckling under"...saying that if we do, the Russians would only put on new pressure somewhere else.

A leader of the West German social democratic party...Professor Carlo Schmid...called on Premier Khrushchev today in Moscow. Professor Schmid said after his talk with Khrushchev that Russia's readiness to negotiate beyond the narrow limits of their Berlin proposals "should not be over-estimated."

Khrushchev made a speech today...accusing President Nasser of trying to annex Iraq to the United Arab Republic. It is a situation, he said, to which Russia is "not indifferent." Khrushchev spoke as the Soviet Union and Iraq were signing a new economic agreement. Iraq will receive technical assistance for starting new industry...along with a loan of about 55-million dollars, repayable at an interest rate of two and a half percent.

In Cairo today, Nasser's defense minister...Field Marshal Amer...made a speech...calling on Nasser "to lead us forward to the liberation of Iraq."

In Washington, the Federal Reserve Board reports that American industrial production advanced in February for the tenth consecutive month. The production index is now within one percentage point of what it was before the recession began in August, 1957. In the same period, recovery in unemployment has lagged.

The House today passed...and sent to the Senate...a bill that would extend the special unemployment compensation program for three months.

When the Russians under Stalin settled down to rule East Germany the first thing they did was to strip the country of much of its factory equipment. Trainloads of machinery left for the Soviet Union. This industrial loot was called "reparations." Presumably much of it was installed in Russia, but much of it was unsuitable and rusted on the railroad sidings. There it testified to Stalin's fierce determination that Germany should not rise again.

With Stalin's death the Kremlin's policy toward the satellites was modified. They still were to be exploited, but they were to have more economic breathing room. The new men in the Kremlin found that it took more than power to rule satellites. It also needed cooperation. The change did not come too soon. Riots did break out in East Germany, revolt followed in Hungary, and the Stalinist Viceroy was thrown out in Warsaw and replaced by Gomulka, who had languished in jail as anti-Stalinist. The Kremlin had to reverse the economic flow and pour financial aid into the troubled countries.

For East Germany this has meant the receipt of 400 million dollars in Soviet credits since the death of Stalin. The trainloads of loot going in one direction became two-way traffic, and East Germany began to recover.

One needs to know the extent of this recovery to understand Krushchev's policies today. He is not solely interested in getting Western troops out of West Berlin. His greater interest is in keeping East Germany Communist and keeping it part of the Soviet economic system. For East Germany is by now the prize satellite of the lot. It has more trade with the Soviet Union than any other satellite. It has a larger gross national product than any Communist country in the world, with the exception only of the Soviet Union and Red China. The trade between the Soviet Union and East Germany comes to three billion rubles a year each way. This is a big enough item to be part of the Soviet Union's own planning. It is significantly greater than East German trade with West Germany, which is only thirty percent as large. East Germany leads all the satellites in its trade within the Communist Bloc. It also leads all the satellites -- and most Western countries --- in trade with the under-developed countries outside the Bloc.

It is with these facts in mind that Krushchev insists that the re-unification of Germany must be left to the two Germanys themselves. What he means is that the only conceivable unification is a confederation in which East Germany continues as a Communist state based on a Communist economy. Industry would remain socialized and the present partial socialization of the land would be perpetuated. Whether or not the confederation came into existence, East Germany would still remain a functioning member of the Communist Bloc. Confederation could be manipulated to keep it from being a prelude to the democratization of East Germany. The Communists would have a veto power over any joint policy of the two Germanys, and if Soviet prosperity grew, the Communist impact on West Germany would grow with it.

The West by now has accepted the status of Poland. Khrushchev hopes to prevail on it to accept as well the Communist status in East Germany. He may be willing to pay a price for it, as he has in Poland. There, he has made his peace with Gomulka and with the somewhat greater personal liberties in Poland for which Gomulka stands. Hints have gone out that he is willing to sacrifice the Ulbricht Regime in East Germany. Ulbricht was a staunch Stalinist and is hardly the ideal man to do any negotiating with the West. There are Revisionist East German Communists who were purged in February a year ago and who might be brought back to power. Karl Schirdewan is mentioned as a possible East German Gomulka.

But Khrushchev would insist on the West giving up what is left of its "Liberation Policy" in Eastern Europe. For what he ultimately wants is western acceptance of the status quo in Eastern Europe. This and the demilitarization of West Germany are his two basic objectives. No doubt he does not expect them from the negotiations this year. But if he can get Western recognition of East Germany, and any kind of negotiations between West and East Germany, he might well feel he had made a good start. And since there are many in Western Europe, notably in France and England, who are mortally afraid of a resurgence of German power ~~unless Germany remains divided~~, his policy will not be without advocates within the Western coalition.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

Thomas Carlyle called economics the "dismal science"...dealing as it does with the complexities of producing, distributing and consuming wealth. This makes economics no less important. Khrushchev might well agree with Eduard Bernstein...who called economic facts "the ever-recurring decisive forces, the chief points in the process of history."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 16, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Less than two hours from now...at 9:30, Eastern time...President Eisenhower will speak to the country on "the evolving Berlin situation and the general security position of the United States and its allies." Mr. Eisenhower has spent most of the day working on the broadcast with members of his writing staff. News Secretary Hagerty says, "I would characterize it as being a firm speech." Besides reviewing the Berlin situation and the state of this country's preparedness, the President is expected to stress the importance of foreign aid.

Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter told Congress today that the foreign aid program...proposed for the next fiscal year...is "fundamental to the peace of the world." Herter testified before the House Foreign Affairs Committee. He warned that any deep cut in the four-billion-dollar aid program would indicate to Russia that we are weakening in the world struggle against Communism. The United States, he said, can do much to meet Russia's economic competition among the less developed countries by replenishing the Development Loan Fund. And he said any cut in military assistance would be "short-sighted"...since it would mean higher military expenditures at home and "many more American boys in uniform." A member of the committee...Democratic Representative Hays of Ohio... said the warning about more Americans in uniform did not seem to him to jibe with President Eisenhower's statement last week that the United States "certainly" is not going to fight a ground war in Europe. Representative Hays said, "I am sure the American people are just as confused as I am." Secretary Herter deferred answering. he was not trying to "duck" the question, he said, but he thought that military officers...due to testify later...could make a more informed reply. Republican Representative Judd wondered why in the administration of the aid program there is so much difficulty in obtaining better personnel.

This was due in large part, Herter said, to lack of certainty that the program would continue from year to year. "Then," said Judd, "it is up to Congress to face up to the fact that this is a continuing task?" Herter's reply was that if Congress would make foreign aid "more than a year-to-year" program, it would be a "vast" help.

Democratic Senator Fulbright said today that there may be a suspicion among some Europeans that the United States is weakening in its position on Berlin. Fulbright said,..in a Senate speech...that there are some points on which the United States will not yield. The United States, he said, is united on these propositions: "The United States will make no separate....or unilateral...deals with the Soviet Union. The United States will not be driven or enticed from either Berlin or West Germany.. Nor, said Fulbright, can the United States in honor "accept, even tacitly, any proposition designed to formalize the subjugation of the once free satellite peoples." On the other hand, he said, we must not be "unreceptive to fresh, soundly reasoned ideas." He thought the danger of war might be reduced if both the Russian and free world forces in Germany would "move back an equal distance, however slight." Fulbright is chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

Admiral Arleigh Burke has told Congress that the strength of the United States...at the moment...is greater than that of Russia and will "still be greater a year from now." Burke told the Senate preparedness subcommittee...in testimony delivered last Friday but released today...that, in his opinion, the Berlin crisis is getting worse. The chief of naval operations warned abainst "knuckling under"...saying that if we do, the Russians would only put on new pressure somewhere else.

Khrushchev made a speech today...accusing President Nasser of trying to annex Iraq to the United Arab Republic. It is a situation, he said, to which Russia is "not indifferent." Khrushchev spoke as the Soviet Union and Iraq were signing a new economic agreement. Iraq will receive technical assistance for starting new industry...along with a loan of about 55-million dollars, repayable at an interest rate of two and a half percent.

In Cairo today, Nasser's defense minister...Field Marshal Amer...made a speech...calling on Nasser "to lead us forward to the liberation of Iraq."

In Washington, the Federal Reserve Board reports that American industraal production advanced in February for the tenth consecutive month. The production index is now within one percentage point of what it was before the recession began in August, 1957. In the same period, recovery in unemployment has lagged.

The house today passed...and sent to the Senate...a bill that would extend the special unemployment compensation program for three months.

When the Russians under Stalin settled down to rule East Germany the first thing they did was to strip the country of much of its factory equipment. Trainloads of machinery left for the Soviet Union. This industrial loot was called reparations. Presumably much of it was installed in Russia, but much of it was unsuitable and rusted on the railroad sidings. There it testified to Stalin's fierce determination that Germany should not rise again.

With Stalin's death the Kremlin's policy toward the satellites was modified. They still were to be exploited, but they were to have more economic breathing room. The new men in the Kremlin found that it took more than power to rule satellites. It also needed cooperation. The change did not come too soon. Riots did break out in East Germany, revolt followed in Hungary, and the Stalinist Viceroy was thrown out in Warsaw and replaced by Gomulka, who had languished in jail as anti-Stalinist. The Kremlin had to reverse the economic flow and pour financial aid into the troubled countries.

For East Germany this has meant the receipt of 400-million dollars in Soviet credits since the death of Stalin. The trainloads of loot going in one direction became two-way traffic, and East Germany began to recover.

One needs to know the extent of this recovery to understand Khrushchev's policies today. He is not solely interested in getting Western troops out of West Berlin. His greater interest is in keeping East Germany Communist and keeping it part of the Soviet economic system. For East Germany is by now the prize satellite of the lot. It has more trade with the Soviet Union than any other satellite. It has a larger gross national product than any Communist country in the world, with the exception only of the Soviet Union and Red China. The trade between the Soviet Union and East Germany comes to three billion rubles a year each way. This is a big enough item to be part of the Soviet Union's own planning. It is significantly greater than East German trade with West Germany, wiich is only thirty percent as large. East Germany leads all the satellites in its trade within the Communist Bloc. It also leads all the satellites -- and most Western countries --- in trade with the under-developed countries outside the Bloc.

It is with these facts in mind that Khrushchev insists that the re-unification of Germany must be left to the two Germanys themselves. What he means is that the only conceivable unification is a confederation in which East Germany continues as a Communist state based on a Communist economy. Industry would remain socialized and the present partial socialization of the land would be perpetuated. Whether or not the confederation came into existence, East Germany would still remain a functioning member of the Communist Bloc. Confederation could be manipulated to keep it from being a prelude to the democratization of East Germany. The Communists would have a veto power over any joint policy of the two Germanys and if Soviet prosperity grew, the Communist impact on West Germany would grow with it.

The West by now has accepted the status of Poland. Khrushchev hopes to prevail on it to accept as well the Communist status in East Germany. He may be willing to pay a price for it, as he has in Poland. There, he has made his peace with Gomulka and with the somewhat greater personal liberties in Poland for which Gomulka stands. Hints have gone out that he is willing to sacrifice the Ulbricht Regime in East Germany. Ulbricht was a staunch Stalinist and is hardly the ideal man to do any negotiating with the West.

But Khrushchev would insist on the West giving up what is left of its Liberation Policy in Eastern Europe. For what he ultimately wants is western acceptance of the status quo in Eastern Europe. This and the demilitarization of West Germany are his two basic objectives. No doubt he does not expect them from the negotiations this year. But if he can get Western recognition of East Germany and any kind of negotiations between Weat and East Germany, he might well feel he had made a good start. And since there are many in Western Europe, notably in France and England, who are mortally afraid of a resurgence of German power, his policy will not be without advocates within the Western coalition.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Thomas Carlyle called economics the "dismal science"...dealing as it does with the complexities of producing, distributing and consuming wealth. This makes economics no less important. Khrushchev might well agree with Eduard Bernstein...who called economic facts "the ever-recurring decisive forces, the chief points in the process of history."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., March 17, 1959

This is the news:

The first Soviet reaction to President Eisenhower's broadcast comes from the official news agency Tass. The whole spirit of the speech, according to Tass, conveyed the desire of the United States government "to prolong the occupation of Berlin for an indefinite time." The President, it says, tried to make out that American troops are in West Berlin legally fourteen years after the end of the war---which, of course, they are. And it complains that "without justification" he sought to convince his listeners that Russia has "bellicose intentions". No statement yet by Khrushchev. Diplomatic observers say, however, that Mr. Eisenhower's qualified agreement to a summit conference probably will be well received by Soviet leaders.

President Eisenhower's policy statement is being applauded in London, Paris and Bonn. West German Chancellor Adenauer said the President had made it "very clear" how important the United States regards the Berlin situation. And Willy Brandt, the mayor of West Berlin, said the speech "confirms our conviction that we can truly rely on our American friends." In Paris, a French foreign ministry spokesman called the speech "completely satisfying". British officials said the President had shown the difference between appeasement and negotiation.

In Congress, Chairman Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said he regarded the broadcast as "one of the President's best efforts"... although, he said, he could not go along with Mr. Eisenhower's decision to cut down on military personnel. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen praised the President's readiness to negotiate with the Russians "on reasonable terms." What Mr. Eisenhower said was that the United States would be ready to participate in a summit conference this summer, if this were justified by the events attending a meeting of foreign ministers. He also said, "We will not retreat one inch from our duty in Berlin."

The White House says that public response to President Eisenhower's nationwide broadcast has been "unusually heavy". More than 600 telegrams had been received by the President by 8 o'clock this morning...and all but twenty of them expressed complete support of his stand.

British Prime Minister Macmillan is leaving London tonight for high-level talks in Ottawa and Washington. He will spend tomorrow conferring with Canadian leaders, then fly on to Washington for a four-day meeting with President Eisenhower. This afternoon, Macmillan conferred in London with Giuseppe Pella, the visiting Italian foreign minister. Pella is said to have asked that Italy be represented at the forthcoming meeting of foreign ministers.

DEH-BRAY'

In Paris today, French Premier Debre paid a three-hour "courtesy call" on General Lauris Norstad, supreme commander of Allied forces in Europe. The French decision to retain control of its Mediterranean fleet, even in time of war, was discussed.

Ripting broke out tonight in the French port of Le Havre...after the Communists lost the election for mayor to a socialist by one vote. According to Reuters news service, several persons were injured when a crowd of more than five thousand Communists battled with 800 police.

In Northern Rhodesia, sixty Africans have been arrested...following an attack last night on a government patrol. Two Africans were killed in the action. And two government officials, accompanying the patrol, were wounded by spears.

President Eisenhower today invited the governors of nine states..and Hawaii...to confer with him on Monday regarding unemployment insurance. The announced purpose of the White House meeting is "to counsel on ways to strengthen the regular federal-state unemployment compensation program." The action comes as Congress has before it a Democratic-sponsored bill to extend the emergency benefits program passed at the bottom of the recession.

The observance of St. Patrick's Day was highlighted by the first state visit to Washington by a president of Ireland. President Sean O'Kelly was greeted at National Airport by President Eisenhower, wearing a green necktie. "Today," he explained, "everybody in the United States is Irish...but if your name is Eisenhower, you have to wear something green so people will know." The two Presidents...riding in Mr. Eisenhower bubble-top car... then led a parade into the city. Other St. Patrick's Day parades were held throughout the country. Here in New York...on Fifth Avenue...10 thousand marchers are estimated to have taken part in a parade lasting more than five hours.

A committee of experts...named by President Eisenhower...recommended today that the military assistance phase of the foreign aid program be increased in the next fiscal year by 400-million dollars. The President has asked Congress for 1-billion, 600-million dollars for this purpose. His advisory committee recommends two billion dollars. The committee also urges that loans for the economic improvement of less developed countries be stepped up to at least one billion dollars a year by July, 1960....and that the whole foreign aid program be put on a long-range continuing basis. The 10-man bipartisan committee is headed by William H. Draper, Junior, former under-secretary of defense.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the Administration request for increasing this country's subscriptions to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The committee, however, refused to allow the subscriptions to be charged against the current budget.

Edward R. Murrow: March 17, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The Berlin crisis of today is the second attempt of the Russians to drive the West out of that city, and it may be helpful to recall some facts about the first attempt. They can at least alert us on what to expect.

The Russians began the blockade on June 18, 1948, but did not admit its purpose for several days. Then on June 24, seven Eastern European Foreign Ministers met in Warsaw and issued a number of demands. One was the establishment of a provisional, so-called "democratic" all-German government, consisting of representatives of the "democratic" parties and labor unions. The word "democratic" ruled out the bourgeois parties. The Ministers demanded a peace treaty with Germany and the withdrawal of all occupation forces. They also demanded the fulfilment of Big Four agreements on the disarmament of Germany, and a Big Four control of heavy industry in the Ruhr. This was sky-writing for all the world to read. The blockade was a crude attempt to seize control of the heart of Europe.

Then in distant parts of the world, explosions started to go off. The first was on July 7. A revolt erupted in Malaya. It was at once recognized as Moscow-inspired and Communist-led. Its purpose was to drive the British from their plantations and to seize control of the government. This was to go on for years.

Eight days later came another explosion in Burma. A Communist-led insurrection broke out in the area of Toungoo. It was soon to be suppressed, but on September 15, Britain's Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin told the House of Commons that the strife in Malaya and Burma was part of a Cominform plan to drive Western influence out of Southeast Asia. And the following day the State Department also said that the Communists had launched a drive for power in Southeast Asia under the cover of Nationalist movements.

On September 16, in Indonesia, Communists seized ~~the Madiun~~ area in Central Java and proclaimed a Soviet regime for the Indonesian Republic. This was quickly suppressed. On September 28, the Philippines reported that guerilla fighting by the Communist Huks had suddenly flared up early in August and that a thousand lives had been lost in the subsequent guerilla fighting.

On October 9, a crashing blow was struck in France. A strike closed down the mines, steel and iron mills and railroads and paralyzed the country. Interior Minister Jules Moch charged that the strike had been ordered by the Cominform. Non-Communist workers soon lost their enthusiasm and the strike narrowed. The railroads got to running again, but the coal miners, openly controlled by the Communists, seized the coal mines and had to be driven out by the French Army.

On October 21 in Korea, the Communists staged a revolt which won temporary control of ~~the Port of Yosu, Sunchon~~ Two Ports and other localities in the South. This also was quickly put down.

The pattern of these uprisings is clear. Wherever Communists had enough strength to stage some trouble they were ordered into action. In no case were they strong enough to win, but Moscow could not have expected them to. It simply wanted to harrass the Western Powers as much as possible while the test of strength in Berlin was undecided.

It is worth recalling that this was the time when the Chinese Communists gained control of all Manchuria and were on the verge of overwhelming Chiang Kai-Shek. Madame Chiang came to this country, pleading for three billion dollars' worth of aid for three years. She got nowhere. One reason was the American loss of faith in Chiang and his capacities. But another reason was the pre-occupation with the Soviet showdown.

Much has changed in eleven years. Communist uprisings as such have been superceded by subtler devices. Infiltration is replacing revolution. But the Russians are now interested in stirring up trouble for the West in Africa,

Latin America and Southeast Asia, which they can do. And they may be able to take advantage of the Berlin crisis to win a victory in the Middle East, for which they have yearned for a century. The events in Iraq have given the Kremlin more power in this region than it has ever enjoyed before. The final outcome is still uncertain. But on the basis of past performance, Russia may be expected to probe in other areas while all eyes are on Berlin.

Back in a moment -

George Ruyan -

Word for Today

President Eisenhower has held out the prospect of a summit conference. Abraham Lincoln said something which comes to mind in connection with such a meeting. "All rising to a great place," he said, "is by a winding stair. Let none falter who thinks he is right...for if we never try, we shall never succeed. But it is only in concert that we can succeed."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 17, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The first Soviet reaction to President Eisenhower's broadcast comes from the official news agency Tass. The whole spirit of the speech, according to Tass, conveyed the desire of the United States government "to prolong the occupation of Berlin for an indefinite time." The President, it says, tried to make out that American troops are in West Berlin legally fourteen years after the end of the war---which of course, they are. And it complains that "without justification" he sought to convince his listeners that Russia has "bellicose intentions." No statement yet by Khrushchev. Diplomatic observers say, however, that Mr. Eisenhower's qualified agreement to a summit conference probably will be well received by Soviet leaders.

President Eisenhower's policy statement is being applauded in London, Paris and Bonn. West German Chancellor Adenauer said the President had made it "very clear" how important the United States regards the Berlin situation. And Willy Brandt, the mayor of West Berlin, said the speech "confirms our conviction that we can truly rely on our American friends." In Paris, a French foreign ministry spokesman called the speech "completely satisfying." British officials said the President had shown the difference between appeasement and negotiation.

In Congress, Chairman Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said he regarded the broadcast as "one of the President's best efforts"... although, he said, he could not go along with Mr. Eisenhower's decision to cut down on military personnel. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen praised the President's readiness to negotiate with the Russians "on reasonable terms." What Mr. Eisenhower said was that the United States would be ready to participate in a summit conference this summer, if this were justified by the events attending a meeting of foreign ministers. He also said, "We will not retreat one inch from our duty in Berlin."

The White House says that public response to President Eisenhower's nationwide broadcast has been "unusually heavy." More than 600 telegrams had been received by the President by 8 o-clock this morning...and all but twenty of them expressed complete support of his stand.

British Prime Minister Macmillan is leaving London tonight for high-level talks in Ottawa and Washington. He will spend tomorrow conferring with Canadian leaders, then fly on to Washington for a four-day meeting with President Eisenhower. This afternoon, Macmillan conferred in London with Giuseppe Pella, the visiting Italian foreign minister. Pella is said to have asked that Italy be represented at the forthcoming meeting of foreign ministers.

In Paris today, French Premier Debre paid a three-hour "courtesy call" on General Lauris Norstad, supreme commander of Allied forces in Europe. The French decision to retain control of its Mediterranean fleet, even in time of war, was discussed.

Rioting broke out tonight in the French port of LeHavre...after the Communists lost the election for mayor to a socialist by one vote. According to Reuters news service, several persons were injured when a crowd of more than five thousand Communists battled with 800 police.

In Northern Rhodesia, sixty Africans have been arrested...following an attack last night on a govemment patrol. Two Africans were killed in the action. And two government officials, accompanying the patrol, were wounded by spears.

President Eisenhower today invited the governors of nine states...and Hawaii...to confere with him on Monday regarding unemployment insurance. The announced purpose of the White House meeting is "to counsel on ways to strengthen the regular federal-state unemployment compensation program." The action comes as Congress has before it a Democratic-sponsored bill to extend the emergency benefits program passed at the bottom of the recession.

The observance of St. Patrick's Day was highlighted by the first state visit to Washington by a president of Ireland. President Sean O'Kelly was greeted at National Airport by President Eisenhower, wearing a green necktie. "Today," he explained, "everybody in the United Stttes is Irish...but if your name is Eisenhower, you have to wear something green so people will know."

A committee of experts...named by President Eisenhower...recommended today that the military assistance phase of the foreign aid program be increased in the next fiscal year by 400-million dollars. The President has asked Congress for 1-billion, 600 million dollars for this purpose. His advisory committee recommends two billion dollars. The committee also urges that loans for the economic improvement of less developed countries be stepped up to at least one billion dollars a year by July, 1960...and that the whole foreign aid program be put on a long-range continuing basis. The 10-man bipartisan committee is headed by William H. Draper, Junior, former under-secretary of defense.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the Administration request for increasing this country's subscriptions to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. The committee, however, refused to allow the subscriptions to be charged against the current budget.

The Berlin crisis of today is the second attempt of the Russians to drive the West out of that city, and it may be helpful to recall some facts about the first attempt. They can at least alert us on what to expect.

The Russians began the blockade on June 18, 1948, but did not admit its purpose for several days. Then on June 24, seven Eastern European Foreign Ministers met in Warsaw and issued a number of demands. One was the establishment of a provisional, so-called "democratic" all-German government, consisting of representatives of the "democratic" parties and labor unions. The word "democratic" ruled out the bourgeois parties. The Ministers demanded a peace treaty with Germany and the withdrawal of all occupation forces. They also demanded the fulfillment of Big Four agreements on the disarmament of Germany, and a Big Four control of heavy industry in the Ruhr. This was sky-writing for all the world to read. The blockade was a crude attempt to seize control of the heart of Europe.

Then in distant parts of the world, explosions started to go off. The first was on July 7. A revolt erupted in Malaya. It was at once recognized as Moscow-inspired and Cummunist-led. Its purpose was to drive the British from their plantations and to seize control of the government. This was to go on for years.

Eight days later came another explosion in Burma. A Communist-led insurrection broke out in the area of Toungoo. It was soon to be suppressed, but on September 15th Britain's Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin told the House of Commons that the strife in Malaya and Burma was part of a Cominform plan to drive Western influence out of Southeast Asia. And the following day the State Department also said that the Communists had launched a drive for power in Southeast Asia under the cover of Nationalist movements.

On September 16, in Indonesia, Communists seized an area in Central Java and proclaimed a Soviet regime for the Indonesian Republic. This was quickly suppressed. On September 28, the Philippines reported that guerilla fighting by the Communist Huks had suddenly flared up early in August and that a thousand lives had been lost in the subsequent guerilla fighting.

On October 9, a crashing blow was struck in France. A strike closed down the mines, steel and iron mills and railroads and paralyzed the country. Interior Minister Jules Moch charged that the strike had been ordered by the Cominform. Non-Communist workers soon lost their enthusiasm and the strike narrowed. The railroads got to running again, but the coal miners, openly controlled by the Communists, seized the coal mines and had to be driven out by the French Army.

In October 21 in Korea, the Communists staged a revolt which won temporary control of two ports and other localities in the South. This also was quickly put down.

The pattern of these uprisings is clear. Wherever Communists had enough strength to stage some trouble they were ordered into action. In no case were they strong enough to win, but Moscow could not have expected them to. It simply wanted to harrass the Western Powers as much as possible while the test of strength was undecided.

It is worth recalling that this was the time when the Chinese Communists gained contool of all Manchuria and were on the verge of overwhelming Chiang Kai-Shek. Madame Chiang came to this country, pleading for three billion dollars' worth of aid for three years. She got nowhere. One reason was the American loss of faith in Chiang and his capacities. But another reason was the pre-occupation with the Soviet showdown.

Much has changed in eleven years. Communist uprisings as such have been superceded by subtler devices. Infiltration is replacing revolution. But the Russians are not interested in stirring up trouble for the West in Africa, Latin America and Southeast Asia, which they can do. And they may be able to take advantage of the Berlin crisis to win a victory in the Middle East, for which they have yearned for a century. The events in Iraq have given the Kremlin more power in this region than it has ever enjoyed before. The final outcome is still uncertain. But on the basis of past performance, Russia may be expected to probe in other areas while all eyes are on Berlin.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: President Eisenhower has held out the prospect of a summit conference. Abraham Lincoln said something which comes to mind in connection with such a meeting. "All rising to a great place," he said, "is by a winding stair. Let none falter who thinks he is right...for if we never try, we shall never succeed. But it is only in concert that we can succeed."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., March 18, 1959

This is the news:

The radiation treatments prescribed for Secretary of State Dulles have been completed. Mr. Dulles will stay at Walter Reed Hospital for a few more days and then go home. He also plans...later...to get away from Washington for a period of recuperation and rest. The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, says that Dulles in the meantime will "continue to be available for consultation with the President." White could not say how effective X-ray treatments have been in arresting the abdominal cancer...or when Mr. Dulles will be able to return to his desk. It is expected that British Prime Minister Macmillan will call on the secretary of state when he arrives in Washington. But it is now apparent that Mr. Dulles will not take part in the Eisenhower-Macmillan talks at Camp David, in the Maryland mountains.

Prime Minister Macmillan spent most of today conferring with Canadian leaders in Ottawa. On arriving from London, he expressed confidence that his conversations in Ottawa and Washington would "consolidate" the Western position. "Only in unity," he said, "shall we find the strength to combine firm principles with readiness to negotiate." He said, "It is now generally accepted that there must be negotiations this summer." Mr. Macmillan will fly to Washington tomorrow, accompanied by Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd.

In Moscow, Premier Khrushchev has called a news conference for tomorrow morning. It will be the second news conference Khrushchev has ever given...and he probably will use it to answer the policy statement made by President Eisenhower last Monday night. The Soviet premier held his first formal news conference last November, when he proposed that West Berlin be disarmed and made a "free city".

President Eisenhower today nominated General Lyman Lemnitzer to succeed General Maxwell Taylor as Army chief of staff. Taylor's second two-year term as Army chief is due to expire on June 30. News Secretary Hagerty said Taylor had asked not to be re-appointed. He definitely was not dropped, Hagerty said, because he opposed cuts ordered by the Administration in Army personnel. / Mr. Eisenhower, as expected, nominated General Nathan Twining for reappointment as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Admiral Arleigh Burke was nominated for reappointment as chief of naval operations, and General Thomas White as Air Force chief of staff. General Randolph Pate, commandant of the Marine Corps, is serving a term which runs another ten months.

In Congress today, General Twining joined Secretary of Defense McElroy in appealing for the full 1-billion, 600-million dollars requested by President Eisenhower in military aid for our allies. / McElroy said it would be a "critical mistake" to curtail the program because of isolated instances of waste and inefficiency...representing, he said, a small percentage of the total money involved. As an example of the value of military assistance, McElroy cited the fending off of Communist air attacks by the Nationalist Chinese in the Formosa Strait. General Twining said any reductions in the program would "virtually eliminate" the modernization

—)

Democratic Senator Fulbright today introduced legislation for carrying out the Administration foreign aid program, but reserved the right to support amendments which may be introduced later on. Fulbright...who is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee...described the program as "insufficient." "There is no evidence," he said, "that the Administration is now...or ever will be...willing to urge the American people to take in one notch in our belt to deal with a Soviet challenge which confront us in missiles, arms and just downright capacity to produce."

~~of forces required if objectives are to be met.~~

~~The Senate preparedness subcommittee was briefed on the Berlin situation today by Allen Dulles, director of central intelligence.~~

The Army announces that it will send a Redstone missile group to Germany next month. The missiles of approximately 200-mile range will be handled by the 46th Artillery group, now stationed at Fort Sill. According to the announcement, the transfer to West Germany "was planned some time ago."

A scientific breakthrough in developing a more "hardy" breed of Atlas missile is reported from Washington by CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd. Von Fremd quotes scientists as saying that by increasing the pressure within the thin-skinned I.C.B.M., the weapon will be tough enough for underground storage in groups of 60 to 70 and for launching from underground. Only a direct hit would destroy these Altases, in contrast with the present model which must be launched from a "soft" pad---that is, from the surface.

The Peiping radio says that Communist China has signed an agreement with Yugoslavia, reducing trade between the two countries by 60 percent.

Another Peiping broadcast denounces President Tito's "slanders" against the Chinese Communist regime.

President Eisenhower today signed into law legislation to make Hawaii the 50th state. He said...in a formal statement...that signing the bill gave him "great satisfaction." The people of Hawaii will now approve the action in a referendum and elect a state government. They must also select two senators and a representative to send to Congress.

Mr. Eisenhower has asked the Justice Department to see what can be done about reversing a recent decision by the Federal Communications Commission affecting news broadcasts. According to that decision, radio and television stations must grant equal time to competing political candidates on news programs. News Secretary Hagerty told reporters today that the President "thinks it is ridiculous" to extend the equal time requirement from the realm of strictly political broadcasts to the presentation of news.

The House Banking Committee today approved President Eisenhower's plan for increasing this country's subscription to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. But, unlike the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday, it voted...as a matter of bookkeeping...to have the cost charged against the budget for this fiscal year.

Edward R. Murrow: March 18, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

While Cairo and Moscow accuse each other of trying to take over Iraq, and while Western opinion doesn't quite know whether to regret the failure of the army revolt against Kassem, it turns out that the Mosul uprising really started out as a revolt of landowners against land reform. It was not a Nasser plot to overthrow Kassem. Nor was it a plot by anti-Communist elements against Communist infiltration of the Kassem government. It was sparked by the influential Shammar tribesmen, who are heavy landowners in the northern region, and face losing their extensive holdings under the land reform decreed by Kassem after he came to power. He was limiting farms to six hundred acres of irrigated land and twelve hundred acres of desert land. Mosul authorities had not been enforcing the decree, but were about to go into action. The Shammar Sheiks, together with other landowners, inspired the army uprising under Colonel Shawaf.

It turned out to be a dismal failure. Mosul was badly shot up, probably two thousand were killed, and though Achmad Ajil, the chief Shammar Sheik, managed to escape, his palace in Mosul was wrecked and many of his followers died in defending it. The tribe owns vast tracts of the best-irrigated land. Most of it was to be expropriated. ~~Achmad himself was quite modern and~~ and farmed with up-to-date machinery. But he was associated in the revolt with backward landowners notorious for grinding down the peasants.

One reason the revolt looked like a Nasser plot was because many of the Shammar tribesmen live in Syria and crossed into Iraq to join the fighting. No doubt some Nasser followers got into the act, and they seem to have sent in some munitions. But Nasser's vehement disclaimer that he was responsible for the revolt may be quite sincere. It is at least plausible that he would not gang up with rich Iraqi landowners to overthrow a government that was dividing up the land. That would be going against his own ideology.

The struggle between Kassem and Nasser is not primarily due to the Communist infiltration in Bagdad. Kassem is no Communist. By all accounts he is a well-intentioned and politically inexperienced soldier. He found many Nasser elements in his army and uprooted them so as to save his own independence. In doing so he listened more and more to pro-Communist advisers. He still believes he will not join the Communist camp. But he intends first of all to keep out of the Nasser camp. There long has been a rivalry between Egyptian and Iraqi Arabs for leadership of the Arab world. The Iraqi look down on the Egyptians and tend to regard them as upstarts.

The United States as such has kept discreetly silent during the Mosul uprising. There has been a temptation to hail it as anti-Communist and therefore pro-Western. But the State Department had intimations that it was in part, at least, a revolt against land reform, and it was not to be caught lining up the West on the side of big landowners.

Besides, the State Department has learned to avoid snap judgments on an Iraqi uprising. When Kassem overthrew Feisal, the United States at once ordered the landing in Lebanon. One reason was Lebanon itself, also danger of trouble in Jordan and Saudi Arabia. But the big reason was Iraq, and the determination to keep Nasser from seizing it. Only after the Marines landed was it learned that Nasser had nothing to do with the Kassem revolution.

State Department silence on Iraq today does not mean there is no worry over the growth of Communist influence in the Kassem regime. There is, and the grant of a big, long-term Soviet credit this week has added to it. What would suit America best would be for both Nasser and Kassem to succeed in keeping their independence, not only from each other, but from Moscow, and, if that is necessary, from the West as well.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan

Word for Today

The State Department refrained...wisely...from making a snap judgment as to what was really happening in Iraq. Seneca said, "If you judge, investigate." And Woodrow Wilson said in one of his speeches, "One cool judgment is worth a thousand hasty counsels. The thing to do," he said, "is to supply light and not heat."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 18, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The radiation treatments prescribed for Secretary of State Dulles have been completed. Mr. Dulles will stay at Walter Reed Hospital for a few more days and then go home. He also plans...later...to get away from Washington for a period of recuperation and rest. The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, says that Dulles in the meantime will "continue to be available for consultation with the President." White could not say how effective X-ray treatments have been in arresting the abdominal cancer...or when Mr. Dulles will be able to return to his desk. It is expected that British Prime Minister Macmillan will call on the secretary of state when he arrives in Washington. But it is now apparent that Mr. Dulles will not take part in the Eisenhower-Macmillan talks at Camp David, in the Maryland mountains.

Prime Minister Macmillan spent most of today conferring with Canadian leaders in Ottawa. On arriving from London, he expressed confidence that his conversations in Ottawa and Washington would consolidate the Western position. "Only in unity," he said, "shall we find the strength to combine firm principles with readiness to negotiate." He said, "it is now generally accepted that there must be negotiations this summer." Mr. Macmillan will fly to Washington tomorrow, accompanied by Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd.

In Moscow, Premier Khrushchev has called a news conference for tomorrow morning. It will be the second news conference Khrushchev has ever given...and he probably will use it to answer the policy statement made by President Eisenhower last Monday night. The Soviet premier held his first formal news conference last November, when he proposed that West Berlin be disarmed and made a "free city."

President Eisenhower today nominated General Lyman Lemnitzer to succeed General Maxwell Taylor as Army chief of staff. Taylor's second two-year term as Army chief is due to expire on June 30. News Secretary Hagerty said Taylor had asked not to be re-appointed. He definitely was not dropped, Hagerty said, because he opposed cuts ordered by the Administration in Army personnel. Mr. Eisenhower, as expected, nominated General Nathan Twining for reappointment as Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Admiral Arleigh Burke was nominated for reappointment as chief of naval operations, and General Thomas White as Air Force chief of staff. General Randolph Pate, commandant of the Marine Corps, is serving a term which runs another ten months.

In Congress today, General Twining joined Secretary of Defense McElroy in appealing for the full 1-billion, 600 million dollars requested by President Eisenhower in military aid for our allies. McElroy said it would be a "critical mistake" to curtail the program because of isolated instances of waste and inefficiency...representing, he said, a small percentage of the total money involved.

Democratic Senator Fulbright today introduced legislation for carrying out the Administration foreign aid program, but reserved the right to support amendments which may be introduced later on. Fulbright...who is chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee...described the program as insufficient. "There is no evidence," he said, "that the Administration is now...or ever will be... willing to urge the American people to take in one notch in our belt to deal with a Soviet challenge which confront us in missiles, arms and just downright capacity to produce."

The Army announces that it will send a Redstone missile group to Germany next month. The missiles of approxmmately 200-mile range will be handled by the 46th Artillery group, now stationed at Fort Sill. According to the announcement, the transfer to West Germany "was planned some time ago."

A scientific breakthrough in developing a more "hardy" breed of Atlas missile is reported from Washington by CBS News Correspondent Charles Von Fremd. Von Fremd quotes scientists as saying that by increasing the pressure within the thin-skinned I.C.B.M., the weapon will be tough enough for underground storage in groups of 60 to 70 and for launching from underground. Only a direct hit would destroy these Atlases, in contrast with the present model which must be launched from a "soft" pad---that is, from the surface.

The Peiping radio says that Communist China has signed an agreement with Yugoslavia, reducing trade between the two countries by 60 percent. Another Peiping broadcast denounces President Tito's "slanders" against the Chinese Communist regime.

President Eisenhower today signed into law legislation to make Hawaii the 50th state. He said, in a formal statement, that signing the bill gave him "great satisfaction." The people of Hawaii will now approve the action in a referendum and elect a state government. They must also select two senators and a representative to send to Congress.

Mr. Eisenhower has asked the Justice Department to see what can be done about reversing a recent decision by the Federal Communications Commission affecting news broadcasts. According to that decision, radio and television stations must grant equal time to competing political candidates on news programs. News Secretary Hagerty told reporters today that the President "thinks it is ridiculous" to extend the equal time requirement from the realm of strictly political broadcasts to the presentation of news.

The House Banking Committee today approved President Eisenhower's plan for increasing this country's subscription to the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank. But, unlike the Senate Foreign Relations Committee yesterday, it voted...as a matter of bookkeeping...to have the cost charged against the budget for this fiscal year.

While Cairo and Moscow accuse each other of trying to take over Iraq, and while Western opinion doesn't quite know whether to regret the failure of the army revolt against Kassem, it turns out that the Mosul uprising really started out as a revolt of landowners against land reform. It was not a Nasser plot to overthrow Kassem. Nor was it a plot by anti-Communist elements against Communist infiltration of the Kassem government. It was sparked by the influential Shammar tribesmen, who are heavy landowners in the northern region, and face losing their extensive holdings under the land reform decreed by Kassem after he came to power. He was limiting farms to six hundred acres of irrigated land and twelve hundred acres of desert land. Mosul authorities had not been enforcing the decree, but were about to go into action. The Shammar Sheiks, together with other landowners, inspired the army uprising under Colonel Shawaf.

It turned out to be a dismal failure. Mosul was badly shot up, probably two thousand were killed, and though Achmad Ajil, the chief Shammar Sheik, managed to escape, his palace in Mosul was wrecked and many of his followers died in defending it. The tribe owns vast tracts of the best-irrigated land. Most of it was to be expropriated.

One reason the revolt looked like a Nasser plot was because many of the Shammar tribesmen live in Syria and crossed into Iraq to join the fighting, No doubt some Nasser followers got into the act, and they seem to have sent in some munitions. But Nasser's vehement disclaimer that he was responsible for the revolt may be quite sincere. It is at least plausible that he would not gang up with rich Iraqi landowners to overthrow a government that was dividing up the land. That would be going against his own ideology.

The struggle between Kassem and Nasser is not primarily due to the Communist infiltration in Baghdad. Kassem is no Communist. By all accounts he is a well-intentioned and politically inexperienced soldier. He found many Nasser elements in his army and uprooted them so as to save his own independence. In doing so he listened more and more to pro-Communist advisers. He still believes he will not join the Communist camp. But he intends first of all to keep out of the Nasser camp. There long has been a rivalry between Egyptian and Iraqi Arabs for leadership of the Arab world. The Iraqi look down on the Egyptians and tend to regard them as upstarts.

The United States as such has kept discreetly silent during the Mosul uprising. There has been a temptation to hail it as anti-Communist and therefore pro-Western. But the State Department had intimations that it was in part at least a revolt against land reform, and it was not to be caught lining up the West on the side of big landowners.

Besides, the State Department has learned to avoid snap judgments on an Iraqi uprising. When Kassem overthrew Feisal, the United States at once ordered the landing in Lebanon. One reason was Lebanon itself, also danger of trouble in Jordan and Saudi Arabia. But the big reason was Iraq, and the determination to keep Nasser from seizing it. Only after the Marines landed was it learned that Nasser had nothing to do with the Kassem revolution.

State Department silence on Iraq today does not mean there is no worry over the growth of Communist influence on the Kassem regime. There is, and the grant of a big, long-term Soviet credit this week has added to it. What would suit America best would be for both Nasser and Kassem to succeed in keeping their independence, not only from each other, but from Moscow, and, if that is necessary from the West as well.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The State Department refrained...wisely...from making a snap judgment as to what was really happening in Iraq. Seneca said, "If you judge, investigate." And Woodrow Wilson said in one of his speeches, "One cool judgment is worth a thousand hasty counsels. The thing to do," he said, "is to supply light and not heat."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., March 19, 1959

This is the news:

The State Department says that the remarks made by Premier Khrushchev at his news conference "appear to be encouraging." Department officials have not had time to study the full text of what Khrushchev said. But the important thing, they say, is that the Russians "display a readiness to find common ground with us and our Western partners in any negotiations which may take place."

More than 300 newsmen attended Khrushchev's news conference in the Kremlin. The Soviet premier began by reading a 12-hundred-word prepared statement, and then answered numerous questions. The formal statement consisted mostly of generalities...such as the assertion that Russia's only aim was to "normalize" the situation in Berlin and "make a good start toward ending the cold war." / It called again for a German peace conference attended by all of the countries that fought Hitler in World War Two, a proposition which the West already has turned down. / It was when he answered questions that Khrushchev shed new light. / The Western powers, he said, do have a legal right to maintain troops in Berlin. But he said these rights stem from a war that ended fourteen years ago, and now it is time for a change. "Let us have a treaty of peace," he said, "to wipe out the vestiges of war." / Khrushchev said he would still prefer to hold a summit conference before a meeting of foreign ministers. / But if the West wants a foreign ministers meeting first, he said, "We will go along." And he said that if the West should propose that such a meeting get underway on May eleventh, "We will accept." / Khrushchev has suggested in the past that the foreign ministers limit themselves to a discussion of the German problem....while the West would like the broad question of European security included in the talks. / Today, Khrushchev said if the Western powers have "sensible" proposals to make, "we are ready to examine them together with our own proposals. / He insisted that in November...when he called for an end of the occupation status of Berlin in six months...he was not serving the West with an ultimatum. Six months, he said, was "just an approximation." "We tried to find the best sort of date...looked at the ceiling...and decided six months would be enough." But, he said, if ultimately his proposals are rejected, Russia will sign a separate treaty with the East German regime. He praised the "reasonableness" of what President Eisenhower said last Monday about the possibility of negotiating. At the same time, he accused "some" American military men of making belligerent claims, and warned them to remember that war is "two-sided". The Khrushchev news conference lasted two hours..and the presence of television cameras would indicate that some of it, at least, will be replayed for a Soviet audience.

Communist China today sent Russia a formal note...pledging all-out support to East Germany in the event, it says, of any armed provocation by the Western powers.

The French and Italian prime ministers...meeting today in Paris...say they have reached "complete unanimity" regarding the Berlin problem. The role which Italy may play in East-West negotiations also was discussed.

British Prime Minister Macmillan arrived in Washington today from Ottawa for four days of strategy talks in light of his recent mission to Moscow. Mr. Macmillan said he believes that "Russia's leaders, like us, have a common interest in avoiding war." What the allies must do, he said, is work out a common policy which combines "firmness and reasonableness." Tomorrow morning, Mr. Macmillan will visit Secretary of State Dulles in Walter Reed Army Hospital....then continue with President Eisenhower to Camp David, Maryland, for intimate talks.

The Geneva conference looking toward a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests has been recessed until April thirteenth. Three articles of a draft treaty were approved today by the American, British and Soviet delegates attending the conference, but none of the three articles was of a controversial nature. The talks were recessed to give both sides time to come up with new proposals for breaking the deadlock over inspection and control.

It was announced tonight that American scientists have sent a radar signal to the planet Venus, and then bounced it back to Earth. This constitutes a roundtrip in space of 56-million miles. The feat was accomplished at Westford, Massachusetts...by the scientists and engineers of the Lincoln Laboratory, which is part of M.I.T. Man has thus sent a message 100 times farther in space than ever before.

The New York Times revealed late last night that the United States had exploded three atomic devices more than 300 miles out in space, beyond the earth's atmosphere. It was reported that, as a consequence, a veil of radiation had been spread about the globe. My colleague, George Herman, is an expert in this sort of scientific story. For a report on just what happened, we switch to him now in Washington.

Tape runs 4:40
Ends on cue: "to ERM in NY."

That was George Herman... who has made a complex scientific story much more readily understood.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Man can be very proud of himself...I ~~think~~ suppose...in view of what he has just accomplished in the outer reaches of space. TOUR-GAIN-YEF Turgenev said, "A man is capable of understanding how the ether vibrates...and what's going on in the sun. But how any other man can blow his nose differently from him, that he is incapable of understanding."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, March 19, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

HERMAN: Any child who's ever seen a compass and asked why the needle points North, knows that the earth is a huge magnet. And in most high school science courses, the teacher has placed a magnet beneath a sheet of paper and sprinkled iron filings or powder unto the paper itself. Perhaps you remember the fuzzy but definitely curved lines into which the iron filings quickly arranged themselves. They showed the shape of the magnetic lines of force, or the magnetic field, which surrounded the magnet. The earth, as a magnet, is surrounded by those same magnetic lines of force. There are no iron filings sprinkled in the space around us to show these lines of force, but there are other particles to be trapped by our magnetic field, the electrically charged particles from the sun and from the impact of sunlight on our atmosphere. Such particles, captured and shaped into curved areas by the earth's magnetism, form the so-called Van Allen belts of deadly radiation above the earth. These are the dangerous areas, which American satellites and lunar probes first discovered and chartered in space. Leakage from the northern and southern edges of these belts give us the Auroral lights.

Now in Project Argus - the United States has thrown up three fistfulls of artificial particles to float freely in the magnetic lines of force and tell us a good deal about them. The particles were the highly charged dust clouds from three very small atom bombs, exploded a trifle over 300 miles in the sky above the South Atlantic Ocean. Like the iron filings sprinkled on the paper in high school, these particles instantly moved into the curved paths of the earth's magnetic field. The major lines of force, in the area of the explosion itself, carried the dust into a curve which caused artificial auroras or Northern and Southern Lights exactly where that curve touched down toward the earth. Other forces spread the dust rapidly eastward. And in a matter of about one hour, the whole earth - except for the Polar regions - was covered by a new radioactive shell, one which man had made. The life of this shell was brief, but long enough for it to be measured by the Explorer IV satellite and by some 16 rockets fired up 450 miles from an Air Force base.

What did these Argus tests, our first nuclear explosions in outer space accomplish? Much of the answer to that question must lie in certain highly specialized fields of theory about the earth's magnetic field itself. In more practical terms, we are told by Defense Department officials that the results were both valuable and disappointing. Disappointing in that we did not learn as much as we had hoped, and officially, we feel that further tests are very much to be desired. Valuable, in that a large body of theory was at least partly proved to be true. Valuable also in that special field of science called the military. Deputy Secretary of Defense, Donald Quarles says that one major purpose of the tests was to see whether such explosions in space could disrupt radar detection systems. Another was to see whether all radio and electronic communications could also be disrupted by this technique. But Quarles refused to say exactly what was learned, except to admit guardedly that both radar and radio were somewhat affected. He said that the lessons learned as to which frequencies and types of radar and radio were least affected had already been passed along to military radar builders. He admitted, under hard questioning, that the national security had been advanced by the tests and that we had learned nothing from them to make us abandon our present Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile type of thinking. But on almost all other questions, he pleaded military security and kept silent, except to say we will try more such tests whenever the current ban on nuclear weapons tests expires or is modified.

And while the military secrecy is likely to remain, more information is probably to be released. Explorer IV, which measured the result of the Argus tests, is part of the International Geophysical Year, and its findings belong to all the world and must be published by next September. Was it the greatest experiment in our century, Dr. York doesn't think so. Nor do other scientists who feel it can't be compared to such things as the first nuclear chain reaction, the work on the transistor or penicillin. Perhaps that enthusiastic description was an attempt to disarm public opinion in other lands, countries which might not appreciate a radioactive umbrella over their heads bearing the label: Made in America.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 19, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The State Department says that the remarks made by Premier Khrushchev at his news conference "appear to be encouraging." Department officials have not had time to study the full text of what Khrushchev said. But the important thing, they say, is that the Russians "display a readiness to find common ground with us and our Western partners in any negotiations which may take place."

More than 300 newsmen attended Khrushchev's news conference in the Kremlin. The Soviet premier began by reading a 12-hundred-word prepared statement, and then answered numerous questions. The formal statement consisted mostly of generalities...such as the assertion that Russia's only aim was to "normalize" the situation in Berlin and "make a good start toward ending the cold war." It called again for a German peace conference attended by all the countries that fought Hitler in World War Two, a proposition which the West already has turned down. It was when he answered questions that Khrushchev shed new light. The Western powers, he said, do have a legal right to maintain troops in Berlin. But he said these rights stem from a war that ended fourteen years ago, and now it is time for a change. "Let us have a treaty of peace," he said, "to wipe out the vestiges of war." Khrushchev said he would still prefer to hold a summit conference before a meeting of foreign ministers. But if the West wants a foreign ministers meeting first, he said, "we will go along." And he said that if the West should propose that such a meeting get underway on May eleventh, "we will accept." Khrushchev has suggested in the past that the foreign ministers limit themselves to a discussion of the German problem...while the West would like the broad question of European security included in the talks. Today, Khrushchev said if the Western powers have "sensible" proposals to make, "we are ready to examine them together with our own proposals. He insisted that in November...

when he called for an end of the occupation status of Berlin in six months...he was not serving the West with an ultimatum. Six months, he said, was "just an approximation." "We tried to find the best sort of date...looked at the ceiling and decided six months would be enough." But, he said, if ultimately his proposals are rejected, Russia will sign a separate treaty with the East German regime. He praised the "reasonableness" of what President Eisenhower said last Monday about the possibility of negotiating. At the same time, he accused some American military men of making belligerent claims, and warned them to remember that war is "two-sided." The Khrushchev news conference lasted two hours...and the presence of television cameras would indicate that some of it, at least, will be replayed for a Soviet audience.

Communist China today sent Russia a formal note...pledging all-out support to East Germany in the event, it says, of any armed provocation by the Western powers.

The French and Italian prime ministers...meeting today in Paris...say they have reached "complete unanimity" regarding the Berlin problem. The role which Italy may play in East-West negotiations also was discussed.

British Prime Minister Macmillan arrived in Washington today from Ottawa for four days of strategy talks in light of his recent mission to Moscow. Mr. Macmillan said he believes that "Russia's leaders, like us, have a common interest in avoiding war." What the allies must do, he said, is work out a common policy which combines "firmness and reasonableness." Tomorrow morning, Mr. Macmillan will visit Secretary of State Dulles in Walter Reed Army Hosptial... then continue with President Eisenhower to Camp David, Maryland, for intimate talks.

The Geneva conference looking toward a possible ban on nuclear weapons tests have been recessed until April thirteenth. Three articles of a draft treaty were approved today by the American, British and Soviet delegates attending the conference, but none of the three articles was of a controversial nature. The talks were recessed to give both sides time to come up with new proposals for breaking the deadlock over inspection and control.

It was announced tonight that American scientists have sent a radar signal to the planet Venus, and then bounced it back to Earth. This constitutes a roundtrip in space of 56-million miles. The feat was accomplished at Westford, Massachusetts, by the scientists and engineers of the Lincoln Laboratory, which is part of M.I.T. Man has thus sent a message 100 times farther in space than ever before.

The New York Times revealed late last night that the United States had exploded three atomic devices more than 300 miles out in space, beyond the earth's atmosphere. It was reported that, as a consequence, a veil of radiation had been spread about the globe. My colleague, George Herman, is an expert in this sort of scientific story. For a report on just what happened, we switch to him now in Washington.

HERMAN: Any child who's ever seen a compass and asked why the needle points north, knows that the earth is a huge magnet. And in most high school science courses, the teacher has placed a magnet beneath a sheet of paper and sprinkled iron filings or powder onto the paper itself. Perhaps you remember the fuzzy but definitely curved lines into which the iron filings quickly arranged themselves. They showed the shape of the magnetic lines of force, or the magnetic field, which surrounded the magnet. The earth, as a magnet, is surrounded by those same magnetic lines of force. There are no iron filings sprinkled in the space around us to show these lines of force, but there are other particles to be trapped by our magnetic field, the electrically charged particles from the sun and from the impact of sunlight on our atmosphere. Such particles, captured and shaped into curved areas by the earth's magnetism, form the so-called Van Allen belts of deadly radiation above the earth. These are the dangerous areas, which American satellites and lunar probes first discovered and chartered in space. Leakage from the northern and southern edges of these belts give us the Auroral lights.

Now in Project Argus - the United States has thrown up three fistfulls of artificial particles to float freely in the magnetic lines of force and tell us a gooddeal about them. The particles were the highly charged dust clouds from three very small atom bombs, exploded a trifle over 300 miles in the sky above the South Atlantic Ocean. Like the iron filings sprinkled on the paper in high school, these particles instantly moved into the curved paths of the earth's magnetic field. The major lines of force, in the area of the explosion itself, carried the dust into a curve which caused artificial auroras or Northern and Southern Lights exactly where that curve touched down toward the earth. Other forces spread the dust rapidly eastward. And in a matter of about one hour, the whole earth - except for the Polar regions - was covered by a new radioactive shell, onewhich man had made. The life of this shell was brief, but long enough for it to be measured by the Explorer IV satellite and by some 16 rockets fired up 450 miles from an Air Force base.

What did these Argus tests, our first nuclear explosions in outer space accomplish? Much of the answer to that question must lie in certain highly specialized fields of theory about the earth's magnetic field itself. In more practical terms, we are told by Defense Department officials that the results were both valuable and disappointing. Disappointing in that we did not learn as much as we had hoped, and officially, we felt that further tests are very much to be desired. Valuable, in that a large body of theory was at least partly proved to be true. Valuable also in that special field of science called the military. Deputy Secretary of Defense, Donald Quarles says that one major purpose of the tests was to see whether such explosions in space could disrupt radar detection systems. Another was to see whether all radio and electronic communications could also be disrupted by this technique. But Quarles refused to say exactly what was learned, except to admit guardedly that both radar and radio were somewhat affected. He said that the lessons learned as to which frequencies and types of radar and radio were least affected had already been passed along to military radar builders. He admitted, under hard questioning, that the national security had been advanced by the tests and that we had learned nothing from them to make us abandon our present Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile type of thinking. But on almost all other questions, he pleaded military security and kept silent, except to say we will try more such tests whenever the current ban on nuclear weapons tests expires or is modified.

And while the military secrecy is likely to remain, more information is probably to be released. Explorer IV, which measured the result of the Argus tests, is part of the International Geophysical Year, and its findings belong to all the world and must be published by next September. Was it the greatest experiment in our century? Dr. York doesn't think so. Nor do other scientists who feel it can't be compared to such things as the first nuclear chain reaction, the work on the taansistor or penicillin. Perhaps that enthusiastic description was an attempt to disarm public opinion in other lands, countries which might not appreciate a radioactive umbrella over their heads bearing the label: Made in America.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was George Herman...who has made a complex scientific story much more readily understood.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Man can be very proud of himself...I suppose...in view of what he has just accomplished in the outer reaches of space. Turgenev said, "A man is capable of understanding how the ether vibrates...and what's going on in the sun. But how any other man can blow his nose differently from him, that he is incapable of understanding."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., March 20, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan today repaired to Camp David...in the Catoctin Mountains of Maryland...for three days of secluded talks. / They arrived shortly after noon, in time for luncheon, then conferred for about two hours. / News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Macmillan gave the President a report on his recent conversations with Premier Khrushchev. / "And I am sure," says Hagerty, "that this led into a discussion of the over-all Berlin situation." / Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd, sat in on today's meeting. / Tomorrow, the talks will be expanded to include Deputy Defense Secretary Quarles; President Eisenhower's top science adviser,

Dr. James R. Killian; Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission, and other atomic experts. Their attendence is taken to mean that tomorrow the broad question of European security and the stalemated Geneva conference on prohibition of nuclear weapons tests will be discussed.

On their way to Camp David this morning, President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan stopped for an hour at Walter Reed Hospital to visit Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Selwyn Lloyd also took part in this conversation. The Associated Press says Mr. Dulles is "understood to have stressed the need to avoid any proposals which would bolster the Allied foothold in Berlin at the cost of 'freezing' the present East-West division of Germany." ~~(I should like to discuss this question of proposals further in a few minutes)~~.

My colleague, David Schoenbrun, reports from Paris that there has been an important exchange of letters between President Eisenhower and General DeGaulle regarding Allied policy on Germany. The contents of the letters are secret. However, the possibility of a summit meeting in Washington is said to have been discussed.

COOS-MEEN

The director of Soviet planning and economic growth...Josef Kuzmin... was "relieved" of his duties today. No explanation was given. But Khrushchev personally had selected him for the job as Russia's top economic strategist.

In Congress, the House Appropriations Committee today turned down President Eisenhower's request for an additional 225-million dollars for the Development Loan Fund. The fund is part of the foreign aid program, and money from it is loaned to under-developed countries. The President wanted the 225-million dollars to supplement the fund in the current fiscal year, ending in June. The committee refused to give him an extra cent for this purpose. And tonight Mr. Eisenhower called the committee action "irresponsible". He is asking for 700-million dollars for the fund for the next fiscal year, and this request has yet to be acted upon. #

Attorney General Rogers today testified before Congress on behalf of the Administration civil rights program. Specifically, Rogers asked for a new law...making it a federal offense to use force, or threats of force, to obstruct a school integration order from a Federal Court. He said that with such a law, it would "never be necessary again to use the armed forces," as in the case of Little Rock. Senator Ervin of North Carolina contended that in making the proposal the Administration was discriminating against a white southern minority. Why, Ervin wanted to know, did not the federal government ask for comparable legislation affecting labor unions. And he suggested that perhaps it was because organized labor has greater political power. Rogers disavowed any political motivation and pointed out that most labor injunctions are issued by state---not federal---courts.

→

In London, a spokesman for the Defense Ministry says that Britain was fully informed before the United States carried out Project Argus...the secret experiment in which three atomic devices were exploded far out in space. The spokesman says, moreover, that Britain expects the United States to share with it the military information derived from the high-altitude test. The information, he explains, comes within the scope of the Anglo-American arrangement for exchanging technical and scientific data.

In India, the Ministry of External Affairs confirmed tonight that fighting has broken out in Lhasa, the capital of Tibet...between Tibetan rebel forces and Chinese Communist troops. The scale of the fighting is not definitely known. According to so-called "informed sources" in New Delhi, the action began three days ago and is continuing. Communist China "took over" Tibet nine years ago.

The Communist newspaper Pravda said today that Jewish emigrants to Israel are due to be disillusioned. Israel, it claims, is suffering from mass unemployment, and immigrants are persecuted, "even for speaking in their native tongue." Recently, many Jews have emigrated to Israel from countries belonging to the Soviet bloc. The Pravda article appears aimed at discouraging this movement.

Nationalist China reports that the Quemoy island complex was hit yesterday by 252 Communist shells. The bombardment stopped at midnight, ~~with the beginning of a new even-numbered day.~~

John Joseph Frank, Washington attorney, was fined 500 dollars in U,S, District Court today, for failing to register as an agent of the Dominican Republic. Frank was indicted by a grand jury that investigated the disappearance of Dr. Jesus Galindez, a professor at Columbia University, in 1956. Galindez was an outspoken critic of the Trujillo regime. His case is not closed.

Edward R. Murrow: March 20, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

It is possible at this stage of negotiations between the Western allies to give an outline of the settlement of the German problem which is to be laid before the Soviet Union in the conferences soon to be held. The terms are still not agreed to finally, but there is substantial accord as to their scope and as to the approach to be used. The matter is now under discussion by the so-called "working group" of the NATO Council in Paris, where much of the program has been already accepted.

The Soviet Union is to be offered a "package proposal" that consists of separate stages in the settlement of the German question. An early stage will provide for contact between representatives of West and East Germany and the formation of a loose German confederation. Membership of the Council of the Confederation would be by provinces, or "Laender" (Lander), so as to play down the great discrepancy between fifty-two million West Germans and seventeen million East Germans. This will give East Germany an equal status with other comparable components.

The West is ready to take into account the socialization of both industry and land in East Germany, which can be retained. Free elections in the new Germany would be relegated to a later stage. The West undoubtedly will ask that when held, they will be of a nature that would permit the East

German people to vote their Communist overlords out of office. But it is recognized that the Soviet Union would hardly accept such an outcome, and Western negotiators believe it will be possible to find a solution both sides can accept.

The package deal is to include a proposal for an ultimate thinning out of military strength in Germany. This will be in recognition of the justice of the Soviet fears of German re-militarization. But as this must be included in the peace treaty with Germany, the treaty itself and its contents, become part of the package. And in addition to the military provisions, it obviously will have to fix German frontiers.

The disposition of Berlin is relegated to a later stage. This is one of the points on which Western agreement has not yet been reached. Prime Minister Macmillan believes the status of Berlin must be talked about soon, since Khrushchev has made it the focus of the crisis. The American preference is that Berlin should be put off till the last stage, which obviously lies a considerable time ahead. We would like to maintain our present rights in West Berlin until the new Germany is about to emerge. MacMillan thinks a new status should be accepted earlier. This difference between us and the British has just come to light. Mr. Macmillan in his talks with President De Gaulle and Chancellor Adenauer did not raise the point.

To mention a difference with the British over Berlin is not to suggest discord between us. On the contrary, it is noteworthy that all the allies are agreeing so wholeheartedly as they appear to be doing to the package deal and the technique of approach. This embodies the flexibility which Secretary Dulles has been promoting, and the new approach to the German question which he has been quietly pressing on our allies. The Russians are to be shown at the start of the talks that they can have some of the things they most want in Germany, and what the price for them will be. They can be rid of a re-militarized Germany which they fear most of all. They can save the Communist alteration of East German economy, and gain at least a partial recognition of the East German regime. They can have greater security in Europe, based on thinning out of military forces there. The price for them is an all-German settlement. However loosely, the two parts of Germany must be brought together, and the peace treaty which Khrushchev wants with two Germanys has to be signed with one.

This outline is provisional. Even if agreed to in all detail it still would be provisional, since its terms are bound to change in the course of negotiation. But it shows the Western allies in a good position. They have abandoned their old formula for uniting Germany, they have acknowledged that some of the Russian fears of Germany are just, and they have set out to bargain. A corner is being turned. A road is being left behind that was not getting anywhere. A new phase of negotiations has started. That it, too, will be long and rough goes without saying. But at least it is being entered after thoughtful preparation, and with a case that world opinion is expected to approve.

Back in a moment. —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

The president and prime minister have begun their important talks at Camp David. Bismarck said the supreme fact of the Nineteenth Century was that Britain and the United States spoke the same language. Churchill has updated Bismarck by saying, "Let us make sure that the supreme fact of the Twentieth Century is that they tread the same path."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 20, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan today repaired to Camp David...in the Catoctin Mountains of Maryland...for three days of secluded talks. They arrived shortly after noon, in time for luncheon, then conferred for about two hours. News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Macmillan gave the President a report on his recent conversations with Premier Khrushchev. "And I am sure," says Hagerty, "that this led into a discussion of the overall Berlin situation." Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter and the British foreign secretary Selwyn Lloyd, sat in on today's meeting. Tomorrow, the talks will be expanded to include Deputy Defense Secretary Quarles; President Eisenhower's top science adviser, Dr. James R. Killian; Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission, and other atomic experts. Their attendence is taken to mean that tomorrow the broad question of European security and the stalemated Geneva conference on prohibiiton of nuclear weapons tests will be discussed.

On their way to Camp David this morning, President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan stopped for an hour at Walter Reed Hospital to visit Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Selwyn Lloyd also took part in this conversation. The Associated Press says Mr. Dulles is "understood to have stressed the need to avoid any proposals which would bolster the Allied foothold in Berlin at the cost of 'freezing' the present East-West division of Germany."

My colleague, David Schoenbrun, reports from Paris that there has been an important exchange of letters between President Eisenhower and General DeGaulle regarding Allied policy on Germany. The contents of the letters are secret. However, the possibility of a summit meeting in Washington is said to have been discussed.

The director of Soviet planning and economic growth...Josef Kuzmin...was "relieved" of his duties today. No explanation was given. But Khrushchev personally had selected him for the job as Russia's top economic stretegist.

In Congress, the House Appropriations committee today turned down President Eisenhower's request for an additional 225 million dollars for the Development Loan Fund. The fund is part of the foreign aid program, and money from it is loaned to under-developed countries. The President wanted the 225 million dollars to supplement the fund inthe current fiscal year, ending in June. The committee refused to give him an extra cent for this purpose, and tonight Mr. Eisenhower called the committee action "irresponsible." He is asking for 700-million dollars for the fund for the next fiscal year, and this request has yet to be acted upon.

Attorney General Rogers today testified before Congress on behalf of the Administration civil rights program. Specifically, Rogers asked for a new law... making it a federal offense to use force, or threats of force, to obstruct a school integration order from a Federal Court. He said that with such a law, it would "never be necessary again to use the armed forces," as in the case of Little Rock. Senator Ervin of North Carolina contended that in making the proposal the Administration was discriminating against a white southern minority. Why, Ervin wanted to know, did not the federal government ask for comparable legislation affecting labor unions. And he suggested that perhaps it was because organized labor has greater political power. Rogers disavowed any political motivation and pointed out that most laborinjunctions are issued by state---not federal---courts.

In London, a spokesman for the Defense Ministry says that Britain was fully informed before the United States carried out Project Argus...the secret experiment in which three atomic devices were exploded far out in space. The spokesman says, moreover, that Britain expects the United States to share with it the military information derived from the high-altitude test. The information, he explains, comes within the scope of the Anglo-American arrangement for exchanging technical and scientific data.

In India, the Ministry of External Affairs confirmed tonight that fighting has broken out in Lhasa, the capital of Tibet...between Tibetan rebel forces and Chinese Communist troops. The scale of the fighting is not definitely known. According to so-called informed sorcces,in New Delhi, the action began three days ago and is continuing. Communist China "took over" Tibet nine years ago.

John Joseph Frank, Washington attorney, was fined 500 dollars in U.S, District court today for failing to register as an agent of the Dominican Republic. Frank was indicted by a grand jury that investigated the disappearance of Dr. Jesus Galindez, a professor at Columbia University, in 1956. Galindez was an outspoken critic of the Trujillo regime. His case is not closed.

It is possible at this stage of negotiations between the Western allies to give an outline of the settlement of the German problem which is to be laid before the Soviet Union in the conferences soon to be held. The terms are still not agreed to finally, but there is substantial accord as to their scope and as to the approach to be used. The matter is now under discussion by the so-called working group of the NATO Council in Paris, where much of the program has been already accepted.

The Soviet Union is to be offered a package proposal that consists of separate stages in the settlement of the German question. An early stage will provide for contact between representatives of West and East Germany and the formation of a loose German confederation. Membership of the Council of the Confederation would be by provinces or "Laender" so as to play down the great discrepancy between fifty-two million West Germans and seventeen million East Germans. This will give East Germany an equal status with other comparable components.

The West is ready to take into account the socialization of both industry and land in East Germany, which can be retained. Free elections in the new Germany would be relegated to a later stage. The West undoubtedly will ask that when held, they will be of a nature that would permit the East German people to vote their Communist overlords out of office. But it is recognized that the Soviet Union would hardly accept such an outcome, and Western negotiators believe it will be possible to find a solution both sides can accept.

The package deal is to include a proposal for an ultimate thinning out of military strength in Germany. This will be in recognition of the justice of the Soviet fears of German re-militarization. But as this must be included in the peace treaty with Germany, the treaty itself and its contents, become part of the package. And in addition to the military provisions, it obviously will have to fix German frontiers.

The disposition of Berlin is relegated to a later stage. This is one of the points on which Western agreement has not yet been reached. Prime Minister Macmillan believes the status of Berlin must be talked about soon, since Khrushchev has made it the focus of the crisis. The American preference is that Berlin should be put off till the last stage, which obviously lies a considerable time ahead. We would like to maintain our present rights in West Berlin until the new Germany is about to emerge. Macmillan thinks a new status should be accepted earlier. This difference between us and the British has just come to light. Mr. Macmillan in his talks with President DeGaulle and Chancellor Adenauer did not raise the point.

To mention a difference with the British over Berlin is not to suggest discord between us. On the contrary, it is noteworthy that all the allies are agreeing so wholeheartedly as they appear to be doing to the package deal and the technique of approach. This embodies the flexibility which Secretary Dulles has been promoting, and the new approach to the German question which he has been quietly pressing on our allies. The Russians are to be shown at the start of the talks that they can have some of the things they most want in Germany, and what the price for them will be. They can be rid of a re-militarized Germany which they fear most of all. They can save the Communist alteration of East German economy, and gain at least a partial recognition of the East German regime. They can have greater security in Europe, based on thinning out of military forces there. The price for them is an all-German settlement. However loosely, the two parts of Germany must be brought together, and the peace treaty which Khrushchev wants with two Germanys has to be signed with one.

This outline is provisional. Even if agreed to in all detail it still would be provisional, since its terms are bound to change in the course of negotiation. But it shows the Western allies in a good position. They have abandoned their old formula for uniting Germany, they have acknowledged that some of the Russian fears of Germany are just, and they have set out to bargain. A corner is being turned. A road is being left behind that was not getting anywhere. A new phase of negotiations has started. That it, too, will be long and rough goes without saying. But at least it is being entered after thoughtful preparation and with a case that world opinion is expected to approve.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The president and prime minister have begun their important talks at Camp David. Bismarck said the supreme fact of the Nineteenth Century was that Britain and the United States spoke the same language. Churchill has updated Bismarck by saying, "Let us make sure that the supreme fact of the 20th Century is that they tread the same path."

Goodnight and good luck!

LeSueur for Murrow Mon., March 23, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan concluded their talks on Germany. No official communique was issued TO SUM UP the four-day meeting. But after Mr. Macmillan called at the White House this afternoon to say goodbye, he described his conversations with the President as the "best" they had ever had. "And," he said, "in the most enjoyable surroundings." A reference to the scene of their talks over the week-end at Camp David, in the MARYLAND Mountains. News Secretary Hagerty says that "this goes" for Mr. Eisenhower, too...They both enjoyed the informality of their meeting. Hagerty says the President also feels that it was a "GOOD" meeting. Although no communique was issued, the President and Prime Minister are known to have agreed on a foreign ministers conference this May...followed by a possible meeting of heads of government in late summer. Mr. Macmillan is said to favor a summit meeting SOMEPLACE other than Geneva, and in a relatively secluded SPOT to avoid the glare of worldwide publicity. Official sources in Washington say that it is NOT TRUE that President Eisenhower, in talking with Mr. Macmillan, agreed that a summit conference should be held after a meeting of foreign ministers--regardless of whether the meeting on the foreign ministers level showed promise. According to these sources, the new Western note to Moscow will insist that some progress be made first at the foreign ministers meeting. This note probably will go to Russia later this week, after President DeGaulle of France has had an opportunity to make suggestions as to its content. And, of course, its language must also BE finally approved by the NATO Council. As the next step, the foreign ministers of the "Big Four" western powers will meet in Washington the last day of this month to exchange views before sitting down at a conference table with Russia.

This morning...before making his final call on President Eisenhower... Prime Minister Macmillan conferred with the Administration's three top economic planners--Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon, Secretary of the Treasury Robert Anderson, and the new commerce secretary, Lewis Strauss. (Straws) We are told only that they discussed recent trade restrictions imposed by the United States. Mr. Macmillan is flying back to London tomorrow morning.

Another 21-gun salute in Washington today for young King Hussein of Jordan...arriving for a brief visit in which he is expected to ask for additional American aid. Vice President Nixon met the 23-year-old monarch at the airport...said his brave stand in the Middle East had won the admiration, respect and affection of the American people. Hussein responded by saying that his small kingdom was "fighting to preserve its independence."

The White House announces another royal visitor, SOON, King Baudouin of Belgium will come to the United States for ten days, starting May eleventh.

President Eisenhower called on the states today to expand their unemployment compensation programs. Mr. Eisenhower made his recommendations at a White House meeting attended by eight governors representing the executive committee of the Governors Conference. He suggested that regular unemployment compensation payments be increased, so that they amount to HALF the average weekly wage in each state. Also, that the payments run for 26 weeks. Secretary of Labor Mitchell confirmed that Congress will soon be [redacted] asked to extend [redacted] coverage to three million additional workers, including those employed by non-profit institutions. Mr. Eisenhower feels that it is up to each individual state to increase its unemployment benefits. He does not regard this as a [redacted]DERAL responsibility.

→

Tonight, the Senate passed a bill that would provide 389-million dollars to help those parts of the country plagued by chronic unemployment. The money would be parceled out [redacted] to those areas in the form of federal grants and loans. And the 389-million-dollar figure far exceeds President Eisenhower's request. In fact, it is almost certain in its present form to run into a presidential veto. [redacted]

The Senate vote was 49 to 46---far short of the two-thirds majority needed to override a veto. The bill now goes to the House.

The State Department said today that the extent of the anti-Communist revolt in Tibet is "as yet unclear." But, said a State department spokesman, [redacted] Communist control, by Peiping's own [redacted] admission, "has encountered effective opposition." According to reports reaching India, the revolt broke out last week when the Communists tried to kidnap the Dalai Lama, who is regarded by Tibetans as the reincarnation of [redacted] Buddha.

Today, the United States formally rejected Russia's protest over the boarding of that Soviet fishing trawler last month, off the coast of Newfoundland. An American note..delivered in Moscow...says that in boarding the ship, U.S. naval officers acted legally under an international treaty, permitting the inspection of ships suspected of damaging underseas cables. The note points out that three of the twelve breaks in the cable have been found to be "man-made." And the evidence, it says, raises a "strong presumption" that the fishing trawler caused these breaks "either wilfully or through culpable negligence." The American note also demands the punishment of those responsible.

Europe took another step today into the Atomic Age. The story from Paris says that twelve countries of Western Europe have decided, together, to build a radically "new kind" of nuclear power plant...one designed to produce electricity much more cheaply than the atomic plants now in operation in Britain and the United States. It will be an experiment, of course. No one knows whether the special gas-cooled reactor will work. The European Atomic Energy Agency, Euratom, is playing a leading role in the experiment. But the plant itself is being built in Winfrith Heath, England.. and Britain will pay the lion's share of the cost---38 million dollars.

The Berlin crisis has waxed and waned, according to the zig-zags of of Soviet foreign policy...Now it would appear that the odds against war over Berlin are lengthening, with the prospects for negotiations among the Great powers Brightening, at least momentarily...Meantime several american military men have pointed-out that, if it did come to all-out war, the overall strength of the United States [redacted] surpasses that of the Soviet Union...A fact ~~in~~ with which ~~few~~ FEW americans, and probably not many russians would disagree... But since all-out nuclear war is now equated with national suicide, the fact that the Soviet UNION is applying power at point at which they hold [redacted] local superiority, is the paramount factor in this exercise of power politics...Even President Eisenhower has publically pointed-out that this country cannot successfully fight [redacted] AN action between ground forces in Berlin, where the Russians not only enjoy [redacted] numerical superiority, but have us surrounded as well..

OF COURSE The art of power politics does not differ greatly from military strategy, and the Russians ARE as usual, [redacted] applying pressure at a point where they are strong, and we are relatively weak...

As a survey IN the New York Times pointed out today, the average American is not "frightened" by the Berlin situation... [redacted] HE IS confident that somehow, this crisis will pass away, like those in Suez, in Lebanon, and the Formosa strait. AND Since nobody can forsee the future, it would BE VAIN to argue with that theory. Yet the events of the past have indicated, that the power struggles over those crucial points have NOT changed. It's just that our attention has been diverted from them. SO its only fair to assume that faced with the long-term aggressiveness of Communism, the Berlin-crisis will certainly not be the last...

But while the East-West power struggle is practically an everyday feature of the headlines, there are certain relentless factors of great magnitude, WHICH ARE seemingly beyond the power of politicians to cope with them...

One of them is the fact that in our efforts to stay abreast of the communist superiority in manpower, The redoubling of our scientific experiments IS BECOMING a deadly hazard to us, in peace, as well as war..

The Joint congressional committee on Atomic Energy, has made public hitherto secret letters from high-ranking experts, indicating that the fall-out rate of radio-active particles, including the deadly strontium 90, is greater on the surface of the United States, than any other place in the world..

One of the committee's letter writers, Major General Loper, a special atomic assiatant to the Secretary of Defense, said while the current risk of damage to human being is slight, the probable casualties over the years, create, in his words: "a moral issue that could be of considerable propaganda importance.."

General Roper was putting it mildly... These american disclosures that the radio-active fallout rate from nuclear test explosions, is higher than previously supposed, may not only have "considerable" "propaganda" effect. but in the opinion of certain Asian countries with large populations, like Japan and India, it ~~was~~ MAY HAVE an actual effect on their people...

That's because of the rice diet in ASIA ~~these Asian countries~~... [redacted] Strontium 90, the deadly by-product of nuclear explosions, is similar to calcium...In this country we get most of our calcium through drinking milk...The cancer-causing strontium 90 is absorbed by the cows. We're told Very little goes into the milk...But in ASIA ~~Asia~~, it goes directly into the [redacted] rice crop, ~~which is~~ the staff of life for HER ~~the~~ teeming millions ~~of Asia~~.

~~These facts were brought out [illegible] after two and half years of study, the U.N. Scientific Committee on the effects of [illegible]~~

These facts were brought out prominently last year, by the U.N. Scientific Committee on the effects of Atomic radiation. After two-and-a-half years of study, the U.N. committee, of which the United States was a member, agreed unanimously, that "radio-active fall-out," even in the Smallest doses" is a hazard to mankind..

It was also emphasized that radiation from nuclear explosions was small compared to radiation from natural sources...like the Sun's cosmic rays.. But these "New" disclosures by American experts, that the radio-active fall-out from nuclear tests, is faster than they supposed. may have unforseen political effects on this year's meeting of the U.N. Scientific committee. which began in New York today..

Last year, the soviet delegate attempted to have the committee draw A POLITICAL conclusions that all nuclear weapons tests should cease immediately.. The Russian was defeated on the grounds the such political judgements went beyond a scientific committee's terms of reference..

But this time, we may not find it so easy to avoid a moral judgement, against perfecting the only weapons in which we are at least the equals of the Communists...

This is Larry LeSueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. (TWO SECOND PAUSE) FIRST George Bryan with the weather.

One of the letters to the congresssional committee, Major General Loper,

the special atomic ebe

The military draft law was extended today until July, 1963..

President Eisenhower signed the four-year draft extension. ~~which Congress passed on his recommendation~~.. There was little opposition to the draft extension in either house.. Its supporters presented it, as an unpleasant necessity.. ~~Said without it, the armed services could not be kept~~ up ~~to safe levels.~~ But a special committee was appointed to examine america's whole military manpower situation..

this is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 23, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan concluded their talks on Germany. No official communique was issued to sum up the four-day meeting. But after Mr. Macmillan called at the White House this afternoon to say goodbye, he described his conversations with the President as the best they had ever had. "And," he said, "in the most enjoyable surroundings." A reference to the scene of their talks over the week-end at Camp David, in the Maryland Mountains. News Secretary Hagerty says that this goes for Mr. Eisenhower too. They both enjoyed the informality of their meeting. Hagerty says the President also feels that it was a good meeting. Although no communique was issued, the President and Prime Minister are known to have agreed on a foreign ministers conference this May... followed by a possible meeting of heads of government in late summer.
Mr. Macmillan is said to favor a summit meeting some place other than Geneva, and in a relatively secluded spot to avoid the glare of worldwide publicity. Official sources in Washington say that it is not true that President Eisenhower, in talking with Mr. Macmillan, agreed that a summit conference should be held after a meeting of foreign ministers---regardless of whether the meeting on the foreign ministers level showed promise. According to these sources, the new Western note to Moscow will insist that some progress be made first at the foreign ministers meeting. The note probably will go to Russia later this week, after President DeGaulle of France has had an opportunity to make suggestions as to its content. And, of course, its language must also be finally approved by the NATO Council. As the next step, the foreign ministers of the "Big Four" western powers will meet in Washington the last day of this month to exchange views before sitting down at a conference table with Russia.

This morning...before making his final call on President Eisenhower... Prime Minister Macmillan conferred with the Administration's three top economic planners---Under Secretary of State C. Douglas Dillon, Secretary of the Treasury Robert Anderson, and the new commerce secretary, Lewis Strauss. We are told only that they discussed recent trade restrictions imposed by the United States. Mr. Macmillan is flying back to London tomorrow morning.

Another 21-gun salute in Washington today for young King Hussein of Jordan, arriving for a brief visit in which he is expected to ask for additional American aid. Vice President Nixon met the 23-year old monarch at the airport....said his brave stand in the Middle East had won the admiration, respect and affection of the American people. Hussein responded by saying that his small kingdom was "fighting to preserve its independence."

The White House announces another royal visitor soon. King Baudouin of Belgium will come to the United States for ten days, starting May 11th.

President Eisenhower called on the states today to expand their unemployment compensation programs. Mr. Eisenhower made his recommendations at a White House meeting attended by eight governors representing the executive committee of the Governors Conference. He suggested that regular unemployment cmmpensation payments be increased, so that they amount to half the average weekly wage in each state. Also, that the payments run for 26 weeks. Secretary of Labor Mitchell confirmed that Congress will soon be asked to extend coverage to three million additional workers, including those employed by non-profit institutions. Mr. Eisenhower feels that it is up to each individual state to increase its unemployment benefits. He does not regard this as a federal responsibility.

Tonight, the Senate passed a bill that would provide 389 million dollars to help those parts of the country plagued by chronic unemployment. The money would be parceled out to those areas in the form of federal grants and loans. And the 389 million-dollar figure far exceeds President Eisenhower's request. In fact it is almost certain in its present form to run into a presidential veto. The Senate vote was 49 to 46---far short of the two-thirds majority needed to override a veto. The bill now goes to the House.

The State Department said today that the extent of the anti-Communist revolt in Tibet is "as yet unclear." But, said a state department spokesman, Communist control, by Peiping's own admission, "has encountered effective opposition." According to reports reaching India, the revolt broke out last week when the Communists tried to kidnap the Dalai Lama, who is regarded by Tibetans as the reincarnation of Buddha.

Today, the United States formally rejected Russia's protest over the boarding of that Soviet fishing trawler last month, off the coast of Newfoundland. An American note...delivered in Moscow...says that in boarding the ship, U.S. naval officers acted legally under an international treaty, permitting the inspection of ships suspected of damaging underseas cables. The note points out that three of the twelve breaks in the cable have been found to be man-made. And the evidence, it says, raises a "strong presumption" that the fishing trawler caused these breaks "either wilfully or through culpable negligence." The American note also demands the punishment of those responsible.

Europe took another step today into the Atomic Age. The story from Paris says that twelve countries of Western Europe have decided, together, to build a radically new kind of nuclear power plant...one designed to produce electricity much more cheaply than the atomic plants now in operation in Britain and the United States. It will be an experiment, of course. No one knows whether the special gas-cooled reactor will work. The European Atomic Energy Agency, Euratom, is playing a leading role in the experiment. But the plant itself is being built in Winfrith Heath, England...and Britain will pay the lion's share of the cost---38 million dollars.

The Berlin crisis has waxed and waned, according to the zig-zags of Soviet foreign policy...Now it would appear that the odds against war over Berlin are lengthening, with the prospects for negotiations among the Great powers brightening at least momentarily. Meantime several American military men have pointed out that, if it did come to all-out war, the overall strength of the United States surpassed that of the Soviet Union, a fact that with which few Americans, and probably not many Russians would disagree. But since all-out nuclear war is now equated with national suicide, the fact that the Soviet Union is applying power at point at which they hold local superiority, is the paramount factor in this exercise of power politics. Even President Eisenhower has publicly pointed out that this country cannot successfully fight an action between ground forces in Berlin, where the Russians not only enjoy numerical superiority, but have us surrounded as well.

Of course, the art of power politics does not differ greatly from military strategy, and the Russians are as usual applying pressure at a point where they are strong and we are relatively weak.

As a survey in the New York Times pointed out today, the average American is not frightened by the Berlin situation. He is confident that somehow, this crisis will pass away, like those in Suez, in Lebanon and the Formosa Strait, and since nobody can foresee the future, it would be vain to argue with that theory. Yet the events of the past have indicated, that the power struggles over those crucial points have not changed. It's just that our attention has been diverted from them. So, it's only fair to assume that faced with the long-term aggressiveness of Communism, the Berlin crisis will certainly not be the last.

But while the East-West power struggle is practically an everyday feature of the headlines, there are certain relentless factors of great magnitude, which are seemingly beyond the power of politicians to cope with them.

One of them, is the fact that in our efforts to stay abreast of the Communist superiority in manpower, the redoubling of our scientific experiments is becoming a deadly hazard to us, in peace as well as war.

The Joint congressional committee on Atomic Energy has made public hitherto secret letters from high-ranking experts, indicating that the fall-out rate of radio-active particles including the deadly Strontium 90 is greater on the surface of the United States, than any other place in the world. One of the committee's letter writers, Major General Loper, a special atomic assistant to the Secretary of Defense said while the current risk of damage to human beings is slight, the probable casualites over the years, create, in his words, "a moral issue that could be of considerable propaganda importance."

General Roper was putting it mildly...These American disclosures that the radio-active fallout rate from nuclear test explosions, is higher than previously supposed, may not only have "considerable" "propaganda" effect, but in the opinion of certain Asian countries with large populations, like Japan and India, it may have an actual effect on their people.

That's because of the rice diet in Asia. Strontium 90, the deadly by-product of nuclear explosions, is similar to calcium. In this country we get most of our calcium through drinking milk. The cancer-causing Strontium 90 is absorbed by the cows, we're told. Very little goes into the milk. But in Asia it goes directly into the rice crop, the staff of life of her teeming millions. These facts were brought out prominently last year, by the U.N. Scientific Committee on the effects of Atomic Radiation. After two-and-a-half years of study, the U.N. committee of which the United States was a member, agreed unanimously that radio-active fall-out, "even in the smallest doses" is a hazard to mankind.

It was also emphasized that radiation from nuclear explosions was small compared to radiation from natural sources...like the sun's cosmic rays. But these new disclosures by American experts that the radio-active fall-out from n uclear tests is faster than they supposed may have unforeseen political effects on this year's meeting of the U.N. Scientific committee, which began in New York today.

Last year, the Soviet delegate attempted to have the committee draw a political conclusion that all nuclear weapons tests should cease immediately. The Russian was defeated on the grounds that such political judgments went beyond a scientific committee's terms of reference.

But this time, we may not find it so easy to avoid a moral jdugment against perfecting the only weapons in which we are at least the equals of the Communists.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First George Bryan with the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR :The military draft law was extended today until July, 1963...President Eisenhower signed the four-year draft extension. There was little opposition to the draft extension in either house. Its supporters presented it, as an unpleasant necessity. But a special committee was appointed to examine America's whole military manpower situation.

This is Larry LeSueur----Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Tues., March 24, 1959

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

In the Middle East, Iraq resigned as a member of the Baghdad Pact. The announcement by Premier Kassem came as no surprise. Ever since last July, when Kassem overthrew King Feisal in a bloody revolt, Iraq has been a member of the anti-Communist alliance "in name only". To keep down the opposition against him, Kassem has [redacted] relied more and more on Communist support. although he insists that in the East-West struggle his is a "neutral" role. Recently, President Nasser of the United Arab Republic [redacted] accused the Iraqi premier of being a "stooge" of Communism, of trying to split Egypt and Syria. the two states which, together, form the U.A.R. Nasser has also denounced Iraq's membership in the Baghdad Pact, claiming that it was an offense to Arab nationalism. [redacted] From the time the pact was founded in 1955, Iraq has been its "only" Arab member. And there is speculation tonight that Kassem may have pulled-out of the alliance to placate Nasser. (Kassem also has called for an "end" to the anti-Nasser campaign in the Iraqi press). The four countries left in the Baghdad Pact are now Britain, Turkey, Pakistan and Iran. The United States belongs to its major committees but is "not" a formal member.

Incidentally, OR PERHAPS NOT SO INCIDENTLY ...while Kassem was making his announcement today about withdrawing from the BAGDAD pact, Iraq was formally ratifying an agreement whereby Russia will grant it a LOW-INTEREST loan of 140-million dollars,

The Arab League moved today to mediate between the United Arab Republic and Iraq. Meeting in Cairo, the political committee of the league decided that the foreign ministers of ten Arab countries should meet on March 31st in a combined mediation effort. Also behind the scenes, President Tito of Yugoslavia is reported urging Nasser to be more moderate in his attacks on Iraq and the Soviet Union. Tito reportedly is concerned over a possibly deteriorating Middle East situation.

There are conflicting reports tonight on the anti-Communist revolt in Tibet. One report says that the "Battle of Lhasa" is apparently over...that fighting between Tibetan rebel forces and Chinese Communist troops has stopped...and that the city is "quiet, though tense." Other reports speak of a new outbreak of fighting in Lhasa, with the rebels using equipment captured from the Chinese. NONE of these reports is confirmed. CBS News Correspondent Arthur Bonner reports from New Delhi that much depends on the fate of the Dalai Lama, the 22-year-old "living Buddha" of Tibet. As long as he remains out of Communist hands, he's the symbol of Tibetan autonomy. And his presence gives courage to those who are trying to resist. Indian sources discount the rumor that the Communists are holding the Dalai Lama under house arrest. It's thought that he may be hiding somewhere in Southern Tibet..after using one of the "many" secret passages in his Seventeenth Century palace to escape.

A story from Nepal TONITE, SAYS that Russia has offered to give that LITTLE kingdom in the Himalayan Mountains a long-term loan amounting to about three and a half million dollars. The dispatch from Katmandu, the capital of Nepal, says that Russia is offering the loan "with no strings attached."

Last Friday...in Congress...the House Appropriations Committee turned-down President Eisenhower's request for an additional 225-million dollars for the Development Loan Fund. The fund is part of the foreign aid program, and money from it is loaned to under-developed countries, like Nepal. The President wanted the 225-million dollars to supplement the fund in the current fiscal year, ending in June. It was urgently needed, he said. And he promptly called the action taken by the House committee - "irresponsible". Today, 100 of the 225 million dollars requested by Mr. Eisenhower was put back INTO the measure when it came up for consideration on the House floor...the House reversing the recommendation of its own appropriations committee by a vote of 191 to 85. Both Republican AND Democratic leaders supported an amendment introduced by Democratic Representative John Rooney of New York, giving the President nearly half of what he had asked for.

Republican congressional leaders held their usual Tuesday meeting today at the White House. And when they came out, some were more optimistic than others regarding the Berlin situation. House Republican Leader Halleck told reporters after meeting with President Eisenhower that he (Halleck) WAS convinced that the Western policy of firmness would prevent war.

The SENATE Republican leader, Everett Dirksen, said he "hoped" there wouldn't be war. But the feeling of optimism, he added, may not be justified by what he called "a reading of the cold facts."

The United States, Britain and France have approved separate but similar notes to be sent to Moscow, proposing a Big Four foreign ministers meeting on May 11th. There is also the offer of a later summit conference. The text of these notes will be formally approved tomorrow in Paris by the permanent NATO Council...then sent on to Moscow late tomorrow or Thursday. A CBS News correspondent who formerly COVERED Moscow...and who WAS ASSIGNED TO THE "BIG TWO" CONFERENCE... ...has been checking into the terms of the American note and into some of the background of the Eisenhower-Macmillan talks. For that story, here is Paul Niven...reporting from Washington.

(Niven runs approx 5 minutes
Returns on cue; "--to Larry Lesueur in N.Y."

Prime Minister Macmillan arrived back in London tonight...and said that he and Mr. Eisenhower had agreed upon "fundamentals". He said, "We must be absolutely firm in defending what is right...but we must be fair, too."

The chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, John McCone, said today that the commission has withheld "no" information relating to the AMOUNT of radio-active fallout either from the American public OR from the United Nations. He conceded, however, that AN ERROR in the handling of some recent radiation data [illegible] Mr. McCone said, "So long as I am chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, I shall not be a party to the suppression or distortion of any information bearing on the safety and health of the American public." He said this at a hearing held today by the joint congressional committee on atomic energy.

That was Paul Hirn in Washington.

and This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Day's News. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

~~There is no more Bagdad in the Bagdad Pact, no~~ [redacted] has ~~with~~ [redacted]. President Nasser of the United Arab Republic has been [redacted] denouncing the ~~anti-communist treaty~~ BAGDAD PACT ever since it was formed ~~in 1955~~..

But now he's fallen out with Nikita Kruschev...and is isolated from the West... well As Emerson once said: Be careful what you wish for...You may get it..

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite..

As Emerson said: Be Careful what you wish for, you may get it..

President Nasser has been denouncing the Bagdad Pact ever since its form ...

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Tuesday, March 24, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... A CBS News correspondent who formerly covered Moscow and who was assigned to the Big Two conference, has been checking into the terms of the American note and into some of the background of the Eisenhower-Macmillan talks. And for that story here is Paul Niven reporting from Washington.

NIVEN: The public relations shadow boxing over the Western conditions for a summit meeting is over. Both British and American versions of what happened at Camp David are now available. The earlier British claims that President Eisenhower made a central concession to Prime Minister Macmillan are proved to have been justified. It is clear that Macmillan took away this morning the bacon for which he had come, even if the White House would still prefer to call it "an unspecified pork product." The central question in the summit approach, of course, was whether the West would go to the summit in any circumstances or only if a prior foreign ministers meeting made substantial progress.

In his broadcast speech eight days ago, Mr. Eisenhower had modified that slightly. He expressed willingness to go to the summit if developments justified doing so. At Camp David, the British persuaded him that almost any outcome ofthe foreign ministers deliberations would "justify" going on to the summit. They argued that Nikita Khrushchev was the only Russian official worth talking with. President Eisenhower was won over. As a small counter concession, the British agreed to retain the President's wording or a close approximation of it, in the note to the Russians conveying the Western position. So that note, to be published within a day or two, will agree to a summit meeting in words that are Eisenhower's but in a spirit that is Macmillan's. The British leader is obviously satisfied that a summit meeting is going to take place. Whether it's because the Russians are going to behave at the foreign ministers meeting or because he knows Mr. Eisenhower will go to the summit however they behave is fairly academic.

The telling argument Macmillan used, that Khrushchev is the only Russian worth talking with, calls for a passing examination. One would assume that Andrei Gromyko would express the same views at the foreign ministers level that Khrushchev would express at the summit. In case of doubt, it would not take him long to contact Moscow from Geneva or Vienna. It is hard to see why Macmillan places such emphasis on Khrushchev's physical presence at a conference table. His reasoning must have emerged from his own recent talks with Khrushchev and it must have been persuasive enough to carry the day at Camp David.

At any rate, the Western agreement to go to the summit has Khrushchev cooing like a dove, for the moment. The current Moscow line is that the sole motive of his Berlin ultimatum last November was to inspire some new thinking about the untenable and anachronistic German situation. What Khrushchev assumes, of course, is that any such new thinking, any change in the German situation, will be a change in the direction he favors. It's as if President Eisenhower should begin a noisy agitation, demanding that the Russians get out of all Eastern Europe within six months; if in the end the Soviets gave up only Albania, say, the West would have gained something. Thus Khrushchev reasons that if he can gain something out of his current agitation, it will have proved worthwhile and then he can embark on still another agitation.

The West's task is to try to see that he does not gain something without yielding something in return. That is the task that is now before the Four Power Western working party in Paris. There is no doubt that a spirit of flexibility, a spirit, if you will, of disengagement, has lately become a powerful force in Western thinking. The present German situation is unnatural. The status quo need not be held sacred unless changes in it are in one direction only.

A new Western plan for Germany, mostly American in origin, is now being codified by the Paris group. What is known of it suggests that the West might be willing, in certain circumstances, to give up any immediate hope of reunification with free elections to agree to a form of confederation, to grant some recognition to the East German Communists and to begin cutting down its plans for arming West Germany and its own forces now in West Germany. These would be monumental concessions. But as we noted, they would be offered only in certain circumstances. Khrushchev, in return, would be called upon to begin a protracted but irresistible process of relaxing the Communist grip on East Germany. That he has never demonstrated willingness to do. It remains to be seen whether the new Western plan is indeed new or mere effort to offer concessions that we don't want to make in return for concessions that we know Khrushchev will not make. It remains to be seen whether we can offer substantial concessions without compromising essential principle.

Barring accident - the summit now looms clearly ahead. What is not clear is that any area of likely agreement exists.

Now back to Larry Lesueur in New York.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 24, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening,everyone...Here's what happened today:

In the Middle East, Iraq resigned as a member of the Baghdad Pact. The announcement by Premier Kassem came as no surprise. Ever since last July, when Kassem overthrew King Feisel in a bloody revolt, Iraq has been a member of the anti-Communist alliance in name only. To keep down the opposition against him, Kassem has relied more and more on Communist support...although he insists that in the East-West struggle he is a neutral role. Recently, President Nasser of the United Arab Republic accused the Iraqi premier of being a "stooge" of Communism, of trying to split Egypt and Syria...the two states which, together, form the U.A.R. Nasser has also denounced Iraq's membership in the Baghdad Pact, claiming that it was an offense to Arab nationalism. From the time the pact was founded in 1955, Iraq has been its only Arab member. And there is speculation tonight that Kassem may have pulled out of the alliance to placate Nasser. (Kassem also has called for an end to the anti-Nasser campaign in the Iraqi press.) The four countries left in the Baghdad Pact are now Britain, Turkey, Pakistan and Iran. The United States belongs to its major committees but is not a formal member.

Incidentally...or perhaps not so incidently...while Kassem was making his announcement today about withdrawing from the Baghdad pact, Iraq was formally ratifying an agreement whereby Russia will grant it a low-interest loan of 140-million dollars.

The Arab League moved today to mediate between the United Arab Republic and Iraq. Meeting in Cairo, the political committee of the league decided that the foreign ministers of ten Arab countries should meet on March 31st in a combined mediation effort. Also behind the scenes, President Tito of Yugoslavia is reported urging Nasser to be more moderate in his attacks on Iraq and the Soviet Union. Tito reportedly is concerned over a possibly deteriorating Middle East situation.

There are conflicting reports tonight on the anti-Communist revolt in Tibet. One report says that the "Battle of Lhasa" is apparently over...that fighting between Tibetan rebel forces and Chinese Communist troops has stopped... and that the city is quiet, though tense. Other reports speak of a new outbreak of fighting in Lhasa, with the rebels using equipment captured from the Chinese. None of these reports is confirmed. CBS News Correspondent Arthur Bonner reports from New Delhi that much depends on the fate of the Dalai Lama, the 22-year old "living Buddha" of Tibet. As long as he remains out of Communist hands, he's the symbol of Tibetan autonomy. And his presence gives courage to those who are trying to resist. Indian sources discount the rumor that the Communists are holding the Dalai Lama under house arrest. It's thought that he may be hiding somewhere in Southern Tibet...after using one of the many secret passages in his Seventeenth Century palace to escape.

A story from Nepal tonight says that Russia has offered to give that little kingdom in the Himalayan Mountains a long-term loan amounting to about three and a half million dollars. The dispatch from Katmandu, the capital of Nepal, says that Russia is offering the loan "with no strings attached."

Last Friday in Congress..the House Appropriations Committee turned down President Eisenhower's request for an additional 225-million dollars to supplement the fund in the current fiscal year, ending in June. It was urgently needed, he said. And he promptly called the action taken by the House committee "irresponsible." Today, 100 of the 225 million dollars requested by Mr. Eisenhower was put back into the measure when it comes up for consideration on the House floor...the House reversing the recommendation of its own appropriations committee by a vote of 191 to 85. Both Republican and Democratic leaders supported an amendment introduced by Democratic Representative John Rooney of

New York, giving the President nearly half of what he had asked for.

Republican congressional leaders held their usual Tuesday meeting today at the White House. And when they came out, some were more optimistic than others regarding the Berlin situation. House Republican Leader Halleck told reporters after meeting with President Eisenhower that he, Halleck, was convinced that the Western policy of firmness would prevent war. The Senate Republican leader, Everett Dirksen, said he "hoped" there wouldn't be war. But the feeling of optimism, he added, may not be justified by what he called "a reading of the cold facts."

The United States, Britain and France have approved separate but similar notes to be sent to Moscow, proposing a Big Four foreign ministers meeting on May 11th. There is also the offer of a later summit conference. The text of these notes will be formally approved tomorrow in Paris by the permanent NATO Council...then sent on to Moscow late tomorrow or Thursday. A CBS News correspondent who formerly covered Moscow...and who was assigned to the "Big Two" conference has been checking into the terms of the American note and into some of the background of the Eisenhower-Macmillan talks. For that story, here is Paul Niven...reporting from Washington.

NIVEN: The public relations shadow boxing over the Western conditions for a summit meeting is over. Both British and American versions of what happened at Camp David are now available. The earlier British claims that President Eisenhower made a central concession to Prime Minister Macmillan are proved to have been justified. It is clear that Macmillan took away this morning the bacon for what he had come, even if the White House would still prefer to call it "an unspecified pork product." The central question in the summit approach, of course, was whether the West would go to the summit in any circumstances or only if a prior foreign ministers meeting made substantial progress.

In his broadcast speech eight days ago, Mr. Eisenhower had modified that slightly. He expressed willingness to go to the summit if developments justified doing so. At Camp David the British persuaded him that almost any outcome of the foreign ministers deliberations would "justify" going to the summit. They argued that Nikita Khrushchev was the only Russian official worth talking with. President Eisenhower was won over. As a small counter concession, the British agreed to retain the President's wording or a close approximation of it, in the note to the Russians conveying the Western position. So that note, to be published within a day or two, will agree to a summit meeting in words that are Eisenhower's but in a spirit that is Macmillan's. the British leader is obviously satisfied that a summit meeting is going to take place. Whether it's because the Russians are going to behave at the foreign ministers meeting or because he knows Mr. Eisenhower will go the summit however they behave is fairly academic.

The telling argument Macmillan used, that Khrushchev is the only Russian worth talking with, calls for a passing examination. One would assume that Andrei Gromyko would express the same views at the summit. In case of doubt, it would not take him long to contact Moscow from Geneva or Vienna. It is hard to see why Macmillan places such emphasis on Khrushchev's physical presence at a conference table. His reasoning must have emerged from his own recent talks with Khrushchev and it must have been persuasive enough to carry the day at Camp David.

At any rate, the Western agreement to go to the summit has Khrushchev cooing like a dove, for the moment. The current Moscow line is that thr sole motive of his Berlin ultimatum last November was to inspire some new thinking about the untenable and anachronistic German situation. What Khrushchev assumes, of course, is that any such new thinking, any change in the German situation, will be a change in the direction he favors. It's as if President Eisenhower should begin a noisy agitation, demanding that the Russians get out of all Eastern Europe within six months; if in the end the Soviets gave up only Albania, say, the West would have gained something. Thus Khrushchev reasons that if he can gain something out of his current agitation, it will have proved worthwhile and then he can embark on still another agitation.

The West's task is to try to see that he does not gain something without yielding something in return. That is the task that is now before the Four Power Western working party in Paris. There is no doubt that a spirit of flexibility, a spirit, if you will, of disengagement, has lately become a powerful force in Western thinking. The present German situtt ion is unnatural. The status quo need not be held sacred unless changes in it are in one direction only.

A new western plan for Germany, mostly American in origin, is now being codified by the Paris group. What is known of it suggests that the West might be willing, in certain circumstances, to give up any immediate hope of reunification with free elections to agree to a form of confederation, to grant some recognition to the East German Communists and to begin cutting down its plans for arming West Germany and its own forces now in West Germany. These would be monumental concessions. But as we noted, they would be offered only in certain circumstances. Khrushchev, in return, would be called upon to begin a protracted but irresistible process of relaxing the Communist grip on East Germany. That he has never demonstrated willingness to do. It remains to be seen whether the new Western plan is indeed new or mere effort to offer concessions that we don't want to make in return for concessions that we know Khrushchev will not make. It remains to be seen whether we can offer substantial concessions without compromising essential principle.

Barring accident - the summit now looms clearly ahead. What is not clear is that any area of likely agreement exists.

Now back to Larry LeSueur in New York.

LESUEUR: That was Paul Niven in Washington and this is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: President Nasser of the United Arab Republic has been denouncing the Baghdad Pact ever since it was formed. But now he's fallen out with Nikita Khrushchev...and is isolated from the West... Well, as Emerson once said: Be careful what you wish for. You may get it.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Wed., March 25, 1959

Cue

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Statements on the possibility of a summit conference were made by the leaders of the Big Three western powers---Eisenhower, Macmillan, and DeGaulle. President Eisenhower told his first news conference since conferring with The British PRIME MINISTER that there probably was "some validity" to the argument that if REAL agreements ARE to be made, Soviet Premier Khrushchev would have to be in on the discussion. After all, Mr. Eisenhower said, on the Russian side only Khrushchev has the authority really to negotiate. "Anyone else would be on the telephone all the time with Moscow." But, said the President, this does NOT mean that the United States can be bluffed or blackmailed into attending a meeting at the summit. Mr. Eisenhower has said that a summit conference would have to be "justified" by what happens at an earlier meeting of foreign ministers. (The Western powers are sending notes to Moscow tomorrow, proposing that the foreign ministers meet on May eleventh). Mr. Eisenhower said today that his convictions as to what conditions must prevail for a summit meeting have never changed. He denied that as a result of his conversations with Mr. Macmillan, he had agreed "unconditionally" to a meeting of heads of government. Before such a meeting, he said, there must be grounds for believing that "real measures" can be profitably discussed.

At a special news conference in Paris today, President DeGaulle said that he is "entirely in agreement" with Mr. Eisenhower on this point. DeGaulle said he was prepared to attend a summit conference only if "elements of agreement" were produced at the foreign ministers level. He was firm on the subject of Berlin. The Western Powers, he said, have a right to free passage to and from the city. And he said that if anyone opposes this, THEY will be responsible for any conflicts which may follow. The French leader rejected the idea of disengagement in Central Europe and opposed the recognition of East Germany...which, he said, "exists only by virtue of the Soviet occupation and thanks to an implacable dictatorship." DeGaulle proposed that the well-to-do countries of the world pool their wealth to help the under-developed peoples and---in his phrase---"vanquish misery." It was a proposal, he said, that he would like to talk over with Khrushchev, as well as with his friends in the West. On the subject of Algeria, DeGaulle said his peace offer of last October still stands. He called on the rebels to accept the offer now...because, he said, that [redacted] is how it WILL ULTIMATELY [redacted] have to be. He said that meanwhile, the fighting "leads to nothing except hatred, misery and death."

~~DeGaulle said that France believes in the Atlantic Alliance...and wants to see it maintained until peace is really assured. But he denied that the decision of France (to withdraw its Mediterranean fleet from NATO command in time of war) weakened the alliance. [redacted] On the contrary, he said, [redacted] the alliance is strengthened by the French move because cooperation between the separate forces is better than integration anyway. (A theory, incidentally, for which the supreme NATO commander, AMERICA'S General Norstad, holds no brief).~~

At his extraordinary news conference...at the Elysee Palace...President DeGaulle made no mention of Prime Minister Macmillan, who reported to the

→

House of Commons today on his visit to Washington, and on his prior talks in Paris and Bonn. The leader of the Labor Party... Hugh Gaitskell... demanded to know whether Western [redacted] leaders were agreed on a plan for thinning-out the opposing forces in Central Europe, a form of disengagement. Mr. Macmillan replied that this was a question on which "much more detailed work will have to be done," although it WAS discussed. As for the terms on which the Western powers will meet with the Russians, the prime minister suggested that his questioners wait until they see the exact language, contained in the Western notes to Moscow. However, Mr. Macmillan said, everybody seems to think that a summit comference WILL be held.

One of the suggestions [redacted] Prime Minister Macmillan made...when he was in this country...was that periodic summit conferences, held on an informal basis, might be helpful. Mr. Eisenhower said at HIS news conference today that meetings of that type were hard to visualize...since they would almost inevitably take on a formal character. Vice President Nixon, he said, did not participate in the Macmillan talks because he was busy elsewhere. [redacted] But he said Nixon had been kept fully informed. He also announced that Secretary of State Dulles will go to Florida next Monday for a period of rest.

In Congress today, the House passed and sent back to the Senate legislation authorizing an increase of 1-billion, 375-million dollars in this country's contribution to the International Monetary Fund. The House bill allows the contribution to be applied to the current budget, which IS already way out of balance....while the companion measure, passed by the Senate...would charge it to the budget for the NEXT fiscal year, thereby throwing IT out of balance. A joint conference committee must now resolve this difference. [redacted]

CONGRESS TONIGHT [redacted] approved a bill extending the temporary unemployment benefit program for three months. THE SENATE AND HOUSE [redacted] PASSED THE MEASURE, AFTER THE HOUSE KNOCKED OUT [redacted] a new feature which [redacted] would enable about a hundred thousand more unemployed persons to draw the emergency benefits...which were prescribed last year at the height of the recession. [redacted]

By a vote of 13 to 2, the Senate Labor Committee has approved in modified [redacted] form the labor reform bill sponsored by Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts and Senator Ervin of North Carolina---both Democrats. The modifications, however, are slight. The measure requires the election of officers by secret ballot, and the PUBLIC reporting of union finances. And it prohibits picketing for purposes of extortion. Proponents of a separate Administration bill have criticized the Kennedy-Ervin measure, on grounds that it does not call for a ban on secondary boycotts.

The scientists of the International Geophysical Year [redacted] released a report tonight on Project Argus...that experiment in which three nuclear devices were exploded last fall, 300 miles above the EARTH [redacted]. The report says that the radiation produced in those explosions was about 100 miles thick and soared to altitudes as high as four thousand miles INTO OUTER SPACE. [redacted].

well,

[redacted] when one thinks of the problems of the world...the frustrations, The crimes, the follies and misfortunes (not to mention radio-active fallout)... one is inclined to agree with Santayana, who said that life was not a spectacle or a feast but a predicament. Yet Perhaps, those of us who work in the news business tend to overemphasize ~~the~~ WORLD problems. For example, if someone said that the most important news these days is NOT that we are going to talk to the Russians but that Spring has come again, would that person really be wrong? For weeks now, (here in New York,) posters have been scattered around town proclaiming the imminent arrival of the circus. You KNEW, with the FIRST appearance of the posters, that Spring was in the offing. You looked into the face of the roaring tiger...and read [redacted] how death-defying trainers would put Bengal tigers and Nubian lions through their paces. PROMISES OF ~~promises of~~ girls (human SPACE GIRLS) shot from the monstrous mouth of an atomic cannon...of terrifying, (titillating) thrills on the high and low wires, fantastic, fearless feats of courage on the flying trapeze. You learned that all this would take place in Madison Square Garden, starting Friday night, March 27th...and that it would continue afternoon and night, including Sunday, for forty-seven days!

The circus, we discovered, does not arrive in town all at once. Forty elephants arrived by train last Monday...along with the press agents, one zebra, an assortment of animal handlers and two clowns. Together, they made an "elephant walk" from the railroad yards in Long Island City, over the Queensboro Bridge, and across town to the Garden...all in the early light of dawn, so as not to cause a traffic problem.

In a circus, the elephants have no political significance. They jog once around the track in the big spectacular, with a princess or rajah apiece. They also entwine themselves in one of the rings, trunk to tail, making a massive daisy-chain of sorts, of which Hannibal ~~would~~ MIGHT have been proud. Also, if you descend into the catacombs of the Garden, shortly before show time, you can feed them peanuts.

While the elephants here belong to no party, the noisy political atmosphere of a "nominating" convention does prevail. There is a band which bursts intermittently into ~~rhapsodies~~ RHAPSODIES when no one is speaking. And when the ringmaster does speak, you almost expect to hear that familiar phrase, "the man who", because he certainly has the voice for it. Otherwise, the language is not much different. Everything is the greatest,

2/25

The most stupendous, most terrific and colossal--all of which applies equally to The Man Who. There are clowns, to be sure, and clowning has been known to take place at all conventions, political or otherwise. Even the smell of the place is familiar, and wondrously fragrant, and then you remember the stockyards in Chicago...and it all comes back to you.

At any circus you will see the roustabouts and riggers, setting up shop... tugging at wires, stretching them taut for those who will walk, leap, dance, tip-toe ~~and~~ or somersault on them, with or without parasols. And, of course, some wire-pulling goes on at conventions too...although not usually in public. The aerialists, who comprise the nobility among circus performers, go through their death-defying acts...although not quite so death-defying here in New York, where the law requires a net. (Usually in politics there is no net).

~~Coming to think of it, about the only glamour a circus has that a political convention lacks is the glamour of those beautiful girls who dangle deliciously...in spangles...from the ropes in the big spectacular numbers.~~

COME

3/30

One might say that this is much too early to be thinking about nominating conventions, but you'd be surprised at all the thought that is going into them these days--especially in Washington. But this reporter has to admit that he began thinking about the circus 'way back as soon as WINTER STARTED. Because THAT man-eating tiger on the poster is a nearly harbinger of Spring.

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarshuld flew into Moscow tonight, for a two-day stopover on his way back to New York from HIS Asian tour... He expects to confer with Soviet Premier Kruschev...

Last summer, during the Middle-East crisis, prospects for a summit conference centered around the United Nations. But this SPRING the U.N. has SHOWN no eagerness TO INTRUDE between the big powers in Berlin.. This Time MR Hamm arschuld may give advice--but he doesn(t want the UN. to GET crushed in Berlin.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 25, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Statements on the possibility of a summit conference were made by the leaders of the Big Three western powers---Eisenhower, Macmillan, and DeGaulle. President Eisenhower told his first news conference since conferring with the British Prime Minister that there probably was some validity to the argument that if real agreements are to be made, Soviet Premier Khrushchev would have to be in on the discussion. After all, Mr. Eisenhower said, on the Russian side only Khrushchev has the authority really to negotiate. "Anyone else would be on the telephone all the time with Moscow." But, said the President this does not mean that the United States can be bluffed or balckmailed into attending a meeting at the summit. Mr. Eisenhower has said that a summit conference would have to be "justified" by what happens at an earlier meeting of foreign ministers. (The Western powers are sending notes to Moscow tomorrow, proposing that the foreign ministers meet on May 11th.) Mr. Eisenhower said today that his convictions as to what conditions must prevail for a summit meeting have never changed. He denied that as a result of his conversations with Mr. Macmillan, he had agreed unconditionally to a meeting of heads of government. Before such a meeting, he said, there must be grounds for believing that "real measures" can be profitably discussed.

At a special news conference in Paris today, President DeGaulle said that he is "entirely in agreement" with Mr. Eisenhower on this point. DeGaulle said he was prepared to attend a summit conference only if "elements of agreement" were produced at the foreign ministers level. He was firm on the subject of Berlin. The Western Powers, he said, have a right to free passage to and from the city. And he said that if anyone opposes this, they will be responsible for any conflicts which may follow. The French leader rejected the idea of disengagement in Central Europe and opposed the recognition of East Germany...which, he said, "exists only by virtue of the Soviet occupation and thanks to an implacable dictatorship." DeGaulle proposed that the well-to-do countries of the world pool their wealth to help the under-developed peoples and---in his phrase---"vanquish misery." It was a proposal, he said, that he would like to talk over with Khrushchev, as well as with his friends in the West. On the subject of Algeria, DeGaulle said his peace offer of last October still stands. He called on the rebels to accept the offer now...because, he said, that is how it will ultimately have to be. He said that meanwhile, the fighting "leads to nothing except hatred, misery and death."

At his extraordinary news conference...at the Elysee Palace...President DeGaulle made no mention of Prime Minister Macmillan, who reported to the House of Commons today on his visit to Washington, and on his prior talks in Paris and Bonn. The leader of the Labor Party...Hugh Gaitskell...demanded to know whether Western leaders were agreed on a plan for thinning-out the opposing forces in Central Europe, a form of disengagement. Mr. Macmillan replied that this was a question on which "much more detailed work will have to be done," although it was discussed. As for the terms on which the Western powerswill meet with the Russians, the prime minister suggested that his questioners wait until they see the exact language, contained in the Western notes to Moscow. However, Mr. Macmillan said, everybody seems to think that a summit conference will be held.

One of the suggestions Prime Minister Macmillan made...when he was in this country...was that periodic summit conferences, held on an informal basis, might be helpful. Mr. Eisenhower said at his news conference today that meetings of that type were hard to visualize...since they would almost inevitably take on a formal character. Vice President Nixon, he said, did not participate in the Macmillan talks because he was busy elsewhere. But he said Nixon had been kept fully informed. He also announced that Secretary of State Dulles will go to Florida next Monday for a period of rest.

In Congress today, the House passed and sent back to the Senate legislation authorizing an increase of 1-billion, 375-million dollars in this country's contribution to the International Monetary Fund. The House bill allows the contribution to be applied to the current budget, which is already way out of balance...while the companion measure, passed by the Senate...would charge it to the budget for the next fiscal year, thereby throwing it out of balance. A joint conference committee must now resolve this differance.

Congress tonight approved a bill extending the temporary unemployment benefit program for three months. The Senate and House passed the measure, after the House knocked out a new feature wiich would enable about a hundred thousand more unemployed persons to draw the emergency benefits...which were prescribed last year at the height of the recession.

Bu a vote of 13 to 2, the Senate Labor Committee has approved in modified form the labor reform bill sponsored by Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts and Senator Ervin of North Carolina---both Democrats. The modifications, however, are slight. The measure requires the election of officers by secret ballot, and the public reporting of union finances. And it prohibits picketing for purposes of extortion. Proponents of a separate Administration bill have criticized the Kennedy-Ervin measure, on grounds that it does not call for a ban on secondary boycotts.

The scientists of the International Geophysical Year released a report tonight on Project Argus..that experiment in which three nuclear devices were exploded last fall, 300 miles above the earth. The report says that the radiation produced in those explosions was about 100 miles thick and soared to altitudes as high as four thousand miles into outer space.

Well, when one thinks of the problems of the world...the frustrations, the crimes, the follies and misfortunes (not to mention radio-active fallout)... one is inclined to agree with Santayana, who said that life was not a spectacle or a feast but a predicament. Yet perhaps, those of us who work in the news business tend to overemphasize world problems. For example, if someone said that the most important news these days is not that we are going to talk to the Russians but that Spring has come again, would that person really be wrong? For weeks now, here in New York, posters have been scattered around town proclaiming the imminent arrival of the circus. You knew, with the first appearance of the posters, that Spring was in the offing. You looked into the face of the roaring tiger...and read how death-defying trainers would put Bengal tigers and Nubian lions through their paces...promises of girls (human space girls) shot from the monstrous mouth of an atomic cannon...of terrifying, titillating thrills on the high and low wires, fantastic, fearless feats of courage on the flying trapeze. You learned that all this would take place in Madison Square Garden, starting Friday night, March 27th...and that it would continue afternoon and night, including Sunday, for forty-seven days!

The circus, we discovered, does not arrive in town all at once. Forty elephants arrived by train last Monday...along with the press agents, one zebra, an assortment of anmial handlers and two clowns. Together, they made an "elephant walk" from the railroad yards in Long Island City, over the Queensboro Bridge, and across town to the Garden...all in the early light of dawn, so as not to cause a traffic problem.

In a circus, the elephants have no political significance. They jog once around the track in the big spectacular, with a princess or rajah apiece. They also entwine themselves in one of the rings,trunk to tail, making a massive daisy-chain of sorts, of which Hannibal might have been proud. Also, if you descend into the catacombs of the Garden, shortly before show time, you can feed them peanuts.

While the elephants here belong to no party, the noisy political atmosphere of a nominating convention does prevail. There is a band which bursts intermittently into rhapsodies when no one is speaking. And when the ringmaster does speak, you almost expect to hear that familiar phrase, "the man who," because he certainly has the voice for it. Otherwise, the language is not much different. Everything is the greatest, the most stupendous, most terrific and colossal---all of which applies equally to The Man Who. There are clowns, to be sure, and clowning has been known to take place at all conventions, political or otherwise. Even the smell of the place is familiar, and wondrously fragrant, and then you remember the stockyards in Chicago...and it all comes back to you.

At any circus you will see the roustabouts and riggers, setting up shop... tugging at wires, stretching them taut for those who will walk, leap, dance, tip-toe, or somersault on them, with or without parasols. And, of course, some wire-pulling goes on at conventions too...although not usually in public. The aerialists, who comprise the nobility among circus performers, go through their death-defying acts...although not quite so death-defying here in New York, where the law requires a net. (Usually in politics there is no net.)

One might say that this is much too early to be thinking about nominating conventions, but you'd be surprised at all the thought that is going into them these days---especially in Washington. But this reporter has to admit that he began thinking about the circus 'way back as soon as winter started. Because that man-eating tiger on the poster really is a harbinger of Spring.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold flew into Moscow tonight, for a two-day stopover on his way back to New York from his Asian tour. He expects to confer with Soviet Premier Khrushchev. Last summer, during the Middle-East crisis, prospects for a summit conference centered around the United Nations. But this spring the U.N. has shown no eagerness to intrude between the big powers in Berlin. This time, Mr. Hammarskjold may give advice---but he doesn't want the U.N. to get crushed in Berlin.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Thurs., March 26, 1959

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

The United States, Britain and France sent their formal notes to Moscow, proposing a meeting at the foreign ministers level on May 11th. And each in different language, laid-down conditions for a summit conference later on. President DeGaulle of France...as expected...showed less emthusiasm for a meeting at the summit than either President Eisenhower or Prime Minister Macmillan. He would be willing to go to the summit, he said, only if a foreign ministers meeting "permits the envisionment of genuine progress." He said nothing of the possibility of a summit conference this summer. That is, he left the question of when to hold it completely indefinite. Both the British and American notes DO speak of the possibility of a summer meeting of heads of government. They also attach conditions, but again with a slightly different shading. Both say that the PURPOSE of the foreign ministers meeting should be "to prepare "constructive proposals" for consideration by a "conference of heads of government." Having made this point, the American note adds that as soon as developments in the foreign ministers meeting "justify" holding a summit conference, the United States will be ready to participate. The British note says that under those conditions it would be GLAD to participate. (They use the word "glad" instead of our word "ready"). The American, British and French notes all refer to the fact that Premier Khrusuchev [redacted] already has accepted the May 11th date for a foreign ministers conference. The French note says bluntly that the broad question of European security...as well as the German question...must be discussed by the foreign ministers. Our note, in more polite language, says that, naturally, any of the four participating governments should have the opportunity to present its views on any question [redacted] it may consider relevant. We also acknowledge that [redacted] in certain matters which may come up Poland and Czechoslovakia have a legitimate and direct interest. And we say that their participation at a certain stage of the negotiations

→

"can therefore be contemplated." Advisers from East and West Germany would also be invited to attend. [redacted]

In Washington today, Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter accused Red China of carrying out a "ruthless suppression" of human liberties in Tibet. In a formal statement, Herter said he was "deeply shocked" by the Communist effort to destroy the religion and culture of the Tibetan people. He said that the hypocrisy of the Communists had once again been demonstrated for all the world to see. And OF the resistance effort of the Tibetan people, he said, "we see one more heartening example of the indomitable spirit of Man."

Today...on Formosa.. Chinese Nationalist President Chiang Kai-shek claimed that rebel forces in Tibet had cut off the supply lines of the Communist garrison. And he promised that whenever the Nationalists regain control of the China mainland, Tibet will be granted its independence. [redacted]

4.4.4.4.

CBS News Correspondent Winston Burdett was expelled from Iraq today, along with two other American reporters--Larry Collins of United Press International and William McHale, Middle East correspondent for Time-Life. According to the formal order issued by the military governor, they were to leave the country within 24 hours, but 12 of those hours already had elapsed before they were notified. In a broadcast this afternoon from Beirut, capital of Lebanon, Burdett said they were given no reason for their expulsion, simply that they had been in Iraq "long enough". Burdett remarked wryly that he had been there only 15 days. And he said that with their departure, CBS News cameraman Joe FA-LET'-A is the only American newsman left in Iraq. Burdett reported that when they left Iraq by plane this morning, the Kassem government was still carrying-out widespread arrests. There was no way, he said, of getting an accurate ESTIMATE of how many persons have been arrested, but reports run as high as 12 or even 15 thousand.

The 20-thousand-ton luxury liner Santa Rosa is arriving [redacted] in New York MORE THAN [redacted] twelve hours late, after surviving a near-disaster at sea. It was DUE in at eight o'clock this morning after a Caribbean cruise, but at about 3 a.m., five hours out of New York...in a calm sea...it collided with an oil tanker, the VAL-KEM Valchem, which had just left New York and was headed for the Gulf coast. The bow of the Santa Rosa sliced into the stern of the tanker, cutting a gash 40 feet deep. Water flooded the lower engine room of [redacted] the VAL-KEM Valchem. Two boilers were demolished, and the funnel of the tanker fell across the bow of the Santa Rosa like a giant, smoking cigar. One member of The VALCHEM'S CREW IS REPORTED [redacted] dead, and three others missing and presumed dead. No one aboard the big luxury liner [redacted] is believed to have been injured. Most of the 247 passengers were asleep at the time. In minutes, they donned life-jackets and rushed out on [redacted] deck. But never, we are told, was there any danger of either vessel sinking, and no S.O.S. was sent. A fire that broke out on the Santa Rosa was soon extinguished, but the very fact that there WAS a fire raises the specter of [redacted] disaster. [redacted] Experts say that only the fact that the Valchem was empty of oil may have prevented a major tragedy. There were patches of fog at the time, but both vessels were equipped with radar. The Guard Guard has ordered an investigation, with hearings to start on Monday. And Congress wants to know why it is that our newest, radar-equipped vessels continue to collide off-shore. (It was only 26 days ago that the liner Constitution collided with a freighter, 20 miles off New York).

well

The differences in the conditions laid down for a summit conference by the western powers in their separate notes to the Kremlin, are not really of great magnitude...All of them are agreed, as are the Russians, that there should be a meeting of the foreign ministers, in advance, to at least narrow-down the differences in points of view, on the subject of Berlin and a peace treaty with Germany..

As Prime Minister MacMillan told the House of Commons, [redacted], everybody expects a summit conference late this summer...Although he would NOT venture a guess as to the agenda.. STILL, it's possible that the [redacted] areas of disagreement among the foreign ministers, might be so wide, that the foreign ministers session COULD [redacted] drag on, without even precising what the disagreements were about...This would certainly not be unusual in negotiations with the communists, as the [redacted] armistice [redacted] negotiations at Panmunjom, will testify...

[redacted] It may be noteworthy [redacted] that the East German regime [redacted] also piped [redacted] up with a suggestion today,.. Urged Russia to restrict the duration of the forthcoming foreign ministers talks to two months... [redacted] The german communist regime declared that the time limit was necessary,.. [redacted]..."To prevent," said East Germany, "continuation of West German atomic rearmament, under the concealment of negotiations."

Now Pyschologists say, that nations as well as people, often accuse their opponents of doing things, that they (themselves ARE) thinking of doing. The [redacted] ...

The german communists are (OF COURSE) mouthpieces of Moscow... It would appear that Russia (MAY BE) worried about West Germany possessing atomic weapons.... Moscow would hardly be thinking of giving (ATOMIC ARMS TO The EAST GERMANS) ...she simply doesn't trust the Germans, (WITH SUCH WEAPONS) anymore than she trusts any of the captured people of Eastern Eruope. They all hate their Russian conquerors...

But Moscow's real motive in driving toward a summit conference has yet to be disclosed. True, Premier Kruschev has pushed forward the pawn of Berlin, (TO DELIBERATELY AGGRAVATE) a sensitive nerve between East and West... (FOR IN BERLIN) there is no bumper between communism and the West...

It's a point where a miscalculation could lead to the big war... OR to negotiations at the Summit..

It stands to reason that the Russians would like a (political) settlement in Germany that would lead to their (permanently) securing their Eastern conquests...not only militarily, ~~as they [redacted] failure to react to the events in Hungary~~...but politically also, to deprive the captive East of any hope of being liberated.

After that Premier Kruschev could get on with his [redacted] seven-year plan to catch-up with and suppass the United States in absolute production by 1965...

We must recognize that since their success in crushing the Hungarian uprising UNOPPOSED, the Soviet Union has been operating from strength... [redacted] Psychologically abetted, of course, by their Sputnik achievements in space..

Still the Russians [redacted] playing their cards close to their chests as always, have not revealed what they want out of a Summit conference..

WELL, If past performances are any criterion, the ultimate Soviet objective is to deprive the United States and its allies of the only weapon, which makes us equal to the [redacted] communist superiority in man-power...

And that, of course, is the nuclear bomb...

The soviet Union has long tried, but failed to get the world to agree TO A PAPER [redacted] ban on nuclear weapons...The Western allies have held out staunchly for an adequate inspection system, as a real guarantee that they won't be used...

Before [redacted] Premier Kruschev created the Berlin crisis, the soviet union and the West, were engaged in two atomic control conferences in Geneva..

One, on President Eisenhower's initiative-was-to prevent the launching of nuclear surprise attacks. Premier Kruschev called our inspection PROPOSALS "nonsense"--says they're merely a device for spying ON the soviet Union...

The other international meeting in Geneva, initiated by the Russians, was to seek ways of banning nuclear test explosions... In both of these sessions, the United States and the Western powers, held out for "adequate" international inspection...

The soviet union stood firm on demanding a veto power on all important matters in any such treaty, and THUS FAR HAS MADE the proposed international inspection system into a farce...By demanding that "most" of the inspectors be nationals of the Host country...with only four or five "foreign specialists" manning the international inspection posts..

The american delegate to this recessed conference, Ambassador Wadsworth, stated yesterday that any agreement on adequate inspection was unlikely until after the foreign ministers meeting on Germany... That is apparently an understatement... FOR DANGER the exists that the Russians will try to rush us off our feet with a meaningless Atomic test ban when Kruschev goes to the Summit... This is Larry LeSueur--Ill be back in moment with a footnote to the news--(Cue) first Georgre Bryan on the weather.

The Republic of Korea today celebrated with parades, fire-works and sports events, the [redacted] Birthday of its first and only President, Singman Rhee. Thirty [redacted] thousand persons attended the main celebration in the stadium at Seoul. [redacted]. [redacted] President Rhee sat in the stands with his Austrian-born wife. The 84-year-old President appeared in perfect health..

This is Larry LeSueur--Goodnite..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MARCH 26, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The United States, Britain and France sent their formal notes to Moscow, proposing a meeting at the foreign ministers level on May 11th. And each in different language, laid down conditions for a summit conference Later on. President DeGaulle of France...as expected...showed less enthusiasm for a meeting at the summit than either President Eisenhower or Prime Minister Macmillan. He would be willing to go to the summit, he said, only if a foreign ministers meeting "permits the envisionment of genuine progress." He said nothing of the possibility of a summit conference this summer. That is, he left the question of when to hold it completely indefinite. Both the British and American notes do speak of the possibility of a summer meeting of heads of government. They also attach conditions, but again with a slightly different shading. Both say that the purpose of the foreign ministers meeting should be "to prepare constructive proposals for consideration by a conference of heads of government." Having made this point, the American note adds that as soon as developments in the foreign ministers meeting "justify" holding a summit conference, the United States will be ready to participate. The British note says that under those conditions it would be glad to participate. (They use the word "glad" instead of our word "ready"). The American, British and French notes all refer to the fact that Premier Khrushchev already has accepted the May 11th date for a foreign ministers conference. The French note says bluntly that the broad question of Eurepean security...as well as the German question...must be discussed by the foreign ministers. Our note, in more polite language, says that, naturally, any of the four participating governments should have the opportunity to present its views on any question it may consider relevant. We also acknowledge that in certain matters which may come up, Poland and Czechoslovakia have a legitimate and direct interest. And we say that their participation at a certain stage of the negotiations "can therefore be contemplated." Advisers from East and West Germany would also be invited to attend.

In Washington today, Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter accused Red China of carrying out a "ruthless suppression" of human liberties in Tibet. In a formal statement, Herter said he was "deeply shocked" by the Communist effort to destroy the religion and culture of the Tibetan people. He said that the hypocrisy of the Communists had once again been demonstrated for all the world to see. And of the resistance effort of the Tibetan people, he said, "we see one more heartening example of the indomitable spirit of Man."

Today...on Formosa...Chinese Nationalist President Chiang Kai-shek claimed that rebel forces in Tibet had cut off the supply lines of the Communist garrison. And he promised that whenever the Nationalists regain control of the China mainland, Tibet will be granted its independence.

CBS News Correspondent Winston Burdett was expelled from Iraq today, along with two other American reporters---Larry Collins of United Press International and William McHale, Middle East correspondent for Time-Life. According to the formal order issued by the military governor, they were to leave the country within 24 hours, but 12 of those hours already had elapsed before they were notified. In a broadcast this afternoon from Beirut, capital of Lebanon, Burdett said they were given no reason for their expulsion, simply that they had been in Iraq "long enough." Burdett remarked wryly that he had been there only 15 days. And he said that with their departure, CBS News cameraman Joe Falatta is the only American newsman left in Iraq. Burdett reported that when they left Iraq by plane this morning, the Kassem government was still carrying out widespread arrests. There was no way, he said, of getting an accurate estimate of how many persons have been arrested, but reports run as high as 12 or even 15 thousand.

The 20-thousand-ton luxury liner Santa Rosa is arriving in New York more than twelve hours late, after surviving a near-disaster at sea. It was due in at eight o'clock this morning after a Caribbean cruise, but at about 3 AM, five hours out of New York...in a calm sea...it collided with an oil tanker, the Valchem, which had just left New York and was headed for the Gulf coast. The bow of the Santa Rosa sliced into the stern of the tanker, cutting a gash 40 feet deep. Water flooded the lower engine room of the Valchem. Two boilers were demolished, and the funnel of the tanker fell across the bow of the Santa Rosa like a giant, smoking cigar. One member of the Valchem's crew is reported dead, and three others missing and presumed dead. No one aboard the big luxury liner is bleived to have been injured. Most of the 247 passengers were asleep at the time. In minutes, they donned life-jackets and rushed out on deck. But never, we are told, was there any danger of either vessel sinking and no S.O.S. was sent. A fire that broke out on the Santa Rosa was soon extinguished, but the very fact that there was s fire raises the specter of disaster. Experts say that only the fact that the Valchem was empty of oil may have prevented a major tragedy. There were patches of fog at the time, but both vessels were equipped with radar. The Coast Guard has ordered an investigation, with hearings to start on Monday. And Congress wants to know why it is that our newest, radar-equipped vessels continue to collide off-shore. (It was only 26 days ago that the liner Constitution collided with a freighter, 20 miles off New York.)

Well, the differences in the conditions laid down for a summit conference by the western powers in their separate notes to the Kremlin, are not really of great magnitude. All of them are agreed, as are the Russians, that there should be a meeting of the foreign ministers in advance, to at least narrow-down the differences in points of view, on the subject of Berlin and a peace treaty with Germany.

As Prime Minister Macmillan told the House of Commons everybody expects a summit conference late this summer. Although he would not venture a guess as to the agenda. Still, it's possible that the areas of disagreement among the foreign ministers, might be so wide, that the foreign ministers session could drag on, without even precising what the disagreements were about. This would certainly not be unusual in negotiations with the Communists, as the armistice negotiations as Panmunjom will testify.

It may be noteworthy that the East German regime also piped up with a suggestions today, urged Russia to restrict the duration of the forthcoming foreign ministers talks to two months. The German communist regime declared that the time limit was necessary, "to prevent," said East Germany, "continuation of West German atomic rearmament, under the concealment of negotiations."

Now Psychologists say, that nations as well as people, often accuse their opponents of doing things, that they themselves are thinking of doing. The German communists are of course, mouthpieces of Moscow. It would appear that Russia may be worried about West Germany possessing atomic weapons. Moscow would hardly be thinking of giving atomic arms to the East Germans. She simply doesn't trust the Germans with such weapons anymore than she trusts any of the captured people of Eastern Europe. They all hate their Russian conquerors.

But Moscow's real motive in driving toward a summit conference has yet to be disclosed. True, Premier Khrushchev has pushed forward the pawn of Berlin, to deliberately aggravate a sensitive nerve between East and West...for in Berlin there is no bumper between communism and The West. It's a point where a miscalculation could lead to the big war...or to negotiations at the summit.

It stands to reason that the Russians would like a political settlement in Germany that would lead to their permanently securing their Eastern conquests, not only militarily, but politically also, to deprive the captive East of any hope of being liberated.

After that Premier Khrushchev could get on with his seven-year plan to catch up with and surpass the United States in absolute production by 1965.

We must recognize that since their success in crushing the Hungarian uprising unopposed, the Soviet Union has been operating from strength. Psychologically abetted, of course, by their Sputnik achievements in space.

Still the Russians playing their cards close to their chests as always, have not revealed what they want out of a summit conference. Well, if past performances are any criterion, the ultimate Soviet objective is to deprive the United States and its allies of the only weapon, which makes us equal to the communist superiority in man-power. And that, of course, is the nuclear bomb.

The Soviet Union has long tried, but failed to get the world to agree to a paper ban on nuclear weapons. The Western allies have held out staunchly for an adequate inspection system, as a real guarantee that they won't be used.

Before Premier Khrushchev created the Berlin crisis, the Soviet Union and the West, were engaged in two atomic control conferences in Geneva. One, on President Eisenhower's initiative was to prevent the launching of nuclear surprise attacks. Premier Khrushchev called our inspection proposals "nonsense" says they're merely a device for spying on the Soviet Union.

The other international meeting in Geneva, initiated by the Russians, was to seek ways of banning nuclear test explosions. In both of these sessions, the United States and the Western powers, held out for adequate international inspection. The Soviet Union stood firm on demanding a veto power on all important matters in any such treaty, and thus far has made the proposed international inspection system into a farce..by demanding that most of the inspectors be nationals of the host country...with only four or five "foreign specialists" manning the international inspection posts.

The American delegate to this recessed conference, Ambassador Wadsworth, stated yesterday that any agreement on adequate inspection was unlikely until after the foreign ministers meeting on Germany. That is apparently an understatement. For the danger exists that the Russians will try to rush us off our feet with a meaningless Atomic test ban when Khrushchev goes to the Summit.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. First George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BYRAN

LESUEUR: The Republic of Korea today celebrated with parades, fire-works and sports events, the birthday of its first and only President Singman Rhee. Thirty thousand persons attended the main celebration in the stadium at Seoul. President Rhee sat in the stands with his Austrian-born wife. The 84-year old president appeared in perfect health.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Fri., March 27, 1959

Good evening, everyone. Here's what happened today:

The White House announced that President Eisenhower will make an important speech on the international situation a week from tomorrow. The occasion for the speech will be a convocation at Gettysburg College. No details are given as to the subject matter, except that the address will deal with world problems, rather than domestic issues. And Mr. Eisenhower is doing some work on it this Easter week-end at his Gettysburg farm. Today, he and Mrs. Eisenhower attended a special Good Friday service at the First Methodist Church in Gettysburg.

The Navy announces a new exploit by the atomic submarine Skate---the first WINTER cruise ever carried out under the Arctic ice. The Skate made its first trip to the Pole last August, at just about the same time that the Nautilus was making ITS epic voyage through the so-called Northwest Passage. ..from the Bering Sea, across the top of the North American continent, to the Atlantic. This time, the Skate not only made the Arctic-run in LATE winter (when the ice is thickest), but it broke all records for distance, logging more than three-thousand miles. And it was under the ice for an unprecedented 12 days. Yet in THOSE 12 days it was able to surface 10 times, on several occasions smashing a hole for itself in the THIN ice overhead. The conning tower of the Skate, we're told, had been strengthened for under-ice operations. But, otherwise, she carried no special "ice-punching" equipment. The Navy says that the feat performed by the Skate "establishes the ability of nuclear submarines to operate at any time of the year in polar regions." The Navy announcement does NOT link this accomplishment with the "missile possibilities," but they are QUITE obvious. The Skate would seem to have demonstrated that a missile-launching submarine, CAN operate under the ice cap, off Russia's northern coastline, any season of the year.

→

The Air Force announces that it has recovered from the Atlantic ocean the plastic capsule from a Thor missile, fired last night at Cape Canaveral.

Inside the capsule were delicate instruments...including a magnetic tape recorder...for noting the effects of heat generated by atmospheric friction as the nose-cone plunged earthward after its flight. When recovered, the capsule had traveled about 15-hundred miles in what has officially been described as a successful [redacted] test.

The United States has resumed full diplomatic relations with Communist Bulgaria after a nine-year break. Relations were broken off in 1950, after our minister in Sofia, Donald Heath, was accused---not only of espionage---but of being involved in a plot to overthrow the Red government. Today, in announcing the resumption of diplomatic ties, the State Department said that Bulgaria has WITHDRAWN these charges...and that, furthermore, Bulgaria has agreed to ease the restrictions previously imposed on American diplomats functioning in Sofia. Negotiations looking toward a resumption of diplomatic relations have been going on for some time. Bulgaria made the first move for preliminary talks in December, 1957...and final negotiations were started on the fourth of this month.

No reaction from Russia yet on those Western notes dealing with a foreign ministers meeting and a possible summit conference. Yugoslavia

→

let it be known today...officially...that IT wants to take part in any international conference on the German problem. Yugoslavia, it says, has this right as "one of the most active members of the anti-Hitler coalition."

[redacted] Moscow radio says that U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold had a long talk with Premier Khrushchev today. The meeting, [redacted] it says, took place at Mr. Hammarskjold's request and was held at Sochi, the famous Black Sea resort. The Moscow broadcast gives no other details. But tomorrow morning, the U.N. secretary general will hold a news conference in Moscow. THEN [redacted] he will fly back to NEW YORK [redacted].

The Russians have sent a new shipment of arms to Iraq. CBS News Correspondent Winston Burdett...who was expelled from Iraq yesterday, along with two other American reporters...reveals the continuing flow of arms to Iraq in a broadcast from Beirut, capital of Lebanon. Burdett reports that a few days ago, at the Iraqi port of Basra, a Russian ship unloaded still another cargo of tanks and other military equipment for the Iraqi Army. This, he says, was the SIXTH shipment of Soviet arms to arrive since the Kassem revolution. And it's estimated that Iraq has now received from the Russians at least 156 tanks--the equivalent of a Soviet mechanized division. Along with the tanks [redacted] have come anti-tank [redacted] and anti-aircraft guns, motor transport, armored personnel carriers, rifles and Soviet communications equipment. Burdett reports that the other day, for the first time, Iraqi soldiers were seen carrying Russian [redacted] SUBMACHINE GUNS. The CBS News correspondent...who is now free to report Iraqi developments WITHOUT censorship...says that British Army technicians who used to train the Iraqi Army have moved out of their quarters, just south of Baghdad...and that Russian Army technicians, perhaps a hundred or so, have moved in. And he reports that in the countryside, NORTH of Baghdad toward the Iranian border, Soviet personnel [redacted] ARE ALREADY training the 6.6.6.6.

MAINTENANCE of Matériel

[redacted]

Iraqis in gunnery and [redacted]

A grim reminder today that the war in Algeria is continuing... French military authorities ~~today~~ report 136 rebels killed in AN engagement ~~a [redacted]~~, 200 miles southeast of Algiers. FRENCH losses in the action are reported at six dead.

well

Although Prime Minister Nehru has made plain that India has no intention of interfering in the Tibetan Revolt, Indian newspapers ARE making no secret of their concern about the situation to their North. Premier Nehru said cautiously that India could not remain indifferent to the fate of the Dalai Lama, whose whereabouts are still a mystery. But Indian newspapers are more forthright...They say that new Delhi is undoubtedly getting more information than its releasing via its radio-link with the Indian consulate in Lhasa... But they point-out, that for the Indian government to release this information, might mean the loss of that radio-link.

The CBS New correspondent in India, Arhtur Bonner, cables us today, saying that even if the chinese communists restore order in Tibet, they still will not have peace. He says the communist troubles began soon after the chinese invaded Tibet in 1950. It was then that the Dalai Lama first fled, through one of the many secret passages in his LHASA Palace.. He didn't return until June, 1951. This was a month after a treaty was signed, which stipulated (among other things) that Tibet would be an autonomous region, that the civil functions and powers of the Dalai Lama would BE RECOGNIZED, and that the Chinese would respect the religious beliefs, customs and habits of the Tibetan people..

Then came a period of intensive change for other-worldly Tibet..

New roads were built, both inside tibet, and linking the mountain-top country with China... Trade was re-oriented away from India to China, and large numbers of young tibetans were sent to China for training and indocrinization.. The Tibetans were forced to supply unpaid labor for the road-building program.. New taxes were levied on Tibet's great monastaries, which own most of the cultivated land.. There was a large influx of chinese soldiers and civilians.. All this led to a growing resistance against the chinese communists.... Chinese communists newspapers began to mention Tibetan raids against warehouses, and the murder of communist agents... Early in 1956, a delegation of Tibetans, led by the Dalai Lama's Brother, met with Premier Nehru in New Delhi, and complained that the chinese reds had bombed two villages, killing thousands of defenseless Tibetans, as an object lesson.. The communists then did an about-face... Stopped the deportation of Tibetans and called off their interference with the monastaries.. For a while there a lull.. and then reports began to reach India, [redacted], of a revolt by Khamba tribesmen, whose homeland extends to China's Setch-wan province.

Indian observers believe the entire Khamba tribe numbers only from ten to 25 thousand, and so stories of big engagements FOUGHT between them and the chinese are OBVIOUSLY exagerrated...The fierce Khambas possess only small arms, but they are proficient guerrilla fighters...In fact one of their main occupations used to be robbing CARAVANS between China and Tibet... But a most significant factor was that the repots of tlashes between the Khamba tribesmen and the chinese, began spreading to new areas in Tibet itself... This could only mean that the relatively small number of warlike Khambas were finding support from among the MASSES of The Tibetan people...And that resistance to the Chinese communists FINALLY BECAME General.....Correspondent Bonner says its important to remember that the present troubles are more than just a nationalist reaction to a foreign intruder...Says the Chinese communists are now trying to rule the everyday life of the Tibetans...and have apparently broken their pledge to recognize Tibetan autonomy..

Despite the chinese communist pledge to delay land reforms and other collectivist measures in Tibet, until they completed their second five year plan...that is in 1962, The communists again began interfering with Tibet's influential monastaries..

There were reports that the chinese began to send in their own settlers to Tibet.. The chinese governor of Tibet was quoted as saying that the population should be raised from two million to ten million--an indication that the Chinese would like to swamp Tibet with immigrants..

These are SOME of the reasons why Tibetan resistance to communism reached the breaking-point, and was touched-off by rumors that the Reds would remove the Dalia Lama to Bayping..

But looking forward to the future, says correspondent Bonner, the evidence is that the Tibetans are too few and too weak, to expel their communist overlords. in any large-scale actions. That is ...However, the parched plains and lofty mountains of Tibet, provide fine guerrilla country, for lightning raids and quick, safe get-aways.. And the warlike Khambas are apparently developing better leadership... But much SAYS [redacted] our correspondent in New Delhi, arthur Bonner, much depends on what happens to the Dalai Lama.. If the communists get control of him, they may be able to put out statements in his name, that might dishearten [redacted] Tibetan resistance.. But even a silent guerrila war against the communists in Tibet, and fruitless chinese efforts to crush it will damage Bayping's prestige in India and the rest of Asia.. This is Larry Lesueur--I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news...First George Bryan with the weather.

A voyage by submarine under the North Pole was [redacted] long the dream of Sir Hubert Wilkens, the ARCTIC ~~Polar~~ Explorer... ~~AND~~ when ~~as~~ the nuclear submarine skate surfaced at the North Pole, [redacted] ashes..

The skipper of the Skate radioed a message saying: "On March 17, fifty years after Peary ~~Peary's~~ Skate was at North Pole../Shortly after surfacing, we [redacted] held solemn memorial ceremony scattering ashes of Sir Hubert Wilkens, according to his wishes..

This is Larry LeSueur reporting.. Goodnite

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 27, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The White House announced that President Eisenhower will make an important speech on the international situation a week from tomorrow. The occasion for the speech will be a convocation at Gettysburg College. No details are given as to the subject matter, except that the address will deal with world problems, rather than domestic issues. And Mr. Eisenhower is doing some work on it this Easter weekend at his Gettysburg farm. Today, he and Mrs. Eisenhower attended a special Good Friday service at the First Methodist Church in Gettysburg.

The Navy announces a new exploit by the atomic submarine Skate---the first winter cruise ever carried out under the Arctic ice. The Skate made its first trip to the Pole last August, at just about the same time that the Nautilus was making its epic voyage through the so-called Northwest Passage...from the Bering Sea, across the top of the North American continent, to the Atlantic. This time, the Skate not only made the Artic run in late winter (when the ice is thickest) but it broke all records for distance, logging more than three thousand miles. And it was under the ice for an unprecedented 12 days. Yet in those 12 days it was able to surface 10 times, on several occasions smashing a hole for itself in the thin ice overhead. The conning tower of the Skate, we're told, had been strengthened for under-ice operations. But, otherwise, she carried no special ice-punching equipment. The Navy says that the feat perfomed by the Skate "establishes the ability of nuclear submarines to operate at any time of the year in polar regions." The Navy announcement does not link this accomplishment with the missile possibilities, but they are quite obvious. The Skate would seem to have demonstrated that a missile-launching submarine, can operate under the ice cap, off Russia's northern coastline, any season of the year.

The Air Force announces that it has recovered from the Atlantic Ocean the plastic capsule from a Thor missile, fired last night at Cape Canaveral. Inside the capsule were delicate instruments..including a magnetic tape recorder, for noting the effects of heat generated by atmospheric friction as the nose-cone plunged earthward after its flight. When recovered, the capsule had traveled about 15-hundred miles in what has officially been described as a successful test.

The United States has resumed full diplomatic relations with Communist Bulgaria after a nine-year break. Relations were broken off in 1950, after our minister in Sofia, Donald Heath, was accused---not only of espionage---but of being involved in a plot to overthrow the Red government. Today, in announcing the resumption of diplomatic ties, the State Department said that Bulgaria has withdrawn these charges..aand that, furthermore, Bulgaria has agreed to ease the restrictions priviously imposed on American diplomats functioning in Sofia. Negotiations, looking toward a resumption of diplomatic relations have been going on for some time. Bulgaria made the first move for preliminary talks in December, 1957...and final negotiations were started on the fourth of this month.

No reaction from Russia yet on those Western notes dealing with a foreign ministers meeting and a possible summit conference. Yugoslavia let it be known today...officially...that it wants to take part in any international conference on the German problem. Yugoslavia, it says, has this right as "one of the most active members of the anti-Hitlerite coalition."

Moscow radio says that U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold had a long talk with Premier Khrushchev today. The meeting, it says, took place at Mr. Hammarskjold's request and was held at Sochi, the famous Black Sea resort. The Moscow braodcast gives no other details. But tomorrow morning, the U.N. secretary general will hold a news conference in Moscow. Then he will fly back to New York.

The Russians have sent a new shipment of arms to Iraq. CBS News correspondent Winston Burdett...who was expelled from Iraq yesterday, along with two other American reporters...reveals the continuing flow of arms to Iraq in a broadcast from Beirut, capital of Lebanon. Burdett reports that a few days ago, at the Iraqi port of Basra, a Russian ship unloaded still another cargo of tanks and other military equipment for the Iraqi Army. This, he says, was the sixth shipment of Soviet arms to arrive since the Kassem revolution. And it's estimated that Iraq has now received from the Russians at least 156 tanks---the equivalent of a Soviet mechanized division. Along with the tanks have come anti-tank and anti-aircraft guns, motor transport, armored personnel carriers, rifles and Soviet communications equipment. Burdett reports that the other day, for the first time, Iraqi soldiers were seen carrying Russian submachine guns. The CBS News correspondent...who is now free to report Iraqi developments without censorship...says that British Army technicians who used to train the Iraqi Army have moved out of their quarters, just south of Baghdad....and that Russian Army technicians, perhaps a hundred or so, have moved in. And he reports that in the countryside, north of Baghdad toward the Iranian border, Soviet personnel are already training the Iraqis in gunnery and maintenance of materiel.

A grim reminder today that the war in Algeria is continuing...French military authorities report 136 rebels killed in an engagement 200 miles southeast of Algiers. French losses in the action are reported at six dead.

Well Prime Minister Nehru has made plain that India has no intention of interfering in the Tibetan Revolt, India's newspapers are making no secret of their concern about the situation to their north. Premier Nehru said cautiously that India could not remain indifferent to the fate of the Dalai Lama, whose whereabouts are still a mystery...but Indian newspapers are more forthright.

They say that New Delhi is undoubtedly getting more information than it's releasing via its radio-link with the Indian consulate in Lhasa...But they point out, that for the Indian government to release this information, might mean the loss of that radio-link.

The CBS News correspondent in India, Arthur Bonner cables us today, saying that even if the Chinese Communists restore order in Tibet, they still will not have peace. He says that communist troubles began soon after the Chinese invaded Tibet in 1950....It was then that the Dalai Lama first fled, through one of the many secret passages in his Lhasa Palace...He didn't return until June, 1951...This was a month after a treaty was signed, which stipulated among other things, that Tibet would be an autonomous region, that the civil functions and powers of the Dalai Lama would be recognized and that the Chinese would respect the religious beliefs, customs and habits of the Tibetan people. Then came a period of intensive change for other-worldly Tibet. New roads were built, both inside Tibet and linking the mountain-top country with China. Trade was re-oriented away from India to China and large numbers of young Tibetans were sent to China for training and indoctrinazation. The Tibetans were forced to supply unpaid labor for the road-building program. New taxes were levied on Tibet's great monastries, which own most of the cultivated land. There was a large influx of Chinese soldiers and civilians. All this led to a growing resistance against the chinese communists. Chinese Communist newspapers began to mention Tibetan raids against warehouses, and the murder of communist agents. Early in 1956, a delegation of Tibetans, led by the Dalai Lama's Brother, met with Premier Nehru in New Delhi, and complained that the Chinese reds had bombed two villages, killing thousands of defenseless Tibetans, an an object lesson. The communists then did an about face...stopped the deportation of Tibetans and called off their interference with the monastaries. For a while there was a lull...and then reports began to reach India, of a revolt by Khamba tribesmen, whose homeland extends to China's Checwan province. Indian observers believe the entire Khamba tribe numbers only from ten to twenty-five thousand, and so stories of big engagements fought between them and the Chinese are obviously exaggerated. The fierce Khambas possess only small arms, but they are proficient guerrilla fighters. In fact one of their main occupations used to be robbing caravans between China and Tibet. But a most significant factor was that the reports of clashes between the Khamba tribesmen and the Chinese, began spreading to new areas in Tibet itself. This could only mean that the relatively small number of warlike Khambas were finding support from among the masses of the Tibetan people....and that resistance to the Chinese communists finally became general. Correspondent Bonner says it's important to remember that the present troubles are more than just a nationalist reaction to a foreign intruder. Says the Chinese communists are now trying to rule the everyday life of the Tibetans, and have apparently broken their pledge to recognize Tibetan autonomy.

Despite the Chinese communist pledge to delay land reforms and other collectivist measures in Tibet, until they completed their second five year plan...that is in 1962, the communists again began interfering with Tibet's influential monastaries.

There were reports that the Chinese began to send in their own settlers to Tibet. The Chinese governor of Tibet was quoted as saying that the population should be raised from two million to ten million---an indication that the Chinese would like to swamp Tibet with immigrants.

These are some of the reasons why Tibetan resistance to communism reached the breaking-point, and was touched-off by rumors that the Reds would remove the Dalai Lama to Peiping.

But looking forward to the future, says correspondent Bonner, the evidence is that the Tibetans are too few and too weak, to expel their communist overlords...in any large-scale actions. That is however, the parched plains and lofty mountains of Tibet, provide fine guerrilla country, for lightening raids and quick, safe get-aways...and the warlike Khambas are apparently developing better leadership. But much says our correspondent in New Delhi, Arthur Bonner much depends on what happens to the Dalai Lama. If the Communists get control of him, they may be able to put out statements in his name, that might dishearten Tibetan resistance. But even a silent guerrilla war against the communists in Tibet, and fruitless Chinese efforts to crush it will damage Peiping's prestige in India and the rest of Asia.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news...First George Bryan with the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: A voyage by submarine under the North Pole was long the dream of Sir Hubert Wilkens, the Arctic explorer...when as the nuclear submarine Skate surfaced at the North pole, the skipper of the Skate radioed a message saying: "On March 17 fifty years afterPerry, Skate was at North Pole...Shortly after surfacing, we held solemn memorial ceremony scattering ashes of Sir Hubert Wilkens according to his wishes."

This is Larry LeSueur reporting...goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Mon., March 30, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Secretary of Defense McElroy said in a speech in Detroit that the United States has the power to destroy the Soviet Union, if it should attack us. AND, he said, the United States will CONTINUE to have that power in the years ahead. McElroy said that taking ALLIED forces into account, the free world also will be able to cope with so-called "brush-fire" or limited wars. A similar assessment of our ability to deter attack was given in testimony by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, released today by Congress. //

The State Department confirms that an agreement has been signed, whereby Italy will receive American intermediate range missiles. The atomic warheads for these missiles.(.which, from their Italian bases, are capable of striking Russian targets.).will remain in American custody and under American control. A similar agreement with Britain was concluded last year.

→

Britain announced today that its last Royal Air Force garrison is being pulled out of Iraq--the move prompted by Iraq's withdrawal last week from the anti-Communist Baghdad Pact.

Prime Minister Nehru told the Indian parliament today that he cannot take sides in the Tibetan revolt. But, he said, "our sympathies are with the Tibetans." And as for the Chinese Communist statement that a INDIAN parliamentary discussion of Tibet would be "impolite", Nehru said India would not submit to dictation from any country.

In Washington today, the Supreme Court ruled that a state may try a defendant for the same offense of which he already has been acquitted in a federal trial. The decision was split, 5 to 4. The case, having to do with a convicted bank robber, involves the constitutional guarantee against "double jeopardy."

Russia sent out notes today, formally accepting the Western proposal for a foreign ministers conference in Geneva, starting May eleventh. Less than two weeks ago, Premier Khrushchev told a news conference that he "would" do this, so the notes are of a rather "routine" nature and very brief. Russia agrees that the foreign ministers should consider questions concerning Germany, "including a peace treaty and the future status of Berlin." It ALSO leaves the door open for a discussion of broader issues, such as disarmament. The Soviet notes DO express regret that "complete" mutual understanding has not been reached as to the participation of Poland and Czechoslovakia. But this is a question, they say, which can be settled later, AFTER the talks get underway. The difference here is that Russia wants Communist Czechoslovakia and Poland to be FULL participants, while "we" take the position that they should take part in the negotiations only in those matters where they are directly concerned. It is agreed that both East and West Germany are entitled to send observers. And there is a general expectation that these talks at the foreign ministers level will lead to a meeting at the summit. ~~In Washington, the new Soviet note has received a "cautious welcome".~~ It came just as the foreign ministers of

→

~~the fifteen Atlantic Pact countries were beginning to arrive for the NATO Council meeting, starting in Washington on Thursday.~~ Tomorrow, in ~~advance of this meeting, Acting Secretary of State Herter~~ will confer with ~~the foreign ministers of West Germany,~~ Britain and France.

Secretary of State Dulles flew to Florida today for an indefinite period of rest. He will be staying at the home of Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon. on Hobe Sound, about 20 miles north of Palm Beach. Dillon remained in Washington and saw Dulles off.

Ed Murrow has been in England this past week. And tonight, in London, he shares a microphone with Charles Collingwood for what you might call "a comparing of notes". We switch now to London.

Tape runs 6:30
Ends on cue: "Thank you very much, Charles Collingwood."

That was an "informed" conversation between Charles Collingwood and Ed Murrow in London. Mr. Murrow will be in Paris tomorrow, and we hope tomorrow night to have a similar report from FRANCE. After that, Ed Murrow will travel to West Germany to take a somebody on the Berlin crisis, and we hope to hear from him on that.

This is Larry Lesueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. (pause) But first, a word from George Bryan about the weather.

It may be Spring--But ICE MAKES [redacted]n the News..

Senator Alexander Smith called upon the army engineers to redouble their efforts to de-ice, the Saint Lawrence Seaway, which opens soon. And in Russia, where you'ld think they saw enough ice...Hundreds of Moscovites waited in line all nite, in the cold, to buy tickets for the american "holiday on Ice " show..Its strictly a commerical production has nothing to do with the cultural exchange--and its a sell-out..

This is Larry LeSueur goodnite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Monday, March 30, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Ed Murrow has been in England this past week, and tonight in London he shares a microphone with Charles Collingwood for what you might call a "comparing of notes." We switch now to London.

MURROW: This is London. I'm going to spend the next few minutes checking a week's impressions with my old wartime colleague, Charles Collingwood, who is now our bureau chief here in London. Charles, I have the feeling, based on a week's experience, that no one, literally no one, in this country, believes that there is going to be a war over Berlin.

COLLINGWOOD: I think that's right, Ed. Theoretically, almost everyone you talk to would agree that there is a possibility of war over Berlin, that something might happen - the two sides might come together, but as a matter of conviction they don't think it's going to happen either logically or I suppose you could say ...? They don't feel it in the air; they don't act like it, and that is ... goes not only for the man-in-the-street, but it goes, I think, for the whole government and official Britain as well.

MURROW: There's no sense of tension as there was in 1938-1939

COLLINGWOOD: I don't feel it. And I think you coming from the outside would probably have felt it sooner than I would have done.

MURROW: I have another feeling, Charles, and that is that the British are determined to go a very long way to reach an accomodation with the Russians.

COLLINGWOOD: That depends on what you mean by a very long way. Certainly in Chancellor Adenauer's terms, possibly in General de Gaulle's terms, perhaps in President Eisenhower's terms, it is a long way that they're prepared to go. They feel that it would be possible to meet the Russian demands for an endorsement of the present status quo in Central Europe, that is a recognition of the fact and existence of East Germany without giving away so much of the West's vital interests in Europe that it would weaken our case or would indeed weaken our whole future position. So they are, I think, more willing to make concessions than any of the other allies. As to whether or not that constitutes going a very long way, well, I suppose that's what they're going to argue about in Washington.

MURROW: Well, they are willing, for example, to grant de facto recognition to the East German regime.

COLLINGWOOD: I would think so. That's my feeling of the impression that one gets from talking to diplomats here. However, I also think they would ask a certain amount in return, that is they would ask for some kind of European security arrangement, perhaps based on their now famous proposal for a freeze or a possible thinning out. They would ask for a Russian agreement that the Western presence in West Berlin would be continued and get rid of all this legalistic nonsense about whether or not the Potsdam agreements have been superseded by the passage of time and so forth.

MURROW: I also have the feeling that no one here is disposed, at least of this moment, to criticize Macmillan for appeasement.

COLLINGWOOD: Almost no one. As a matter of fact, some of the expressions of concern on that from Washington, Senator Butler's speech in the Senate and so forth, were greeted with amazement here and were not taken seriously. No, the British who after all had the most intimate, I suppose, experience of the appeasement before World War II, don't think that the present situation is at all comparable or that the proposals that Macmillan is putting forward constitute anything like appeasement.

MURROW: And of course being an historically-minded people they'll always want to hark back to historical precedent, but in this case they haven't at all.

COLLINGWOOD. No, you're absolutely right - and I haven't thought of it, but they have not, no.

MURROW: Is it true that there is a certain sense of pride here in Macmillan's accomplishments, that their boy is being the honest broker between the East and West?

COLLINGWOOD: Oh, I think so. Unquestionably. The British often as you know, regard themselves as having been pushed out a little bit from the main stream of Western events and Western leadership. And, first of all, Prime Minister's trip to Russia, his reconnaissance in Russia and then the trips to Paris and Bonn and, latterly, to New York, have made them feel that they really are doing something. I don't think that Macmillan feels that way, or that the Foreign Office or the Government feels that way. He regards this ... these missions that he's been undertaking as essential; someone had to do them; Dulles was sick; no one else of his stature was qualified - and in the words of the Economist, this week, I think he regards himself not as the leader of the West but as its good servant.

MURROW: The last time I was here, of course, Mr. Dulles was not ill, now he is, I notice that there is practically no criticism of him now. Is that merely a matter of good manners or have they perhaps discovered certain virtues in his policies that were not heretofore apparent?

COLLINGWOOD: Well, I think it's largely a matter of good manners and of sympathy. Dulles had a curious impact on the British. They had come to respect him because he'd been part of the scenery for so long - he came in and out - and they began to think of him almost as one of their own people because he was so familiar, and therefore they criticized him - as you may remember, with great liberality. They ... they'd ... had no difficulty in concealingtheir admiration for him. But they felt, I think, that Dulles was changing before he became ill, and saw things, perhaps, more in their own way.

MURROW: Does any of the maneuvering, in which Mr. Macmillan is now engaged, have to do with domestic politics?

COLLINGWOOD: It certainly has an effect upon domestic politics. His own popularity is grwater than it has ever been before. He is - while not immune from criticism - on at least the subject of his travels and the points of view that he's been pressing in the Western councils, even the opposition party stands behind him. This, undoubtedly, has an effect on ... on politics. How much he intends it to have, I don't know. But being a politician, I'm quite sure that he'd be prepared to take advantage of any ... of any dividends that came his way.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Charles Collingwood.

LESUEUR: That was an informed conversation between Charles Collingwood and Ed Murrow in London.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MARCH 30, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

Secretary of Defense McElroy said in a speech in Detroit that the United States has the power to destroy the Soviet Union, if it should attack us. And, he said, the United States will continue to have that power in the years ahead. McElroy said that taking allied forces into account, the free world will be able to cope with so-called "brush-fire" or limited wars. A similar assessment of our ability to deter attack was given in testimony by the Joint Chiefs of Staff, released today by Congress.

The State Department confirms that an agreement has been signed, whereby Italy will receive American intermediate range missiles. The atomic warheads for these missiles...which, from their Italian bases, are capable of striking Russian targets...will remain in American custody and under American control. A similar agreement with Britain was concluded last year.

Britain announced today that its last Royal Air Force garrison is being pulled out of Iraq---the move prompted by Iraq's withdrawal last week from the anti-Communist Baghdad Pact.

Prime Minister Nehru told the Indian parliament today that he cannot take sides in the Tibetan revolt. But, he said, "Our sympathies are with the Tibetans." And as for the Chinese Communist statement that an Indian parliamentary discussion of Tibet would be "impolite" Nehru said India would not submit to dictation from any country.

In Washington today, the Supreme Court ruled that a state may try a defendant for the same offense of which he already has been acquitted in a federal trial. The decision was split, 5 to 4. The case, having to do wtth a convicted bank robber, involves the constitutional guarantee against double jeopardy.

Russia sent out notes today, formally accepting the Western proposal for a foreign ministers conference in Geneva, starting May eleventh. Less than two weeks ago, Premier Khrushchev told a news conference that he would do this, so the notes are of a rather routine nature and very brief. Russia agrees that the foreign ministers should consider questions concerning Germany, "including a peace treaty and the future status of Berlin." It also leaves the door open for a discussion of broader issues, such as disarmament. The Soviet notes do express regret that complete mutual understanding has not been reached as to the participation of Poland and Czechoslovakia. But this is a question, they say, which can be settled later, after the talks get underway. The difference here is that Russia wants Communist Czechoslovakia and Poland to be full participants, while we take the position that they should take part in the negotiations only in those matters where they are directly concerned. It is agreed that both East and West Germany are entitled to send observers. And there is a general expectation that these talks at the foreign ministers level will lead to a meeting at the summit.

Secretary of State Dulles flew to Florida today for an indefinite period of rest. He will be staying at the home of Under Secretary of State Douglas Dillon... on Hobe Sound, about 20 miles north of Palm Beach. Dillon remained in Washington and saw Dulles off.

Ed Murrow has been in England this past week. And tonight in London, he shares a microphone with Charles Collingwood for what you might call "a comparing of notes." We switch now to London.

MURROW: This is London. I'm going to spend the next few minutes checking a week's impressions with my old wartime colleague, Charles Collingwood, who is now our bureau chief here in London. Charles, I have the feeling, based on a week's experience, that no one, literally no one, in this country, believes that there is going to be a war over Berlin.

COLLINGWOOD: I think that's right, Ed. Theoretically, almost everyone you talk to would agree that there is a possibility of war over Berlin, that something might happen - the two sides might come together, but as a matter of conviction they don't think it's going to happen either logically or I suppose you could say...? They don't feel it in the air; they don't act like it, and that is... goes not only for the man in the street, but it goes, I think, for the whole government and official Britain as well.

MURROW: There's no sense of tension as there was in 1938-1939.

COLLINGWOOD: I don't feel it. And I think you coming from the outside would probably have felt it sooner than I would have done.

MURROW: I have another feeling, Charles, and that is that the British are determinined to go a very long way to reach an accommodation with the Russians.

COLLINGWOOD: That depends on what you mean by a very long way. Certainly in Chancellor Adenauer's terms, possibly in General DeGaulle's terms, perhaps in President Eisenhower's terms, it is a long way that they're prepared to go. They feel that it would be possible to meet the Russian demands for an endorsement of the present status quo in Central Europe, that is a recognition of the fact and existence of East Germany without giving away so much of the West's vital interests in Europe that it would weaken our case or would indeed weaken our whole future position. So they are, I think, more willing to make concessions than any of the other allies. As to whether or not that constitutes going a very long way, well, I suppose that's what they're going toargue about in Washington.

MURROW: Well, they are willing, for example, to grant de facto recognition to the East German regime.

COLLINGWOOD: I would think so. That's my feeling of the impression that one gets from talking to diplomats here. However, I also think they would ask a certain amount in return, that is they would ask for some kind of European security arrangement, perhaps based on their now famous proposal for a freeze or a possible thinning out. They would ask for a Russian agreement that the Western presence in West Berlin would be continued and get rid of all this legalistic nonsense about whether or not the Potsdam agreements have been superseded by the passage of time and so forth.

MURROW: I also have the feeling that no one here is disposed, at least of this moment, to criticize Macmillan for appeasement.

COLLINGWOOD: Almost no one. As a matter of fact, some of the expressions of concern on that from Washington, Senator Butler's speech in the Senate and so forth, were greeted with amazement here and were not taken seriously. No, the British who after all had the most intimate, I suppose, experience of the appeasement before World War II, don't think that the present situation is at all comparable or that the proposals that Macmillan is putting forward constitute anything like appeasement.

MURROW: And of course being an historically-minded people they'll always want to hark back to historical precedent, but in this case they haven't at all.

COLLINGWOOD: No, you're absolutely right - and I haven't thought of it, but they have not, no.

MURROW: Is it true that there is a certain sense of pride here in Macmillan's accomplishments, that they boy is being the honest broker between the East and West?

COLLINGWOOD: Oh, I think so. Unquestionably. The British often as you know, regard themselves as having been pushed a little bitfrom the main stream of Western events and Western leadership. And, first of all, Prime Minister's trip to Russia, his reconnaissance in Russia and then the trips to Paris and Bonn and, latterly to New York, have made them feel that they really are doing something. I don't think that Macmillan feels that way, or that the Foreign Office or the Government feels that way, He regards this...these missions that he's been undertaking as essential; someone had to do them; Dulles was sick; no one else of his stature was qualified - and in the words of the Economist, this week, I think he regards himself not as the leader of the West but as its good servant.

MURROW: The last iime I was here, of course, Mr. Dulles was not ill, now he is. I notice that there is practically no criticism of him now. Is that merely a matter of good manners or have they perhaps discovered certain virtues in his policies that were not heretofore apparent?

COLLINGWOOD: Well, I think it's largely a matter of good manners and of sympathy. Dulles had a curious impact on the British. They had come to respect him because he'd been part of the scenery for so long - he came in and out - and they began to think of him almost as one of their own people because he was so familiar, and therefore they criticized him - as you may remember, with great liberality. They had no difficulty in concealing their admiration for him. But they felt, I think, that Dulles was changing before he became ill, and saw things, perhaps more in their own way.

MURROW: Does any of the maneuvering, in which Mr. Macmillan is now engaged, have to do with domestic politics?

COLLINGWOOD: It certainly has an effect upon domestic politics. His own popularity is greater than it has ever been before. He is - while not immune from criticism - on at least the subject of his travels and the points of view that he's been pressing in the Western councils, even the opposition party stands behind him. This, undoubtedly, has an effect on politics. How much he intends it to have, I don't know. But being a politician, I'm quite sure that he'd be prepared to take advantage of any dividends that come his way.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Charles Collingwood.

LESUEUR: That was an informed conversation between Charles Collingwood and Ed Murrow in London. Mr. Murrow will be in Paris tomorrow, and we hope tomorrow night to have a similar report from France. After that, Ed Murrow will travel to West Germany to take a sounding on the Berlin Crisis, and we hope to hear from him on that.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, a word from George Bryan about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

LESUEUR: It may be Spring---but ice makes the news. Senator Alexander Smith called upon the army engineers to redouble their efforts to de-ice, the Saint Lawrence Seaway, which opens soon. And in Russia, where you'd think they saw enough ice, hundreds of Moscovites waited in line all nite, in the cold, to buy tickets for the American "Holiday on Ice" show...It's strictly a commercial production, has nothing to do with the cultural exchange---and it's a sell-out.

This is Larry LeSueur---Goodnite.

LeSueur for Murrow Tues., March 31, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The foreign ministers of the big [redacted] Western powers met in Washington to work-out a common approach to the German problem. Acting Secretary of State Herter saw President Eisenhower for about an hour this morning, then...this afternoon...conferred with the foreign ministers of Great Britain and France. Two hours later, they were joined by Foreign Minister von Brentano of West Germany. [redacted]

A communique has just been issued, and for that story we switch at once to Washington, Bill Downs reporting.

~~then, on Thursday, present their plans to the full NATO Council which also will be meeting in Washington... partly in observance of the 10th anniversary of the founding of the NATO alliance. CBS News Correspondent Charles Collingwood, reporting from London, says that British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd will insist in the Washington talks that the ideas put forward by Prime Minister Macmillan have nothing to do with SO-CALLED disengagement. The British are now insisting that inspection and control, rather than "a thinning-out" of forces in Central Europe, is the real heart of the Macmillan proposal.~~

As the discussions in Washington got underway, a new incident was reported in the Allied air corridor to Berlin. The State Department revealed that last Friday three Soviet jets "buzzed" an American transport plane on the Berlin run. The Russians complained that the American aircraft, a C-130 Hercules, was flying at an altitude GREATER than 10-thousand feet. The State Department replies that the United States NEVER has accepted any "ceiling" below which planes (using the air corridor) must operate. A turbo-prop like the C-130 NORMALLY operates at an altitude higher than 10-thousand feet for maximum efficiency, and the United States, in turn, has protested that the Soviet planes jeopardized the safety of the American aircraft.

→

Russia sent West Germany a note today, complaining that Adenauer was trying to prejudice the [redacted] forthcoming talks on Germany by making what it called "unfounded reproaches". Russia charged that the West German note, delivered in Moscow a week ago, "misrepresented" Soviet policy. What the note had said was that it was not West Germany's fault the German problem had not been solved but rather the fault of the men in the Kremlin.

The annual report of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization was released today. The report cites the progress made in non-military projects, such as the graduate school of engineering sponsored by SEATO in Thailand, and other programs designed to increase the supply of skilled labor in Pakistan and the Philippines. But it also says that members of the treaty organization must concentrate on building highly trained, mobile defense forces.

The State Department said today that Assistant Secretary Walter S. Robertson will not be able to attend next month's SEATO conference because of "compelling personal reasons." It is reported WITHOUT confirmation that Mr. Robertson PLANS to resign soon because of poor health.

Authoritative sources told CBS News in Washington today that Deputy DEFENSE SECRETARY Donald Quarles will be President Eisenhower's choice to succeed DEFENSE Secretary McElroy later this year. Mr. McElroy has indicated his desire to return to private industry.../...although in a case of national emergency he undoubtedly would stay on.

C

Today, President Eisenhower signed into law a bill extending the EMERGENCY unemployment compensation program for three months. The program, put through last year, at the "depth" of the recession, was DUE to expire tomorrow. The extension means that emergency benefits will go to about 400-thousand persons who FIND THEMSELVES unemployed between now and next July. //

30

President George Meany of the AFL-CIO has asked AND the Commerce Department HAS AGREED to release its employment figures for March a few days early. This is because the AFL-CIO conference on "unemployment" starts on April 8th, and the department's monthly report usually comes-out around the 10th. Meany (30) points-out that for SEASONAL reasons, unemployment drops by at least 250-thousand in March. If the drop is no larger than THAT, he says, it will mean "no change at all" in the OVER-ALL unemployment situation.

The Agriculture Department reported today that the average prices received by FARMERS for their products in the past month went up four-tenths of one percent. (13) The COSTS of farm production also increased, although not quite to the same extent.

The Atlantic is still being lashed tonight by one of the worst spring storms sailors can remember. Winds with a velocity up to ONE HUNDRED ~~100~~ miles an hour have been reported, stirring up mountainous waves.

30 The Constitution arrived in New York this morning, 19 hours behind schedule. No one on the Constitution was injured. But the German liner "Berlin" lost four members of her crew when they were swept overboard by high seas.

The world's "largest" passenger ship, the Queen Elizabeth, is due in New York tonight, 12 hours late.

30

Tonight, Ed Murrow is in France. comparing notes with another correspondent for CBS News. We switch now to the French capital for their report.

(Tape runs 4:40
Ends on cue: "--to Larry LeSueur in N.Y."

Tomorrow, Ed Murrow goes on to Germany.

This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE Bryan

Ralph McGill, anti-SEGREGATIONIST editor of the Atlanta Constitution, was TODAY barred from speaking in a Columbus, Georgia courtroom. His proposed speech had been requested by the league of women voters... the county commissioner DESCRIBED McGill's speech as, "an effort ON the part of the Atlanta newspapers to ram their opinions down the throats of the people of THIS county.. (McGill has said that the supreme court school integration decision is the law of the Land.)

This is Larry LeSueur..Goodnite..

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Tuesday, March 31, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... The Foreign Ministers of the big Western powers met in Washington, to work out a common approach to the German issue. Acting Secretary of State Herter saw President Eisenhower for about an hour this morning, then this afternoon conferred with the Foreign Ministers of Great Britain and France. Two hours later, they were joined by Foreign Minister von Brentano of West Germany. A communique has just been issued, and for that story we swtich at once to Washington - Bill Downs reporting.

DOWNS: The four power communique, issued an hour ago here at the State Department, says that the Foreign Ministers of America, Britain, France and West Germany, had a comprehensive and cordial exchange of views on the problem of negotiating with Russia over the Berlin crisis and divided Germany. However, the betting here tonight is that the West has just taken a step toward a summit conference this summer. Acting Secretary of State Herter met first with Foreign Minister Selwyn Lloyd of Britain and Couve de Murville of France, this afternoon. As the Western occupying powers in Berlin, the Western Big Three noted with satisfaction the Russian acceptance of an East-West Foreign Ministers conference in Geneva on the 11th of May. However, again tonight's communique stresses that there will be no summit conference unless the Foreign Ministers make progress. After an hour-and-a-half the Big Three called in West German Foreign Minister von Brentano, where again the problem of Berlin and Germany were reviewed. The purpose is to get as common a position as possible between these four governments - and a State Department spokesman admits that there are differences of opinion between the four on just how to stand firm in Berlin and yet negotiate with the Russians to ease cold war tensions. The indication tonight is that the four powers have made a good beginning. The talks continue tomorrow.

Now back to Larry Lesueur.

LESUEUR: As the discussions in Washington get underway, a new incident was reported in the Allied air corridor to Berlin.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - LARRY LESUEUR

Tuesday, March 31, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

LESUEUR: ... Tonight Ed Murrow is in France, comparing notes with another correspondent for CBS News. We switch now to the French capital for their report.

MURROW: This is Paris, where I'm checking some impressions with my colleague, Lou Cioffi. Lou, is there any real or widespread fear here in France of war over Berlin?

CIOFFI: Well, Ed, I don't think I'd call it fear as such. There undoubtedly is concern here in France - but the Government is convinced that the only way to avoid war is to remain firm on the Berlin issue. General de Gaulle feels that if we make any concessions to the Russians on this issue, then the chances of war are, in fact, much greater. No French official is willing to make the comparison publicly, but privately there are references here to Neville Chamberlain and Munich. De Gaulle is also dead set against any disengagement in Central Europe. He says that disengagement would create a vacuum which, in effect, would leave France unprotected, and in turn would open the way for Russian conquest of all of Europe and eventually the world. If there's any fear in France, I think it's fear of moving the cold war border to the French border.

MURROW: Well, Lou, I had the feeling in London that the British are committed to the de facto recognition of East Germany, what's the French attitude?

CIOFFI: Well, on this point at least it appears as if the French are in complete agreement with the British. At his news conference last week, General de Gaulle said that the ideal, of course, would be German reunification, with the new German nation taking its place in what de Gaulle said would be a "contractual organization of all Europe." But in the meantime, de Gaulle suggests that the two Germanies can begin now to increase their ties and their relation. He talked about a common transportation system, common post office, economic activity, arts, letters, sciences and the free movement of peoples across borders. The General referred to what he called the "German thing," which he said was after all common to all Germans despite the present differences in regimes and conditions. What all of this adds up to is, de facto recognition of East Germany by the West.

MURROW: Let's talk about Algeria for a moment, I know you've spent a great deal of time down there. What, if anything, has de Gaulle accomplished in Algeria?

CIOFFI: Well, probably the most important thing is this: Control is now firmly in the hands of General de Gaulle. His delegate general there, Paul Delouvrier, warned the European population of this in a very clear and unmistakable language. It was a flat statement which said "Everyone must realize that it is Paris that governs in Algeria." This, by the way, goes to the very heart of the Algerian problem. In times past, as you know, Algeria had been run under what amounted to a kind of a pro-consul system; a resident minister who was supposed to take orders from Paris, but who, in effect, ran the show alone under the influence of the various European extremist groups; the same people who wanted to keep the Moslem a low paid, second-class citizen. Well, the Moslem population does not trust the extremists. But he does have confidence in General de Gaulle - and if the General wants to bring about a solution to the Algerian problem, he must keep that confidence alive. Letting the colons retain control would defeat the General before he begins. And so he's warning the Europeans not to cause trouble; and he's assuring the Moslems that any promises made to them will be kept, because it's General de Gaulle who's made them, not the discredited colons.

MURROW: Lou, there seems to be a general agreement that the withdrawal of the French Fleet from NATO was primarily political. But exactly what was it designed to achieve?

CIOFFI: Well, first of all there's the obvious French dissatisfaction, even downright anger, at the failure of the United States to side with France in the United Nations debate over Algeria. We abstained, as you remember.

MURROW: Yes.

CIOFFI: Algeria is an emotional issue with the French. It brought about a revolution that almost became outright civil war. And it must not be forgotten that French soldiers are being killed there every day. So there was an element of vengeance in de Gaulle's action. And there's no question it was de Gaulle's personal action, by the way. He was advised against making the move by all of his advisers, including the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister. A second element, I think, can be described as simple, well, blackmail. De Gaulle is extremely nationalistic. He's trying to create a newer and more powerful France, and a France that will take its rightful place in world affairs. Specifically, de Gaulle demanded last September the creation of a super-national triumvirate of the United States, Great Britain and France, to shape the West's worldwide policies, not just Europe, but worldwide. He's not happy with the result of these demands, the simple consultations in Washington, with Robert Murphy and the British and French ambassadors. De Gaulle obviously does not consider that this goes far enough. And so he's trying to prove that he can upset the apple cart any time he wants to if he does not get his way.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Lou Cioffi. This is Ed Murrow in Paris. Now back to Larry Lesueur in New York.

LESUEUR: ...

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MARCH 31, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The foreign ministers of the big western powers met in Washington to work out a common approach to the German problem. Acting Secretary of State Herter saw President Eisenhower for about an hour this morning, then....this afternoon...conferred with the foreign ministers of Great Britain and France. Two hours later, they were joined by Foreign Minister von Brentano of West Germany.

A communique has just been issued, and for that story we switch at once to Washington, Bill Downs reporting.

DOWNS: The four power communique, issued an hour ago here at the State Department, says that the Foreign Ministers of America, Britain, France and West Germany, had a comprehensive and cordial exchange of views on the problem of negotiating with Russia over the Berlin crisis and divided Germany. However, the betting here tonight is that the West has just taken a step twoard a summit conference this summer. Acting Secretary of State Herter met first with Foreign Minister Selwyn Lloyd of Britain and Cove de Murville of France, this afternoon. As the Western occupying powers in Berlin, the Western Big Three noted with satisfaction the Russians' acceptance of an East-West Foreign Ministers conference in Geneva on the 11th of May. However, again tonight's communique stresses that there will be no summit conference unless the Foreign Ministers make progress. After an hour-and-a-half the Big Three called in West German Foreign Minister von Brentano, where again the problem of Berlin and Germany were reviewed. The purpose is to get as common a position as possible between these four governments - and a State Department spokesman admits that there are differences of opinion between the four on just how to stand firm in Berlin and yet negotiate with the Russians to ease cold war tensions. The indication tonight is that the four powers have made a good beginning. The talks continue tomorrow. Now back to Larry LeSueur. 2

LESUEUR: As the discussions in Washington got underway, a new incident was reported in the Allied air corridor to Berlin. The State Department revealed that last Friday three Soviet jets "buzzed" an American transport plane on the Berlin run. The Russians complained that the American aircraft, a C-130 Hercules, was flying at an altitude greater than 10-thousand feet. The State Department replies that the United States never has accepted an "ceiling" below which planes using the air corridor must operate. A turbo-prop like the C-130 normally operates at an altitude higher than 10-thousand feet for maximum efficiency, and the United States, in turn, has protested that the Soviet planes jeopardized ths safety of the American aircraft.

Russia sent West Germany a note today...complaining that Adenauer was trying to prejudice the forthcoming talks on Germany by making whit it called "unfounded reproaches." Russia charged that the West German note, delivered in Moscow a week ago, "misrepresented" Soviet policy. What the note had said was that it was not West Germany's fault the German problem had not been solved but rather the fault of the men in the Kremlin.

The annual report of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization was released today. The report cites the progress made in non-military projects, such as the graduate school of engineering sponsored by SEATO in Thailand, and other programs designed to increase the supply of skilled labor in Pakistan and the Philippines. But it also says that members of the treaty organization must concentrate on building highly trained, mobile defense forces.

The State Department said today that Assistant Secretary Walter S. Robertson will not be able to attend next month's SEATO conference because of "compelling personal reasons." It is reported without confirmation that Mr. Robertson plans to resign soon because of poor health.

Authoritative sources told CBS News in Washington today that Deputy Defense Secretary Quarles will be President Eisenhower's choice to succeed Defense Secretary McElroy later this year. Mr. McElroy has indicated his desire to return to private industry...alhhough in a case of national emergency he undoubtedly would stay on.

Today, President Eisenhower signed into law a bill extending the emergency unemployment compensation program for three months. The program, put though last year at the depth of the recession, was due to expire tomorrow. The extension means that emergency benefits will go to about 400-thousand persons who find themselves unemployed between now and next July.

President George Meany of the AFL-CIO has asked and the Commerce Department has agreed to release its employment figures for March a few days early. This is because the AFL-CIO Conference on unemployment starts on April 8th, and the department's monthly report usually comes out around the 10th. Meany points out that for seasonal reasons, unemployment drops by at least 250-thousand in March. If the drop is no larger than that, he says, it will mean "no change at all" in the over-all unemployment situation.

The Agriculture Department reported today that the average prices received by farmers for their products in the past month went up four-tenths of one percent. The costs of farm production also increased, although not quite to the same extent.

The Atlantic is still being lashed tonight by one of the worst spring storms sailors can remember. Winds with a velocity up to one hundred miles an hour have been reported, stirring up mountainous waves. The Constitution arrived in New York this morning, 19 hours behind schedule. No one on the Constitution was injured. But the German liner Berlin lost four members of her crew when they were swept overboard by high seas. The world's largest passenger ship, the Queen Elizabeth is due to New York tonight, 12 hours late.

Tonight, Ed Murrow is in France...comparing notes with another correspondent for CBS News. We switch now to the French capital for their report.

MURROW: This is Paris, where I'm checking some impressions with my colleague, Lou Cioffi. Lou, is there any real or widespread fear here in France of war over Berlin?

CIOFFI: Well, Ed, I don't think I'd call it fear as such. There undoubtedly is concern here in France - but the Government is convinced that the only way to avoid war is to remain firm on the Berlin issue. General de Gaulle feels that if we make any concessions to the Russians on this issue, then the chances of war are, in fact, much greater. No french official is willing to make the comparison publicly, but privately there are references here to Neville Chamberlain and Munich. De Gaulle is also dead set against any disengagement in Central Europe. He says that disengagement would create a vacuum which, in effect, would leave France unprotected, and in turn would open the way for Russian conquest of all of Europe and eventually the world. If there's any fear in France, I think it's fear of moving the cold war border to the French border.

MURROW: Well, Lou I had the feeling in London that the British are committed to the de facto recognition of East Germany, what's the French attitude?

CIOFFI: Well, on this point at least it appears as if the French are in complete agreement with the British. At his news conference last week, General de Gaulle said that the ideal, of course, would be German reunification, with the new German nation taking its place in what de Gaulle said would be a "contractual organization of all Europe." But in the meantime, de Gaulle suggests that the two Germanies can begin now to increase their ties and their relation. He talked about a common transportation system, common post office, economic activity, arts, letters, sciences and the free movement of peoples across borders. The General referred to what he called the "German thing," which he said was after all common to all Germans despite the present differences in regimes and conditions. What all of this adds up to is, de facto recognition of East Germany by the West.

MURROW: Let's talk about Algeria for a moment, I know you've spent a great deal of time down there. What, if anything, has de Gaulle accomplished in Algeria?

CIOFFI: Well, probably the most important thing is this: Control is now firmly in the hands of General de Gaulle. His delegate general there, Paul Delouvrier, warned the European population of this in a very clear and unmistakable language. It was a flat statement which said, "Everyone must realize that it is Paris that governs in Algeria." This, by the way, goes to the very heart of the Algerian problem. In times past, as you know, Algeria had been run under what amounted to a kind of a pro-consul system; a resident minister who was supposed to take orders from Paris, but who, in effect, ran the show alone under the influence of the various European extremist groups; the same people who wanted to keep the Moslem a low paid, second-class citizen. Well, the Moslem population does not trust the extremists. But he does have confidence in General de Gaulle - and if the General wants to bring about a solution to the Algerian problem, he must keep that confidence alive. Letting the colons retain control would defeat the General before he begins. And so he's warning the Europeans not to cause trouble; and he's assuring the Moslems that any promises made to them will be kept, because it's General de Gaulle who's made them, not the discredited colons.

MURROW: Lou, there seems to be a general agreement that the withdrawal of the French Fleet from NATO was primarily political. But exactly what was it designed to achieve?

CIOFFI: Well, first of all there's the obvious French dissatisfaction, even downright anger, at the failure of the United States to side with France in the United Nations debate over Algeria. We abstained, as you remember.

MURROW: Yes.

CIOFFI: Algeria is an emotional issue with the French. It brought about a revolution that almost became outright civil war. And it must not be forgotten that French soldiers are being killed there every day. So there was an element of vengeance in de Gaulle's action. And there's no question it was de Gaulle's personal action, by the way. He was advised against making the move by all of his advisers, including the Prime Minister and the Foreign Minister. A second element, I think, can be described as simple, well, blackmail. De Gaulle is extremely nationalistic. He's trying to create a newer and more powerful France, and a France that will take its rightful place in world affairs. Specifically, de Gaulle demanded last September the creation of a super-national triumvirate of the United States, Great Britain and France, to shape the West's worldwide policies, not just Europe, but worldwide. He's not happy with the result of these demands, the simple consultations in Washington, with Robert Murphy and the British and French ambassadors. De Gaulle obviously does not consider that this goes far enough. And so he's trying to prove that he can upset the apple cart any time he wants to if he does not get his way.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Lou Cioffi. This is Ed Murrow in Paris. Now back to Larry Lesueur in New York.

LESUEUR: Tomorrow, Ed Murrow goes on to Germany. This is Larry LeSueur. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN:

LESUEUR: Ralph McGill, anti-Segregationist editor of the Atlanta Constitution, was today barred from speaking in a Columbus, Georgia courtroom...His proposed speech had been requested by the league of women voters...the county commissioner described McGill's speech as an effort on the part of the Atlanta newspapers to ram their opinions down the throats of the people of THIS country..(McGill has said that the Supreme Court school integration decision is the law of the Land.) This is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite...

LeSueur for Murrow ~~Wed.,~~ Apr. 1, 1959

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The foreign ministers of the big Western powers concluded two days of talks in Washington, in which they resolved "some" of their differences on how to approach the Berlin problem. A communique says that the Western proposals discussed in Washington will be turned over to a "team of experts", which will meet in London on April 13th. These experts will represent the United States, Britain, West Germany and France---the same countries whose foreign ministers have been conferring in Washington. And they will continue the process of working out a single, unified position with which to confront the Russians when they meet in May. In fact, the foreign ministers will meet again in Paris on April 29th---before the East-West conference---to take another [redacted] "hard" look at what the experts have prepared. [redacted] The communique...put out this afternoon...said that "the" current Washington talks had been "useful". "All these preparations," it said, "are based on a sincere desire to negotiate constructively with the Soviet Union in the interests of world peace." But, at the same time, the communique made it clear that the Western powers will "stand firm" in Berlin...will not retreat in the face of Soviet threats. The communique did this by saying that the Washington talks were based on the declaration of the four powers last winter that they would not accept the Soviet proposal for ending the occupation status of Berlin. Tomorrow, the four foreign ministers will give the NATO Council a formal report on their two-day meeting. The council will be in session in Washington for three days---that is, tomorrow through Saturday--and President Eisenhower will go before the NATO Council tomorrow morning and make a major foreign policy address.

→

Relations between the United States and Russia soured a little more today. Moscow announced that for "temporary reasons" (which it did not specify) Western diplomats are forbidden to travel in almost any part of the Soviet Union. ONE guess is that the Red Army may be conducting widespread spring maneuvers--although there may well be another reason, which I should like to go into in a few minutes. WHATEVER the reason, the United States has retaliated by clamping DOWN A SIMILAR ban on travel by Soviet diplomats in THIS country. Reports from London say that Great Britain will NOT retaliate.

Russia warned the United States today that there may be what it CALLS "complications", if American planes fly above 10-thousand feet in the air corridors leading to Berlin. A Russian embassy spokesman in East Berlin said, "If the Americans want to use the higher altitudes regularly, they had better negotiate." And then he added, "If they pay no heed to our warnings, there MAY be complications." Yesterday, the State Department revealed that three Soviet jets had "buzzed" an American transport plane on the Berlin run. Since the transport was powered by turbo-prop engines, it was flying (as is customary with planes of that type) at an altitude higher than 10-thousand feet. The United States has protested the incident, saying that we have never accepted any "ceiling" below which our planes must operate. The British Foreign Office said the same thing today. And the U.S. Air Force says that it will continue its high-altitude flights to Berlin whenever that is a "military requirement".

In Israel, all Army leaves have been cancelled. And all reservists have been ordered to report to their units within 24 hours.

CBS News Correspondent Mike Elkins cables us from Jerusalem that this mobilization by Israel in peacetime is unprecedented. Elkins quotes an official Israeli Army spokesman as saying that the calling-up of troops is "only an exercise." It may be an exercise, Elkins says, to remind some people (possibly Iraq) that no country in the world can mobilize its forces as quickly as Israel. Also, perhaps, to dramatize Israel's concern over the dangerous Middle East situation.

→

Two hours after the Israeli forces were called up, the Damascus radio announced the cancellation of all military leaves in SYRIA. And all Syria reservists ALSO have been called to the colours.

~~[illegible]~~ The White House confirmed today that Assistant Secretary of State Walter S. Robertson has resigned, effective July first. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "deep regret"...and chose ~~[illegible]~~ Mr. Robertson's chief assistant, G. Graham Parsons, as his successor. Mr. Robertson resigned because of poor health.

Meade Alcorn resigned today as chairman of the Republican National Committee, after serving in that capacity for two years and two months. Mr. Alcorn explained at a news conference that he had served "without salary"...and that this had resulted, not only in financial sacrifice for himself, but in "a growing burden" for the partners in his law firm in Hartford, Connecticut. Alcorn said that he and President Eisenhower already had discussed "numerous possibilities" for a successor. As the next step, Alcorn will appoint a seven-man committee to draw up a list of persons who might serve.

→

But the russians seem anxious to dispell this tranquilized western state of mind.. The CBS correspondent in London, Charles Collingwood reported some of the wishful thinking in London today.. Says the first reaction of British officials to the buzzing of an american plane on the Berlin run, was that the Russians did not plan it.. Collingwood reports British officials as BELIEVING that Moscow may even be embarrased that the incident ocurred... We're told that London's russian experts believe the loeal soviet military authorities had standing instructions what to do if allied aircraft used the Berlin corridor, at an altitude higher than has been the custom.. At any rate, Collingwood says that British officials think the timing of this harassment, was merely incidental.. Because they are convinced that Russians really mean to be conciliatory..

Its apparent that the British foreign office spokesmen have forgotten or are too young to remember Hitler's "war of nerves." But perhaps todays Soviet action of sealing-off virtually all of Russia from the eyes of Western diplomats, may jog London's memory --- And serve as a reminder that the Russians still REMEMBER how to practice pyschological warfare...

The United States has immediately retaliated by posting similar travel bans on soviet diplomats in this country...This american action could hardly come under the category of good pyschological timing, since if we are so eager to reassure the russians that we're not going to ATTACK them, we might just as well let them travel around this country to show them that we have no military plans afoot..

The British have been wiser about this...They have DONE nothing so far to retaliate against their Russian diplomats...But that doesn't mean that they can't restrict the Soviet diplomats later on, if the Berlin situation gets warmer and the timing appears right---not just as an angry reaction to a soviet psychological stroke..

This is not to say that there may not be some substance behind today's Soviet move...They may well be starting spring military maneuvers, although the snow has hardly begun to melt in Russia, but the big point is that they've succeeded in keeping us guessing.. This doesn't of course prevent us from getting some intelligence out of the Soviet Union...Since we obviously don(t rely entirely on diplomats and military attaches to spy out what the Russians are doing..

It would seem that the real russian motive in these needling moves in the war of nerves, is to impress the people of the NATO countries, and, of course, their representatives at tomorrow's NATO council meeting in Washington, with the idea that the Russians [redacted] may be tough, plenty tough, over Berlin..

To the people of West Europe, the possibility of Soviet army troops, springing a Stalingrad-like SURROUNDING OF on the little NATO army in Berlin, appears far more real, than our concept of massive retaliation... whereby Washington would risk the destruction of the United States, [redacted] to stand firm over a point already one hundred and ten miles inside communist territory.. Europe [redacted] has already had some experience with armies marching on the ground. AND one thing appears almost certain, that Soviet Russia will give Europe and the World more reminders of ITS [redacted] armed strength in the Berlin Sector Before a SUMMIT Conference is convened.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news... CUE- First a word from George Bryan on the westher..

Readers of some European newspapers forgot the Berlin crisis today, and and gaped at headlines reading: Southern U.S. Senators threaten to secede unless Hawaii's star in the American flag is segregated..A manned rocket is now on its way to Venus.. Monkeys can now talk through the invention of an electronic devide.. And Air for auto tires will be taxed in Norway.. All were jokes, of course..This being april fools Day..

This is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite..

This group will consult Mr. Eisenhower and make its recommendations to the Republican National Committee, which will make the final choice when it meets for two days, starting April 10th. The person most likely to get the job appears, at the moment, to be the freshman senator from Kentucky, Thruston B. Morton. Senator Morton calls the work of a G.O.P. chairman "no picnic". "But," he says, "if I felt the various segments of the party wanted me, I would accept." Another strong possibility is Charles Percy, the Chicago businessman named recently to head the special committee that is drafting a long-range program of objectives for the Republican Party. //

Both the MacMillan-Eisenhower meeting at Camp David, and the current Foreign Minister's meeting in Washington, have been declared "highly successful", by their western participants...In fact, from the optimism generated by these talks, there appears a genuine conviction, that the Russians will "BACK Down" over Berlin, if the Western powers merely keep repeating the phrase, that they will "stand firm" and possibly give the russians some assurance that we are not planning to attack them now or in the future..

[redacted] Its true that western intelligence reports have indicated that the Soviet Union is NOT preparing for a global war now or in the NEAR future...But at the same time, there is absolutely no assurance that the Russians will not make good their threat to come to the aid of the East Germans, should we forcibly resist East German control of Berlin's (land, sea and air) communications... President Eisenhower is already on record as saying that this country could not fight a ground war in West Berlin, where the ten thousand NATO troops are not only vastly out-numbered, but surrounded as well..

The apparent western theory IS that the Berlin crisis will disappear, if we just keep muttering TRANQUILLIZING the phrase " we will stand firm," without giving it "any" specific content..I [redacted] ins to [redacted]..

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING

Good evening, everyone...Here's what happened today:

The foreign ministers of the big Western powers concluded two days of talks in Washington, in which they resolved "some" of their differences on how to approach the Berlin problem. A communique says that the Western proposals discussed in Washington will be turned over to a team of experts, which will meet in London on April 13th. These experts will represent the United States, Britain,, West Germany and France---the same countries whose foreign ministers have been conferring in Washington. And they will continue the process of working out a single, unified position with which to confront the Russians when they meet in May. In fact, the foreign ministers will meet again in Paris on April 29th---before the East-West conference----to take another hard look at what the experts have prepared. The communique...put out this afternoon...said that the current Washington talks had been "useful." "All these preparations," it said, "are based on a sincere desire to negotiate constructively with the Soviet Union in the interests of world peace." But, at the same time, the communique made it clear that the Western powers will stand firm in Berlin...will not retreat in the face of Soviet threats. The communique did this by saying that the Washington talks were based on the declaration of the four powers last winter that they would not accept the Soviet proposal for ending the occupation status of Berlin. Tomorrow, the four foreign ministers will give the NATO Council a formal report on their two-day meeting. The council will be in session in Washington for three days---that is, tomorrow through Saturday---and President Eisenhower will go before the NATO Council tomorrow morning and make a major foreign policy address.

Relations between the United States and Russia soured a little more today. Moscow announced that for "temporary reasons" (which it did not specify) Western diplomats are forbidden to travel in almost any part of the Soviet Union. One guess is that the Red Army may be conducting widespread spring maneuvers--- although there may well be another reason, which I should like to go into in a few minutes. Whatever the reason, the United States has retaliated by clamping down a similar ban on travel by Soviet diplomats in this country. Reports from London say that Great Britain will not retaliate.

Russia warned the United States today that there may be what it calls "complications," if American planes fly above 10-thousand feet in the air corridors leading to Berlin. A Russian embassy spokesman in East Berlin said, "If the American want to use the higher altitudes regularly, they had better negotiate." And then he added, "if they pay no heed to our warnings, there may be complications." Yesterday, the State Department revealed that three Soviet jets had "buzzed" an American transport plane on the Berlin run. Since the transport was powered by turbo-prop engines, it was flying (as is customary with planes of that type) at an altitude higher than 10-thousand feet. The United States has protested the incident, saying that we have never accepted any "ceiling" below which our planes must operate. The British Foreign Office said the same thing today. And the U.S. Air Force says that it will continue its high-altitude flights to Berlin whenever that is a "military requirement."

In Israel, all Army leaves heve been cancelled. And all reservists have been ordered to report to their units within 24 hours. CBS News Correspondent Mike Elkins cables us from Jerusalem that this mobilization by Israel in peacetime is unprecedented. Elkins quotes an official Israeli Army spokesman as saying that the calling up of troops is "only an exercise." It may be an exercise, Elkins says, to remind some people (possibly Iraq) that no country in the world can mobilize its forces as quickly as Israel. Also, perhaps, to dramatize Israel's concern over the dangerous Middle East situation.

Two hours after the Israeli forces were called up, the Damascus radio announced the cancellation of all military leaves in Syria. And all Syria reservists also have been called to the colours.

The White House confirmed today that Assistant Secretary of State Walter S. Robertson has resigned, effective July first. President Eisenhower accepted the resignation with "deep regret"...and chose Mr. Robertson's chief assistant, G. Graham Parsons, as his successor. Mr. Robertson resigned because of poor health.

Meade Alcorn resigned today as chairman of the Republican National Committee, after serving in that capacity for two years and two months. Mr. Alcorn explained at a news conference that he had served without salary... and that this had resulted, not only in financial sacrifice for himself, but in "a growing burden" for the partners in his law firm in Hartford,Connecticut. Alcorn said that he and President Eisenhower already had discussed numerous possibilities for a successor. As the next step, Alconn will appoint a seven-man committee to draw up a list of persons who might serve. This group will consult Mr. Eisenhower and make its recommendations to the Republican National Committee, which will make the final choice when it meets for two days, starting April 10th. The person most likely to get the job appears, at the moment, to be the freshman senator from Kentucky, Thruston B. Morton. Senator Morton calls the work of a G.O.P, chairman "no picnic." "But," he says, "if I felt the various segments of the party wanted me, I would accept." Another strong possibility is Charles Percy, the Chicago businessman named recently to head the special committee that is drafting a long-range program of objectives for the Republican Party.

Both the Macmillan-Eisenhower meeting at Camp David, and the current Foreign Ministers' meeting in Washington, have been declared "highly successful" by their western participants. In fact, from the optimism generated by these talks, there appears a genuine conviction, that the Russians will back down over Berlin, if the Western powers merely keep repeating the phrase that they will "stand firm" and possibly give the Russians some assurance that we are not planning to attack them now or in the future.

It's true that western intelligence reports have indicated that the Soviet Union is not preparing for a global war now or in the near future. But at the same time, there is absolutely no assurance that the Russians will not make good their threat to come to the aid of the East Germans, should we forcibly resist East German control of Berlin's land, sea, and air communications....President Eisenhower is already on record as saying that this country could not fight a ground war in West Berlin, where the ten thousand NATO troops are not only vastly out-numbered, but surrounded as well.

The apparent western theory is that the Berlin crisis will disappear, if we just keep muttering the tranquillizing phrase, "we will stand firm," without giving it any specific content.

But the Russians seem anxious to dispell this tranquilized western state of mind. The CBS correspondent in London, Charles Collingwood reported some of the wishful thinking in London today...says the first reaction of British officials to the buzzing of an American plane on the Berlin run, was that the Russians did not plan it. Collingwood reports British officials as believing that Moscow may even be embarrassed that the incident occurred. We're told that London's Russian experts believe the local Soviet military authorities had standing instructions what to do if allied aircraft used the Berlin corridor, at an altitude higher than has been the custom. At any rate, Collingoood says that British officials think the timing of this harassment, was merely incidental... Because they are convinced that Russians really mean to be conciliatory.

It's apparent that the British foreign office spokesmen have forgotten or are too young to remember Hitler's "war of nerves." But perhaps today's Soviet action of sealing-off vritually all of Russia from the eyes of Western diplomats, may jog London's memory---and serve as a reminder that the Russians still remember how to practice psychological warfare.

The United States has immediately retaliated by posting similar travel bans on Soviet diplomats in this country...This American action could hardly come under the category of good psychological timing, since if we are so eager to reassure the Russians that we're not going to attack them, we might just as well let them travel around this country to show them that we have no military plans afoot.

The British have been wiser about this. They have done nothing so far to retaliate against their Russian diplomats. But that doesn't mean that they can't restrict the Soviet diplomats later on, if the Berlin situation gets warmer and the timing appears right---not just as an angry reaction to a Soviet psychological stroke.

This is not to say that there may not be some substance behind today's Soviet move. They may well be starting spring military maneuvers, although the snow has hardly begun to melt in Russia, but the big point is that they've succeeded in keeping us guessing...This doesn't of course prevent us from getting some intelligence out of the Soviet Union, since we obviously don't rely entirely on diplomats and military attaches to spy out what the Russians are doing.

It would seem that the real Russian motive in these needling moves in the war of nerves, is to impress the people of the NATO countries, and, of course, their representatives at tomorrow's NATO council meeting in Washington, with the idea that the Russians may be tough, plenty tough, over Berlin.

To the people of West Europe, the possibility of Soviet army troops, springing a Stalingrad-like surrounding of the little NATO army in Berlin, appears far more real, than our concept of massive retaliation, whereby Washington would risk the destruction of the United States, to stand firm over a point already one hundred and ten miles inside communist territory. Europe has already had some experience with armies marching on the ground...and one thing appears almost certain, that Soviet Russia will give Europe and the world more reminders of its armed strength in the Berlin sector before a summit conference is convened.

This is Larry LeSueur---I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news...First a word from George Bryan on the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN:

LESUEUR: Readers of some European newspapers forgot the Berlin crisis today, and gaped at headlines reading: Southern U.S. Senators threaton to secede unless Hawaii's star in the American flag is segregated...A manned rocket is now on its way to Venus. Monkeys can now talk through the invention of an electronic device. And air for auto. tires will be taxed in Norway. All were jokes, of course... This being April Fools Day.

This is Larry LeSueur...Goodnite...

Good evening: Hottelet for Murrow Thurs., Apr. 2, 1959

President Eisenhower addressed the 10th anniversary meeting of the NATO Council in Washington today, and warned that the threat of international Communism is something we must cope with for a long time to come.

He declared solemnly that we must be prepared, during the years ahead, "to live in a world in which tension and bickering between free nations and the Soviets will be daily experiences." And in order to do this, he said, there must be unity -- "the unity which is the very lifeblood of NATO."

In an obvious reference to the forthcoming East-West talks on Germany, Mr. Eisenhower said that the West will always keep the door open for honest discussion, "even to those whose creed is world domination."

And referring to a possible summit meeting, he said, "No means are overlooked that give promise of constructive results." The President said that although in dealing with Russia we should avoid illusions, we will continue to strive for a more general and far-reaching, but always practical, settlement of our differences. Under the heading of "differences" he listed Germany, general European security and cooperation in the new realm of outer space. Mr. Eisenhower DECLARED that building the road to lasting peace and universal justice will require courage, sacrifice and perseverance. [redacted]

→

Mr. [redacted] NATO, Paul-Henri Spaak, [redacted] preceded President Eisenhower [redacted] Spaak's rostrum, [redacted] (HE SAID THE WEST HAD NOT [redacted]) [redacted] NATO, [redacted] It was imposed on us by the dangerous, unacceptable policy followed by the U.S.S.R. Spaak said that by their Berlin proposals the Russians were playing a game in which the "ultimate stake" is the very existence of the free political institutions of and life systems of Europe. He [redacted]

After hearing PRES. EISENHOWER'S [redacted] opening remarks, the permanent NATO Council went into closed session. There, the council delegates received a secret

ACCOUNT OF the two-day meeting held earlier this week by the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, West Germany and France — REPORTEDLY REAFFIRMING SOLIDARITY ON BERLIN. ~~report deals with the proposals which the western powers may--or may not--make when they meet the Russians at the foreign ministers level in May. The question of how to approach the Russians, especially on the Berlin issue, has by no means been resolved. A team of experts will meet in London on April 19th to review the proposals. And the American, British, French and West German foreign ministers will confer again in Paris, before the East-West meeting, to finish FORMULATING a single position. The Paris huddle will be on April 29th. The conference with the Russians will be almost two weeks later--on May 11th.~~

Moscow radio said today that Russia is not afraid of any threats which the NATO leaders may make. It also accused President Eisenhower of "trying to impute to the Socialist countries aspirations toward world domination." By "Socialist" Moscow radio means "Communist". And of course Mr. Eisenhower tried to "impute" nothing. He declared in plain English that world domination is the Communist aim.

#

~~Military experts of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization convened today in Wellington, New Zealand, for a three-day strategy meeting. The leader of the American delegation, Admiral Harry D. Felt, warned that the Communists are "waiting and ready" for us to become soft. There are some people, he said, who would have us believe that the Chinese Communists have abandoned their "hard" tactics in Asia. But, said Felt, the recent events in the Formosa Strait, and now in Tibet, show that this is not so.~~

The Chinese Communist radio claimed today that the religious and political leader of Tibet, the Dalai Lama, is now in India. The Chinese claim that the Dalai Lama was taken into India last Tuesday by Tibetan rebels who held him "under duress". According to earlier reports, the Dalai Lama, with the aid of Tibetan revolutionaries, was trying to escape capture by the Communists. There is no official confirmation tonight that the Dalai Lama has crossed the Tibetan border into India. However, diplomatic informants in New Delhi say that the Dalai Lama has successfully eluded the Communists and is now in India. These diplomatic sources say that the Indian government learned of the Dalai Lama's arrival yesterday or early today...and that the Indian and Chinese Communist governments have been in constant communication.

[redacted] TONIGHT [redacted], Mr. Nehru [redacted] called a hurried meeting of the central parliamentary board of his Congress Party.

[redacted]

The political committee of the Arab League met today in Beirut, [redacted] capital of Lebanon, to consider the worsening relations between the United Arab Republic and Iraq. But the Iraqi representative did not show up, and neither did the DELEGATES [redacted] of [redacted] Libya, Tunisia and Jordan. The only Arab countries that were represented were Saudi Arabia, Lebanon, Yemen, Morocco, the United Arab Republic and the Sudan. No real action was taken at today's session. The Yemeni delegate called the Communists "a menace to Arab brotherhood"... and other delegates decried the so-called "mobilization" yesterday of Israel's armed forces.

The prime minister of Israel, David Ben Gurion, has ordered an investigation of that "mobilization"...which gave the Middle East a bad case of jitters, causing Syria to call up its reservists and to cancel all Army leaves. The Israeli radio announcement, proclaiming mobilization, apparently was a mistake. Indications are that only three units of the reserves were involved..... and that the call-up was routine.

Yesterday, Russia said that there might be "Complications", if American planes using the air corridor to Berlin continue to fly higher than 10-thousand feet. Last week, three Soviet jets buzzed an American turbo-prop transport on its way to Berlin. There is no recognized "ceiling" to the Berlin corridor. A plane powered by turbo-prop engines normally flies above 10-thousand feet, and so we protested. Today, a Russian Embassy spokesman in East Berlin was asked what was meant by "possible complications". It means, he said, that American and Soviet aircraft might ram into each other. And then he added, "We do not know what consequences such a collision would have." He insisted that it was a "pure safety problem."

Here in New York today, United Nations Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold held a news conference, and most of the questions put to him concerned his recent private talks with Soviet Premier Khrushchev. Mr. Hammarskjold was reluctant to go into details. But, he said, there is a "serious will" to negotiate.

Ed Murrow is flying home from Germany tonight. Before he left Bonn this afternoon, he recorded this conversation with CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser.

(Tape runs 5:35
Ends on cue: "--to Dick Hottelet in New York."

This is Dick Hottelet. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. ~~[illegible]~~ (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the w eather.

footnote

Before President Eisenhower made his formal speech today, he did a little reminiscing as an old soldier. He recalled the time he was NATO commander (that was eight years ago), and he spoke of the great need for unity. Mr. Eisenhower also quoted from the Bible---a verse from St. Luke. The passage reads: "When a strong man, armed, keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace."

This is Richard C. Hottelet. Goodnight!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - RICHARD C. HOTTELET

Thursday, April 2, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

HOTTELET: ... Ed Murrow is flying home from Germany tonight. Before he left Bonn this afternoon, he recorded this conversation with CBS News correspondent Ernest Leiser.

MURROW: This is Bonn. I've spent the last two days in Berlin, East and West, with my colleague, Ernest Leiser, and for the next few minutes I'm going to check a few impressions with him. Ernie, would you say there's anyone in West Germany who is really apprehensive about an outbreak of war over Berlin?

LEISER: Yes, Ed, but not so apprehensive that they're cancelling their summer vacations, I think there'll still be an invasion of Italy by the West Germans this summer, but there is a nagging anxiety in the back of people's minds; they're just not sure what the Russians will be doing. The government, I must say, is more sanguine than the people. We've talked, as you know, to people in the West German government in the last day, and they think that Khrushchev has too much to lose by starting a war over Berlin to undertake the risks of a real putsch against ... in Berlin. But there still is this uncertainty. There's the realization that he's a gambler - and they're not quite sure how high he's going to play the stakes.

MURROW: Well, Ernie Leiser, of all the reasons I've heard advanced for Khrushchev applying the pressure on Berlin at this moment, one - that he objects to the propaganda; two - the espionage; three - the showcase window aspect of it. What do you think is the real reason he chose Berlin at this time?

LEISER: I think there're two reasons, Ed, of equal importance. One is a tactical reason; the other is a long range strategic reason. The tactical reason is an obvious one, one that we've been able to see in the last two days. West Berlin is a show window.

MURROW: It certainly is.

LEISER: You can travel through the streets of West Berlin and then you can cross over to East Berlin and it's still ... and it's still the difference between 1959 and 1952. East Berlin is seven years behind West Berlin in reconstruction, in the availability of consumer goods and the way people look.

MURROW: But East Berlin has improved considerably in the last two years, wouldn't you say? People are better dressed, the shops are more full of better goods ...

LEISER: Enormously. And I think we were able to see this going down the street called Klement Gottwald Allee, named after the ex-Czech President, the Communist President of Czechoslovakia, who's dead, we were able to walk down the street and see that there are many more things in the shop windows than there were just a year ago. We were able to see, also, that rationing is ended in East Germany; it was the last of the satellites in which rationing had continued. There was an immediate rise in prices when they ended rationing, about 14 or 15 months ago, but now the prices have gone down. They're still very high but they're much lower than they were.

MURROW: But your basic contention is that Khrushchev moved on Berlin because he can no longer afford the comparison in economic well being between East and West.

LEISER: I think that is the main tactical reason, Ed. There is the strategic reason. I think that he is determined to divide the Western alliance; and he's doing it pretty well, I must say at this moment, in putting the pressure on in Germany.

MURROW: Well, speaking of dividing the Western alliance, I have the impression that the German position on Berlin is much less yielding - much more fixed, inflexible - than that of the British for example.

LEISER: I think you're absolutely right, and I think the reasons are rather obvious. In the first place, this is the country which will be most immediately affected; the country that has the most immediately to lose if there's any Communist putsch to the West. The Communist putsch to the West certainly won't immediately involve France or England but it will, and could, immediately involve West Germany.

The Germans are convinced - at least the German Government, and this is pretty much a one-man government, Chancellor Adenauer - the West German government is convinced that Khrushchev is trying a bluff. And I think they're much more prepared to call the bluff than any of our other allies are, with the possible exception of Adenauer's newest and strongest ally, Charles de Gaulle in France.

MURROW: I have the impression that people here in Germany - much more than in France - are inclined to ... perhaps not overtly but indirectly apply the word appeasement to current British policy.

LEISER: Yes, there's great uneasiness here, both in government circles and among the thinking West German people about what is going on in England. I've heard a very responsible West German compare Macmillan to Chamberlain. I've heard another one say that the laurel wreath that Mr. Macmillan is wearing around his head now may wither very rapidly.

MURROW: Now, Ernie, what about the charge that I have heard a few times here at least, and that is that American policy in regard to Berlin is obscure, is not stable, and that there is a great uncertainty hanging over it as a result of the present state of Mr. Dulles's health.

LEISER: The charge may be valid, Ed. I don't think that the West Germans feel this as strongly as perhaps the British and the French. There's more confidence in the United States Government in West Germany, and especially in the Bonn Government than there is in any other Western European capital, I think. But there's a firm belief that General Eisenhower, as a man who knows the situation in Germany, will stand up to the Soviets in any attempt to change the positions that we now have - and especially in Berlin they don't believe that we will let ourselves be conned out of the city or be forced out of the city or be squeezed out of the city.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Ernest Leiser. And now back to Dick Hottelet in New York.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

RICHARD HOTTELET REPORTING

Good evening:

President Eisenhower addressed the 10th anniversary meeting of the NATO Council in Washington today, and warned that the threat of international Communism is something we must cope with for a long time to come. He declared solemnly that we must be prepared, during the years ahead, "to live in a world in which tension and bickering between free nations and the Soviets will be daily experiences." And in order to do this, he said, there must be unity -- "the unity which is the very lifeblood of NATO." In an obvious reference to the forthcoming East-West talks on Germany, Mr. Eisenhower said that the West will always keep the door open for honest discussion, "even to those whose creed is world domination." And referring to a possible summit meeting, he said, "No means are overlooked that give promise of constructive results." The President said that although in dealing with Russia we should avoid illusions, we will continue to strive for a more general and far-reaching, but always practical, settlement of our differences. Under the heading of "differences" he listed Germany, general European security and cooperation in the new realm of outer space. Mr. Eisenhower declared that building the road to lasting peace and universal justice will require courage, sacrifice and perseverance.

After hearing President Eisenhower's opening remarks, the permanent NATO Council went into closed session. There, the council delegates received a secret account of the two-day meeting held earlier this week by the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, West Germany and France reportedly reaffirming solidarity on Berlin.

Moscow radio said today that Russia is not afraid of any threats which the NATO leaders may make. It also accused President Eisenhower of "trying to impute to the Socialist countries aspirations toward world domination." By "Socialist" Moscow radio means "Communist." And of course Mr. Eisenhower tried to "impute" nothing. He declared in plain English that world domination is the Communist aim.

The Chinese Communist radio claimed today that the religious and political leader of Tibet, the Dalai Lama, is now in India. The Chinese claim that the Dalai Lama was taken into India last Tuesday by Tibetan rebels who held him "under duress." According to earlier reports, the Dalai Lama, with the aid of Tibetan revolutionaries, was trying to escape capture by the Communists. There is no official confirmation tonight that the Dalai Lama has crossed the Tibetan border into India. However, diplomatic informants in New Delhi say that the Dalai Lama has successfully eluded the Communists and is now in India. These diplomatic sources say that the Indian government learned of the Dalai Lama's arrival yesterday or early today...and that the Indian and Chinese Communist governments have been in constant communication. Tonight, Mr. Nehru called a hurried meeting of the central parliamentary board of his Congress Party.

The political committee of the Arab League met today in Beirut, capital of Lebanon, to consider the worsening relations between the United Arab Republic and Iraq. But the Iraqi representative did not show up, and neither did the delegates of Libya, Tunisia and Jordan. The only Arab countries that were represented were Saudi Arabia, Lebanon, Yemen, Morocco, the United Arab Republic and the Sudan. No real action was taken at today's session. The Yemeni delegate called the Communists "a menace to Arab brotherhood"...and other delegates decried the so-called "mobilization" yesterday of Israel's armed forces.

The prime minister of Israel, David Ben Gurion, has ordered an investigation of that "mobilization"...which gave the Middle East a bad case of jitters causing Syria to call up its reservists and to cancel all Army leaves. The Israeli radio announcement proclaiming mobilization, apparently was a mistake.

Indications are that only three units of the reserves were involved...and that the call-up was routine.

Yesterday, Russia said that there might be "complications," if American planes using the air corridor to Berlin continue to fly higher than 10-thousand feet. Last week, three Soviet jets buzzed an American turbo-prop transport on its way to Berlin. There is no recognized "ceiling" to the Berlin corridor. A plane powered by turbo-prop engines normally flies above 10-thousand feet, and so we protested. today, a Russian embassy spokesman in East Berlin was asked what was meant by "possible complications." It means, he said, that American and Soviet aircraft might ram into each other. And then he added, "We do not know what consequences such a collision would have." He insisted that it was a "pure safety problem."

Here in New York today, United Nations Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold held a news conference, and most of the questions put to him concerned his recent private talks with Soviet Premier Khrushchev. Mr. Hammarskjold was reluctant to go into details. But, he said, there is a "serious will" to negotiate.

Ed Murrow is flying home from Germany tonight. Before he left Bonn this afternoon, he recorded this conversation with CBS News Correspondent Ernest Leiser.

MURROW: This is Bonn. I've spent the last two days in Berlin, East and West, with my colleague, Ernest Leiser, and for the next few minutes I'm going to check a few impressions with him. Ernie, would you say there's anyone in West Germany who is really apprehensive about an outbreak of war over Berlin?

LEISER: Yes, Ed, but not so apprehensive that they're cancelling their summer vacations, I think there'll still be an invasion of Italy by the West Germans this summer, but there is a nagging anxiety in the back of people's minds; they're just not sure what the Russians will be doing. The government, I must say, is more sanguine than the people. We've talked, as you know, to people in the West German government in the last day, and they think that Khrushchev has too much to lose by starting a war over Berlin to undertake the risks of a real putsch against...in Berlin. But there still is this uncertainty. There's the realization that he's a gambler - and they're not quite sure how high he's going to play the stakes.

MURROW: Well, Ernie Leiser, of all the reasons I've heard advanced for Khrushchev applying the pressure on Berlin at this moment, one - that he objects to the propaganda; two - the espionage; three - the showcase window aspect of it. What do you think is the real reason he chose Berlin at this time?

LEISER: I think there're two reasons, Ed, of equal importance. One is a tactical reason; the other is a long range strategic reason. The tactical reason is an obvious one, one that we've been able to see in the last two days. West Berlin is a show window.

MURROW: It certainly is.

LEISER: You can travel through the streets of West Berlin and then you can cross over to East Berlin and it's still...and it's still the difference between 1959 and 1952. East Berlin is seven years behind West Berlin in reconstruction, in the availability of consumer goods and the way people look.

MURROW: But East Berlin has improved considerably in the last two years, wouldn't you say? People are better dressed, the shops are more full of better goods...

LEISER: Enormously. And I think we were able to see this going down the street called Klement Gottwald Allee, named after the ex-Czech President the Communist President of Czechoslovakia, who's dead, We were able to walk down the street and see that there are many more things in the shop windows than there were just a year ago. We were able to see, also, that rationing is ended in East Germany; it was the last of the satellites in which rationing had continued. There was an immediate rise in prices when they ended rationing, about 14 or 15 months ago, but now the prices have gone down. They're still very high but they're much lower than they were.

MURROW: But your basic contention is that Khrushchev moved on Berlin because he can no longer afford the comparison in economic well being between East and West.

LEISER: I think that is the main tactical reason, Ed. There is the strategic reason. I think that he is determined to divide the Western alliance; and he's doing it pretty well, I must say at this moment, in putting the pressure on in Germany.

MURROW: Well, speaking of dividing the Western Alliance, I have the impression that the German position on Berlin is much less yielding - much more fixed, inflexible - than that of the British for example.

LEISER: I think you're absolutely right, and I think the reasons are rather obvious. In the first place, this is the country which will be most immediately affected; the country that has the most immediately to lose if there's any Communist putsch to the West. The Communist putsch to the West certainly won't immediately involve France or England, but it will and could, immediately involve West Germany.

The Germans are convinced - at least the German Government, and this is pretty much a one-man government, Chancellor Adenauer - the West German Government is convinced that Khrushchev is trying a bluff. And I think they're much more prepared to call the bluff than any of our other allies are, with the possible exception of Adenauer's newest and strongest ally, Charles deGaulle in France.

MURROW: I have the impression that people here in Germany - much more than in France - are inclined to---perhaps not overtly but indirectly apply the word appeasement to current British policy.

LEISER: Yes, there's great uneasiness here, both the in government circles and among the thinking West German people about what is going on in England. I've heard a very responsible West German compare Macmillan to Chamberlain. I've heard another one say that the laurel wreath that Mr. Macmillan is wearing around his head now may wither very rapidly.

MURROW: Now, Ernie, what about the charge that I have heard a few times here at least, and that is that American policy in regard to Berlin is obscure, is not stable, and that there is a great uncertiinty hanging over it as a result of the present state of Mr. Dulles's health.

LEISER: The charge may be valid, Ed. I don't think that the West Germans feel this as strongly as perhaps the British and French. There's more confidence in the United States Government in West Germany, and especially in the Bonn Government than there is an any other Western European capital, I think. But there's a firm belief that General Eisenhower, as a man who knows the situation in Germany, will stand up to the Soviets in any attempt to change the positions that we now have - and especially in Berlin they don't believe that we will let ourselves be conned out of the city or be forced out of the city or be squeezed out of the city.

MURROW: Thank youvery much, Ernest Leiser. And now back to Dick Hottelet in New York.

HOTTELET: This is Dick Hottelet. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BYRAN

HOTTELET: Before President Eisenhower made his formal speech today, he did a little reminiscing as an old soldier. He recalled the time he was NATO commander (that was eight years ago), and he spoke of the great need for unity. Mr. Eisenhower also quoted from the Bible---a verse from St. Luke. The passage reads: "When a strong man, armed, keepeth his palace, his goods are in peace."

This is Richard C. Hottelet. Goodnight!

Hottelet for Murrow Fri., Apr 3, 1959

Good evening: This is Richard C. Hottelet substituting for Edward R. Murrow.

Allied policy on Germany has become a little more sharply defined, as the result of today's session of the NATO Council in Washington. The positions taken by certain Western powers appear to have been modified. We are told, for example, that Britain has agreed to link its plan for a military freeze of troops and weapons in Central Europe with progress toward German RE unification. Moreover, for the time being at least, the Western plan for a loose federation of East and West Germany appears to have been shelved. There will be no recognition of the East German SATELLITE regime, but trade and cultural relations between the two Germanys are to be [redacted] encouraged. ~~At the council session this morning, the Italian foreign minister, Giuseppe Pella, suggested that a commission of East and West Germans be set up to arrange for closer [redacted] contacts. Such a commission, [redacted] according to Pella, could be the first step toward eventual [redacted].~~ A [redacted] report coming out of today's closed door meeting is that the AMERICAN DRAFT OF A PEACE TREATY FOR GERMANY [redacted] has been SET ASIDE. [redacted] Instead, we're told, the West will restrict itself to a "set of principles", which we shall submit to the Russians as a sort of guide for drawing up a peace treaty later on. West Germany's foreign minister, Heinrich von Brentano, warned the council against appeasement. "The liberty of Berlin is the liberty of Europe," he said. "If Berlin falls, who will be next?" The Italian foreign minister supported his warning against retreat, and so did the foreign ministers of Canada, Norway, Denmark, Turkey, Belgium, the Netherlands and Greece. [redacted] Turkish foreign minister, Fatin Zorlu, called the neutralization of Germany "impossible." The withdrawal of Allied forces from Germany, he said, is "unthinkable". According to reports emanating from the Council meeting, the West is willing to discuss a new Berlin "arrangement" with the Russians, but only if Moscow recognizes the right of the Western powers to remain in the city. [redacted] Also, such a possible "arrangement" would be discussed as part of an over-all discussion of the German problem---not as an isolated issue. IN ITS SECRET SESSION THIS AFTERNOON, THE NATO COUNCIL DISCUSSED PROBLEMS OF THE MIDDLE EAST.

→

Today, President Eisenhower flew to Gettysburg...where tomorrow he will make a major foreign policy speech at the Gettysburg College spring convocation. News Secretary Hagerty said this morning that the speech is entitled "The Importance of Understanding", and that the President will emphasize "the need for greater individual and collective understanding of the international facts of today's ~~human~~ life." ~~[illegible] special stress on the role to be played by the United States in strengthening the Free World.~~

Before leaving Washington, Mr. Eisenhower let it be known that he has ordered a new study made of how best to evaluate the effects of radio-active fallout. The study, already well under way, is being carried out by the Atomic Energy Commission and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The Budget Bureau will coordinate the study and make final recommendations. This is not an inquiry into the effects of radiation...but a study to determine which government agency, or agencies, should evaluate the DANGER TO HEALTH. ~~[illegible] Prime responsibility [illegible] now lies with the A.E.C., but Welfare Secretary Arthur S. Flemming has proposed that the Public Health Service, which is in his department, also take part.~~

A member of the Atomic Energy Commission, Dr. Willard F. Libby, said today that fallout from the Russian nuclear tests, carried out last autumn, has been increasing in the United States...although he doubted that the amount of Strontium-90 thus BROUGHT IN will exceed the maximum permissible level. Democratic Senator Mike Mansfield said today that reports, such as this one by Dr. Libby, "are becoming more disturbing all the time." On the other hand, he said, there is no need for panic.

Ever since Meade Alcorn announced on Wednesday that he was resigning as Republican national chairman, Senator Thurston Morton of Kentucky has seemed to be the man most likely to succeed him in the job. In fact, Mr. Alcorn and the freshman senator had breakfast together today in Washington, and Senator Morton's "availability" was discussed. Republican Senator John Cooper of Kentucky put out a statement, predicting Morton's selection. He would, said Cooper, "make a great chairman." Then tonight objections were raised by Representative Simpson of Pennsylvania and Senator Goldwater of Arizona, who are chairmen, respectively, of the House and Senate Republican Campaign Committees. Messrs. Goldwater and Simpson say that the National Committee should choose someone who will "devote his full time to the job." Morton has indicated that, if selected, he would continue to serve in the Senate.

34 Prime Minister Nehru announced to a cheering Indian parliament today that the Dalai Lama, the religious and temporal ruler of Tibet, had eluded the Chinese Communists and escaped into India. The arrival of the Dalai Lama in India...and, for that matter, the whole Tibetan revolt... has great political significance for India and the other free countries of Southeast Asia. The CBS News correspondent in India, Arthur Bonner, has been covering this story from its beginning. In fact, only today he returned to Calcutta from the Indian frontier region...and, by short-wave, recorded this report.

Tape runs 5:30

Fade down after approx 1:15 after phrase "fight against Communism." will read rest of script until 4:40 in...through and Communism something harmless." Fade up tape Bonner start with phrase "it's a hard question ..-to Richard C. Hottelet in N.Y."

The Dalai Lama is now in India. The question is what will he do here. For the moment the answer is "nothing." The Dalai Lama is in a remote part of northeast India and the government says it will take him two weeks by pony-back to reach the nearest railway. Prime Minister Nehru, in announcing the arrival of the Dalai Lama, did not specifically say that India would grant him political asylum. When asked if the Dalai Lama would be allowed to exercise his temporal and spiritual powers, Mr. Nehru refused to answer. The fact is Mr. Nehri is in a difficult position. If he allows the Dalai Lama to use the soil of India as a base for the Tibetan Revolution, he would in effect declare that friendship with China will be at an end. And then the Indian Communists will do all they can to destroy his government. India will be turned away from the fight against disease and poverty, and to the basically sterile fight against Communism. To date, Indians have tried to avoid such a cold war atmosphere, a fact which is evident when you pick up newspapers here in Calcutta. You can read two stories: One is about the Dalai Lama's flight to India and the latest sketchy reports of fighting in Tibet. Another tells of a four-day meeting of the Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee in a room hung with banners which read: "Hands Off Asia," "Ban Nuclear Weapons," and "Long Live the Afro-Asian Freedom Struggle." The Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee is a Communist front group and includes among its supporters eminent persons like Mrs. RAMASHWARI [redacted]) Nehru, a distant cousin of Prime Minister Nehru and the mother of a top Indian official now in Washington. Among the 1700 delegates to the meeting are a few from Communist China. And yet while the Chinese fraternize, you can also find editorials in almost every newspaper condemning the Communist oppression in Tibet. For instance, The Pioneer of Lucknow says, "China's reign in Tibet has been littered with uncounted corpses." While the SUNWAZ of Calcutta, an A HINDI language newspaper which usually supports Mr. Nehru's Congress Party, says, "Tibet should be an eye-opener for Indians, so far as Communists and their promises are concerned. You can find similar editorials in the newspapers of Burma. Says The Review of Rangoon, "The Chinese action shows the Communists are ruthless against all who defy their authority. It also shows that once Communists come to power, they will not hesitate to kill to maintain that power." The Mandalay Sun says, "The Red mask has fallen. It's a lesson for all who put faith in Communist guarantees." Newspapers all over Asia are calling Tibet the "Hungary of Asia." People who just a month or so ago were often inclined to believe that the Chinese Communists were different from other Communists, now realize that they are the same. A FEW days ago I was sitting with some Indian newspapermen around the short-wave radio in Kalimpong, near the Tibet frontier. We tuned in the Peiping radio and listened to an announcer in faultless English say that what has happened in Tibet was all the work of American "imperialists" and foreign reactionaries. The Indian newspapermen just laughed. You don't find anyone here except Communists who believe the trouble in Tibet is anything less than a national rebellion. BUT YET, a reporter is forced to come back to that Afro-Asian Solidarity Meeting now going on in Calcutta. Has Indian opinion really changed, or will with the passage of time MEMORIES OF WHAT is now happening in Tibet, FADE and will Western Imperialism again appear to be the real THREAT Communism SOMETHING HARMLESS. AND It's a hard question to answer, especially if you've lived in this country for a while and remember how quickly Indians forgot what happened in Hungary. Perhaps what makes the decision so difficult is that Prime Minister Nehru, while saying he sympathizes with the Tibetans, always TACKS ON A PHRASE about Indian friendship for China. It is Prime Minister Nehru who shapes Indian opinion. Until he comes out more clearly ON the moral issues involved in Tibet, it would be premature to say there has been a marked change in Indian opinion.

This is Arthur Bonner in Calcutta, India. Now back to Richard C. Hottelet in New York.

[redacted]

(27)

This is Richard C. Hottelet. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Footnote....

11

~~28~~ 7

One hears very little AT PRESENT [redacted] of military activity in the Formosa Strait. But every other day---on every odd-numbered day---since last October the [redacted] tiny island of Quemoy has been hit by Communist shells. Today, April third, was an odd-numbered day, but the Communist guns based on the mainland were strangely still. What does it mean? As of tonight nobody knows.

This is Richard C. Hottelet. Good night!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 3, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

RICHARD HOTTELET REPORTING

Good evening:

This is Richard C. Hottelet substituting for Edward R. Murrow. Allied policy on Germany has become a little more sharply defined as the result of today's session of the NATO Council in Washington. The positions taken by certain Western powers appear to have been modified. We are told, for example, that Britain has agreed to link its plan for a military freeze of troops and weapons in Central Europe with progress toward German reunification. Moreover, for the time being at least, the Western plan for a loose federation of East and West Germany appears to have been shelved. There will be no recognition of the East German satellite regime, but trade and cultural relations between the two Germanys are to be encouraged. A report coming out of today's closed door meeting is that the American draft of a peace treaty for Germany has been set aside. Instead, we're told, the West will restrict itself to a "set of principles," which we shall submit to the Russians as a sort of guide for drawing up a peace treaty later on. West Germany's foreign minister, Heinrich von Brentano, warned the council against appeasement. "The liberty of Berlin is the liberty of Europe," he said. "If Berlin falls, who will be next?" The Italian foreign minister supported his warning against retreat, and so did the foreign ministers of Canada, Norway, Denmark, Turkey, Belgium, the Netherlands and Greece. Turkish foreign minister, Fatin Zorlu, called the neutralization of Germany impossible. The withdrawal of Allied forces from Germany, he said, is "unthinkable." According to reports emanating from the Council meeting, the West is willing to discuss the right of the Western powers to remain in the city. Also, such a possible "arrangement" would be discussed as part of an over-all discussion of the German problem--- not as an isolated issue. In its secret session this afternoon, the NATO council discussed problems of the Middle East.

Today, President Eisenhower flew to Gettysburg...where tomorrow he will make a major foreign policy speech at the Gettysburg College spring convocation. News Secretary Hagerty said this morning that the speech is entitled "The Importance of Understanding," and that the President will emphasize "the need for greater individual and collective understanding of the international facts of today's life."

Before leaving Washington, Mr. Eisenhower let it be known that he has ordered a new study made of how best to evaluate the effects of radio-active fallout. The study, already well under way, is being carried out by the Atomic Energy Commission and the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. The Budget Bureau will coordinate the study and make final recommendations. This is not an inquiry into the effects of radiation...but a study to determine which government agency, or agencies, should evaluate the danger to health.

A member of the Atomic Energy Commission, Dr. Willard F. Libby, said today that fallout from the Russian nuclear tests, carried out last autumn, has been increasing in the United States...although he doubted that the amount of Strontium 90 thus brought in will exceed the maximum permissible level. Democratic Senator Mike Mansfield said today that reports, such as this one by Dr. Libby, "are becoming more disturbing all the time." On the other hand, he said, there is no need for panic.

Ever since Meade Alcorn announced on Wednesday that he was resigning as Republican national chairman, Senator Thurston Morton of Kentucky has seemed to be the man most likely to succeed him in the job. In fact, Mr. Alcorn and the freshman senator had breakfast together today in Washington, and Senator Morton's "availability" was discussed. Republican Senator John Cooper of Kentucky put out a statement, predicting Morton's selection. He would, said Cooper, "make a great chairman." Then tonight objections were raised by Representative Simpson of Pennsylvania and Senator Goldwater of Arizona, who are chairmen, respectively, of the House and Senate Republican Campaign Committees. Messrs. Goldwater and Simpson say that the National Committee should choose someone who will "devote his full time to the job." Morton has indicated that, if selected, he would continue to serve in the Senate.

Prime Minister Nehru announced to a cheering Indian parliament today that the Dalai Lama, the religious and temporal ruler of Tibet, had eluded the Chinese Communists and escaped into India. The arrival of the Dalai Lama in India, and, for that matter, the whole Tibetan revolt...has great political significance for India and the other free countries of Southeast Asia. The CBS News correspondent in India, Arthur Bonner has been covering this story from its beginning. In fact, only today he returned to Calcutta from the Indian frontier region... and by short-wave, recorded this report.

BONNER: The Dalai Lama is now in India. The question is what will he do here. For the moment the answer is "nothing." The Dalai Lama is in a remote part of northeast India, and the government says it will take him two weeks by pony-back to reach the nearest railway. Prime Minister Nehru in announcing the arrival of the Dalai Lama did not specifically say that India would grant him political asylum. When asked if the Dalai Lama would be allowed to exercise his temporal and spiritual powers, Mr. Nehru refused to answer. The fact is Mr. Nehru is in a difficult position. If he allows the Dalai Lama to use the soil of India as a base for the Tibetan Revolution, he would in effect declare that friendship with China will be at an end. And then the Indian Communists will do all they can to destroy his government. India will be turned away from the fight against disease and poverty, and to the basically sterile fight against Communism. To date, Indians have tried to avoid such a cold war atmosphere, a fact which is evident when you pick up newspapers here in Calcutta. You can read two stories: One is about the Dalai Lama's flight to India and the latest sketchy reports of fighting in Tibet. Another tells of a four-day meeting of the Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee in a room hung with banners which read "Hands Off Asia." "Ban Nuclear Weapons," and "Long Live the Afro-Asian Freedom Struggle." The Afro-Asian Solidarity Committee is a Communist front group and includes among its supporters eminent persons like Mrs. Ramashwari Nehru, a distant cousin of Prime Minister Nehru and the mother of a top Indian offical now in Washington. Among the 1700 delegates to the meeting are a few from Communist China. And yet while the Chinese fraternize, you can also find editorials in almost every newspaper condemning the Communist oppression in Tibet. For instance, The Pioneer of Lucknow says, "China's reign in Tibet has been littered with uncounted corpses." While The Sunwaz of Calcutta, a Hindi language newspaper which usually supports Mr. Nehru's Congress Party says, "Tibet should be an eye-opener for Indians so far as Communists and their promises are concerned. You can find similar editorials in the newspapers of Burma. Says The Review of Rangoon, "The Chinese action shows the Communists are ruthless against all who defy their authority. It also shows that once Communists come to power, they will not hestitate to kill to maintain that power." The Mandalay Sun says, "The Red mask has fallen. It's a lesson for all who put faith in Communist guarantees." Newspapers all over Asia are calling Tibet the "Hungary of Asia." People who just a month or so ago were often inclined to believe that the Chinese Communists were different from other Communists now realize that they are the same. A few days ago I was sitting with some Indian newspapermen around the short-wave radio in Kalimpong near the Tibet frontier. We tuned in the Peiping radio and listened to an announcer in faultless English say that what has happened in Tibet was all the work of American imperialists and foreign reactionaries. The Indian newspapermen just laughed. Youd don't find anyone here except Communists who believe the trouble in Tibet is anything less than a national rebellion. But yet, a reporter is forced to come back to that Afro-Asian Solidarity Meeting now going on in Calcutta,

Has Indian opinion really changed or will with the passage of time, memories of what is now happening in Tibet fade and will Western Imperialism again appear to be the real threat and Communism something harmless. It's a hard question to answer, especially if you've lived in this country for a while and remember how quickly Indians forgot what happened in Hungary, Perhaps what makes the decision so difficult is that Prime Minister Nehru while saying he sympathizes with the Tibetans always tacks on a phrase about Indian friendship for China. It is Prime Minister Nehru who shapes Indian opinion. Until he comes out more clearly on the moral issues involved in Tibet, it would be premature to say there has been a marked change in Indian opinion.

This is Arthur Bonner in Calcutta, India. Now back to Richard C. Hottelet in New York.

HOTTELET: This is Richard C. Hottelet. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the day's news. But first, here is Goerge Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

HOTTELET: One hears very little at present of military activity in the Formosa Strait. But every other day---on every odd-numbered day---since last October the tiny island of Quemoy has been hit by Communist shells. Today April third, was an odd-numbered day, but the Communist guns based on the mainland were strangely still. What does it mean? As of tonight, nobody knows.

This is Richard C. Hottelet. Godd night!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Apr. 6, 1959

This is the news:

A State Department spokesman today repudiated Russia's claim that there are rules against making high-altitude flights to Berlin. Russia also suggested yesterday...in a formal note...that the recent flight of an American transport above 10-thousand feet was designed to "wreck" the forthcoming negotiations on Germany. The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, reminded Russia that the West never has agreed to any "ceiling" in the Allied air corridor to Berlin. "And the question of who is trying to wreck what," he said, "is determined, it seems to me, by the actions of the Soviet Union and not of the United States." The American aircraft, of a type which normally flies above 10-thousand feet, was buzzed by three Soviet jet fighters.

The United States today released the text of a note it sent Moscow two weeks ago, protesting Soviet harassment of two other American aircraft. These incidents took place last November over the Bering Sea and the Sea of Japan. The United States note says that although our aircraft, in each instance, were more than 60 miles from the nearest Soviet territory, Russia nevertheless ~~[illegible]~~ charged violation of its air space...a move, the note says, not calculated to reduce international tensions.

The secretary-general of NATO...Paul-Henri Spaak...said today that the possibility of compromise on Berlin is "very narrow" because in their negotiations with Russia the Western powers will need to be "very firm". Spaak made this comment in Norfolk, Virginia, where he had gone to inspect the headquarters of the Supreme Allied Sea Command.

~~British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd returned to London today after attending last week's NATO meeting in Washington. Lloyd told reporters that the Western powers are in complete agreement on the objectives to be sought in the forthcoming East-West talks.~~

Many British newspapers today lamented the decision of Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery to visit Moscow at the end of this month. Montgomey has said that he wants to see Premier Khrushchev "and clear my own mind on the Russian point of view." The trip has the approval of Prime Minister Macmillan. The Labourite Daily Herald disapproves and says that retired generals should stay out of politics. And the Daily Telegraph, which supports the Macmillan government, asks if this trip is really necessary. The Daily Express says that among Britain's allies Montgomery's decision is causing dismay.

The fifth annual meeting of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization opens in Wellington, New Zealand, on Wednesday. Moscow radio charged today that the SEATO ministers will "step up war preparations." Their purpose, it claimed, is to turn the Philippines, Thailand and Pakistan into bases for an eventual nuclear war. Moscow said that, for them, this was a situation "fraught with mortal danger."

Reports from Cairo say that a Russian ship passed through the Suez Canal today, loaded with more than 800 troops. The Middle East News Agency...which is sponsored by the Egyptian government...identifies the soldiers as Kurds and says that the ship is on its way to Iraq. The vessel came from the Russian Black Sea port of Odessa, and there is speculation that the soldiers may be Soviet citizens of Kurdish orgin...who are being sent to Iraq to bolster the Kassem regime. This speculation is not confirmed.

President Eisenhower believes that the figures on unemployment released tomorrow will be "gratifying to all Americans." News Secretary Hagerty reported this today after Secretary of Labor Mitchell called at the White House and gave the President a preview of the monthly report prepared by the Labor and Commerce Departments. The report is expected to show a drop of about 300-thousand in the total of unemployed in the past month. Unemployment usually declines by at least 250-thousand in March due to an increase in outdoor work.

The White House announces that President Eisenhower will fly South tomorrow for a vacation at the National Golf Club in Augusta. The President will be accompanied by Mrs. Eisenhower, and it has not been decided definitely how long they will be gone. News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower may fly back to Washington to keep engagements he has for April 13th and 14th, and then return to Augusta for a few more days of rest. General Snyder, the President's physician, recently recommended a vacation in a warm climate.

An examiner for the Federal Power Commission recommended today that the Phillips Petroleum Company of Bartlesville, Oklahoma, not be allowed to increase its rates by more than 14-million dollars a year. This is 35-million dollars less that the company argued was justified by rising production costs. The recommendation becomes effective in 30 days, unless overruled by the commission...or unless the company files exceptions. Philipps is the nation's biggest independent natural gas producer.

The Supreme Court today rejected another appeal by kidnaper Caryl Chessman...who ten years ago was sentenced to die in the California gas chamber. The court issued a brief order, denying him the right to ask for a writ of habeas corpus. Chessman repeatedly has evaded execution through a series of legal moves in which he charged improper trial procedures.

Edward R. Murrow: April 6, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Two weeks spent in London, Paris, Berlin and Bonn have left this reporter with the following impressions. They are based upon many conversations -- some idle, several "off-the-record."

Nowhere is there any considerable belief or apprehension that the Berlin situation will lead to hostilities. There is very little recognition that the West has agreed to parley under duress, the threat of force. The British position is that the Russians do in fact fear an attack from the West - that tensions must somehow be eased -- they favor the de facto recognition of East Germany -- some kind of thinning out of military forces in Middle Europe - some vague kind of U.S. presence in Berlin - and in general a recognition of the status quo, the continuation and confirmation of a divided Europe.

The British see themselves as playing the role of the honest broker; and many appear to believe that Macmillan achieved some kind of diplomatic triumph in persuading Khrushchev to agree to a summit meeting, which Khrushchev has wanted all along.

In Britain there is none of the trepidation of 1938, none of the determination of 1939. There is a widespread willingness to leave the whole matter to Harold Macmillan, who believes in the inevitability of gradualness, and does not believe that there are clearcut definitive or immediate answers to most of the world's problems.

The French are, for the moment at least, less flexible than the British. Official circles are still furious about our decision to abstain at the United Nations in the vote over Algeria. They want, and are determined to acquire a nuclear capability of their own. But what General De Gaulle wants above everything else is a closer working relationship between France, the United States and Britain. And he wants this to apply not only in ~~NATOX~~ the NATO area, but in the rest of the world as well. He has implied, in rather obscure language, that unless he gets this he is capable of, or will consider withdrawing, or at least diminishing French participation in NATO. His withdrawal of the French Fleet from NATO command is widely regarded as a pointed reminder of his independence, to which some apply the word "blackmail."

The official German position can be stated quite simply. The Russians are bluffing over Berlin. There is no chance of their doing anything that would risk a major explosion. Khrushchev wants a summit meeting in order to enhance his own prestige with the Russian people. He wants to achieve world domination through economic means; and, in the long view, he is too frightened of Communist China to risk an open clash with the West. The Germans believe that their country is the dam against the westward expansion of Communism, and that Berlin is the floodgate. The Germans are very unhappy about the British; think they are short-sighted, view everything from the point of view of upcoming elections. They view the British proposal for a lightly armed zone in Middle Europe as complete nonsense. They believe that British policy is creating doubts about the unity and firmness of the West, causing Khrushchev to say the West is already falling apart.

The Germans insist that Khrushchev wants a summit conference for domestic reasons, but they don't see why the West should make him a present of it. The Germans want to sell him that summit conference, at a price. They want Khrushchev to make some concessions in advance for a change. It is the German view that unless summit conferences lead to controlled disarmament of nuclear and conventional weapons, the whole thing will be in vain. They believe that the Russians need a relaxation of tension just as much as the West; and that the Russians were shocked by the vigor and firmness of Western reaction to Khrushchev's ultimatum on Berlin. In short, the Germans think some counter-bluffing would work.

But to bluff effectively requires unity, and they think the British are dangerously weakening that unity.

If we assume that the constant and consistent purpose of Russian policy has been, and is, to weaken the Western alliance, then it must be admitted that their manipulation of the Berlin issue has already gained them a considerable success.— Buckens - Buyers -

So far as American policy is concerned, it can be reported that a considerable number of people in Western Europe now see virtues in Mr. Dulles and his policies -- virtues that they did not comprehend until he was stricken by cancer.

The general feeling about our policy can perhaps be summed up with an English phrase: "The ball is at our feet", which means we can kick it, run with it, or fall over it; and most people don't yet know which we are going to do.

Back in a moment.—

ALLAN BURNS —

~~Jamie Buyers~~ —

Word for Today

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, the physicist, once said: "This is a world in which each of us, knowing his limitations, will have to cling to what is close to him...to what he knows...to what he can do...to his friends and his tradition and his love...lest he be dissolved in a universal confusion and know nothing, and love nothing."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 6, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

A State Department spokesman today repudiated Russia's claim that there are rules against making high-altitude flights to Berlin. Russia also suggested yesterday...in a formal note...that the recent flight of an American transport above 10-thousand feet was designed to wreck the forthcoming negotiations on Germany. The State Department spokesman, Lincoln White, reminded Russia that the West never has agreed to any ceiling in the Allied air corridor to Berlin. "And the question of who is trying to wreck what," he said, "is determined, it seems to me, by the actions of the Soviet Union and not of the United States." The American aircraft, of a type which normally flies above 10-thousand feet, was buzzed by three Soviet jet fighters.

The United States today released the text of a note it sent Moscow two weeks ago, protesting Soviet harassment of two other American aircraft. These incidents took place last November over the Bering Sea and the Sea of Japan. The United States note says that although our aircraft, in each instance, were more than 60 miles from the nearest Soviet territory, Russia nevertheless charged violation of its air space...a move, the note says, not calculated to reduce international tensions.

The secretary-general of NATO...Paul-Henri Spaak...said today that the possibility of compromise on Berlin is "very narrow" because in their negotiations with Russia the Western powers will need to be "very firm." Spaak make this comment in Norfolk, Virginia, where he had gone to inspect the headquarters of the Supreme Allied Sea Comaand.

Many British newspapers today lamented the decision of Field Marshal Viscount Montgomery to visit Moscow at the end of this month. Montgomery has said that he wants to see Premier Khrushchev "and clear my own mind on the Russian point of view." The trip has the approval of Prime Minister Macmillan. The Labourite Daily Herald disapproves and says that retired generals should stay out of politics. And the Daily Telegraph, which supports the Macmillan government, asks if this trip is really necessary. The Daily Express says that among Britain's allies Montgomery's decision is causing dismay.

The fifth annual meeting of the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization opens in Wellington, New Zealand, on Wednesday. Moscow radio charged today that the SEATO ministers will "step up war preparations." Their purpose, it claimed is to turn the Philippines, Thailand and Pakistan into bases for an eventual nuclear war. Moscow said that, for them, this was a situation "fraught with mortal danger."

Reports from Cairo say that a Russian ship passed through the Suez Canal today, loaded with more than 800 troops. The Middle East News Agency... which is sponsored by the Egyptian government...identifies the soldiers as Kurds and says that the ship is on its way to Iraq. The vessel came from the Russian Black Sea port of Odessa, and there is speculation that the soldiers may be Soviet citizens of Kurdish origin...who are being sent to Iraq to bolster the Kassem regime. This speculation is not confirmed.

President Eisenhower believes that the figures on unemployment released tomorrow will be "gratifying to all Americans." News Secretary Hagerty reported this today after Secretary of Labor Mitchell called at the White House and gave the President a preview of the monthly report prepared by the Labor and Commerce Departments. The report is expected to show a drop of about 300-thousand in the total of unemployed in the past month. Unemployment usually declines by at least 250 thousand in March due to an increase in outdoor work.

The White House announces that President Eisenhower will fly South tomorrow for a vacation at the National Golf Club in Augusta. The President will be accompanied by Mrs. Eisenhower, and it has not been decided definitely how long they will be gone. News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower may fly back to Washington to keep engagements he has for April 13th and 14th and then return to Augusta for a few more days of rest. General Snyder, the President's physician, recently recommended a vacation in a warm climate.

The Supreme Court today rejected another appeal by kidnaper Caryl Chessman...who ten years ago was sentenced to die in the California gas chamber. The court issued a brief order, denying him the right to ask for a writ of habeas corpus. Chessman repeatedly has evaded execution through a series of legal moves in which he charged improper trial procedures.

Two weeks spent in London, Paris, Berlin and Bonn have left this reporter with the following impressions. They are based upon many conversations, some idle, several "off-the-record."

Nowhere is there any considerable belief or apprehension that the Berlin situation will lead to hostilities. There is very little recognition that the West has agreed to parley under duress, the threat of force. The British position is that the Russians do in fact fear an attack from the West - that tensions must somehow be eased - they favor the de facto recognition of East Germany - some kind of thinning out of military forces in Middle Europe - some vague kind of U.N. presence in Berlin - and in general a recognition of the status quo, the continuation and confirmation of a divided Europe.

The British see themselves as playing the role of the honest broker; and many appear to believe that Macmillan achieved some kind of diplomatic triumph in persuading Khrushchev to agree to a summit meeting, which Khrushchev has wanted all along.

In Britain there is none of the trepidation of 1938, none of the determination of 1939. There is a widespread willingness to leave the whole matter to Harold Macmillan, who believes in the inevitability of gradualness, and does not believe that there are clearcut definitive or immediate answers to most of the world's problems.

The French are, for the moment at least, less flexible than the British. Official circles are still furious about our decision to abstain at the United Nations in the vote over Algeria. They want, and are determined to acquire a nuclear capability of their own. But what General DeGualle wants above everything else is a closer working relationship between France, the United States and Britain. And he wants this to apply not only in the NATO area, but in the rest of the world as well. He has implied, in rather obscure language, that unless he gets this he is capable of, or will consider withdrawing, or at least diminishing French participation in NATO. His withdrawal of the French Fleet from NATO command is widely regarded as a pointed reminder of his independence, to which some apply the word "blackmail."

The official German position can be stated quite simply. The Russians are bluffing over Berlin. There is no chance of their doing anything that would risk a major explosion. Khrushchev wants a summit meeting in order to enhance his own prestige with the Russian people. He wants to achieve world domination through economic means; and, in the long view, he is too frightened of Communist China to risk an open clash with the West. The Germans believe that their country is the dam against the westward expansion of communism, and that Berlin is the floodgate. The Germans are very unhappy about the British; think they are shortsighted, view everything from the point of view of upcoming elections. They view the British proposal for a lightly armed zone in Middle Europe as complete nonsense. They believe that British policy is creating doubts about the unity and firmness of the West, causing Khrushchev to say the West is already falling apart.

The Germans insist that Khrushchev wants a summit conference for domestic reasons, but they don't see why the West should make him a present of it. The Germans want to sell him that summit conference, at a price. They want Khrushchev to make some concessions in advance for a change. It is the German view that unless summit conferences lead to controlled disarmament of nuclear and conventional weapons, the whole thing will be in vain. They believe that the Russians need a relaxation of tension just as much as the West; and that the Russians were shocked by the vigor and firmness of Western reaction to Khrushchev's ultimatum on Berlin. In short, the Germans think some counter-bluffing would work.

But to bluff effectively requires unity, and they think the British are dangerously weakening that unity.

If we assume that the constant and consistent purpose of Russian policy has been, and is, to weaken the Western alliance, then it must be admitted that their manipulation of the Berlin issue has already gained them a considerable success.

So far as American policy is concerned, it can be reported that a considerable number of people in Western Europe now see virtues in Mr. Dulles and his policies - virtues that they did not comprehend until he was stricken by cancer.

The general feeling about our policy can perhaps be summed up with an English phrase: "The ball is at our feet," which means we can kick it, run with it, or fall over it; and most people don't yet know which we are going to do.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is Allan Burns with a word about the weather.

ALLAN BURNS

MURROW: Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, the physicist, once said, "This is a world in which each of us, knowing his limitations, will have to cling to what is close to him...to what he knows...to what he can do...to his friends and his tradition and his love...lest he be dissolved in a universal confusion and know nothing, and love nothing."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Apr. 7, 1959

This is the news:

Konrad Adenauer today accepted the nomination of the Christian Democratic Party for president of West Germany. / If Adenauer wins the election, as expected, he would have to give up the office of chancellor, which he has held since the founding of the Republic in 1949. / Under the constitution of West Germany, the chancellor determines policy. / The president has little authority. / And so it would appear that...at 83... Adenauer has chosen to play a less active role. / It is possible...at the same time...that he will be less of a figurehead than Theodor Heuss, who is retiring under the law limiting the president to two terms. And no one expects Adenauer to bow out of politics altogether. / In West Germany, the president is elected by Parliament. The election is held in July, and Adenauer would not assume the presidency until September or October. Consequently, he will still be at the helm in Germany when the foreign ministers meet next month in Geneva and very likely will be able to attend a meeting with Russia at the summit. Adenauer has opposed making concessions to the Russians, and advocates a tougher line than either Britain or the United States. Most prominently mentioned among those who may succeed Adenauer is the vice chancellor, Ludwig Erhard, who is also economics minister. Erhard rebuilt the German economy after the war and is a supporter of the Western alliance.

Adenauer's decision to seek the presidency came as a surprise. There has been no official comment yet in either London or Washington. Moscow radio claims the action was due to "apparent differences" within the Bonn government...springing, it says, from Adenauer's "stubborn reluctance to reconsider his policy."

Congress reconvened today after an 11-day Easter recess. Little business was transacted. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee confirmed the nomination of Carl Strom, a career diplomat, to serve as ambassador to Bolivia. The committee also approved the appointment of Ellis Briggs as ambassador to Greece.

President Eisenhower today nominated former Senator Frank Barrett of Wyoming to be general counsel for the Department of Agriculture. Major General Leonard Heaton...who operated on Mr. Eisenhower when he had ileitis in 1956...was named surgeon general of the Army, succeeding Major General Silas B. Hays. Hays will complete a four-year tour as the Army's top medical officer next month.

As these appointments were announced, President Eisenhower flew to Augusta, Georgia, today for a vacation of golf.

The government today announced that 387-thousand fewer persons were unemployed in March than in February. Employment, in the same one-month period, jumped by 1-million, 106-thousand. The increase in employment was greater than the decrease in unemployment because many persons hired in March, such as students and housewives, had not previously been looking for work. The drop in unemployment was the biggest recorded for the month of March since 1950. For the first time, the figures were given out at a news conference...called by Seymour Wolfbein, a Labor Department expert. In the past, the statistics have always been given out in a printed release. Wolfbein told reporters that while some of the improvement was seasonal, the job picture is substantially brighter. One of the heartening signs, he said, is that practically all of the decline in unemployment was concentrated among persons who form the nation's "prime" working group---that is, among men above the age of 25. At the same time, Wolfbein said, "We are not out of the woods." And he cited the fact that the number of persons who have been unemployed for 15 weeks, or longer, has remained steady at about one and a half million.

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, calls the government report "well staged propaganda". He says the drop in unemployment was "mostly seasonal", and that there has been no "appreciable" improvement in the over-all picture. More than 5-thousand union leaders and unemployed persons are due in Washington tomorrow for a rally, sponsored by the AFL-CIO.

In the British House of Commons today, the chancellor of the exchequer, Heathcoat Amory, announced the budget of the Conservative government for the next fiscal year. It is a balanced budget...calling for expenditure of roughly 14-billion dollars. Nearly one-third of this would be spent for defense. Income taxes are to be reduced in the lower and middle income brackets by about 9 percent. The tax on a pint of beer is reduced by a little more than 2 cents (or tupence), and other "purchase taxes" are reduced on a wide range of consumer goods, including television sets, refrigerators and cars. The cuts have prompted speculation that the Macmillan government may be planning to call a general election soon.

Egyptian newspapers report a new revolt in Iraq. These Egyptian reports are not confirmed.

The political committee of the Arab League has ended a seven-day meeting in Beirut, capital of Lebanon. In a communique...issued tonight...the committee "condemns" those external influences aimed at dividing the Arab countries. The United Arab Republic has complained of Communist influence in Iraq.

Edward R. Murrow: April 7, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

It means a great deal to the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, which opened its annual meeting in Wellington, New Zealand today, that Communist China is up to its ears in trouble in Tibet. SEATO exists to help Southeast Asian countries resist Communist expansion. It has been criticized in the past for over-playing the Communist danger. Now the events in Tibet are silencing this criticism, and the SEATO meeting is going to be a comfort to a great many Asians who have been shocked by Peking's suppression of Tibet's autonomy and the overthrow of the Dalai Lama.

It can be added that Tibet also means a great deal to the Western Powers. Experience has taught them that when they reach a diplomatic showdown with the East they can expect troubles in many parts of the world. This time the trouble has begun inside the Communist empire, and instead of the West being harassed and weakened, Communist influence throughout Asia is suffering.

It may be too much to say that the Chinese Communists deliberately chose to suppress the [redacted] Tibetans just as the Foreign Ministers were about to meet. But they knew that Tibet was simmering, and presumably were able to time the developments there. If Peking had been chummy and had cared to co-operate closely with Moscow, it could have brought pressure on the West in several ways in Asia. It could have stirred up the Formosa question again. Now Khrushchev is receiving no help from his most important Communist ally.

Tibet is being likened to Hungary, and the suppression of the Dalai Lama's regime is producing the same kind of response that followed the blood bath in Hungary. But the analogy should not be drawn too closely. Tibet was not independent like Hungary. It has not been wholly independent of China for more than a few decades in the last centuries. The Dalai Lama, after the arrival of the Red Army nine years ago, acknowledged Chinese sovereignty, gave over the control of foreign affairs and defense to Peking and received an assurance of its autonomy. He also was allowed to keep his Tibetan army.

The overthrow of the Dalai Lama has much greater religious significance than political. And Communists will pay for their actions wherever religion counts in Asia. All Buddhist countries are outraged, so are Hindus, who hold the Buddha in great respect. The Dalai Lama has spiritual dominion beyond the borders of Tibet. More Tibetans live outside the country than in it. Many Mongol tribesmen who roam through Central Asia accent his spiritual leadership. In time, Peking will need to impose its hold on this part of the country. It has made a botch of Tibet. It cannot hope to win over the region for a long time to come. It can only crush resistance.

China's reputation as a good neighbor rose at the Bandung Conference, where Chou En-Lai fervently promised non-intervention and non-violence in all international relations. But since Bandung, China's reputation has gone down rapidly. In Burma, for instance, where Communist pressure has been intense and the Burmese Government has been too weak to do anything, it contented itself by citing on each occasion the paragraph of the Bandung agreement that was being violated. Now the hopes of a popular Chinese leadership in Southeast Asia seems to be shattered.

In Tibet, the Communists came in with three hundred thousand soldiers and a horde of civilians, determined to communize the country in short order. But the dose of modernism was too strong. Tribe after tribe rebelled. Peking sensed its mistake, and three years ago promised to take home its immigrant civilians and postpone the so-called socialist reforms indefinitely. And to appease the Tibetans it promised a new regional autonomy to embrace the regime of the Dalai Lama, the Communist military government and the regime of the rival Pachen Lama whom the Reds had installed. It even named a preparatory committee with the Dalai Lama as Chairman. But the plan stalled.

Nothing happened, and the Tibetans early last month rose in revolt.

Nobody is going to take up arms for Tibet, and no doubt like the Hungarians they will be effectively suppressed, though guerilla resistance can go on indefinitely. / India, which has the most acute concern at finding an aggressive army dictatorship on its borders, still can do nothing. / It has a treaty with Peking accepting Chinese sovereignty in Tibet, albeit with a pledge of Tibet's autonomy. / But Indians have lost their smiling credence in Peking's promises. / And so have a vast number of Asians, and that is an event of enormous importance.

Back in a moment.—

Jorge Bujan

Word for Today

For years, Communist China has posed as champion of the people of Asia. But now, by suppressing the government of the Dalai Lama, it has revealed its true face. I seem to recall an observation by Josh Billings. "The devil," he said, "is a very cunning fellow. But the blunders he makes always eats up the profits in his business."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 7, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Konrad Adenauer today accepted the nomination of the Christian Democratic Party for president of West Germany. If Adenauer wins the election, as expected, he would have to give up the office of chancellor which he has held since the founding of the Republic in 1949. Under the constitution of West Germany, the chancellor determines policy. The president has little authority. And so it would appear that...at 83,..Adenauer has chosen to play a less active role. It is possible...at the same time...that he will be less of a figurehead than Theodor Heuss, who is retiring under the law limiting the president to two terms. And no one expects Adenauer to bow out of politics altogether. In West Germany, the president is elected by Parliament. The election is held in July, and Adenauer would not assume the presidency until September or October. Consequently, he will still be at the helm in Germany when the foreign ministers meet next month in Geneva and very likely will be able to attend a meeting with Russia at the summit. Adenauer has opposed making concessions to the Russians, and advocates a tougher line than either Britain or the United States. Most prominently mentioned among those who may succeed Adenauer is the vice chaneellor, Ludwig Erhard, who is also economics minister. Erhard rebuilt the German economy after the war and is a supporter of the Western alliance.

Congress reconvened today after an 11-day Easter recess. Little business was transacted. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee confirmed the nomination of Carl Strom, a career diplomat, to serve as ambassador to Bolivia. The committee also approved the appointment of Ellis Briggs as ambassador to Greece.

President Eisenhower flew to Augusta, Georgia today for a vacation of golf.

The government today announced that 387 thousand fewer persons were unemployed in March than in February. Employment, in the same one-month period, jumped by 1-million, 106-thousand. The increase in employment was greater than the decrease in unemployment because many persons hired in March, such as students and housewives, had not previously been looking for work. The drop in unemployment was the biggest recorded for the month of March since 1950. For the first time, the figures were given out at a news conference...called by Seymour Wolfbein, a Labor Department expert. In the past, the statistics have always been given out in a printed release. Wolfbein told reporters that while some of the improvement was seasonal, the job picture is substantially brighter. One of the heartening signs, he said, is that practically all of the decline in unemployment was concentrated among persons who form the nation's "prime" working group---that is, among men above the age of 25. At the same time, Wolfbein said, "We are not out of the woods," And he cited the fact that the number of persons who have been unemployed for 15 weeks, or longer, has remained steady at about one and a half million.

George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, calls the government report "well staged propaganda." He says the drop in unemployment was "mostly seasonal" and that there has been no "appreciable" improvement in the over-all picture. More than 5-thousand union leaders and unemployed persons are due in Washington tomorrow for a rally, sponsored by the AFL-CIO.

In the British House of Commons today, the chancellor of the e xchequer, Heathcoat Amory, announced the budget of the Conservative government for the next fiscal year. It is a balanced budget...calling for expenditure of roughly 14-billion dollars. Nearly one-third of this would be spent for defense. Income taxes are to be reduced in the lower and middle income brackets by about 9 percent. The tax on a pint of beer is reduced by a little more than 2 cents (or tupence), and other purchase taxes are reduced on a wide range of consumer goods, including television sets, refrigerators and cars. The cuts have prompted speculation that the Macmillan government may be planning to call a general election soon.

Egyptian newspapers report a new revolt in Iraq. These Egyptian reports are not confirmed.

The political committee of the Arab League has ended a seven-day meeting in Beirut, capital of Lebanon. In a communique...issued tonight...the committee "condemns" those external influences aimed at dividing the Arab countries. The United Arab Republic has complained of Communist influence in Iraq.

It means a great deal to the Southeast Asia Treaty Organization, which opened its annual meeting in Wellington, New Zealand today, that Communist China is up to its ears in trouble in Tibet. SEATO exists to help Southeast Asian countries resist Communist expansion. It has been criticized in the past for over-playing the Communist danger. Now the events in Tibet are silencing this criticism, and the SEATO meeting is going to be a comfort to a great many Asians who have been shocked by Peking's suppression of Tibet's autonomy and the overthrow of the Dalai Lama.

It can be added that Tibet also means a great deal to the Western powers. Experience has taught them that when they reach a diplomatic showdown with the East they can expect troubles in many parts of the world. This time the trouble has begun inside the Communist empire, and instead of the West being harassed and weakened, Communist influence throughout Asia is suffering.

It may be too much to say that the Chinese Communists deliberately chose to suppress the Tibetans just as the Foreign Ministers were about to meet. But they knew that Tibet was simmering, and presumably were able to time the developments there. If Peking had been chummy and had cared to co-operate closely with Moscow, it could have brought pressure on the West in several ways in Asia. It could have stirred up the Formosa question again. Now Khrushchev is receiving no help from his most important Communist ally.

Tibet is being likened to Hungary, and the suppression of the Dalai Lama's regime is producing the same kind of response that followed the blood bath in Hungary. But the analogy should not be drawn too closely. Tibet was not independent like Hungary. It has not been wholly independent of China for more than a few decades in the last centuries. The Dalai Lama, after the arrival of the Red Army nine years ago, acknowledged Chinese sovereignty, gave over the control of foreign affairs and defense to Peking and received an assurance of ita autonomy. He also was allowed to keep his Tibetan army.

The overthrow of the Dalai Lama has much greater religious significance than political. And Communists will pay for their actions wherever religion counts in Asia. All Buddhist countries are outraged, so are Hindus, who hold the Buddha in great respect. The Dalai Lama has spiritual dominion beyond the borders of Tibet. More Tibetans live outside the country than in it. Many Mongol tribesmen who roam through Central Asia accent his spiritual leadership. In time, Peking will need to impose its hold on this part of the country. It has made a botch of Tibet. It cannot hope to win over the region for a long time to come. It can only crush resistance.

China's reputation as a good neighbor rose at the Bandung Conference, where Chou En-lai fervently promised non-intervention and non-violence in all international relations. But since Bandung, China's reputation has gone down rapidly. In Burma, for instance, where Communist pressure has been intense and the Burmese Government has been too weak to do anything, it contented itself wy citing on each occasion the paragraph of the Bandung agreement that was being violated. Now the hopes of a popular Chinese leadership in Southeast Asia seems to be shattered.

In Tibet, the Communists came in with three hundred thousand soldiers and a horde of civilians, determined to communize the country in short order.

But the dose of modernism was too strong. Tribe after tribe rebelled. Peking sensed its mistake, and three years ago promised to take home its immigrant civilians and postpone the so-called socialist reforms indefinitely. And to appease the Tibetans it promised a new regional autonomy to embrace the regime of the Dalai Lama, the Communist military government and the regime of the rival Pachen Lama whom the Reds had installed. It even named a preparatory committee with the Dalai Lama as Chairman. But the plan stalled. Nothing happened, and the Tibetans early last month rose in revolt.

Nobody is going to take up arms for Tibet, and no doubt like the Hungarians they will be effectively suppressed, though guerilla resistance can go on indefinitely. India, which has the most acute concern at finding an aggressive army dictatorship on its borders, still can do nothing. It has a treaty with Peking accepting Chinese sovereignty in Tibet, albeit with a pledge of Tibet's autonomy. But Indians have lost their smiling credence in Peking's promises. And so have a vast number of Asians, and that is an even of enormous importance.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: For years, Communist China has posed as champion of the people of Asia. But now, by suppressing the government of the Dalai Lama, it has revealed its true face. I seem to recall an observation by Josh Billings. "The devil," he said, "is a very cunning fellow. But the blunders he makes always eats up the profits in his business."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Apr. 8, 1959

This is the news:

Chancellor Adenauer said today that he wants to be president of West Germany in order to insure the "continuity" of his policy. / Under the West German constitution, the chancellor is more powerful...politically... than the president. / But Adenauer told the people of West Germany today, in a radio broadcast, that there is far more power in the presidency than people generally believe. "And he promised that if he becomes president, the foreign policy of West Germany will not be changed "one iota". / Adenauer said it was true, that his decision to seek the presidency had been made quickly. "But," he added, "it was well considered, and correct." / He called the reports that he had a falling-out with British Prime Minister Macmillan "frivoulous fantasy". He regretted, however, that---in his phrase---"the mood toward Germany in Britain had been systematically worsening for some time." This was unfortunate, he said, because...as allies..."the destiny of one will be the destiny of all." Dr. Adenauer denied that he had rejected any British proposal for a military "freeze" in Central Europe. The "scheme", he said, had been mentioned only very vaguely. No "precise" proposal had been made along that line...and so, he said, a discussion of it was impossible. Adenauer said that no government of West Germany can accept the plan for a federation of two German states...which aims, he said, not only at isolating West Germany, but also removes any chance for German reunification "in freedom". He said it would be "fatal" to try to satisfy the Russians with a series of "minimum concessions"---that would only "whet their appetite."

In London, the British Foreign Office announces that French Premier Debre (DEH-BRAY') will fly to England on Monday for a conference with Prime Minister Macmillan.

A "team of experts"...representing the United States, Britain, West Germany and France...are also due to meet in London on Monday. Their task will be to work out a unified set of proposals with which to confront the Russians when the foreign ministers meet in Geneva next month. Reports from London say the United States will circulate a new far-reaching plan for a new European security system. Under the system, it is said, every country in Europe and North America would be invited to sign a treaty...under which each signatory would be bound to help any fellow member that might become the victim of aggression. According to these reports, the treaty would hinge on prior agreement---by East and West---to reunify Germany. Official sources in Washington say they would be surprised if such a proposal were not being discussed. They emphasize, however, that it would be only part of the "broad spectrum of ideas" taken up at the London meeting.

Washington today was the scene of a mass rally designed to focus attention on the plight of the nation's unemployed. The demonstration was sponsored by the AFL-CIO...and its president, George Meany, accused the Administration of following a "do nothing" policy. Secretary of Labor Mitchell spoke to the rally of more than 5-thousand persons---most of them unemployed---and said he would "eat his hat" if there was not a dramatic improvement in the job situation by fall. In Congress, Senate Democratic Leader Johnson intruduced a bill which would create an 11-member commission to look into the unemployment problem. The Senate and House would each appoint three members. The President would name the other five members from industry and labor.

The rebel forces in Tibet have set up a provisional government. Reports reaching India, across the Tibetan frontier, say that the provisional government has issued a manifesto...demanding the withdrawal of Chinese forces, and requesting India to bring the issue of Chinese aggression before the United Nations. The rebel government further pledges itself to fight the Chinese Communists until Tibet has regained its independence. The Peiping radio acknowledged today that Chinese forces in Tibet are still meeting armed resistance.

At the SEATO meeting today...in Wellington, New Zealand...the emphasis was on economic aid. Prime Minister Nash of New Zealand warned that military cooperation in Southeast Asia is not enough. Hungry men, he said, are "not likely to have the strength, or enthusiasm, to stand firmly in defense of democracy."

The United States today lifted the travel restrictions imposed on Soviet officials in this country on April first. The State Department said Russia had removed its recent ban on travel, on the part of foreign diplomats, outside of Moscow and Leningrad. ~~This is aside from~~ certain other parts of the Soviet Union, ~~which the Russians have consistently regarded as "off limits".~~

→

~~For this reason, Russians have for years been forbidden to visit certain places in the United States.~~

The State Department confirmed today that Alger Hiss has applied for a passport, so that he can make a trip to Europe, and that the application will be granted.

The Navy has been authorized to proceed with the construction of three more atomic submarines, equipped to fire Polaris missiles. The comptroller of the Defense Department, W.J. McNeil, made the disclosure today in a letter to Republican Senator Cotton of New Hampshire. ~~Congress voted money for the submarines last year...but the funds were held up by the Defense Department. Bids are now being sought...and contracts will be awarded after the start of the new fiscal year, July first.~~

Edward R. Murrow: April 8, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Two elections pretty well dominate the thinking, if not the immediate policies, of two of our principal allies. / One is the General Election in Britain that must be held before May of next year. / The other is the Parliamentary election in West Germany in 1961. / These elections receive anxious attention in Washington and Paris, too. / For there is a possibility that both elections will be won by the Socialists, and if that happens, a drastic change is to be expected in the course of European and world affairs. The "hard line" toward the Soviet Union, so staunchly advocated by Secretary Dulles, President De Gaulle and Chancellor Adenauer would not be tenaciously held by Aneurin Bevan as Foreign Secretary in a British Labor Government, nor by Herr Ollenhauer as head of a Social Demicratic majority in Bonn. / And if it were not held, the Soviet Union might achieve its objective of breaking the Western Alliance.

No man in Europe is more alive to this danger than Dr. Adenauer. He knows that a prosperous West Germany under Socialist leadership might bargain for concessions with Khrushchev, and whether it intended to or not, might end up on the Russian side in the world power struggle. / This might not be due to Socialist ineptitude alone, but to a combination of it with the ambition of powerful German industrialists to grow rich in the Russian market.

Dr. Adenauer's decision to run for the Presidency is being interpreted as a retreat dictated by his age. One can be sure that he does not so consider it. He is fighting the election of 1961 Now, and believes he is doing what is needed to clinch a Christian Democratic victory. He may well regard his difficult decision as his final contribution to Western civilization.

Dr. Adenauer is eighty-three. By election time he will be eighty-five. That campaign will be arduous and a man of eighty-five could not conduct it strenuously. He might win on his prestige. But he also might lose because voters would know that his days in office were numbered and that a bitter fight might result from the search for a successor. ~~Another factor in the election is the possibility that the Socialist candidate, Dr. Carlo Schmid, may win the Presidency in the forthcoming vote in the Chamber in July. Some of the splinter Parties may support him. That would affect the election in 1961.~~ Dr. Adenauer tried to maneuver his Vice Chancellor and Economics Minister, Dr. Erhard, into the race for the Presidency, but Dr. Erhard refuses to eliminate himself as Chancellor. So Dr. Adenauer decided to run himself. That allows him to choose, guide and coach his successor, and leave the destiny of the Party to him when the election comes around.

Constitutionally, as President, he does not actually name the Chancellor. He only recommends him. But this time his recommendation is sure to prevail. He may lose a little power at the Foreign Ministers' meeting and the summit conference because he will be attending for the last time. But he is sure to have calculated that, too. He is doing what he thinks it takes to win in 1961. He told his radio audience today that his decision was "designed to secure the continuity of policy for years to come."

The consequences of a Labor victory in England would be only less far-reaching than a Socialist victory in West Germany. The next Labor Prime Minister would be Hugh Gaitskell. He is a moderate. In foreign affairs he is certainly not as pro-Soviet or anti-American as Aneurin Bevan, and might manage to keep his Foreign Secretary in line. But the Labor Party as a whole is not as deeply dedicated to the American alliance as the Conservative Party. The White House knows this quite well and loses no opportunity to help Mr. Macmillan discreetly. During the Camp David conference the British Foreign Office spokesman, Peter Hope, was allowed to set the tone in briefing the newsmen. Headlines began to appear in London proclaiming a Macmillan victory over Eisenhower. They had to distort what Mr. Hope said to do so, and there was talk of holding an American briefing to set the record straight. But the White House said No. It was content that Mr. Macmillan was being helped.

Any kudos Mr. Macmillan received from his travels and talks is as peanuts compared with the effect on the British election of the Conservative Party budget laid before Parliament yesterday. It reduces income taxes in the lower brackets and reduced the tax on beer. A stronger bid for votes could hardly be made. That is Mr. Macmillan's formula for keeping the Socialists out. Dr. Adenauer's formula in Bonn is quite different. He has to do it the heroic way.

Back in a moment.

~~George Bryan.~~

Harry Kramer

Word for Today

Chancellor Adenauer's decision to seek the presidency of West Germany came as a surprise. He deliberated for a long time, he says, and then decided suddenly. This is almost a direct paraphrase of something Andrew Jackson once said. "Take time to deliberate," he said. "But when the time for action arrives, stop thinking and go on."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 8, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Chancellor Adenauer said today that he wants to be president of West Germany in order to insure the continuity of his policy. Under the West German constitution, the chancellor is more powerful...politically...than the president. But Adenauer told the people of West Germany today, in a radio broadcast, that there is far more power in the presidency than people generally believe. And he promised that if he becomes president, the foreign policy of West Germany will not be changed "one iota." Adenauer said it was true that his decision to seek the presidency had been made quickly. "But," he added, "it was well considered and correct." He called reports that he had a falling-out with British Prime Minister Macmillan "frivoulous fantasy." He regretted, however, that---in his phrase--- "the mood toward Germany in Britain had been systematically worsening for some time." This was unfortunate, he said, because...as allies..."the destiny of one will be the destiny of all." Dr. Adenauer denied that he had rejected any British proposal for a military "freeze" in Central Europe. The "scheme," he said, had been mentioned only very vaguely. No "precise" proposal had been made along that line..and so, he said, a discussion of it was impossible. Adenauer said that no government of West Germany can accept the plan for a federation of two German states...which aims, he said, not only at isolating West Germany, but also removes any chance for German reunification "in freedom." He said it would be "fatal" to try to satisfy the Russians with a series of "minimum concessions"---that would only "whet their appetite."

In London, the British Foreign Office announces that French Premier Debre will fly to England on Monday for a conference with Prime Minister Macmillan.

A team of experts...representing the United States, Britain, West

Germany and France...are also due to meet in London on Monday. Their task will be to work out a unified set of proposals with which to confront the Russians when the foreign ministers meet in Geneva next month. Reports from London say the United States will circulate a new far-reaching plan for a new European security system. Under the system, it is said, every country in Europe and North America would be invited to sign a treaty...under which each signatory would be bound to help any fellow member that might become the victim of aggression. According th these reports, the treaty would hinge on prior agreement---by East and West---to reunify Germany. Official sources in Washington say they would be surprised if such a proposal were not being discussed. They emphasize, however, that it would be only part of the "broader spectrum of ideas" taken up at the London meeting.

Washington today was the scene of a mass rally designed to focus attention on the plight of the nation's unemployed. The demonostration was sponsored by the AFL-CIO...and its president, George Meany, accused the Administration of following a "do nothing" policy. Secretary of Labor Mitchell spoke to the rally of more than 5-thousand persons---most of them unemployed--- and said he would "eat his hat" if there was not a dramatic improvement in the job situation by fall. In Congress, Senate Democratic Leader Johnson introduced a bill which would create an 11-member commission to look into the unemployment problem. The Senate and House would each appoint three members. The President would name the other five members from industry and labor.

The rebel forces in Tibet have set up a provisional government. Reports reaching India, across the Tibetan frontier, say that the provisional government has issued a manifesto...demanding the withdrawal of Chinese forces and requesting India to bring the issue of Chinese aggesssion before the United Nations. The rebel government further pledges itself to fight the Chinese Communists until Tibet has regained its independence. The Peiping radio acknowledged today that Chinese forces in Tibet are still meeting armed resistance.

At the SEATO meeting today...in Wellington, New Zealand...the emphasis was on economic aid. Prime Minister Nash of New Zealand warned that military cooperation in Southeast Asia is not enough. Hungry men, he said, are "not likely to have the strength or enthusaism, to stand firmly in defense of democracy."

The United States today lifted the travel restrictions imposed on Soviet officials in this country on April 1st. The State Department said Russia had removed its recent ban on travel on the part of foreign diplomats outside of Moscow and Leningrad.

The State Department confirmed today that Alger Hiss has applied for a passport so that he can make a trip to Europe and that the application will be granted.

The Navy has been authorized to proceed with the construction of three more atomic submarines, equipped to fire Polaris missiles. The comptroller of the Defense Department, W.J. McNeil, made the disclosure today in a letter to Republican Senator Cotton of New Hampshire.

Two elections pretty well dominate the thinking, if not the immediate policies, of two of our principal allies. One is the General Election in Britain that must be held before May of next year. The other is the Parliamentary election in West Germany in 1961. These elections receive anxious attention in Washington and Paris, too. For there is a possibility that both elections will be won by the Socialists, and if that happens, a drastic change is to be expected in the course of European and world affairs. The "hard line" toward the Soviet Union, so staunchly advocated by Secretary Dulles, President DeGaulle and Chancellor Adenauer would not be tenaciously held by Aneurin Bevan as Foreign Secretary in a British Labor Government, nor by Herr Ollenhauer as head of a Social Democratic majority in Bonn. And if it were not held, the Soviet Union might achieve its objective of breaking the Western Alliance.

No man in Europe is more alive to this danger than Dr. Adenauer. He knows that a prosperous West Germany under Socialist leadership might bargain for concessions with Khrushchev, and whether it intended to or not, might end up on the Russian side in the world power struggle. This might not be due to Socialist ineptitude alone, but to a combination of it with the ambition of powerful German industrialists to grow rich in the Russian market.

Dr. Adenauer's decision to run for the Presidency is being interpreted as a retreat dictated by his age. One can be sure that he does not so consider it. He is fighting the election of 1961 now and believes he is doing what is needed to clinch a Christian Democratic victory. He may well regard his difficult decision as his final contribution to Western civilization.

Dr. Adenauer is eighty-three. By election time he will be eighty-five. That campaign will be arduous and a man of eighty-five could not conduct it strenuously. He might win on his prestige. But he also might lose because voters would know that his days in office were numbered and that a bitter fight might result from the search for a successor. Dr. Adenauer tried to maneuver his Vice Chancellor and Economics Minister, Dr. Erhard, into the role of the Presidency, but Dr. Erhard refuses to eliminate himself as Chancellor. So Dr. Adenauer decided to run himself. That allows him to choose, guide and coach his succussor, and leave the destiny of the Party to him when the election comes around.

Constitutionally, as President, he does not actually name the Chancellor. He only recommends him. But this time his recommendation is sure to prevail. He may lose a little power at the Foreign Ministers' meeting and the summit conference because he will be attending for the last time. But he is sure to have calculated that, too. He is doing what he thinks it takes to win in 1961. He told his radio audience today that his decision was "designed to secure the continuity of policy for years to come."

The consequences of a Labor victory in England would be only less far-reaching than a Socialist victory in West Germany. The next Labor Prime Minister would be Hugh Gaitskell. He is a moderate. In foreign affairs he is certainly not as pro-Soviet or anti-American as Aneurin Bevan, and might manage to keep his Foreign Secretary in line. But the Labor Party as a whole is not as deeply dedicated to the American alliance as the Conservative Party. The White House knows this quite well and loses no opportunity to help Mr. Macmillan discreetly. During the Camp David conference the British Foreign Office spokesman, Peter Hope, was allowed to set the tone in briefing the newsmen. Headlines began to appear in London proclaiming a Macmillan victory over Eisenhower. They had to distort what Mr. Hope said to do so, and there was talk of holding an American briefing to set the record straight. But the White House said No. It was content that Mr. Macmillan was being helped.

Any kudos Mr. Macmillan received from his travels and talks is as peanuts compared with the effect on the British election of the Conservative Party budget laid before Parliament yesterday. It reduces income taxes in the lower brackets and reduced the tax on beer. A stronger bid for votes could hardly be made. That is Mr. Macmillan's formula for keeping the Socialists out. Dr. Adenauer's formula in Bonn is quite different. He has to do it the heroic way.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Chancellor Adenauer's decision to seek the presidency of West Germany came as a surprise. He deliberated for a long time, he says, and then decided suddenly. This is almost a direct paraphrase of something Andrew Jackson once said. "Take time to deliberate," he said, "But when the time for action arrives, stop thinking and go on."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Apr. 9, 1959

This is the news:

The government today announced the names of seven men...each of whom hopes, sometime in 1961, to be the first American to travel in outer space. The seven candidates were carefully screened from an original group of 55 volunteers. Each of the seven is married, the father of at least one child. The youngest candidate is 32...the oldest 37. Here are their names: Lieutenant Malcolm S. Carpenter, Garden Grove, California, Navy; Captain Leroy Cooper, Jr., Carbondale, Colorado, Air Force; Lieutenant Colonel John H. Glenn, Concord, Ohio, Marine Corps; Captain Virgil Grissom, Mitchell, Indiana, Air Force; Lieutenant Commander Walter Schirra, SHIR-RAH Hackensack, New Jersey, Navy; Lieutenant Commander Alan B. Shepard, Jr.,

East Derry, New Hampshire, Navy./.and Captain Donald Slayton, Sparta, Wisconsin, Air Force./All these men are test pilots, who...in the selection process...showed special adaptibility to space flight./Their names were announced by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and then they were introduced at a Washington news conference./A reporter asked Captain Slayton what prompted him to volunteer. His answer was: "This is the future. We've gone about as far as we can on the globe, and we've got to start looking around."/ For the first flight, only one of the seven will be chosen...but, eventually, similar expeditions into outer space are expected to be made by the other six./Not until the day that the first American manned satellite is scheduled to take off will they know which man is assigned to it./The satellite will orbit the earth two or three times, then return---if the experiment goes according to plan---with the man safe inside./Today, all seven candidates expressed condifence that they would safely return./Dr. Keith Glennan, head of the space agency, said today that the manned satellite will be "as reliable as we can devise, as reliable as any experimental aircraft."

Tomorrow, a group of Administration officials will go to Cincinnati in an effort to determine whether the United States would be justified in going ahead with construction of an atomic powered airplane. The trip was arranged by the joint congressional atomic committee, and the party will include Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commission and Donald Quarles, deputy secretary of defense. Work on the project has been started at a plant just outside Cincinnati.

Acting Secretary of State Herter asked the Senate today to restore the 125-million-dollar cut voted by the House in the Development Loan Fund. Such a reduction, he said, makes questionable "the ability of the United States to meet the challenge posed by the situation in less developed countries."

Testimony given by General Norstad, commander of NATO, was released by the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Norstad said American military assistance was "indispensable" for the defense of Europe and the rest of the free world. Our allies, he said, have steadily increased their own defense expenditures. Each American dollar spent gives an "unparalleled" return.

Democratic Senator Symington said today that, in his opinion, some defense spending might be better spent for economic and psychological warfare. Symington based his remark on a trip he made to Europe while Congress was in recess. He said...in answer to a reporter's question... [redacted] that he would not "refuse" to run, if he were drafted for the Democratic presidential nomination. He said he has no presidential plans...or organization.

Premier Khrushchev said tonight that the American mutual security program "cannot serve the interests of peace." He charged, in a Pravda interview, broadcast by Moscow radio, that the program, in reality, "aims at gross interference in the internal affairs of other states." Khrushchev also accused President Eisenhower of ~~making~~ contributing to increased tension in the speech ~~Mr. Eisenhower~~ the President made at Gettysburg last week. Khrushchev referred specifically to Mr. Eisenhower's warning against appeasment.

The Panchen Lama...hand-picked by the Chinese Communists to take the place of the Dalai Lama, who fled to India...is leaving Tibet temporarily./ According to Red China's news agency, the Panchen Lama will attend the second National Peoples Congress next week in Peiping, although he arrived in Lhasa only five days ago, to head up a new puppet government. The Peoples Congress is expected to give rubber-stamp approval to the action taken in Tibet...and to elect a new chief of state, succeeding Mao Tse-tung. /Mao said last December, he no longer wanted the job. He will remain chairman of the Chinese Communist Party.

AH-KEE-HEE-TO

In a few minutes from now...in Tokyo...Crown Prince Akihito will take for his bride, a 24-year-old commoner, Michiko Shoda, and thereby make her the future empress of Japan. /She is, reputedly, the first commoner to wed an heir to the Japanese throne in 2,600 years. /An estimated 2-million visitors have come to Tokyo to see the bridal procession. /Japanese newspapers are calling the wedding "the event of the century".

ME-CHEE-KO

The dean of American architects, Frank Lloyd Wright, died in Phoenix, Arizona, today after a brief illness. He was 89.

In Washington, Vice President Nixon pitched the first ball today of the 1959 baseball season. The Washington Senators then proceeded to beat the Baltimore Orioles, 9 to 2. Over in the National League, the Redlegs defeated the Pirates, 4 to 1. Mr. Nixon pinch-hit for President Eisenhower, who is in Augusta.

Edward R. Murrow: April 9, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

There are two kinds of rivalry between this country and the Soviet Union to be anxious about. / One is in long-range weapons, the other is in gross national product. / The weapons get much more public attention. Perhaps they deserve to, perhaps not. / It may be that Khrushchev really believes that the Communists are going to win world domination through peaceful industrial expansion and not by military power. If so, pre-occupation with the weapons race is not enough.

Khrushchev has boasted that by 1970 the Soviet Union would lead the world in the total volume of production and in per capita production. / In its seven-year plan the Soviet Union is stepping up production by eighty percent, a rate of growth perhaps three to four times as fast as this country can expect to reach. If economics is to be the battleground, the Russians certainly are formidable opponents.

However, some of Khrushchev's statistics are challenged by Allen Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency. / Mr. Dulles is not inevitably right about Russia, as one can recall from his assurance that Marshal Zhukov was very much in power in Moscow just a few days before his downfall. / But his insight into Russian affairs is as good as any, and he told the Electrical Institute in New Orleans that Khrushchev's boast that the Soviet Union will have the highest living standard in the world in 1970 is "patently nonsense". He quoted statistics on production in Russia and this country that differ from the Soviet figures. And he believes that by 1970 the Russians will have a gross national product about sixty percent of our own, and a standard of living well below ours.

One could jump to the conclusion that if we are that far ahead in 1970 we have nothing to worry about. But Mr. Dulles did not say so, or even imply it. "If recent trends and present Soviet policies continue," he said, "Soviet military spending could increase by over fifty percent in the next seven years without increasing the relative burden on the economy." That suggests the question of what the burden on our own economy would be if military spending went up to sixty billion dollars a year in the next seven years.

Mr. Dulles also gave some arresting figures about the Russian economy. The Soviets out-produce us in machine tools by four times, he said. In other words they are making machines that much faster, which can only mean that if they keep it up they will surpass us in production. It may not be in 1970.

But if it happens at all, our relative power will suffer and so will we.

Mr. Dulles also reported that the Soviet Union is plowing back into investment a larger part of its current output. The Russian figure is thirty percent a year, compared with sixteen to seventeen percent in this country. Maybe they can't keep up this rate as the demand for consumer goods rises, but that is only a maybe.

Mr. Dulles points to a danger of real magnitude in the competition we face in the uncommitted and under-developed countries. By 1965, he says, Soviet output in some basic raw materials and certain industrial products will be as great or greater than ours. "These products," he said, "will be the kind that are needed for the industrialization of the less developed countries. The outcome of this contest - the Communist challenge in the under-developed areas - is crucial to the survival of the free world." So far, the Soviet foreign aid program in loans and training of personnel is still below ours. But this is at best a short-term comfort.

Mr. Dulles put the figure of Soviet industrial growth in the last seven years at nine-and-a-half percent, which is below the official Soviet claim. Our own rate of growth for the seven years before the recession was three point six percent. In the recession, of course, the economy stopped growing and actually fell back. Mr. Dulles said that the Soviet Union bases its comparison with us in 1970 on our not growing more than two percent a year. If that were to be the rate, he said, it would be virtual economic suicide, and he refuses to accept the figure. But neither he nor anyone in the Administration is saying what the real figure will be or how it will be reached. It is as pertinent to our well-being, one might think, as any statistic about the possession of Inter-Continental Ballistic Missiles in the years ahead.

Back in a moment.

Art Hannes

Word for Today

Allen Dulles concluded his speech by saying that the outcome depends, in large measure, on our steadiness ~~steadfastness~~...and on our willingness to sacrifice. John Galsworthy said, "The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it." And it has always seemed that "steady" was one of the best words in the English language.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 9, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The government today announced the names of seven men...each of whom hopes, sometime in 1961, to be the first American to travel in outer space. The seven candidates were carefully screened from an original group of 55 volunteers. Each of the seven is married, the father of at least one child. The youngest candidate is 32, the oldest 37. Here are their names: Lieutenant Malcolm S. Carpenter, Garden Grove California, Navy; Captain Leroy Cooper, Jr., Carbondale, Colorado, Air Force; Lieutenant Colonel John H. Glenn, Concord, Ohio, Marine Corps; Captain Virgil Grissom, Mitchell, Indiana, Air Force; Lieutenant Commander Walter Schirra, Hackensack, New Jersey, Navy; Lieutenant Commander Alan B. Shepard, Jr.,East Derry, New Hampshire, Navy...and Captain Donald Slayton, Sparta, Wisconsin, Air Force. All these men are test pilots, who... in the selection process, showed special adaptibility to space flight. Their names were announced by the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and then they were introduced at a Washington news conference. A reporter asked Captain Slayton what prompted him tovolunteer. His answer was: "This is the future. We've gone about as far as we can on the globe, and we've got to start looking around." For the first flight, only one of the seven will be chosen... but, eventually, similar expeditions into outer space are expected to be made by the other six. Not until the day that the first American manned satellite is scheduled to take off will they know which man is assigned to it. The satellite will orbit the earth two or three times, then return--if the experiment goes according to plan---with the man safe inside. Today, all seven candidates expressed confidence that they would safely return. Dr. Keith Glennan, head of the space agency, said today that the manned satellite will be "as reliable as we can devise, as reliable as any experimental aircraft."

Tomorrow, a group of Administration officials will go to Cincinnati in an effort to determine whether the United States would be justified in going ahead with construction of an atomic powered airplane. The trip was arranged by the joint congressional atomic committee, and the party will include Chairman McCone of the Atomic Energy Commitsion and Donald Quarles, deputy secretary of defense. Work on the project has been started at a plant just outside Cincinnati.

Acting Secretary of State Herter asked the Senate Today to restore the 125 million dollar cut voted by the House in the Development Loan Fund. Such a reduction, he said, makes questionable "the ability of the United States to meet the challenge posed by the situation in less developed countries."

Testimony given by General Norstad, commander of NATO, was released by the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Norstad said American military assistance was "indispensable" for the defense of Europe and the rest of the free world. Our allies, he said, have steadily increased their own defense expenditures. Each American dollar spent gives an "unparalleled" return.

Democratic Senator Symington said today that, in his opinion, some defense spending might be better spent for economic and psychological warfare. Symington based his remark on a trip he made to Europe while Congress was in recess. He said...in answer to a reporter's question...that he would not "refuse" to run, if he were drafted for the Democratic presidential nomination. He said he has no presidential plans...or organization.

Premier Khrushchev said tonight that the American mutual security program "cannot serve the interests of peace." He charged, in a Pravda interview broadcast by Moscow radio, that the program in reality "aims at gross interference in the internal affairs of other states." Khrushchev also accused President Eisenhower of contributing to increased tension in the speech the President made at Gettysburg last week. Khrushchev referred specifically to

Mr. Eisenhower's warning against appeasement.

The Panchen Lama...handpicked by the Chinese Communists to take the place of the Dalai Lama, who feed to India...is leaving Tibet temporarily. According to Red China's news agency, the Panchen Lama will attend the second National Peoples Congress next week in Peiping, although he arrived in Lhasa only five days ago to head up a new puppet government. The Peoples Congress is expected to give rubber-stamp approval to the action taken in Tibet...and to elect a new chief of state, succeeding Mao Tse-tung. Mao said last December he no longer wanted the job. He will remain chairman of the Chinese Communist Party.

In a few minutes from now...in Tokyo...Crown Prince Akihito will take for his bride a 24 year old commoner, Michiko Shoda, and thereby make her the future empress of Japan. She is, reputedly, the first commoner to wed an heir to the Japanese throne in 2,600 years. An estimated 2-million visitors have come to Tokyo to see the bridal procession. Japanese newspapers are calling the wedding "the event of the century."

The dean of American architects, Frank Lloyd Wright died in Phoenix, Arizona today after a brief illinss. He was 89.

There are two kinds of rivalry between this country and the Soviet Union to be anxious about. One is in long-range weapons, the other is in gross national product. The weapons get much more public attention. Perhaps they deserve to, perhaps not. It may be that Khrushchev really believes that the Communists are going to win world domination through peaceful industrial expansion and not by military power. If so, pre-occupation with the weapons race is not enough.

Khrushchev has boasted that by 1970, the Soviet Union would lead the world in the total volume of production and in per capita production. In its seven-year plan the Soviet Union is stepping up production by eighty percent, a rate of growth perhaps three to four times as fast as this country can expect to reach. If economics is to be the battleground, the Russians certainly are formidable opponents.

However, some of Khrushchev's statistics are challenged by Allen Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency. Mr. Dulles is not inevitably right about Russia, as one can recall from his assurance that Marshal Zhukov was very much in power in Moscow just a few days before his downfall. But his insight into Russians affairs is as good as any, and he told the Electrical Institute in New Orleans that Khrushchev's boast that the Soviet Union will have the highest living standard in the world in 1970 is "patently nonsense." He quoted statistics on production in Russia and this country that differ from the Soviet figures. And he believes that by 1970 the Russians will have a gross national product about sixty percent our own, and a standard of living well below ours.

One could jump to the conclusion that if we are that far ahead in 1970 we have nothing to worry about. But Mr. Dulles did not say so, or even imply it. "If recent trends and present Soviet policies continue," he said, "Soviet military spending could increase by over fifty percent in the next seven years without increasing the relative burden on the economy." That suggests the question of what the burden on our own economy would be if military spending went up to sixty billion dollars a year in the next seven years.

Mr. Dulles also gave some arresting fugures about the Russian economy. The Soviets out-produce us in machine tools by four times, he said. In other words they are making machines that much faster, which can only mean that if they keep it up they will surpass us in production. It may not be in 1970. But if it happens at all, our relative power will suffer and so will we.

Mr. Dulles also reported that the Soviet Union is plowing back into investment a larger part of its current output. The Russian figure is thirty percent a year, compared with sixteen to seventeen percent in this country.

Maybe they can't keep up this rate as the demand for consumer goods rises, but that is only a maybe.

Mr. Dulles points to a danger of real magnitude in the competition we face in the uncommitted and under-developed countries. By 1965, he says, Soviet output in some basic raw materials and certain industrial products will be as great or greater than ours. "These products," he said, "will be the kind that are needed for the industrialization of the less developed countries. The outcome of this contest - the Communist challenge in the under-developed areas - is crucial to the survival of the free world." So far, the Soviet foreign aid program in loans and training of personnel is still below ours. But this is at best a short-term comfort.

Mr. Dulles put the figure of Soviet industrial growth in the last seven years at nine-and-a-half percent, which is below the official Soviet claim. Our own rate of growth for the seven years before the recession was three point six percent. In the recession, of course, the economy stopped growing and actually fell back. Mr. Dulles said that the Soviet Union bases its comparison with us in 1970 on our not growing more than two percent a year. If that were to be the rate, he said, it would be virtual economic suicide, and he refuses to accept the figure. But neither he nor anyone in the Administration is saying what the real figure will be or how it will be reached. It is as pertinent to our well-being, one might think, as any statistic about the possession of Inter-Continental Ballistic Missiles in the years ahead.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Bur first here is Art Hannes with a word about the weather.

ART HANNES

MURROW: Allen Dulles concluded his speech by saying that the outcome depends in large measure on our steadiness...and on our willingness to sacrifice. John Galsworthy said, "The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it." And it has always seemed that "steady" was one of the best words in the English language. Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Apr. 10, 1959

This is the news:

The steel industry today called for a one-year "freeze" on the wages of its workers. / The twelve basic steel producers said...in a letter to David McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers...that the average hourly earnings of their employes already exceed those of workers in other manufacturing industries. / The companies argued that extending the present three-year contract for one year would help combat inflation, reduce foreign competitipn, and thereby increase employment. / (The present contract expires June 30, and negotiations on a new agreement have been scheduled for next month). / Union President McDonald promptly rejected the proposal made by the steel industry. / He said, "We want now, as always, to proceed with normal collective bargaining. We want to conclude a fair, decent, non-inflationary contract." McDonald accused the industry of indulging in a "stratagem". It is doing this, he said, "because before the month is out, it will be embarrassed by record riches, which it can neither explain nor conceal."

→

A nationwide strike hit the United States Rubber Company today. Eighteen plants were closed, after 27-thousand production workers walked off their jobs in eleven states. Wages are not the issue. The strike began last midnight when the company, and the United Rubber Workers, failed to reach agreement on contract terms covering pensions, severance pay, and working conditions. Negotiations with Goodrich, Firestone and Goodyear are continuing.

The Senate today approved a measure...calling for creation of an 11-member commission on unemployment. The commission would visit cities where there is a high rate of unemployment, and report back, with recommendations, in 60 days. The bill...which was written by Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson...now goes to the House.

Former Representative Brooks Hays of Arkansas said today that he believes his defeat last November should be investigated by the House...and that he has so advised the House Administration Committee. A moderate on the school integration issue, Hays was defeated by Representative Dale Alford, who conducted a write-in campaign....and who had the support of Governor Faubus. It has been alleged that printed stickers pasted on the ballots as write-in votes for Alford were illegal...and that in some precincts more votes than registered voters were cast. Hays said he was asking for the investigation, not as a defeated candidate seeking the seat, but as a private citizen interested in the integrity of an election.

President Eisenhower today "tapped" Senator Thruston Morton of Kentucky, to be the new chairman of the Republican National Committee. The retiring chairman...Meade Alcorn...resigned last week to return to private law practice. Mr. Eisenhower announced his choice after conferring with a nominating committee that flew down to Augusta, Georgia, where he is vacationing. The full National Committee will meet in Washington tomorrow...and Morton's election, at that time, will be routine. (The committee will also debate the question of a convention site in 1960.) Senator Morton is a good friend of Vice President Nixon. John Diedderich, national committeemen from Kentucky, said today that while Morton has made speeches strongly endorsing Nixon, he is confident the new chairman would be neutral in any battle that develops for the presidential nomination.

The White House announces that Sir Winston Churchill will visit President Eisenhower for three days, starting May 5th.

Peiping radio said tonight that the anti-Communist revolt in Tibet has received support from within Red China itself. The broadcast said the "reactionaries" of Tibet had been "closely linked" with other rebel groups in China's Sikang Province.

SEE-CHANG'

Under-secretary of State Douglas Dillon said today that the need for economic development in Asia is fundamental and would exist "irrespective of the Communist menace." Dillon spoke in Wellington, New Zealand...at the close of the annual meeting of the SEATO Council. He said, "We must never forget that while the primary purpose of SEATO remains collective defense the security we strive for will have meaning only insofar as we make use of it to work for the improvement of living standards throughout the area." A communique...issued by the SEATO Council...noted Red China's attempts at economic subversion and the need for counter-measures. The council approved a United States proposal to initiate a special research project for combatting cholera. It said study also should be given to a proposal submitted by Thailand for setting up rural development centers in the Asian member countries.

Pakistan today announced that its fighter aircraft had shot down a twin-engined jet, after it entered upon Pakistani air space and ignored orders to land. The announcement did not identify the nationality of the aircraft...but the Indian Defense Ministry says that one of its Canberras, carrying a crew of two, is missing after "a routine flight". It also says that the aircraft was unarmed.

The government of Haiti has asked Cuba to return the six men who commandeered a Haitian airliner yesterday and killed the pilot. The six men, identified as "revolutionaries", forced the co-pilot to fly the aircraft to Santiago, in Eastern Cuba. They boarded the airliner in Haiti.

Edward R. Murrow: April 10, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The so-called Four-Power working group ~~resumed its meeting~~ is to meet again in London ~~today~~ to put into final shape the counter-proposals the West will make to the Soviet Union, at the Foreign Ministers' meeting. The group first met in Paris and made gratifying progress. It was enthusiastically predicted that the West was going into the negotiations with the Russians better prepared than at any time since the war. All sides contributed ideas, but the United States made the most far-reaching proposal. It was for a package deal in which stage after stage was outlined ending up with German re-unification, a German Treaty and a General Security Treaty.

The New York Times reports that the principles of the offer call for the gradual re-unification of East and West Germany, beginning with expanded economic and cultural relations and the formation of non-governmental joint commissions. At a ~~larger~~ later stage, all political parties would be allowed to function throughout Germany, followed by a stage when a joint committee of East and West Germans prepares an election. Then follows actual re-unification and a Peace Treaty.

Accompanying each of these stages would be steps toward disarmament, ending with the signature of an East-West security pact that would guarantee all participants against aggression. This would commit the United States not only to defend any country attacked from the East but to defend the Soviet if attacked by Germany.

This plan was well along at the time of Prime Minister Macmillan's visit to this country, and was one of the subjects discussed at Camp David, though nothing leaked out about it at the time. The working group now will try to map out a conference strategy that brings British and West German policy into unison. Americans think it can be done.

The immediate rift between Dr. Adenauer and Mr. Macmillan is over a difference between disarmament and disengagement. The four powers have accepted the principle that since disengagement would weaken the German Republic, it must not be discussed except as part of the package, that is, it must hinge on German re-unification. Dr. Adenauer thinks Mr. Macmillan offered Khrushchev an arms freeze in Central Europe without a quid pro quo. Mr. Macmillan is understood to take the line that he did not offer disengagement but disarmament. And it has been agreed that disarmament does not have to be part of the package. But Dr. Adenauer says that in that case the disarmament zone would have to extend from the Atlantic to the Urals, and not be restricted to a zone in Central Europe. De Gaulle backed up this German position, and it now develops that the Pentagon did also. Anyhow, the Macmillan thesis was dropped.

It should not be too hard to find language that assures West German and British co-operation in the coming negotiations. That is what diplomacy is for. But finding the right language will not mean that the British and the West Germans see eye to eye. They look at the negotiations quite differently. For one thing, the British believe that Khrushchev genuinely wants a settlement in which he will make concessions as well as insist on them. Dr. Adenauer thinks Khrushchev is bluffing, that he overplayed his hand over Berlin, and if the West stands firm, he will have to retreat. The British believe that Khrushchev needs a diplomatic success for domestic reasons and that it will make for a quieter Europe if he gets it. They think he would be easier to live with than his rivals at home. Dr. Adenauer is sure Khrushchev is dedicated to the policy of a nibble-at-a-time, and if given one victory, will have to have one after another. Mr. Macmillan believes the time is near when the West should recognize the status quo in Europe, that is, give up its liberation policy in Eastern Europe which it can no longer implement, and give it up for a price. Dr. Adenauer is sure that such conciliation would end in disaster, that Russia would gain control of Germany with its productive resources and therewith become master of the world.

These are basic differences, and would make Western unity impossible if they were not set off by a basic agreement. Mr. Macmillan and Dr. Adenauer see themselves as being in the same boat, and if one is lost, both are lost. This is the fundamental that holds the whole alliance together. As long as the allies believe it, they hope they can disagree about methods in some safety.

Back in a moment

George Bryan—

The Western powers must make up their mind on Berlin, and soon. When he was chaplain of the Senate, the late Peter Marshall said: "Let us not be content to wait and see what will happen...but give us the determination to make the right things happen. Give us the courage to be either hot or cold...to stand for something, lest we fall for anything."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 10, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The steel industry today called for a one-year freeze on the wages of its workers. The twelve basic steel producers said...in a letter to David McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers...that the average hourly earnings of their employees already exceed those of workers in other manufacturing industries. The companies argued that extending the present three-year contract for one year would help combat inflation, reduce foreign competition, and thereby increase employment. (The present contract expires June 30, and negotiations on a new agreement have been scheduled for next month.) Union President McDonald promptly rejected the proposal made by the steel industry. He said, "We want now, as always to proceed with normal collective bargaining. We want to conclude a fair, decent, non-inflationary contract." McDonald accused the industry of indulging in a "stratagem." It is doing this, he said, "because before the month is out it will be embarrassed by record riches which it can neither explain nor conceal."

A nationwide strike hit the United States Rubber Company today. Eighteen plants were closed after 27-thousand production workers walked off their jobs in eleven states. Wages are not the issue. The strike began last midnight when the company and the United Rubber Workers failed to reach agreement on contract terms covering pensions, severance pay and working conditions. Negotiations with Goodrich, Firestone and Goodyear are continuing.

The Senate today approved a measure...calling for creation of an 11-member commission on unemployment. The commission would visit cities where there is a high rate of unemployment and report back with recommendations in 60 days. The bill....which was written by Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson... now goes to the House.

Former Representative Brooks Hays of Arkansas said today that he believes his defeat last November should be investigated by the House...and that he has so advised the House Administration Committee. A moderate on the school integration issue, Hays, was defeated by Representative Dale Alford, who conducted a write-in campaign...and who had the support of Governor Faubus. It has been alleged that printed stickers pasted on the ballots as write-in votes for Alford were illegal... and that in some precincts more votes than registered voters were cast. Hays said he was asking for the investigation, not as a defeated candidate seeking the seat, but as a private citizen interested in the integrity of an election.

President Eisenhower today tapped Senator Thruston Morton of Kentucky to be the new chairman of the Republican National Committee. The retiring chairman...Meade Alcorn...resigned last week to return to private law practice. Mr. Eisenhower announced his choice after conferring with a nominating committee that flew down to Augusta, Georgia, where he is vacationing. The full National Committee will meet in Washington tomorrow...and Morton's election, at that time, will be routine. The committee will also debate the question of a convention site in 1960. Senator Morton is a good friend of Vice President Nixon. John Diedderich, national committeeman from Kentucky, said today that while Morton has made speeches strongly endorsing Nixon, he is confident the new chairman would be neutral in any battle that develops for the presidential nomination.

The White House announces that Sir Winston Churchill will visit President Eisenhower for three days, starting May 5th.

Peiping radio said tonight that the anti-Communist revolt in Tibet has received support from within Red China itself. The broadcast said the "reactionaries" of Tibet had been "closely linked" with other rebel groups in China's Sikang Province.

Under-secretary of State Douglas Dillon said today that the need for economic development in Asia is fundamental and would exist "irrespective of the Communist menace." Dillon spoke in Wellington, New Zealand...at the close of the annual meeting of the SEATO Council. He said, "We must never forget that while the primary purpose of SEATO remains collective defense the security we strive for will have meaning only insofar as we make use of it to work for the improvement of living standards throughout the area." A communique...issued by the SEATO Council...noted Red China's attempts at economic subversion and the need for counter-measures. The council approved a United States proposal to initiate a special research project for combatting cholera. It said study also should be given to a proposal submitted by Thailand for setting up rural development centers in the Asian member countries.

Pakistan today announced that its fighter aircraft had shot down a twin-engined jet, after it entered upon Pakistani air space and ignored orders to land. The announcement did not identify the nationality of the aircraft...but the Indian Defense Ministry says that one of its Canberras, carrying a crew of two, is missing after "a routine flight." It also says that the aircraft was unarmed.

The government of Haiti has asked Cuba to return the six men who commandeered a Haitian airliner yesterday and killed the pilot. The six men, identified as revolutionaries, forced the co-pilot to fly the aircraft to Santiago in Eastern Cuba. They boarded the airliner in Haiti.

The so-called Four-Power working group is to meet again in London to put into final shape the counter-proposals the West will make to the Soviet Union, as the Foreign Ministers' meeting. The group first met in Paris and made gratifying progress. It was enthusiastically predicted that the West was going into the negotiations with the Russians better prepared than at any time since the war. All sides contributed ideas, but the United States made the most far-reaching proposal. It was for a package deal in which stage after stage was outlined ending up with German re-unification, a German Treaty and a General Security Treaty.

The New York Times reports that the principles of the offer call for the gradual re-unification of East and West Germany, beginning with expanded economic and cultural relations and the formation of non-governmental joint commissions. At a later stage, all political parties would be allowed to function throughout Germany, followed by a stage when a joint committee of East and West Germans prepares an election. Then follows actual re-unification and a Peace Treaty.

Accompanying each of these stages would be steps toward disarmament, ending with the signature of an East-West security pact that would guarantee all participants against aggression. This would commit the United States not only to defend any country attacked from the East but to defend the Soviet if attacked by Germany.

This plan was well along at the time of Prime Minister Macmillan's visit to this country, and was one of the subjects discussed at Camp David, though nothing leaked out about it at the time. The working group now will try to map out a conference strategy that brings British and West German policy into unison. Americans think it can be done.

The immediate rift bwtween Dr. Adenauer and Mr. Macmillan is over a difference between disarmament and disengagement. The four powers have accepted the principle that since disengagement would weaken the German Republic, it must not be discussed except as part of the package, that is, it must hinge on German re-unification. Dr. Adenauer thinks Mr. Macmillan offered Khrushchev an arms freeze in Central Europe without a quid pro quo. Mr. Macmillan is understood to take the line that he did not offer disengagement but disarmament. And it has been agreed that disarmament does not have to be part of the package. But Dr. Adenauer says that in that case the disarmament zone would have to extend from the Atlantic to the Urals, and not be restricted to a zone in Central Europe. DeGaulle backed up this German position, and it now develops that the Pentagon did also. Anyhow the Macmillan thesis was dropped.

It should not be too hard to find language that assures West German and British co-operation in the coming negotiations. That is what diplomacy is for. But finding the right language will not mean that the British and the West Germans see eye to eye. They look at the negotiations quite differently. For one thing, the British believe that Khrushchev genuinely wants a settlement in which he will make concessions as well as insist on them. De.AAdenauer thinks Khrushchev is bluffing, that he overplayed his hand over Berlin, and if the West stands firm, he will have to retreat. The British believe that Khrushvhev needs a diplomatic success for domestic reasons and that it will make for a quieter Europe if he gets it. They think he would be easier to live with than his rivals at home. Dr. Adenauer is sure Khrushchev is dedicated to the policy of a nibble-at-a-time, and if given one victory, will have one after another. Mr. Macmillan believes the time is near when the West should recognize the status quo in Europe, that is, give up its liberation policy in Eastern Europe which it can no longer implement, and give it up for a price. Dr. Adenauer is sure that such conciliation would end in disaster, that Russia would gain control of Germany with its productive resources and therewith become master of the world.

These are basic differences, and would make Western unity impossible if they were not set off by a basic agreement. Mr. Macmillan and Dr. Adenauer see themselves as being in the same boat, and if one is lost, both are lost. This is the fundamental that holds the whole alliance together. As long as the allies believe it, they hope they can disagree about methods in some safety.

Thi is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Western powers must make up their mind on Berlin, and soon. When he was chaplain of the Senate, the later Peter Marshall said: "Let us not be content to wait and see what will happen...but give us the determination to make the right things happen. Give us the courage to be either hot or cold...to stand for something, lest we fall for anything."

Goodnight and good luck!

This is the news:

President Eisenhower visited Secretary of State Dulles for 45 minutes today in Walter Reed Hospital. The White House then issued the following statement: "The President met this morning at Walter Reed Hospital with the Secretary of State. They, of course, discussed the secretary's physical condition. They also discussed matters relating to world affairs. The Secretary of State," the statement continued, "has returned to Walter Reed for additional medical observation and treatment. He is expected to remain at the hospital for some days. Pending additional medical evaluation, there will be no further statement from the President." News Secretary Hagerty told reporters he did not know the nature of the new treatment. That was a question, he said, for the doctors to answer. Hagerty said that Mr. Dulles has not resigned. A reporter wanted to know if Dulles at any time during his illness had turned in a resignation. And Hagerty declined to answer, saying, "This statement is of today."

~~At the State Department, officials said they had "absolutely nothing" to add to the White House statement.~~

President Eisenhower had planned...all along...to interrupt his Georgia vacation for a series of other engagements in Washington. Tonight, he will speak at a Republican women's conference...and tomorrow morning he will take part in the dedication of the Taft Memorial. The President plans to be back in Augusta tomorrow night.

French Premier Debre (DEH-BRAY') and British Prime Minister Macmillan conferred in London today. They discussed questions to be taken up with Russia at the forthcoming foreign ministers conference...and had what their spokesmen describe as "a useful inter-change of views."

The United States has sent a note to Russia...formally rejecting the Soviet demand that aircraft flying the Allied air corridor to Berlin stay under 10-thousand feet.

The Geneva talks on prohibiting nuclear weapons tests reconvened today after a three-week Easter recess. In an attempt to break the deadlock, the United States and Britain proposed a limited ban on nuclear tests... starting with explosions in the atmosphere up to 30 miles and under water. Once agreement were reached on the prohibition of these tests, the United States, Britain and Russia would proceed to negotiate the cessation of tests conducted underground and at extreme high altitudes. ~~The Russians have agreed to study the Western proposal...but their initial reaction is described as "cool".~~

The Air Force announces that the Discoverer satellite launched at Vandenberg Air Force Base this afternoon is now in orbit around the North and South Poles. The final stage of the rocket carries a capsule, weighing 195 pounds, which scientists hope can be recovered. The chances of recovering the "instrument package" are estimated to be about 1 in 1,000.

Another Vanguard satellite was launched at Cape Canaveral. This will actually be "three satellites in one", if all goes according to plan. It carries...besides an instrumented sphere for measuring the earth's magnetic field...an inflatable balloon for recording information on what the scientists call "atmospheric drag". The final stage of the rocket also is expected to go into orbit.

In a speech here in New York tonight, Vice President Nixon called for a strengthening of the World Court as an agency for settling international differences.

And the United Steelworkers Union proposed that the steel industry agree not to raise prices during the life of a new nationwide contract to be negntiated next month. Last week, the industry suggested a one-year freeze on wages. Union President David McDonald has said that the steelworkers want higher pay, based on higher productivity.

The former prime minister of Burma...U Nu...is stopping off here in New York on his way to Dallas, where he will attend an international conference on religion. Burma has a frontier bordering on the north with both Communist China and Tibet. The former prime minister graciously consented to answer some questions. TAPE RUNS 6:45, ENDS ON CUE: "--WILL CONDEMN CHINESE ACTION."

Thank you, Sir. For the past few minutes, this reporter has been interviewing the honorable U Nu, former prime minister of Burma.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

As a Buddhist, U Nu has done a great deal of contemplating, which gives him a certain perspective...and serenity. This is something we could all do with. "We would," as Frederick Mayer said, "achieve the perspective of peace amidst conflict, of serenity amidst turmoil, and fortitude amidst the ~~turmoil~~ twilight of despair."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, April 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The former Prime Minister of Burma, U Nu, is stopping off here in New York on his way to Dallas, where he will attend an international conference on religion. Burma has a frontier bordering on the north with both Communist China and Tibet. The former Prime Minister graciously consented to answer some questions.

Sir, how do you view recent developments in Tibet?

U NU: You know very well Burma has recognized the Chinese Republic ... the People's Republic of China. So by that recognition we also recognize the Chinese suzerainty over Tibet. So quite naturally, we in Burma regard this as an internal affair of the Chinese. But this should not prevent us from finding out what the Chinese are doing in Tibet. It does not amount to oppression of the Tibetans. If we think that what the Chinese are doing in Tibetan ... in Tibet amounts to oppression, then we'll have to condemn it, because we are opposed to oppression and tyranny in any form.

MURROW: You are maintaining a strictly neutral position, is that right?

U NU: Yes.

MURROW: Is it true that a great many people were disillusioned about China as a result of what happened in Tibet?

U NU: I don't know about ... (indistinct) ... we are not disillusioned, because we have never thought, you see, that a powerful like ... a powerful country like China will not resort to that sort of action whenever possible. plausible?

MURROW: Well, you have a 1500 mile frontier with China, does this trouble you at all? Do you think you can maintain your neutral position?

U NU: We think so. We have some sort of fear but by being neutral we would be able to neutralize China.

MURROW: And your concern is to neutralize China and at the same time, as you put it, save your own necks, is that right?

U NU: Yes.

MURROW: Tell me, how widespread - how many people -- after all the Buddhists are being suppressed in Tibet, right?

U NU: Eh?

MURROW: The Buddhists are being suppressed in Tibet now. How many people ... (inter.)

U NU: I don't know about it ... I don't know ... I don't know whether the Chinese are suppressing Buddhism there. As far as I know - the ... the anchorage Buddhism in the Chinese mainland ...

MURROW: Well, isn't it true that at the Bandung Conference, a great many people in Asia felt that China would not be expansionist, that there was to be peaceful co-existence - aren't those people going to be disillusioned now as a result of what's happened in Tibet?

U NU: As I told you just now, it is only an internal affair. Tibet is part of China ...

MURROW: Taken by force of arms though, was it not?

U NU: But Chinese suzerainty over Tibet has been recognized throughout ... even by the British. I'm not trying to advocate Chinese right in Tibet; but that has been an accomplished fact.

MURROW: And you don't feel that Buddhists elsewhere in Asia will be disturbed or doubting the future of Chinese policy as a result of this?

U NU: Regarding that, you see, some people may have doubt - it is not possible for I mean small nations who unfortunately or otherwise happen to be neighbors of a big country like China, it is not possible for them to have no doubts at all, you see, no fears at all. Not quite naturally the small countries will have doubts and fears for a big country like China.

MURROW: Well, sir, would you describe to me a little more precisely Burmese neutrality? What is it designed to achieve?

U NU: The first ... I don't like the word design - I think it has got a ... a sinister connotation. What our aims - is it what you mean?

MURROW: I accept the correction - much better said, yes.

U NU: Thank you. (laughs) Our first aim is to promote understanding which can lead to world peace - that is our first and foremost aim. The second aim is to save our own skin, because by being neutral we can neutralize a good many countries from interfering in our internal affairs.

MURROW: Then you do not consider that China is now interfering in the internal affairs of Tibet?

U NU: Since it has been recognized that Tibet is a part of China, we don't think that China is interfering in the internal affairs of Tibet. Because the Chinese suzerainty has been recognized when we have recognized the People's Republic of China.

MURROW: And then you are not fearful that China may come to interfere more in your internal affairs?

U NU: This is quite different - this is quite different. Because, you see, we are not in the same category as Tibet - we are quite an independent country - so if China interferes in our affairs, it will be an interference. It is not like Tibet.

MURROW: Well, sir, your government condemned the action of the Soviet Union in connection with Hungary ...

U NU: Yes.

MURROW: ... but you have not condemned Communist China for its action in Tibet, Why is that?

U NU: It is quite different. In the case of Hungary, Hungary is ... is a sovereign independent country, whereas Tibet is a part of China. The ... we have recognized Chinese suzerainty over Tibet. So it is an internal affair of the Chinese.

MURROW: Well, how would you summarize the Burmese position in relation to the current developments in Tibet?

U NU: We are really sorry that such a thing had happened there. But we must find out if the Chinese oppression of the Tibetans is the cause of what is happening now in Tibet. If that is so, we'll have to condemn the Chinese action there, because whoever does it, you see, we don't like oppression in any form. So we'll have to condemn the Chinese action there if the Chinese oppression of the Tibetan people is the real cause of what is happening in China, we'll condemn the Chinese action.

MURROW: For the past few minutes, this reporter has been interviewing the Honorable U Nu, former Prime Minister of Burma, long a staunch opponent of communism in his own country.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But, first, here is George Bryan with the word about the weather.

Ed. trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower visited Secretary of State Dulles for 45 minutes today in Walter Reed Hospital. The White House then issued the following statement: "The President met this morning at Walter Reed Hospital with the Secretary of State. They, of course, discussed the secretary's physical condition. They also discussed matters relating to world affairs. The Secretary of State," the statement continued, "has returned to Walter Reed Rospital for additional medical observation and treatment. He is expected to remain at the hospital for some days. Pending additional medical evaluation, there will be no further statement from the President." News Secretary Hagerty told reporters he did not know the nature of the new treatment. That was a question, he said, for the doctors to answer. Hagerty said that Mr. Dulles has not resigned. A reporter wanted to know if Dulles at any time during his illness had turned in a resignation. And Hagerty declined to answer, saying, "This statement is of today."

President Eisenhower had planned...all along...to interrupt his Georgia vacation for a series of other engagements in Washington. Tonight, he will speak at a Republican women's conference...and tomorrow morning he will take part in the dedication of the Taft Memorial. The President plans to be back in Augusta tomorrow night.

French Premier Debre and British Prime Minister Macmillan conferred in London today. They discussed questions to be taken up with Russia at the forthcoming foreign ministers' conference...and had what their spokesmen describe as "a useful interchange of views."

The United States has sent a note to Russia...formally rejecting the Soviet demand that aircraft flying the Allied air corridor to Berlin stay under 10-thousand feet.

The Geneva talks on prohibiting nuclear weapons tests reconvened today after a three-week Easter recess. In an attempt to break the deadlock, the United States and Britain proposed a limited ban on nuclear tests...starting with explosions in the atmosphere up to 30 miles and under water. Once agreement were reached on the prohibition of these tests, the United States, Britain and Russia would proceed to negotiate the cessation of tests conducted underground and at extreme high altitudes.

The Air Force announces that the Discoverer satellite launched at Vandenberg Air Force Base this afternoon is now in orbit around the North and South Poles. The final stage of the rocket carries a capsule, weighing 195 pounds, which scientists hope can be recovered. The chances of recovering the "instrument package" are estimated to be about 1 in 1,000.

Another Vanguard satellite will be launched at Cape Canaveral tonight. This will actually be "three satellites in one," if all goes according to plan. It carries...besides an instrumented sphere for measuring the earth's magnetic field, an inflatable balloon for recording information on what the scientists call "atmospheric drag." The final stage of the rocket also is expected to go into orbit.

In a speech here in New York tonight, Vice President Nixon called for a strengthening of the World Court as an agency for settling international differences.

The former prime minister of Burma..U Nu...is stopping off here in New York on his way to Dallas, where he will attend an international conference on religion. Burma has a frontier bordering on the north with both Communist China and Tibet. The former prime minister graciously consented to answer some questions.

Sir, how do you view recent developments in Tibet?

U NU: You know very well Burma has recognized the Chinese Republic...the People's Republic of China. So by that recognition we also recognize the Chinese sovereignty over Tibet. So quite naturally, we in Burma regard this as an internal affair of the Chinese. But this should not prevent us from finding out what the Chinese are doing in Tibet. It does not amount to oppression of the Tibetans. If we think that what the Chinsee are doing in Tibet amounts to oppression, then we'll have to condemn it, because we are opposed to oppression and tyranny in any form.

MURROW: You are maintaining a strictly neutral position, is that right?

U NU: Yes.

MURROW: Is it true that a great many people were disillusioned about China as a result of what happened it Tibet?

U NU: I don't know about...(indistinct)...we are not disillusioned, because we have never thought, you see, that a powerful country like China will not resort to that sort of action whenever possible.

MURROW: Well, you have a 1,500 mile frontier with China, does this trouble you at all? Do you think you can maintain your neutral position?

U NU: We think so. We have some sort of fear but by being neutral we would be able to neutralize China.

MURROW: And your concern is to neutralize China and at the same time, as you put it, save your own necks, is that right?

U NU: Yes.

MURROW: Tell me, how widespread - how many people --after all the Buddhists are being suppressed in Tibet, right?

U NU: Eh?

MURROW: The Buddhists are being suppressed in Tibet now. How many people...

U NU: I don't know about it...I don't know whether the Chinese are suppressing Buddhism there. As far as I know - the anchorage Buddhism in the Chinese mainland.

MURROW: Well, isn't it true that at the Bandung Conference, a great many people in Asia felt that China would not be expansionist, that there was to be peaceful co-existence - aren't those people going to be disillusioned now as a result of what's happened in Tibet?

U NU: As I told you just now, it is only an internal affair. Tibet is part of China...

MURROW: Taken by force of arms though, was it not?

U NU: But Chinese suzzrainty over Tibet has been recognized throughout...even by the British. I'm not trying to advocate Chinese right in Tibet, but that has been an accomplished fact.

MURROW: And you don't feel that Buddhists elsewhere in Asia will be disturbed or doubting the future of Chinese policy as a result of this?

U NU: Regarding that, you see, some people may have doubt - it is not possible? For I mean small nations who unfortunately or otherwise happen to be neighbors of a big country like China, it is not possible for them to have doubts at all, you see, no fears at all. No quite naturally the small countries will have doubts and fears for a big country like China.

MURROW: Well, sir, would you describe to me a little more precisely Burmese neutrality? What is it designed to achieve?

U NU: The first...I don't like the word design - I think it has got a... sinister connotation. What our aims - is it what you mean?

MURROW: I accept the correction - much better said, yes.

U NU: Thank you. Our first aim is to prompte understanding which can lead to world peace - that is our first and foremost aim. The second aim is to save our own skin, because by being neutral we can neutralize a good many countries from interfering in our internal affairs.

MURROW: Then you do not consider that China is now interfering in the internal affairs of Tibet?

U NU: Since it has been recognized that Tibet is a part of Ciina, we don't think that China is interfering in the internal affairs of Tibet. Because the Chinese suzerainty has been recognized when we have recognized the People's Republic of China.

MURROW: And then you are not fearful that China may come to interfere in your internal affairs?

U NU: This is quite different - this is quite different. Because, you see, we are not in the same category as Tibet - we are quite an independent country - so if China interferes in our affairs, it will be an interference. It is not like Tibet.

MURROW: Well, sir, your government condemned the action of the Soviet Union in connection with Hungary...

U NU: Yes.

MURROW: ...but you have not condemned Communist China for its action in Tibet, Why is that?

U NU: It is quite different. In the case of Hungary, Hungary is...is a sovereign independent country, whereas Tibet is a part of China. The...we have recognized Chinese suzerainty over Tibet. So it is an internal affair of the Chinese.

MURROW: Well, how would you summarize the Burmese position in relation to the current developments in Tibet?

U NU: We are really sorry that such a thing had happened there. But we must find out if the Chinese oppression of The Tibetans is the cause of what is happening now in Tibet. If that is so, we'll have to condemn the Chinese action there, because whoever does it, you see, we don't like oppression in any form. So we'll have to condemn the Chinese action there if the Chinese oppression of the Tibetan people is the real cause of what is happening in China, we'll condemn the Chinese action.

MURROW: For the past few minutes, this reporter has been interviewing the Honorable U Nu, former Prime Minister of Burma, long a staunch opponent of communism in his own country.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Bur first here is George Bryan with the word about the weather.

GEORGE BYRAN

MURROW: As a Buddhist, U Nu has done a great deal of contemplating, which gives him a certain perspective...and serenity. This is something we could all do with. "We would," as Frederick Mayer said, "achieve the perspective of peace amidst conflict, of serenity amidst turmoil, and fortitude amidst the twilight of despair."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Apr. 14, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles was re-examined today by the doctors. It was then announced that the cancer...which was discovered a month ago in his abdomen...may have spread to his neck. "During the last several days," the announcement read, "Secretary Dulles has experienced increasing discomfort in the lower neck. X-ray studies suggest that his discomfort may be attributable to the presence of a malignant tumor in the lower cervical vertebrae. External radiation treatment to the lower neck began today." The medical bulletin went on to say that the condition of the abdomen remains unchanged and that further treatment of the abdomen "is not now indicated."

It was announced this morning that Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter would replace Mr. Dulles at the meeting of Western foreign ministers, to be held in Paris in two weeks. In Paris, the Western powers will seek to align their respective positions, before meeting with the Russians on May 11th. / There has been no announcement to the effect that Secretary Dulles has resigned.

French Premier Debre flew home tonight, after conferring with British Prime Minister Macmillan in London for two days. / There was no communique. Debre summed up the talks by saying, "Our determination to agree went very far and deep." Macmillan said he was "enormously encouraged". There had been, he said, a "sense of common purpose." / But neither statesman pretended that differences in their approach to next month's foreign ministers conference with Russia, do not still exist. / The so-called four-power "working group"...representing the United States, Britain, West Germany and France...continued its preparations for that conference in London today. / ~~The experts making up this group are being guided by the set of directives given them by the NATO Council...which met in Washington earlier this month.~~

The United States has again called on Russia to cease the "harassment" of American aircraft flying the air corridor to Berlin. The State Department protest came after it was revealed that Soviet aircraft...for the second time in less than a month...had buzzed an American transport making the Berlin run. The new incident occurred on April third, and involved an Air Force C-97...which was flying slightly over the 10-thousand-foot ceiling demanded by Soviet authorities. Only yesterday, the State Department sent Russia a formal note...pointing out that the United States "never has recognized, and does not now recognize, any limitation to the right to fly at any ~~minimum~~ altitude in the corridors to Berlin."

Premier Chou En-lai of Red China today repeated the Communist charge that the Dalai Lama was kidnaped by Tibetan rebels and is being held in India against his will. Chou En-lai claimed that "for the greater part" the revolt in Tibet has been crushed. He spoke at a Peiping reception... welcoming the puppet Panchen Lama, as he arrived to attend the so-called "Chinese National Peoples' Congress".

The Dalai Lama...who fled from Tibet...will meet Prime Minister Nehru of India on April 24th. Nehru said today that India accepts the Chinese Communists as the "overlords" of Tibet. But, he said, if there is to be any lasting solution of the Tibetan problem, the autonomy of the country will have to be maintained.

In Congress today...the Senate Labor Committee issued a majority report saying that the Kennedy labor bill represents a "major attack" on the abuses exposed in the Senate Rackets Committee hearings. Republican Senators Dirksen and Goldwater disagreed. The report also said that, in seeking remedies, the Senate should not hurt the majority of unions which are honest. The Kennedy bill would require unions to publish detailed financial reports, elect by secret ballot, and prohibit persons convicted of major crimes from serving as union officers for prescribed periods. It would also make some changes sought by labor in the Taft-Hartley law.

The Democratic proposal for a commission to survey the unemployment problem was discussed today at a meeting President Eisenhower had with Republican congressional leaders. Mr. Eisenhower said he would not object to Republicans supporting the proposal...which already has passed the Senate. House Republican Leader Halleck gave the President a report, indicating that the majority of voters...sounded out by Republican congressmen during the Easter recess...favor a balanced budget.

Before flying back to Augusta this afternoon, Mr. Eisenhower took part in the dedication of a bell tower as a memorial to the late Senator Robert Taft. He praised Taft as a man who gave himself unstintingly "for the good of all America."

The Commerce Department reports tonight that personal income in the month of March made its biggest monthly gain in nearly four years. The annual rate of personal income is now 368-billion, 600-million dollars... a new record high.

Scientists have decided not to try to recover the "capsule" from that Discoverer satellite...which was placed in orbit yesterday around the North and South Poles. A faulty timing device is blamed for the change in plans. The capsule was a sort of instrumented forerunner to later devices for carrying mice and monkeys as passengers...and later, possibly man.

At Cape Canaveral today, an Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile blew up shortly after take-off. It was supposed to have traveled some 5-thousand miles down the Atlantic tracking range.

Edward R. Murrow: April 14, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

It is, of course, an axiom that in a world of possible annihilation by modern weapons, the only alternative to the rule of force is the rule of law. But since the discovery of nuclear energy more effort has gone into the ultimate weapons than into the development of the rule by law. It happens that both sides in the power struggle now have the ultimate weapons, so that the world is enjoying a kind of stalemate in the power struggle, if "enjoying" is the right word for it. This stalemate is being used feverishly by both sides to extend the possibilities of destruction. But it also can be used for the development of world law.

For some time President Eisenhower, Secretary Dulles, Attorney-General Rodgers and leaders of the Bar have been talking, in what seemed a concerted way, about the need for a world of law. It is known that the President is soon to ask Congress to repeal the reservation in our adherence to the world court which leaves ~~XXXXXX~~ us to decide what disputes affecting us are, and are not, subject to the court's jurisdiction.

Last night, Vice President Nixon brought this talk to a new focus with a new and specific proposal. It is that any new agreement reached with the Soviet Union in approaching negotiations shall include an undertaking to submit any difference over the meaning of the agreement to the world court, with both sides pledged to accept the findings of the court.

Mr. Nixon was careful to say that this idea still is not United States policy. His caution throws light on the difficulties the Administration sees in getting Congressional support for this and like proposals. However, the Nixon plan is likely to have easier going than the outright repeal of the court reservation, since it deals with agreements yet to be reached. Some Congressmen, particularly conservative Republicans and southern Democrats, shy away from unconditional adherence to the court as a general proposition.

Mr. Nixon called his proposal a major step in the right direction. And he harked back to the first summit conference to show the need for it. It will be remembered that the heads of government at Geneva agreed that "the settlement of the German question and the re-unification of Germany by free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the interests of the German people and the interests of European security." That was the wording. But it never was implemented. The Russians refused to re-unite Germany by free elections and we accused them of breaking their word. The Russians say that the West did nothing to create a new system of European security, on which the pledge about Germany depended. "The crucial question", Mr. Nixon said,

"is how an agreement is to be effective when the parties disagree as to what it means."

Mr. Nixon pointed out that the world court has had only an average of two cases a year in its twelve years of existence. This lack of business has been due to the fact that most nations adhering to the court have adopted the reservation voted by the United States. But that is not the only reason. It will not be quick and easy to build up the prestige of the world court. Even in this country, which is accustomed to the concept of a high court, it has not been easy. One might say that the unpopularity in the deep south of the Supreme Court's ruling on school integration makes for hesitation to extend the court idea to world affairs. In countries less accustomed to constitutional law the hesitance may be even greater.

But a still greater difficulty is the undeniable political nature of the world court at this time. Its members are chosen politically by the Assembly and Security Council of the United Nations, and though they have the highest respect as individuals, they are pretty generally expected to rule politically. The Soviet bloc at present has two seats out of the total of fifteen, ~~that of~~ the Soviet Union and of Poland. It would be optimistic of Mr. Nixon to expect the Soviet Union to commit itself to accept a ruling from this body as now constituted. In time the world court can demonstrate its objectivity, and the world can become what I might call "world-court-minded." But not until that has happened can a "world of law" be said to be within reach.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.—

The plan to use the World Court as an umpire in our disputes with Russia over the meaning of new agreements is fraught with difficulty. Yet it would seem an important step...worth trying. For as Barbara Ward recently observed, "The risks of inaction have never been so alarming; the political rewards of vision have never been so great."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 14, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles was re-examined today by the doctors. It was then announced that the cancer...which was discovered a month ago in his abdomen...may have spread to his neck. "During the last several days," the announcement read, "Secretary Dulles has experienced increasing discomfort in the lower neck. X-ray studies suggest that his discomfort may be attributable to the presence of a malignant tumor in the lower cervical vertebrae. External radiation treatment to the lower neck began today." The medical bulletin went on to say that the condition of the abdomen remains unchanged and that further treatment of the abdomen "is not now indicated."

It was announced this morning that Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter would replace Mr. Dulles at the meeting of Western foreign ministers to be held in Paris in two weeks. In Paris, the Western powers will seek to align their respective positions before meeting with the Russians on May 11th. There has been no announcement to the effect that Secretary Dulles has resigned.

French Premier Debre flew home tonight after conferring with British Prime Minister Macmillan in London for two days. There was no communique. Debre summed up the talks by saying, "Our determination to agree went very far and deep." Macmillan said he was "enormously encouraged." There had been, he said, a "sense of common purpose." But neither statesman pretended that differences in their approach to next month's foreign ministers conference with Russia do not still exist. The so-called four-power "working group"... representing the United States, Britain, West Germany and France...continued its preparations for that conference in London today.

The United States has again called on Russia to cease the "harassment" of American aircraft flying the air corridor to Berlin. The State Department protest came after it was revealed that Soviet aircraft...for the second time in less than a month...had buzzed an American transport making the Berlin run. The new incident occurred on April third, and involved an Air Force C-97...which was flying slightly over the 10-thousand-foot ceiling demanded by Soviet authorities. Only yesterday, the State Department sent Russia a formal note...pointing out that the United States "never has recognized, and does not now recognize, any limitation to the right to fly at any altitude in the corridors to Berlin."

Premier Chou En-lai of Red China today repeated the Communist charge that theDalai Lama was kidnapped by Tibetan rebels and is being held in India against his will. Chou En-lai claimed that "for the greater part" the revolt in Tibet has been crushed. He spoke at a Peiping reception...welcoming the puppet Panchen Lama, as he arrived to attend the so-called "Chinese National Peoples' Congress."

The Dalai Lama...who fled from Tibet...will meet Prime Minister Nehru of India on April 24th. Nehru said today that India accepts the Chinese Communists as the "overlords" of Tibet. But, he said, if there is to be any lasting solution of the Tibetan problem, the autonomy of the country will have to be maintained.

In Congress today...the Senate Labor Committee issued a majority report saying that the Kennedy labor bill represents a "major attack" on the abuses exposed in the Senate Rackets Committee hearings. Republican Senators Dirksen and Goldwater disagreed. The report also said that, in seeking remedies the Senate should not hurt the majority of unions which are honest. The Kennedy bill would require unions to publish detailed financial reports, elect by secret ballot, and prohibit persons convicted of major crimes from serving as union officers for prescribed periods. It would also make some changes sought by labor in the Taft-Hartley law.

The Democratic proposal for a commission to survey the unemployment problem was discussed today at a meeting President Eisenhower had with Republican congressional leaders. Mr. Eisenhower said he would not object to Republicans supporting the proposal...which already has passed the Senate. House Republican Leader Halleck gave the President a report, indicating that the majority of voters...sounded out by Republican congressmen during the Easter recess...favor a balanced budget.

Before flying back to Augusta this afternoon, Mr. Eisenhower took part in the dedication of a bell tower as a memorial to the late Senator Robert Taft. He praised Taft as a man who gave himself unstintingly "for the good of all America."

The Commerce Department reports tonight that personal income in the month of March made its biggest monthly gain in nearly four years. The annual rate of personal income is now 368-billion, 600-million dollars...a new record high.

Scientists have decided not to try to recover the capsule from that Discoverer satellite...which was placed in orbit yesterday around the North and South Poles. A faulty timing device is blamed for the change in plans. The capsule was a sort of instrumented forerunner to later devices for carrying mice and monkeys as passengers...and later, possibly man.

At Cape Canaveral today, an Atlas intercontinental ballistic missile blew up shortly after take-off. It was supposed to have traveled some 5-thousand miles down the Atlantic tracking range.

It is, of course, an axiom that in a world of possible annihilation by modern weapons, the only alternative to the rule of force is the rule of law. But since the discovery of nuclear energy more effort has gone into the ultimate weapons than into the development of the rule by law. It happens that both sides in the power struggle now have the ultimate weapons so that the world is enjoying a kind of stalemate in the power struggle, if enjoying is the right word for it. This stalemate is being used feverishly by both sides to extend the possibilities of destruction. But it also can be used for the development of world law.

For some time President Eisenhower, Secretary Dulles, Attorney General Rodgers and leaders of the Bar have been talking, in what seemed a concerted way, about the need for a world of law. It is known that the President is soon to ask Congress to repeal the reservation in our adherence to the world court which leaves us to decide what disputes affecting us are, and are not, subject to the court's jurisdiction.

Last night, Vice President Nixon brought this talk to a new focus with a new and specific proposal. It is that any new agreement reached with the Soviet Union in approaching negotiations shall include an undertaking to submit any difference over the meaning of the agreement to the world court, with both sides pledged to accept the findings of the court.

Mr. Nixon was careful to say that this idea still is not United States policy. His caution throws light on the difficulties the Administration sees in getting Congressional support for this and like proposals. However, the Nixon plan is likely to have easier going than the outright repeal of the court reservation, since it deals with agreements yet to be reached. Some Congressmen, particularly conservative Republicans and southern Democrats, shy away from unconditional adherence to the court as a general proposition.

Mr. Nixon called his proposal a major step in the right direction. And he harked back to the first summit conference to show the need for it. It will be remembered that the heads of government at Geneva agreed that "the settlement of the German question and the re-unification of Germany by free elections shall be carried out in conformity with the interests of the German people and the interests of European security." That was the wording. But it never was implemented. The Russians refused to re-unite Germany by free elections and we accused them of breaking their word. The Russians say that the West did nothing to create a new system of European security, on which the pledge about Germany depended. "The crucial question," Mr. Nixon said, "is how an agreement is to be effective when the parties disagree as to what it means."

Mr. Nixon, pointed out that the world court has had only an average of two cases a year in its twelve years of existence. This lack of business has been due to the fact that most nations adhering to the court have adopted the reservation voted by the United States. But that is not the only reason. It will not be quick and easy to build up the prestige of the world court. Even in this country, which is accustomed to the concept of a high court, it has not been easy. One might say that the unpopularity in the deep south of the Supreme Court's ruling on school integration makes for hesitation to extend the court idea to world affairs. In countries less accustomed to constitutional law the hesitance may be even greater.

But a still greater difficulty is the undeniable political nature of the world court at this time. Its members are chosen politically by the Assembly and Security Council of the United Nations, and though they have the highest respect as individuals, they are pretty generally expected to rule politically. The Soviet bloc at present has two seats out of the total of fiteen, the Soviet Union and of Poland. It would be optimistic of Mr. Nixon to expect the Soviet Union to commit itself to accept a ruling from this body as now constituted. In time the world court can demonstrate its objectivity, and the world can become what I might call "world-court-minded." But not until that has happened can a world of law be said to be within reach.

This is Ed Murrow I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The plan to use the World Court as an umpire in our disputes with Russia over the meaning of new agreements is fraught with difficulty. Yet it would seem an important step..worth trying. For as Barbara Ward recently observed, "The risks of inaction have never been so alarming; the political rewards of vision have never been so great." Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Apr. 15, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today announced the resignation of John Foster Dulles as secretary of state. / He made the announcement at his vacation headquarters in Augusta, Georgia...after conferring with Mr. Dulles for four or five minutes on the telephone. / The President emphasized that the decision to resign, because of recurring [redacted] cancer, had been made by Mr. Dulles himself. / Only yesterday, doctors at Walter Reed Hospital expressed fear that the cancer had spread to the cervical vertebrae---that is, to the lower neck. Mr. Eisenhower said he wanted to make it clear...that although Dulles was incapacitated, for carrying the administrative load as secretary of state...along with formulating policy...he was not helpless, and he would continue to serve as a consultant in the field of foreign affairs. The President praised Mr. Dulles as a man of " tremendous character and courage, intelligence and wisdom." He personally believed that Dulles had filled the office "with greater distinction than any other man our country has known." Mr. Eisenhower spoke with deep emotion, and his eyes were wet. He did not name a successor...but the appointment, he promised, "would not be long delayed." It would be a matter of days. / A reporter wondered if this meant that Dulles would not be succeeded by Under-Secretary of State Christian Herter, as has been generally supposed. Mr. Eisenhower said there were "a number" of men with particular talent in this field...and that there were "all kinds of considerations" to be taken into account. He did not, he said, want to imply either an intention to appoint a particular person, or a refusal to do so. / He said that, in any event, Mr. Herter would represent the United States at both the meeting of Western foreign ministers in Paris, two weeks from now, and at the foreign ministers conference with Russia in May. Mr. Eisenhower said that before making a final decision he would confer with Dulles. / News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower probably will also consult Vice President Nixon. / Herter is still believed to be the most likely successor to Dulles. ~~although the names of Under-Secretary~~ of State Douglas Dillon; John J. McCloy, ~~former high commissioner to Germany;~~ United Nations Ambassador Henry Cabot Lodge, Allen W. Dulles, ~~the secretary's brother,~~ and Thomas Dewey ~~all are being mentioned.~~

Members of Congress have issued statements, praising Mr. Dulles' courage and dedication to duty. Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson said that Dulles had "faced up to difficult and trying tasks with fortitude and resolution." The Republican leader, Senator Dirksen, spoke of Mr. Dulles' "dedicated and unselfish service, rendered in the conduct of foreign relations and in pursuing the goal of peace and good will." Adlai Stevenson said he knew of no one "who has served his country more diligently and devotedly than Secretary Dulles." ~~Stevenson said that Dulles will have the gratitude of free people everywhere.~~

Regret and gratitude also are being expressed in the capitals of Western Europe. But our allies...each in a different way...are asking themselves how the resignation of Secretary Dulles will affect American foreign policy and the forthcoming negotiations with Russia regarding general European security and...in particular...Berlin. / For that reaction, we go first to my colleague, Charles Collingwood in London.

Tape runs 2:15
Ends on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

The French also are looking ahead to a new chapter in American diplomacy, although they expect the principles of American foreign policy to remain pretty much the same. / For that story, we switch to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

Tape runs 2:07
Ends on cue: "--to Edward R. Murrow in N.Y."

In West Germany, there is a feeling of personal loss. / Ernest Leiser reports that story from Bonn.

Tape runs 2:02
Ends on cue: "Now back to Edward R. Murrow in N.Y."

The third incident in three weeks was reported today in the Allied air corridor, leading to Berlin. / An American transport, while flying to and from Berlin, was tailed for several miles by two Soviet fighter aircraft. But, unlike the two previous ~~instances~~ cases, the transport was not "buzzed." /

The American aircraft was powered by turbo-prop engines...and, as customary for aircraft of this type, it was flying above 10-thousand feet. Soviet authorities claim this is "against regulations". We say no agreement for such a flight ceiling exists.

Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba flew to the United States tonight for an unofficial visit of 11 days.

And...in Washington...the Federal Reserve Board announces that industrial production in the month of March ~~mounted~~ climbed to an all-time high.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is ~~a word from George Bugan.~~ DAN McDONELL with a word about the weather

Word for Today

In connection with the resignation of Secretary Dulles, there comes to mind these words...written by Woodrow Wilson. [Wilson was ~~mmm~~ writing of the elder Pitt.] "His mind was clear and strong, his will was unwavering, his convictions were uncompromising...his confidence in himself was implicit, his love for his country was real and intense."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, April 15, 1959
8:45 - 8:00 PM, EST

MURROW: For that reaction, we go first to my colleague Charles Collingwood in London.

COLLINGWOOD: It isn't that the British hadn't expected Mr. Dulles to have to resign - they had, but now that the resignation is a fact it has made them reflect again on how much he will be missed in this period of talks with Russia which are about to begin. It's not only that his skills as a negotiator will be missed, he's always taken the lead at the conference table, but the British who are beginning to feel increasingly isolated diplomatically in the councils ofthe West had come to think, just as he was taken ill, that Mr. Dulles was really on their side - or at least that he understood what they were getting at in their suggestions as to how to deal with the Russians. He, they knew, had it in his power to shift American policy toward a more flexible line and strongly to influence the attitudes of Chancellor Adenauer and General de Gaulle. They do not think that Mr. Dulles's successor - whoever he may be, however, able he may be will have that power or if he did would be able to exercise it between now and the Geneva Foreign Ministers meeting next month. The British are, therefore, more than ever resigned now to fighting a lonely battle for their own more flexible proposals. Commenting on this, THE LONDON EVENING STANDARD, tonight, concludes that the retirement of Mr. Dulles will put new responsibilities on Prime Minister Macmillan. "Now, only he," says THE STANDARD, "has the will to try out new ideas and the authority to persuade the Western allies to accept a change of policy." Speaking about the successor to Mr. Dulles, the British were somewhat surprised that President Eisenhower did not today name acting Secretary Christian Herter as Mr. Dulles's successor. The comment in England on Mr. Dulles's departure from active diplomacy has been warm and appreciative Prime Minister Macmillan spoke of his dedication. Foreign Secretary Selwyn

Lloyd praised Mr. Dulles's intellectual gifts and sense of duty, the leader of the opposition, Hugh Gaitskill paid tribute to his profound knowledge of world affairs, "A most serious loss to the West" said Mr. Gaitskill. For many years, John Foster Dulles has been the focus of British criticism both informed and uninformed on American policy. It is ironic that opinion in Britain, at least, only warmed to him in his last months in office.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The French also are looking ahead to a new chapter in American diplomacy. Although they expect the principles of American foreign policy to remain pretty much the same. For that story, we switch to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: There is saddness and even embarrasement here in Paris tonight, but there is no gloom. The resignation of Mr. Dulles did not come as a surprise in this capital of NATO. NATO officials who returned from Washington a week ago all were convinced that the resignation of Mr. Dulles was only a matter of days. Indeed, for the past two weeks or so, Western diplomats have been proceeding on the assumption that there would be a change in the personal direction of American foreign policy. But they seem to be convinced that there will be no major change in the principles of that policy. Although Mr. Dulles was the chief architect of America's policy, Mr. Eisenhower was and remains the head of the firm, and it's unlikely that he will permit any radical changes. It is also unlikely, it is thought in Paris, that Mr. Eisenhower would appoint a successor who did not convince him that he subscribes to the basic Dulles views. They key word to describe Dulles's thinking over here is the word "views" or "attitudes" for ~~in~~ a in fact, there was no Dulles doctrine as such. John Foster Dulles was a lawyer who held deep convictions but he was not a creative thinker as foreign secretary. He did not introduce any doctrine comparable to the Marshall Plan, The Atlantic Alliance or to the European community which were the economic, military and political pillers of American foreign policy before the Dulles era. Mr. Dulles carried on the policies laid down by his predecessors. His own contribution was a style of diplomacy rather than a doctrine. He was the official "~~Know~~ No Man" of the Western world and as such played a highly important role at a time when there was a good deal of wavering and wondering about new directions and a ~~Know~~ NO Man wasbadly needed. We are, however, entering a whole new period of pdiplomacy, and the feeling here is that perhaps a new man was needed.

This is Paris. David Schoenbrun reporting.

I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In West Germany, there is a feeling of personal loss. Ernest Leiser reports that story from Bonn.

LEISER: The Government of West Germany almost always takes note with prompt protocal of the death or departure of a foreign statesman, usually, however, its statements are formal, a bit cold and cut and dry. They read as if they've been drenched out of a bottom drawer from a file labeled Platitude. But it was different in Bonn today when the news reached here that Secretary Dulles had succumbed to his cancer and had to resign. Comment came quickly, but it was not just diplomatic nicities when the West German Government said that Dulles's action was a great loss especially for the German people. Nor was it a platitude when the Foreign Ministery said that it in particular looked back to long years of common effort with Dulles, full of understanding and full of trust. Chancellor Konrad Adenauer on holiday in Italy declined to say anything formal for the record right away. But those of us who talked with Adenauer aides with the Old Man were told that he seemed really moved and deeply saddened. This is not surprising, Adenauer despite his granite face is a moddy and emotional man. And for a long while he has regarded Dulles as much a personal friend as an ally. The Chancellor has let it be known that he has had more faith in the consistancy of policy and purpose of the U.S. Secretary of State than he's had in the U.S. President. It is undoubtedly true as the newspaper here quotes Adenauer/said today, "That the 83 year old Chancellor regarded Dulles and himself as the two strongest pillers of the West holding the Atlantic Alliance firm against Soviet attempts to undermine it." But there is also some unhappiness in official Bonn tonight about the fact that since Dulles had to go he did not lay down his mantle earlier. The West Germans think that just over three weeks is not enough time for a new Secretary of State to organize and lead U.S. foriegn policy into a Big Four meeting with Russia. Even if under Secretary Herter takes over the Germans say, he cannot emerge from the shadow of his boss in so short a time.

This is Ernest Leiser in Bonn. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The third incident in three weeks was reported ...

PT/ N.M.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 15, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today announced the resignation of John Foster Dulles as Secretary of State. He made the announcement at his vacation headquarters in Augusta, Georgia...after conferring with Mr. Dulles for four or five minutes on the telephone. The President emphasized that the decision to resign because of recurring cancer had been made by Mr. Dulles himself. Only yesterday, doctors at Walter Reed Hospital expressed fear that the cancer had spread to the cervical vertebrae---that is, to the lower neck. Mr. Eisenhower said he wanted to make it clear...that although Dulles was incapcitated for carrying the administrative load as secretary of state...along with formulating policy...he was not helpless, and he would continue to serve as a consultant in the field of foreign affairs. The President praised Mr. Dulles as a man of "tremendous character and courage, intelligence and wisdom." He personally believed that Dulles had filled the office "with greater distinction than any other man our country has known." Mr. Eisenhower spoke with deep emotion, and his eyes were wet. He did not name a successor...but the appointment, he promised, "would not be long delayed." It would be a matter of days. A reporter wondered if this meant that Dulles would not be succeeded by Under-Secretary of State Christian Herter, as has been generally supposed. Mr. Eisenhower said there were "a number" of men with particular talent in this field... and that there were "all kinds of considerations" to be taken into account. He did not, he said, want to imply either an intention to appoint a particular person, or a refusal to do so. He said that, in any event, Mr. Herter would represent the United States at both the meeting of Western foreign ministers in Paris two weeks from now and at the foreign ministers conference with Russia in May. Mr. Eisenhower said that before making a final decision he would confer with Dulles. News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower probably will also consult Vice President Nixon. Herter is still believed to be the most likely successor to Dulles.

Members of Congress have issued statements, praising Mr. Dulles' courage and dedication to duty. Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson said that Dulles had "faced up to difficult and trying tasks with fortitude and resolution." The Republican leader, Senator Dirksen, spoke of Mr. Dulles' "dedicated and unselfish service, rendered in the conduct of foreign relations and in pursuing the goal of peace and good will." Adlai Stevenson said he knew of no one "who has served his country more diligently and devotedly than Secretary Dulles."

Regret and gratitude also are being expressed in the capitals of Western Europe. But our allies...each in a different way...are asking themselves how the resignation of Secretary Dulles will affect American foreign policy and the forthcoming negotiations with Russia regarding general European security and...in particular...Berlin. For that reaction, we go first to my colleague Charles Collingoood in London.

COLLINGWOOD: It isn't that the British hadn't expected Mr. Dulles to have to resign - they had, but now that the resignation is a fact it has made them reflect again on how much he will be missed in this period of talks with Russia which are about to begin. It's not only that his skills as a negotiator will be missed, he's always taken the lead at the conference table, but the British who are beginning to feel increasingly isolated diplomatically in the councils of the West had come to think, just as he was taken ill, that Mr. Dulles was really on their side - or at least that he understood what they were getting at in their suggestions as to how to deal with the Russians. He, they knew, had it in his power to shift American policy toward a more flexible line and strongly to influence the attitudes of Chancellor Adenauer and General DeGaulle. They do not think that Mr. Dulles's successor - whoever he may be, however able he may be will have that power or if he did would be able to exercise it between now and the Geneva Foreign Ministers meeting next month. The British are, therefore, more than ever resigned now to fighting a lonely battle for their own more flexible proposals. Commenting on this, The London Evening Standard tonight, concludes that the retirement of Mr. Dulles will put new responsibilities on Prime Minister Macmillan. "Now, only he," says The Standard, "has the will to try out new ideas and the authority to persuade the Western allies to accept a change of policy." Speaking about the successor to Mr. Dulles, the British were somewhat surprised that President Eisenhower did not today name acting Secretary Christian Herter as Mr. Dulles's successor. The comment in England on Mr. Dulles's departure from active diplomacy has been warm and appreciative. Prime Minister Macmillan spoke of his dedication. Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd praised Mr. Dulles's intellectual gifts and sense of duty, the leader of the opposition, Hugh Gaitskill paid tribute to his profound knowledge of world affairs, "A most serious loss to the West" said Mr. Gaitskill. For many years, John Foster Dulles has been the focus of British criticism both informed and uniformed on American policy. It is ironic that opinion in Britain, at least, only warmed to him in his last months in office.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The French also are looking ahead to a new chapter in American diplomacy. Although they expect the principles of American foreign policy to remain pretty much the same. For that story, we switch to Paris and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: There is sadness and even embarrassment here in Paris tonight, but there is no gloom. The resignation of Mr. Dulles did not come as a surprise in this capital of NATO. NATO officials who returned from Washington a week ago all were convinced that the resignation of Mr. Dulles was only a matter of days. Indeed, for the past two weeks or so, Western diplomats have been proceeding on the assumption that there would be a change in the personal direction of American foreign policy. But they seem to be convinced that there will be no major change in the principles of that policy. Although Mr. Dulles was the chief architect of American's policy, Mr. Eisenhower was and remains the head of the firm, and it's unlikely that he will permit any radical changes. It is also unlikely, it is thought in Paris, that Mr. Eisenhower would appoint a successor who did not convince him that he subscribes to the basic Dulles views. The key word to describe Dulles's thinking over here is the word "views" or "attitudes" for fact, there was no Dulles doctrine as such. John Foster Dulles was a lawyer who held deep convictions but he was not a creative thinker as foreign secretary. He did not introduce any doctrine comparable to the Marshall Plan, the Atlantic Alliance or to the European community which were the economic, military and political pillars of American foreign policy before the Dulles era. Mr. Dulles carried on the policies laid down by his predecessors. His own contribution was a style of diplomacy rather than a doctrine. He was the official "No Man" of the Western world and as such played a highly important role at a time when there was a good deal of wavering and wondering about new directions and a no man was badly needed. We are, however, entering a whole new period of diplomacy, and the feeling here is that perhaps a new man was needed.

This is Paris. David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: In West Germany, there is a feeling of personal loss. Ernest Leiser reports that story from Bonn.

LEISER: The government of West Germany almost always takes note with prompt protocol of the death or departure of a foreign statesman; usually however, its statements are formal, a bit cold and cut and dry. They read as if they've been dredged out of a bottom drawer from a file labelled "Platitude." But it was different in Bonn today when the news reached here that Secretary Dulles had succumbed to his cancer and had to resign. Comment came quickly, but it was not just diplomatic nicities when the West German Government said that Dulles's action was a great loss especially for the German people. Nor was it a platitude when the Foreign Ministry said that it in particular looked back to long years of common effort with Dulles, full of understanding and full of trust. Caancellor Konrad Adenauer on holiday in Italy declined to say anything formal for the record right away. But those of us who talked with Adenauer aides with the old man were told that he seemed really moved and deeply saddened. This is not surprising, Adenauer despite his granite face is a moody and emotional man. And for a long while he has regarded Dulles as much a personal friend as an ally. The Chancellor has let it be known that he has had more faith in the consistancy of policy and purpose of the U.S. Secretary of State than he's had in the U.S. President. It is undoubtedly true as the newspaper here quotes Adenauer said today, "That the 83 year old Chancellor regarded Dulles and himself as the two strongest pillars of the West holding the Atlantic Alliance firm against Soviet attempts to undermine it." But there is also some unhappiness in official Bonn tonight about the fact that since Dulles had to go he did not lay down his mantle earlier. The West Germans think that just over three weeks is not enough time for a new Secretary of State to organize and lead U.S. foreign policy into a Big Four meeting with Russia. Even if under Secretary Herter takes over the Germans say, he cannot emerge from the shadow of his boss in so short a time.

Tiis is Ernest Leiser in Bonn. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The third incident in three weeks was reported today in the Allied air corridor, leading to Berlin. An American transport, while flying to and from Berlin was tailed for several miles by two Soviet fighter aircraft. But, unlike the two previous cases, the transport was not buzzed. The American aircraft was powered by turbo-prop engines...and, as customary for aircraft of this type, it was flying above 10-thousand feet. Soviet authorities claim this is "against regulations." We say no agreement for such a flight ceiling exists.

Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba flew to the United States tonight for an unofficial visit of 11 days.

And...in Washington...the Federal Reserve Board announces that industrial production in the month of March climbed to an all-time high.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is Dan McDonell with a word about the weather.

DAN MCDONELL

MURROW: In connection with the resignation of Secretary Dulles, there comes to mind these words...written by Woodrow Wilson. Wilson was writing of the elder Pitt. "His mind was clerr and strong, his will was unwavering, his convictions were uncompromising...his confidence in himself was implicit, his love for his country was real and intense."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Apr. 16, 1959

This is the news:

Reports from Washington say [redacted] that Christian Herter has undergone a special medical examination to determine whether he is physically capable of succeeding John Foster Dulles as secretary of state. Herter has been serving as acting secretary during Mr. Dulles' illness. He is widely regarded as the man most likely to succeed Dulles, who resigned yesterday. But, for more than 10 years, he has been afflicted with arthritis. Mr. Herter's personal physician said yesterday that he was "perfectly capable" of carrying the burden of secretary of state. Nevertheless, the Associated Press says, President Eisenhower wanted a special medical check-up of Herter "to make absolutely certain before naming him to the post."

The President today formally accepted Mr. Dulles' resignation. In the customary exchange of letters, Mr. Eisenhower said, "I accept with deepest personal regret, and only because I have no alternative."

"As a statesman of world stature," the President said, "you have set a record in the stewardship of our foreign relations that stands clear and strong for all to see." In his letter, Mr. Dulles expressed gratitude for the opportunities and responsibilities given him by the President. "I was brought up," he said, "in the belief that this nation of ours was not merely a self-serving society, but was founded with a mission to help build a world where liberty and justice would prevail." He offered to continue to serve in a more limited capacity, and Mr. Eisenhower accepted the offer.

The President and Mr. Dulles conferred today regarding the selection of a new secretary of state. News Secretary Hagerty said the appointment will be made "within a few days."

The White House announced tonight that Vice President Nixon will go to Moscow in July to open an American exhibition. He plans to remain in Moscow for three or four days.

An American intermediate range Thor missile was successfully test-fired today at the Vandenberg Air Force base in California. And for the first time, the missile was launched by a British crew. The crew was made up of six members of the Royal Air Force, training to man the Thor bases which have been set up in Britain.

Secretary of Defense McElroy told a news conference today that atomic submarines...equipped with the Polaris missile...may be placed under the direction of the Strategic Air Command. McElroy emphasized that no decision has been made, although the question is being considered by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. McElroy said that American aircraft have the right to fly "at whatever altitude they choose" along the Allied air corridor to Berlin. The British Foreign Office today confirmed that it had communicated with Washington with regard to American flights to Berlin above the 10-thousand-foot ceiling wich Soviet authorities claim exists. The British acknowledge the American right to make these high-altitide flights...but would rather that the issue were not pressed at this time.

Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba today was a luncheon guest of Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter...and Castro said afterward that he felt relations between the United States and Cuba had been improved. The luncheon was Castro's first formal appointment, after arriving in Washington last night on an unofficial good-will visit scheduled to last 11 days. Castro told reporters he did not come for a hand-out...but to seek "good economic relations and explain what we stand for." Cuba was in a bad way economically, he said, because Batista had absconded with about half a billion dollars. Castro said that tomorrow...when he talks to the Society of Newspaper Editors...he will speak in Spanish, then try to answer questions in English. ~~The society has allowed the Castro speech to be filmed for television, as well as taped for radio, after receiving a protest from the Radio and Television Correspondents Association of Washington. The association had called the ban on television cameras "an arbitrary suppression of freedom of access to the news"--something, it said, which the Society of Newspaper Editors has, itself, "so long fought valiantly against."~~

The United States Immigration Service has granted temporary asylum to four followers of Batista...who commandeered a Cuban airliner early today and forced the pilot to fly them to Miami. Three of the hijackers claim that they escaped from the La Cabana prison, near Havana. All four are being allowed to stay in this country, pending a hearing.

~~Firing squads in Cuba have executed 16 more persons described as war criminals. This brings to 549 the total number of persons said to have been put to death since Fidel Castro came to power.~~

Chairman Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee told the Society of Newspaper Editors today that Americans are going to have to get their priorities straight...decide whether to sacrifice some of their luxuries for long-range growth, whether to export more capital and import more goods. "We might," he said, "even bring ourselves to put less steel into automobiles and more into school construction." Fulbright said, "Unless we revise our sense of values, we will never think we can afford to do the things which, in my judgment, we must do if we are to survive as a nation of free people. The gravest crisis confronting the Western world today," he said, "is not in Berlin. It is within ourselves."

A Democratic-sponsored bill that would authorize 4-billion, 400-million dollars for the improvement of education was approved by a House subcommittee today.

The vote...along strict party lines...was 4 to 2. The measure would have the Federal Government give the states 1-billion, 100-million dollars a year, for the next four years, for classroom construction and payment of teachers' salaries. The bill now goes to the full Education Committee. If finally approved by Congress, it would upset President Eisenhower's plan for a balanced budget in the next fiscal year.

The House Rules Committee ~~today refused...by a 6-to-6 tie vote~~...to clear the Democratic housing bill for floor debate. The measure was blocked, for the time being at least, by a bipartisan coalition opposed to the public housing features of the bill.

Edward R. Murrow: April 16, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Some new bits and pieces of the Tibet story are coming to hand that make it possible to put together a coherent account of the uprising against Communist rule. They show that it was a genuine uprising, as popular and spontaneous as the Revolution in Hungary. For two days the people of Lhasa held the power in the city and it took the Chinese Communists six days to regain control. Casualties ran into perhaps six or more thousand, and for days the Chinese burned bodies on huge funeral pyres. The escape of the Dalai Lama was engineered during the two days when the Tibetans had the upper hand. The Kashag, or Cabinet, actually encouraged the popular resistance to make the rescue of the young spiritual leader possible in the confusion. The Chinese were tricked, and the Dalai Lama had a two-day start in the flight to India.

The story goes back to the signing of the 1951 treaty by which Tibet formally accepted Chinese sovereignty in return for a promise of local autonomy, something the Tibetans felt they did under duress. Resistance to the treaty was open outside Lhasa, and was conducted chiefly by the warlike Khamba tribesmen. They not only were too effective for the Chinese to crush, they actually kept coming closer to Lhasa. Lhasa, however, did not rise to join them. The time was not ripe for that and they wanted to save their city from destruction.

But the Communists sensed their mounting danger and tried to placate the Tibetans by calling a halt to reforms. Then they tried their utmost by suasion and bullying to induce the Dalai Lama to take up arms against the rebels. They had left him his army and insisted that he use it. The Dalai Lama is a spiritual leader who does not normally make political decisions, which are left to the ~~Kashag, or~~ Cabinet. By tradition the Dalai Lama goes nowhere without his Abbot attendants. But the Communists made him come along into hours of daily conferences with Chinese officials on the problem of the Khamba rebels. ~~This actually was an attempt at a kind of brain-washing and it is to the credit of the young Buddha that he withstood it without a lapse, and refused to act against the rebels.~~

So finally the Communists decided to get him out of the country. They sent him a direct invitation to attend a party at military headquarters. It is not protocol to send the Dalai Lama a direct invitation. He has to be approached through the ~~Kashag.~~ Cabinet And he is not expected to attend functions outside the Potala Palace. The invitation was the turning point in Tibetan affairs. News of it spread through Lhasa, which believed that the Dalai Lama was to be taken to Peiping and held as hostage while the Chinese moved in enough troops to crush all resistance. At once, thirty thousand Tibetans were demonstrating outside the Dalai Lama's summer palace, refusing to allow him to leave for Lhasa and the party at military headquarters.

The Chinese realized they had gone too far. They sent loud-speakers through the city saying it all had been a mistake and appealing for calm. But by that time five thousand women were parading in a demonstration for independence. Protest meetings were being held throughout the city, attended by Tibetan officials who up to that time had been co-operating with the Communists. Some eight thousand monks poured from surrounding monasteries to take part. And a Lama who had been an open collaborator was killed and his body dragged through the streets.

Up to this time the Dalai Lama and the Cabinet could have controlled the situation. But the ~~Kashag~~ Cabinet had other ideas. It publicly renounced the treaty of 1951 and sent out a call for help to the Khamba rebels, many of whom later appeared on horseback and fell to the Chinese artillery. The ~~Kashag~~ Cabinet hardly could have hoped to throw the Communists out, but it did expect to save the Dalai Lama. As the resistance rose, the King's Guard stripped off its Chinese uniforms and put on Tibetan robes, and the leader was smuggled out of the city, probably through the catacombs that honeycomb the city foundations.

The possible need for flight had been foreseen for some time and soundings had been made in India, Buhtan, Sikkim and even Nepal as possible places of refuge. India was chosen because of the fear that the Chinese in pursuing the Dalai Lama might overrun the smaller countries.

Back in a moment. -

Art Hannes

Word for Today

The story of the uprising in Tibet, against the Chinese Communists, again demonstrates the Will in man for independence. Walt Whitman said, "I am for those who have never been mastered." And we are reminded of an observation once made by Chief Justice Warren---that liberty, not Communism, is the most contagious force in the world.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 16, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Reports from Washington say that Christian Herter has undergone a special medical examination to determine whether he is physically capable of succeeding John Foster Dulles as secretary of state. Herter has been serving as acting secretary during Mr. Dulles' illness. He is widely regarded as the man most likely to succeed Dulles, who resigned yesterday. But, for more than 10 years, he has been afflicted with arthritis. Mr. Herter's personal physician said yesterday that he was "perfectly capable" of carrying the burden of secretary of state. Nevertheless, the Associated Press says, President Eisenhower wanted a apecial medical check-up of Herter "to make absolutely certain before naming him to the post."

The President today formally accepted Mr. Dulles' resignation. In the customary exchange of letters, Mr. Eisenhower said, "I accept with deepest personal regret, and only because I have no alternative." "As a statesman of world stature," the President said, "you have set a record in the stewardship of our foreign relations that stands clear and strong for all to see." In his letter, Mr. Dulles expressed gratitude for the opportunities and responsibilites given him by the President. "I was brought up, " he said, "in the belief that this nation of ours was not merely a self-serving society, but was founded with a mission fo help build a world where liberty and justice would prevail." He offered to continue to serve in a more limited capacity, and Mr. Eisenhower accepted the offer. The President and Mr. Dulles conferred today regarding the selection of a new secretary of state. News Secretary Hagerty said the appointment will be made "within a few days."

The White House announced tonight that Vice President Nixon will go to Moscow in July to open an American exhibition. He plans to remain in Moscow for three or four days.

An American intermediate range Thor missile was successfully test-fired today at the Vandenberg Air Force base in California. And for the first time, the missile was launched by a British crew. The crew was made up of six members of the Royal Air Force, training to man the Thor bases which have been set up in Britain.

Secretary of Defense McElroy told a news conference today that atomic submarines...equipped with the Polaris missile...may be placed under the direction of the Strategic Air command. McElroy emphasized that no decision has been made, although the question is being considered by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. McElroy said that American aircraft have the right to fly "at whatever altitude they choose" along the Allied air corridor to Berlin. The British Foreign Office today confirmed that it had communicated with Washington with regard to American flights to Berlin above the 10-thousand-foot ceiling which Soviet authorities claim exists. The British acknowledge the American right to make these high-altitude flights...but would rather that the issue were not pressed at this time.

Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba today was a luncheon guest of Acting Secretary of State Christian Herter...and Castro said afterward that he felt relations between the United States and Cuba had been improved. The luncheon was Castro's first formal appointment, after arriving in Washington last night on an unofficial good-will visit scheduled to last 11 days. Castro told reporters he did not come for a handout...but to seek "good economic relations and explain what we stand for." Cuba was in a bad way economically, he said, because Batista had absconded with about half a billion dollars. Castro said that tomorrow...when he talks to the Society of Newspaper Editors...he will speak in Spanish, then try to answer questions in English.

The United States Immigration Service has granted temporary asylum to four followers of Batista...who commandeered a Cuban airliner early today and forced the pilot to fly them to Miami. Three of the hijackers claim that they escaped from the La Cabana prison, near Havana. All four are being allowed to stay in this country, pending a hearing.

Chairman Fulbright of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee told the Society of Newspaper Editors today that Americans are going to have to get their priorities straight...decide whether to sacrifice some of their luxuries for long-range growth, whether to export more capital and import more goods. "We might," he said, "even bring ourselves to put less steel into automobiles and more into school construction." Fulbright said, "Unless we revise our sense of values, we will never think we can afford to do the things which, in my judgement, we must do if we are to survive as a nation of free people The gravest crisis confronting the Western world today," he said, "is not in Berlin. It is within,ourselves."

A democratic-sponsored bill that would authorize 4-billion,400-million dollars for the improvement of education was approved by a House subcommittee today. The vote...along strict party lines...was 4 to 2. The measure would have the Federal Government give the states 1-billion, 100-million dollars a year for the next four years for classroom construction and payment of teachers' salaries. The bill now goes to the full Education Committee. If finally approved by Congress, it would upset President Eisenhower's plan for a balanced budget in the next fiscal year.

Some new bits and pieces of the Tibet story are coming to hand that make it possible to put together a coherent account of the uprising against Communist rule. They show that it was a genuine uprising, as popular and spontaneous as the Revolution in Hungary. For two days the people of Lhasa held the power in the city and it took the Chinese Communists six days to regain control. Casualties ran into perhaps six or more thousand, and for days the Chinese burned bodies on huge funeral pyres. The escape of the Dalai Lama was engineered during the two days when the Tibetans had the upper hand. The Kashag, or Cabinet, actually encouraged the popular resistance to make the rescue of the young spiritual leader possible in the confusion. The Chinese were tricked, and the Dalai Lama had a two-day start in the flight to India.

The story goes back to the signing of the 1951 treaty by which Tibet formally accepted Chinese sovereignty in return for a promise of lcoal autonomy, something the Tibetans felt they did under duress. Resistance to the treaty was open outside Lhasa, and was conducted chiefly by the warlike Khamba tribesmen. They not only were too effective for the Chinese to crush, they actually kept coming closer to Lhasa. Lhasa, however, di d not rise to join them. The time was not ripe for that and they wanted to save their city from destruction.

But the Communists sensed their mounting danger and tried to placate the Tibetans by calling a halt to reforms. Then they tried their utmost by suasion and bullying to induce the Dalai Lama to take up arms against the rebels. They had left him his army and insisted that he use it. The Dalai Lama is a spiritual leader who does not normally make political decisions, which are left to the Cabinet. By tradition the Dalai Lama goes nowhere without his Abbot attendants. But the Communists made him come along into hours of daily conferences with Chinese officials on the problem of the Khamba rebels.

So finally the Communists decided to get him out of the country. They sent him a direct invitation to attend a party at military headquarters. It is not protocol to send the Dalai Lama a direct invitation. He has to be approached through the Cabinet. And he is not expected to attend functions outside the Potala Palace. The invitation was the turning point in Tibetan affairs. News of it spread through Lhasa, which believed that the Dalai Lama was to be taken to Peiping and held as hostage while the Chinese moved in enough troops to crush all resistance. At once, thirty thousand Tibetans were demonstrating outside the Dalai Lama's summer palace, refusing to allow him to leave for Lhasa and the party at military headquarters.

The Chinese realized they had gone too far. They sent loud-speakers through the city saying it all had been a mistake and appealing for calm. But by that time five thousand women were parading in a demonstation for independence. Protest meeting were being held throughout the city, attended by Tibetan officials who up to that time had been co-operating with the Communists. Some eight thousand monks poured from surrounding monastaries to take part. And a Lama who had been an open collaborator was killed and his body dragged through the streets.

Up to this time the Dalai Lama and the Cabinet could have controlled the situation. But the Cabinet had other ideas. It publicly renounced the treaty of 1951 and sent out a call for help to the Khamba rebels, many of whom later appeared on horseback and fell to the Chinese artillery. The Cabinet hardly could have hoped to throw the Communists out, but it did expect to save the Dalai Lama. As the resistance rose, the Kings guard stripped off its Chinese uniforms and put on Tibetan robes, and the leader was smuggled out of the city, probably through the catacombs that honeycomb the city foundations.

The possible need for flight had been foreseen for some time and soundings had been made in India, Buhtan, Sikkim and even Nepal as possible places of refuge. India was chosen because of the fear that the Chinese in pursuing the Dalai Lama might overrun the smaller countries.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The story of the uprising in Tibet against the Chinese Communists again demonstrates the Will in man for independence. Walt Whitman said, "I am for those who have never been mastered." And we are reminded of an observation once made by Chief Justic Warren---that liberty, not Communism, is the most contagious force in the world.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Apr. 17, 1959

This is the news:

The mutiny at the Montana State Prison continues...despite the efforts of the young prison psychologist, who has been trying to negotiate a settlement all day. The psychologist, Walter Jones, was one of about 20 hostages seized by the convicts last night. This morning he was released for eight minutes to act as negotiator. He warned National Guard officers not to try to storm the prison and restore order. The prisoners, he said, were "all set" to kill the hostages (the deputy warden was killed last night). He described the mutineers as "touchy". Any little thing, he said, would set them off. Jones then went back into the prison, only to come out again this afternoon with a new set of demands. Then again he went back inside. The inmates of the prison are complaining of poor food, inadequate medical attention and what they claim to be unmentionable sanitation facilities. One of their prime targets---Ben Wright, chairman of the state board of pardons---has submitted his resignation. He was resigning, he said, effective the end of June "to reduce, if possible, delay in a proper settlement to the disturbance now in progress." Seventeen of the hostages are prison guards. One of the other guards was released this afternoon because of a diabetic condition. The rest of the hostages are described by the mutineers as "stool pigeons".

Senate Republican Leader Everett Dirksen said today that he had been "assured" that Christian Herter will succeed Mr. Dulles as secretary of state. The official announcement, he said, might come tomorrow or perhaps later today. Dirksen did not disclose the source of his information...but News Secretary Hagerty says he knows of no one in the White House "who has given anyone any assurance." Hagerty did nothing, on the other hand, to discourage reports that Herter eventually will be named to the post. President Eisenhower talked with Mr. Dulles on the telephone again today, and presumably discussed the question of a successor.

Moscow radio said today that the news that Vice President Nixon will visit Russia this summer "has been favorably received in the leading circles of the U.S.S.R." These circles, the broadcast said, are confident that the visit will lead to an improvement in mutual understanding. Mr. Nixon will go to Russia in July to open an American exposition and stay for three or four days.

Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba met with key members of Congress today, and assured them that he is not a Communist. / Moreover, he said, Communism has no chance of succeeding in Cuba.. so long as there is a reasonable chance of keeping them adequated feed and clothed. / He said he had "no thought" of taking over the important United States naval base at Guantanamo. / Castro made similar assurances later in the day when he spoke before the American Society of Newspaper Editors. He said his government does not want money from the United States."but a just trade treaty." / He defended the execution of "war criminals". "We are trying," Castro said, "to teach our soldiers...and our policemen... that regardless of the reason, people must never be tortured or assassinated for political reasons."

The full results of today's nationwide civil defense test will not be known for weeks. In hundreds of communities, sirens signaled the threat of mock nuclear attack. / Government workers in Washington hurried to shelter areas in their respective buildings...and here in New York City, Fifth Avenue and other main thoroughfares were quickly cleared of pedestrians and traffic. / Mayor Wagner called it the best drill the city has ever had. / Theoretically, most of San Diego was wiped out by a nuclear device launched by a submarine. / And across the country, weathermen plotted the probable path of radioactive fall-out. ~~The Conelrad warning system was tested at 11:30 a.m., Eastern Standard Time.~~ / Under this system, the regular broadcasts of all radio and television stations were blacked out for thirty minutes. Twelve hundred radio stations were back on the air immediately...broadcasting civil defense instructions on the special 640 and 1240 kilocycle bands. These stations used alternating frequencies to keep imaginary enemy aircraft from using their signals to "home" on a target.

6

The Geneva conference looking toward the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests today adopted a preamble to a draft treaty. The preamble, approved tentatively by the United States, Britain and Russia, expresses confidence that a controlled suspension of tests would make progress toward general disarmament possible. It also expresses hope that all countries will join in promising to refrain from testing nuclear weapons. Of course, this preamble...and all other items of the draft treaty...become valid only if the over-all agreement becomes operative. Russia and the Western powers are still far apart on how a ban on nuclear weapons tests would be controlled.

In Washington...the Senate Appropriations Committee tonight voted to double the amount of money provided by the House for development loans to foreign countries. The committee voted...15 to 10...to authorize 200-million dollars in new appropriations for the Development Loan Fund. President Eisenhower had asked for 225-million dollars, but the House cut this figure more than half.

7

In Kentucky today, Governor Chandler mobilized a thousand National Guardsmen...as the result of the second fatal shooting in the coal fields in a little more than two weeks. A non-union coal-truck driver died in a gun fight last night...and a new dynamiting of mine property is reported. A picket belonging to the United Mine Workers...who have been on strike since March 9...also suffered a gun wound last night and has been hospitalized. Governor Chandler says the National Guard will be ready to act...that law and order will be maintained. Wages are the issue in the strike, which has been marked by violence almost from the start. The mine operators say they cannot pay the two-dollar-a-day increase called for by the union in its new contract.

STET

STET

Reports that Acting Secretary of State Herter almost definitely will succeed Dulles are being received with some misgiving in West Germany. For that story...and a new development in the preparations for next month's foreign ministers conference...we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Bonn.

(Tape runs 4:10
Ends on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

My colleague, Ernest Leiser, reported an atmosphere of gloom and misgiving. If he could truthfully have reported an atmosphere of optimism, it would...~~perhaps~~...of course...have reflected a happier state of affairs. But artificial optimism, F.C. Appley said, "alienates more friends than it makes." And William Sumner believed that every man of sense is a pessimist.

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, April 17, 1959
7:45 -8:00

MURROW: Reports that Acting Secretary of State Herter almost definitely will succeed Dulles are being received with some misgiving in West Germany. For that story and a new development in the preparations for next month's Foreign Ministers Conference, we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Bonn:

LEISER: There will be six foreign ministers at the Foreign Ministers Meeting of the Big Four when it starts on May 11. The East German Communists yesterday announced that their foreign minister, Lothar Bolz, would be on hand in Geneva and this reporter has been told on high authority that von Brentano will also be there for West Germany. This itself represents a long step up the ladder for the German Communists who so far have carefully and consisently been kept far outside the diplomatic pale. The Government of West Germany is clearly uneasy tonight about the prospects of Christian Herter as the new U.S. Secretary of State. The reason given here is what the Germans call Herter's inexperience. Despite the length of time he has served as Under Secretary, close to Dulles, the Germans say he has not yet mastered the complexities of the situation in Central Europe well enough to give a strong lead to the Western Alliance at Geneva next month. Bonn says that Herter, and therefore the West, will be seriously handicapped by not understanding what the Soviet maneuvering in Berlin and Germany is really intended to achieve. Behind this argument there seems to be another reason. The West Germans are obviously worried lest Herter will make concessions without Soviet counter-concessions at Geneva. Right or wrong, Bonn thinks that Herter would be willing to experiment with a basically new Western policy on German Unity. Some of this fear seems to stem from the Foreign Ministers' talks in Washington the beginning of this month. There, Herter took West Germany's Foreign Minister, Heinrich von Brentano lightly but very strongly to task. On orders from old Chancellor Adenauer, Brentano had suddenly turned down an American idea for putting Germany together by steps through a loose federation of the states in the West German Republic and the states in Communist East Germany. This idea had been approved earlier by Bonn officials too and Herter in Washington put a sharp "how come" to Brentano. But the West Germans say today that this is water under the bridge. They say that now all Western Allies' schemes of federation or confederation with the Communist Zone of Germany have been talked out. They are making clear that Adenauer's veto has been effective and that both U.S. and British schemes for new ways to German unity have had to be abandoned. In fact, the Germans are privately more convinced than any of their allies that there is not a prayer that this country can be unified now or in any future that can be foreseen. All that the Bonn Government insists on is that there be no formal recognition of this fact or any recognition of East Germany. The leaders here say that formalizing what exists would demoralize their seventeen million countrymen in the East German Zone. And they very clearly think that it would also cause Adenauer and his successor as Chancellor a domestic, political catastrophe.

When Bonn looks to Geneva and to a summit conference, it appears to take a thoroughly cynical view of what can be expected. In the highest quarters here, it is said that no progress on any fundamental issues can be expected at the Big Four Meeting. The absolute most that the West German Government expects is that Nikita Khrushchev may climb down from his demand that there be a fundamental change in Berlin. But in private conversation, even the top pepple here now say that we'll have to let the East Germans get into our Berlin act somehow, at least in scrutinizing Allied papers on our routes of access to the city.(?)

And there's a genuine fear in Bonn that Krushchev may suddenly carry out his threat to hand over Soviet controls to the East Germans during the conferences ahead, if the conferences are not going to suit the Soviet leader. Bonn is worried that by presenting the West with this accomplished fact, the Soviets may make the Allies cave in at the negotiating table, especially with a new man like Herter as the senior spokesman for the Alliance. The mood in Bonn could hardly be much more gloomy.

This is Ernest Leiser in Bonn. Now back to

Edward R. Murrow:

Ed. Trans. R.S.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 17, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The mutiny at the Montana State Prison continues...despite the efforts of the young prison psychologist, who has been trying to negotiate a settlement all day. The psychologist, Walter Jones, was one of about 20 hostages seized by the convicts last night. This morning he was released for eight minutes to act as negotiator. He warned National Guard officers not to try to storm the prison and restore order. The prisoners, he said were "all set" to kill the hostages (the deputy warden was killed last night.) He described the mutineers as "touchy." Any little thing, he said, would set them off. Jones then went back into the prison, only to come out again this afternoon with a new set of demands. Then again he went back inside. The inmates of the prison are complaining of poor food, inadequate medical attention and what they claim to be unmentionable sanitation facilities. One of their prime targets---Ben Wright, chairman of the state board of pardons---has submitted his resignation. He was resigning, he said, effective the end of June "to reduce, if possible, delay in a proper settlement to the disturbance now in progress." Seventeen of the hostages are prison guards. One of the other guards was released this afternoon because of a diabetic condition. The rest of the hostages are described by the mutineers as "stool pigeons."

Senate Republican Leader Everett Dirksen said today that he had been "assured" that Christian Herter will succeed Mr. Dulles as secretary of state. The official announcement, he said, might come tomorrow or perhaps later today. Dirksen did not disclose the source of his information...but News Secretary Hagerty says he knows of no one in the White House "who has given anyone any assurance." Hagerty did nothing, on the other hand, to discourage reports that Herter eventually will be named to the post. President Eisenhower talked with

Mr. Dulles on the telephone again today, and presumably discussed the question of a successor.

Moscow radio said today that the news that Vice President Nixon will visit Russia this summer "has been favorably received in the leading circles of the U.S.S.R." These circles, the broadcast, said, are confident that the visit will lead to an improvement in mutual understanding. Mr. Nixon will go to Russia in July to open an American exposition and stay for three or four days.

Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba met with key members of Congress today, and assured them that he is not a Communist. Moreover, he said, Communism has no chance of succeeding in Cuba...so long as there is a reasonable chance of keeping them adequately fed and clothed. He said he had "no thought" of taking over the important United States naval base at Guantanamo. Castro made similar assurances later in the day when he spoke before the American Society of Newspaper Editors. He said his government does not want money from the United States..."but a just trade treaty." He defended the execution of "War criminals." "We are trying," Castro said, "to teach our soldiers...and our policemen...that regardless of the reason, people must never be tortured or assassinated for political reasons."

The full results of today's nationwide civil defense test will not be known for weeks. In hundreds of communities, sirens signaled the threat of mock nuclear attack. Government workers in Washington hurried to shelter areas in their respective buildings...and here in New York City, Fifth Avenue and other main thoroughfares were quickly cleared of pedestrians and traffic. Mayor Wagner called it the best drill the city has ever had. Theoretically, most of San Diego was wiped out by a nuclear device launched by a submarine. And across the country, weathermen plotted the probable path of radioactive fall-out.

The Geneva conference looking toward the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests today adopted a preamble to a draft treaty. The preamble, approved tentatively by the United States, Britain and Russia, expresses confidence that a controlled suspension of tests would make progress toward general disarmament possible. It also expresses hope that all countries will join in promising to refrain from testing nuclear weapons. Of course, this preamble...and all other items of the draft treaty...become valid only if the over-all agreement becomes operative. Russia and the Western powers are still far apart on how a ban on nuclear weapons tests would be controlled.

In Washington...the Senate Appropriations Committee tonight voted to double the amount of money provided by the House for development loans to foreign countries. The committee voted...15 to 10...to authorize 200-million dollars in new appropriations for the Development Loan Fund. President Eisenhower had asked for 225.million dollars, but the House cut this figure more than half.

In Kentucky today, Governor Chandler mobilized a thousand National Guardsmen...as the result of the second fatal shooting in the coal fields in a little more than two weeks. A non-union coal truck driver died in a gun fight last night...and a new dynamiting of mine property is reported. A picket belonging to the United Mine Workers...who have been on strike since March 9...also suffered a gun wound last night and has been hospitalized. Governor Chandler says the National Guard will be ready to act...that law and order will be maintained. Wages are the issue in the strike, which has been marked by violence almost from the start. The mine operators say they cannot pay the two-dollar-a-day increase called for by the union in its new contract.

Reports that Acting Secretary of State Herter almost definitely will succeed Dulles are being received with some misgiving in West Germany. For that story...and a new development in the preparations for next month's foreign ministers' conference...we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Bonn.

LEISER: There will be six foreign ministers at the Foreign Ministers' Meeting of the Big Four when it starts on May 11. The East German Communists yesterday announced that their foreign minister, Lothar Bolz, would be on hand in Geneva and this reporter has been told on high authority that Von Brentano will also be there for West Germany. This itself represents a long step up the ladder for the German Communists who so far have carefully and consistently been kept far outside the diplomatic pale. The Government of West Germany is clearly uneasy tonight about the prospects of Christian Herter as the new U.S. Secretary of State. The reason given here is what the Germans call Herter's inexperience. Despite the length of time he has served as Under Secretary, close to Dulles, the Germans say he has not yet mastered the complexities of the situation in Central Europe well enough to give a strong lead to the Western Alliance at Geneva next month. Bonn says that Herter, and therefore the West, will be seriously handicapped by not understanding what the Soviet maneuvering in Berlin and Germany is really intended to achieve. Behind this argument there seems to be another reason. The West Germans are obviously worried lest Herter will make concessions without Soviet counter-concessions at Geneva. Right or wrong. Bonn thinks that Herter would be willing to experiment with a basically new Western policy on German unity. Some of this fear seems to stem from the Foreign Ministers' talks in Washington the beginning of this month. There, Herter took West Germany's Foreign Minister, Heinrich von Brentano lightly but very strongly to task. On orders from old Chancellor Adenauer, Brentano had suddenly turned down an American idea for putting Germany together by steps through a loose federation of the states in the West German Republic and the states in Communist East Germany. This idea had been approved earlier by Bonn officials too and Herter in Washington put a sharp "how come" to Brentano. But the West Germans say today that this is water under the bridge. They say that now all Western allies schemes of federation or confederation with the Communist zone of Germany have been talked out. They are making clear that Adenauer's veto has been effective and that both U.S. and British schemes for new ways to German unity have had to be abandoned. In fact, the Germans are privately more convinced than any of their allies that there is not a prayer that this country can be unified now or in any future that can be foreseen. All that the Bonn Government insists on is that there be no formal recognition of this fact or any recognition of East Germany. The leaders here say that formalizing what exists would demoralize their seventeen million countrymen in the East German Zone. And they very clearly think that it would also cause Adenauer and his successor as Chancellor a domestic, political catastrophe.

When Bonn looks to Geneva and to a summit conference, it appears to take a thoroughly cynical view of what can be expected. In the highest quarters here, it is said that no progress on any fundamental issues can be expected at the Big Four Meeting. The absolute most that the West German Government expects is that Nikita Khrushchev may climb down from his demand that there be a fundamental change in Berlin. But in private conversation, even the top people here now say that we'll have to let the East Germans get into our Berlin act somehow, at least in scrutinizing Allied papers on our routes of access to the city.

And there's genuine fear in Bonn that Khrushchev may suddenly carry out his threat to hand over Soviet controls to the East Germansduring the conferences ahead, if the conferences are not going to suit the Soviet leader. Bonn is worried that by presenting the West with this accomplished fact, the Soviets may make the Allies cave in at the negotiating table, especially with a new man like Herter as the senior spokesman for the Alliance. The mood in Bonn could hardly be much more gloomy.

This is Ernest Leiser in Bonn. Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: My colleague, Ernest Leiser, reported an atmosphere of gloom and misgiving. If he could truthfully have reported an atmosphere of optimism, it would...of course...have reflected a happier state of affairs. But artificial optimism, F. C. Appley said, "alienates more friends than it makes." And William Sumner believed that every man of sense is a pessimist.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Apr. 20, 1959

This is the news:

The White House today made public the text of a letter which President Eisenhower sent Premier Khrushchev last week...urging that the Geneva talks on nuclear weapons tests not be allowed to collapse. "In my view," he said, "these negotiations must not be permitted completely to ~~collapse."~~ fail." In his letter, Mr. Eisenhower outlined the proposal which the West submitted at Geneva last week in an effort to break the deadlock. This proposal called for a limited ban on nuclear tests as a first step. Tests would BE prohibited in the earth's atmosphere...up to 30 miles...and under water. With this start, negotiations would then proceed on a complete prohibition of nuclear weapons tests, including explosions conducted under-ground and at extreme high altitudes. [redacted]

Officially, Russia has neither accepted or rejected this proposition...but the general reaction on the part of the Soviet delegation in Geneva has been cool. In his letter, Mr. Eisenhower said that even if Russia continues to insist on the power of veto in the control organization, there could still be progress toward a first-step agreement. "I believe," he said, "there is a way in which we can hold fast to the progress already made in these negotiations and no longer delay in putting into effect the initial agreements which are in our grasp." The White House had not planned to release the letter until it received a reply from Khrushchev. However, a Soviet official in Geneva revealed this morning that such a letter had been sent.

The President's nomination of Christian Herter as secretary of state went today to the Senate...where it will be taken up tomorrow by the Foreign Relations Committee. Early Senate confirmation is expected. Mr. Herter talked to reporters today, on returning to Washington from a South Carolina vacation. And he indicated that he will rely less on personal diplomacy and delegate more authority to his subordinates than Secretary Dulles. He also indicated that he would do less traveling than

Mr. Dulles. He said, "I will travel if I feel it is necessary to travel. But as you know, I have always been a pretty strong team worker..and I have got very great pride in my associates in the department." Herter declined to comment on foreign policy matters. He would rather wait, he said, until his appointment is confirmed.

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd was asked in the House of Commons today how he feels about the high-altitude flights made by American aircraft in the air corridor to Berlin. (The Russians have tried...unilaterally...to impose a ceiling of 10-thousand feet. And some British newspapers have called American disregard for the Soviet action "tactless and ill-timed.") Selwyn Lloyd said the question how high aircraft in the corridor should fly was a matter for individual Allied governments to decide. Allied aircraft, he said, have the right to fly at any altitude...and he said it was a right which should be exercised from time to time "as necessary."

~~Sir Winston Churchill said today that...in dealing with Russia...the West should be~~

Y

Khrushchev has sent a new personal message to President Nasser of the United Arab Republic. We are not told officially what the message said. But according one Egyptian source, Khrushchev wrote in an attempt to "soften" current anti-Communist opinion in the Middle East....outside of Iraq.

Secretary of the Treasury Anderson said today that a balanced budget, in good times, is not enough. He said, "To ignore the obligations of paying off some part of our debt during prosperity is contrary to all of our American traditions of good faith and performance." /Failure to reduce our national debt in these times, Anderson said, means passing on the problems of the debt to future generations. /And that, he said, we have no moral right to do. This means we should strive...not for just a balanced budget...but for a surplus. /Anderson spoke before the annual meeting of the Associated Press, here in New York.

It was announced today that negotiations...looking toward a new contract in the basic steel industry...will start here in New York on May fifth. This is two weeks earlier than previously agreed upon by the United Steelworkers and the steel industry.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved the nomination of Judge Potter Stewart, as an associate justice of the Supreme Court. Stewart was named last October to succeed Justice Harold Burton. He was questioned at length in committee hearings on his views regarding the 1954 Supreme Court decision on public school segregation...and Chairman Eastland of Mississippi says the nomination will not be sent to the Senate floor for 24 hours, to give six members of the committee who were absent, an opportunity to vote. In any case, a majority of the committee will have approved.

The Supreme Court said today...in a 5 to 4 decision...that it is a violation of federal law, to promise money to a political party through a member of Congress, in return for help in getting a federal appointment. The case involves an applicant for the postmastership in York, Pennsylvania, in 1953. The government charges that the applicant promised his congressman to donate money to the Republican Party, if the congressman would help him get the job. Last year, a lower court judge dismissed the charges, arguing that, according to the language of the law, political parties were exempt. The Supreme Court today disagreed...and ordered the charges reinstated.

In San Francisco, the United States Immigration Service has again ordered the deportation of William Heikkila, a native of Finland whose case has been in and out of the courts ever since 1948. Heikkila became nationally known last year, when he was seized and deported to Finland, while his case was still pending in Federal Court. As a result of the publicity, he was brought back. The new deportation order...issued after extended hearings...is based on the conclusion that Haikkila is an alien who belonged to the Communist Party, and once obtained a visa by fraud. Heikkila, who says he quit the party in 1939, first entered the United States as an infant, and now has an American-born wife. His attorney says today's order will be appealed.

HECK-ALA

Edward R. Murrow: April 20, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Today a gallant old gentleman raised a familiar voice - somewhat muted by age and infirmity - to announce his support of his Prime Minister's policies, and his determination to continue to represent his constituency in Parliament. / We are indebted to the B.B.C. for these excerpts from today's speech by Sir Winston Churchill.

TAPE RUNS 3:15

End Cue: "....Once again as a candidate "(applause)

Those were excerpts from a speech made today by Sir Winston Churchill, at Woodford, just outside London.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.—

WORD FOR THE DAY. April 20, 1959.

No one can be sure what public office and responsibility will do to any man. Crawford Greenewalt has written in "The Uncommon Man": "Some men are uncommon to extraordinary degree, others to lesser. And perhaps most uncommon of all is the common man whose achievements are exalted beyond the expectation of his circumstances."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS:

Monday, April 20, 1959
7:45 -8:00

MURROW: Today a gallant old gentleman raised a familiar voice, somewhat muted by age and infirmity, to announce his support of his Prime Minister's policies and also his determination to continue to represent his constituency in Parliament. We are indebted to the BBC for these excerpts from today's speech by Sir Winston Churchill:

ANNOUNCER: At Woodford in Essex, the constituency to which he is a Member of Parliament, Sir Winston Churchill has spoken of the German problem. Here's part of what he said:

CHURCHILL: It is unnecessary for Soviet leaders to assure us that the use of armed force in Berlin would inevitably unleash a general conflict. We are well aware of this. We are well aware too that there is no chance of the world being spared the noose...the use of nuclear weapons before (indistinct). The German problem under consideration is in itself a comparatively simple one. We hope, if possible, to see a reunited Germany. The terms of reunification should be such that the true will of the German people is expressed so that the country does not fall under the domination of the Soviets. We in the West know that our intentions to Russia and the satellites are peaceful. We never seek to make use of Germany as an offensive base against them. We never shall. But with the background of the last war, Russian fears of a resurgent government are reasonable, even if they are not justified. ~~When they take~~ We must take account of them, we must look through other people's eyes as well as our own.

ANNOUNCER: (indistinct) Sir Winston (indistinct) in particular about the problem of Berlin.

CHURCHILL: We cannot abandon her. Berlin recently showed with an overwhelming vote where her sympathies lie. We cannot abandon the Berlin people either. On the basic issues, we are as one but I will say this and I should like to see the Western Allies show more sympathy toward each other's problems. Surely to achieve our purposes, in our talks with the Soviets, we must be united and strong.

ANNOUNCER: Sir Winston then turned to a question nearer home that's very much in people's minds in Britain these days.

CHURCHILL: We all know, ladies and gentlemen, that the general election is approaching...coming along.(laughter) On that you know your duty. Now on past record...on past record and on character, on promise and on personalities, the Conservative Government deserves, I'd say, without hesitation, your support to bring continued enduring prosperity at home and to insure a lasting peace of the world. For my part, I will say like myself the last minutes, if I may, for my part I shall be ready to offer myself once again as a candidate (?) (indistinct) (cheers).

Trans. R.S.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 20, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The White House today made public the text of a letter which President Eisenhower sent Premier Khrushchev last week...urging that the Geneva talks on nuclear weapons tests not be allowed to collapse. "In my view," he said, "these negotiations must not be permitted completely to fail." In his letter, Mr. Eisenhower outlined the proposal which the West submitted at Geneva last week in an effort to break the deadlock. This proposal called for a limited ban on nuclear tests as a first step. Tests would be prohibited in the earth's atmosphere...up to 30 miles...and under water. With this start, negotiations would then proceed on a complete prohitition of nuclear weapons tests, including explosions conducted under-ground and at extreme high altitudes. Officially, Russia has neither accepted or rejected this proposition...but the general reaction on the part of the Soviet delegation in Geneva has been cool. In his letter, Mr. Eisenhower said that even if Russia continues to insist on the power of veto in the control organization, there could still be progress toward a first-step agreement. "I believe," he said, "there is a way in which we can hold fast to the progress already made in these negotiations and no longer delay in putting into effect the initial agreements which are in our grasp." The White House had not planned to release the letter until it received a reply from Khrushchev. However, a Soviet official in Geneva revealed this morning that such a letter had been sent.

The President's nomination of Christian Herter as secretary of state went today to the Senate...where it will be taken up tomorrow by the Foreign Relations Committee. Early Senate confirmation is expected. Mr. Herter talked to reporters today, on returning to Washington from a South Carolina vacation. And he indicated that he will rely less on personal diplomacy and delegate more authority to his subordinates than Secretary Dulles. He also indicated that he would do less traveling than Mr. Dulles. He said, "I will travel if I feel it is necessary to travel. But as you know, I have always been a pretty strong team worker...and I have got very great pride in my associates in the department." Herter declined to comment on foreign policy matters. He would rather wait, he said until his appointment is confirmed.

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd was asked in the House of Commons today how he feels about the high-altitude flights made by American aircraft in the air corridor to Berlin. (The Russians have tried...unilaterally...to impose a ceiling of 10-thousand feet. And some British newspapers have called American disregard for the Soviet action "tactless and ill-timed.") Selwyn Lloyd said the question how high aircraft in the corridor should fly was a matter for individual Allied governments to decide. Allied aircraft, he said, have the right to fly at any altitude...and he said it was a right which should be exercised from time to time "as necessary."

Khrushchev has sent a new personal message to President Nasser of the United Arab Republic. We are not told officially what the message said, But according to one Egyptian source, Khrushchev wrote in an attempt to "soften" current anti-Communist opinion in the Middle East...outside of Iraq.

Secretary of the Treasury Anderson said today that a balanced budget, in good times, is not enough. He said, "To ignore the obligations of paying off some part of our debt during prosperity is contrary to all of our American traditions of good faith and performance." Failure to reduce our national debt in these times, Anderson said, means passing on the problems of the debt to future generations. And that, he said, we have no moral right to do. This means we should strive...not for just a balanced budget...but for a surplus. Anderson spoke before the annual meeting of the Associated Press, here in New York.

It was announced today that negotiations...looking toward a new contract in the basic steel industry...will start here in New York on May 5th. This is two weeks earlier than previously agreed upon by the United Steelworkers and the steel industry.

The Senate Judiciary Committee today approved the nomination of Judge Potter Stewart as an associate justice of the Supreme Court. Stewart was named last October to succeed Justice Harold Burton. He was questioned at length in committee hearings on his views regarding the 1954 Supreme Court decision on public school segregation...and Chairman Eastland of Mississippi says the nomination will not be sent to the Senate floor for 24 hours to give six members of the committee who were absent an opportunity to vote. In any case, a majority of the committee will have approved.

The Supreme Court said today...in a 5 to 4 decision, that it is a violation of federal law to promise money to a political party through a member of Congress in return for help in getting a federal appointment. The case involves an applicant for the postmastership in York, Pennsylvania, in 1953. The government charges that the applicant promised his congressman to donate money to the Republican Party, if the congressman would help him get the job. Last year, a lower court judge dismissed the charges, arguing that according to the language of the law political parties were exempt. The Supreme Court today disagreed...and ordered the charges reinstated.

In San Francisco, the United States Immigration Service has again ordered the deportation of William Heikkila, a native of Finland whose case has been in and out of the courts ever since 1948. Heikkila became nationally known last year when he was seized and deported to Finland while his case was still pending in Federal Court. As a result of the publicity, he was brought back. The new deportation order...issued after extended hearings...is based on the conclusion that Heikkila is an alien who belonged to the Communist Party and once obtained a visa by fraud. Heikkila, who says he quit the party in 1939, first entered the United States as an infant and now has an American-born wife. His attorney says today's order will be appealed.

Today a gallant old gentleman raised a familiar voice - somewhat muted by age and infirmity - to announce his support of his Prime Minister's policies and his determination to continue to represent his constituency in Parliament. We are indebted to the B.B.C. for these excerpts from today's speech by Sir Winston Churchill.

ANNOUNCER: At Woodford in Essex, the constituency to which he is a member of Parliament, Sir Winston Churchill has spoken of the German problem. Here's part of what he said:

CHURCHILL: It is unnecessary for Soviet leaders to assure us that the use of armed force in Berlin would inevitably unleash a general conflict. We are well aware of this. We are well aware too that there is no chance of the world being spared the noose...the use of nuclear weapons before (indistinct). The German problem under consideration is in itself a comparatively simple one. We hope, if possible, to see a reunited Germany. The terms of reunification should be such that the true will of the German people is expressed so that the country does not fall under the domination of the Soviet. We in the West know that our intentions to Russia and the satellites are peaceful. We never seek to make use of Germany as an offensive base against them. We never shall. But with the background of the last war, Russian fears of a resurgent government are reasonable, even if they are not justified. We must take account of them, we must look through other people's eyes as well as our own.

ANNOUNCER: Sir Winston (indistinct) particular about the problem of Berlin.

CHURCHILL: We cannot abandon her. Berlin recently showed with an overwhelming vote where her sympathies lie. We cannot abandon the Berlin people either. On the basic issues, we are as one but I will say this and I should like to see the Western Allies show more sympathy toward each other's problems. Surely to achieve our purposes, in our talks with the Soviets, we must be united and strong.

ANNOUNCER: Sir Winston then turned to a question nearer home that's very much in people's minds in Britain these days.

CHURCHILL: We all know, ladies and gentlemen, that the general election is approaching...coming along. On that you know your duty. Now on past record...on past record and on character, on promise and on personalties, the Conservative Goverment deserves, I'd say, without hesitation, your support to bring continued enduring prosperity at home and to insure a lasting peace of the world. For my part, I will say like myself the last minutes, if I may, for my part I shall be ready to offer myself once again as a candidate.

MURROW: Those were excerpts from a speech made today by Sir Winston Churchill, at Woodford just outside London.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: No one can be sure what public office and responsibility will do to any man. Crawford Greenewalt has written in "The Uncommon Man": "Some men are uncommon to extraordinary degree, others to lesser. And perhaps most uncommon of all is the common man whose achievements are exalted beyond the expectation of his circumstances."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Apr. 21, 1959

This is the news:

The Senate today unanimously confirmed the nomination of Christian Herter as secretary of state. The vote came less than four hours after the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had given its unanimous approval and after senators of both parties had made speeches on the Senate floor on Herter's behalf. Democratic Leader Johnson said, "I not only want Mr. Herter to know---I want the whole world to know---that we are united behind him as secretary of state." Chairman Fulbright of the Foreign Relations Committee called for speedy confirmation...because, he said, there had been some "confusion" surrounding the appointment which needed to be overcome. [Dulles resigned last Wednesday, but Herter's appointment was not announced by the President until Saturday.] Herter told the Foreign Relations Committee today that the announcement was delayed because Mr. Eisenhower was waiting for a medical report on his physical fitness. / Herter...who suffers from arthritis...said they both wanted the assurance of such a report. / At the committee hearing, Democratic Senator Morse questioned Herter at length regarding the possibility of nuclear war over Berlin. In answer to these questions, the new secretary of state said that in the "initial stages" of a conflict over Berlin, he did not think nuclear weapons should be employed. / But if it became clear, he said, that Russia was resorting to all-out war, "I think we would have to consider a change in our position." He did not agree with Morse that the Soviet threat to Berlin should be taken to the United Nations at this time. / "If the threat is carried out," he said, "we might very well have a good case."

Herter will leave for the meeting of Western foreign ministers in Paris next Monday. At this meeting, the West will try to complete the process of reaching common agreement before going into negotiations with Russia in Geneva on May eleventh. / The State Department announces that...next Thursday...Mr. Herter and United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold will meet in Washington and have "a general exchange of views."

The foreign ministers of eight East European countries, including Russia, will meet in Warsaw next Monday "to review questions concerning the forthcoming Geneva talks." These Warsaw Pact countries will be joined at the preparatory meeting by Communist China. The Soviet announcement does not say whether the Chinese Communists will attend as full participants, or merely as observers...as they did at the founding session of the Warsaw Pact in 1955.

West Germany today received a Soviet note warning it not to accept nuclear weapons from the United States. Russia told Bonn that the arming of of West German troops with nuclear weapons not only would increase the danger of war but make the position of West Germany in any future conflict "militarily hopeless."

Premier Khrushchev said today that Russia is ready to sign a pact of friendship and neutrality with any Asian country as a step toward securing an "atom free" zone in the Far East. Khrushchev made the offer in a letter to a Japanese editor...which was broadcast tonight by Moscow radio. The letter said that Japan can enjoy peace and security only if it refuses to tolerate nuclear weapons on its soil.

Two attempts to amend the Kennedy labor bill, as it now stands, were voted down today in the Senate. The first test came early this afternoon when Democratic Senator Ervin offered an amendment that would have eliminated all those provisions in the bill calling for alterations in the Taft-Hartley Act. These alterations are favored by organized labor, and the Ervin amendment was defeated 67 to 27. The next test came early this evening when Republican Senator Dirksen, as expected, also submitted an amendment. Dirksen wanted to tack on to the bill those changes in the Taft-Hartley Act which have been proposed by the Administration. Under these changes, all secondary boycotts would be prohibited and organizational picketing sharply limited. The Dirksen amendment lost by a vote of 67 to 24. But the measure faces other tests on the Senate floor later in the week. The Kennedy bill, beside modifying the Taft-Hartley law, would require unions to publish detailed financial reports and elect their officers by secret ballot.

The Agriculture Department today predicted that net farm income this year will be about one billion dollars less than it was in 1958. This represents a decline of around 8 percent. The lower farm income is attributed primarily to increased production costs and the fewer payments made under the soil bank program. ~~Nineteen fifty-nine will still be a better year for farmers, from the point of view of income, than 1957.~~

President Eisenhower ended his Georgia vacation today with a final round of golf...and flew back to Washington. Tomorrow, he will swear in Mr. Herter as secretary of state.

And Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba came to New York City by train from Washington and was cheered by a large crowd. Castro said that when free elections are held in Cuba, he may not be a candidate for president. He said earlier this week that Cuba may not be ready for elections for another four years.

Edward R. Murrow: April 21, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The attention of the Western World is now focused on Berlin, and the Foreign Ministers' Conference. There are increasing signs that the real and urgent danger may lie elsewhere. / On Saturday Chou En-Lai, the Premier of Red China, delivered a thirty-thousand-word speech at the opening of the National People's Congress in Peiping. / It didn't receive very much attention in the West. / He made a strong attack on United States policy in Asia - but he's done that before. He claimed we had refused to withdraw what he called our aggressive forces from South Korea. He charged us with introducing large quantities of military equipment, including nuclear and atomic weapons, to support Syngman Rhee's demand to scrap the Korean armistice agreement. "We absolutely cannot allow the United States", said Chou, "to violate these agreements / and realize its scheme of extending aggression".

Then he had a few words to say about Formosa. The first translation of his speech / said Formosa and the offshore islands must be "seized". The official translation used the word "liberated". He demanded that all United States armed forces in the Formosa area must be withdrawn. It is well to remember that the weather soon will be suitable for military operations against Formosa. The situation in that area remains exactly what it was the last time we went to the brink of war over the offshore islands. Our allies do not share our determination in the area. It should also be noted that the new Chinese budget announced today increases military expenditure by sixteen percent,and that the amount allotted for other countries is increased by two hundred and eighteen percent over last year. A diversion in the Formosa area during the Berlin talks is a real possibility and would further divide the Western alliance.

While we are all preoccupied with Berlin the Russians may produce a dangerous digression in the Middle East. They may choose to set off the time bomb in Irak. If they do it will be an open admission that the Russians do not want agreement from the Berlin talks. The British think they do. Others are not so sure. If the British are mistaken, the Kremlin might be using the Berlin issue to hypnotize the West while preparing to operate elsewhere with sensational possibilities.

My colleague Frank Kearns cables from Bhagdad today that the Communist insistence in Irak for sweeping purges in every field is producing results - more army officers are being retired - "Purge Committees" - openly and publicly identified as such - are reported operating in the police, universities, trade unions, oil refineries, and throughout the entire government. Today, the General who headed Iraqi Airways, and the man who held one of the most powerful jobs in the country - Assistant Director of Security at the Ministry of Interior - were ousted.

Today also the Colonel who is Chairman of the Purge Committee at the Ministry of Social Affairs, invited people to inform on officials and employees of the Ministry, and promised the informers that their names would not be divulged. The Communists are continuing their demands for the execution of so-called traitors already sentenced to death, and for the arming of the people. More mass demonstrations are planned in Bhagdad for this Friday.

Today's Communist newspaper in Bhagdad accuses the United Arab Republic of "hostile military preparations" along the Iraqi-Syrian frontier - it claims to have reliable reports of strong troop concentrations along the border, and that Nasser has sent large Egyptian units - especially air force - to northeast Syria.

The blueprint for a Communist takeover in Iraq is rapidly taking shape. They are infiltrating government departments, the universities and the army, and are probably already in a position to control the street mobs in Bhagdad.

It is likely that a telephone call from Moscow could bring the Communists to power in Iraq.

The Western alliance is far from united over what to do about Berlin and Germany; and the Communists have at least two very attractive alternatives that could be used to further the division - one is the offshore islands, the other is Iraq. / The Russians, with all the twistings and turnings of their propaganda and policy, have pursued one objective consistently, and that is the splitting of the Western alliance and the isolation of the United States.

In the months ahead we are going to need to remember the late Fiorello LaGuardia's counsel for a time of trouble: "Patience and fortitude."

Back in a moment.

Word for Today

Chou En-lai speaks again of "liberating" Formosa. And while we concentrate on Berlin, the Russians are building power in the Middle East. This is ruthless power...which Mao Tse-tung once expressed when he said, "Communism is not love. Communism is a hammer which we use to destroy the enemy." The question arises: Where may the hammer fall?

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 21, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate today unanimously confirmed the nomination of Christian Herter as secretary of state. The vote came less than four hours after the Senate Foreign Relations Committee had given its unanimous approval and after senators of both parties had made speeches on the Senate floor on Herter's behalf. Democratic Leader Johnson said, "I not only want Mr. Herter to know---I want the whole world to know---that we are united behind him as secretary of state." Chairman Fulbright of the Foreign Relations Committee called for speedy confirmation...because, he said, that had been some confusion surrounding the appointment which needed to be overcome. Dulles resigned last Wednesday, but Herter's appointment was not announced by the President until Saturday. Herter told the Foreign Relations Committee today that the announcement was delayed because Mr. Eisenhower was waiting for a medical report on his physical fitness. Herter...who suffers from arthritis...said they both wanted the assurance of such a report. At the committee hearing, Democratic Senator Morse questioned Herter at length regarding the possibility of nuclear war over Berlin. In answer to these questions, the new secretary of state said that in the "initial stages" of a conflict over Berlin, he did not think nuclear weapons should be employed. But if it became clear, he said, that Russia was resorting to all-out war, "I think we would have to consider a change in our position." He did not agree with Morse that the Soviet threat to Berlin should be taken to the United Nations at this time. "If the threat is carried out," he said, "we might very well have a good case."

Herter will leave for the meeting of Western foreign ministers in Paris next Monday. At this meeting, the West will try to complete the process of reaching common agreement before going into negotiations with Russia in Geneva on May 11th. The State Department announces that...next Thursday, Mr. Herter and United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold will meet in Washington and have "a general exchange of views."

The foreign ministers of eight East European countries, including Russia, will meet in Warsaw next Monday "to review questions concerning the forthcoming Geneva talks." These Warsaw Pact countries will be joined at the preparatory meeting by Communist China. The Soviet announcement does not say whether the Chinese Communists will attend as full participants, or merely as observers... as they did at the founding session of the Warsaw Pact in 1955.

West Germany today received a Soviet note warning it not to accept nuclear weapons from the United States. Russia told Bonn that the arming of West German troops with nuclear weapons not only would increase the danger of war but make the position of West Germany in any future conflict "militarily hopeless."

Premier Khrushchev said today that Russia is ready to sign a pact of friendship and neutrality with any Asian country as a step toward securing an "atom free" zone in the Far East. Khrushchev made the offer in a letter to a Japanese editor...which was broadcast tonight by Moscow radio. The letter said that Japan can enjoy peace and security only if it refuses to tolerate nuclear weapons on its soil.

Two attempts to amend the Kennedy labor bill, as it now stands, were voted down today in the Senate. The first test came early this afternoon when Democratic Senator Ervin offered an amendment that would have eliminated all those provisions in the bill calling for alterations in the Taft-Hartley Act. These alterations are favored by organized labor, and the Ervin amendment was defeated 67 to 27. The next test came early this evening when Republican Senator Dirksen, as expected, also submitted an amendment. Dirksen wanted to tack on to the bill those changes in the Taft-Hartley Act which have been proposed by the Administration. Under these changes, all secondary boycotts would be prohibited and organizational picketing sharply limited. The Dirksen amendment lost by a vote of 67 to 24. But the measure faces other tests on the Senate floor later in the week. The Kennedy bill, beside modifying the Taft Hartley law, would require unions to publish detailed financial reports and elect their officers by secret ballot.

The Agriculture Department today predicted that net farm income this year will be about one billion dollars less than it was in 1958. This represents a decline of around 8 percent. The lower farm income is attributed primarily to increased production costs and the fewer payments made under the soil bank program.

President Eisenhower ended his Georgiavacation today with a final round of golf...and flew back to Washington. Tomorrow, he will swear in Mr. Herter as secretary of state.

The attention of the Western World is now focused on Berlin, and the Foreign Ministers' Conference. There are increasing signs that the real and urgent danger may lie elsewhere. On Saturday Chou En-Lai, the Premier of Red China, delivered a thirty-thousand-word speech at the opening of the National Pepple's Conference in Peiping. It didn't receive very much attention in the West. He made a strong attack on United States policy in Asia - but he's done that before. He claimed he had refused to withdraw what he called our aggressive forces from South Korea. He charged us with introducing large quantities of military equipment, including nuclear and atomic weapons, to support Syngman Rhee's demand to scrap the Korean armistice agreement. "We absolutely cannot allow the United States," said Chou, "to violate these agreements and realize its scheme of extending aggression."

Then he had a few words to say about Formosa. The first translation of his speech said Formosa and the offshore islands must be "seized." The official translation used the word "liberated." He demanded that all United States armed forces in the Formosa area must be withdrawn. It is well to remember that the weather soon will be suitable for military operations against Formosa. The situation in that area remains exactly what it was the last time we went to the brink of war over the offshore islands. Our allies do not share our determiniation in the area. It should also be noted that the new Chinese budget announced today increases military expenditures by sixteen percent, and that the amount allotted for other countries is increased by two hundred and eighteen percent over last year. A diversion in the Formosa area during the Berlin talks is a real possibility and would further divide the Western alliance.

While we are all preoccupied with Berlin the Russians may produce a dangerous digression in the Middle East. The may choose to set off the time bomb in Iraq. If they do it will be an open admission that the Russians do not want agreement from the Berlin talks. The British think they do. Others are not so sure. If the British are mistaken, the Kremlin might be using the Berlin issue to hypnotize the West while preparing to operate elsewhere with sensational possibilities.

My colleague Frnak Kearns cables from Baghdad today that the Communist insistence in Iraq for sweeping purges in every field is producing results - more army officers are being retired - "Purge Committees" - openly and publicly identified as such - are reported operating in the police, universities, trade unions, oil refineries, and throughout the entire government. Today, the General who headed Iraqi Airways, and the man who held one of the most powerful jobs in the country - Assistant Director of Security at the Ministry of Interior - were ousted.

Today also the Colonel who is Chairman of the Purge Committee at the Ministry of Social Affairs, invited poeple to inform on officials and employees of the Ministry, and promised the informers that their names would not be divulged. The Communists are continuing their demands for the execution of so-called traitors already sentenced to death, and for the arming of the people. More mass demonstrations are planned in Baghdad for this Friday.

Today's Communist newspaper in Baghdad accuses the United Arab Republic of "hostile military preparations" along the Iraqi-Syrian frontier - it claims to have reliable reports of strong troop concentrations along the border, and that Nasser has sent large Egyptian units - especially air force - to northeast Syria.

The blueprint of a Communist takeover in Iraq is rapidly taking shape. They are infiltrating government departments, the universitites and the army and are probably already in a position to control the street mobs in Baghdad. It is likely that a telephone call from Moscow could bring the Communists to power in Iraq.

The Western alliance is far from united over what to do about Berlin and Germany; and the Communists have at least two very attractive alternatives that could be used to further the division - one is the offshore islands, the other is Iraq. The Russians, with all the twistings and turnings of their propaganda and policy, have pursued one objective consistently, and that is the splitting of the Western Allinace and the isolation of the United States.

In the months ahead we are going to need to remember the later Fiorello LaGuardia's counsel for a time of trouble: "Patience and fortitude."

This is Ed Murrow I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Chou En-lai speaks again of "liberating" Formosa. And while we concentrate on Berlin, the Russians are building power in the Middle East. This is ruthless power...which Mao Tse-tung once expressed when he said, "Communism is not love. Communism is a hammer which we use to destroy the enemy." The question arises: Where may the hammer fall?

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Apr. 22, 1959

This is the news:

The Senate tonight amended the Kennedy labor bill...putting in it a "bill of rights", for rank-and-file union members. The amendment was sponsored by Chairman McClellan of the Senate Rackets Committee...and bitterly opposed by Democratic Senator Kennedy. In the final vote, 45 senators were in favor of the amendment, 45 against. Vice President Nixon then proceeded to break the tie...casting his vote for the "bill of rights" feature. Under the "bill of rights" provision...(which Senator Kennedy argued had no place in such a measure)...union members are guaranteed such rights as freedom of assembly, protection of the right to sue, equal union voting rights, and safeguards against improper disciplinary action. Any officer or agent of a union violating this "bill of rights" could be sentenced to prison for two years, or forced to pay a 10-thousand-dollar fine.

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Apr. 22, 1959

~~This is the news:~~

Russia has sent the United States a formal note...accusing our government of trying to wreck the forthcoming talks on Germany before they start. The note claims this is the only way that measures for supplying nuclear weapons to the West Germans can be interpreted. The nuclear rearmament of West Germany, it says, is illegal and "contradicts" the whole purpose of next month's meeting on the German problem. The Russian protest refers to the NATO decision...reached in December, 1957...to set up missile bases in Western Europe. The nuclear warheads for these intermediate-range missiles would remain in American control. Such bases already have been set up in Britain...and recently a base agreement was signed with Italy.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman says the Russian charge that we want to "wreck" the talks on Germany in advance is "totally devoid of substance." He calls the note typical of the propaganda Russia always indulges in just before an important international conference. A reply will be sent "in due course."

In London, the experts...representing the United States, Britain, West Germany and France...have gone into overtime in their effort to "unify" Western policy. The so-called "working group" began conferring nine days ago...and was supposed to complete its assignment yesterday. The word now is that it will finish its work tomorrow---two days behind schedule.

Today...in a White House ceremony...Christian Herter was sworn in as secretary of state. President Eisenhower took the occasion to publicly express his confidence in Herter as Dulles' successor. The President said that he and Dulles were "as one" in deciding that Herter was best qualified to take over the office. "All the people of the United States," he said, "hope for your success." ~~The commission of office presented to Mr. Herter~~ bore Dulles' signature. ~~News Secretary Hagerty says that~~ Dulles co-signed the document last night as one of his last official acts as secretary.

President Eisenhower has chosen the former Democratic congressman, Brooks Hays, to be a member of the board of directors of T.V.A. In Congress, Hays represented the Arkansas district which includes Little Rock. He is a moderate on the civil rights issue...and last November he was defeated by Dale Alford, an avowed segregationist who conducted a last-minute write-in campaign. Last week, the House Administration Committee voted to investigate charges of irregularity in the election.

The Labor Department announces that there was no change last month in the cost of living. Lower food prices were off-set by the slightly higher cost of clothing, transportation, housing and medical care. The consumer price index has now moved up or down...or held steady...within a narrow range of two-tenths of one percent for the past nine months. And this is the longest period of "sustained stability" registered since the price index came into being in 1913. The Labor Department says that food prices can be expected to start going up again next month...if, indeed, the rise has not already begun. According to department figures, the take-home pay of the average factory worker rose to a record level last month---seven and a half percent above a year ago.

At the Concord State Reformatory...in Concord, Massachusetts...

63 inmates have mutinied and are holding 16 persons as hostages. Authorities say one of the prisoners---believed to be the ringleader---has a gun. And state police from all nearby barracks have been ordered to the scene. So far, the mutineers have not communicated with any of the reformatory officials, or made any demands. The hostages reportedly are 14 guards and two civilian employes.

A scientific report has been issued...expressing the belief that the human body can tolerate twice as much radio-active strontium as previously supposed. The report comes from the National Committee on Radiation Protection and Measurements...a committee made up of a non-governmental experts. Its chairman, Lauriston Taylor, warns...however...that the seriousness of the strontium problem is "not diminished". "It merely indicates," he says, "that there is a little bit more latitude than we thought." At the same time, the report says that the danger of SEE CIUM Cesium-137...another product of nuclear fallout which affects muscles... is perhaps greater than believed earlier.

Edward R. Murrow: April 22, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Most people realize that by now the Soviet Union has become the second most productive nation in the world, and may be on the way to draw even with the United States. / To have achieved this in a generation, has been the fruit of effort, ability -- and a great deal of misery and enslavement. / Most of the capital that paid for the expansion, came out of the hides of the people. / They were held at a wretched standard of living, so that they produced for the State, rather than themselves. / It is a grim formula, but it worked.

Now this formula is being applied in China, another backward country, and if it works there, the world will be even more changed than it has been by the rise of Russia. / For China's population is already more than three times as large. China is now at the start of its transition, when big gains are easier to register than later. Already it is claiming phenomenal results. Premier Chou En-Lai told the National People's Congress, now meeting in Peiping, that production grew sixty-five percent last year and will increase another forty percent this year. That is to say, that the output of six hundred million people more than doubled in two years. / Our normal rate of growth is three percent. We are troubled that the Russians have been expanding by ten percent. In China, even allowing for the extraordinary effort, and the cruelty and compulsions of the labor system and the communes, the rate of growth is hard to believe. And it is of some reassurance to note that it is not borne out by the evidence. At least home consumption and foreign trade do not seem to have been growing in a like degree, as would be expected. Indeed, many communes are admittedly in economic straits, for State subsidies of nearly half-a-billion dollars for them are included in the new budget announced in Peiping yesterday. [~~The communes also are being asked to produce a somewhat smaller share of the total State income, though the actual amount to be contributed is somewhat larger than last year.~~] The tax on agriculture is to be reduced from seven to five-point-two percent. This shows that last year's leap forward was too fast, and the communes and State farms will have to be nursed along. But they are not as yet failures. There is no retreat from them.

The budget called for an output of more producers goods than consumers goods, in other words, for concentration on investment and growth, rather than better living, the same formula the Soviet Union used. The volume of producer's consumer goods scheduled for this year is ~~ninety-eight billion yuan, of consumer's goods is sixty-seven billion yuan. The two added together and~~

~~translated into dollars at the official rate come to about seventy billion dollars. This is a blueprint figure, but it gives the dimension of the Chinese plan. The seventy billions is~~ a few billions more than the gross national product of either Great Britain or the German Federal Republic, the biggest producers, after Russia, in Europe.

One can say that such comparisons are misleading in that six hundred million people should be able to out-produce Britain and West Germany with little more than fifty millions each. But it would be to the point to compare the growth of China with that of India with its population of more than three hundred and seventy million. Here one gets a glimpse of what the Chinese effort means. For it aims this year at a national product of seventy billion dollars, whereas the goal of the Indian five-year plan was to increase the gross national product from eighteen to twenty-five billions. Not only that, the Indian plan depends absolutely on help coming from outside, much of it from the United States. All Asia is watching the two countries. India's economy is a mixture of free enterprise and socialism practised in democratic freedom. China is experiencing the ruthless imposition of the Marxist state with complete disregard for freedom. Asian onlookers may cringe from the hideous cost to the Chinese family and individuals, but they are being told by the Marxists that this is the only way that a backward country can catch up in the modern world.

(The look into the farther future is even more frightening.) The time may well come when an industrialized China not only out-produces the rest of the world in volume, but may match it in per capita output. If by then there should be eight or nine hundred million brainwashed Chinese, they will overshadow and outweigh all other people. So a new power is in the making. Judging from the experience of Tibet, and the cry that goes up from the communes, this is not good news, not for Asia, not for the West, not even for the Soviet Union.

Back in a moment—

~~George Bergman~~

Dan McDonell

DAN MAC DONNELL

Word for Today

We see in Red China a new world power in the making...at great human cost. Here, for the time being at least, is a country where standards of living do not seem to count. And one is inclined to agree with the British socialist, Richard Crossman, who...after personal observation...called Chinese Communism "the biggest and most formidable mass movement in human history."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 22, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate tonight amended the Kennedy Labor bill....putting in it a "bill of rights", for rank-and-file union members. The amendment was sponsored by Chairman McClellan of the Senate Rackets Committee...and bitterly opposed by Democratic Senator Kennedy. In the final vote, 45 senators were in favor of the amendment, 45 against. Vice President Nixon then proceeded to break the tie...casting his vote for the "bill of rights" feature. Under the "bill of rights" provision...which Senator Kennedy argued had no place in such a measure...union members are guaranteed such rights as freedom of assembly, protection of the right to sue, equal union voting rights, and safeguards against improper disciplinary action. Any officer or agent of a union violating this "bill of rights" could be sentenced to prison for two years, or forced to pay a 10-thousand-dollar fine.

Russia has sent the United States a formal note...accusing our government of trying to wreck the forthcoming talks on Germany before they start. The note claims this is the only way that measures for supplying nuclear weapons to the West Germans can be interpreted. The nuclear rearmament of West Germany, it says, is illegal and "contradicts" the whole purpose of next month's meeting on the German problem. The Russian protest refers to the NATO decision...reached in December, 1957...to set up missile bases in Western Europe. The nuclear warheads for these intermediate-range missiles would remain in American control. Such bases already have been set up in Britain...and recently a base agreement was signed with Italy.

In Washington, a State Department spokesman says the Russian charge that we want to "wreck" the talks on Germany in advance is "totally devoid of substance." He calls the note typical of the propaganda Russia always indulges in just before an important international conference. A reply will be sent "in due course."

In London, the experts...representing the United States, Britain, West Germany and France...have gone into overtime in their effort to "unify" Western policy. The so-called "working group" began conferring nine days ago...and was supposed to complete its assignment yesterday. The word now is that it will finish its work tomorrow---two days behind schedule.

Today...in a White House ceremony...Christian Herter was sworn in as Secretary of State. President Eisenhower took the occasion to publicly express his confidence in Herter as Dulles' successor. The President said that he and Dulles were "as one" in deciding that Herter was best qualified to take over the office. "All the people of the United States," he said, "hope for your success."

President Eisenhower has chosen the former Democratic congressman, Brooks Hays, to be a member of the board of directors of T.V.A. In Congress Hays represented the Arkansas district which includes Little Rock. He is a moderate on the civil rights issue... and last November he was defeated by Dale Alford, an avowed segregationalist who conducted a last-minute write-in campaign. Last week, the House Administration Committee voted to investigate charges of irregularity in the election.

The Labor Department announces that there was no change last month in the cost of living. Lower food prices were off-set by the slightly higher cost of clothing, transportation, housing and medical care. The consumer price index has now moved up or down...or held steady...within a narrow range of two-tenths of one percent for the past nine months. And this is the longest period of "sustained stability" registered since the price index came into being in 1913. The Labor Department says that food prices can be expected to start going up again next month...if, indeed, the rise has not already begun.

At the Concord State Reformatory...in Concord, Massachusetts... 63 inmates have mutinied and are holding 16 persons as hostages. Authorities say one of the prisoners---believed to be the ringleader---has a gun. And state police from all nearby barracks have been ordered to the scene. So far, the mutineers have not communicated with any of the reformatory officials, or made any demands. The hostages reportedly are 14 guards and two civilian employes.

A scientific report has been issued...expressing the belief that the human body can tolerate twice as much radio-active strontium as previously supposed. The report comes from the National Committee on Radiation Protection and Measurements...a committee made up of a non-governmental experts. Its chairman, Lauriston Taylor, warns...however...that the seriousness of the strontium problem is "not diminished." "It merely indicates," he says, "that there is a little bit more latitude that we thought." At the same time, the report says that the danger of Cesium-137...another product of nuclear fallout which affects muscles---is perhaps greater than believed earlier.

Most people realize that by now the Soviet Union has become the second most productive nation in the world, and may be on the way to draw even with the United States. To have achieved this in a generation has been the fruit of effort, ability - and a great deal of misery and enslavement. Most of the capital that paid for the expansion came out of the hides of the people. They were held at a wretched standard of living, so that they produced for the State rather than themselves. It is a grim formula, but it worked.

Now this formula is being applied in China, another backward country, and if it works there, the world will be even more changed than it has been by the rise of Russia. For China's population is already more than three times as large. China is now at the start of its transition when big gains are easier to register than later. Already it is claiming phenomenal results. Premier Chou En-Lai told the National People's Congress, now meeting in Peiping, that production grew sixty-five percent last year and will increase another forty percent this year.

That is to say that the output of six hundred million people more than doubled in two years. Our normal rate of growth is three percent. We are troubled that the Russians have been expanding by ten percent. In China, even allowing for the extraordinary effort, and the cruelty and compulsions of the labor system and the communes, the rate of growth is hard to believe. And it is of some reassurance to note that it is not borne out by the evidence. At least home consumption and foreign trade do not seem to have been growing in a like degree, as would be expected. Indeed, many communes are admittedly in economic straits, for State subsidies of nearly half-a-billion dollars for them are included in the new budget announced in Peiping yesterday.

The tax on agriculture is to be reduced from seven to five-point-two percent. This shows that last year's leap forward was too fast, and the communes and State farms will have to be nursed along. But they are not as yet failures. There is no retreat from them.

The budget called for an output of more producers goods than consumers goods, in other words, for concentration on investment and growth, rather than better living, the same formula the Soviet Union used. The volume of producer's and consumer goods scheduled for this year is a few billions more than the gross national product of either Great Britain or the German Federal Republic, the biggest producers, after Russia, in Europe.

One can say that such comparisons are misleading in that six hundred million people should be able to out-produce Britain and West Germany with little more than fifty millions each. But it would be to the point to compare the growth of China with that of India with its population of more than three hundred and seventy million. Here one gets a glimpse of what the Chinese effort means. For it aims this year at a national product of seventy billion dollars, whereas the goal of the Indian five-year plan was to increase the gross national product from eighteen to twenty-five billions. Not only that, the Indian plan depends absolutely on help coming from outside, much of it from the United States. All Asia is watching the two countries. India's economy is a mixture of free enterprise and socialism practised in democratic freedom. China is experiencing the ruthless imposition of the Marxist state with complete disregard for freedom. Asian onlookers may cringe from the hideous cost to the Chinese family and individuals, but they are being told by the Marxists that this is the only way that a backward country can catch up in the modern world.

The look into the farther future is even more frightening). The time may well come when an industrialized China not only out-produces the rest of the world in volume, but may match it in per capita output. If by then there should be eight or nine hundred million brainwashed Chinese, they will overshadow and outweigh all other people. So a new power is in the making. Judging from the experience of Tibet, and the cry that goes up from the communes, this is not good news, not for Asia, not for the West, not even for the Soviet Union.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is Dan MacDonnell with a word about the weather.

DAN MACDONNELL

MURROW: We see in Red China a new world power in the making...at great human cost. Here, for the time being at least, is a country where standards of living do not seem to count. And one is inclined to agree with the British socialist, Richard Crossman, who...after personal observation...called Chinese Communism "the biggest and most formidable mass movement in human history."

Good night and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., April 23, 1959

This is the news:

The Senate has gone into a night session...trying to achieve passage of the Kennedy labor bill by late tomorrow. A special Saturday session also is possible. The Senate today approved a series of amendments advanced by Republican Senator Goldwater. One of these would require unions to open their books to any member demanding to see them for "proper cause". The secretary of labor would determine the "proper cause". Another amendment would include joint labor boards, conferences, and joint councils within the definition of labor organizations. Democratic Senator Kennedy quietly accepted these amendments. But he spoke out...strongly...against the "bill of rights" provision which was tacked onto the measure yesterday. The provision, he claimed, would open up "a Pandora's box of lawsuits and wildcat strikes." Kennedy cited the clause that would require unions to furnish lists of members to all candidates. There was nothing, he said, to keep these lists from being used by Communists or by anti-union employers who might put up "dummy" candidates.

In a speech here in New York tonight, Secretary of Defense McElroy warned that military spending may have to be increased greatly in the next few years. The increase, he said, could amount to 20-billion dollars in seven years. McElroy also warned of Russia's program of increased productivity. "This is an area," he said, "where the Soviet Union's effort must be matched, or bettered."

President Eisenhower today appointed John Foster Dulles to serve, within the limits of his health, as a special consultant on foreign affairs. Mr. Eisenhower drove to Walter Reed Hospital to attend the private swearing in ceremony. He told Dulles that his acceptance of the post again demonstrated his "magnificent spirit and devotion." Dulles then read a brief statement expressing gratitude for the appointment. The statement referred to Christian Herter, the new secretary of state, as "my trusted friend." Dulles said he knew Mr. Eisenhower shared his confidence in Herter and in his associates in the Department of State.

This afternoon, Mr. Herter conferred with United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold on a wide variety of subjects, including Germany. The State Department described the meeting as "one of a series of periodic consultations which have taken place between the secretary of state and Mr. Hammarskjold in Washington and at United Nations headquarters in New York." Next week, Herter will go to Paris for a meeting of Western foreign ministers...preparatory to the talks with Russia, due to start on May 11th.

In London, the Western experts trying to hammer out a joint policy on Germany were unable today to complete their work. They now hope to have their report ready tomorrow.

British Prime Minister Macmillan told a political rally today that if the negotiations between East and West next month are genuine, "we can look forward to a meeting of the heads of government." Macmillan said he did not see a meeting at the summit...as a single act...settling the affairs of Europe, or still less of the world. But it might, he said, be the beginning of an era of better relations between the two great power blocs.

President Eisenhower said today that free countries are being challenged to show that people can have both freedom and bread. Much of the strength of the free world, he said, must come from economic growth. Mr. Eisenhower was speaking to the International Chamber of Commerce. "The old saying," he said, "was that trade follows the flag. Today we can say the flag follows trade." And then he added, "The flag of which I speak is an international banner---that of freedom and peace." In another brief speech before the directors of the N.A.M., Mr. Eisenhower urged businessmen to explain to their employes, the need for fiscal soundness in government. A balanced budget, he said, instills confidence in the government, not only at home but abroad.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the nomination of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil. The vote was 16 to 1, with Democratic Senator Morse the only dissenter. Morse...as well as other Dempcratic senators...based their opposition to Mrs. Luce on political speeches she made in past presidential campaigns and on the manner in which she served as ambassador to Italy. Mrs. Luce has conceded that she used "intemperate language" in saying...in 1944...that President Roosevelt "lied" the United States into war. But she did not retract the statement. Her nomination will be called up in the Senate on Monday for confirmation.

New York police received a tip today that eight gunmen had been hired to assassinate Premier Fidel Castro of Cuba, while visiting in the city. The gunmen were described as non-Cubans in the employ of forces hostile to Castro's revolutionary regime. In Washington, security officers called the threat no more alarming than hundreds of others received since Castro's arrival in the country...but New York police and federal agents are on the alert.

The State Department says that it has validated for another 12 months the passports for some thirty American newsmen who want to visit Red China. In making this announcement, the department challenged the Chinese Communist government to have an equal number of its newsmen apply for visas to the United States. If the Chinese really are interested in reciprocity, it said, this is what they would do.

Red China said today that for all practical purposes the revolt in Tibet has been crushed. It allowed, however, that Communist troops were still mopping up "scattered remnants".

And the Peiping radio stepped up its attacks on India (which has granted asylum to the Dalai Lama), warning "Indian expansionists" not to meddle in China's internal affairs. For the first time, Peiping accused Indians directly of writing the Dalai Lama's statement denying the Communist claim that he was brought to India against his will.

The Chinese Communist shelling of Quemoy today entered its ninth month.

More than 40-million ballots are believed to have been cast in today's election in Japan. The voting was for ~~prefectural~~ governors and legislatures---not for parliament---but the outcome is being watched as as gauge to the popularity of Premier Nishi's pro-Western policies. Early returns show his party ahead.

The Arab oil conference ended in Cairo tonight. / A final statement, or communique, proposes that the Arab countries build their own pipeline... linking the oil fields of Iran and Iraq with the Mediterranean. / It also suggests the establishment of an Arab Development Bank. / The pil producers of the Middle East would put five percent of their annual profits in this bank...and the money thus accumulated would be used for all kinds of development projects. / The only Arab country not attending the conference was Iraq...which said it resented the United Arab Republic's "hostile attitude."

Prime Minister Nkrumah of Ghana arrived in Guinea today for a three-week official visit. Technically, Nkrumah is returning the visit which the premier of Guinea, Sékou Touré, made to Ghana last fall.

...into clark

April 23 Clark for Murrow

(FOLLOWS ITEM ON NKRUMAH ARRIVING IN Guinea FOR STATE VISIT)

MURROW: My colleague Blair Clark is just back from two months in West Africa, during which he spent three weeks between Guinea and Ghana in the course of travels that stretched from the Senegal River to the Conge. Clark, what are Nkrumah and Sékou Touré going to be talking about in Conakry ?

CLARK: On the surface, they'll be talking about how to give some meaning to the " union " of the two states that was announced last Fall after Guinea chose to get out of the French Union. That Ghana-Guinea combination really hasn't meant anything except for a loan of thirty million dollars which Ghana offered to Guinea to help tide it over the rough spots after the temporary total break with France. Any of the larger aims of forming a nucleus for a vast pan-African combination has just been talk so far, and, frankly, I would be surprised if anything very concrete resulted from this get-together of Sékou Touré and Nkrumah. When I was in Conakry about six weeks ago there was a great deal of criticism of Ghana by the Guineans. The thing they talked most about was the corruption they believed was all through the Ghana government, (and I must say there's a lot of evidence for this.) I even heard in London last week (though I can't vouch for it) that Ghana was posing as a condition for the payment of the next installament of that loan, that Guinea should abandon the franc zone and join the sterling bloc, [redacted].

MURROW: West Africa, where you were, seems to be relatively quiet and moving toward independence in an orderly way. What chance do you think there is for these territories in the French and British zones to get together in some larger grouping ?

CLARK: Well, Ed, as someone said to me in Accra, there are really only two tribes left in Africa ... the French and the British ... and the question is, as you say, will they join up and make something bigger. There are enormous obstacles to it, starting with the language barrier. And both colonial powers have given their own stamp to the territories they've been in for 50-odd years ... it's astonishing to see how much this is so. For instance, the Africans in British territories like Nigeria and Ghana are apt to drink tea and play fives and cricket and believe in " fair play ", whereas their French equivalents start out with a certain cynicism about human nature ~~motivation~~ .. They ~~mmm~~ drink wine, they're apt to write poetry and don't go in much for sports.

There's another ~~problem~~ thing about the so-called union of Ghana and Guinea and that is that Sékou Touré has a definite somewhere-to-go in his area (that is, in what used to be French West Africa) ... because those territories are tending to join up, and he has as good a chance as any to be a leader of whatever combination is ~~xxxx~~ formed in this French zone. And I don't see how it will help Sekou Touré and Guinea to get more closely involved with Ghana, especially if Nkrumah wants to show that he is the real leader. As for Nkrumah, I don't really see where he has to go. He heads the first former colony to get its independence, his country is relatively rich (which doesn't mean that you don't see an awful lot of straight misery there), he talks a misty pan-Africanism about uniting everybody somehow on that enormous continent ... but it's hard to see where it will all lead. Frankly, I doubt Nkrumah will get too far with Guinea and the French territories and the only thing I can see that he might do to further his leadership ambitions would be to act in such a way that he helps to break up the extremely delicate federal structure of Nigeria, that enormous state, eight times more populaus than Ghana (with its forty million people,) which wins its independence from Britain next year.

MURROW: Was it your impression that things are working in West Africa the way the colonial powers thought they would when they started granting independence ?

Clark: Frankly, no, Ed, not at all. The lucky thing about the west coast of Africa is that it has hardly any white settlers in it (they used to call it " the white man's grave " and all but a few stayed away). So the transition to independence is taking place without violence, generally. But any idea the colonial powres had that the nice neat, western-style constitutions, full of safeguards for individual liberties and so on, would really take hold at last is strictly an illusion. Ghana, for instance, in two years has just about destroyed the careful constitution the British gave them as a condition of independence ... the whole thing can be rewritten in a morning now. In Guinea there's no pretence that the system is anything but a one-party setup, with a kind of democarcy at the base of it all perhaps, but no real oppestion as we know it. As Sekou Toure said to me when I asked him if he dreamed of a nice, neat parliamentary opposition system some day, No, he said, it would mean that myx party had failed ... and anyway, he added, how can you speak of a " conservative " party in Guinea ... there is nothing to conserve here and everything to build. " In the Ivory Coast, where the present government is very pro-French and hence pro-Western, I heard the word " monolithic " used about the ruling party for the first time in a favorable sense. No, Ed, any idea the west may have had that the Africans would simply install western parliamentary democracy once they were free is just nonsense, strictly an illusion. They're going to develop their own institutions andit would be an extreme optimist who would say that they will not be very authoritarian for at least quite a while.

Back in a moment. —

Arthur Hanes —

John Gunther concluded his most impressive book on Africa by saying: "Africa is awake. Africa is alert. It has seen the example of Asia, even if its circumstances are different from those of Asia, and, for good or ill, it is marching with the times." And he also said, "Africa is part of our frontier nowadays, whether we like it or not."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, April 23, 1959
7:45-8:00

MURROW: My colleague Blair Clark is just back from two months in West Africa during which he spent three weeks between Guinea and Ghana. In the course of travels that stretched from the Senegal River to the Congo. Clark, what are Nkrumah and Sekou Toure at Conakry.

CLARK: On the surface, Ed, they will be talking about how to give some meaning to the Union of the two states that was announced last fall after Guinea chose to get out of the French Union. The Ghana-Guinea combination really hasn't meant anything much except for a loan of thirty million dollars which Ghana offered to Guinea to help tide it over the rough spots after the temporary total break with France. Any of the larger aims of forming a nucleus for a vast Pan-African combination has just been talk so far and, frankly, I would be surprised if anything very concrete resulted from this get together of Sekou Toure and Nkrumah. When I was in Conakry about six weeks ago, there was a great deal of criticism of Ghana by the Guineans. The thing they talked most about was the corruption they believed was all through the Ghana Government. I must say there is a lot of evidence of this. I even heard in London last week, though I can't vouch for it, that Ghana was posing as a condition for the payment of the next installment of that loan that Guinea should abandon the French franc zone and join the sterling bloc.

MURROW: Well, Blair, West Africa where you were seems to be relatively quiet and moving toward independence in a rather orderly way. What chance do you think there is for these territories in the French and British zones to get together in some kind of larger grouping.

CLARK: Ed, as someone said to me in Accra, there are really only two tribes left in Africa, the French and the British. And the question is, as you say, will they join up and make something bigger. There are huge obstacles to it, starting with the language barrier and both Colonial powers have given their own stamp to the territories they've been in for fifty odd years. It's astonishing to see how much this is so. For instance, the Africans in British territories like Nigeria and Ghana are apt to drink tea and play fives and cricket and believe in fair play whereas their French equivalent start out with a certain cynicism about human nature - they drink wine, they are apt to write poetry and don't go in much for sports. There's another thing about the so-called union of Ghana and Guinea and that is that Sekou Toure has a definite somewhere to go in his area, that is, of what used to be French West Africa.

MURROW: Yes.

CLARK: Because those territories are tending to join up and he has as good a chance as any to be a leader of whatever combination is formed in this French zone. I don't see how it will help Sekou Toure to get more closely involved with Ghana, especially if Nkrumah wants to show that he is the real leader. As for Nkrumah, I don't really see where he has to go. He helped the first former colony to get its independence, as you know, his country is relatively rich which doesn't mean that you don't see an awful lot of straight misery there. He talks a kind of misty Pan-Africanism about unity everybody somehow on that huge continent but it's hard to see where it will all lead. Frankly, I doubt Nkrumah will get too far with Guinea and the French territories and the only thing I can see that he might do to further his leadership ambitions would be to act in such a way that he helps to break up the extremely delicate federal structure of Nigeria, that enormous state eight times more populous than Ghana with its forty million people which wins its independence from Britain next year.

MURROW: Blair, was it your impression that things were working in West Africa the way the Colonial powers thought they would when they started granting independence?

CLARK: Frankly, no, Ed, not at all. The lucky thing about the West Coast of Africa is, of course, that it has hardly any white settlers in it. They use to call it, in fact, the white man's grave and all but a few stayed away. So the transition to independence at least is taking place without violence generally but any idea that the Colonial powers may have had that the nice, neat Western style constitutions full of safeguards for individual liberties and so on would really take hold is strictly an illusion I think. Ghana, for instance, in just two years has just about destroyed the careful Constitution the British gave them as a condition of independence. The whole thing can be rewritten in a morning now. In Guinea there is no pretence that the system is anything but a one party setup with a kind of democracy at the base of it all perhaps but no real opposition as we know it. A secretary said to me when I asked him if he dreamed of a nice, neat Parliamentary opposition some day, "No," he said, "it would mean that my party had failed and anyway," he added, "how can you speak of a Conservative Party in Guinea? There is nothing to conserve here and everything to build." In the Ivory Coast where the present government is very pro-French, I heard the word monolithic used about the ruling party for the first time in a favorable sense. Now, Ed, any idea that the West may have had that the Africans would simply instal a Western parliamentary democracy system once they were free is just nonsense, in my opinion. They are going to develop their own institutions and it would be an extreme optimist that would say that they will not be very authoritarian for at least quite awhile.

MURROW: Thank you very much Blair Clark, and welcome back from your expedition to Africa. You're not very optimistic but then that isn't your habit, is it?

CLARK: No.

MURROW: Thank you very much Blair.

Trans. R.S.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 23, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate has gone into a night session...trying to achieve passage of the Kennedy labor bill by late tomorrow. A special Saturday session also is possible. The Senate today approved a series of amendments advanced by Republican Senator Goldwater. One of these would require unions to open their books to any member demanding to see them for "proper cause." The secretary of labor would determine the "proper cause." Another amendment would include joint labor boards, conferences, and joint councils within the definition of labor organizations. Democratic Senator Kennedy quietly accepted these amendments. But he spoke out...strongly...against the "bill of rights" provision which was tacked onto the measure yesterday. The provision, he claimed, would open up "a Pandora's box of lawsuits and wildcat strikes." Kennedy cited the clause that would require unions to furnish lists of members to all candidates. There was nothing, he said, to keep these lists from being used by Communists or by anti-union employers who might put up "dummy" candidates.

In a speech here in New York tonight, Secretary of Defense McElroy warned that military spending may have to be increased greatly in the next few years. The increase, he said, could amount to 20-billion dollars in seven years. McElroy also warned of Russia's program of increased productivity. "This is an area," he said, "where the Soviet Union's effort must be matched, or bettered."

President Eisenhower today appointed John Foster Dulles to serve, within the limits of his health, as a special consultant on foreign affairs. Mr. Eisenhower drove to Walter Reed Hospital to attend the private swearing-in ceremony. He told Dulles that his acceptance of the post again demonstrated his "magnificent spirit and devotion." Dulles then read a brief statement expressing gratitude for the appointment. The statement referred to Christian Herter, the new secretary of state, as "my trusted friend." Dulles said he knew Mr. Eisenhower shared his confidence in Herter and in his associates in the Department of State.

This afternoon, Mr. Herter conferred with United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold on a wide variety of subjects, including Germany.

In London, the Western experts trying to hammer out a joint policy on Germany were unable today to complete their work. They now hope to have their report ready tomorrow.

President Eisenhower said today that free countries are being challenged to show that people can have both freedom and bread. Much of the strength of the free world, he said, must come from economic growth. Mr. Eisenhower was speaking to the International Chamber of Commerce. "The old saying," he said, "was that trade follows the flag. Today we can say the flag follows trade." And then he added,"The flag of which I speak is an international banner---that of freedom and peace." In another brief speech before the directors of the N.A.M., Mr. Eisenhower urged businessmen to explain to their employees the need for fiscal soundness in government. A balanced budget, he said, instills confidence in the government, not only at home but abroad.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the nomination of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil. The vote was 16 to 1, with Democratic Senator Wayne Morse the only dissenter. Morse...as well as other Democratic senators...based their opposition to Mrs. Luce on political speeches she made in past presidential campaigns and on the manner in which she served as ambassador to Italy. Mrs. Luce has conceded that she used "intemperate language" in saying...in 1944...that President Roosevelt "lied" the United States into war. But she did not retract the statement. Her nomination will be called up in the Senate on Monday for confirmation.

The State Department says that it has validated for another12 months, the passports for some thirty American newsmen who want to visit Red China. In making this announcement, the department challenged the Chinese Communist government to have an equal number of its newsmen apply for visas to the United States. If the Chinese really are interested in reciprocity, it said, this is what they would do.

Red China said today that for all practical purposes the revolt in Tibet has been crushed. It allowed, however, that Communist troops were still mopping up "scattered remnants."

The Arab oil conference ended in Cairo tonight. A final statement or communique, proposes that the Arab countries build their own pipeline..linking the oil fields of Iran and Iraq with the Mediterranean. It also suggests the establishment of an Arab Development Bank. The oil producers of the Middle East would put five percent of their annual profits in thee bank...and the money thus accumulated would be used for all kinds of development projects. The only Arab country not attending the conference was Iraq...which said it resented the United Arab Republic's "hostile attitude."

Prime Minister Nkrumah of Ghana arrived in Guinea today for a three-week official visit. Technically, Nkrumah is returning the visit which the premier of Guinea, Sekou Toure, made to Ghana last fall.

My colleague Blair Clark is just back from two months in West Africa, during which he spent three weeks between Guinea and Ghana in the course of travels that stretched from the Senegal River to the Congo. Clark, what are Kkrumah and Sekou Toure going to be talking about in Conakry?

CLARK: On the surface Ed, they'll be talking about how to give some meaning to the "union" of the two states that was announced last fall after Ghana chose to get out of the French Union. That Ghana-Guinea combination really hasn't meant anything except for a loan of thirty million dollars which Ghana offered to Guinea to help tide it over the rough spots after the temporary total break with France. Any of the larger aims of forming a nucleus for a vast pan-African combination has just been talk so far, and, frankly, I would be surprised if anything very concrete resulted from this get-together of Sekou Toure and Nkrumah. When I was in Conakry about six weeks ago there was a great deal of criticism of Ghana by the Guineans. The thing they talked most about was the corruption they believed was all through the Ghana government (and I must say there's a lot of evidence for this.) I even heard in London last week, though I cant vouch for it, that Ghana was posing as a condition for the payment of the next installment of that loan that Guinea should abandon the franc zone and join the sterling bloc.

MURROW: West Africa, where you were, seems to be relatively quiet and moving toward independence in an orderly way. what chance do you think there is for these territories in the French and British zones to get together in some larger grouping?

CLARK: Well, Ed, as someone said to me in Accra, there are really only two tribes left in Africa...the French and the British...and the question is as you say, will they join up and make some thing bigger. There are enormous obstacles to it, starting with the language barrier. And both colonial powers have given their own stamp to the territories they've been in for 50-odd years...it's astonishing to see how much this is so. For instance, the Africans in British territories like Nigeria and Ghana are apt to drink tea and play fives and cricket and believe in "fair play" whereas their French equivalents start out with a certain cynicism about human nature. They drink wine, they're apt to write poetry and don't go in much for sports. There's another thing about the so-called union of Ghana and Guinea and that is that Sekou Toure has a definite somewhere-to-go in his area (that is, in what used to be French West Africa)...because those territories are tending to join up, and he has as good a chance as any to be a leader of whatever combination is formed in this French zone. And I don't see how it will help Sekou Toure and Guinea to get more clesely involved with Ghana, especially if Nkrumah wants to show that he is the real leader. As for Nkrumah, I don't really see where he has to go. He heads the first former colony to get its independence, his country is relatively rich (which doesn't mean that you don't see an awful lot of straight misery there), he talks a misty pan-Africanism about uniting everybody somehow on that enormous continent....but it's hard to see where it will all lead. Frankly, I doubt Nkrumah will get too far with Guinea and the French territories and the only thing I can see that he might do to further his leadership ambitions would be to act in such a way that he helps to break up the extremely delicate federal structure of Nigeria, that enormous state, eight times more populous than Ghana with its forty million people, which wins its independence from Britain next year.

MURROW: Was it your impression that things are working in West Africa the way the colonial power thought they would when they started granting independence?

CLARK: Frankly no Ed, not at all. The lucky thing about the west coast of Africa is that it has hardly any white settlers in it (they used to call it "the white man's grave" and all but a few stayed away.) So the transition to independence at least is taking place without violence, generally. But any idea the colonial powers had that the nice neat, western-style constitutions, full of safeguards for individual liberties and so on, would really take hold is strictly an illusion. Ghana, for instance in two years has just about destroyed the careful constitution the British gave them as a condition of independence.... the whole thing can be rewritten in a morning now. In Guinea there's no pretence that the system is anything but a one-party setup, with a kind of democracy at the base of it all perhaps, but no real opposition as we know it. As Sekou Toure said to me when I asked him if he dreamed of a nice, neat parliamentary opposition system someday. No, he said, it would mean that my party had failed...and anyway, he added, how can you speak of a "conservative" party in Guinea.."there is nothing to conserve here and everything to build." In the Ivory Coast, where the present government is very pro-French and hence pro-Western, I heard the word "monolithic" used about the ruling party for the first time in a favorable sense. No, Ed, any idea that the West may have had that the Africans would simply install western parliamentary democracy once they were free is just nonsense, strictly an illusion. They're going to develop their own institutions and it would be an extreme optimist who would say that they will not be very authoritarian for at least quite a while.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is Arthur Hannes with a word about the weather.

ARTHUR HANNES

MURROW: John Gunther concluded his most impressive book on Africa by saying, "Africa is awake. Africa is alert. It has seen the example of Asia, even if its circumstances are different from those of Asia, and for good or ill it is marching with the times." And he also said, "Africa is part of our frontier nowadays, whether we like it or not."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., Apr. 24, 1959

This is the news:

The foreign policy experts...representing the United States, Britain, West Germany and France...today concluded their London talks three days later than anticipated. They met to draw up a common plan with which to approach the foreign ministers conference with Russia next month. But in twelve days of discussion, not all their differences were resolved. Informed sources in Bonn say that "an awful lot of decisions" will have to be made before the negotiations with Russia start on May 11th. The recommendations drafted by the Western foreign policy experts...or "working group"...will be examined by the foreign ministers of the "Big Four" Western powers in Paris next week. And if there are still differences, there may be a special meeting of the foreign ministers of all fifteen NATO countries. The recommendations...drawn up by the working group in London...have not been announced. Unofficially, the proposals are said to follow this general line: No retreat in the allied resolve to maintain the freedom of West Berlin and to maintain there the military position of the United States, Britain and France. The British suggestion that a new "Berlin statute" be negotiated has been shelved. Instead, the allies will offer to spell out again the arrangements which give them the right to be in the city, (under the Potsdam Agreement.) We would also offer to deal with East German officials at the various check points, considering them to be Russian agents. It was recommended that the West not insist on free elections as a first step toward German reunification...but that there first be a two-year period in which East and West Germans would be encouraged to increase their cultural exchanges and step up trade. On the question of European security, the West would offer to give Russia strong guarantees against attack by a powerful, re-united Germany. British Prime Minister Macmillan's plan for a thinning-out of armed forces in Central Europe is said to have been whittled down considerably. The experts reportedly do favor a system of arms control in Central Europe. This would include inspection, and it would be tied in with progress toward German reunification. It is said to have been recommended that the Communist Party be legalized in West Germany, if truly democratic parties are allowed to operate in East Germany. To this suggestion, West Germany is said to be strongly opposed.

→

West German Chancellor Adenauer and Premier Segni of Italy conferred for five hours today, regarding the forthcoming East-West talks. Afterward, they announced "an identity of views."

Czechoslovakia today informed the United States, Britain and France that it wants to take full part in the foreign ministers conference. It said the Western proposition that Czechoslovakia and Poland should participate only in certain stages of the conference was "wholly unfounded".

Former British Prime Minister Attlee said tonight...in a speech in Oslo...that there must be a world system of law, if the world is to survive. Sovereign states, he said, must be prepared to surrender certain rights. And he said one of these is the right to make war.

In Congress today, three Democratic senators called for a shift in the emphasis of American foreign aid, from military assistance to economic development. Chairman Fulbright of the Foreign Relations Committee said he was not contending that the one billion, 600 million dollars requested by President Eisenhower for military aid to our allies is too much. But the economic threat posed by International Communism, he said, is not being taken as seriously as it should. Fulbright was joined by Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts and Senator Humphrey of Minnesota. And...together...they proposed a five-year development loan program with a capital of seven and one-half billion dollars. The President has asked for 700-million dollars for new financing of the development loan fund. The need, Fulbright said, is great. He estimated that in one year, India alone could absorb a billion dollars in outside capital.

The Indian prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, today saw the Dalai Lama privately in the town of Mussoorie, in Northern India. They talked for four hours. Afterward, Nehru said that...if they wished... representatives of Red China could come to India and see for themselves that the Dalai Lama had not been taken out of Tibet by force. Nehru's MANNER was conciliatory. He asked reporters "to keep in view the difficulties of the situation."

The Senate is still in session tonight...working toward passage of the Kennedy labor bill. During the day, two stringent amendments sought by Senator McClellan, chairman of the rackets committee, were turned down. One would have put a tight curb on "organizational picketing"---that is, picketing in order to organize workers or force an employer to bargain. The other amendment would have strengthened the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law against secondary boycotts.

Governor Chandler of Kentucky today sent two thousand National Guardsmen into the coal fields in the eastern part of the state to prevent further strike violence.

Edward R. Murrow: April 24, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

People whose geographical ideas are based on flat maps may not realize that by the new St. Lawrence Seaway which opens this week end, Liverpool is two hundred and fifty miles closer to Cleveland than it is to Baltimore, and Copenhagen is one hundred and fifty miles closer to Cleveland than it is to New York. That is to say, that if big ships can be brought to the Great Lakes through the Seaway, the Lakes will get much of the freight from abroad now being carried to the Eastern Seaboard. The Seaway also opens up the hinterland of the Middle West, richer than the hinterland of the Eastern Seaboard and indeed the richest in the world. This makes it inevitable that a great deal of new business will be created, the products of the Middle West being exchanged for the products of Europe.

A poster put out by a Mayor's Committee in Buffalo proclaims that the Seaway can make Buffalo the biggest city in the world. Chicagoans of course know better, Chicago will ultimately enjoy that distinction, when the Seaway is further enlarged and when America itself expands. President Roosevelt called the Seaway the "master project" of the North American Continent. It makes the Great Lakes into another Mediterranean. It gives the United States a fourth coast, potentially the richest of the lot.

These are the dreams the Seaway has inspired. Now comes the reality, which is more circumscribed. Actually the Seaway is not new. Ships of fourteen-foot draft already can sail from Chicago the distance of two thousand, two hundred and fifty-one miles to the Atlantic. Westward of Montreal is a stretch of a hundred and fourteen miles of rapids in the St. Lawrence. These were by-passed by canals of fourteen-foot draft. Now canals of twenty-seven-foot draft are ready to operate.

The fourteen-foot boats have been doing a lively but limited business. But it costs nearly as much to operate a small boat with lesser tonnage as a bigger one, and the railroads have not felt the competition too keenly, nor have the Eastern Seaboard ports. Now all that will change. A vast increase of low tariff tonnage is expected. This year it will reach twenty-five million tons, later it is sure to reach fifty millions, which is the most the new canals can handle.

The first big effect of the Seaway is going to be less on business with Europe than on traffic between the United States and Canada. And most of it is not going to be in costly manufacturers which run into fantastic money values, but in bulk cargoes like iron ore, grain, coal and oil products. Perhaps the most drastic immediate result will be negative. The Minnesota iron ore deposits are running out, and the American iron and steel industry will depend on ore from newly opened Labrador and Venezuelan mines. If this had to be carried by rail from Eastern ports it would be cheaper to move the iron and steel mills themselves closer to the Eastern Seaboard. Now the ore can go via the Seaway and the steel industry can stay where it is. It is hard to esaggerate what that means to the Middle West.

Perhaps six million tons is the amount of general cargo that will pass through the St. Lawrence to and from places outside the American Continent this year. A quarter of this will be Canadian. But the portion left to the United States will still be of much greater volume than the present Great Lakes trade. And in dollar values it may reach one-tenth of the value of all United States foreign commerce.

Sooner or later the Seaway will have to be enlarged again so that ships can go both ways at the same time through the bottlenecks. This This will cost another half-billion dollars or more. We have contributed one hundred and thirty-one million dollars to the present Seaway. The Canadians have put up three hundred and forty millions. Further enlargement will raise up more of the intricate rivalries between us and the Canadians and between regional American interests.

The two main bottlenecks are the new Seaway Canals and the Welland Canal, and both lie inside Canada. We would be the ones most needing enlargement and should foot most of the bill. But there will be resistance to spending so much on improvements inside Canada, also to putting so much of our prosperity in pawn to the Canadians. But if we don't spend it the Canadians may do it alone, which might be even more unsatisfactory. So the tussle between neighborliness and nationalism which has marked the building of the Seaway is by no means over.

Back in a moment,

George Bryan -

Word for Today

HÔL' DĀN

The Scottish scientist Haldane said that the people who can make a positive contribution to human progress are few; that most of us have to be satisfied with merely staving off the inroads of chaos. But Elmer Davis once remarked that if we can stave off these inroads, and keep the field clear for creative intelligence, we can feel that we have done our part.

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, APRIL 24, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The foreign policy experts...representing the United States, Britain, West Germany and France...today concluded their London talks three days later than anticipated. They met to draw up a common plan with which to approach the foreign ministers conference with Russia next month. But in twelve days of discussion, not all their differences were resolved. Informed sources in Bonn say that "an awful lot of decisions" will have to be made before the negotiations with Russia start on May 11th. The recommendations drafted by the Western foreign policy experts...or "working group"...will be examined by the foreign ministers of the "Big Four" Western powers in Paris next week. And if there are still differences, there may be a special meeting of the foreign ministers of all fifteen NATO countries. The recommendations...drawn up by the working group in London...have not been announced. Unofficially, the proposals are said to follow this general line: No retreat in the allied resolve to maintain the freedom of West Berlin and to maintain there the military position of the United States, Britain and France. The British suggestion that a new "Berlin statute" be negotiated has been shelved. Instead, the allies will offer to spell out again the arrangements which give them the right to be in the city, under the Potsdam Agreement. We would also offer to deal with East German officials at the various check points, considering them to be Russian agents. It was recommended that the West not insist on free elections as a first step toward German reunification...but that there first be a two-year period in which East And West Germans would be encouraged to increase their cultural exchanges and step up trade. On the question of European security, the West would offer to give Russia strong guarantees against attack by a powerful, re-united Germany. British Prime Minister Macmillan's plan for a thinning out of armed forces in Central Europe is said to have been whittled down considerably.

The experts reportedly do favor a system of arms control in Central Europe. This would include inspection, and it would be tied in with progress toward German reunification. It is said to have been recommended that the Communist Party be legalized in West Germany, if truly democratic parties are allowed to operate in East Germany. To this suggestion, West Germany is said to be strongly opposed.

West German Chancellor Adenauer and Premier Segni of Italy conferred for five hours today, regarding the forthcoming East-West talks. Afterward, they announced "an identity of views."

Former British Prime Minister Attlee said tonight...in a speech in Oslo... that there must be a world system of law, if the world is to survive. Sovereign states, he said, must be prepared to surrender certain rights. And he said one of these is the right to make war.

In Congress today, three Democratic senators called for a shift in the emphasis of American foreign aid, from military assistance to economic development. Chairman Fulbright of the Foreign Relations Committee said he was not contending that the one billion, 600 million dollars requested by President Eisenhower for military aid to our allies is too much. But the economic threat posed by International Communism, he said, is not being taken as seriously as it should. Fulbright was joined by Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts and Senator Humphrey of Minnesota. And...together...they proposed a five-year development loan program with a capital of seven and one-half billion dollars. The President has asked for 700-million dollars for new financing of the development loan fund. The need, Fulbright said, is great. He estimated that in one year, India alone could absorb a billion dollars in outside capital.

The Indian prime minister, Jawaharlal Nehru, today saw the Dalai Lama privately in the town of Mussoorie, in Northern India. They talked for four hours. Afterward, Nehru said that...if they wished...representatives of Red China could come to India and see for themselves that the Dalai Lama had not been taken out of Tibet by force. Nehru's manner was conciliatory. He asked reporters "to keep in view the difficulties of the situation."

The Senate is still in session tonight...working toward passage of the Kennedy labor bill. During the day, two stringent amendments sought by Senator McClellan, chairman of the rackets committee, were turned down. One would have put a tight curb on organizational picketing---that is, picketing in order to organize workers or force an employer to bargain. The other amendment would have strengthened the provisions of the Taft-Hartley Law against secondary boycotts.

Governor Chandler of Kentucky today sent two thousand National Guardsmen into the coal fields in the eastern part of the state to prevent further strike violence.

People whose geographical ideas are based on flat maps may not realize that by the new St. Lawrence Seaway which opens this week, Liverpool is two hundred and fifty miles closer to Cleveland than it is to Baltimore, and Copenhagen is one hundred and fifty miles closer to Cleveland than it is to New York. That is to say, that if big ships can be brought to the Great Lakes through the Seaway, the Lakes will get much if the freight from abroad now being carried to the Eastern Seaborrd. The Seaway also opens up the hinterland of the Middle West, richer than the hinterland of the Eastern Seaboard and indeed the richest in the world. This makes it inevitable that a great deal of new business will be created, the products of the Middle West being exchanged for the products of Europe.

A poster put out by a Mayor's Committee in Buffalo proclaims that the Seaway can make Buffalo the biggest city in the world. Chicagoans of course know better. Chicago will ultimately enjoy that distinction, when the Seaway is further enlarged and when America itself expands. President Roosevelt called the Seaway the "master project" of the North American Continent. It makes the Great Lakes into another Mediterranean. It gives the United States a fourth coast, potentially the richest of the lot.

These are the dreams the Seaway has inspired. Now comes the reality, which is more circumscribed. Actually the Seaway is not new. Ships of fourteen-foot draft already can sail from Chicago the distance of two thousand, two-hundred and fifty-one miles to the Atlantic. Westward of Montreal is a stretch of a hundred and fourteen miles of rapids in the St. Lawrence. These were by-passed by canals of fourteen-foot draft. Now canals of twenty-seven-foot draft are ready to operate.

The fourteen-foot boats have been doing a lively but limited business. But it costs nearly as much to operate a small boat with lesser tonnage as a bigger one, and the railroads have not felt the competition too keenly, nor have the Eastern Seaboard ports. Now all that will change. A vast increase of low tariff tonnage is expected. This year it will reach twenty-five million tons, later it is sure to reach fifty millions, which is the most the new canals can handle.

The first big effect of the Seaway is going to be less on business with Europe than on traffic between the United States and Canada. And most of it is not going to be in costly manufacturers which run into fantastic money values, but in bulk cargoes like iron ore, grain, coal and oil products. Perhaps the most drastic immediate result will be negative. The Minnesota iron ore deposits are running out, and the American iron and steel industry will depend on ore from newly opened Labrador and Venezuelan mines. If this had to be carried by rail from Eastern ports it would be cheaper to move the iron and steel mills themselves closer to the Eastern Seaboard. Now the ore can go via the Seaway and the steel industry can stay where it is. It is hard to exaggerate what that means to the Middle West.

Sooner or later the Seaway will have to be enlarged again so that ships can go both ways at the same time through the bottlenecks. This will cost another half-billion dollars or more. We have contributed one hundred and thirty-one million dollars to the present Seaway. The Canadians have put up three hundred and forty millions. Further enlargement will raise up more of the intricate rivalries between us and the Canadians and between regional American interests.

The two main bottlenecks are the new Seaway Canals and the Welland Canal, and both lie inside Canada. We would be the ones most needing enlargement and should foot most of the bill. But there will be resistance to spending so much on improvements inside Canada, also to putting so much of our prosperity in pawn to the Canadians. But if we don't spend it the Canadians may do it alone, which might be even more unsatisfactory. So the tussle between neighborliness and nationalism which has marked the building of the Seaway is by no means over.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Scottish scientist Haldane said that the people who can make a positive contribution to human progress are few; that most of us have to be satisfied with merely staving off the inroads of chaos. But Elmer Davis once remarked that if we can stave off these inroads, and keep the field clear for creative intelligence, we can feel that we have done our part.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., Apr. 27, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Herter has left for Paris to attend the meeting of Western foreign ministers on Wednesday. The ministers want to "unify" their position before entering into talks with Russia next month. And Mr. Herter said today...before leaving...that he was confident they would "reach the right result."

Herter also conferred at length today with President Eisenhower. One of the subjects discussed was Premier Khrushchev's rejection of the President's proposal that nuclear explosions...up to an altitude of 30 miles...be prohibited as the first step toward a complete ban on nuclear weapons tests. A White House statement describes Mr. Eisenhower as

→

"disappointed" in Russia's reaction. The statement emphasizes that the United States does want a complete test ban...but that, thus far, Russia has been unwilling to accept the controls which would make such agreement possible.

Today, at the Geneva conference on nuclear tests, Russia formally proposed that in policing a ban both sides limit themselves in advance as to the number of first-hand inspection trips they would make. British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd today spoke hopefully of this proposal in the House of Commons. He said that under the plan---which originated with Prime Minister Macmillan---Russia, for a certain number of inspections at least, would have no veto. (I should like to discuss this and other aspects of the forthcoming Big Four conference in a few minutes).

The foreign ministers of nine Communist countries met in Warsaw today, purportedly to coordinate their policy for the forthcoming Big Four talks. Eight of these countries are members of the Warsaw Pact. The ninth country is Red China...which is attending a Warsaw Pact meeting for the first time as a full participant.

In Peiping, the rubber-stamp Peoples Congress...or parliament...today elected Liu Shao-chi president of Communist China. Liu played a major role in setting up the Commune system and got much of his early training in Moscow. As the new president, he succeeds Mao Tse-tung...who remains chairman of the party, the position of dominant power. Most Western observers had expected the presidency to go---not to Liu---but to the vice president, Marshal Chu Teh, the veteran military leader. Chu not only did not get the presidency but was demoted to the position of chairman of the standing committee of the Peoples Congress. Chou En-lai stays on as prime minister.

Prime Minister Nehru said today that India wants to maintain friendly relations with Communist China. "But responsible people in China," he said, "are using the language of the cold war, regardless of truth or propriety." Speaking before the Indian parliament, Nehru vigorously denied the Communist charge that the Dalai Lama had been brought to India "under duress". And he called on Red China to end "the present fighting and killing in Tibet."

In Argentina today, all activities of the Communist Party were banned. Party newspapers and magazines were forbidden to publish, and all offices of the party throughout the country were ordered closed down. The decree was issued by the Frondizi government in the wake of street rioting...for which it says the Communists were to blame. And recently the Soviet ambassador was asked to leave.

President Eisenhower told the United States Chamber of Commerce today that "the interests of the free world are the interests of America." American business can help, he said, by promoting private investment abroad, especially in the under-developed countries.

Mr. Eisenhower today vetoed a bill to reorganize the rural electification program. The measure would have deprived the secretary of agriculture of the final say on rural electrification loans...something which the President said would have marked "a major retreat from sound administrative policy and practice."

The Arkansas Supreme Court today upheld the state law by which Governor Faubus has kept four Little Rock high schools closed since last September. The court ruled...in a 4 to 3 decision...that the law violates neither the state constitution nor the Fourteenth Amendment to the constitution of the United States. Faubus closed the four public high schools, rather than see them integrate. The state law faces another test next week...when its constitutionality will be argued before a three-judge Federal Court.

In Pearl River County, Mississippi... state officers, assisted by the F.B.I., are continuing their search for Mack Parker, the 23-year-old Negro, who was snatched by a lynch mob from his jail cell late Friday night. Parker was to have gone on trial today for rape. The trial judge HAS denounced his abduction. Judge Sebe Dale said, "A fair trial has been denied this man. I wanted to show the world that we would proceed according to the law, regardless of race, creed or color."

Edward R. Murrow: April 27, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

This is the week when the Western Allies have to agree among themselves on how to negotiate with the Soviet Union at the coming Four-Power Conference in Geneva. Secretary Herter and his colleagues from London and Paris are meeting in Paris on Wednesday for that purpose. It is not just rhetorical to say that the Allies have to agree. If they don't agree, the negotiations next month will be an inevitable Allied disaster. That is the logic of the situation and the Allies can be expected to agree.

But what they are striving to agree to is a program to lay before the Russians which they know in advance the Russians will not accept. It will be a package proposal that contains concessions the Russians want, made conditional on ultimate re-unification of Germany which the Kremlin does not want. So the tussling and bickering among the Allies has not only been over some way to come to terms with the Russians. It has mainly been over how to meet Russian proposals with counter-proposals which allied and world opinion will judge to be reasonable. We believe the Russians are going into the talks for a propaganda victory. Well, so are we.

Up to the past week end the Western Allies had not agreed on their counter-proposals. The package deal which the United States laid before the allied working group on March 12, ran into stormy weather. The first baggage that had to be thrown overboard was the American draft proposal for a peace treaty with a united Germany. Then the proposals had to be scrapped for achieving a statewise confederation of Germany. This was done on the blunt insistence of Bonn. The plan had been to elect representatives of the sixteen pre-war German Federal States, who then would take up the long process of confederation. Ten of these states lie in West Germany, six in East Germany. Bonn would not agree to assign so much strength to East Germany. It demanded that representatives be appointed, not elected, and on a basis of relative population, that is, three to one for the West.

More trouble came from the persistent interest of the British in some form of disengagement in Central Europe. The British appeared ready to settle on a new status for Berlin, plus a thinning out of military strength in Central Europe without insisting on German re-unification. This reflected a British belief that Khrushchev wants an agreement and should be met part way. Both Paris and Bonn were against offering concessions in advance of receiving some from Moscow. Bonn felt in particular that thinning out power in Central Europe would have no other effect than to weaken West Germany.

Now the British have agreed to make their disengagement proposals part of the package deal, that is, conditional on German re-unification. And they have met the criticism of Bonn that disengagement was to be at the expense of West Germany alone, by adding another proposal. This is for an open skies inspection region ranging from Paris to Moscow.

The differences between the allies have not been hidden from the Communists, and the Foreign Ministers of the Warsaw Pact countries are meeting this week, devising ways to exploit them. They have their cue from Khrushchev, who has spilled a proposal made by Prime Minister Macmillan while he was in Moscow. This has put him in an embarrassing position in backing up President Eisenhower's latest offer to stop above-ground nuclear tests. Mr. Macmillan wrote a note to Khrushchev supporting the Eisenhower proposal, to which Khrushchev answered, in effect: "I don't like the idea, it will not get us anywhere. I like better the idea you spoke of in Moscow", and went on to tell what it was. So we and the French learned for the first time that Mr. Macmillan in Moscow had suggested, in discussing inspection, that both sides might limit themselves to the number of inspection trips they intended to make in the course of a year.

There is nothing shocking or even very significant in such an idea. The point about it is that Khrushchev has instructed Gromyko to introduce the proposal at Geneva as his own and, in a published note, has asked Mr. Macmillan to instruct Selwyn Lloyd to support it. It is an obvious way to produce friction between the President and the Prime Minister.

This is clever, and in a way it is interesting to watch. But it sets the tone for the Geneva meeting. Obviously there will be less of a search for peace, than a search for ways to blame the failure to make peace on the other side.

Back in a moment.

George Bryan

Word for Today

Premier Khrushchev is using the proposal that Mr. Macmillan made to him last month...when he was in Moscow...as a means of sowing dissension among the allies. Sophocles said, "A little word hath often marred or made men's fortunes." And Calvin Coolidge once remarked, "I have never been hurt by anything I didn't say."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 27, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Herter has left for Paris to attend the meeting of Western foreign ministers on Wednesday. The ministers want to "unify" their position before entering into talks with Russia next month. And Mr. Herter said today...before leaving...that he was confident thay would "reach the right result."

Herter also conferred at length today with President Eisenhower. One of the subjects discussed was Premier Khrushchev's rejection of the President's proposal that nuclear explosions...up to an altitude of 30 miles...be prohibited as the first step toward a complete ban on nuclear weapons tests. A White House statement describes Mr. Eisenhower as "disappointed" in Russia's reaction. The statement emphasizes that the United States does want a complete test ban...but that, thus far, Russia has been unwilling to accept the controls which would make such agreement possible.

Today, at the Geneva conference on nuclear tests, Russia formally proposed that in policing a ban both sides limit themselves in advance as to the number of first-hand inspection trips they would make. British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd today spoke hopefully of this proposal in the House of Commons. He said that under the plan---which originated with Prime Minister Macmillan---Russia, for a certain number of inspections at least, would have no veto. (I should like to discuss this and other aspects of the forthcoming Big Four conference in a few minutes).

The foreign ministers of nine Communist countries met in Warsaw today, purportedly to coordinate their policy for the forthcoming Big Four talks. Eight of these countries are members of the Warsaw Pact. The ninth country is Red China...which is attending a Warsaw Pact meeting for the first time as a full participant.

In Peiping, the rubber-stamp Peoples Congress...or parliament...today elected Liu Shao-chi president of Communist China. Liu played a major role in setting up the commune system and got much of his early training in Moscow. As the new president, he succeeds Mao-Tse-tung...who remains chairman of the party, the position of dominant power. Most Western observers had expected the presidency to go---not to Liu---but to the vice president, Marshal Chu Teh, the veteran military leader. Chu not only did not get the presidency but was demoted to the position of chairman of the standing committee of the Peoples congress. Chou En-lai stays on as prime minister.

Prime Minister Nehru said today that India wants to maintain friendly relations with Communist China. "But responsible people in China," he said, "are using the language of the cold war, regardless of truth or propriety." Speaking before the Indian parliament, Nehru vigorously denied the Communist charge that the Dalai Lama had been brought to India "under duress." And he called on Red China to end "the present fighting and killing in Tibet."

In Argentina today, all activities of the Communist Party were banned. Party newspapers and magazines were forbidden to publish, and all offices of the party throughout the country were ordered closed down. The decree was issued by the Frondizi government in the wake of street rioting...for which it says the Communists were to blame. And recently the Soviet ambassador was asked to leave.

President Eisenhower told the United States Chamber of Commerce today that "the interests of the free world are the interests of America." American business can help, he said, by promoting private investment abroad, especially in the underdeveloped countries.

Mr. Eisenhower today vetoed a bill to reorganize the rural electrification program. The measure would have deprived the secretary of agriculture of the final say on rural electrification loans...something which the President said would have marked "a major retreat from sound administrative policy and practice."

The Arkansas Supreme Court today upheld the state law by which Governor Faubus has kept four Little Rock high schools closed sinse last September. The court ruled...in a 4 to 3 decision...that the law violates neither the state constitution nor the Fourteenth Amendment to the constitution of the United States. Faubus closed the four public high schools, rather than see them integrate. The state law faces another test next week...when its constitutionality will be argued before a three-judge Federal Court.

In Pearl River County, Mississippi...state officers, assisted by the F.B.I., are continuing their search for Mack Parker, the 23-year-old Negro who was snatched by a lynch mob from his jail cell late Friday night. Parker was to have gone on trial tody for rape. The trial judge has denounced his abduction. Judge Sebe Dale said, "A fair trial has been denied this man. I wanted to show the world that we would proceed according to the law, regardless of race, creed or color."

This is the week when the Western Allies have to agree among themselves on how to negotiate with the Soviet Union at the coming Four-Power Conference in Geneva. Secretary Herter and his colleagues from London and Paris are meeting in Paris on Wednesday for that purpose. It is not just rhetorical to say that the Allies have to agree. If they don't agree, the negotiations next motth will be an inevitable Allied disaster. That is the logic of the situation and the Allies can be expected to agree.

But what they are striving to agree to is a program to lay before the Russians which they know in advance the Russians will not accept. It will be a package proposal that contains concessions the Russians want, made conditional on ultimate re-unification of Germany which the Kremlin does not want. So the tussling and bickering among the Allies has not only been over some way to come to terms with the Russians. It has mainly been over how to meet Russian proposals with counter-proposals which allied and world opinion will judge to be reasonable.

We believe the Russians are going into the talks for a propaganda victory. Well, so are we.

Up to the present week-end the Western Allies had not agreed on their counter-proposals. The package deal which the United States laid before the allied working group on March 12, ran into stormy weather. The first baggage that had to be thrown overboard was the American draft proposal for a peace treaty with a united Germany. Then the proposals had to be scrapped for achieving a statewise confederation of Germany. This was done on the blunt insistence of Bonn. The plan had been to elect representatives of the sixteen pre-war German Federal States, who then would take up the long process of confederation. Ten of these states lie in West Germany, six in East Germany. Bonn would not agree to assign so much strength to East Germany. It demanded that representatives be appointed, not elected, and on a basis of relative population, that is, three to one for the West.

More trouble came from the persistent interest of the British in some form of disengagement in Central Europe. The British appeared ready to settle on a new status for Berlin, plus a thinning out of military strength in Central Europe without insisting on German re-unification. This reflected a British belief that Khrushchev wants an agreement and should be met part way. Both Paris and Bonn were against offering concessions in advance of receiving some from Moscow. Bonn felt in particular that thinning out power in Central Europe would have no other effect than to weaken West Germany.

Now the British have agreed to make their disengagement proposals part of the package deal, that is, conditional on German re-unficiation. And they have met the criticism of Bonn that disengagement was to be at the expense of West Germany alone, by adding another proposal. This is for an open skies inspection region ranging from Paris to Moscow.

The differences between the allies have not been hidden from the Communists, and the Foreign Ministers of the Warsaw Pact countries are meeting this week, devising ways to exploit them. They have their cue from Khrushchev, who has spilled a proposal made by Prime Minister Macmillan while he was in Moscow. This has put him in an embarrassing position in backing up President Eisenhower's latest offer to stop above-ground nuclear tests. Mr. Macmillan wrote a note to Khrushchev supporting the Eisenhower proposal, to which Khrushchev answered, in effect: "I don't like the idea; it will not get us anywhere. I like better the idea you spoke of in Moscow," and went on to tell what it was. So we and the French learned for the first time that Mr. Macmillan in Moscow had suggested, in discussing inspection, that both sides might limit themselves to the number of inspection trips they intended to make in the course of a year.

There is nothing shocking or even very significant in such an idea. The point about it is that Khrushchev has instructed Gromyko to introduce the proposal at Geneva as his own and, in a published note, has asked Dr. Macmillan to instruct Selwyn Lloyd to support it. It is an obvious way to product friction between the President and the Prime Minister.

This is clever, and in a way it is interesting to watch. But it sets the tone for the Geneva meeting. Obviously there will be less of a search for peace, than a search for ways to blame the failure to make peace on the other side.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. Btt first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Premier Khrushchev is using the proposal that Mr. Macmillan made to him last month...when he was in Moscow...as a means of sowing dissension among the allies. Sophocles said, "A little word hath often marred or made men's fortunes." And Calvin Coolidge once remarked, "I have never been hurt by anything I didn't say."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., Apr. 28, 1959

This is the news:

The Senate today confirmed the nomination of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil. / The roll call vote was 79 to 11. The nomination was strongly opposed by Democratic Senator Morse, because of campaign statements made by Mrs. Luce against Roosevelt and Truman. / Mrs. Luce acknowledged, in the course of committee hearings, that some of the statements may have been "intemperate" ... but she refused to retract anything she had said. / Morse said he could not vote to confirm "because she still stands by her statement, that Franklin D. Roosevelt "lied us into war." Republican senators said this was ancient history...and praised her record as ambassador to Italy, saying that she had done "an efficient, most creditable job." Following the Senate action, Mrs. Luce issued a statement expressing her gratitude "for the overwhelming vote of confirmation." Then she added, "My difficulties, of course, go some years back and began when Senator Wayne Morse was kicked in the head by a horse."

→

In spite of her confirmation, Henry R. Luce...the editor-in-chief of Time Incorporated...said here in New York this evening that he has asked his wife to offer to resign her new ambassadorial post. Mrs.Luce, he revealed, had told the State Department some weeks ago not to hesitate to withdraw her nomination, if it should prove a source of embarrassment to the Administration. He said Mrs. Luce had been prompted to make this suggestion because of the demonstrations in Bolivia against the United States and Time Magazine. The reaction of the State Department, Mr. Luce said, was that the Bolivian incident had little or no connection with Mrs. Luce becoming ambassador to Brazil. "However," he said, "in the three weeks since then, Senator Wayne Morse and others have devoted themselves to undermining Mrs. Luce's usefulness. As an ambassador, she will not be able to defend herself from vendetta politics at home....Therefore, I have asked my wife to offer her resignation again." No comment so far from Mrs. Luce. And the White House said tonight, "There has been no resignation."

The Senate today over-rode President Eisenhower's veto of the bill to change the rural electrification program. The vote was 64 to 29, only two votes more than the two-thirds majority required. Mr. Eisenhower vetoed the bill only yesterday because it would strip Secretary of Agriculture Benson of authority to approve or reject loans made under the program. Instead, the authority would be given the head of the Rural Electrification Administration...a change which the President, in his veto message, called "a major retreat from sound administrative policy and practice." If the House follows the lead of the Senate, and votes to override, it would be the first time an Eisenhower veto has not stuck.

The House Appropriations Committee today issued a report...saying that the Administration had "set back" the government's medical research program "in a desperate attempt to present, on paper, a balanced budget." The committee then voted 344-million dollars for research by the National Institutes of Health---50-million dollars more than President Eisenhower asked for. More than 8-million dollars of the additional money would go for cancer research.

The council of the Organization of American States voted unanimously today to help Panama repel the small invading force that landed last week. The "invaders" reportedly came from Cuba. But at today's O.A.S. meeting, Cuba joined the other 20 American states in condemning the invasion. And the Castro government said that if any of the invading force were found to be members of the Cuban Army, they would be brought before military tribunals and tried as deserters.

Premier Fidel Castro today broke off his tour of the United States and flew to Buenos Aires for an O.A.S. meeting devoted to a discussion of economic cooperation among the American states.

In Paris today, Secretary of State Herter had what he called "a very interesting talk" with President Charles de Gaulle. Herter predicted that when the Western foreign ministers meet Russia next month, it will be "with unity and firmness of purpose." Tomorrow, he and the foreign ministers of Britain, West Germany and France will confer in an effort to achieve this common approach. It was "only natural", he said, that the Western countries should regard the questions to be discussed "from somewhat different points of view."

British Field Marshal Montgomery arrived in Moscow today for an unofficial visit, in the course of which he plans to see Khrushchev. An interview with the field marshal...conducted recently by Charles Collingwood and this reporter in England...will be carried later tonight over most of these CBS radio stations.

The director of U.S. intelligence...Allen Dulles...told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today the situation in Iraq is extremely dangerous but not hopeless. Chairman Fulbright quotes Dulles as saying that the Communists in Iraq have come "mighty close to a complete take-over."

President Eisenhower told Governor Coleman of Mississippi today that it was his "earnest hope" that the abductors of Mack Parker can be quickly apprehended. A 23-year-old Negro, Parker was snatched from his jail cell Friday night while awaiting trial for rape. It is feared that he may have been lynched. Goverhor Coleman today expressed his appreciation for the work of the F.B.I. in the case...and said he had reason to believe that the crime would seen be solved.

Edward R. Murrow: April 28, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The power of a single man and a single voice is usually not great in a world dominated by political extremism and violence. What counts is military might, and the massing of disciplined millions. But yesterday a single man spoke out on the fate of Tibet, with startling effectiveness. It was Prime Minister Nehru in a statement to the Indian Parliament. What he said will not restore Tibet's autonomy. It may not even save good relations between India and China. China's millions may never know that he spoke, and what he said. But the statement may turn out to demonstrate that truth told with restraint by an individual can be more memorable than anything said in a frenzy by a totalitarian state.

Red China has levelled frenzied charges against India in connection with the Tibet uprising. The National People's Congress in Peiping was assured that the revolt was instigated by Indian expansionists who are the heirs of British Imperialism. It was told that the Dalai Lama had been kidnapped and is being held in India under duress. And that the plot in Tibet was hatched in the Indian border town of Kalimpong, and responded to only by upperclass reactionaries. This is the lingo of the cold war.

"We have fortunately kept out of the cold war" Mr. Nehru said yesterday, "and I hope that we shall not on this or any other occasion use the language of the cold war. The matter is too serious to be dealt with in a trivial or excited way." He apologized for an episode in Bombay in which a tomato was thrown at a picture of Mao Tse-Tung. "In the excitement of the moment" he said, "we cannot allow ourselves to be swept away into wrong courses."

"It is not for me," he went on, "to make a similar appeal to the leader, press and people of China. All I can say is that I have been greatly distressed at the tone of the comments and charges made against India by responsible people in China. They have used the language of the cold war regardless of truth and propriety. This is peculiarly distressing in a great nation with thousands of years of culture behind it, noted for its restrained and polite behavior."

When Premier Chou En-Lai came to New Delhi, Mr. Nehru disclosed, he told him that he did not consider Tibet to be a province of China, but an autonomous region which should enjoy autonomy. "He told me further" Mr. Nehru said, "that it would be absurd for anyone to imagine that China was going to force Communism on Tibet."

Mr. Nehru as much as admitted that some Tibetans in North India may have done some plotting, by saying that they had been warned by the government not to take part in subversive activities. "By and large" he said, "they observed the order." He also did not deny that upperclass reactionaries in Tibet had a part in the uprising. "But to say that they were wholly responsible" he said, "appears to be an extraordinary simplification. Even Chinese sources showed the revolt to be of considerable magnitude, and the basis of it must have been a strong feeling of nationalism, affecting not only the upper class but others also. No doubt vested interests joined it and sought to profit from it. An attempt to explain the situation by worn-out words, phrases and slogans is seldom helpful."

Mr. Nehru again invited the Chinese Ambassador to visit the Dalai Lama in his Indian asylum, and issued the same invitation to the Panchen Lama. On the charge that the Dalai Lama is being held in duress Mr. Nehru said: "The Chinese authorities should know how we function and what our laws and constitution are. It is open to him at any time to go back to Tibet whenever he wants to."

He urged the Chinese to stick to the five principles of co-existence signed jointly by Mr. Nehru and Chou En-Lai in 1954. / "One of the five principles" he said, "is mutual respect. / China is not honoring the principles by making unfounded charges against India."

There is a ring of nobility in this appeal, and it will be of more than passing interest to see how Peiping responds. / It may decide that Nehru's good will is worth keeping, and will stop the shrill cry of expansionists and imperialism. / If not, India will find itself drawn into the cold war regardless of Nehru. / Then one can expect still stormier times in the relations between the two countries.

Back in a moment.

George Bryan.

Word for Today

Prime Minister Nehru's statement before the Indian parliament is a demonstration of how effective the truth can be...when expressed with simple eloquence and restraint. George Chapman, the dramatist, once remarked, "How strong an influence works in well placed words!" And Emerson said, "The greatest homage we can pay to truth is to use it."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, APRIL 28, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Senate today confirmed the nomination of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil. The roll call vote was 79 to 11. The nomination was strongly opposed by Democratic Senator Morse because of campaign statements made by Mrs. Luce against Roosevelt and Truman. Mrs. Luce acknowledged in the course of committee hearings that some of the statements may have been "intemperate"... but she refused to retract anything she had said. Morse said he could not vote to confirm "because she still stands by her statement that Franklin D. Roosevelt "lied us into war." Republican senators said this was ancient history...and praised her record as ambassador to Italy, saying that she had done "an efficient, most creditable job." Following the Senate action, Mrs. Luce issued a statement expressing her gratitude "for the overwhelming vote of confirmation." Then she added, "My difficulties, of course, go some years back and began when Senator Wayne Morse was kicked in the head by a horse."

In spite of her confirmation, Henry R. Luce...the editor-in-chief of Time Incorporated...said here in New York this evening that he has asked his wife to offer to resign her new ambassadorial post. Mrs. Luce, he revealed, had told the State Department some weeks ago not to hesitate to withdraw her nomination, if it should prove a source of embarrassment to the Administration. He said Mrs. Luce had been prompted to make this suggestion because of the demonstrations in Bolivia against the United States and Time Magazine. The reaction of the State Department, Mr. Luce, said, was that the Bolivian incident had little or no connection with Mrs. Luce becoming ambassador to Brazil. "However," he said, "in the three weeks since then, Senator Wayne Morse and others have devoted themselves to undermining Mrs. Luce's usefulness. As an ambassador, she will not be able to defend herself from vendetta politics at home....Therefore, I have asked my wife to offer her resignation again." No comment so far from Mrs. Luce. And the White House said tonight, "There has been no resignation."

The Senate today over-rode President Eisenhower's veto of the bill to change the rural electrification program. The vote was 64 to 29, only two votes more than the two thirds majority required. Mr. Eisenhower vetoed the bill only yesterday because it would strip Secretary of Agriculture Benson of authority to approve or reject loans made under the program. Instead, the authority would be given the head of the Rural Electrification Administration...a change which the President, in his veto message, called "a major retreat from sound administrative policy and practice." If the House follows the lead of the Senate, and votes to override, it would be the first time an Eisenhower veto has not stuck.

The House Appropriations Committee today issudd a report...saying that the Admnnistration had "set back" the government's medical research program "in a desperate attempt to present, on paper, a balanced budget." The committee then voted 344-million dollars for research by the National Institutes of Health---50-million dollars more than President Eisenhower asked for. More than 8-million dollars of the additional money would go for cancer research.

The Council of the Orzanization of American States voted unanimously today to help Panama repel the small invading force that landed last week. The "invaders" reportedly came from Cuba. But at today's O.A.S. meeting, Cuba joined the other 20 American states in condemning the invasion. And the Castro government said that if any of the invading forces were found to be members of the Cuban army, they would be brought before military tribunals and tried as deserters.

Premier Fidel Castro today broke off his tour of the United States and flew to Buenos Aires for an O.A.S. meeting devoted to a discussion of economic cooperation among the American states.

In Paris today, Secretary of State Herter had what he called "a very interesting talk" with President Charles de Gaulle. Herter predicted that when the Western foreign ministers meet Russia next month, it will be "with unity and firmness of purpose." Tomorrow, he and the foreign ministers of Britain, West Germany and France will confer in an effort to achieve this common approach. It was "only natural," he said, that the Western countries should regard the questions to be discussed "from somewhat different points of view."

British Field Marshal Montgomery arrived in Moscow today for an unofficial visit, in the course of which he plans to see Khrushchev, An interview with the field marshal...conducted recently by Charles Collingwood and this reporter in England...will be carried later tonight over most of these CBS radio stations.

The director of U.S. intelligence...Allen Dulles...told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today the situation in Iraq is extremely dangerous but not hopeless. Chairman Fulbright quotes Dulles as saying that the Communists in Iraq have come "mighty close to a complete take-over."

President Eisenhower told Governor Colemen of Mississippi today that it was his "earnest hope" that the abductors of Mack Parker can be quickly apprehended. A 23-year-old Negro, Parker was snatched from his jail cell Friday night while awaiting trial for rape. It is feared that he may have been lynched. Governor Coleman today expressed his appreciation for the work of the F.B.I. in the case...and said he had reason to believe that the crime would soon be solved.

The power of a single man and a single voice is usually not great in a world dominated by political extremism and violence. What counts is military might, and the massing of disciplined millions. But yesterday a single man spoke out on the fate of Tibet, with startling effectiveness. It was Prime Minister Nehru in a statement to the Indian Parliament. What he said will not restore Tibet's autonomy. It may not even save good relations between India and China. China's millions may never know that he spoke, and what he said. But the statement may turn out to demonstrate that truth told with restraint by an individual can be more memorable than anything said in a frenzy by a totalitarian state.

Red China has levelled frenzied charges against India in connection with the Tibet uprising. The National People's Congress in Peiping was assured that the revolt was instigated by Indian expansionists who are the heirs of British Imperialism. It was told that the Dalai Lama had been kidnapped and is being held in India under duress. And that the plot in Tibet was hatched in the Indian border town of Kalimpong, and responded to only by upperclass reactionaries. This is the lingo of the cold war.

"We have fortunately kept out of the cold war" Mr. Nehru said yesterday, "and I hope that we shall not on this or any other occasion use the language of the cold war. The matter is too serious to be dealt with in a trivial or excited way." He apologized for an episode in Bombay in which a tomato was thrown at a picture of Mao Tse-Tung. "In the excitement of the moment" he said, "we cannot allow ourselves to be swept away into wrong courses."

"It is not for me," he went on, "to make a similar appeal to the leader, press and people of China. All I can say is that I have been greatly distressed at the tone of the comments and charges made against India by responsible people in China. They have used the language of the cold war regardless of truth and propriety. This is peculiarly distressing in a great nation with thousands of years of culture behind it, noted for its restrained and polite behavior."

When Premier Chou En-lai came to New Delhi, Mr. Nehru disclosed, he told him that he did not consider Tibet to be a province of China, but an autonomous region which should enjoy autonomy. "He told me further" Mr. Nehru said, "that it would be absurd for anyone to imagine that China was going to force Communism on Tibet."

Mr. Nehru as much as admitted that some Tibetans in North India may have done some plotting, by saying that they had been warned by the government not to take part in subversive activities. "By and large" he said, "they observed the order."

Mr. Nehru again invited the Chinese Ambassador to visit the Dalai Lama in his Indian asylum, and issued the same invitation to the Panchen Lama. On the charge that the Dalai Lama is being held in duress Mr. Nehru said: "The Chinese authorities should know how we function and what our laws and constitution are. It is open to him at any time to go back to Tibet whenever he wants to."

He urged the Chinese to stick to the five principles of co-existence signed jointly by Mr. Nehru and Chou En-Lai in 1954. "One of the five principles" he said, "is mutual respect. China is not honoring the principles by making unfounded charges against India."

There is a ring of nobility in this appeal, and it will be of more than passing interest to see how Peiping responds. It may decide that Nehru's good will is worth keeping, and will stop the shrill cry of expansionists and imperialism. If not, India will find itself drawn into the cold war regardless of Nehru. Then one can expect still stormier times in the relations between the two countries.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the worl for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Prime Minister Nehru's statement before the Indian parliament is a demonstration of how effective the truth can be...when expressed with simple eloquence and restraint. George Chapman, the dramatist, once remarked, "How strong an influence works in well placed words!" And Emerson said, "The greatest homage we can pay to truth is to use it."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., Apr. 29, 1959

This is the news:

The Western foreign ministers began their talks in Paris today, preparatory to their meeting with Russia next month. A spokesman for Secretary of State Herter said: "We covered more ground than we expected. No major differences developed." (In a few minutes, we will switch to Paris for a direct report).

In Warsaw today, Communist China joined the eight Warsaw Pact countries in supporting the Soviet position on Germany. The foreign ministers of the nine states signed a communique endorsing Russia's proposal for ending the occupation status of Berlin. The communique suggested that the Berlin problem...and the problem of European security...be taken up separately. It also repeated Russia's argument that reunification was a question for the Germans themselves to decide...but it said nothing about a separate treaty with East Germany. Russia's warning to the NATO countries not to allow rocket bases to be set up on their soil was included. However, the language of the communique...taken as a whole... was moderate.

—)

British Field Marshal Montgomery saw Premier Khrushchev in Moscow today for two hours. Montgomery declined to discuss their conversation. "But the talk was so friendly and so interesting," he said, "that I am going back to see him tomorrow." Montgomery's trip to Russia is unofficial; it was not sponsored by the British government.

Before the field marshal left for Moscow, he was interviewed by Charles Collingwood, chief of the CBS London Bureau, and this reporter. In the interview...carried last night on this network...Montgomery called for the reorganization of NATO. He advocated more meetings at the summit, described soldiers as poor politicians, and said that the United States in recent years had been lacking in leadership. Montgomery's remarks provoked a strong reaction in the British press. The London Daily Mail called his comment on American leadership "tactless"...and the News Chronicle said Montgomery should follow his own advice and stay out of politics. The British Foreign Office noted that the retired field marshal is a private citizen..."and speaks as such."

At his news conference today, President Eisenhower refused to be drawn into the argument. The London newspapers, he said, reflected how he felt. #

Mr. Eisenhower said there are "a great many approaches" to the German problem which would ease tension. But, he repeated, the basis of our policy is the protection of the two million free people in West Berlin. He indicated that Vice President Nixon might sit in for him at a summit conference, if for some reason he was unable to stay for the whole meeting. However, no definite plans have been made along this line.

Mr. Eisenhower said the handling of the appointment of Christian Herter as secretary of state had been "decent and proper". In answer to a reporter's question as whether his delay in naming Herter might have caused damage, Mr. Eisenhower said that such speculation was as unnecessary as it was unprofitable. When you lose someone of the stature of Mr. Dulles, he said, "you don't try to hold a wedding until the other man has at least left the house."

The President said he was "very concerned" about the situation in Iraq, although he would not go so far as to say that it is the most touchy situation now before us. Yesterday, senators quoted Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, as saying that Iraq is "the most dangerous situation in the world today."

Regarding domestic problems, President Eisenhower hoped that the House would pass a "stronger" labor reform bill than the Senate did last Saturday. He was puzzled, he said, by the Senate delay in confirming his appointment of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. And he saw no reason why Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce should resign as ambassador to Brazil. He conceded that Mrs. Luce had been "ill-advised" yesterday in saying...immediately after her confirmation...that her difficulties began some years back "when Senator Wayne Morse was kicked in the head by a horse." But in saying this, the President added, "she said something that was perfectly human." (Morse opposed the appointment of Mrs. Luce because of admittedly intemperate remarks she made in past political campaigns. Her husband, Henry R. Luce, has suggested that she offer her resignation in view of the "vendetta" waged against her in the Senate).

The State Department reported tonight that there has been an improvement in the "comfort and general condition" of John Foster Dulles in the past week. Radiation treatments were discontinued last Friday.

Russia has sent the United States a formal note...protesting American high-altitude flights to West Berlin. Moscow radio quotes the note as saying that the flights are "completely devoid of legal foundation."

The United States said again tonight that its aircraft have the right to travel the Allied air corridor at any height that is desirable for efficient operation.

Now, for that report from Paris on the meeting of Western foreign ministers, here is my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

Tape runs 5:05
Ends on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

The Western foreign ministers will meet again tomorrow

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) Now here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

We see in Paris four ministers in search of unity. For they know we can ill afford to go into the Geneva conference divided among ourselves. Alexander Pope said, "It is with our judgments as with our watches. No two go just alike, yet each believes his own." But Dilwin observed, "One watch set right will do to set many by."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS:

Wednesday, April 29,1959
7:45 -8:00 P.M.

MURROW: Now for that report from Paris on the meeting of the Western Foreign Ministers, here is my colleague: David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The Western Foreign Ministers made good progress at their opening meeting today. In the words of the American delegation spokesman,"the meeting went fluidly and we covered much more ground than expected." "In fact," the spokesman added, "that the American delegation might be able to fly back to Washington on Friday night instead of Saturday, if present progress proceeded at this rapid rate." This optimism is in marked contrast to last night's sober and indeed somewhat gloomy gathering of the ministers. What happened to change the situation in so short a time? A number of developments, all jelling together, I'm told. First, a change of heart by the triple ? Chancellor of the Germans. The Chancellor had a long talk a few days ago with the American Ambassador, David Bruce, whom he respects and who he knows is a loyal friend. Many other old friends have been telling Chancellor Adenauer that his policies have been too rigid, too negative, that a new attempt must be made to search for an honorable solution to the German problem. And the Chancellor yielded to the voices of reason and to the vital need for unity before approaching the Russians. This need for unity was stressed by another stiff and tough old man of the West, Charles de Gaulle, in his talk with Christian Herter yesterday. And when the ministers sat down to work today, they found that their need to agree carried them over a number of obstacles that looked very high when each one was concerned mainly with his own posture. What then are the obstacles? What's the discussion all about? Why is it so complicated? Why are there so many differences to resolve? Well, it's about the future of Germany and European security and that is very complex indeed. It involves many thousands of legal statutes defining the occupation rights of the Allied forces. There's a lot of fine print to read and a careless reading could cause the loss of important rights.

It's complex because it concerns highly technical, military and scientific problems involved in inspection and control of huge armies and wide areas of territories to insure early warning against surprise attack. Hence, it involves national sovereignties and sensitive areas of state secrets. Basically it involves an equilibrium of forces and has maintained the peace, uneasy as it is, these past ten years. Any tinkering with their equilibrium could bring the structure tumbling down. They do, therefore, a very difficult business with inevitable differences of opinion on how to proceed. These are mainly difference of methods, rather than aims. All are agreed on the need to maintain Western defenses. All are agreed on maintaining free access to West Berlin. But how to do this in view of Russia's threats to upset the equilibrium is something else again. The Western powers are trying to draft an overall plan which they call the Western Package to meet this new challenge. The essence of this Western package is a carefully staged progression from the present division of Germany toward an eventual reunification, with each step forward dependent on the good faith shown in the previous step. It would begin by a general declaration by both sides denouncing aggression or any unilateral change in the present situation. It then provides for mixed German committees to set up practical measures of co-existence between the two Germanys in such domains as economic, interstate transport and communication. One of the committees would be given the mission of preparing a referendum and an electoral law for the free elections which are the absolute requisites to German union so far as the West is concerned. The package also proposes a system of control of armaments and forces, protection against surprise attack in a very wide stretch of territory from the Urals to the Atlantic with adequate inspection to give the necessary guarantee without which no change in the present defense structure is possible. As for Berlin, the West is now ready to consider new arrangements to regulate relations between the zones of that city and its links to the West on conditions that all basic rights are reserved until the day it becomes the capital of a free and democratic and reunified Germany. This is the meat inside the Western package. It is an imaginative plan, perhaps so imaginative as to be unreal. There is no evidence that the Russians would accept anything like it. But it does give the West a positive proposal to put forward with many objective attempts to work out practical coexistence. It does represent an advance beyond the position of the last few years when the West was truly negative, simply saying no to any proposals. Now we're not letting the Russians be the exclusive spokesmen for peace and co-existence. This many not stand up to the test of the meeting with the Soviets. A Western union may well prove to be too fragile - that danger certainly remains but at this moment there is some hope that the West will go to Geneva in better shape than for any recent conference of the great powers.

This is Paris, David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans.R.S.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 29, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Western foreign ministers began their talks in Paris today, preparatory to their meeting with Russia next month. A spokesman for Secretary of State Herter said: "We covered more ground than we expected. No major differences developed." (In a few minutes, we will switch to Paris for a direct report).

In Warsaw today, Communist China joined the eight Warsaw Pact countries in supporting the Soviet position on Germany. The foreign ministers of the nine states signed a communique endorsing Russia's proposal for ending the occupation status of Berlin. The communique suggested thet the Berlin problem...and the problem of European security...be taken up separately. It also repeated Russia's argument that reunification was a question for the Germans themselves to decide... but it said nothing about a separate treaty with East Germany. Russia's warning to the NATO countries not to allow rocket bases to be set up on their soil was included. However, the lauguage of the communique...taken as a whole...was moderate.

British Field Marshal Montgomery saw Premier Khrushchev in Moscow today for two hours. Montgomery declined to discuss their conversation. "But the talk was so friendly and so interesting," he said, "that I am going back to see him tomorrow." Montgomery's trip to Russia is unofficial; it was not sponsored by the British government.

Before the field marshal left for Moscow, he was interviewed by Charles Collingwood, chief of the CBS London Bureau, and this reporter. In the interview, carried last night on this network...Montgomery called for the reorganization of NATO. He advocated more meetings at the summit, described soldiers as poor politicians, and said that the United States in recent years had been lacking in leadership. Montgomery's remarks provoked a strong reaction in the British press. The London Daily Mail called his comment on American leadership "tactless" and the News Chronicle said Montgomery should follow his own advice and stay out of politics. The British Foreign Office noted that the field marshal is a private citizen..."and speaks as such."

At his news conference today, President Eisenhower refused to be drawn into the argument. The London newspapers, he said, reflected how he felt. Mr. Eisenhower said there are "a great many approaches" to the German problem which would ease tension. But, he repeated, the basis of our policy is the protection of the two million free people in West Berlin. He indicated that Vice President Nixon might sit in for him at a summit conference, if for some reason he was unable to stay for the whole meeting. However, no definite plans have been made along this line.

Mr. Eisenhower said the handling of the appointment of Christian Herter as secretary of state had been "decent and proper." In answer to a reporter's question as whether his delay in naming Herter might have caused damage, Mr. Eisenhower said that such speculation was as unnecessary as it was unprofitable. When you lose someone of the stature of Mr. Dulles, he said, "you don't try to hold a wedding until the other man has at least left the house."

Regarding domestic problems, President Eisenhower hoped that the House would pass a "stronger" labor reform bill than the Senate did last Saturday. He was puzzled, he said, by the Senate delay in confirming his appointment of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. And he saw no reason why Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce should resign as ambassador to Brazil. He conceded that Mrs. Luce had been "ill-advised" yesterday in saying...immediately after her confirmation... that her difficulties began some years back "when Senator Wayne Morse was kicked in the head by a horse." But in saying this, the President added, "she said something that was perfectly human." (Morse opposed the appointment of Mrs. Luce because of admittedly intemperate remarks she made in past political campaigns. Her husband, Henry R. Luce, has suggested that she offer her resignation in view of the "vendetta" waged against her in the Senate).

The State Department reported tonight that there has been an improvement in the "comfort and general condition" of John Foster Dulles in the past week. Radiation treatments were discontinued last Friday.

Russia has sent the United States a formal note...protesting American high-altitude flights to West Berlin. Moscow radio quotes the note as saying that the flights are "completely devoid of legal foundation." The United States said again tonight that its aircraft have the right to travel the Allied air corridor at any height that is desirable for efficient operation.

Now for that report from Paris on the meeting of Western foreign ministers, here is my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The Western Foreign Ministers made good progress at their opening meeting today. In the words of the American delegation spokesman, "the meeting went fluidly and we covered much more ground than expected." "In fact," the spokesman added, "that the American delegation might be able to fly back to Washington on Friday night instead of Saturday, if present progress proceeded at this rapid rate." This optimism is in marked contrast to last night's sober and indeed somewhat gloomy gathering of the ministers. What happened to change the situation in so short a time? A number of developments, all jelling together, I'm told. First, a change of heart by the triple Chancellor of the Germans. The Chancellor had a long talk a few days ago with the American ambassador, David Bruce, whom he respects and who he knows is a loyal friend. Many other old friends have been telling Chancellor Adenauer that his policies have been too rigid, too negative, that a new attempt must be made to search for an honorable solution to the German problem. And the Chancellor yielded to the voices of reason and to the vital need for unity before approaching the Russians. This need for unity was stressed by another stiff and tough old man of the West, Charles de Gaulle, in his talk with Christian Herter yesterday. And when the ministers sat down to work today, they found that their need to agree carried them over a number of obstacles that look very high when each one was concerned mainly with his own posture. What then are the obstacles? What's the discussion all about? Why is it so complicated? Why are there so many differences to resolve? Well, it's about the future of Germany and European security and that is very complex indeed. It involves many thousands of legal statutes defining the occupation rights of the Allied forces. There's a lot of fine print to read and a careless reading could cause the loss of important rights. It's complex because it concerns highly technical, military and scientific problems involved in inspection and control of huge armies and wide areas of territories to insure early warning against surprise attack. Hence, it involves national sovereignties and sensitive areas of state secrets. Basically it involves an equilibrium of forces and has maintained the peace, uneasy as it is, these past ten years. Any tinkering with their equilibrium could bring the structure tumbling down. They do, therefore, a very difficult business with inevitable differences of opinion on how to proceed. These are mainly differences of methods, rather than aims. All are agreed on the need to maintain Western defenses. All are agreed on maintaining free access to West Berlin. But how to do this in view of Russia's threats to upset the equilibrium is something else again. The Western powers are trying to draft an overall plan which they call the Western Package to meet this new challenge. The essence of this Western package is a carefully staged progression from the present division of Germany toward an eventual reunification, with each step forward dependent on the good faith shown in the previous step. It would begin by a general declaration by both sides denouncing aggression or any unilateral change in the present situation. It then provides for mixed German committees to set up practical measures for co-existence between the two Germanys in such domains as economic, interstate transport and communication. One of the committees would be given the mission of preparing a referendum and an electoral law for the free elections which are the absolute requisites to German union so far as the West is concerned. The package also proposes a system of control of armaments and forces, protection against surprise attack in a very wide stretch of territory from the Urals to the Atlantic with adequate inspection to give the necessary guarantee without which no change in the present defense structure is possible. As for Berlin, the West is now ready to consider new arrangements to regulate relations between the zones of that city and its links to the West on conditions that all basic rights are reserved until the day it becomes the capital of a free and democratic and reunified Germany. This is the meat inside the Western package. It is an imaginative plan, perhaps so imaginative as to be unreal. There is no evidence that the Russians would accept anything like it. But it does give the West a positive proposal to put forward with many objective attempts to work out practical co-existence. It does represent an advance beyond the position of the last few years when the West was truly negative, simply saying no to any proposals. Now we're not letting the Russians be the exclusive spokesmen for peace and co-existence. This may not stand up to the test of the meeting with the Soviets. A Western union may well prove to be too fragile - that danger certainly remains but at this moment there is some hope that the West will go to Geneva in better shape than for any recent conference of the great powers.

This is Paris. David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The western foreign ministers will meet again tomorrow. This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: We see in Paris four ministers in search of unity. For they know we can ill afford to go into the Geneva conference divided among ourselves. Alexander Pope said, "It is with our judgments as with our watches. No two go just alike, yet each believes his own." But Dilwin observed, "One watch set right will do to set many by."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., Apr. 30, 1959

This is the news:

The Western foreign ministers today ended their Paris meeting with a brief, six paragraph communique...announcing "complete agreement" on a package proposal to be presented to the Russians in Geneva next month. An American spokesman says that the "package", as it now stands, is "substantially the same document as that presented to the foreign ministers by the 'working group' last week." In the "package" are the proposals of the United States, Britain, West Germany and France, concerning the Berlin problem and the over-all question of Germany and general European security. "The package," the American spokesman said, "is not dissoluable. It all ties together." The final communique emphasizes the determination of the West "to maintain the freedom of the people of West Berlin and the rights and obligations there of the Allied powers."

The Western foreign ministers conferred in Paris for a day and a half, just half as long as had been scheduled. They were in full agreement as to their aims; not all differences as to method were resolved. Details as to strategy if the Russians, as expected, balk at accepting the whole package, remain to be decided. British Prime Minister Macmillan told the House of Commons this afternoon that "very satisfactory progress" had been made in bringing the Allied position into harmony. The American spokesman in Paris said, "We are not going to Geneva with the idea of falling back."

Tomorrow afternoon, Secretary of State Herter will confer with the French premier, Michel Debré. He will fly back to Washington tomorrow night.

President Eisenhower today nominated C. Douglas Dillon to succeed Mr. Herter as under-secretary of state. Mr. Dillon has served for more than a year as under-secretary of state for economic affairs. Before that, he served as ambassador to France.

In Moscow today, British Field Marshal Montgomery had another private talk with Premier Khrushchev. Montgomery said he was taking a friendly verbal message from Khrushchev back to Prime Minister Macmillan.

→

Former President Truman tonight called for a new international approach to the problem of helping the under-developed countries. Speaking in Washington...on the tenth anniversary of the so-called Point Four program... Mr. Truman said the old purely bilateral approach is "rapidly growing obsolete"..that the United States and other industrial countries should join forces to help those nations less developed to mobilize their own resources and support themselves at a higher standard of living. Mr. Truman said that eventually this country should have a balanced budget. "But," he said, "a balanced budget is not our primary need in this time of great danger. We cannot purchase security and peace by pinching pennies at a bargain counter. We need a strong free world," he said, "and if we don't have it, a budget makes no difference." Mr. Truman warned that Russia, with its economic offensive, had made "enormous gains." Too often, he said, we have gone around "peddling military pacts." [He proposed that, as a nation, we declare a war of our own on poverty, hunger, ignorance, disease and despair...that the war be conducted in the world, as well as at home, and that we wage it with all the resources at our command.]

The Senate today approved a supplemental money bill, providing 200-million dollars for the Development Loan Fund for the next two months. The Senate rejected an amendment by Senator Ellender of Louisiana that would have reduced the appropriation to 100-million dollars---the amount voted by the House. Chairman Fulbright of the Foreign Relations Committee argued that to cut the appropriation in half would be to risk "ultimate economic disaster in the free world."

The "catch-all" money bill includes an extra 50-million dollars for the National Institutes of Health. And a rider is attached with the intent of forcing the Administration to restore the Marine Corps to a strength of 200-thousand men. Otherwise, money for Navy personnel would be tied up. Another rider, using the same kind of threat, would require an Army of at least 900-thousand men. The Administration has set out to pare the Army by 30-thousand men and the Marine Corps by 25-thousand men by the end of June. Democratic Senator Douglas said this was no time for the United States to reduce its capacity to fight limited wars. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson agreed.

The House today upheld President Eisenhower's veto of the bill to reorganize the rural electrification program. The vote was 280 to 146, four votes less than the two-thirds majority required to override.

Last Tuesday, the Senate did vote to override the President's veto...but as a result of the House action today, the measure is dead. And Mr. Eisenhower's record of never having any of his vetoes overriden by Congress is preserved. The reorganization bill would have stripped Secretary of Agriculture Benson of authority to approve or reject loans for rural power projects.

Mr. Eisenhower...who called the proposal unsound...has issued a statement expressing his "deep gratification" that in the House today his veto of the measure was sustained.

President Eisenhower issued an order today...exempting Canada from the restrictions placed on the importation of petroleum products. Technically, the order covers all mandatory restrictions on oil coming into this country by pipeline, motor carrier, or rail... but Canada is the only foreign country whose oil products are shipped to us in this way. That is, by land. The import restrictions...announced early last month...brought protests from Canadian officials. The White House says that negotiations with Venezuela and other Latin American countries "looking toward a coordinated approach to the oil problem" are continuing.

My friend Arthur Godfrey was operated on this morning for lung cancer. The doctors say he withstood the operation well. "His general post-operative condition is good."

A potential "flash point" in the Cold War is Iraq, where a trial of army officers involved in the Mosul revolt of last month has just ended. We switch now to Baghdad, the capital of Iraq, and Frank Kearns.

(Tape runs four minutes Ends on cue: "Now back to CBS News in New York.")

That was my colleague Frank Kearns, reporting from Iraq.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) Now here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

Speaking informally in Paris today, Secretary Herter said, "I don't think many of us will live to see a time free of troubles." Dr. Kettering, I remember, once called trouble the price we pay for progress. And Professor Alfred Whitehead said, "We must expect that the future will disclose dangers. It is the duty of the future to be dangerous."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS:

Thursday, April 30, 1959
7:45-8:00

MURROW: A potential flash point in the cold war is Iraq where a trial of Army officers involved in the Mosul revolt of last month has just ended. For that story we switch now to Baghdad, the capital of Iraq and Frank Kearns:

KEARNS: Six army officers were sentenced to death before a firing squad here today. This is the hard news that headlines from Baghdad but the story behind the news is the trial itself which has been described as perhaps the most unique trial in modern history. The whole thing stemmed from last month's Tibetan coup d'etat at Mosul in Northern Iraq. Reliable observers put the most conservative figure of death at 10,000, more than were killed in last summer's bitter civil war in Lebanon, many, many times the number killed in the years of underground warfare in Cyprus. And the Mosul drama was over in just a few days. The trial which ended here today involved the second batch of officers charged with (indistinct) at Mosul. The commanding officer of the garrison there and five of his officers are sentenced to be shot. Ten others are to go to prison for life. The seventeenth, a sergeant, was acquitted. The trial started last April 20 and like the earlier trial has been the Number One attraction in revolutionary Iraq. It has been broadcast over the radio and even more important, featured on television. The chief star of the show has been Colonel Fadhil Mahdawi, judge, humorist and voice of the revolution. Mahdawi frequently interrupted witness, defendants and even the military prosecutor with poignant tidbits which brought down the house. He aimed his barbs particularly at Gamal Abdul Nasser. The court's name for Nasser has ranted from, "the little dictator,""arch Tartar," and "cowardly Fascist," to "swindler,"foe of free nations (?)," "rabbi," "imitation dictator," and "idiot." Mahdawi has become so popular as the result of his court appearance that his portraits appear all over Baghdad, alongside those of Prime Minister Kassem.

The audience has often broken into patriotic chants and songs. Delegates to the recent Peace Partisan Congress, which included delegates from Russia, Red China, Rumania, Albania and Hungary, received a tremendous ovation when they visited the court. A newspaper publisher arose to deliver an impassioned address as did a Syrian poet. Just the other day a girl stood up and as one newspaper described it, made an eloquent and faultless address, repeatedly acclaimed by the audience. She was seven years old. At one point Mahdawi suddenly asked a defendant, "Have you read Plato's Republic?" He poked fun at an Army chaplain today sentenced to life imprisonment, described as lowly, cowardly and (indistinct). Above all, however, the President and the Prosecutor of the People's Court stamped away at Nasser and the United Arab Republic as imperialists. The Prosecutor's hour long opening address was a lecture on imperialism in this area. Now however the trial is over. Six officers are to be shot, ten more are in for life imprisonment.

President Eisenhower's press conference remarks about Iraq have produced another batch of anti-American headlines here in Baghdad today. The President's comments that the U.S. has always regarded Iraq as a friendly, progressive country, that the U. S. has always tried to heed its requests -these remarks have been glossed over in Baghad's press reaction. Instead, papers here have jumped on Eisenhower's ~~anti-Iraq~~ mention of Iraq's connection with Communism ~~as the cause of~~ the difficulties with Egypt. "United States overt menace against our Republic," one paper headlines its story. Another headline, "Eisenhower threatens Iraq." CIA Director Allen Dulles' remark that Iraq's situation is the most dangerous in the world today, this comment produces the headline, "U.S. Intelligence Service asks Nasser's assistance."

Back now to CBS NEWS in New York:

Trans. R.S.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, APRIL 30, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The Western foreign ministers today ended their Paris meeting with a brief, six paragraph communique...announcing "complete agreement" on a package proposal to be presented to the Russians in Geneva next month. An American spokesman says that the "package" as it now stands, is "substantially the same document as that presented to the foreign ministers by the 'working group' last week." In the "package" are the proposals of the United States, Britain, West Germany and France concerning the Berlin problem and the over-all question of Germany and general European security. "The package," the American spokesman said, "is not dissoluable. It all ties together." The final communique emphasizes the determination of the West "to maintain the freedom of the people of West Berlin and the rights and obligations there of the Allied powers."

The Western foreign ministers conferred in Paris for a day and a half just half as long as had been scheduled. They were in full agreement as to their aims; not all differences as to method were resolved. Details as to strategy if the Russians, as expected, balk at accepting the whole package remain to be decided. British Prime Minister Macmillan told the House of Commons this afternoon that "very satisfactory progress" had been made in bringing the Allied position into harmony. The American spokesman in Paris said, "We are not going to Geneva with the idea of falling back."

Tomorrow afternoon, Secretary of State Herter will confer with the French premier, Michel Debre. He will fly back to Washington tomorrow night.

President Eisenhower todaynominated C. Douglas Dillon to succeed Mr. Herter as under-secretary of state. Mr. Dillon has served for more than a year as under-secretary of state for economic affairs. Before that, he served as ambassador to France.

In Moscow today, British Field Marshal Montgomery had another private talk with Premier Khrushchev. Montgomery had another private talk with Premier Khrushchev. Montgomery said he was taking a friendly verbal message from Khrushchev back to Prime Minister Macmillan.

Former President Turman tonight called for a new international approach to the problem of helping the under-developed countries. Speaking in Washington... on the tenth anniversary of the so-called Point Four program...Mr. Truman said the old purely bilateral approach is "rapidly growing obsolete"...that the United States and other industrial countries should join forces to help those nations less developed to mobilize their own resources and support themselves at a higher standard of living. Mr. Truman said that eventually this country should have a balanced budget. "But" he said, "a balanced budget is not our primary need in this time of great danger. We cannot purchase security and peace by pinching pennies at a bargain counter. We need a strong free world," he said, "and if we don't have it, a budget makes no difference." Mr. Truman warned that Russia, with its economic offensive, had made "enormous gains." Too often, he said, we have gone around "peddling military pacts."

The Senate today approved a supplemental money bill, providing 200-million dollars for the Development Loan Fund for the next two months. The Senate rejected an amendment by Senator Ellender of Louisiana that would have reduced the appropriation to 100-million dollars---the amount voted by the House. Chairman Fulbright of the Foreign Relations Committee argued that to cut the appropriation in half would be to risk "ultimate economic disaster in the free world."

The "catch-all" money bill indludes an extra 50-million dollars for the National Institutes of Health. And a rider is attached with the intent of forcing the Administration to restore the Marine Corps to a strength of 200-thousand men. Otherwise, money for Navy personnel would be tied up. Another rider, using the same kind of threat, would require an Army of at least 900-thousand men. The Administration has set out to pare the Army by 30-thousand men and the Marine Corps by 25-thousand men by the end of June. Democratic Senator Douglas said this was no time for the United States to reduce its capacity to fight limited wars. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson agreed.

The House today upheld Premident Eisenhower's veto of the bill to reorganize the rural electrification program. The vote was 280 to 146, four votes less than the two-thirds majority required to override. Last Tuesday, the Senate did vote to override the President's veto...but as a result of the House action today, the measure is dead. Mr. Eisenhower...who called the proposal unsound...has issued a statement expressing his "deep gratification" that in the House today his veto of the measure was sustained.

President Eisenhower issued an order today...exempting Canada from the restrictions placed on the importation of petroleum products. Technically, the order covers all mandatory restrictions on oil coming into this country by pipeline, motor carrier, or rail...but Canada is the only foreign country whose oil products are shipped to us in this way. That is, by land. The import restrictions announced early last month...brought protests from Canadian officials. The White House says that negotiations with Venezuela and other Latin American countries "looking toward a coordinated approach to the oil problem" are continuing.

My friend Arthur Godfrey was operated on this morning for lung cancer. The doctors say he withstood the operation well. "His general post-operative condition is good."

A potential "flash point" in the Cold War is Iraq, where a trial of army officers involved in the Mosul revolt of last month has just ended. We switch now to Baghdad, the capital of Iraq, and Frank Kearns.

KEARNS: Six army officers were sentenced to death before a firing squad here today. This is the hard news that headlines from Baghdad, but the story behind the news is the trial itself which has been described as perhaps the most unique trial in modern history. The whole thing stemmed from last month's Tibetan coup d'etat at Mosul in Northern Iraq. Reliable observers put the most conservative figure of death at 10,000, more than were killed in last summer's bitter civil war in Lebanon, many, many times the number killed in the years of underground warfare in Cyprus. And the Mosul drama was over in just a few days. The trial which ended here today involved the second batch of officers charged with (indistinct) at Mosul. The commanding officer of the garrison there and five of his officers are sentenced to be shot. Ten others are to go to prison for life. The 17th, a sergeant, was acquitted. The trial started last April 20th and like the earlier trial has been the Number One attraction in revolutionary Iraq. It has been broadcast over the radio and even more important, featured on television. The chief star of the show has been Colonel Fadhil Mahdawi, judge, humorist, and voice of the revolution. Mahdawi frequently interrupted witness, defendants, and even the military prosecutor with poignant tidbits which brought down the house. He aimed his barbs particularly at Gamal Abdul Nasser. The court's name for Nasser has ranted from, "the little dictator," "arch Tartar," and "cowardly Fascist," to "swindler, foe of free nations (?), rabbi, imitation dictator," and "idiot." Mahdawi has become so popular as the result of his court appearance that his portraits appear all over Baghdad, alongside those of Prime Minister Kassem.

The audience has often broken into patriotic chants and songs. Delegates to the recent Peace Partisan Congress, which included delegates from Russia, Red China, Rumania, Albania and Hungary, received a tremendous ovation when they visited the court. A newspaper publisher arose go deliver an impassioned address as did a Syrian poet. Just the other day a girl stood up and as one newspaper described it, made an eloquent and faultless address, repeatedly acclaimed by the audience. She was seven years ald. At one point Mahdawi suddenly asked a [illegible] defendant, "Have you read Plato's Republic?" He poked fun at an Army chaplain today sentenced to life imprisonment, described as lowly, cowardly and (indistinct). Above all, however, the President and the Prosecutor of the People's court stamped away at Nasser and the United Arab Republic as imperialists. The Prosecutor's hour long opening address was a lecture on imperialism in this area. Now however the trial is over. Six officers are to be shot, ten more are in for life imprisonment.

President Eisenhower's press conference remarks about Iraq have produced another batch of anti-American headlines here in Baghdad today. The President's comments that the U.S. has always regarded Iraq as a friendly, progressive country, that the U.S. has always tried to heed its requests - these remarks have been glossed over in Baghdad's press reaction. Instead papers here have jumped on Eisenhower's mention of Iraq's connection with Communism, the difficulties with Egypt. "United States overt menace against our Republic," one paper headlines its story. Another headline, "Eisenhower threatens Iraq." CIA Director Allen Dulles' remark that Iraq's situation is the most dangerous in the world today, this comment produces the headline, "U.S. Intelligence Service asks Nasser's assistance."

Now back to CBS News in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Frank Kearns, reporting from Iraq.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Speaking informally in Paris today, Secretary Herter said, "I don't think many of us will live to see a time free of troubles." Dr. Kettering, I remember, once called trouble the price we pay for progress. And Professor Alfred Whitehead said, "We must expect that the future will disclose dangers. It is the duty of the future to be dangerous."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 1, 1959

This is the news:

The resignation of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil... only three days after Senate confirmation...has provoked considerable comment. News Secretary Hagerty says that when Mrs. Luce called at the White House this morning, President Eisenhower again expressed his confidence in her and urged her to stay on in the post. Vice President Nixon calls her resignation "a great loss to the United States and to the cause of Latin American friendship." But most senators, regardless of how they viewed the appointment, say that under the circumstances Mrs. Luce did "the wise thing." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen regards the whole episode as "distressing but not surprising." The acting

→

Democratic leader...Senator Church of Idaho...says that Mrs. Luce "showed good judgment in taking her husband's advice." /A reference to the fact that... last Tuesday...Henry R. Luce had urged her to resign because, he said, her usefulness as an ambassador had been "undermined".

Republican Senator Capehart said this afternoon that he may ask for a vote of censure against Senator Morse because of Morse's tactics in opposing confirmation. /He said that Morse, as a former law school dean, knew that he was going "far beyond what any senator should" in trying to find out from Mrs. Luce's doctor whether she had ever received psychiatric treatment. Morse, in the course of Senate debate, questioned the emotional stability of Mrs. Luce. //He recalled her statement that President Roosevelt had "lied" the United States into war. //After her confirmation...by a vote of 79 to 11...Mrs. Luce said her troubles stemmed from the time that Senator Morse was "kicked in the head by a horse." //And Morse cited this as further evidence that she was not qualified to serve in an important diplomatic post.

In her letter of resignation, Mrs. Luce said she could not serve as ambassador because of the "seeds of hostile suspicion" planted against her in the course of the Senate debate. /She suggested that Morse, as chairman of the Senate subcommittee on Latin American affairs, would have continued to harass her....and prevent the performance of her mission. Senator Morse issued a statement late today...saying that it was never "pleasant" to get involved in such a controversy, but that he had felt it was his duty to do so. Morse said the decision of Mrs. Luce to resign was to be commended.

The Senate Commerce Committee today continued its hearings on the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. President Eisenhower nominated Strauss in October of last year...but the Senate still has not acted to confirm. Today, Strauss denounced as "untrue" and "undocumented", a series of charges made against him yesterday by Dr. David Inglis, the atomic physicist. Dr. Inglis accused Strauss of dragging scientific freedom "into the dirt", by his handling of the Oppenheimer case while he---Strauss---was chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. He charged Strauss with having been obsessed with the hydrogen bomb and with opposing, at one time, the shipment of radio-isotopes to Norway for the purpose of medical research. Strauss called this last charge an "unqualified falsehood." And the acting chairman of the committee, Senator Pastore, wanted to know what Strauss' views on developing the H-bomb had to do with the nomination for secretary of commerce.

President Eisenhower left Washington today to spend the week-end at his Gettysburg farm.

The three-week strike against the United States Rubber Company was settled today. But terms of the agreement are not to be announced until Monday. The walkout idled 26-thousand rubber workers in 11 states.

The "invasion" of Panama has ended. In the face of an ultimatum from from the Panamanian government---to surrender or be liquidated---the invasion force of 80-odd men laid down their arms. The sea approaches to Panama are being patrolled by United States aircraft AND TWO NAVAL VESSELS, operating under the supervision of the Organization of American States. The patrol was ordered after reports were received that a new invasion effort might be made.

The United States has called off its attempt to make a "space probe" in the vicinity of the planet Venus in June. Plans to launch three satellites, and place them in an orbit 30-thousand miles above the earth, also have been postponed. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration attributes the delay to "technical difficulties". It gives no details.

The Communist countries celebrated May Day, in the most part, with military parades. The traditional parade in Moscow's Red Square was unusually brief, and no unusual weapons were put on display. The Soviet defense minister, Marshal Malinovsky, blamed the continuing arms race on the "ruling circles" of the West. He warned these "ruling circles" not to try to impede Soviet progress by force.

British Field Marshal Montgomery returned to London today, after his unofficial visit to Moscow during which he conferred twice with Premier Khrushchev. Montgomery had nothing to say publicly about these conversations. He did comment on the interview in which he took part last Tuesday on this network. He said he enjoyed doing it. He also said that if...in criticizing American leadership...he had caused offense, he would like to apologize.

Edward R. Murrow: May 1, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The Foreign Ministers' Conference in Geneva may end in three weeks, and a Summit Meeting may follow in Geneva in July, and not later than August. That is a guess heard in quarters with an inside view of the negotiations. It is only a guess, and not all the insiders agree. French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville is quoted as saying there will be "one week's talk about Polish and Czech representatives, one week on German representation, a third week to discuss the Foreign Ministers' agenda, and anywhere from one to three weeks to talk about a Summit agenda." A conference of four to six weeks for the Foreign Ministers would run truer to past experience. But it is significant that the three-week prediction is being made quite confidently.

As to the place for the Summit Meeting, no formal discussion has taken place, so here there is only guesswork. Khrushchev wants to visit the United States, and it might be for the good of all concerned if he did, which is what gives the talk about a meeting in San Francisco its logic. The United Nations can set up and service a conference in San Francisco, or anywhere, for that matter. But the old conference hands think Geneva will get the call. Conferences there are run well, security is not a great problem, and the city is conveniently situated.

The Allies are making a package proposal to the Russians on which they have agreed. They have not agreed on what is called the "fall back" - what they will fall back to if the Russians reject the package. They have united on only one next step for this eventuality, which is to make a separate arrangement about Berlin. It would have to be temporary, recognize the right of Western troops to be there, and eliminate the danger of war over the Western rights. This undoubtedly would be discussed by the Foreign Ministers, but probably it would have to go to the Summit to be settled.

It is being taken for granted that the Russians will reject the very idea of a package deal. The Warsaw Pact Ministers said this week that the issue of a German Treaty and of Berlin must be divorced from the problem of security in Central Europe. But there is an outside chance that the Russians will not throw out the package. For one thing, they know that the United States devised and likes it, and that the other Allies are not so enthusiastic about it. They may try to divide the Allies by playing up to the United States. the package deal has three years to run, which would be plenty of time to work up troubles later on. Khrushchev, if he wants an agreement, wants it with the United States, first of all, and France, West Germany and to some extent Britain stand in the way of it.

To some extent the items in the Western package have been made to look like things Khrushchev has said he wanted. That is true even of the key provision, the unification of Germany. Khrushchev is on record as favoring unification even with free elections so long as it is negotiated by the Germans themselves. His line is that the Four Powers must not impose a decision on the Germans. The Western proposal has unification being worked out by an all-German commission. Free elections are moved from the start to the end of the process. Khrushchev may not like the composition of the commission, which would have twenty-five West German representatives to ten East Germans. They by themselves would not be enough to vote down measures requiring a two-thirds majority. ~~But as the West German delegation undoubtedly would include Socialists, these might be expected to vote against their colleagues if they thought the East Germans were not being fairly treated. Khrushchev will know that it was first proposed that the voting strength would be on a ratio of ten to six, which would give the East Germans an automatic veto. The Adenauer Government insisted on the figure being changed. Khrushchev may think he can get it changed back.~~ But even if the package is thrown out - which indeed is most likely - the items in it are still there to be talked about. The Western Allies believe their proposals are wise, far-reaching and constructive, which must mean in their parts as well as a whole. If it is true, as the British like to think, that Khrushchev really wants an agreement, the Summit Meeting could make at least a useful start beyond the immediate arrangement in Berlin.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

In connection with today's resignation and tomorrow's running of the Kentucky Derby...two quotations for which I am endebted to Arthur Krock. From Homer's ~~Aeneid~~, the unheeded warning: "Trust not the horse, ye Trojans." And from the Book of Job: "Hast thou given the horse strength? Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" (No mention of his kick in the homestretch).

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 1, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

The resignation of Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce as ambassador to Brazil... only three days after Senate confirmation...has provoked considerable comment. News Secretary Hagerty says that when Mrs. Luce called at the White House this morning, President Eisenhower again expressed his confidence in her and urged her to stay on in the post. Vice President Nixon calls her resignation "a great loss to the United States and to the cause of Latin American friendship." But most senators, regardless of how they viewed the appointment, say that under the circumstances Mrs. Luce did "the wise thing." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen regards the whole episode as "distressing but not surprising." The acting Democratic leader...Senator Church of Idaho...says that Mrs. Luce "showed good judgment in taking her husband's advice." A reference to the fact that... last Tuesday....Henry R. Luce had urged her to resign because, he said, her usefulness as an ambassador had been "undermined."

Republican Senator Capehart said this afternoon that he may ask for a vote of censure against Senator Morse because of Morse's tactics in opposing confirmation. He said that Morse, as a former law school dean, knew that he was going "far beyond what any senator should" in trying to find out from Mrs. Luce's doctor whether she had ever received psychiatric treatment. Morse, in the course of Senate debate, questioned the emotional stability of Mrs. Luce. He recalled her statement that President Roosevelt had "lied" the United States into war. After her confirmation...by a vote of 79 to 11...Mrs. Luce said her troubles stemmed from the time that Senator Morse was "kicked in the head by a horse." And Morse cited this as further evidence that she was not qualified to serve in an important diplomatic post.

In her letter of resignation, Mrs. Luce said she could not serve as as ambassador because of the "seeds of hostile suspicion" planted against her in the course of the Senate debate. She suggested that Morse, as chairman of the Senate subcommittee on Latin American affairs, would have continued to harass her...and prevent the performance of her mission. Senator Morse issued a statement late today...saying that it was never "pleasant" to get involved in such a controversy, but that he had felt it was his duty to do so. Morse said the decision of Mrs. Luce to resign was to be commended.

The Senate Commerce Committee today continued its hearings on the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. President Eisenhower nominated Strauss in October of last year...but the Senate still has not acted to confirm. Today, Strauss denounced as "untrue" and "undocumented" a series of charges made against him yesterday by Dr. David Inglis, the atomic physicist. Dr. Inglis accused Strauss of dragging scientific freedom "into the dirt" by his handling of the Oppenheimer case while he---Strauss---was chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. He charged Strauss with having been obsessed with the hydrogen bomb and with opposing, at one time, the shipment of radio-isotopes to Norway for the purpose of medical research. Strauss called this last charge an "unqualified falsehood." And the acting chairman of the committee, Senator Pastore, wanted to know what Strauss' views on developing the H-bomb had to do with the nomination for secretary of commerce.

President Eisenhower left Washington today to spend the week-end at his Gettysburg farm.

The three-week strike against the United States Rubber Company was settled today. But terms of the agreement are not to be announced until Monday. The walkout idled 26-thousand rubber workers in 11 states.

The "invasion" of Panama has ended. In the face of an ultimatum from the Panamanian government---to surrender or be liquidated---the invasion force of 80-odd men laid down their arms. The sea approaches to Panama are being patrolled by United States aircraft and two naval vessels operating under the supervision of the Organization of American States. The patrol was ordered after reports were received that a new invasion effort might be made.

The United States has called off its attempt to make a "space probe" in the vicinity of the planet Venus in June. Plans to launch three satellites, and place them in an orbit 30-thousand miles above the earth, also have been postponed. The National Aeronautics and Space Administration attributes the delay to "technical difficulties." It gives no details.

The Communist countries celebrated May Day, in the most part, with military parades. The traditional parade in Moscow's Red Square was unusally brief, and no unusual weapons were put on display. The Soviet defense minister, Marshal Malinovsky, blamed the continuing arms race on the "ruling circles" of the West. He warned these "ruling circles" not to try to impede Soviet progress by force.

British Field Marshal Montgomery returned to London today, after his unofficial visit to Moscow during which he conferred twice with Premier Khrushchev. Montgomery had nothing to say publicly about these conversations. He did comment on the interview in which he took part last Tuesday on this network. He said he enjoyed doing it. He also said that if...in criticising American leadership... he had caused offense, he would like to apologize.

The Foreign Ministers' Conference in Geneva may end in three weeks, and a Summit Meeting may follow in Geneva in July, and not later than August. That is a guess heard in quarters with an inside view of the negotiations. It is only a guess, and not all the insiders agree. French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville is quoted as saynng there will be "one week's talk about Polish and Czech representatives, one week on German representation, a third week to discuss the Foreign Ministers' agenda, and anywhere from one to three weeks to talk about a Summit agenda." A conference of four to six weeks for the Foreign Ministers would run truer to past experience. But it is significant that the three-week prediction is being made quite confidently.

As to the place for the Summit Meeting, no formal discussion has taken place, so here there is only guesswork. Khrushchev wants to visit the United States and it might be for the good of all concerned if he did, which is what gives the talk about a meeting in San Francisco its logic. The United Nations can set up and service a conference in San Francisco, or anywhere, for that matter. But the old conference hands think Geneva will get the call. Conferences there are run well, security is not a great problem, and the city is conveniently situated.

The Allies are making a package proposal to the Russians on which they have agreed. They have not agreed on what is called the "fall back" - what they will fall back to if the Russians reject the package. They have united on only one next step for this eventuality, which is to make a separate arrangement about Berlin. It would have to be temporary, recognize the right of Western troops to be there, and eliminate the danger of war over the Western rights. This undoubtedly would be discussed by the Foreign Ministers, but probably it would have to go to the Summit to be settled.

It is being taken for granted that the Russians will reject the very idea of a package deal. The Warsaw Pact Ministers said this week that the issue of a German Treaty and of Berlin must be divorced from the problem of security in Central Europe. But there is an outside chance that the Russians will not throw out the package. For one thing, they know that the United States devised and likes it, and that the other Allies are not so enthusiastic about it. They may try to divide the Allies by playing up to the United States. The package deal has three years to run, which would be plenty of time to work up troubles later on. Khrushchev, if he wants an agreement, wants it with the United States, first of all, and France, West Germany and to some extent Britain stand in the way of it.

To some extent the items in the Western package have been made to look like things Khrushchev has said he wanted. That is true even of the key provision, the unification of Germany. Khrushchev is on record as favoring unification even with free elections so long as it is negotiated by the Germans themselves. His line is that the Four Powers must not impose a decision on the Germans. The Western proposal has unification being worked out by an all-German commission. Free elections are moved from the start to the end of the process. Khrushchev may not like the composition of the commission, which would have twenty-five West German representatives to ten East Germans. They by themselves would not be enough to vote down measures requiring a two-thirds majority. But even if the package is thrown out - which indeed is most likely - the items in it are still there to be talked about. The Western Allies believe their proposals are wise, far-reaching and constructive, which must mean in their parts as well as a whole. If it is true, as the British like to think, that Khrushchev really wants an agreement, the Summit Meeting could make at least a useful start beyond the immediate arrangment in Berlin.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In connection with today's resignation and tomorrow's running of the Kentucky Derby...two quotations for which I am indebted to Arthur Krock. From Homer the unheeded warning: "Trust not the horse, ye Trojans." And from the Book of Job: "Hast thou given the horse strength? Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" (No mention of his kick in the homestretch.)

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 4, 1959

This is the news:

Sir Winston Churchill has arrived in Washington on his first visit to this country in five years. The former prime minister crossed the Atlantic by British jet...stopping off in New York just long enough to transfer to President Eisenhower's personal aircraft for the trip to Washington. Sir Winston will be the President's White House guest for three days. Then...next Friday...he will return to New York to visit for a few days before flying home. News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower invited former President Truman to attend a White House dinner for Sir Winston on Wednesday night...but that Mr. Truman sent his regrets, saying that he could not accept the invitation because of a previous engagement. When reporters asked Mr. Truman about this, he confirmed that he had an engagement that evening, here in New York. Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Truman have not met personally since Inauguration Day, 1953. In talking to reporters today, Mr. Truman did not rule out the possibility that he may see Sir Winston later in the week.

Mr. Truman told Congress today that the Twenty-second Amendment...limiting a President to two terms "is a bad amendment and ought to be repealed." Mr. Truman testified before the Senate subcommittee on constitutional amendments...in support of a resolution by Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri, asking that the Twenty-second Amendment be killed. It was "ironic", Mr. Truman said, that the amendment limiting the President to two terms was conceived by a Republican Congress...and that the first Chief Executive to be "hamstrung" by it is a Republican. Mr. Truman said that the presidency has "grown into the most important office in the history of the world. So what," he said, "do you do? You've sent him out to fight with one hand tied behind him because everyone knows he can't run for re-election." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen issued a statement saying that he also favors repeal of the Twenty-second Amendmant. Dirksen said he would bring the question up on Wednesday when Republican congressional leaders have their regular weekly meeting with the President. Mr. Eisenhower already has said that he would "rather see the amendment repealed than kept."

Secretary of Defense McElroy testified before Congress today on behalf of the new 41-billion-dollar military budget. Mr. McElroy said again that the budget is big enough to do the defense job. He told the senators he thought it "was time" that a choice was made between the Air Force Bomarc missile and the Nike-Hercules missile developed by the Army. It wouldn't "bother us", he said, "if you held our feet to the fire and forced us into making a decision." Both are anti-aircraft missiles capable of carrying nuclear war heads. McElroy said that he might soon have some "quite spectacular" information to give Congress. He gave no details, except that the information dealt with "improvements in national security."

Under-secretary of State Dillon told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today that the Administration's foreign aid program is "truly vital" to peace and to the survival of the United States. He warned Congress not to cut the 3-billion, 900-million dollars requested for the program...saying that a strong case could be made out for asking for more money, not less.

And Vice President Nixon and Democratic Senator Kennedy made speeches today...urging more economic aid for India.

India's Prime Minister Nehru said today that he was "shocked" by the way Communist China keeps making accusations against his government. He said the Chinese charges of Indian "expansionism" and "imperialism" in Tibet " do not bear the slightest scrutiny." ~~He reiterated that his government wants to maintain friendly relations with Red China.~~ But Communist ~~policy in Tibet, he said, is threatening to~~ undermine the principles of peaceful co-existence. ~~Nehru spoke as the Indian parliament began debating the Tibetan revolt.~~

The United States ambassador to Iraq is flying back to Washington for consultations. Last week, Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, called the situation in Iraq "the most dangerous in the world today." The Communist newspaper in Baghdad today continued its attacks on the United States...claiming that machine guns and hand grenades are being distributed to the wealthy landlords of Northern Iraq by members of an American economic mission. It claimed without verification that police posts in the area had been attacked.

Our ambassador to Moscow...Llwellyn Thompson...conferred with Premier Khrushchev today, regarding the fate of the eleven American airmen, still unaccounted for in the crash of the United States transport in Southern Russia last September. The transport was shot down by Soviet aircraft. Russia returned the bodies of six airmen, but has insisted that it knows nothing of the fate of the other 11 who were aboard. The White House says Thompson took the matter up with Khrushchev, on instructions from President Eisenhower.

The Pulitzer Prize for fiction today was awarded to Robert Lewis Taylor for his novel, "The Travels of Jaimie McPheeters". The drama award went to the play "J.B." by Archibald MacLeish. Howard Van Smith of the Miami News received the Pulitzer Prize for his series of articles on migrant labor. And the international reporting award was won jointly by Joseph Martin and Philip Santora, of the New York Daily News, for their stories from Cuba. Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Consitution received the award for editorial writing.

Edward R. Murrow: May 4, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The great unanswered question in this country today has to do with economic growth. No one speaking authoritatively for the Administration has said how much the growth should be, or how it should be achieved. We have come through a recession in which the economy stopped growing. We are now in a recovery in which the economic goals most talked about in Washington are a balanced budget and the prevention of inflation. Occasional references are made to the importance of growth, but growth as such cannot be said to be a primary objective. The shape of the future will be affected and perhaps determined in twenty or thirty years by the economic growth of the United States, the Soviet Union and China. The Soviet Union is growing at a rate of nine percent, China is spurting even faster. We grow normally three percent a year and may be back at that figure before long. But it may not keep our production ahead of the Soviet Union and China.

Sixty leaders of business, labor and public affairs and government, meeting under the auspices of Columbia University at Arden House for four days of unpublicized discussion, put growth first in listing what the economic goals of the country should be. The others named were full employment, reasonable price stability, national security and industrial peace. Whatever they thought of a balanced budget, they did not include it among the five most desirable aims. They did not say what the rate of economic growth should be. But they did say it must be increased, "even if this interferes with the full attainment of other economic goals."

In their final recommendation they rejected some of the proposals for dealing with inflationary pressures now being discussed in Congress and Administration circles. They did not approve of a ninety-day delay of wage and price increases, nor the freezing of wages and prices. They rejected a break-up of the big national unions. They also rejected the system followed in some European countries of fixing wages on an economy-wide basis. They said an emphatic "No" to the idea of government control of prices or wages. "Radical changes in our present wage-setting machinery would not be a fruitful approach to the inflation problem", they concluded.

The Assembly discussed how production should be increased and recommended several measures, such as more spending on research and development, improvement in the quality of education, the training of more scientific, technical and management personnel, the upgrading of the skills of the labor force and the elimination of restrictive practices by management and labor.

If the production rate is to be increased, it will be through the extension of mechanization and automation. And one result of these is a displacement of labor. Workers should be able to move freely to regions where work is being created. Severance and re-location allowances would help in such cases and were recommended. Also re-training programs, the employment of qualified older workers and the provision of part-time jobs. Here and there such measures already are in effect. In Washington one hears little about them.

Two recommendations were made to assist in stabilizing prices, one a vigorous anti-trust campaign against monopolies, the other the reduction of tariffs. It was recognized that tariff reductions may cause hardships in certain areas. These, it was recommended, should get temporary relief until they have readjusted themselves.

The Assembly registered the opinion that pleas by government officials for restraint in wage and price decisions -- which now are faithfully made in Washington - "are likely to have little effect."

The Assembly ended by recommending that an annual conference be held of business, labor and government representatives to study the problem of growth. It should meet shortly after the President's economic report to Congress. Its object should be to reduce the diversity of views and discuss policies to achieve growth and stability. The idea seems to be that better policies will be forthcoming from candid roundtable talks, than by testimony before Congressional Committees and public speechifying. The thought may have merit. It sounds like a useful experiment.

Back in a moment.

George Bryan -

Word for Today

America might be pictured (and indeed has been) as a house that is always 'abuilding. / No confining, unimaginative blueprint will do. / Thoreau might have advocated no blueprint at all. "For the wisest man," he once wrote, "preaches no doctrines; he has no scheme. / He sees no rafter, not even a cobweb, against the heavens. / It is clear sky."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 4, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Sir Winston Churchill has arrived in Washington on his first visit to this country in five years. The former prime minister crossed the Atlantic by British jet...stopping off in New York just long enough to transfer to President Eisenhower's personal aircraft for the trip to Washington. Sir Winston will be the President's White House guest for three days. Then...next Friday... he will return to New York to visit for a few days before flying home. News Secretary Hagerty says that Mr. Eisenhower invited former President Truman to attend a White House dinner for Sir Winston on Wednesday night...but that Mr. Truman sent his regrets, saying that he could not accept the invitation because of a previous engagement. When reporters asked Mr. Truman about this, he confirmed that he had an engagement that evening, here in New York. Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Truman have not met personally since Inauguration Day, 1953. In talking to reporters today, Mr. Truman did not rule out the possibility that he may see Sir Winston later in the week.

Mr. Truman told Congress today that the Twenty-second Amendment... limiting a President to two terms "is a bad amendment and ought to be repealed." Mr. Truman testified before the Senate subcommittee on constitutional amendments... in support of a resolution by Democratic Senator Hennings of Missouri, asking that the Twenty-second amendment limiting the President to two terms was conceived by a Republican Congress...and that the first Chief Executive to be "hamstrung" by it is a Republican. Mr. Truman said that the presidency has "grown into the most important office in the history of the world. So what," he said, "do you do? You've sent him out to fight with one hand tied behind him because everyone knows he can't run for-re-election." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen issued a statement saying that he also favors repeal of the Twenty-second Amendment. Dirksen said he would bring the question up on Wednesday when Republican congressional leaders have their regular weekly meeting with the President. Mr. Eisenhower already has said that he would "rather see the amendment repealed than kept."

Secretary of Defense McElroy testified before Congress today on behalf of the new 41-billion-dollar military budget. Mr. McElroy said again that the budget is big enough to do the defense job. He told the senators he thought it was time that a choice was made between the Air Force Bomarc missile and the Nike-Hercules missile developed by the Army. It wouldn't "bother us," he said, "if you held our feet to the fire and forced us into making a decision." Both are anti-aircraft missiles capable of carrying nuclear war heads. McElroy said that he might soon have some "quite spectacular" information to give Congress. He gave no details, except that the information dealt with "improvements in national security."

Under-secretary of State Dillon told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee today that the Administration's foreign aid program is "truly vital" to peace and to the survival of the United States. He warned Congress not to cut the 3-billion, 900-million dollars requested for the program, saying that a strong case could be madeout for asking for more money, not less.

And Vice President Nixon and Democratic Senator Kennedy made speeches today...urging more economic aid for India.

India's Prime Minister Nehru said today that he was "shocked" by the way Communist China keeps making accusations against his government. He said the Chinese charges of Indian "expansionism" and "imperialism" in Tibet "do not bear the slightest scrutiny."

The United States ambassador to Iraq is flying back to Washington for consultations. Last week, Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, called the situation in Iraq "the most dangerous in the world today." The Communist newspaper in Baghdad today continued its attacks on the United States...claiming that machine guns and hand grenades are being distributed to the wealthy landlords of Northern Iraq by members of an American economic mission. It claimed without verification that police posts in the area had been attacked.

Our ambassador to Moscow...Llwellyn Thompson...conferred with Premier Khrushchev today regarding the fate of the eleven American airmen still unaccounted for in the crash of the United States transport in Southern Russia last September. The transport was shot down by Soviet aircraft. Russia returned the bodies of six airmen, but has insisted that it knows nothing of the fate of the other 11 who were aboard. The White House says Thompson took the matter up with Khrushchev on instructions from President Eisenhower.

The Pulitzer Prize for fiction today was awarded to Robert Lewis Taylor for his novel, "The Travels of Jaimie McPheeters." The drama award went to the play "J.B." by Archibald MacLeish. Howard Van Smith of the Miami News received the Pulitzer Prize for his series of articles on migrant labor. And the international reporting award was won jointly by Joseph Martin and Philip Santora of the New York Daily News for their stories from Cuba. Ralph McGill of the Atlanta Constitution received the award for editorial writing.

The great unanswered question in this country today has to do with economic growth. No one speaking authoritatively for the Administration has said how much the growth should be, or how it should be achieved. We are now in a recovery in which the economic goals most talked about in Washington are a balanced budget and the prevention of inflation. Occasional references are made to the importantance of growth, but growth as such cannot be said to be a primary objective. The shape of the future will be affected and perhaps determined in twenty or thirty years by the economic growth of the United States, the Soviet Union and China. The Soviet Union is growing at a rate of nine percent, China is spurting even faster. We grow normally three percent a year and may be back at that figure before long. But it may not keep our production ahead of the Soviet Union and China.

Sixty leaders of business, labor and public affairs and government, meeting under the auspices of Columbia University at Arden House for four days of unpublicized discussion, put growth first in listing what the economic goals of the country should be. The others named were full employment, reasonable price stability, national security and industrial peace. Whatever they thought of a balanced budget, they did not include it among the five most desirable aims. They did not say what the rate of economic growth should be. But they did say it must be increased, "even if this interferes with the full attainment of other economic goals."

In their final recommendation they rejected some of the proposals for dealing with inflationary pressures now being dsicussed in Congress and Administration circles. They did not approve of a ninety-day delay of wage and price increases, nor the freezing of wages and prices. They rejected a break-up of the big national unions. They also rejected the system followed in some European countries of fixing wages on an economy-wide basis. They said an emphatic "No" to the idea of government control of prices or wages. "Radical changes in our present wage-setting machinery would not be a fruitful approach to the inflation problem," they concluded.

The Assembly discussed how production should be increased and recommended several measures, such as more spending on research and development, improvement in the quality of education, the training of more scientific, technical and management personnel, the upgrading of the skills of the labor force and the elimination of restrictive practices by management and labor.

If the production rate is to be increased, it will be through the extension of mechanization and automation. And one result of these is a displacement of labor. Workers should be able to move freely to regions where work is being created. Severance and re-location allowances would help in such cases and were recommended. Also re-training programs, the employment of qualified older workers and the provision of part-time jobs. Here and there such measures already are in effect. In Washington one hears little about them.

Two recommendations were made to assist in stabilizing prices, one a vigorous anti-trust campaign against monopolies, the other the reduction of tariffs. It was recognized that tariff reductions may cause hardships in certain areas. These, it was recommended, should get temporary relief until they have readjusted themselves.

The Assembly registered the opinion that pleas by government officials for restraint in wage and price decisions - which now are faithfully made in Washington - "are likely to have little effect."

The Assembly ended by recommending that an annual conference be held of business, labor and government representatives to study the problem of growth. It should meet shortly after the President's economic report to Congress. Its object should be to reduce the diversity of views and discuss policies to achieve growth and stability. The idea seems to be that better policies will be forthcoming from candid roundtable talks, than by testimony before Congressional Committees and public speechifying. The thought may have merit. It sounds like a useful experiment.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: America might be pictured (and indeed has been) as a house that is always 'abuilding. No confining, unimaginative blueprint will do. Thoreau might have advocated no blueprint at all. "For the wisest man," he once wrote, "preaches no doctrines; he has no scheme. He sees no rafter, not even a cobweb, against the heavens. It is clear sky."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., May 5, 1959

This is the news:

A coroner's jury in Poplarville, Mississippi, found late today that Mack Parker, 23-year-old Negro victim of a lynch mob, was shot and killed "by person or persons unknown." On the night of April 24th, more than ten men...wearing masks...dragged Parker from the Poplarville jail, where he was awaiting trial on a charge of raping a white woman who was pregnant. No trace of Parker was found until yesterday, when his body was discovered in a nearby river. He had apparently been shot twice---through the side and in the chest. An F.B.I. agent said that he also had suffered a fractured rib. Murder charges have now been filed against "unknown assailants", in addition to the kidnap charges which were filed earlier. President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he had "every confidence" that Mississippi authorities, working with the F.B.I., would apprehend and punish those persons responsible for the crime. He did not believe that the case had demonstrated the need for stronger civil rights legislation.

The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals today ordered the public schools of Prince Edward County, Virginia, to be integrated next September. The county then served notice that it would close its public schools and resort to private instruction.

The Senate today confirmed the nomination of Judge Potter Stewart to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court.

The Senate Commerce Committee still has not recommended confirmation of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce...although Mr. Eisenhower sent the nomination to the Senate last October. Opposition to the appointment has been expressed by a number of Democratic senators, and the President was asked today whether Strauss might not be well advised to resign in the same manner as Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce. Mr. Eisenhower replied emphatically, "I do not." The country, he said, was in "a pretty bad situation" if the confirmation of a valuable public servant could be blocked by what he called "personal antagonisms".

The country's major steel companies and the United Steelworkers Union began negotiating a new contract today, here in New York. Both the union and the industry issued statements...saying that they want to reach an early, amicable agreement without government intervention. The union is asking for a "substantial" wage increase, although it has given no figures. It cites the increased profits of the steel companies. President Eisenhower said at his news conference that both sides should exercise "statesmanship and good sense." He said the United States "cannot stand still and do nothing" if the new steel contract sets off a new round of inflation.

In foreign affairs, Mr. Eisenhower said a summit meeting is "almost a foregone conclusion", if the foreign ministers conference that starts in Geneva next week makes some progress toward reducing tensions. And he again urged Congress to approve his foreign aid program.

Former President Truman also urged Congress today not to cut the program. Mr. Truman said that, rather, the program should be expanded... with special emphasis on the granting of long-term loans.

Sir Winston Churchill went to Walter Reed Hospital today and visited two former secretaries of state---John Foster Dulles and George Catlett Marshall. Tonight, Sir Winston will be the guest at a White House stag dinner.

A joint congressional subcommittee today opened a four-day hearing on the danger of radio-active fallout. The first witness was Dr. Charles Dunbar, director of the division of biology and medicine in the Atomic Energy Commission. Dr. Dunbar said that, in the past two years, 75 percent more radio-activity has been injected into the atmosphere than the maximum recommended by some scientists. He gave it as his own opinion, however, that there was "no cause for alarm."

REE-FAI, ~~rhymes with eye~~
Premier Rifai of Jordan resigned today, pleading ill health. And King Hussein called on the former agriculture minister, Hazzaa Majali, MA-JELLY to form a new government. Both Re-Fai ~~Rifai~~ and Majali are anti-Communist. Rifai had served as premier for five terms and has been described as the "strongman" behind King Hussein's throne. Last summer...when the United Arab Republic was accusing Hussein of serving Western "imperialism"...some of the strongest attacks were reserved for Premier Re-Fai ~~Rifai~~. And there is speculation that his resignation may be a step toward the restoration of normal diplomatic relations between Jordan and the U.A.R. The two countries recalled their ambassadors last July. Since then, President Nasser of the United Arab Republic has become alarmed by the growing Communist power in Iraq.

The United States ambassador to Iraq...John Jernegan...returned to Washington today for consultation. He did not come, he said, because of a crisis "or any one particular problem." Yesterday, the Communist newspaper in Baghdad charged that the United States was distributing machine-guns and hand grenades to rebel ~~farmers~~ landowners in Northern Iraq...and otherwise fomenting trouble. A State Department spokesman said today that this "certainly is not true."

The Baghdad radio claims that "other countries" (not identified) have sent infiltrators into Northern Iraq...and that for this reason, the popular resistance force, or home guard, will be given new security duties. / This civilian militia is a growing power in Iraq, separate from the army and police. / It is said to be organized by the Communists. And in any coup, it could be the decisive force. My colleague, Frank Kearns, has some information on this instrument of power which, until now, has not been made public. Here, from Baghdad, is his report.

(Tape runs 4:30
(Ends on cue: "Back now to Edward R. Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Frank Kearns, reporting on the situation in Iraq...which Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, has described as "the most dangerous in the world today." / The Reuters news agency reports from Baghdad tonight that the Iraqi Communists are "intensifying" their campaign to be included in the Kassem cabinet.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

There is being developed in Iraq a powerful militia...which may be capable, in a showdown, of exerting decisive force. Thomas Jefferson said force is "the immediate parent of despotism." Dictators have never doubted it. Mussolini said, early in his career: "At the turning point it is force...and force alone...which makes the crucial decision."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 5, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: My colleague, Frank Kearns, has some information on this instrument of power which, until now, has not been made public. Here from Bagdad is his report.

KEARNS: For the first time it is possible to reveal some facts about one of the most powerful and mysterious forces in Iraq today. This force, the Popular Resistance Force or P.R.F., what we would call the home guard or (indistinct) National Guard. Propaganda out of Cairo and in some Western newspapers have described the P.R.F. as a Communist striking force, and a Communist dominated home guard. It has been described as independent of the government, of the army, a law unto itself. The only man who could answer some of these questions is the P.R.F.'s commander who until today has remained an unknown, shadowy figure. Now, however, in a frank interview he has unveiled scores of hitherto unknown facts about his organization. His name, Colonel Taha Bemani. A husky Turk from northern Iraq, the 41 year old colonel describes himself as a professional career soldier, 23 years in the army. For the record at least, he flatly denies his civilian army, theP.R.F. is Communist or Communist dominated. It is strickly a civilian defense group, he maintains, organized by the army, headed by some 100 officers from the army , and merely an auxiliary force or security branch of the army. Right now, he says, the P.R.F. has a strength of some 35,000, but more are being trained every day. (indistinct) hopes the home guard eventually enlists every able bodied man between 15 and 50, men and women, for the P.R.F. already includes some 4,000 women. The men go through a 13 day training course from four to six P.M. daily through their army non-coms. The women receive additional training in first aid and nursing. In denying any Communist overtones the colonel stresses army regulations, that an afficer may not belong to any political party.

(indistinct) admits, however, that trainees in addition to regular basic army training receive political instruction on what he calls citizenship and patrotism. They're also trained in judo, commando tactics and guerilla warfare. What about resistance demands to arm arm all the P.R.F. plus the people, all the people. Alright in a dangerous border area, he says, where he reveals P.R.F. men already are completely armed on and off duty. It is not necessary, the colonel adds, in normal areas like Bagdad. Here in the capitol, according to Colonel Bemani, P.R.F.'s are armed only while on duty, otherwise arms are stored in depots. So far, he adds, 11 companies have been trained and placedon duty in Bagdad. Three more are due within a few days. These are the men, incidentally who stop cars at night, sometimes twice within one block, commanding identification and searching all cars and trucks. They are firm, but I should add, usually polite. All these P.R.F.ers I should add, buy their own kahki uniforms. They include not only Arabs, but Indonesians, Assyrans, Kurds, Iraqi Persians, a cross section of Iraq's cosmopolitan population. Their total (indistinct)also calls for security duties, sometimes in civilian clothes, checking up on suspicious persons, reporting on any public gatherings, etc. Sometimes they are over-enthusiastic. As the night they stopped a truck piled high with fish and held it until morning when they could watch unloading at the fish market, looking for unconcealed weapons. The smell of that particular cargo unrefrigerated all night in a climate where the mercury has hit 100 and 150 degrees was enough to dampen even the most enthusiastic civilian soldiers. Make no mistake about it, however, this is a tough, well trained force, increasingly as strong as the police and the army, and one of the greatest forces in Iraq today. Right now it has powers neither the army and the police can wield, a real power. It is getting bigger by the day. Back now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. 5/8/59 JF

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 5, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

A coroner's jury in Poplarville, Mississippi, found late today that Mack Parker, 23-year-old Negro victim of a lynch mob, was shot and killed "by person or persons unknown." On the night of April 24th, more than ten men... wearing masks...dragged Parker from the Poplarville jail, where he was awaiting trial on a charge of raping a white woman who was pregnant. No trace of Parker was found until yesterday, when his body was discovered in a nearby river. He had apparently been shot twice---through the side and in the chest. An F.B.I. agent said that he also had suffered a fractured rib. Murder charges have now been filed against "unknown assailants," in addition to the kidnap charges which were filed earlier. President Eisenhower told his news conference today that he had "every confidence" that Mississippi authorities, working with the F.B.I., would apprehend and punish those persons responsible for the crime. He did not believe that the case had demonstrated the need for stronger civil rights legislation.

The United States Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals today ordered the public schools of Prince Edward County, Virginia, to be integrated next September. The county then served notice that it would close its public schools and resort to private instruction.

The Senate today confirmed the nomination of Judge Potter Stewart to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court.

The Senate Commerce Committee still has not recommended confirmation of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce...although Mr. Eisenhower sent the nomination to the Senate last October. Opposition to the appointment has been expressed by a number of Democratic senators, and the President was asked today whether Strauss might not be well advised to resign in the same manner as Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce. Mr. Eisenhower replied emphatically, "I do not." The country, he said, was in "a pretty bad situation" if the confirmation of a valuable public servant could be blocked by what he called "personal antagonisms."

The country's major steel companies and the United Steelworkers Union began negotiating a new contract today, here in New York. Both the union and the industry issued statements...saying that they want to reach an early amicable agreement without government intervention. The union is asking for a "substantial" wage increase, although it has given no figures. It cites the increased profits of the steel companies. President Eisenhower said at his news conference that both sides should exercise "statesmanship and good sense." He said the United States "cannot stand still and do nothing" if the new steel contract sets off a new round of inflation.

In foreign affairs, Mr. Eisenhower said a summit meeting is "almost a foregone conclusion," if the foreign ministers conference that starts in Geneva next week makes some progress toward reducing tensions. And he again urged Congress to approve his foreign aid program.

Former President Truman also urged Congress today not to cut the program. Mr. Truman said that, rather, the program should be expanded with special emphasis in the granting of long-term loans.

Sir Winston Churchill went to Walter Reed Hospital today and visited two former secretaries of state---John Foster Dulles and George Catlett Marshall. Tonight, Sir Winston will be the guest at a White House stag dinner.

A joint congressional subcommittee today opened a four-day hearing on the danger of radio-active fallout. The first witness was Dr. Charles Dunbar, director of the division of biology and medicine in the Atomic Energy Commission. Dr. Dunbar said that, in the past two years, 75 percent more radio-activity has been injected into the atmosphere than the maximum recommended by some scientists. He gave it as his own opinion, however, that there was "no cause for alarm."

Premier Rifai of Jordan resigned today, pleading ill health. And King Hussein called on the former agriculture minister, Hazzaa Majali, to form a new government. Both Rifai and Majali are anti-Communist.

The United States ambassador to Iraq...John Jernegan,.returned to Washington today for consultation. He did not come, he said, because of a crisis "or any one particular problem."

The Baghdad radio claims that "other countries" (not identified) have sent infiltrators into Northern Iraq...and that for this reason, the popular resistance force, or home guard, will be given new security duties. This civilian militia is a growing power in Iraq, separate from the army and police. It is said to be organized by the Communists. And in any coup, it could be the decisive force. My colleague, Frank Kearns, has some information on this instrument of power which, until now, has not been made public. Here, from Baghdad, is his report.

KEARNS: For the first time it is possible to reveal some facts about one of the most powerful and mysterious forces in Iraq today. This force, the Popular Resistance Force of P.R.F., what we would call the home guard or National Guard. Propaganda out of Cairo and in some Western newspapers have described the P.R.F. as a Communist striking force, as a Communist dominated home guard. It has been described as independent of the government, of the army, a law unto itself. The only man who could answer some of these questions is the P.R.F.'s commander who until today has remained an unknown, shadowy figure. Now, however, in a frank interview he has unveiled scores of hitherto unknown facts about his organization. His name, Colonel Taha Bemani. A husky Turk from northern Iraq, the 41 years old colonel describes himself as a professional career soldier, 23 years in the army. For the record at least, he flatly denies his civilian army the P.R.F. is Communist or Communist dominated. It is strictly a civilian defense group, he maintains, organized by the army, headed by some 100 officers from the army, and merely an auxiliary force of some 35,000, but more are being trained every day. (Indistinct) hopes the home guard eventually enlists every able bodied man between 15 and 50, men and women, for the P.R.F. already includes some 4,000 women.. The men go through a 13 day training course from four to six P.M. daily through their army non-coms. The women receive additional training in first aid and nursing. In denying any Communist overtones the colonel stresses army regulations, that an officer may not belong to any political party. He admits, however, that trainees in addition to regular basic army training received political instruction on what he calls citizenship and patriotism. They're also trained in judo, commando tactics and guerilla warfare. What about resistance demands to arm all the P.R.F. plus the people, all the people. All right in a dangerous border area, he says, where he reveals P.R.F. men already are completely armed on and off duty. It is not necessary, the colonel adds, in normal areas like Baghdad. Here in the capitol, according to Colonel Bemani, P.R.F.'s are armed only while on duty, otherwise arms are stored in depots. So far, he adds, 11 companies have been trained and placed on duty in Baghdad. Three more are due within a few days. These are the men, incidentally who stop cars at night, sometimes twice within one block, commanding identification and searching all cars and trucks. They are firm, but I should add, usually polite. All these P.R.F.ers I should add, buy their own khaki uniforms. They include not only Arabs, but Indonesians, Assyrans, Kurds, Iraqi Persians, a cross section of Iraq's cosmopolitan population. Their total (indistinct) also calls for security duties, sometimes in civilian clothes checking up on suspicious persons, reporting on any public gatherings, etc. Sometimes they are over-enthusiastic. As the night they stopped a truck piled high with fish and held it until morning when they could watch unloading at the fish market, looking for concealed weapons. The smell of that particular cargo unrefrigerated all night in a climate where the mercury has hit 100 and 150 degrees was enough to dampen even the most enthusiastic civilian soldiers. Make no mistake about it however, this is a tough, well trained force, increasingly as strong as the police and the army, and one of the greatest forces in Iraq today. Right now it has powers neither the army and the police can wield, a real power. It is getting bigger by the day. Back now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Frank Kearns, reporting on the situation in Iraq... which Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, has described as "the most dangerous in the world today." The Reuters news agency reports from Baghdad tonight that the Iraqi Communists are intensifying their campaign to be included in the Kassem cabinet.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: There is being developed in Iraq a powerful militia...which may be capable in a showdown of exerting decisive force. Thomas Jefferson said force is "the immediate parent of despotism." Dictators have never doubted it. Mussolini said early in his career, "At the turning point it is force...and force alone...which makes the crucial decision."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 6, 1959

This is the news:

Negotiations on a new union contract in the steel industry went through their second day. The trade paper Iron Age speculated that if a walkout is called by the United Steelworkers, they might not strike against the industry as a whole but against a few of the companies as a means of bringing pressure against the rest. Iron Age suggested that to off-set these tactics...of divide and conquor...the steel industry might do what six of the major airlines did last fall. Through a mutual aid agreement, the airlines reimbursed each other for the extra profits earned while their competitors were strike-bound. This afternoon, a spokesman for the steel companies said that the industry had considered such a plan but had reached no conclusions. He noted that the steelworkers always have operated on a no contract, no work policy...shutting down all companies at once. When informed of this, the president of the steelworkers union, David McDonald, was non-committal. Both sides said, however, that they were thinking in terms of a settlement.

Myron C. Taylor died here in New York today at the age of 85. Mr. Taylor at one time served as President Roosevelt's representative at the Vatican. He also was chairman of the board of U.S. Steel.

Communist East Germany says that another American transport plane has violated its air space, apparently on a flight from Frankfurt to Berlin. The allegation is made by the official East German news agency A.D.N.

An Italian airliner was forced to land in Baghdad today on a flight from Teheran to Rome. The airline...~~Alitalia~~...has permission to fly over Iraq. Iraqi officials are quoted as saying that the aircraft deviated from its prescribed route. All 21 passengers are reported safe. And a report that the airliner was forced down by Iraqi fighter planes is not confirmed.

Britain today signed a new cultural agreement with Iran. /The signing took place while the Shah of Iran was a guest of the British government. #

This afternoon, President Eisenhower and his guest, Sir Winston Churchill, flew by helicopter to the President's Gettysburg farm. /Mr. Eisenhower wore sports clothes...Sir Winston a gray pin-stripped suit and a broad-brimmed Western-style hat. /They toured the farm for nearly an hour, then made the helicopter flight back to Washington.

The State Department announced officially today that Secretary of State Herter will confer in Bonn on Saturday, with West German Chancellor Adenauer. /Herter is making the stop-over in Bonn at Adenauer's suggestion, while on his way to the Geneva conference of foreign ministers.

Premier Debré of France met with Adenauer today. /A French spokesman says they agreed to press for greater economic and political solidarity in Western Europe...and that the joint Western approach to the Geneva talks was reviewed. /They were described as "very pleased" with the Western approach.

French railroads were paralyzed today, by a strike of locomotive firemen and engineers. /It was a 24-hour walkout...called by the Communist-dominated

→

General Workers Federation. Wages were a major issue. But the strike also was a protest against the austerity program laid down by President DeGaulle.

The State Department said today that "no serious consideration" is being given to the idea of Premier Khrushchev visiting the United States. A spokesman said, "We have had no indication that such a visit is desired by the Soviet government." The spokesman was commenting on a report in the New York Times that Administration officials are now "talking seriously" about the possibility of a Khrushchev visit this year. It was suggested that Khrushchev might want to come for the opening of the Soviet exposition here on June 30th. Vice President Nixon will open an American exhibit in Moscow late in July.

Here in New York today, a United Nations committee began studying the problem of international cooperation in outer space. Russia and other Communist countries boycotted the 18-member committee, claiming that they were not granted fair representation. India and the United Arab Republic took no part, contending that there was no point in doing so if Russia was not present. The United States delegate, told the committee...at its organization meeting...that in no field of endeavor was cooperation among nations "more appropriate or more necessary" than in outer space.

Appearing before the Senate Commerce Committee today, Lewis Strauss defended his record as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. (Since last October, Strauss has been serving as secretary of commerce...and the committee is debating whether the appointment should be confirmed.) Democratic Senator Anderson has accused Strauss of ~~making~~ indulging in "falsehood" and of ~~making~~ taking too much credit for himself.) Today, the nuclear scientist, Dr. Edward Teller, testified in favor of Strauss...speaking of Mr. Strauss' "long-standing, warm and effective support of science." And Strauss himself began reading a 29-page statement...defending his record. One of his major points was that every chairman of the joint atomic committee, except Anderson, had approved of his work.

In Tallahassee, Florida, ~~today, such~~ an all-white county grand jury has indicted four white youths on charges of raping a 19-year-old Negro girl early last Saturday. The maximum penalty for rape in Florida is death in the electric chair. But no white man ever has paid that penalty for attacking a Negro.

Edward R. Murrow: May 6, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

It shows no disbelief in the merits of collective bargaining to remark that the steel negotiations now under way are as ritualistic as an initiation into a secret society or a tribal ceremony. And like these rituals they are surcharged with symbolism.

Both the steel companies and the unions opened the conference by uttering gracious and friendly words. Both tried to give the impression of utmost reasonableness. Both took the posture of defending the "public good." Both spoke as though a strike is the last thing they want or even foresee.

But underneath the words the meaning is of another temper. The upshot of the negotiations - and of the strike that most insiders consider certain - will be to fix wages at the lowest level the companies can succeed in granting, and the highest level the unions can extract by suasion or by ~~withholding~~ refusing to work ~~their labor~~. This is the story without symbolism.

But as staged it is much less factual. Admittedly the truth about a huge industry is complex and hard to simplify. Facts about steel may be unusually ~~peculiarly~~ obscure. But it is a fact that profits in steel are at a level reached only once before. Obviously everybody who believes in private enterprise believes in profits. But what the public does not know is how much wages could rise in steel, without cutting profits below a reasonable point. Nor does it know what a "reasonable" point would be. Everybody who believes in private enterprise also believes in higher wages wherever productivity justifies it. And the basic consideration in the steel negotiations should be whether productivity does or does not justify a rise in wages.

One hears a great deal about inflation in connection with the negotiations. President Eisenhower has warned against any settlement that leads to a rise in prices. The public remembers that in the past increases in steel wages started a cycle of wage increases and the price level went up all around. But economists agree that when productivity increases, wages can increase to the same degree without being inflationary. Here the telling fact about steel is whether productivity has increased, and if so how much. One might think that both sides would talk about this more than anything else, the workers to prove they are producing more, the companies to show to what extent higher earnings should be put into expansion. And the government ought to know the facts well enough to reveal the figures about productivity and analyze them so the public can see where justice lies.

But apparently there is an element of symbolism even in the hard facts about productivity. For though steel prices and steel wages rose sharply in the last five years, and all other prices spiralled up, the actual contribution of steel to the decline in the value of the dollar has been astonishingly small. Economists estimate that steel is responsible for only half-a-cent in the shrinkage of the dollar in the five years. That is because other factors have helped keep costs and prices down, such as automation and the growth of the discount stores.

Even Mr. Eisenhower might be described as being more symbolic than real in warning the negotiators that a hundred and seventy-five million Americans are involved and will not stand aside and let themselves be hurt. A group of unofficial experts meeting the other day pointed out that exhortations to "be reasonable" have little effect on negotiators. Collective bargaining in many cases has been an exercise of reason. But certain negotiations set the pattern for the nation and these are a test of power. The steel negotiations are in this category.

The steel industry is in a strong position. Users of steel have been buying heavily in anticipation of a strike. The supply might last for two months in a shutdown. That would put pressure on the workers and not hurt the public much. But if workers can hold out the two months, their strength will grow enormously.

When the last steel contract was signed in 1956, there had been a month-long strike. George Humphrey was then Secretary of the Treasury, and used his quiet influence to persuade the industry to improve its wage offer, and end the strike. Now Mr. Humphrey is Chairman of the National Steel Company, and has come out publicly, like the other industry leaders, against any increase in wages. It would be hard to say who in the Administration, if there should be a long strike, could quietly persuade Mr. Humphrey to change his mind.

This may not be the ideal way to settle Labour disputes - but it's ours - and it works. Back in a moment.

Word for Today

This story from today's New York Times, dateline United Nations, N.Y. "Six Hopi Indians came to this tall house of glass walls today to warn the nations of the world that they were fast approaching a great struggle between the forces of good and evil. They were told to put their message in writing. The Hopis said their message was one of the heart and mind."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 6, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Negotiations on a new union contract in the steel industry went through their second day. The trade paper Iron Age speculated that if a walkout is called by the United Steelworkers, they might not strike against the industry as a whole but against a few of the companies as a means of bringing pressure against the rest. Iron Age suggested that to off-set these tactics...of divide and conquer...the steel industry might do what six of the major airlines did last fall. Through a mutual aid agreement, the airlines reimbursed each other for the extra profits earned while their competitors were strikebound. This afternoon, a spokesman for the steel companies said that the industry had considered such a plan but had reached no conclusions. He noted that the steel workers always have operated on a no contract, no work policy...shutting down all companies at once. When informed of this, the president of the steelworkers union, David McDonald, was non-committal. Both sides said, however, that they were thinking in terms of a settlement.

Myron C. Taylor died here in New York today at the age of 85, Mr. Taylor at one time served as President Roosevelt's representative at the Vatican. He also was chairman of the board of U.S. Steel.

Communist East Germany says that another American transport plane has violated its air space, apparently on a flight from Frankfurt to Berlin. The allegation is made by the official East German news agency A.D.N.

An Italian airliner was forced to land in Baghdad today on a flight from Teheran to Rome. The airline...has permission to fly over Iraq. Iraqi officials are quoted as saying that the aircraft deviated from its prescribed route. All 21 passengers are reported safe. And a report that the airliner was forced down by Iraqi fighter planes is not confirmed.

Britain today signed a new cultural agreement with Iran. The signing took place while the Shah of Iran was a guest of the British government.

This afternoon, President Eisenhower and his guest, Sir Winston Churchill, flew by helicopter to the President's Gettysburg farm. Mr. Eisenhower were sports clothers...Sir Winston a gray pin-stripped suit and a broad-brimmed Western style hat. They toured the farm for nearly an hour, then made the helicopter flight back to Washington.

The State Department announced officially today that Secretary of State Herter will confer in Bonn on Saturday with West German Chancellor Adenauer. Herter is making the stop-over in Bonn at Adenauer's suggestion while on his way to the Geneva conference of foreign ministers.

Premier Debre of France met with Adenauer today. A French spokesman says they agreed to press for greater economic and poli tical solidarity in Western Europe...and that the joint Western approach to the Geneva talks was reviewed. They were described as "very pleased" with the Western approach.

French railroads were paralyzed today by a strike of locomotive firemen and engineers. It was a 24 hour walkout...called by the Communist-dominated General Workers Federation. Wages were a major issue. But the strike also was a protest against the austerity program laid down by President DeGaulle.

The State Department said today that "no serious consideration" is being given to the idea of Premier Khrushchev visiting the United States. A spokesman said, "We have no indication that such a visit is desired by the Soviet government." The spokesman was commenting on a report in the New York Times that Administration officials are now "talking seriously" about the possibility of a Khrushchev visit this year. It was suggested that Khrushchev might want to come for the opening of the Soviet exposition here in June 30th. Vice President Nixon will open an American exhibit In Moscow late in July.

Here in New York today, a United Nations committee began studying the problem of international cooperation in outer space. Russia and other Communist countries boycotted the 18-member committee, claiming that they were not granted fair representation. India and the United Arab Republic took no part, contending that there was no point in doing so if Russia was not present. The United States delegate, told the committee...at its organization meeting...that in no field of endeavor was cooperation among nations "more appropriate or more necessary than in outer space.

Appearing before the Senate Commerce Committee today, Lewis Staauss defended his record as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. (Since last October, Strauss has been serving as secretary of commerce...and the committee is debating whether the appointment should be confirmed. Democratic Senator Anderson has accused Strauss of indulging in "falsehood" and of taking too much credit for himself.) Today, the nuclear scientist, Dr. Edward Teller, testified in favor of Strauss...speaking of Mr. Strauss' "long-standing, warm and effective support of science." And Strauss himself began reading a 29-page statement... defending his record. One of his major points was that every chairman of the joint atomic committee, except Anderson, had approved of his work.

In Tallahassee, Florida, an all-white county grand jury has indicted four white youths on charges of raping a 19-year-old Negro girl early last Saturday. The maximum penalty for rape in Florida is death in the electric chair. But no white man ever has paid that penalty for attacking a Negro.

It shows no disbelief in the merits of collective bargaining to remark that the steel negotiations now under way are as ritualistic as an initiation into a secret society or a tribal ceremony. And like these rituals they are surcharged with symbolism.

Both the steel companies and the unions opened the conference by uttering gracious and friendly words. Both tried to give the impression of utmost reasonableness. Both took the posture of defending the public good. Both spoke as though a strike is the last thing they want or even foresee.

But underneath the words the meaning is of another temper. The upshot of the negotiations - and of the strike that most insiders consider certain - will be to fix wages at the lowest level the companies can succeed in granting, and the highest level the unions can extract by suasion or by refusing to work. This is the story without symbolism.

But as staged it is much less factual. Admittedly the truth about a huge industry is complex and hard to simplify. Facts about steel may be unusually obscure. But it is a fact that profits in steel are at a level reached only once before. Obviously everybody who believes in private enterprise believes in profits. But what the public does not know is how much wages could rise in steel, without cutting profits below a reasonable point. Nor does it know what a reasonable point would be. Everybody who believes in private enterprise also believes in higher wages wherever productivity justifies it. And the basic consideration in the steel negotiations should be whether productivity does or does not justify a rise in wages.

Onehears a great deal about inflation in connection with the negotiations. President Eisenhower has warned against any settlement that leads to a rise in prices. The public remembers that in the past increases in steel wages started a cycle of wage increases and the price level went up all around. But economists agree that when productivity increases, wages can increase to the same degree without being inflationary. Here the telling fact about steel is whether productivity has increased, and if so how much. One might think that both sides would talk about this more than anything else, the workers to prove they are producing more, the companies to show to what extent higher earnings should be put into expansion. And the government ought to know the facts well enough to reveal the figures about productivity and analyze them so the pubiic can see Where justice lies.

But apparently there is an element of symbolism even in the hard facts about productivity. For though steel prices and steel wages rose sharply in the last five years, and all other prices spiralled up, the actual contribution of steel to the decline in the value of the dollar has been astonishingly small. Economists estimate that steel is responsible for only half-a-cent in the shrinkage of the dollar in the five years. That is because other factors have helped keep costs and prices down, such as automation and the growth of the discount stores.

Even Mr. Eisenhower might be described as being more symbolic than real in warning the negotiators that a hundred and seventy-five million Americans are involved and will not stand aside and let themselves be hurt. A group of unofficial experts meeting the other day pointed out that exhortations to be reasonable, have little effect on negotiators. Collective bargaining in many cases has been an exercise of reason. But certain negotiations set the pattern for the nation and these are a test of power. The steel negotiations are in this category.

The steel industry is in a strong position. Users of steel have been buying heavily in anticipation of a strike. The supply might last for two months in a shutdown. That would put pressure on the workers and not hurt the public much. But if workers can hold out the two months, their strength will grow enormously.

This may not be the ideal way to settle labor disputes, but it's ours, and it works.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: This story from today's New York Times, dateline United Nations, N. Y.

"Six Hopi Indians came to thss tall house of glass walls today to warn the nations of the world that they were fast approaching a great struggle between the forces of good and evil. They were told to put their message in writing. The Hopis said their message was one of the heart and mind."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 7, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Herter speaks to the nation tonight, on the eve of his departure for the foreign ministers conference. Mr. Herter leaves for Geneva tomorrow afternoon. But on the way, he will stop off in West Germany, and have a talk with Chancellor Adenauer. The foreign ministers conference starts on Monday.

The nationwide broadcast tonight, will mark Mr. Herter's first major public appearance, since becoming secretary of state. The text has not been released. But it goes without saying, that he will defend the Western package proposal as fair and reasonable, and call on the Russians to bargain in good faith. Under the package plan, the Berlin problem would be solved as part of an over-all settlement of the German question. Germany would be reunified on a step-by-step basis...providing, at the same time, for some kind of arms limitation with inspection.

→

In Paris, a NATO spokesman says that the United States has signed a series of agreements with West Germany, Turkey, Greece and the Netherlands "for the exchange of military nuclear information and training." The nuclear information...reportedly...would not concern the manufacture of weapons but deal simply with the mounting of warheads. NATO made the disclosure in refuting the Soviet charge that the West was trying to "torpedo" the Geneva conference by beefing up its forces with modern weapons. It was emphasized at NATO headquarters that plans for equipping the Atlantic Pact countries with these weapons had been in the process of implementation for over two years. A NATO communique said, "The Soviet leaders appear to be misinterpreting Western intentions." There are in the plans, it said, "no aggressive intent."

In Washington today, the United States signed a new agreement with Britain for cooperation in the nuclear field. The agreement provides for the exchange of enriched uranium from the United States for British plutonium. The two countries also would exchange information on the design of nuclear weapons...and Britain would receive "non-nuclear" parts for these weapons. A more limited agreement was reached with France, whereby the United States would sell France enriched uranium for the prototype of a nuclear submarine, as well as for the fueling of French reactors. These agreements go into effect automatically in 60 days, unless Congress disapproves.

Postmaster General Summerfield today proposed legislation raising the cost of mailing a First Class letter to five cents. The air-mail letter rate would be increased to eight cents. Summerfield said these increases, if approved, would "substantially reduce" the deficit in the operation of the Post Office Department.

The House approved a measure today...authorizing the T.V.A. to issue up to 750-million dollars in bonds for expanding its power system. The vote was 245 to 170...and the bill now goes to the Senate. Republican efforts in the House to give the Treasury Department more control over the expansion program were beaten down. And there were predictions that President Eisenhower might veto the measure if it is finally approved in its present form.

Democratic Representative Anfuso of New York today introduced legislation to make Puerto Rico the 51st state. Puerto Rico now has a commonwealth form of government with home rule...and Governor Munoz says the "vast majority" of Puerto Ricans are satisfied.

The Justice Department has asked the Federal Communications Commission to reverse its decision that on radio and television news programs all political candidates must be granted equal time. The decision was made in the case of Lar Daly, a minor party candidate for mayor of Chicago...who had complained of unequal coverage. The ruling was based on Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act requiring that political candidates be given equal opportunity to broadcast. Until the Daly case, the law had been interpreted as referring to strictly political broadcasts, not to the presentation of news. Two months ago, President Eisenhower characterized the F.C.C. ruling as "ridiculous".

Negotiations between the major steel companies and the United Steelworkers Union became more heated today. The union accused the steel industry of making plans which...if implemented in case of a strike...would be illegal. It asked the Justice Department and the National Labor Relations Board to investigate what it said were industry plans for a lockout, or a profit-sharing arrangement in the event that not all of the steel companies were struck. The steel producers came back with a suggestion that if anything needed federal investigation, it was the "concentration of power in the union." After this exchange, both sides agreed that it might be wise to stop airing their differences in public.

President Eisenhower is Sir Winston Churchill's dinner guest tonight at the British embassy in Washington. Sir Winston has been staying at the White House since Monday. He will spend tonight at the British embassy, then come up to New York for a brief visit before flying back to London.

Edward R. Murrow: May 7, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas is Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and a believer in the importance of education. He is obviously trying to educate us regarding what's going on in the rest of the world. The Senator is making a speech at Columbia University, here in New York tonight, saying that most of us in this country don't appreciate the significance of three world-wide revolutions. The driving forces behind these revolutions are nationalism, the demand for better living standards, and the progress of technology. Fulbright believes that all three of these revolutions would have occurred if Karl Marx and Josef Stalin had never been born.

The desire in the so-called underdeveloped countries is not just for political independence. They want to "erase the memory of racial subservience", and they want to stand in the sun with a distinctive national personality.

Everyone knows that there is a continuing struggle between the Soviet Union and ourselves to secure the allegiance and respect of people in the so-called uncommitted areas. According to Fulbright the Russians: "by parading themselves as the example of a peasant people made over swiftly into a giant industrial power, have become the "merchants of hope;" while we have been made out to seem the defenders of hopelessness." He pointed out, as many others have, that the Russian economy is expanding at a rate two-and-a-half times that of ours.

In discussing the demand for better living standards, Fulbright predicts "We are in for serious trouble if we think that we're at liberty to get richer while most of the rest of the world gets poorer." Our position as a creditor nation demands that we give our debtors a chance to buy in our market, by selling their own products here more readily.

The technological revolution has been helped along by improvements in transportation and communication which have made it possible for those seeking independence and a better standard of living to compare their lot with that of other people in other countries.

According to Fulbright the Soviet Union is exploiting all three revolutions to a degree which we are not. And the reason for this he suspects "is that they know more clearly what they want to do, and they work harder at it."

In a somewhat lighter vein Fulbright suggests that perhaps our best long-range policy toward the Russians would be to provide them with television sets, hi-fi- phonographs, ankle-deep carpets, and block-long automobiles. He contends that a rich Communist is probably less to be feared than a poor

Communist. The only difficulty with this line of reasoning is, of course, that most of the people in the areas where we are contending with the Russians are poor, terribly poor. And many of them believe they see the possibility of getting at least a little richer a lot quicker under Communism, rather than under a free society. It is pretty well agreed that the man who goes to bed hungry at night, and whose family is likewise hungry, isn't going to concern himself with the [redacted] issues that divide the free world from the totalitarian world.

Perhaps the key phrase in the Senator's lecture is where he said the Russians know more clearly what they want to do, and work harder at it." They believe that Communism is an item for export. They are training vast numbers of technicians for export to the under-developed countries, and they are not only trained technically, they also know the language of the country to which they will be sent.

The sacrifices required to develop and nourish this export program are involuntary. They come out of the hides of the Russian workers. But the program is developing momentum because the Russian leaders believe that this is [redacted] one of the principal methods by [redacted] which they will achieve world domination.

Enough Westerners have listened to Khrushchev in the last year for us all to understand that when he says "We will bury you", he doesn't necessarily mean to bury us in the rubble of our own buildings and homes. But rather in a landslide of hungry, bitter and impatient people who see more immediate hope in the Russian system than they do in ours. If we are to compete effectively in these developing areas - in short, if we are to avoid being isolated - we may have to re-examine the real meaning of that sturdy old word that has rather fallen from favor, and the word is "sacrifice".

Back in a moment -

George Bryan

Word for Today

Sixteen years ago...in speaking of nations as well as individuals... Winston Churchill said, "The price of greatness is responsibility." And Lynn Landrum...speaking of responsibility...once remarked, "If you alone can do what ought to be done, then that 'oughtness' rests on you. You can't dodge it. It is yours."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 7, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Herter speaks to the nation tonight on the eve of his departure for the foreign ministers conference. Mr. Herter leaves for Geneva tomorrow afternoon. But on the way he will stop off in West Germany and have a talk with Chancellor Adenauer. The foreign ministers conference starts on Monday.

The nationwide broadcast tonight will mark Mr. Herter's first major public appearance since becoming secretary of state. The text has not been released. But it goes without saying that he will defend the Western package proposal as fair and reasonable and call on the Russians to bargain in good faith. Under the package plan, the Berlin problem would be solved as part of an over-all settlement of the German question. Germany would be reunified on a step-by-step basis...providing, at the same time, for some kind of arms limitation with inspection.

In Paris, a NATO spokesman says that the United States has signed a series of agreements with West Germany, Turkey, Greece and the Netherlands "for the exchange of military nuclear information and training." The nuclear information... reportedly...would not concern the manufacture of weapons but deal simply with the mounting of warheads. NATO made the disclosure in refuting the Soviet charge that the West was trying to "torpedo" the Geneva conference by beefing up its forces with modern weapons. It was emphasized at NATO headquarters that plans for equipping the Atlantic Pact countries with these weapons had been in the process of implementation for over two years. A NATO communique said, "The Soviet leaders appear to be misinterpreting Western intentions." There are in the plans, it said, no aggressive intent.

In Washington today, the United States signed a new agreement with Britain for cooperation in the nuclear field. The agreement provides for the exchange of enriched uranium from the United States for British plutonium. The two countries also would exchange information on the design of nuclear weapons...and Britain would receive non-nuclear parts for these weapons. A more limited agreement was reached with France, whereby the United States would sell France enriched uranium for the prototype of a nuclear submarine, as well as for the fueling of French reactors. These agreements go into effect automatically in 60 days, unless Congress disapproves.

Postmaster General Summerfield today proposed legislation raising the cost of mailing a First Class letter to five cents. The air mail letter rate would be increased to eight cents. Summerfield said these increases if approved, would "substantially reduce" the deficit in the operation of the Post Office Department.

The House approved a measure today...authorizing the T.V.A. to issue up to 750-million dollars in bonds for expanding its power system. The vote was 245 to 170...and the bill now goes to the Senate. Republican efforts in the House to give the Treasury Department more control over the expansion program were beaten down. And there were predictions that President Eisenhower might veto the measure if it is finally approved in its present form.

Democratic Representative Anfuso of New York today introduced legislation to make Puerto Rico the 51st state. Puerto Rico now has a commonwealth form of government with home rule...and Governor Munoz says the "vast majority" of Puerto Ricans are satisfied.

The Justice Department has asked the Federal Communications Commission to reverse its decision that on radio and television news programs all political candidates must be granted equal time. The decision was made in the case of Lar Daly, a minor party candidate for mayor of Chicago...who had complained of unequal coverage. The ruling was based on Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act requiring that political candidates be given equal opportunity to broadcast. Until the Daly case, the law had been interpreted as referring to strictly political broadcasts, not to the presentation of news. Two months ago, President Eisenhower characterized the F.C.C. ruling as "ridiculous."

Negotiations between the major steel companies and the United Steelworkers Union became more heated today. The union accused the steel industry of making plans which...if implemented in case of a strike...would be illegal. It asked the Justice Department and the National Labor Relations Board to investigate what it said were industry plans for a lockout, or a profit-sharing arrangement in the event that not all of the steel companies were struck. The steel producers came back with a suggestion that if anything needed federal investigation, it was the "concentration of power in the union." After this exchange, both sides agreed that it might be wise to stop airing their differences in public.

President Eisenhower is Sir Winston Churchill's dinner guest tonight at the British embassy in Washington. Sir Winston has been staying at the White House since Monday. He will spend tonight at the British embassy, then come up to New York for a brief visit before flying back to London.

Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas is Chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and a believer in the importance of education. He is obviously trying to educate us regarding what's going on in the rest of the world. The Senator is making a speech at Columbia University, here in New York tonight, saying that most of us in this country don't appreciate the significance of three world-wide revolutions. The driving forces behind these revolutions are nationalism, the demand for better living standards, and the progress of technology. Fulbright believes that all three of these revolutions would have occurred if Karl Marx and Josef Stalin had never been born.

The desire in the so-called underdeveloped countries in not just for political independence. They want to "erase the memory of racial subservience," and they want to stand in the sun with a distinctive national personality.

Everyone knows that there is a continuing struggle between the Soviet Union and ourselves to secure the allegiance and respect of people in the so-called uncommitted areas. According to Fulbright the Russians: "by parading themselves as the example of a peasant people made over swiftly into a giant industrial power, have become the merchants of hope; while we have been made out to seem the defenders of hopelessness." He pointed out, as many others have, that the Russian economy is expanding at a rate two-and-a-half times that of ours.

In discussing the demand for better living standards, Fulbright predicts, "We are in for serious trouble if we think that we're at liberty to get richer while most of the rest of the world gets poorer." Our position as a creditor nation demands that we give our debtors a chance to buy in our market, by selling their own products here more readily.

The technological revolution has been helped along by improvements in transportation and communication which have made it possible for those seeking independence and a better standard of living to compare their lot with that of other people in other countries.

According to Fulbright the Soviet Union is exploiting all three revolutions to a degree which we are not. And the reason for this he suspects "is that they know more clearly what they want to do, and they work harder at it."

In a somewhat lighter vein Fulbright suggests that perhaps our best long-range policy toward the Russians would be to provide them with television sets, hi-fi phonographs, ankle-deep carpets, and block-long automobiles. He contends that a rich Communist is probably less to be feared than a poor Communist. The only difficulty with this line of reasoning is, of course, that most of the people in the areas where we are contending with the Russians are poor, terribly poor. And many of them believe they see the possibility of getting at least a little richer a lot quicker under Communism, rather than under a free society. It is pretty well agreed that the man who goes to bed hungry at night, and whose family is likewise hungry, isn't going to concern himself with the issues that divide the free world from the totalitarian world.

Perhaps the key phrase in the Senator's lecture is where he said, "The Russians know more clearly what they want to do, and work harder at it." They believe that Communism is an item for export. They are training vast numbers of technicians for export to the under-developed countries, and they are not only trained technically, they also know the language of the country to which they will be sent.

The sacrifices required to develop and nourish this export program are involuntary. They come out of the hides of the Russian workers. But the program is developing momentum because the Russian. leaders believe that this is one of the principal methods by which they will achieve world domination.

Enough Westerners have listened to Khrushchev in the last year for us all to understand that when he says "We will bury you," he doesn't necessarily mean to buryus in the rubble of our own buildings and homes. But rather in a landslide of hungry, bitter and impatient poeple who see more immediate hope in the Russian system than they do in ours. If we are to compete effectively in these developing areas - in short, wf we are to avoid being isolated - we may have to re-examine the real meaning of that sturdy old word that has rather fallen from favor, and the word is "sacrifice."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BYRAN

MURROW: Sixteen years ago...in speaking of nations as well as individuals... Winston Churchill said, "The price of greatness is responsibility." And Lynn Landrum...speaking of responsibility...once remarked, "If you alone can do what ought to be done, then that 'oughtness' rests on you. You can't dodge it. It is yours."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 8, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Herter left Washington this afternoon for the meeting of foreign ministers opening in Geneva on Monday. Mr. Herter told reporters at the airport that he was leaving in a "hopeful spirit". But as in his nationwide broadcast last night, he cautioned against expecting too much. He spoke again of the need for patience in negotiating with the Russians and said that "even long negotiations do not necessarily lead to success." In the morning, Mr. Herter had conferred with President Eisenhower. He also called on Mr. Dulles in Walter Reed Hospital, and the former secretary of state wished him luck. The foreign ministers meeting is expected to last three or four weeks. In a few minutes, we will switch to Geneva for a report setting the scene of the conference, where many diplomats already have arrived.

The United States today formally rejected the protest...made by Russia... against the supplying of missiles to our NATO allies. Russia had charged that in doing this we were sabotaging the Geneva conference in advance. The American note points out...again...that we planned to send these missiles to Western Europe long before the prospect of a foreign ministers meeting ever arose. The note says we are going to Geneva with a "full desire" to bring the negotiations to a "fruitful" conclusion. And, it adds, the United States "looks to the Soviet Union to display the same attitude."

Secretary of Defense McElroy cancelled his plans to fly to Geneva this week-end...due to the unexpected death, during the night, of Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald Quarles. Mr. Quarles was 64 and had apparently been in good health. President Eisenhower appointed him secretary of the Air Force in 1953, and he became deputy defense secretary in March, 1957. Mr. McElroy has indicated a desire to leave government service sometime late this year. Mr. Quarles had been mentioned as a possible successor, and McElroy ~~[illegible]~~ said today that his death would now be "a factor" in desciding whether to resign. "The thing to do now," McElroy said,

"is not to worry about my situation but the replacement of a man who is really irreplacable." President Eisenhower issued a statement...saying of Mr. Quarles: "His contribution was of inestimable value to the security, not only of the United States, but of the entire free world."

Several new proposals were made today at the Geneva conference looking toward the possible probibition of nuclear weapons tests. Russia submitted a plan for using artificial satellites as a means of policing high-altitude nuclear tests. Representatives of the United States and Britain, for their part, announced that their countries would give careful study to the Soviet proposal for a limited number of "on-site" inspections in the enforcement of a test ban. The United States suggested that...under certain safeguards...it might drop its insistence that control posts be staffed with technicians from all nations involved in the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests.

In Washington, a joint congressional committee today continued its hearings on the fallout problem. Scientists appearing before the committee differed on how long nuclear tests could go on as they have for the past five years before radiation would reach the maximum permissible limit. Estimates of when the danger point would be reached varied from as low as 40 to 50 years to as much as a hundred years. A member of the Atomic Energy Commission...Dr. Willard F. Libby...said in separate testimony that the commission believes that most small atomic weapons can be tested underground without fallout. Another scientist, Dr. Frank Shelton of the Armed Forces Special Weapons Project, said that in his estimation tests conducted underground would have little military value.

The House Appropriations Committee today ordered President Eisenhower's civil defense budget cut by more than 40 percent. The committee took the action in approving a 6-billion, 800-million-dollar money bill...for financing the Civil Defense Administration, the Veterans Administration, and other independent federal offices in the next fiscal year. The committee eliminated completely 12-million dollars, sought by the Administration for the creation of new civil defense jobs in city halls throughout the country. The measure will be taken up by the full House on Monday.

Union negotiations in the steel industry have recessed until Monday, when both sides say "give and take" baggaining will get under way. #

Non-professional hospital employes went on strike today against six private, non-profit hospitals, here in New York. More than 2-thousand patients are being cared by supervisory workers, in addition to the nurses and doctors who are not on strike. The walkout springs from a union demand for recognition. The hospital management rejected an arbitration proposal made by the city of New York.

In Egypt, 200 persons are believed to have drowned today when an excursion steamer rolled over and sank in the Nile River. An estimated 100 persons were saved.

Now, for that "preview report" on the foreign ministers conference, here is my colleague, Howard K. Smith, reporting from Geneva.

(Tape runs 4:40
Ends on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in N.Y.")

That was my colleague Howard K. Smith, setting the scene of the foreign ministers meeting which starts in Geneva next week.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, Here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

This is former President Truman's 75th birthday. On his 70th birthday, Mr. Truman said, "When you become 40, you should take it a little slower, work a little harder, take a little more time to think, and you will be all right." Today he said, "I am an optimist. I wish I could live another 50 years to see the progress of the free world."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, May 8, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now for that preview report on the Foreign Ministers' conference, here's my colleague Howard K. Smith reporting from Geneva.

SMITH: Geneva, clustered around the end of a sapphire lake, smiling up at the snowcaps of the highest mountain in Europe, is one of the world's most breath-takingly beautiful cities. Today as official delegations are arriving, the city is sparkling and magnificent, from the high medieval towers of the old city down to the town's unique public monument, the ... - a fountain that sends a staff of water a hundred yards up into the sky, from which it falls in a huge but delicate rainbow-colored veil into the lake. The city has an oddly assorted group of links to life in America. John Calvin came here in the 16th century and made it a theocracy; later imitated by the Pilgrims to the American colony. Ernest Hemingway chose to lay the death scene of "Farewell To Arms" on the Lake of Geneva, near here. May Shelley, here, wrote the book that launched a thousand horror movies, "Frankenstein." Geneva has a symbolic meaning for the conference that opens here on Monday. Unfortunately it's a sad meaning. It happens that many of the modern world's outstanding diplomatic failures have taken place in this same magnificent setting. Between the wars the old League of Nations lived out its futile career here. Much more recently, the Foreign Ministers of the four countries to meet next week held a meeting here four years ago. They came together following a summit meeting. They failed to agree even on the terms of a communique. Major high level East-West contacts stopped with that. They are to be resumed for the first time since then on Monday.

Next week's conference will begin without any impediment of great expectations. It is generally accepted, despite our official language to the contrary, that this will be a mere diplomatic ritual. The foreign ministers' talks are foothills that we have virtually obligated ourselves to surmount on the way to a later and very important summit meeting of the chiefs of government.

If the Foreign Ministers' conference were to succeed, that would justify going to the summit to seal the agreement; and if it should fail, that, it is generally said, would even more urgently justify going to the summit to try to save the situation.

The package proposals formulated by the United States - and accepted by our Allies - a package calling for gradually unifying divided Germany, for an arrangement to guarantee security or no war in Europe, plus our willingness to discuss Berlin, all this has been rejected by the Russians in advance. Khrushchev rejected it this week in an interview with some German Socialists. His newspapers rejected it in editorials, which in Russia are statements of government policy. The only real occasion for interest in the foreign ministers conference is one thing: that is, to see how America's new Secretary of State, who is virtually ex officio policy leader for the Western world, Mr. Christian Herter, will now operate.

The fact that no one expects much to happen in the foreign ministers' talks does not mean that the new round of negotiations, of which they are the opening instalment, is not considered to be important. On the contrary, the new round of talks is held to be vitally important. Usually when talks fail things stay where they were. This time if talks fail things are going to change, possibly in a dangerous way. The Russians have committed themselves too often, too publicly and too deeply to change the status of Berlin. If we refuse their plan to do this, and we say we will, they will have to fulfill their threats and hand our communications with Berlin over to the East German puppets. We will then have to decide whether to let the East Germans control our traffic, yielding under duress, and opening the way to harassments of our communications, or to refuse. In which case we might have to use force to get through. The consensus seems at present to be that we may yield and give the East Germans a de facto recognition, feeling this is too small an issue to fight about. In this respect, also, Geneva is symbolic. The well-off people of this lovely city, like their fellows all over the Western world, are too prosperous, peace is too pleasant, to summon the sacrifice it would take to be firm to the point of fighting. That in any case is the widely shared expectation here as the conference, provoked by Khrushchev's ultimatum on Berlin, is about to begin. Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

Trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 8, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Herter left Washington this afternoon for the meeting of foreign ministers opening in Geneva on Monday. Mr. Herter told reporters at the airport that he was leaving in a "hopeful spirit." But as in his nationwide broadcast last night, he cautioned against expecting too much. He spoke again of the need forpatience in negotiating with the Russians and said that "even long negotiations do not necessarily lead to success." In the morning, Mr. Herter had conferred with President Eisenhower. He also called on Mr. Dulles in Walter Reed Hospital, and the former secretary of state wished him luck. The foreign ministers meeting is expected to last three or four weeks. In a few minutes, we will switch to Geneva for a report setting the scene of the conference where many diplomats have already arrived.

The United States today formally rejected the protest...made by Russia... against the supplying of missiles to our NATO allies. Russia had charged that in doing this we were sabotaging the Geneva conference in advance. The American note points out...again..that we planned to send these missiles to Western Europe long before the prospect of a foreign ministers meeting ever arose. The note says we are going to Geneva with a "full desire" to bring the negotiations to a "fruitful" conclusion. And, it adds, the United States "looks to the Soviet Union to display the same attitude."

Secretary of Defense McElroy cancelled his plans to fly to Geneva this week-end..due to the unexpected death, during the night, of Deputy Secretary of Defense Donald Quarles. Mr. Quarles was 64 and had apparently been in good health. President Eisenhower appointed him secretary of the Air Force in 1953, and he became deputy defense secretary in March, 1957. Mr. McElroy has indicated a desire to leave government service some time late this year. Mr. Quarles had been mentioned as a possible successor, and McElroy said today that his death would now be "a factor" in deciding whether to resign. "The thing to do now," McElory said, "is not to worry about my situation but the replacement of a man who is really irreplaceable." President Eisenhower issued a statement...saying of Mr. Quarles: "His contribution was of inestimable value to the security, not only of the United States, but of the entire free world."

Several new proposals were made today at the Geneva conference looking toward the possible prohibition of nuclear weapons tests. Russia submitted a plan for using artificial satellites as a means of policing high-altitude nuclear tests. Representatives of the United States and Britain, for their part, announced that their countries would give careful study to the Soviet proposal for a limited number of on-site inspections in the enforcement of a test ban. The United States suggested that...under certain safeguards...it might drop its insistence that control posts be staffed with technicians from all nations involved in the probibition of nuclear weapons tests.

In Washington, a joint congressional committee today continued its hearings on the fall-out problem. Scientists appearing before the committee differed on how long nuclear tests could go on as they have for the past five years before radiation would reach the maximum permissible limit. Estimates of when the danger point would be reached varied from as low as 40 to 50 years to as much as a hundred years. A member of the Atomic Energy Commission...Dr. Willard F. Libby, said in a separate testimony that the commission believes that most small atomic weapons can be tested underground without fallout. Another scientist, Dr. Frank Shelton of the Armed Forces Special Weapons Project, said that in his estimation tests conducted underground would have little military value.

The House Appropriations Committee today ordered President Eisenhower's civil defense budget cut by more than 40 percent. The committee took the action in approving a 6-billion, 800-million-dollar money bill...for financing the Civil Defense Administration, the Veterans Administration, and other independent federal offices in the next fiscal year. The committee eliminated completely 12-million dollars, sought by the Administration for the creation of new civil defense jobs in city halls throughout the country. The measure will be taken up by the full House on Monday.

Union negotiations in the steel industry have recessed until Monday, when both sides say "give and take" bargaining will get under way.

Non-professional hospital employees went on strike today against six private, non-profit hospitals, here in New York. More than 2-thousand patients are being cared for by supervisory workers, in addition to the nurses and doctors who are not on strike. The walkout springs from a union demand for recognition. The hospital management rejected an arbitration proposal made by the city of New York.

In Egypt, 200 persons are believed to have drowned today when an excursion steamer rolled over and sank in the Nile River. An estimated 100 persons were saved.

Now, for that preview report on the foreign ministers conference, here is my colleague, Howard K. Smith reporting from Geneva.

SMITH: Geneva, clustered around the end of a sapphire lake, smiling up at the snowcaps of the highest mountain in Europe, is one of the world's most breath-takingly beautiful cities. Today as official delegations are arriving, the city is sparkling and magnificent, from the high medieval towers of the old city down to the town's unique public monument, the....a fountain that sends a staff of water a hundred yards up into the sky, from which it falls in a huge but delicate rainbow-colored veil into the lake. The city has an oddly assorted group of links to life in America. John Calvin came here in the 16th century and made it a theocracy; later imitated by the Pilgrims to the American colony. Ernest Hemingway chose to lay the death scene of "Farewell To Arms" on the Lake of Geneva, near here. May Shelley, here, wrote the book that launched a thousand horror movies, "Frankenstein." Geneva has a symbolic meaning for the conference that opens here in Monday. Unfortunately it's a sad meaning. It happens that many of the modern world's outstanding diplomatic failures have taken place in this same magnificent setting. Between the wars the old League of Nations lived out its futile career here. Much more recently, the Foreign Ministers of the four countries to meet next week held a meeting here four years ago. They came together following a summit meeting. They failed to agree even on the terms of a communique. Major high level East-West contacts stopped with that. They are to be resumed for the first time since then on Monday.

Next week's conference will begin without any impediment of great expectations. It is generally accepted, despite our official language to the contrary, that this will be a mere diplomatic ritual. The foreign ministers' talks are foothills that we have virtually obligated ourselves to surmount on the way to a later and very important summit meeting of the chiefs of government.

If the Foreign Ministers' conference were to succeed that would justify going to the summit to seal the agreement; and if it should fail, that, it is generally said, would even more urgently justify going to the summit to try to save the situation.

The package proposals formulated by the United States - and accepted by our allies - a package calling for gradually unifying divided Germany, for an arrangement to guarantee security or no war in Europe, plus our willingness to discuss Berlin, all this has been rejected by the Russians in advance. Khrushchev rejected it this week in an interview wtth some German socialists. His newspapers rejected it in editorials, which in Russia are statements of government policy. The only real occasion for interest in the foreign ministers conference is one thing: that is, to see how America's new Secretary of State, who is virtually ex officio policy leader for the Western world, Mr. Christian Herter, will now operate.

The fact that no one expects much to happen in the foreign ministers' talks does not mean that the new round of negotiations, of which they are the opening installment, is not considered to be important. On the contrary, the new round of talks is held to be vitally important. Usually when talks fail things stay where they were. This time if talks fail things are going to change, possibly in a dangerous way. The Russians have committed themselves too often, too publicly and too deeply to change the status of Berlin. If we refuse their plan to do this, and we say we will, they will have to fulfill their threats and hand our communications with Berlin over to the East German puppets. We will then have to decide whether to let the East Germans control our traffic, yielding under duress, and opeing the way to harassments of our communications, or to refuse, in which case we might have to use force to get through. The concensus seems at present to be that we may yield and give the East Germans a de facto recognition, feeling this is too small an isuue to fight about. In this respect, also, Geneva is symbolic. The well-off people of this lovely city, like their fellows all over the Western world, are too prosperous, peace is too pleasant, to summon the sacrifice it would take to be firm to the point of fighting. That in any case is the widely shared expectation here as the conference provoked by Khrushchev's ultimatum on Berlin, is about to begin. Back now to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague Howard K. Smith, setting the scene of the foreign ministers meeting in Geneva next week.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: This is former President Truman's 75th birthday. On his 70th birthday, Mr. Truman said, "When you become 40, you should take it a little slower, work a little harder, take a little more time to think, and you will be all right." Today he said, "I am an optimist. I wish I could live another 50 years to see the [illegible] progress of the free world." Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 11, 1959

This is the news:

The foreign ministers today opened their Geneva meeting two and one-half hours behind schedule. The delay was caused by Russian insistence that delegates from East and West Germany be seated at the conference as full participants. The West refused to give in to the Soviet demand. The dispute finally was settled with an agreement that the East and West German delegates would sit at separate tables. They may speak only if none of the Big Four foreign ministers objects. And there was also that dispute over whether the conference table should be rectangular or round.

The Russians wanted it round...and that is how it will be. But only one side of the round table will be used.

The first session lasted less than an hour...and was mostly perfunctory. United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold declared the talks open with an appeal for "a peaceful solution to the conflicts." The success of the conference, he said, was of "vital significance."

After the first meeting, a Russian spokesman told reporters that they could look for more procedural problems tomorrow. He declined to elaborate. It would not be surprising, however, if Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko should propose that Poland and Czechoslovakia be represented at the conference...although, in the words of a Western diplomat...this would not pose "as grave and fundamental a problem as that which was solved today." (In a few minutes we will switch to Geneva for a direct report).

Two assistant secretaries of state today urged the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to uphold the Administration's aid program to Africa and the Far East. Walter S. Robertson (who is retiring in a few weeks) told the committee that the threat of Red China was never so "broad and ominous" as it is today. In Tibet, he said, the Chinese Communists have shown their Asian neighbors their "true face". The other State Department expert...J.C. Satterthwaite... said the immediate Communist objective in Africa is to liquidate all Western influence. He said the American aid program is designed to help the people of Africa "tackle their pressing internal problems"...so that the social upheaval there cannot be exploited by the Reds.

King Baudouin of Belgium arrived in the United States today for a 21-day state visit. President Eisenhower met the king personally at Washington National Airport.

Britain today announced officially that it will sell a "reasonable" quantity of arms to Iraq. The announcement was made in Parliament by John Profumo, minister of state for foreign affairs...who said the deal had the approval of the United States. Profumo said Premier Kassem of Iraq had asked for the arms...and that the British government did not think "forcing him to rely solely on the Soviet bloc for arms would contribute to stability in the Middle East." The arms shipment would include aircraft and tanks.

A spokesman for the Afghanistan Embassy in London today denied British press reports that a unit of Soviet troops has been stationed in Afghanistan with the permission of the Afghan government.

President Eisenhower today urged Congress to approve United States participation in a multi-million-dollar inter-American development bank. Bank funds would be used to further the economic development of the Latin American states.

The government announces that the number of persons unemployed dropped by 735-thousand in the past month. This is considerably more than the usual drop in unemployment at this time of year. In addition to the customary spring expansion in agriculture, there was a more than seasonal gain in construction and brisk hiring on the part of companies manufacturing hard goods. Also in the past month, the total number of persons holding jobs rose by one million, 185-thousand. This means that 65-million persons now have jobs---a record figure for April.

Secretary of Labor Mitchell calls the report "very good news for our country." But he notes that there are still "soft spots", where people cannot find work. "And in our general rejoicing," he says, "these people must not be forgotten." George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, has described the April report has "a healthy sign." Meany points to the 3-million, 627-thousand who are still unemployed and says full employment and full production will not be achieved until there is what he calls "some long-overdue government action."

The controversy over the confirmation of Secretary of Commerce Strauss continued today in the Senate Commerce Committee. Strauss told the senators that, if confirmed, he will never keep information from Congress for political reasons.

Now for that first-hand report from Geneva, here is my colleague David Schoenbrun.

Tape runs 5:15

Ends on cue: "--to Edw. R. Murrow in Washington."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

NO INTRO TO BRYAN

Word for Today

The Geneva meeting finally got underway...after the question of furniture design was decided and the Soviet demand for full German participation was set aside. There is no assurance that the Russians w ill not try again to make East Germany a full participant. As Kin Hubbard once observed, "Nobody ever forgets where he buried a hatchet."

Goodnight and good luck!

May 6, 1959

Ed Murrow

Dear Sir, Many people to day are quoting from the sayings of Job. Soloman said I have sought out and set in order many proverbs.

In the verse on the back of this sheet, I am lining up, what I think, is a true perspective; some of the sayings of Job.

Yours Sincearly

Dacus Wardlow

25033 Pleasant Way

Hayward Calif.

MAY 1 - 1959

MAY 12 1959

The Exuberant Youth

In my youth, when my soul was abounding
I could go fourth, and command the morning
Then as the world did look and wonder,
I did clothe the horses neck with thunder.
Then as I grew older, and I grew bolder.
With one's him right and the reins held tight.
You can guide autumas in his flight,
Before you lash his rump, and twitch his tail.
Or rib him because of his imperfection
By sure he's headed in the right direction,
Now you will agree, and you can say me too,
The right direction is not towards Orome Jove.

By Dacus Wardlow

As autumas is the greatest star in the northern Himesphere, at this stage of the drama who is playing that role now?

FOOT NOTES

to command the morning; to take over, to clothe the neck with thunder; to delegate powers over

CGS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, May 11, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: Now, for that firsthand report from Geneva, here is my colleague, David Schoenbrun

SCHOENBRUN: The council of foreign ministers of the four powers met more than 400 times before reaching agreement on an Austrian peace treaty in the month of May, 1955. To judge from the procedures here in Geneva in May, 1959, the foreign ministers may have to meet some 4,000 times more before they can reach a similar treaty granting freedom and independence to united Germany. Today's conference, scheduled to open its doors at 3:30 this afternoon had to be postponed until 6 PM because of a dispute over seating the German delegation.

The Russians wanted to seat their East German satellites at the table as full participants. The Western powers refused to accord such formal recognition to the Communist regime. The three Western ministers then met with Russia's Gromyko at 2:30to try to settle this issue. They've been warned by the U. N. Secretary General, Dag Hammarskjold, that if they did not settle it by at least 4 o'clock it would be too late for his staff to prepare the conference room for a session today. At exactly seven minutes to four British Secretary Selwyn Lloyd came smilingly out of his villa to announce to the assembled reporters that agreement had been reached at the last moment and that the conference would have the room to begin work today at 6 PM. But it did not begin at 6 PM. It began at 6:25, for they had still another dispute. The first dispute had been solved when the Russians backed down and agreed to seat the Germans behind the big four and not at the table. The second dispute came over the number of seats to give them with the Russians insisting on alloting ten seats to each German delegation, that is the same number as those occupied by each of the big four.

The West, still fighting firmly against any symbol of recognition for the East Germans insisted that they must limit their delegates to six, and once again the Russians gave way and the conference finally began.

What does this extraordinary performance suggest? What coming events can be forecast by the shadows that fell over the Palace of Nations here in Geneva today? First, one might say, it's an object lesson to the Western powers that when they are united and determined to resist that chances are good for the Russians to give way. It's a lesson that might have been learned many times in the last 20 years. From the appeasment of Munich in 1938 to the rape of Prague in 1948 and the successful defense of Quemoy in 1958. Every time an aggressor blustered and threatened and the Democratic nations tried to buy him off, freedom was lost. Every time a united, determined alliance resisted aggression the democracies won the the fight, or more significantly perhaps in recent years, did not have to fight. In Iran in 1945, in the Greek civil war, in the Italian elections and the Berlin blockade the Western powers faced up to a Soviet challenge and the Soviets backed down and tried to go around some other way. But, one of our greatest difficulties today, in the present situation, and at this conference, is the fact that the Russians now have their hands around the throat of Berlin and can squeeze it at will any time the will of the West to resist seems to be wavering, and the Russians have considerably increased their strength since the last time they made such an attempt. The price they now offer to buy us out ofthis squeeze is tempting to many people. A recognition of the balance of power in the heart of Europe, the consolidation of Soviet power in the east while we are free to consolidate our own zone in the west. It sounds tempting, because many people are quite content to let things go along the way they are. Even most Germans, that is West Germans, will admit privately that they're prospering quite well and aren't ready to fight for reunification of their country. The Chancellor himself admits it's not realistic right now or for the predictable future. The French, well, they've always felt that half of Germany is better than one. The American people would not easily be stirred up to fight for German unity, and the Russians know this so they push and they prod.

The Western peoples alternately rise in indignation to meet the threat, and then disarm as though the threat had disappeared. We talk of solutions, forgetting that in real life there are really only evolutions, that nothing is ever finally settled. And nothing definitive will be settled here in Geneva or at the summit conference that will probably follow. There are only rare moments in history when anything is settled, and then it is by victory in war, or surrender without war. If we are willing to live with these problems, if we do not seek a victory, but are determined not to surrender, then we can perhaps avoid the disaster of a settlement and get through this round of negotiations. This is Geneva, David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in Washington.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 11, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The foreign ministers today opened their Geneva meeting two and one-half hours behind schedule. The delay was caused by Russian insistence that delegates from East and West Germany be seated at the conference as full participants. The West refused to give in to the Soviet demand. The dispute finally was settled with an agreement that the East and West German delegates would sit at separate tables. They may speak only if none of the Big Four foreign ministers objects. And there was also that dispute over whether the conference table should be rectangular or round. The Russians wanted it round...and that is how it will be. But only one side of the round table will be used.

The first session lasted less than an hour...and was mostly perfunctory. United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold declared the talks open with an appeal for "a peaceful solution to the conflicts." The success of the conference, he said, was of "vital significance."

After the first meeting, a Russian spokesman told reporters that they could look for more precedural problems tomorrow. He declined to elaborate. It would not be surprising, however, if Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko should propose that Poland and Czechoslovakia be represented at the conference...although in the words of a Western diplomat...this would not pose "as grave and fundamental a problem as that which was solved today." (In a few minutes we will switch to Geneva for a direct report).

Two assistant secretaries of state today urged the Senate Foreign Relations Committee to uphold the Administration's aid program to Africa and the Far East. Walter S. Robertson (who is retiring in a few weeks) told the committee that the threat of Red China was never so "broad and ominous" as it is today. In Tibet, he said, the Chinese Communists have shown their Asian neighbors their "true face."

The other State Department expert...J.C. Satterthwaite...said the immediate Communist objective in Africa is to liquidate all Western influence. He said the American aid program is designed to help the people of Africa "tackle their pressing internal problems"...so that the social upheaval there cannot be exploited by the Reds.

King Baudouin of Belgium arrived in the United States today for a 21-day state visit. President Eisenhower met the king personally at Washington National Airport.

Britain today announced officially that it will sell a "reasonable" quantity of arms to Iraq. The announcement was made in Parliament by John Profumo, minister of State for foreign affairs...who said the deal had the approval of the United States. Profumo said Premier Kassem of Iraq had asked for the arms...and that the British government did not think "forcing him to rely solely on the Soviet bloc for arms would contribute to stability in the Middle East." The arms shipment would include aircraft and tanks.

A spokesman for the Afghanistan Embassy in London today denied British press reports that a unit of Soviet troops has been stationed in Afghanistan with the permission of the Afghan government.

President Eisenhower today urged Congress to approve United States participation in a multi-million-dollar inter-American development bank. Bank funds would be used to further the economic development of the Latin American states.

The government announces that the number of persons unemployed dropped by 735-thousand in the past month. This is considerably more than the usual drop in unemployment at this time of year. In addition to the customary spring expansion in agriculture there was a more than seasonal gain in construction and brisk hiring on the part of companies manufacturing hard goods. Also in the past month, the total number of persons holding jobs rose by one million, 185-thousand. This means that 65-million persons now have jobs---a record figure for April.

Secretary of Labor Mitchell calls the report "very good news for our country." But he notes that there are still "soft spots," where people cannot find work. "And in our general rejoicing," he says, "these people must not be forgotten." George Meany, president of the AFL-CIO, has described the April report as "a healthy sign." Meany points to the 3-million, 627-thousand who are still unemployed and says full employment and full production will not be achieved until there is what he calls "some long-overdue government action."

The controversy over the confirmation of Secretary of Commerce Strauss continued today in the Senate Commerce Committee. Strauss told the senators that, if confirmed, he will never keep information from Congress for political reasons.

Now for that first-hand report from Geneva, here is my colleague David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The council of foreign ministers of the four powers met more than 400 times before reaching agreement on an Austrian peace treaty in the month of May, 1955. To judge from the procedures here in Geneva in May, 1959, the foreign ministers may have to meet some 4,000 times more before they can reach a similar treaty granting freedom and independence to united Germany. Today's conference, scheduled to open its doors at 3:30 this afternoon had to be postponed until 6 p.m. because of a dispute over seating the German delegation.

The Russians wanted to seat their East German satellites at the table as full participants. The Western powers refused to accord such formal recognition to the Communist regime. The three Western ministers then met with Russia's Gromyko at 2:30 to try to settle this issue. They've been warned by the U.N. Secretary General, Dag Hammarskjold, that if they did not settle it by at least 4 o'clock it would be too late for his staff to prepare the conference room for a session today. At exactly seven minutes to four British Secretary Selwyn Lloyd came smilingly out of his villa to announce to the assembled reporters that agreement had been reached at the last moment and that the conference would have the room to begin work today at 6 p.m. But it did not begin at 6 p.m. It began at 6:25, for they had still another dispute. The first dispute had been solved when the Russians backed down and agreed to seat the Germans behind the big four and not at the table. The second dispute came over the number of seats to give them with the Russians insisting on alloting ten seats to each German delegation, that is the same number as those occupied by each of the big four. The West, still fighting firmly against any symbol of recognition for the East Germans insisted that they must limit their delegates to six, and once again the Russians gave way and the conference finally began.

What does this extraordinary performance suggest? What coming events can be forecast by the shadows that fell over the Palace of Nations here in Geneva today? First, one might say, it's an object lesson to the Western powers that when they are united and determined to resist that chances are good for the Russians to give way. It's a lesson that might have been learned many times in the last twenty years. From the appeasement of Munich in 1938 to the rape of Prague in 1948 and the successful defense of Quemoy in 1958. Every time an agressor blustered and threatened and the Democratic nations tried to buy him off, freedom was lost. Every time a united, determined alliance resisted aggression the democracies won the fight, or more significantly perhaps in recent years, did not have to fight. In Iran in 1945, in the Greek civil war, in the Italian elections and the Berlin blockade the Western powers faced up to a Soviet challenge and the Soviets backed down and tried to go around some other way. But, one of our greatest difficulties today, in the present situation, and at this conference, is the fact that the Russians now have their hands around the throat of Berlin and can squeeze it at will any time the will of the West to resist seems to be wavering, and the Russians have considerably increased their strength since the last time they made such an attempt. The price they now offer to buy us out of this squeeze is tempting to many people. A recognition of the balance of power in the heart of Europe, the consolidation of Soviet power in the East while we are free to consolidate our own zone in the West. It sounds tempting, because many people are quite content to let things go along the way they are. Even most Germans, that is West Germans, will admit privately that they're prospering quite well and aren't ready to fight for reunification of their country. The Chancellor himself admits it's not realistic right now or for the predictable future. The French, well, they've always felt that half of Germany is better than one. The American people would not easily be stirred up to fight for German unity, and the Russians know this so they push and they prod.

The Western peoples alternately rise in indignation to meet the threat, and then disarm as though the threat had disappeared. We talk of solutions, forgetting that in real life there are really only evolutions, that nothing is ever finally settled. And nothing definitive will be settled here in Geneva or at the summit conference that will probably follow. There are only rare moments in history when anything is settled, and then it is by victory in war, or surrender without war. If we are willing to live with these problems, if we do not seek a victory, but are determined not to surrender, then we can perhaps avoid the disaster of a settlement and get through this round of negotiations. This is Geneva, David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in Washington.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Geneva meeting finally got underway...after the question of furniture design was decided and the Soviet demand for full German participation was set aside. There is no assurance that the Russians will not try again to make East Germany a full participant. As Kin Hubbard once observed, "Nobody ever forgets where he buried a hatchet."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., May 12, 1959

This is the news:

A Capital Airlines turbo-jet has crashed in a thunderstorm near Baltimore, Maryland. An airline spokesman says that all 31 persons on board are feared dead. The aircraft is identified as Flight 75, traveling from New York to Atlanta.

Earlier this afternoon, another Capital airliner Flight 893 crashed and burned while landing at Charleston, West Virginia. Two persons died. None of the 38 who survived are believed to be seriously hurt.

The conference of foreign ministers in Geneva has gone through its second day---with no less disagreement than on the first. For a direct report, we switch at once to Geneva and my colleague, Ernest Leiser.

Tape runs 4:35

Ends on cue: "--to ERM in Washington."

That was the report of my colleague, Ernest Leiser, from the Geneva conference of foreign ministers.

The separate Geneva conference...on the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests...has been recessed "until not later than June eighth." The recess is said to have been necessary because interpreters and other facilities used in these talks were needed by the foreign ministers. The break in the negotiations also will make it possible for delegates to study the various proposals introduced in recent weeks. A Western source predicts "very intensive" negotiation when the talks are resumed.

Prime Minister Macmillan said today that Britain hopes to collaborate with the United States in the exploration of outer space. He told Parliament of a British satellite program, which would concentrate on making measurements in space...using instruments different from those developed by Russia and the United States. Work on these instruments, Macmillan said, will start immediately. And there was set up a British national committee on space research. The United States has issued a statement welcoming the British announcement. The joint Anglo-American effort, it said, "will widen the area of international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space."

The United States today lifted the ban on travel to Communist Bulgaria. / The American legation in Sofia is being re-opened. But, so far, Bulgaria has made no move to re-open its ministry here, although diplomatic relations with Bulgaria were resumed in March.

There were rumors today that "active negotiations" are under way for a truce in Algeria. / No one in an official position in France would comment on these reports. There is no confirmation. But...five days ago...President DeGaulle said that the day was "in sight" when Algeria would be pacified.

An Algerian nationalist leader said in Cairo today, that eventually rebel aircraft will be used against Metropolitan France. The nationalist...who recently visited Red China...said: "France must expect much from us, whenever the number of our friends increase."

Two nominations made by President Eisenhower came under attack today in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Unexpected opposition developed to the appointment of C. Dpuglas Dillon as successor to Christian Herter as under-secretary of state. Until his appointment, Dillon had served as under-secretary for economic affairs...and today Senator Russell Long of Louisiana denounced what he called Dillon's "absolutely foolhardy" administration of the foreign aid program. He and Senator Church of Idaho said there was "no justification" for keeping secret the country-by-country breakdown of military aid. Dillon replied that the amount of secret information was being gradually reduced; he said he favored giving the public all information possible.

Chairman Fulbright criticized the appointment of Ogden Reid, former owner and editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, as ambassador to Israel. Fulbright said he would be "less than frank" if he did not say that in his view ambassadors to the Middle East should be chosen from the career service. Reid appeared before the committee only briefly and will return for a full hearing next week.

Surgeons at Walter Reed Hospital today operated on General Nathan Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and removed the upper lobe of his left lung. The Defense Department says that the general's post-operative condition is "very satisfactory." Tests are being made to determine whether the tissue removed was malignant or benign.

Republican Representative Halleck said today that the new report on employment has given President Eisenhower "a high degree of satisfaction." The report...issued yesterday...showed unemployment down 735-thousand in the past month and employment up by more than a million. Halleck saw reporters after the regular Tuesday meeting of Republican congressional leaders at the White House. He praised the "restrained" policies of the Administration...and said, "We are mighty glad now we didn't push the panic button when some people wanted us to." (A reference to the Democratic demand for new spending programs to reduce unemployment). And Senate Republican Leader Dirksen said the improved job situation brightens the outlook for a balanced budget.

The White House announces that Mr. Eisenhower will hold a news conference tomorrow...and that it will be a half-hour later than usual because of a meeting of the National Security Council.

In New York, the steel negotiations have been recessed until Thursday. Both sides will use the time to draw up new arguments.

Governor Hodges today ordered the National Guard into Hendersonville, North Carolina, to maintain order. / The governor acted after a new outbreak of violence at the two cotton mills, where workers have been on strike since November. / A nursery used by the children of women employes was dynamited during the night...and non-strikers, leaving the plants last night were stoned. Some shots were fired, but no one was hurt.

The prison riot in Fort Pillow, Tennessee, has ended...after a 14-hour siege. / Two hostage guards were released unharmed.

Back in a moment.

Word for Today

In a recent column, Walter Lippmann quoted an unidentified person who had talked to Khrushchev. "What you Americans do not always understand," this person said, "is that the game being played is not poker but chess. In this game, each player sees what pieces the other has, and there is no bluffing about them. What is unknown is how the pieces will be played."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 12, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... The conference of foreign ministers in Geneva has gone through its second day, with no less disagreement than on the first. For a direct report we switch at once to Geneva and my collegue Ernest Leiser.

LEISER: The Big Four foreign ministers at least met on time in their second session of the Geneva conference today. But they advanced no further into the substance of their talks, the future of Germany, than they did yesterday. And, like the goings on here yesterday today's were also a shambles, a polite, still fairly diplomatic shambles, but one which held out little hope for serious negotiations on the issues at hand. Yesterday the charade of the seperate tables where the two German delegations should sit was played out almost to the end until Russia backed down a bit and agreed that the Germans at but very near the round table of the main participants. Today the apparent soviet issued? in the diplomats language was who fought the Nazis hardest and how and where, who lives nearest to the Germans and who therefore the right to sit in judgement on the German problem. What happened here today was a notice served by the Soviets at a news conference in advance of the official session, that they now insisted that satellite Poland and Czechoslovokia take part as full conference members. The Poles and Czechs said the Russian spokesman, had suffered first and most of the smaller countries in Europe in World War II. We answered that nevertheless Germany reamined a responsibility of the powers that conquered it, negotiated its surrender and jointly occupied it after the war, in other words the Big Four. We said it was our job to deal with the intricate problems here. The West let it be known that the Belgians, the Dutch, the Danes, the Luxembourgers were as close neighbors of Germany as the Poles and the Czechs, if it came to that, and that the Norwegians had also suffered very heavily in the war. And Italy, we said, had a special interest in the matter as one of Europe's larger powers. And, we said, if the conference was to get anywhere, the many nations involved in the war against Germany, 45 in all, could not possibly all take part here. The fight occupied virtually the entire hour and 37 minutes of the formal conference session. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, as the Chairman of the meeting, made the pitch that he had telegraphed earlier. The Western ministers devoted their time to replying. We said no, the Poles and Czechs should not come in now, perhaps later on matters of direct concern to them and the others that we then wanted in too. After the session Gromyko's spokesman, Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin, said that there was no reason for a delay on deciding to admit the Poles and the Czechs. He said that the Soviets do not consider this a proceedural question, but one of major political significance. And he expressed the hope, or warning, that the West would be more reasonable tomorrow. What tomorrow will bring except more difficulty is not clear. We want to proceed on the third day of the conference at last to get on with the opening statement of decision by the big foreign ministers. If the U. S. Secretary of State Herter is in the chair this should be done at least until the (indistince) when Gromyko's turn to speak. Then the proceedural free for all may begin all over, and the conference may again be filabustered out of its serious business. To the world, and to nearly 1,200 newsmen here, this may seem like an esthetically trivial and frivolous way to begin talks on a problem that could bring war. And, in a sense, it is. But the Soviet (indistinct) of this obstructionism appears fairly clear. They have since they arrived here and before, have been getting the conference issues prejudged in their favor. The seperates tables gimmick? was intended to get East Germany de facto recognition on any Soviet goal before we ever started talking about it. And by bringing the Poles and Czechs in the Russians wanted to break up the post war notion of the Big Four. Zorin noted specifically tnnight that Moscow had never called this a Big Four conference. The Soviets don't like the three to one ratio agginst them in the Big Four even with their veto. They would seem to want to draw a distinction between themselves and the small two of the Big Four, Britain and France, by raising the stature of of their own Polish and Czech satellites. How badly the Russians want this remains to be seen, perhaps tomorrow. Most of the Western delegates here still think that the Russians will back down on the Role of Poland and Czechoslovakia, just as they backed down on the role of East Germany yesterday. If so it will be, we think, because they are so determined to to go a summit conference that ultimately they'll petition to brush this conference aside. But, at least Russia made an all out grand stand play today, and no one outside the Soviet circles can really say how seriously they mean it. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in Washington.

Trans. 5/28/59 JF

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 12, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

A Capital Airlines turbo-jet has crashed in a thunderstorm near Baltimore, Maryland. An airline spokesman says that all 31 persons on board are feared dead. The aircraft is identified as Flight 75, traveling from New York to Atlanta.

Earlier this afternoon, another Capital airliner Flight 893 crashed and burned while landing at Charleston, West Virginia. Two persons died. None of the 38 who survived are believed to be seriously hurt.

The conference of foreign ministers in Geneva has gone through its second day---with no less disagreement than on the first. For a direct report, we switch at once to Geneva and my colleague Ernest Leiser.

LEISER: The Big Four foreign ministers at least met on time in their second session of the Geneva conference today. But they advanced no further into the substance of their talks, the future of Germany, than they did yesterday. And, like the goings on here yesterday today's were also a shambles, a polite, still fairly diplomatic shambles, but one which held out little hope for serious negotiations on the issues at hand. Yesterday the charade of the separate tables where the two German delegations should sit was played out almost to the end until Russia backed down a bit and agreed that the Germans at but very near the round table of the main participants. Today the apparent Soviet issue dipped in the diplomat's language was who fought the Nazis hardest and how and where, who lives nearest to the Germans and who therefore the right to sit in judgment on the German problem. What happened here today was a notice served by the Soviets at a news conference in advance of the official session, that they now insisted that satellite Poland, and Czechoslovakia take part as full conference members. The Poles And Czechs said the Russian spokesman, had suffered first and most of the smaller countries in Europe in World War II. We answered that nevertheless Germany remained a responsibility of the powers that conquered it, negotiated its surrender and jointly occupied it after the war, in other words the Big Four. We said it was our job to deal with the intricate problems here. The West let it be known that the Belgians, the Dutch, the Danes, the Luxembourgers were as close neighbors of Germany as the Poles and the Czechs, if it came to that, and that the Norweigians had also suffered very heavily in the war. And Italy, we said, had a special interest in the matter as one of Europe's larger powers. And, we said, if the conference was to get anywhere, the many nations involved in the war against Germany, 45 in all, could not possibly all take part here. The fight occupied virtually the entire hour and 37 minutes of the formal conference session. Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, as the Chairman of the meeting, made the pitch that he had telegraphed earlier. The Western ministers devoted their time to replying. We said no, the Poles and Czechs should not come in now, perhaps later on matters of direct concern to them and to the others that we then wanted in too. After the session Gromyko's spokesman, Deputy Foreign Minister Zorin, said that there was no reason for a delay on deciding to admit the Poles and the Czechs. He said that the Soviets do not consider this a procedural question, but one of major political significance. And he expressed the hope, or warning, that the West would be more reasonable tomorrow. What tomorrow will bring except more difficulty is not clear. We want to proceed on the third day of the conference at last to get on with the opening statement of decision by the the foreign ministers. If the U.S. Secretary of State Herter is in the chair this should be done at least until the ? when Gromyko's turn to speak. Then the procedural free for all may begin all over, and the conference may again be filabustered out of its serious business. To the world, and to nearly 1,200 newsmen here, this may seem like an esthetically trivial and frivolous way to begin talks on a problem that could bring war. And, in a sense, it is. But the Soviet (indistinct) of this obstructionism appears fairly clear. They have since they arrived here and before, have been getting the conference issues prejudged in their favor. The separates tables gimmick was intended to get East Germany de facto recognition on any Soviet goal before we ever started talking about it. And by bringing the Poles and Czechs in the Russians wanted to break up the post war notion of the Big Four. Zorin noted specifically tonight that Moscow had never called this a Big Four conference. The Soviets don't like the three to one ratio against them in the Big Four even with their veto. They would seem to want to draw a distinction between themselves and the small two of the Big Four, Britain and France, by raising the stature of their own Polish and Czech satlllites. How badly the Russians want this remains to be seen, perhaps tomorrow. Most of the Western delegates here still think that the Russians will back down on the role of Poland and Czechoslovakia, just as they backed down on the role of East Germany yesterday. If so it will be, we think, because they are so determined to go to the summit conference that ultimately they'll petition to brush this conference aside. But, at least Russia made an all out grand stand play today, and no one outside the Soviet circles can really say how seriously they mean it.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in Washington.

MURROW: That was the report of my colleague, Ernest Leiser, from the Geneva conference of foreign ministers.

The separate Geneva conference...on the prohibition of nuclear weapons tests...has been recessed "until not later than June eighth." The recess is said to have been necessary because interpreters and other facilities used in these talks were needed by the foreign ministers. The break in the negotiations also will make it possible for delegates to study the various proposals introduced in recent weeks. A Western source predicts "very intensive" negotiation when the talks are resumed.

Prime Minister Macmillan said today that Britain hopes to collaborate with the United States in the exploration of outer space, He told Parliament of a British satellite program, which would concentrate on making measurements in space..using instruments different from those developed by Russia and the United States. Work on these instruments, Macmillan said, will start immediately. And there was set up a British national committee on space research. The United States has issued a statement welcoming the British announcement. The joint Anglo-American effort, it said, "will widen the area of international cooperation in the peaceful uses of outer space."

The United States today lifted the ban on travel to Communist Bulgaria. The American legation in Sofia is being re-opened. But, so far, Bulgaria has made no move to re-open its ministry here, although diplomatic relations with Bulgaria were resumed in March.

There were rumors today that "active negotiations" are underway for a truce in Algeria. No one in an official position in France would comment on these reports. There is no confirmation. But...five days ago...President DeGaulle said that the day was "in sight" when Algeria would be pacified.

An Algerian nationalist leader said in Cairo today that eventually rebel aircraft will be used against Metropolitan France. The nationalist...who recently visited Red China...said, "France must expect much from us whenever the number of our friends increase."

Two nominations made by President Eisenhower came under attack today in the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Unexpected opposition developed to the appointment of C. Douglas Dillon as successor to Christian Herter as under-secretary of state. Until his appointment, Dillon had served as under-secretary for economic affairs...and today Senator Russell Long of Louisiana denounced what he called Dillon's "absolutely foolhardy" administration of the foreignaid program. He and Senator Church of Idaho said there was no justification for keeping secret the country-by-country breakdown of military aid. Dillon replied that the amount of secret information was being gradually reduced; he said he favored giving the public all information possible.

Chairman Fulbirght criticized the appointment of Ogden Reid, former owner and editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, as ambassador to Israel. Fulbright said he would be "less than frank" if he did not say that in his view ambassadors to the Middle East should be chosen from the career service. Reid appeared before the committee only briefly and will return for a full hearing next week.

Surgeons at Walter Reed Hospital today operated on General Nathan Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and removed the upper lobe of his left lung. The Defense Deparmtnet says that the general's post-operative condition is "very satisfactory." Tests are being made to determine whether the tissue removed was malignant or benign.

Republican Representative Halleck said today that the new report on employment has given President Eisenhower "a high degree of satissaction." The report...issued yesterday...showed unemployment down 735-thousand in the past month and employment up by more than a million. Halleck saw reporters after the regular Tuesday meeting of Republican congressional leaders at the White House. He praised the "restrained" policies of the Administration...and said, "We are mighty glad now we didn't push the panic button when some people wanted us to." (a reference to the Democratic demand for new spending programs to reduce unemployment). And Senate Repbulican Leader Dirksen said the improved job situation brightens the outlook for a balanced budget.

The White House announces that Mr. Eisenhower will hold a news conference tomorrow...and that it will be a half-hour later than usual because of a meeting of the National Security Council.

In New York, the steel negotiations have been recessed until Thursday. Both sides will use the time to draw up new arguments.

Governor Hodges today ordered the National Guard into Hendersonville, North Carolina, to maintain order. The governor acted after a new outbreak of violence at the two cotton mills, where workers have been on strike since November. A nursery used by the children of women employes was dynamited during the night... and non-strikers leaving the plants last night were stoned. Some shots were fired, but no one was hurt.

The prison riot in Fort Pillow, Tennessee, has ended...after a 14-hour siege. Two hostage guards were released unharmed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In a recent column, Walter Lippmann quoted an unidentified person who had talked to Khrushchev. "What you Americans do not always understand," this person said, "is that the game being played is not poker but chess. In this game, each player sees what pieces the other has, and there is no bluffing about them. What is unknown is how the pieces will be played."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 13, 1959

This is the news:

The foreign ministers met for the third day in Geneva...but it was the first day, they were able to get down to the business at hand. For a direct report, we switch to Geneva and Dan Schorr.

(Tape runs 2:07
Returns on cue: "--to ERM in Washington."

That was my colleague, Dan Schorr, reporting on today's foreign ministers meeting...which lasted for nearly three hours.

Here in Washington today, the first question [redacted] put to President Eisenhower at his news conference, concerned the Geneva conference. How, the President was asked, did he "size up" the Russian tactics so far? Here is what he said:

Tape runs 1:10
Ends on cue: "--that both sides have agreed are important."

Mr. Eisenhower was asked if he would "look favorably" on a visit to this country by Premier Khrushchev. The president said there had been "nothing official whatsoever" about Khrushchev coming to the United States. And although the question came up later in the news conference, he would not say whether he "looked favorably" on such a visit.

Mr. Eisenhower ASKED Congress to take "sensible, reasonable action" to cut government spending. A balanced budget, he said, is the "minimum" target. He said we should be getting some surpluses, so that in these prosperous times we can reduce the national debt. In this, he said, industry and labor also can play a major role.

The President chided Congress for not acting on legislation he had requested for increasing the federal gasoline tax, for granting the F.H.A. more authority for guaranteeing home mortgages, and for dealing with the growing surplus of wheat. He sent Congress a special message...urging prompt action on these measures.

The House Agriculture Committee today approved a bill designed to cut back wheat production without substantially reducing farm income. It is a stop-gap measure...unlikely to satisfy the Administration.

After the news conference, it was announced that President Eisenhower will fly to Denver this week-end and visit the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs. Mrs. Eisenhower already is in Denver... visiting her mother...and will return to Washington with the President on Sunday. Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will make a series of public appearances in New York.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the President's appointment of Douglas Dillon as under-secretary of state. Senator Russell Long of Louisiana cast the only dissenting vote, and confirmation by the Senate is now virtually assured.

The State Department told Congress today that it wants to create a special staff within the department to help this country meet Russia's economic threat. Congress was asked to provide money so that these experts can make a continuing, full-time study of the Soviet offensive in the economic field.

It was "standing room only" at two House subcommittee hearings today...when John L. Lewis testified on pending labor legislation. The mine workers president had lost none of his old fire. / He denounced the labor reform bill passed by the Senate as "punitive and oppressive." / All pending labor bills, he said, stem from the "rich, wealthy and powerful"... men with "axes to grind". He said Congress is trying to regulate the morals of one segment of society, labor. / And he predicted it would not work. / "Can the Bankers Association," he asked, "guarantee the probity of all bankers?" / Lewis accused the Senate Rackets Committee of reviving the principle of the star chamber...with, he said, "a slight touch of the Spanish inquisition added." / He said no new laws are needed...that it is only necessary for present laws to be properly enforced.

Investigators for the Civil Aeronautics Board say that the Capital Airline accident...in which 31 persons died yesterday... appears to have been caused by "an explosive force" at between 7-thousand and 9-thousand feet. The origin of this "explosive force" has not yet been determined. It could have been a sudden decompression---not necessarily an explosion in the usual sense.

Swing May 13

¶ It has needed only three days of the foreign ministers' meeting in Geneva to show how little the public in the West understands that there is a new pattern for East-West conferences. Diplomatic negotiations ~~in past decades and centuries were~~ used to be different. They had a stiff formality about them, and ~~they~~ worked with agreed rules of decorum. They could and did bristle with ~~much~~ antagonisms, but the art of diplomacy was to press and argue politely, until one side gave way in response to the greater power of the other side, or if both sides felt equally strong, they compromised the issues and went home.

¶ But in the world of the nuclear stale mate, the ultimate power of both sides ~~has~~ is about the same, and superiority at the conference table lies in other factors. One factor is the merit of the cases being presented. But another is the skill in putting on a drama for the onlooking world.

¶ The West came to Geneva this time concentrated on the merit of its case as to Berlin and Germany. It had conviction and unity, ~~and it counted on making a good~~

~~impression on world opinion~~. But ~~the West~~ it did not have any eye-catching plays ready for the rise of the curtain. The Soviet Union did. It already has produced two of them and there may be more to follow.

¶ The Russians began by demanding the presence of East Germany as an equal at the conference table. Next they demanded the same status for Poland and Czechoslovakia. As to East Germany the West won at least a narrow victory. ~~It had been agreed before ~~to~~ the conference began that East and West Germany should ~~be~~ send observers. The West insisted that these should not exceed six in number for each delegation and that they should be seated at subordinate tables. Had they been placed at the head table that would have meant de factor recognition of East Germany, and the Kremlin would have won a big objective before negotiations ever had begun. The West stood firm and Gromyko acceded. He had to, or the conference might never had started.

¶ The odd fact about the Western success is that it did not ~~register~~ weigh heavily in the scales of propaganda. Nobody expected the East Germans to be seated as equals, so there was no ~~surprise or~~ elation over the result. But propaganda-wise ~~this was~~ this turned out to be quite a Soviet success. The whole world for the first time had been made to think about the recognition of East Germany, and ~~if~~ though it was ~~to~~ not achieved this time it had been brought a great deal nearer. The East Germans were delighted, the West Germans depressed.

The move to bring Poland and Czechoslovakia to the conference table was a similar play. What the demand really meant was that the East wants to be represented at East-West conferences by an equal number of countries. The three-to-one ratio of the Four-power set-up spells inferiority. Inferiority is what Khrushchev is dedicated to abolish. Gromyko tried to justify his demand on the ground that ~~the~~ Poland and Czechoslovakia ~~countries~~ had suffered greatly from Hitler. The West had already said it might consult these two countries, also Italy, Norway, the Netherlands and others who suffered from Hitler, if and when issues affecting them came up.

On this, ~~issue~~ too, Gromyko ~~can~~ could afford to yield. ~~again.~~ He will have registered what he set out to register, a desire for ~~equality~~ equal status. And he will have given assurance to the people of Poland and Czechoslovakia that the Soviet honors their national ~~rights~~ identity. He will have annoyed the West, but it ~~was~~ has been worth it to him.

So this seems to be the new design for conferences. The questions of substance will come up in due course, and since the power of the two sides is pretty equal, will probably result in compromise. But these dramatic sideshows have their value. The Kremlin has prepared them carefully and they have advanced Soviet interests. Obviously this is a technique both sides can use. Maybe the West will have to revise the stress it puts on old-fashioned dignity and do some unconventional courting of public opinion of its own.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

Word for Today

The foreign ministers are faced with problems, none of which will easily be solved. Abraham Lincoln once gave some advice well suited to diplomats. "You have heard," said Lincoln, "of how the Illinois farmer disposed of the log that was too wet to burn, too big to haul away, and too knotty to split? He plowed around it."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, May 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

MURROW: This is the news. The foreign ministers met for the third day in Geneva. It was the first day they were able to get down to the business at hand. For a direct report we switch to Geneva and Dan Schorr.

SCHORR: Russia's Gromyko today renewed his effort to drive Poland and Czechoslovokia into the foreign ministers conference. He ran again into united western opposition, and as expected, he gave up, at least for now with a statement that he considered the issue still to be on the agenda. There the conference now in its third day finally got down to business, with the Big Four foreign ministers making their opening statements. Gromyko speaking for more than half an hour, longer than all the three Western delegates combined. Gromyko gave a restatement of the Soviet position of a peace treaty with two Germanies, and a new status for West Berlin, but worded in conciliatory terms. He ugged concentration on those problems now, in effect asking that the Western package, not yet presented, be broken up. He solicitated suggestions on Berlin from the West. That he embraced the idea of British Prime Minister Macmillan for a series of summit conferences. The expectation that there will be a summit conference appears to underlie all three Western statements. But, Secretary of State Herter released three requirements for that summit. Positive agreements, the narrowing of differences, and preparation of constructive proposals for a top level meeting. Britain's Lloyd, summing up for the West after Gromyko said that even if one or two of the objectives is reached a summit meeting would be justified. Lloyd defended the Western package plan, saying that European security is closely linked with the German problem. He denied Gromyko's claim that the pace of Western rearmament had been speeded up. A sharper statement was that of Couve de Murville of France, himself bedridden with flu readied his absence by a deputy. De Gaulle's representative denounced Russia for demands and threats in the past six months, said the Kremlin had created an atmosphere of tension, but also said there'll be a summit conference if progress is made by the foreign ministers. A Soviet spokesman said later the tone of all speeches was favorable except the French one. But the stage was set for tomorrow when the West plans to unveil its package program. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in Washington.

Trans. 6/2/59 JF

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, May 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: How, the President was asked did he size up the Russian tactics so far. Here is what he said.

EISENHOWER: It's very difficult to see behind someone else's forehead, and you're not quite sure what they are thinking, Now, for ourselves we have been very anxious to have any negotiations that might be called to be truthful, to avoid using them as propaganda platforms and merely as ways and means of repeating our stories or anybody else's stories to the world. And this struggle in this particular ... of this particular time does seem to have some that purpose behind it. However, I am very hopeful that we can get some of this behind us now very quickly, and get to the business of trughful negotiations on the problems that both sides have agreed are important.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 13, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The foreign ministers met for the third day in Geneva...but it was the first day they were able to get down to the business at hand. For a direct report, we switch to Geneva and Dan Schorr.

SCHORR: Russia's Gromyko today renewed his effort to drive Poland and Czechoslovakia into the foreign ministers conference. He ran again into united western opposition, and as expected, he gave up, at least for now with a statement that he considered the issue still to be on the agenda. There the conference now in its third day finally got down to business, with the Big Four foreign ministers making their opening statements. Gromyko speaking for more than half an hour, longer than all the three Western delegates combined. Gromyko gave a restatment of the Soviet position of a peace treaty with two Germanies, and a new status for West Berlin, but worded in conciliatory terms. He urged concentration on these problems now, in effect asking that the Western package, not yet presented, be broken up. He solicitated suggestions on Berlin from the West. That he embraced the idea of British Prime Minister Macmillanfor a series of summit conferences. The expectation that there will be a summit conference appears to underlie all three Western statements. But, Secretary of State Herter released three requirements for that summit. Positive agreements, the narrowing of differences, and preparation of constructive proposals for a top level meeting. Britain's Lloyd, summing up for the West after Gromyko said that even if one or two of the objectives is reached a summit meeting would be justified. Lloyd defended the Western package plan, saying that European security is closely linked with the German problem. He denied Gromyko's claim that the pace of Western rearmament had been speeded up. A sharper statement was that of Couve de Murville of France, himself bedridden with flu readied? his absence by a deputy. DeGaulle's representative denounced Russia for demands and threats in the past six months, said the Kremlin had created an atmosphere of tension, but also said there'll be a summit conference if progress is made by the foreign ministers. A Soviet spokesman said later the tone of all speeches was favorable except the French one. But, the stage was set for tomorrow when the West plans to unveil its package program.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in Washington.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Dan Schorr, reporting on today's foreign ministers meeting...which lasted for nearly three hours.

Here in Washington today, the first question put to President Eisenhower at his news conference concerned the Geneva conference. How, the President was asked, did he "size up" the Russian tactics so far? Here is what he said:

EISENHOWER: It's very difficult to see behind someone else's forehead, and you're not quite sure what they are thinking. Now, for ourselves we have been very anxious to have any negotiations that might be called to be truthful, to avoid using them as propaganda platforms and merely as ways and means of repeating our stories or anybody else's stories to the world. And this struggle in this particular...of this particular time does seem to have some that purpose behind it. However, I am very hopeful that we can get some of this behind us now very quickly, and get to the business of truthful negotiations on the problems that both sides have agreed are important.

MURROW: Mr. Eisenhower was asked if he would "look favorably" on a visit to this country by Premier Khrushchev. The president said there had been "nothing official whatsoever" about Khrushchev coming to the United States. And although the question came up later in the news conference, he would not say whether he "looked favorably" on such a visit.

Mr. Eisenhower asked Congress to take "sensible, reasonable action" to cut government spending. A balanced budget, he said, is the "minimum" target. He said we should be getting some surpluses, so that in these prosperous times we can reduce the national debt. In this, he said, industry and labor also can play a major role.

The President chided Congress for not acting on legislation he had requested for increasing the federal gasoline tax, for granting the F. H. A. more authority for guaranteeing home mortgages, and for dealing with the growing surplus of wheat. He sent Congress a special message...urging prompt action on these measures.

The House Agriculture Committee today approved a bill designed to cut back wheat production without substantially reducing farm income. It is a stop-gap measure...unlikely to satisfy the Administration.

After the news conference, it was announced that President Eisenhower will fly to Denver this week-end and visit the Air Force Academy at Colorado Springs. Mrs. Eisenhower already is in Denver...visiting her mother...and will return to Washington with the President on Sunday. Tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will make a series of public appearances in New York.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the President's appointment of Douglas Dillon as under-secretary of state. Senator Russell Long of Louisiana cast the only dissenting vote, and confirmation by the Senate is now virtually assured.

The State Department told Congress today that it wants to create a special staff within the department to help this country meet Russia's economic threat. Congress was asked to provide money so that these experts can make a continuing, full-time study of the Soviet offensive in the economic field.

It was "standing room only" at two House subcommittee hearings today... when John L. Lewis testified on pending labor legislation. The mine workers president had lost none of his old fire. He denounced the labor reform bill passed by the Senate as "punitive and oppressive." All pending labor bills, he said, stem from the "rich, wealthy and powerful"...men with "axes to grind". He said Congress is trying to regulate the morals of one segment of society, labor. And he predicted it would not work. "Can the Bankers Association," he asked, "guarantee the probity of all bankers?" Lewis accused the Senate Rackets Committee of reviving the principle of the star chamber...with, he said, "a slight touch of the Spanish inquisition added." He said no new laws are needed...that it is only necessary for present laws to be properly enforced.

Investigators for the Civil Aeronautics Board say that the Capital Airline accident...in which 31 persons died yesterday...appears to have been caused by "an explosive force" at between 7-thousand and 9-thousand feet. The origin of this "explosive force" has not yet been determined. It could have been a sudden decompression ---not necessarily an explosion in the usual sense.

It has needed only three days of the foreign ministers' meeting in Geneva to show how little the public in the West understands that there is a new pattern for East-West conferences. Diplomatic negotiations used to be different. They had a stiff formality about them, and worked with agreed rules of decorum. They could and did bristle with antagonisms, but the art of diplomacy was to press and argue politely, until one side gave way in response to the greater power of the other side, or if both sides felt equally strong, they compromised the issues and went home.

The West came to Geneva this time concentrated on the merit of its case as to Berlin and Germany. It had conviction and unity. But it did not have any eye-catching plays ready for the rise of the curtain. The Soviet Union did. It already has produced two of them and there may be more to follow.

The Russians began by demanding the presence of East Germany as an equal at the conference table. Next they demanded the same status for Poland and Czechoslovakia. As to East Germany, the West won at least a narrow victory.

The odd fact about the Western success is that it did not weigh heavily in the scales of propaganda. Nobody expected the East Germans to be seated as equals, so there was no elation over the result. But propaganda - wise this turned out to be quite a Soviet success. The whole world for the first time had been made to think about the recognition of East Germany, and though it was not achieved this time it had been brought a great deal nearer. The East Germans were delighted, the West Germans depressed.

The move to bring Poland and Czechoslovakia to the conference table was a similar play. What the demand really meant was that the East wants to be represented at East-West conferences by an equal number of countries.

On this, too, Gromyko could afford to yield. He will have registered what he set out to register, a desire for equal status. And he will have given assurance to the people of Poland and Czechoslovakia that the Soviet honors their national identity. He will have annoyed the West, but it has been worth it to him. So this seems to be the new design for conferences. Thequestions of substance will come up in due course, and since the power of the two sides is pretty equal, will probably result in compromise. Maybe the West will have to revise the stress it puts on old-fashioned dignity and do some unconventional courting of public opinion of its own.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from George Bryan about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN:

The foreign ministers are faced with problems, none of which will easily be solved. Abraham Lincoln once gave some advice well suited to diplomats. "You have heard," said Lincoln, "of how the Illinois farmer disposed of the log that was too wet to burn, too big to haul away, and too knotty to split? He plowed around it."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 15, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said tonight that science and technology "are the cornerstone of American security and our program for a just peace." To neglect this fact, he said, would be folly. And he proposed (in the interest of furthering basic research) that the federal government underwrite the cost of building a new 100-million-dollar "atom smasher" at Stanford University. The apparatus...some two miles long...would produce in the neighborhood of 10 to 15 billion electron volts. Mr. Eisenhower said the new national research facility would be "by far the largest of its kind ever built." And he estimated that it would take six years to construct. Stanford University announced plans for the research unit about a year ago. What was new in the President's statement was his plan to ask Congress for the money for the project. The cost, he said, was too great to be borne privately.

—>

The President spoke at a symposium on basic research, here in New York. Earlier in the day, he "broke ground" for a new cultural center and visited the World Trade Fair...now being held in the New York Coliseum. #

Mr. Eisenhower also had a private conversation with United Steelworkers President David McDonald. / The steelworkers and the major steel producers are in the process of negotiating a new contract. / Mr. Eisenhower has repeatedly called on labor and management to remember the danger of inflation in fixing wages and prices. / It was thought that at today's meeting, the President might have touched on this subject, but Mr. McDonald says that no economic problems were discussed. / News Secretary Hagerty had said earlier that the visit would be "essentially social".

Senate hearings on the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce ended today. / The Commerce Committee...which has been hearing testimony for the past 16 days...will vote next Tuesday, whether to recommend confirmation. / Today, Democratic Senator Anderson again accused Strauss...while chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission...of following "a pattern of deviousness and deceit." Anderson is chairman of the joint congressional committee on atomic energy. Strauss has testified that he had no trouble getting along with other chairmen of the joint committee. And today he read a list of the names of scientists who, he said, had praised his work.

The Defense Department said today that General Nathan Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was found (when operated upon last Tuesday) to be suffering from lung cancer. The entire diseased portion of the lung was removed, and there was no evidence that the cancer had spread. The Defense Department said that General Twining "continues to make very satisfactory progress"...and that he should be able to return to his duties in about six weeks.

Vice Admiral Rickover said in a talk at the National Press Club today that there should be "more heresy" in the military services. Teamwork, Rickover said, is "not what it is cracked up to be." And he advocated that the three armed services be merged. "As it is," he said, "each service thinks it should defend the United States all by itself." The admiral who guided the development of the first nuclear submarine said it would make no difference to him if Navy submarines, designed for launching Polaris missiles, were placed under the Strategic Air Command. The important thing was the defense capacity of the United States.

In Geneva today, the Western powers formally submitted their "package plan" for settling the German question and reducing tensions. For a direct report, we switch to Geneva and my colleague, Charles Collingwood.

(Tape runs 4:45
Ends on cue: "---Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.")

That was Charles Collingwood reporting the developments which took place in Geneva today on two fronts.

The Moscow radio tonight broadcast a speech by Premier Khrushchev...saying that the course proposed by Russia for solving the Berlin problem is "the only wise path." West Berlin, he said, must become a "free city". Khrushchev also is quoted as saying that the reunification of Germany is something which the leaders of East and West Germany must decide for themselves.

It is announced that Secretary of State Herter will fly to Rome on Saturday for consultation with the Italian government. He will be back in Geneva in time for the resumption of the ministers conference on Monday.

The Senate tonight passed and sent to the White House a measure carrying 150-million dollars of the 225-million President Eisenhower had requested for loans..in the next two months.. to under-developed countries.

The government of Iraq today formally renounced the protection granted it under the Eisenhower Doctrine. Henceforth, Premier Kassem said, Iraq "will defend its soil with its own force."

In Congress, the House Rules Committee has reported out the Democratic-sponsored housing bill...which it has bottled up for more than a month. It is a 2-billion-dollar measure, calling for expenditure of much more money that President Eisenhower has requested. Provision is made for the increased authority Mr. Eisenhower wants for the F.H.A., for the insuring of home mortgages. But it also includes more than a billion dollars for public housing...something the President does not want.

The House Education Committee today sent to the full House a 4-billion, 400-million-dollar "aid to education" bill. The program would be spread out over four years, and federal grants would be used to help local communities pay teachers and build new schools. Republicans say the bill "hasn't a prayer".

This is Ed Murrow, etc. Back in a moment

George Bryan

Word for Today

Some years ago...in the House of Commons...Winston Churchill counseled against discouragement in negotiating with the Russians. He said: "It would, I think, be a mistake to assume that nothing can be settled with the Soviet Union unless all has been settled. Settlement of two or three of our difficulties would be an important gain."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, May 14, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

MURROW: For a direct report we switch to Geneva and my collegue, Charles Collingwood.

COLLINGWOOD: The Western foreign ministers gave Mr. Gromyko something to chew on today, but even before he had had a mouthful, he said he didn't like the flavor. The Western package plan, the well known Western package plan, as the Soviet spokesman insists on referring to it as in the well known enemy of the masses, the was denounced by Mr. Gromyko before it was even offered, and the Soviet spokesman repeated repeated those strictures again today, although he also said that he would comment in more detail after they had had a chance to studyit. The plan will bear study by the Russians, for on the face of it, at least it is very plausable. Moreover, it contains certain concessions to the Soviet point of view. Let's take a look at what Secretary of State Herter proposed on behalf of his Western collegues today.

In its broadest terms, the plan calls for German reunification on the basis of free elections, which is something we've always insisted on. But the elections come at the end, not at the beginning of the process. In between the plan forsees first of all, the unification of the city of Berlin as a pilot for the whole project, and then a period to two and a half years while East and West Germans draw together and work together through a mixed German committee. Then there would be an election, then a constitution. Berlin would become the capitol of Germany again, and finally there would be a peace treaty the Four Powers and the new unified German state. Now, concurrently with this progress on the political side, and intimately tied into the package with it, stage by stage, the West would like to see progress toward easing the military threat in the center of Europe. Now, the stages on this begin a limitation of the Four Powers' Armies and armaments in the German area, inspection against surprise attack, and the renunciation of neuclear weapons by Germany, Poland and Czechoslovokia. Next would come a zone in which forces on each side would be reduced, all this rather loosely worded. The new German government would in the end have the right to require foreign forces to leave its territory. That's the gist of the Western package, although, as you can imagine, it contains a lot of fine print. The main lines of concessions to the Russians are, first, the postponement of free elections. Second, the mixed German commission which brings the East Germans into direct negotiations on the future of Germany, and thirdly, the disarmament and security ideas which with their talk of zones and arms limitations contain the echoes of the disengagement thesis. These concessions may make the Western plan harder for the Russians to attack, but few are really under the illusion that they will make it much easier for them to accept. The Western proposal contains a lot of things that the Russians just won't take. First of all the bold, almost impudent suggestion that we should start right now with Berlin, as the Russians have said we should start all along, but that we start by unifying Berlin by free elections, and then let it run itself under Four power supervision on the Austrian model. The Russians aren't going to like that, if only because it would take from their grasp the lever by which they can always create a crisis in Berlin in order to put pressure on the Allies. There are a lot of other things they won't like too. But there are some things which they may pick out and want to talk about. Then, we'll see how far the West is willing to break up the package which it now says is indissoluable, and to negotiate on isolated items. At the moment Mr. Gromyko is contenting himself with attacking the whole thing root and branch. Tomorrow he may present a package plan of his own, and then we may know a little better what areas there are where progress might be made. Meanwhile, there was a development in Geneva today in an area where progress has been made, neuclear testing. Herter, Gromyko and Lloyd, representing the three powers with neuclear weapons , met this mornigg to discuss the work of the neuclear testing ban conference which has been meeting here in Geneva for three months, or five months, really. Herter suggested a scientific conference to work on presently undectable explosions, but Gromyko proposed a test ban treaty right now on the basis of the substantial agreement on many points which has already been reached and in the spirit he said of the letter that President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan had been exchanging with Mr. Krushchev on the subject. More than one correspondent here has the suspicion that one of the surprise byproducts of this foreign ministers conference on Germany might be an agreement to limit neuclear testing. And this might even be the sign of progress which would be offered to justify a trip to the summit. But between now and then there's going to be an awful lot of talking on an awful lot of things. Now, back to Ed. Murrow in New York.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 14, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower said tonight that science and technology "are the cornerstone of American security and our program for a just peace." To neglect this fact, he said, would be folly. And he proposed (in the interest of furthering basic research) that the federal government underwrite the cost of building a new 100-million-dollar atomsmasher at Stanford University. The apparatus...some two miles long...would produce in the neighborhood of 10 to 15 million electron volts. Mr. Eisenhower said the new national research facility would be "by far the largest of its kind ever built." And he estimated that it would take six years to construct. Stanford University announced plans for the research unit about a year ago. What was new in the President's statement was his plan to ask Congress for the money for the project. The cost, he said, was too great to be borne privately.

The President spoke at a symposium on basic research, here in New York. Earlier in the day, he broke ground for a new cultural center and visited the World Trade Fair...now being held in the New York Coliseum.

Mr. Eisenhower also had a private conversation with United Steelworkers President David McDonald. The steelworkers and the major steel producers are in the process of negotiating a new contract. Mr. Eisenhower has repeatedly called on labor and management to remember the danger of inflation in fixing wages and prices. It was thought that at today's meeting the President might have touched on this subject, but Mr. McDonald says that no economic problems were discussed. News Secretary Hagerty had said earlier that the visit would be "essentially social."

Senate hearings on the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce ended today. The Commerce Committee...which has been hearing testimony for the past 16 days...will vote next Tuesday whether to recommend confirmation. Today, Democratic Senator Anderson again accused Strauss...while chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission....of following "a pattern of deviousness and deceit." Anderson is chairman of the joint congressional committee on atomic energy. Strauss has testified that he had no trouble getting along with other chairmen of the joint committee. And today he read a list of the names of scientists who, he said, had praised his work.

The Defense Department said today that General Nathan Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, was found (when operated upon last Tuesday) to be suffering from lung cancer. The entire diseased portion of the lung was removed, and there was no evidence that the cancer had spread. The Defense Department said that General Twining "continues to make very satisfactory progress"... and that he should be able to return to his duties in about six weeks.

Vice Admiral Rickover said in a talk at the National Press Club today that there should be "more heresy" in the military services. Teamwork, Rickover said, is "not what it is cracked up to be." And he advocated that the three armed services be merged. "As it is," he said, "each service thinks it should defend the United States all by itself." The admiral who guided the development of the first nuclear submarine said it would make no difference to him if Navy submarines designed for launching Polaris missiles, were placed under the Strategic Air Command. The important thing was the defense capacity of the United States.

In Geneva today, the Western powers formally submitted their "package plan" for settling the German question and reducing tensions. For a direct report, we switch to Geneva and my colleague, Charles Collingwood.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD: The Western foreign ministers gave Mr. Gromyko something to chew on today, but even before he had had a mouthful, he said he didn't like the flavor. The Western package plan, the well-known Western package plan, as the Soviet spokesman insists on referring to it as in the well-known enemy of the masses, the plan was denounced by Mr. Gromyko before it was even offered, and the Soviet spokesman repeated those strictures again today, although he also said that he would comment in more detail after they had had a chance to study it. The plan will bear study by the Russians, for on the face of it, at least it is very plausable. Moreover, it contains certain concessions to the Soviet point of view. Let's take a look at what Secretary of State Herter proposed on behalf of his Western colleagues today.

In its broadest terms, the plan calls for German reunification on the basis of free elections, which is something we've always insisted on. But the elections come at the end, not at the beginning of the process. In between the plan foresees first of all, the unification of the city of Berlin as a pilot for the whole project, and then a period to two and a half years while East and West Germans draw together and work together through a mixed German committee. Then there would be an election, then a constitution. Berlin would become the capitol of Germany again, and finally there would be a peace treaty the Four Powers and the new unified German state. Now, concurrently with this progress on the political side, and intimately tied into the package with it, stage by stage, the West would like to see progress toward easing the military threat in the center of Europe. Now, the stages on this begin a limitation of the Four Powers Armies and armaments in the German area, inspection against surprise attack, and the renunciation of nuclear weapons by Germany, Poland and Czechoslovakia. Next would come a zone in which forces on each side would be reduced, all this rather loosely worded. The new German government would in the end have the right to require foreign forces to leave its terrot ry. That's the gist of the Western package, although, as you can imagine, it contains a lot of fine print. The main lines of concessions to the Russians are, first, the postponement of free elections. Second, the mixed German commission which brings the East Germans into direct negotiations on the future of Germany, and thirdly, the disarmament and security ideas which with their talk of zones and arms limitations contain the echoes of the disengagement thesis. These concessions may make the Western plan harder for the Russians to attack, but few are really under the illusion that they will make it much easier for them to accept. The Western proposal contains a lot of things that the Russians just won't take. First of all the bold, almost impudent suggestion that we should start right now with Berlin, as the Russians have said we should start all along, but that we start by unifying Berlin by free elections, and then let it run itself under Four Power supervision on the Austrian model. The Russians aren't going to like that, if only because it would take from their grasp the lever by which they can always create a crisis in Berlin in order to put pressure on the Allies. There are a lot of other things they won't like too. But there are some things which they may pick out and want to talk about. Then, we'll see how far the West is willing to break up the package which it now says is indissoluble, and to negotiate on isolated items. At the moment Mr. Gromyko is contenting himself with attacking the whole thing root and branch. Tomorrow he may present a package plan of his own, and then we may know a little better what areas there are where progress might be made. Meanwhile, there was a development in Geneva today in an area where progress has been made, nuclear testing. Herter, Gromyko and Lloyd, representing the three powers with nuclear weapons, met this morning to discuss the work of the nuclear testing ban conference which has been meeting here in Geneva for three months, or five months, really. Herter suggested a scientific conference to work on presently undetectable explosions, but Gromyko proposed a test ban treaty right now on the basis of the substantial agreement on many points which has already been reached and in the spirit he said of the letter that President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan had been exchanging with Mr. Khrushchev on the subject. More than one correspondent here has the suspicion that one of the surprise by-products of this foreign ministers conference on Germany might be an agreement to limit nuclear testing. And this might even be the sign of progress which would be offered to justify a trip to the summit. But between now and then there's going to be an awful lot of talking on an awful lot of things. Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Charles Collingwood reporting the developments which took place in Geneva today on two fronts.

The Moscow radio tonight broadcast a speech by Premier Khrushchev... saying that the course proposed by Russia for solving the Berlin problem is "the only wise path." West Berlin, he said, must become a "free city." Khrushchev also is quoted as saying that the reunification of Germany is something which the leaders of East and West Germany must decide for themselves.

It is announced that Secretary of State Herter will fly to Rome on Saturday for consultation with the Italian government. He will be back in Geneva in time for the resumption of the ministers conference on Monday.

The Senate tonight passed and sent to the White House a measure carrying 150-million dollars of the 225-million President Eisenhower had requested for loans...in the next two months...to under-developed countries.

The government of Iraq today formally renounced the protection granted it under the Eisenhower Doctrine. Henceforth, Premier Kassem said, Iraq "will defend its soil with its own force."

In Congress, the House Rules committee has reported out the Democratic sponsored housing bill...which it has bottled up for more than a month. It is a 2-billion dollar measure, calling for expenditure of much more money than President Eisenhower has requested. Provision is made for the increased authority Mr. Eisenhower wants for the F.H.A. for the insuring of home mortgages. But it also includes more than a billion dollars for public housing...something the President does not want.

The House Education Committee today sent to the full House a 4-billion, 400-million dollar aid to education bill. The program would be spread out over four years, and federal grants would be used to help local communities pay teachers and build new schools. Republicans say the bill "hasn't a prayer."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Some years ago...in the House of Commons...Winston Churchill counseled against discouragement in negotiating with the Russians. He said: "It would, I think, be a mistake to assume that nothing can be settled with the Soviet Union unless all has been settled. Settlement of two or three of our difficulties would be an important gain."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 15, 1959

This is the news:

Today, at the foreign ministers conference, Russia presented a plan for Germany diametrically opposed to the "peace program" submitted yesterday by Secretary of State Herter. What Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko did was present...again...the draft treaty which the West rejected in January. The proposals re-introduced by Gromyko call for the conclusion of separate peace treaties with East and West Germany and the conversion of West Berlin into a demilitarized "free city". West Berlin would thus be "free". (.and without the protection of Western garrison forces.) .until such a time as Germany is reunited. All foreign troops would be withdrawn from German soil. West Germany would have to pull out of NATO...and Germany would, in effect, renounce all claim to those former German territories now administered by Poland. [redacted] The two Germanies would...themselves...work out a program of confederation. / Gromyko hoped the Russian plan would serve as "a useful basis for discussion." / He ended his 45-minute speech by urging the Western foreign ministers "not to be pessimistic" on the prospects of the conference. Nevertheless, the immediate reaction of the American delegation was disappointment that Gromyko had said nothing new. / (In a few minutes, we will switch to Geneva for a direct report).

→

The foreign ministers conference is now in recess until Monday. Tomorrow, Secretary Herter will fly to Rome to confer with Italian leaders. And the French foreign minister is flying back to Paris to report to President DeGaulle.

The United States has sent Russia a formal note...proposing that talks be undertaken looking toward an extension of the cultural exchange program. [redacted] The note suggests that the negotiations get under way late next month or early in July. Soviet Ambassador Menshikov said in Washington today that his government would favor continuing the program---probably, he said, for another two years.

Japan told Russia today...in a formal note...that it will "not consent" to the introduction of nuclear weapons on its territory. The Japanese said, at the same time, that they cannot adopt a policy of neutrality in world affairs. Japan rejected the Soviet charge that its security treaty with the United States was a threat to peace.

The State Department today reported "some further decline" in the general condition of former Secretary of State Dulles. "Mr. Dulles' pneumonia," it said, "has not completely resolved."

Democratic Senator Mansfield proposed today that all foreign aid grants---that is to say, "gifts"---be discontinued within the next three years. Mansfield said in a Senate speech that he would have the outright grants replaced by [redacted] loans...and that in his view the International Cooperation Administration, now a semi-autonomous agency, should be brought completely under the direction of the Department of State. The foreign aid program, he said, needs "a thorough-going reform." "Otherwise, a tide of public reaction may well inundate both the good and bad in foreign aid the essential and the non-essential."

The House Appropriations Committee recommended today that the Agriculture Department be given 3-billion, 900-million dollars to pay for its operations in the next fiscal year. / This is 142-million dollars less than the Administration had asked for. / Most of the cut was made in funds requested for the Commodity Credit Corporation. / The committee said the agency could easily get the money it needs by selling surplus cotton on the world market. / And it charged that the agency's failure to sell this cotton in the competitive world market was a violation of law.

—)

The Senate Agriculture Committee today approved a bill designed to offer higher price supports to farmers who plant less wheat. / The measure would let farmers choose whether to plant their full wheat allotment, or plant less. / A bill approved yesterday by the House Agriculture Committee would not give farmers any choice. It would make a 30 percent cut in the planting allotment compulsory...and raise the price support to 90 percent of parity. Wheat currently is supported at 75 percent of parity.

The Federal Reserve Board announces that industrial production in April reached a new high. / Much of the increase was in the manufacture of durable goods.

The Defense Department is asking President Eisenhower for the "go-ahead" for the construction of a nuclear-powered aircraft. An Air Force spokesman said today that the effects of atomic radiation on aircraft equipment are now "sufficiently understood to enable us to proceed with a prototype." He did not say when such a prototype might actually be built.

In Havana, it was announced today that...henceforth...all Cuban "war criminals" will be tried in civil courts, instead of by military tribunals.

Now, for that direct report on the foreign ministers conference, we switch to Geneva and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs 5 mins
Ends on cue: "--to WRM in NY."

George Bryan

Back in a moment. —

Summit around. — Cessation of nuclear tests.

The East German party boss...Walter Ulbright...said at a Communist rally today that the Western plan for Germany was (in his phrase) "aimed at the annexation of East Germany by the West." It amounted, he said, to a plan for civil war.

Word for Today

In Geneva, both sides have now given what ~~[illegible]~~ (might be called) their "asking price" for a German settlement. Many centuries ago, Cicero summed up a conflict between two parties by saying, "There is a wall between." Cicero said something else very much applicable to a diplomatic conference. "One," he remarked, "does not have to believe everything one hears."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, May 15, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

SCHOENBRUN: The first week of the foreign ministers' conference has ended with a much better spirit than anyone could have hoped a week ago. The official spokesman of the State Department told reporters tonight that many observers believed we'd get involved in a long procedural debate; but it hasn't worked out that way at all. The West finally agreed to a round table, allowed the Germans to sit near it, also granted the Germans limited permission to speak on orders from the chairman. So the Russians won a point on getting their Communist satellites to participate in the work of this conference. However, the Russians gave in to Western insistence that the Germans be officially entitled advisers. And then there was a big Russian concession. Gromyko simply reserved his position to argue later about the question of Polish and Czech participation. This was a big concession because he'd been asking for immediate participation by the Eastern European nations. By reserving his rights to argue later, he has in fact given up his argument for immediate participation. And this, as the American spokesman said, "is much better than we had expected." This conciliatory attitude is highlighted by the most extraordinary climate that this reporter has ever seen at an East-West meeting. Everyone is polite, considerate, making little bows to the other fellow's viewpoint.

The Russians have not launched one angry verbal diatribe, using none of their colorful images. Why, you wouldn't think that there was a single capitalist crocodile seated at this table. The Russians have been critical, of course; they've consistently attacked the Germans, but they've not attacked the three Western Powers. And even the attacks on the Germans have been strikingly free of the insulting invective of the past. It seems quite clear now that the Russians are on their best behavior, and that they want very much to go to the summit. However, good behavior is not enough. This was made clear to Gromyko by Christian Herter at a dinner party last night. This reporter learned from very reliable sources that Herter told Gromyko the United States was very much in earnest in demanding satisfactory progress at this conference or else no summit. And the Americans mean progress at this conference not some other one. Although we're pleased at the thought of Russians making concessions on the question of atomic tests, we're not going to buy that. We want some progress at the Geneva conference or no chiefs of government meeting. And the question is can we hope for any kind of progress of this kind on the basis of the East-West positions as they were put on the table this week. Today the Russians put down their proposal for a peace treaty with Germany, and the American spokesman promptly said that we were keenly disappointed; it was simply the same old treaty that they had put forward last January 10th, containing no new or constructive proposals. The Western powers put down their package, or they call it now the peace plan, today. And the Russians just as promptly expressed their disappointment and what they called a very tangled mess of proposals.

So one would think that East and West were as far apart as ever. Yet, I think that would be a superficial analysis. In fact, it's clear that both sides have begun with a maximum trading position and have given very clear hints that their plans are negotiable. The Russian spokesman admitted tonight that they'd be willing to talk about Berlin if the West did not accept the peace treaty proposal. And Western officials have admitted that we could talk about an interim solution for Berlin, which is the first stage of our four-stage peace plan. This, I would suggest, is the area to watch. Berlin. Berlin is the one major issue on which both sides are hinting that they can discuss it and can negotiate. The opening positions on Berlin are as far apart as ever. The Russians want a so-called free city in West Berlin while maintaining their own positions in the Eastern sector. Whereas the West has proposed a united city, under Four Power control - and this the Russians will obviously not accept. They didn't come here to give up East Berlin. They came to get us out of West Berlin. And that's the core of the conference, to see whether the Russians will negotiate an interim solution for Berlin that would reassert at least for the time being Western rights. More than that they will not do. The rest, European security, disarmament, that's for the summit. The big question is will they pay the price of the trip up to the summit by backing down on their Berlin threats. We'll get an idea next week when negotiations begin in earnest; when we can test the sincerity of the unexpectedly moderate climate of this opening round.

This is Geneva. David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 15, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Today, at the foreign ministers conference, Russia presented a plan for Germany diametrically opposed to the "peace program" submitted yesterday by Secretary of State Herter. What Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko did was present again, the draft treaty which the West rejected in January. The proposals re-introduced by Gromyko call for the conclusion of separate peace treaties with East and West Germany and the conversion of West Berlin into a demilitarized "free city." West Berlin would thus be "free"...and without the protection of Western garrison forces...until such a time as Germany is reunited. All foreign troops would be withdrawn from German soil. West Germany would have to pull out of NATO....and Germany would, in effect, renounce all claim to those former German territories now administered by Poland. The two Germanies would...themselves...work out a program of confederation. Gromyko hoped the Russian plan would serve as "a useful basis for discussion." He ended his 45 minute speech by urging the Western foreign ministers "not to be pessimistic" on the prospects of the conference. Nevertheless, the immediate reaction of the American delegation was disappointment that Gromyko had said nothing new. (In a few minutes, we will switch to Geneva for a direct report.)

The foreign ministers conference is now in recess until Monday. Tomorrow, Secretary Herter will fly to Rome to confer with Italian leaders. And the French foreign minister is flying back to Paris to report to President DeGaulle.

The United States has sent Russia a formal note...proposing that talks be undertaken looking toward an extension of the cultural exchange program. The note suggests that the negotiations get under way late next month or early in July. Soviet Ambassador Menshikov said in Washington today that his government would favor continuing the program---probably, he said, for another two years.

Japan told Russia today...in a formal note...that it will "not consent" to the introduction of nuclear weapons on its territory. The Japanese said, at the same time, that they cannot adopt a policy of neutrality in world affairs. Japan rejected the Soviet charge that its security treaty with the United States was a threat to peace.

The State Department today reported "some further decline" in the general condition of former Secretary of State Dulles. "Mr. Dulles' pneumonia," it said, "has not completely resolved."

Democratic Senator Mansfield proposed today that all foreign aid grants---that is to say, "gifts"---be discontinued within the next three years. Mansfield said in a Senate speech that he would have the outright grants replaced by loans and that in his view the International Cooperation Administration, now a semi-autonomous agency, should be brought completely under the direction of the Department of State. The foreign aid program, he said, needs "a thorough-going reform." "Otharwise, a tide of public reaction may well inundate both the good and bad in foreign aid the essential and the non-essential."

The House Appropriations Committee recommended today that the Agriculture Department be given 3-billion, 900-million dollars to pay for its operations in the next fiscal year. This is 142-million dollars less than the Administration had asked for. Most of the cut was made in funds requested for the Commodity Credit Corporation. The committee said the agency could easily get the money it needs by selling surplus cotton on the world market. And it charged that the agency's failure to sell this cotton in the competitive world market was a violation of law.

The Senate Agriculture Committee today approved a bill designed to offer higher price supports to farmers who plant less wheat. The measure would let farmers choose whether to plant their full wheat allotment, or plant less. A bill approved yestarday by the House Agriculture Committee would not give farmers any choice. It would make a 30 percent cut in the planting allotment compulsory...

and raise the price support to 90 percent of parity. Wheat currently is supported at 75 percent of parity.

The Federal Reserve Board announces that industrial production in April reached a new high. Much of the increase was in the manufacture of durable goods.

The Defense Department is asking President Eisenhower for the "go ahead" for the construction of a nuclear-powered aircraft. An Air Force spokesman said today that the effects of atomic radiation on aircraft equipment are now "sufficiently understood to enable us to proceed with a prototype." He did not say when such a prototype might actually be built.

In Havana, it was announced today that...henceforth...all Cuban "war criminals" will be tried in civil courts instead of by military tribunals.

Now, for that direct report on the foreign ministers conference, we switch to Geneva and my colleague, David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The first week of the foreign ministers' conference has ended with a much better spirit than anyone could have hoped a week ago. The official spokesman of the State Department told reporters tonight that many observers believed we'd get involved in a long procedural debate; but it hasn't worked out that way at all. The West finally agreed to a round table, allowed the Germans to sit near it, also granted the Germans limited permission to speak on orders from the chairman. So the Russians won a point on getting their Communist satellites to participate in the work of this conference. However, the Russians gave in to Western insistence that the Germans be officially entitled advisers. And then there was a big Russian concession. Gromyko simply reserved his position to argue later about the question of Polish and Czech participation. This was a big concession because he'd been asking for immediate participation by the Eastern European nations. By reserving his rights to argue later, he has in fact given up his argument for immediate participation. And this, as the American spokesman said, "is much better than we had expected." This conciliatory attitude is highlighted by the most extraordinary climate that this reporter has ever seen at an East-West meeting. Everyone is polite considerate, making little bows to the other fellow's viewpoint.

The Russians have not launched one angry verbal diatribe, using none of their colorful images. Why, you wouldn't think that there was a single capitalist crocodile seated at this table. The Russians have been critical, of course; they've consistently attacked the Germans, but they've not attacked the three Western Powers. And even the attacks on the Germans have been strikingly free of the insulting invective of the past. It seems quite clear now that the Russians are on their best behavior, and that they want very much to go to the summit. However, good behavior is not enough. This was made clear to Gromyko by Christian Herter at a dinner party last night. This reporter learned from very reliable sources that Herter told Gromyko the United States was very much in earnest in demanding satisfactory progress at this conference or else no summit. And the Americans mean progress at this conference not some other one. Although we're pleased at the thought of Russians making concessions on the question of atomic tests, we're not going to buy that. We want some progress at the Geneva conference or no chiefs of government meeting. And the question is can we hope for any kind of progress of this kind on the basis of the East-West positions as they were put on the table this week. Today the Russians put down their proposal for a peace treaty with Germany, and the American spokesman promptly said that we were keenly disappointed; it was simply the same old treaty that they had put forward last January 10th, containing no new or constructive proposals. The Western powers put down their package, or they call it now the peace plan, today. And the Russians just as promptly expressed their disappointment and what they called a very tangled mess of proposals.

So one would think that East and West were as far apart as ever. Yet, I think that would be a superficial analysis. In fact, it's clear that both sides have begun with a maximum trading position and have given very clear hints that their plans are negotiable. The Russian spokesman admitted tonight that they'd be willing to talk about Berlin if the West did not accept the peace treaty proposal. And Western officials have admitted that we could talk about an interim solution for Berlin, which is the first stage of our four-stage peace plan. This, I would suggest, is the area to watch. Berlin. Berlin is the one major issue on which both sides are hinting that they can discuss it and can negotiate. The opening positions on Berlin are as far apart as ever. The Russians want a so-called free city in West Berlin while maintaining their own positions in the Eastern sector. Whereas the West has proposed a united city, under Four Power control - and this the Russians will obviously not accept. They didn't come here to give up East Berlin. They came to get us out of West Berlin. And that's the core of the conference, to see whether the Russians will negoitate an interim solution for Berlin that would reassert at least for the time being Western rights. More than that they will not do. The rest, European security, disarmament, that's for the summit. The big question is will they pay the price of the trip up to the summit by backing down on their Berlin threats. We'll get an idea next week when negotiations begin in earnest; when we can test the sincerity of the unexpectedly moderate climate of this opening round.

This is Geneva. David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The East German party boss...Walter Ulbricht...said at a Communist rally today that the Western plan for Germany was (in his phrase) "aimed at the annexation of East Germany by the West." It amounted, he said, to a plan for civil war.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In Geneva, both sides have now given what might be called their "asking price" for a German settlement. Many centuries ago, Cicero summed up a conflict between two parties by saying, "There is a wall between." Cicero said something else very much applicable to a diplomatic conference. "One," he remarked, "does not have to believe everything one hears."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 18, 1959

This is the news:

At Geneva today, each side...as expected...turned down the proposals made by the other for a German peace settlement. Secretary of State Herter charged that the Soviet plan for separate peace treaties with East and West Germany carried the "seeds" of future conflict. Foreign Minister Gromyko said that in its plan, the West was trying "to perpetuate a state of half-war and half-peace." Although Gromyko rejected outright the Western proposal for reunification of Germany, he said there were some subjects in the Western package, such as disarmament, which Russia was willing to discuss. (In a few minutes, we will switch to Geneva for the full stpry of what happened at today's three-hour session---the longest of the conference so far).

Tomorrow, the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, and Russia will meet privately to consider how to speed up the negotiations looking toward a ban on nuclear weapons tests. On Saturday, President Eisenhower received a letter from Premier Khrushchev...indicating a willingness to hold technical talks on measures for detecting high-altitude tests. The United States and Britain had also suggested a study of underground tests, but Khrushchev spoke only of nuclear explosions conducted at high altitudes.

Secretary Herter tonight summoned the American ambassadors in London and Paris to Geneva for consultation. Both ambassadors are due in Geneva tomorrow.

The prime minister of Afghanistan arrived in Moscow today for a state visit. He was greeted at the airport by Khrushchev...who praised Afghanistan's "neutralist" policy.

The State Department spokesman...Lincoln White...was asked by reporters today whether he saw any connection between the Geneva foreign ministers conference and the new outbreak of Communist shelling in the Formosa Strait. The Communists shelled the Matsu Islands yesterday for the first time in two years. White noted that the Chinese Communists never have agreed to a cease-fire. Any interpretation of the new attack, he said, would be "purely speculative."

→

The subject of American military aid to Nationalist China came up today at a closed-door hearing held by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The testimony was given by William Draper, chairman of a committee set up by President ~~Truman~~ Eisenhower to evaluate the military aid program. Draper said that modern weapons...supplied by the United States...had enabled the Nationalists to ~~[illegible]~~ fight the Communists to a "standstill" at Quemoy. He said that instead of cutting the American military assistance program, it should be increased by 400-million dollars for our European allies.

President Eisenhower today named the retiring secretary of the Navy, Thomas Gates, to succeed the late Donald Quarles as deputy secretary of defense. There was immediate speculation that Gates might later take the place of Secretary of Defense McElroy...who has indicated that he would like to leave government service by the end of this year. McElroy said today that Admiral Arthur W. Radford, retired, has been recalled to duty because of the "incapacity" for the next few weeks of General Nathan Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Radford (who was Twining's predecessor as chairman of the Joint Chiefs) will serve as military consultant to McElroy on a temporary basis. The Pentagon says that General Twining continues to make satisfactory progress following the operation for lung cancer last week.

President Eisenhower called on General Twining this morning in Walter Reed Hospital. He also stopped briefly to see former Secretary of State Dulles and General George Marshall. The State Department said it had "nothing to add" to the announcement made on Friday that Mr. Dulles's condition had shown "a further decline."

Mrs. Bess Truman underwent surgery today in Kansas City, Missouri, for the removal of a tumor. Her condition is described as "very satisfactory" and former President Truman told reporters the operation was "not as serious as we thought." Routine tests are being made to determine whether the tumor was benign.

The Commerce Department reported tonight that personal income last month reached a new record high. And the AFL-CIO Executive Council issued a statement...warning against a wage "freeze" in the steel industry.

That action, it said, could lead "only to more unemployment and ultimately to another recession."

The Supreme Court today agreed to rule on the constitutionality of two city ordinances in Arkansas...under which branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were ordered to furnish lists of members and contributors. The ordinances were passed in Little Rock and North Little Rock. And the N.A.A.C.P. had charged invasion of the right of privacy and freedom of speech under the Fourteenth Amendment.

For that first-hand report on the foreign ministers meeting we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Geneva.

Tape runs 4:45
Returns on cue: "--to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was my colleague, Ernest Leiser, reporting on today's session of the foreign ministers conference in Geneva. More Reports from the ever-faceBack

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

One of our officials, James J. Wadsworth, has expressed confidence that given "time, good faith and patience," an effective treaty prohibiting nuclear weapons tests can be worked out. John Dryden said, "Possess your soul with patience." And then, of course, there is that wonderful maxim we owe to the late Fiorello LaGuardia: "Patience and fortitude!"

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, May 18, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... For that first-hand report on the foreign ministers' meeting, we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Geneva.

LEISER: The West and the Communists, Russia and satellite East Germany, went right on here today talking at, but not really to, each other. For the Soviet Union Foreign Minister Gromyko made a 15 minute speech, which added up to rejection of our complicated and comprehensive peace plan for putting Germany together. Gromyko was notably less diplomatic than he's been here so far. He lapsed back, personally, into the old familiar Soviet vernacular. The Western plan, he said, was negative, unrealistic, clearly unacceptable. And then the needle, "Incidentally," said Gromyko, "we are sure that the plan was never designed to bring about agreement and was tabled at this conference for some other reason."

East Germany's Foreign Minister Lothar Bolz also got into the act. In fact, he was permitted by Gromyko, who was chairman of today's Geneva conference session, to introduce the act. And Bolz said that the Big Four didn't even have any right to discuss German unity here; that it does not come under the competence of the foreign ministers. For the West, U.S. Secretary of State Herter turned down Russia's idea of a peace treaty to be signed with the two Germanys. His presentation was shorter, stripped of propaganda, calm and sort of closely reasoned monograph of international law. What Herter said was that it made no sense to pretend that the two existing German states could represent the indivisible sovereignty of the German people. Such a notion, said Herter, is unacceptable both in legal and political theory and would be wholly unworkable in practice. After today's session, a Frenchman present called it reminiscent of the last time that the foreign ministers tried, in 1955, to solve the German problem. "Perhaps not so brutally," he said, "but equally severe." And an American official said, "They've changed the words a little but they're singing the same old tired tune."

Today's exchange of prepared disagreement ended stage two of this conference, if we can borrow a phrase from the language of current Western diplomacy. Stage one was the presentation of the opposing points of view. The second stage was their mutual rejection, as expected. The Western Germans may add a post script to the West's turndown of the Soviet peace treaty tomorrow. There wasn't time for them to have their innings tonight. But then the conference will have to get down to stage three, hopefully this week, when, after having dotted the i's and crossing the t's about what they cannot agree to talk about, they'll get down to what can be discussed. And that is Berlin.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Andrew Berding was on the hottest spot here today, for having indicated last night that we might have to shift some discussions about the bigger, unsolvable issue and end up instead talking just about some arrangement that would keep Berlin from leading to a war. But Berdin was getting criticism from our partners here, not because what he said was wrong but because he said it for publication and because he said it now. According to the rules of the diplomat's book, we should go through the motions of explaining our peace package and pushing it before we say "Ok, we're getting nowhere on this, now let's get down to brass tacks."

But there's hardly any reporter or diplomat in Geneva who doesn't share the conviction that this conference will shortly come down to a discussion only of Berlin. East Germany's Bolz gave his hint today that the Communists are ready and eager to do so. Bolz said that although the Soviet-designed peace treaty would be the best way to settle the Berlin problem, we do not exclude the possibility, he said, of reaching agreement on this prior to the conclusion of a peace treaty.

Whether agreement can be reached, even on Berlin, is another question. The positions of East and West are as sharply opposed on this concrete problem as on the greater, more diffused issues. We are certainly not going to get the Russians to buy our idea for re-unifying Berlin under free elections and under Four Power control. The Communists said as much here today, and they meant that they weren't going to give up their hold of East Berlin. And if we should buy the Soviet idea that we leave West Berlin, our position in Europe so painfully built up will have been completely undermined.

About the only possible basis for agreement is to keep what we have and what Russia has in Berlin with some minor technical changes. To get that agreement, at best, will take long hours in closed sessions - and this conference has not yet gotten down to closed door diplomacy. And nobody is optimistic enough to predict that we will be able to seal an accord of even this limited time that won't come unstuck after a summit meeting.

But today's meeting, and what went before in the six sessions thus far in this round at Geneva, has made clear that we're really already down to what brought this crisis about, the question of our exposed position in Berlin.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 18, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

At Geneva today, each side...as expected...turned down the proposals made by the other for a German peace settlement. Secretary of State Herter charged that the Soviet plan for separate peace treaties with East and West Germany carried the "seeds" of future conflict. Foreign Minister Gromyko said that in its plan, the West was trying "to perpetuate a state of half-war and half-peace." Although Gromyko rejected outright the Western proposal for reunification of Germany, he said there were some subjects in the Western package, such as disarmament, which Russia was willing to discuss. (In a few minutes, we will switch to Geneva for the full story of what happened at today's three-hour session---the longest of the conference so far).

Tomorrow, the foreign ministers of the United States, Britain, and Russia will meet privately to consider how to speed up the negotiations looking toward a ban on nuclear weapons tests. On Saturday, President Eisenhower received a letter from Premier Khrushchev...indicating a willingness to hold technical talks on measures for detecting high-altitude tests. The United States and Britain had also suggested a study of underground tests, but Khrushchev spoke only of nuclear explosions conducted at high altitudes.

Secretary Herter tonight summoned the American ambassadors in London and Paris to Geneva for consultation. Both ambassadors are due in Geneva tomorrow.

The prime minister of Afghanistan arrived in Moscow today for a state visit. He was greeted at the airport by Khrushchev..who praised Afghanistan's "neutralist" policy.

The State Department spokesman...Lincoln White...was asked by reporters today whether he saw any connection between the Geneva foreign ministers conference and the new outbreak of Communist shelling in the Formosa Strait. The Communists shelled the Matsu Islands yesterday for the first time in two years. White noted that the Chinese Communists never have agreed to a cease-fire. Any interpretation of the new attack, he said, would be "purely speculative."

The subject of American military aid to Nationalist China came up today at a closed-door hearing held by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The testimony was given by William Draper, chairman of a committee set up by President Eisenhower to evaluate the military aid program. Draper said that modern weapons.. supplied by the United States...had enabled the Nationalists to fight the Communists to a "standstill" at Quemoy. He said that instead of cutting the American military assistance program, it should be increased by 400-million dollars for our European allies.

President Eisenhower today named the retiring secretary of the Navy, Thomas Gates, to succeed the late Donald Quarles as deputy secretary of defense. There was immediate speculation that Gates might later take the place of Secretary of Defense McElroy...who has indicated that he would like to leave government service by the end of this year. McElroy said today that Admiral Arthur W. Radford, retired, has been recalled to duty because of the "incapacity" for the next few weeks of General Nathan Twining, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Radford (who was Twining's predecessor as chairman of the Joint Chiefs) will serve as military consultant to McElroy on a temporary basis. The Pentagon says that General Twining continues to make satisfactory progress following the operation for lung cancer last week.

President Eisenhower called on General Twining this morning in Walter Reed Hospital. He also stopped briefly to see former Secretary of State Dulles and General George Marshall. The State Department said it had "nothing to add" to the announcement made on Friday that Mr. Dulles's condition had shown "a further decline."

Mrs. Bess Truman underwent surgery today in Kansas City, Missouri for the removal of a tumor. Her condition is described as "very satisfactory" and former President Truman told reporters the operation was "not as serious as we thought." Routine tests are being made to determine whether the tumor was benign.

The Commerce Department reported tonight that personal income last month reached a new record high. And the AFL-CIO Executive Council issued a statement... warning against a wage "freeze" in the steel industry. That action, it said, could lead "only to more unemployment and ultimately to another recession."

The Supreme Court today agreed to rule on the constitutionality of two city ordinances in Arkansas...under which branches of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were ordered to furnish lists of members and contributors. The ordinances were passed in Little Rock and North Little Rock. And the N.A.A.C.P. had charged invasion of the right of privacy and freedom of speech under the Fourteenth Amendment.

For that first-hand report on the foreign ministers meeting, we switch now to Ernest Leiser in Geneva.

LEISER: The West and the Communists, Russia and satellite East Germany, went right on here today talking at, but not really to, each other. For the Soviet Union Foreign Minister Gromyko made a 15 minute speech, which added up to rejection of our complicated and comprehensive peace plan for putting Germany together. Gromyko was notably less diplomatic than he's been here so far. He lapsed back, personally, into the old familiar Soviet vernacular. The Western plan, he aaid, was negotive, unrealistic, clearly unacceptable. And then the needle, "Incidentally," said Gromyko "we are sure that the plan was never designed to bring about agreement and was tabled at this conference for some other reason."

East Germany's Foreign Minister Lothar Bolz also got into the act. In fact, he was permitted by Gromyko, who was chairman of today's Geneva conference session, to introduce the act. And Bolz said that the Big Four didn't even have any right to discuss German unity here; that it does not come under the competence of the foreign ministers. For the West, U.S. Secretary of State Herter turned down Russia's idea of a peace treaty to be signed with the two Germanys. His presentation was shorter, stripped of propaganda, calm and sort of closely reasoned monograph of international law. What Herter said was that it made no sense to pretend that the two existing German states could represent the indivisable sovereignty of the German people. Such a notion, said Herter, is unacceptable both in legal and political theory and would be wholly unworkable in practice. After today's session, a Frenchman present called it reminiscent of the last time that the foreign ministers tried, in 1955, to solve the German problem. "Perhaps not so brutally," he said, "but equally severe." And an American official said, "They've changed the words a little, but they're singing the same old tired tune."

Today's exchange of prepared disagreement ended stage two of this conference, if we can borrow a phrase from the language of current Western diplomacy. Stage one was the presentation of the opposing points of view. The second stage was their mutual rejection, as expected. The Western Germans may add a post script to the West's turndown of the Soviet peace treaty tomorrow. There wasn't time for them to have their innings tonight. But then the conference will have to get down to stage three, hopefully this week, when, after having dotted the i's and crossing the t's about what they cannot agree to talk about, they'll get down to what can be discussed. And this is Berlin.

U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Andrew Berding was on the hottest spot here today, for having indicated last night that we might have to shift some discussions about the bigger, unsolvable issue and end up instead talking just about some arrangement that would keep Berlin from leading to a war. But Berding was getting criticism from our partners here, not because what he said was wrong but because he said it for publication and because he said it now. According to the rules of the diplomat's book, we should go through the motions of explaining our peace package and pushing it before we say "Ok, we're getting nowhere on this, now let's get down to brass tacks."

But there's hardly any reporter or diplomat in Geneva who doesn't share the conviction that this conference will shortly come down to a discussion only of Berlin. East Germany's Bolz gave his hint today that the Communists are ready and eager to do so. Bolz said that although the Soviet-designed peace treaty would be the best way to settle the Berlin problem, we do not exclude the possibility, he said, of reaching agreement on this prior to the conclusion of a peace treaty.

Whether agreement can be reached, even on Berlin, is another question. The positions of East and Weat are as sharply opposed on this concrete problem as on the greater, more diffused issues. We are certainly not going to get the Russians to buy our idea for re-unifying Berlin under free elections and under Four Power control. The Communists said as much here today, and they meant that they weren't going to give up their hold of East Berlin. And if we should buy the Soviet idea that we leave West Berlin, our position in Europe so painfully built up will have been completely undermined.

About the only possible basis for agreement is to keep what we have and what Russia has in Berlin with some minor technical changes. To get that agreement, at best, will take long hours in closed sessions - and this conference has not yet gotten down to closed door diplomacy. And nobody is optimistic enough to predict that we will be able to seal an accord of even this limited time that won't come unstuck after a summit meeting.

But today's meeting, and what went before in the six sessions thus far in this round at Geneva, has made clear that we're really already down to what brought this crisis about, the question of our exposed position in Berlin.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Ernest Leiser, reporting on today's session of the foreign ministers conference in Geneva.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: One of our officials, James J. Wadsworth, has expressed confidence that given "time, good faith and patience," an effective treaty prohibiting nuclear weapons tests can be worked out. John Dryden said, "Possess your soul with patience." And then, of course, there is that wonderful maxim we owe to the late Fiorello LaGuardia: "Patience and fortitude."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., May 19, 1959

This is the news:

The Senate Commerce Committee today approved the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce by a margin of one vote. Three Democrats---Lausche of Ohio, Pastore of Rhode Island and Thurmond of South Carolina---joined six Republicans in recommending confirmation, so that the final vote was 9 to 8. The full Senate may start debating the nomination early next week...and Democratic Senator Anderson, who has opposed the Strauss appointment, says that confirmation is now "most unlikely." He predicts that opposition to Strauss "will continue to grow during the floor debate as it did during the committee hearings."

Senate Republican Leader Dirksen does not agree. He told reporters that he still expected Strauss to be confirmed by a "substantial" margin. Senator Lausche issued a statement...saying that rejection of the nomination could only be justified by evidence (which he said had not been established) that Strauss was dishonest, incompetent, or disloyal. But tonight the junior senator from Ohio, Stephen Young, called on President Eisenhower to withdraw the appointment of Mr. Strauss. The close committee vote, Young said, "clearly indicates a lack of confidence."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee questioned Ogden Reid for more than five hours today on his qualifications to serve as United States ambassador to Israel. Mr. Reid, 33-year-old former editor and publisher of the New York Herald-Tribune, was nominated by President Eisenhower in March. He conceded today that he had never visited the Middle East, but closely followed the development of Middle East policy. He believed he was qualified for the diplomatic assignment by his newspaper training, which included work on the European edition of the Herald-Tribune in Paris for one year. He had, he said, "no political ambitions whatsoever." Several members of the committee...including Democratic Senator Morse... said they were favorably impressed by Mr. Reid's performance at today's hearing. Chairman Fulbright and Democratic Senator Kennedy told Reid bluntly that he would have to show he was better qualified for the job than a career diplomat.

Secretary of Defense McElroy said today that he will stay on indefinitely in his post. He said: "I have suspended my plans for departure. I don't know when I will be leaving, if at all." McElroy made the announcement with the new deputy defense secretary, Thomas Gates, standing by his side. He then left for Geneva and the foreign ministers conference.

There was some "tough talk" at the Geneva conference table today. For that story, we switch now to Geneva and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

(Tape runs 2:45
Ends on cue "--to ERM in NY.")

The foreign ministers of the three atomic powers---the United States, Britain and Russia---held a separate meeting in Geneva today in an effort to set up technical talks on the detection of nuclear tests. A Western spokesman says the meeting was "inconclusive". Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko refused to commit his government to a broad scientific study of the technical problems involved.

The State Department said today that former Secretary Dulles "continues to grow weaker." It declined to elaborate.

A medical bulletin...issued in Kansas City, Missouri...says that the tumor removed yesterday from Mrs. Harry S. Truman was benign. And the Trumans' daughter, Mrs. Clifton Daniel, gave birth today to her second son.

President Eisenhower today signed a bill...increasing pensions and unemployment benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act. The legislation affects more than 800-thousand railroad employes.

James Hoffa, president of the teamsters union, today threatened a nationwide strike---if anti-trust legislation is passed against organized labor. Hoffa (who has said that all transportation unions should be combined) was speaking at a longshoremen's convention in Brownsville, Texas. He said, "They talk about a secondary boycott. We can call a primary strike all across the nation that will straighten out the employers for once and for all."

Contract negotiations resumed today in the basic steel industry after a three-day recess. David McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers, said that the industry had done a "tremendous sales job" on the subject of inflation with regard to wages. The profits of the industry, he charged, had been "exorbitant". Conrad Cooper, spokesman for the steel companies, said there was nothing "phony" about the effect inflation had on the economy since 1940. And the source of it, he argued, is to be found in rising emplpyment costs. Both sides gave figures in support of their arguments.

By June 30th, when the contract expires between the steel corporations and the steel workers union, the auto industry will have on hand a record reserve of nine hundred and thirty thousand new cars. It has been buying steel feverishly to build them, and has built them as feverishly, not because the market wants them now, but to make sure that the demand can be met if a steel strike stops production.

The auto industry also has been buying steel for its 1960 models, and Ford and General Motors are expected to have enough on hand to keep assembly lines busy till September. And they have instructed the makers of parts to build up a similar backlog against the possibility of a steel strike.

Auto makers are the largest consumers of steel in the country. If they are caught short of steel in a strike, they can exert more influence than anyone else on the steel industry to settle with its workers. This is the normal power relationship which the Union counts on exploiting. When it withdraws its labor it must hurt the users of steel along with the makers. It carefully studies the power factors in deciding whether and when to strike. It wishes to be sure the consumer will be hurt enough to bring pressure enough on the steel companies to produce a wage settlement that is worth the strike. Now the auto manufacturers have insured themselves so well against a strike that the strike may not develop, at least not by the end of June. The Union may decide it had better postpone a walkout until the steel reserves are used up. And if auto makers were the only consumers, that is probably what would happen.

But there are other customers, and these have not been as successful as the auto industry, in laying in steel reserves, many of them have enough for only about a month or six weeks of a stoppage. Now the Union must decide whether these users can bring pressure enough by themselves to help win a strike. There is an added complication. If the strike is postponed, these other consumers will be given time to lay in their own reserves, and that would make a strike later on, less effective.

These are the puzzling factors the steel union faces, as analyzed by the New York Times labor expert, A.S. Raskin. It is at least possible, as he sees it, that a steel strike may not be called, even if the negotiations do not end in agreement by June 30th. That would mean that the men consent to work without an agreement, something the Union has said it would not do.

On the public relations side of the struggle, the fear of inflation continues to be dominant.

Back in a moment. —

Jerry Bryan —

Word for Today

In the current steel negotiations, both sides have published an array of facts and figures in support of their arguments pro and con. Many centuries ago, the Athenian dramatist Menander (ME-NAN'-DER) said, "Nothing is more pleasing than to know all the facts." Yet in the last century the British essayist Thomas Carlyle observed, "You may prove anything by figures."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 19, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... There was some tough talk at the Geneva conference today. For that story we switch now to Geneva and my colleague Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: For three hours and twenty minutes today, the longest of the seven sessions so far, foreign ministers of East and West tried to persuade each other of the virtues of their conflicting plans for Germany. Couve de Murville of France, in the sharpest speech of the day, accused Russia's Gromyko of giving a ruthless verdict on the Western package, lacking in a spirit of tolerance or compromise. He said the West would not enter into a treaty with two Germanys that would preclude unification forever. Lloyd of Britain said that Russia was trying to impose terms on Germany as was done at Versailles. Gromyko, in turn, attacked the Western plan. He jeered at the Western assertion that it contained important concessions for the Soviet viewpoint. And Gromyko appealed for a closer and more detailed look at the Soviet proposal. At the end there was no sign that either side had persuaded the other of anything. American briefing officer Andrew Berding said, "Gromyko just didn't seem to understand the Western plan - and Secretary of State Herter and Selwyn Lloyd will have another try at explaining it to him tomorrow."

The formal sessions at the Palace of Nations, with the elaborate ritual of argument and debate leading nowhere, are only one part of the conference being held here. The other is the conference in the shadows, the dinner conversations, meetings in villas and inspired trial balloons, trying to feel out what will come next after the formal deadlock is confirmed. Berding said tonight that the formal plenary sessions are expected to continue until the end of this week, but did not say what would come after that. It's generally believed that an attempt will be made to set up private, restricted meetings without the German advisers if the West has its way. As to what will be discussed at such meetings, undoubtedly among other things it will be the idea of an interim arrangement for Berlin. Despite the stern denials that the West intends to break up its package, it is understood that negotiations pinpointed on Berlin are not excluded at a later stage.

There is also considerable confusion about what Secretary Herter told Gromyko in that no-famous dinner conversation last Thursday night. At first it was reported on good authority that Herter warned Gromyko "substantial progress at this conference would be needed to justify a summit conference." Today from high sources the word came that the warning of a different sort, that Herter told Gromyko "any Soviet attempt to set a new deadline for one-sided action on Berlin would torpedo the chances for a summit conference. And despite that, some Western sources - not American - maintain that the original version was correct and are wondering why the story has been changed to soft pedal the emphasis on progress.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 19, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Senate Commerce Committee today approved the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce by a margin of one vote. Three Democrats---Lausche of Ohio, Pastore of Rhode Island and Thurmond of South Carolina---joined six Republicans in recommending confirmation, so that the final vote was 9 to 8. The full Senate may start debating the momination early next week...and Democratic Senator Anderson, who has opposed the Strauss appointment, says that confirmation is now "most unlikely." He predicts that opposition to Strauss "will continue to grow during the floor debate as it did during the committee hearings." Senate Republican Leader Dirksen does not agree. He told reporters that he still expected Strauss to be confirmed by a "substantial" margin. Senator Lausche issued a statement...saying that rejection of the nomination could only be justified by evidence (which he said had not been established) that Strauss was dishonest, incompetent, or disloyal. But tonight the junior senator from Ohio, Stephen Young, called on President Eisenhower to withdraw the appointment of Mr. Strauss. The close committee vote, Young said, "clearly indicates a lack of confidence."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee questioned Ogden Reid for more than five fours today on his qualifications to serve as United States ambassador to Israel. Mr. Reid, 33-year-old former editor and publisher of the New York Herald-Tribune, was nominated by President Eisenhower in March. He conceded today that he had never visited the Middle East, but closely followed the development of Middle East policy. He believed he was qualified for the diplomatic assignment by his newspaper training, which included work on the European edition of the Herald-Tribune in Paris for one year. He had, he said, "no political ambitions whatsoever." Several members of the committee...including Democratic Senator Morse...said they were favorably impressed by Mr. Reid's performance at today's hearing. Chairman Fulbright and Democratic Senator Kennedy told Reid bluntly that he would have to show he was better qualified for the job than a career diplomat.

Secretary of Defense McElroy said today that he will stay on indefinitely in his post. He said, "I have suspended my plans for departure. I don't know when I will be leaving, if at all." McElroy made the announcement with the new deputy defense secretary, Thomas Gates, standing by his side. He then left for Geneva and the foreign ministers conference.

There was some "tough talk" at the Geneva conference table today. For that story, we switch now to Geneva and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: For three hours and twenty minutes today, the longest of the seven sessions so far, foreign ministers of East and West tried to persuade each other of the virtues of their conflicting plans for Germany. Couve de Murville of France, in the sharpest speech of the day, accused Russia's Gromyko of giving a ruthless verdict on the Western package, lacking in a spirit of tolerance or compromise. He said the West would not enter into a treaty with two Germanys that would preclude unification forever. Lloyd of Britain said that Russia was trying to impose terms on Germany as was done at Versailles. Gromyko, in turn, attacked the Western plan. He jeered at the Western assertion that it contained important concessions for the Soviet viewpoint. And Gromyko appealed for a closer and more detailed look at the Soviet proposal. At the end there was no sign that either side had persuaded the other of anything. American briefing officer Andrew Berding said, "Gromyko just didn't seem to understand the Western plan - and Secretary of State Herter and Selwyn Lloyd will have another try at explaining it to him tomorrow."

The formal session at the Palace de Nations, with the elaborate ritual of argument and debate leading nowhere, are only one part of the conference being held here. The other is the conference in the shadows, the dinner conversations, meetings in villas and inspired trial balloons, trying to feel out what will come next after the formal deadlock is confirmed. Berding said tonight that the formal plenary sessions are expected to continue until the end of this week, but did not say what would come after that. It's generally believed that an attempt will be made to set up private, restricted meetings without the German advisers if the West has its way. As to what will be discussed at such meetings, undoubtedly among other things it will be the idea of an interim arrangement for Berlin. Despite the stern denials that the West intends to break up its package it is understood that negotiations pinpointed on Berlin are not excluded at a later stage.

There is also considerable confusion about what Secretary Herter told Gromyko in that no-famous dinner conversation last Thursday night. At first it was reported on good authority that Herter warned Gromyko "substantial progress at this conference would be needed to justify a summit conference." Today from high sources the word came that the warning of a different sort, that Herter told Gromyko "any Soviet attempt to set a new deadline for one-sided action on Berlin would torpedo the chances for a summit conference. And despite that, some Western sources - not American - maintain that the original version was correct and are wondering why the story has been changed to soft pedal the emphasis on progress.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW The foreign ministers of the three atomic powers---the United States, Britain and Russia---held a separate meeting in Geneva today in an effort to set up technical talks on the detection of nuclear tests. A Western spokesman says the meeting was "inconclusive." Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko refused to commit his government to a broad scientific study of the technical problems involved.

The State Department said today that former Secretary Dulles "continues to grow weaker." It declined to elaborate.

A medical bulltein...issued in Kansas City, Missouri...says that the tumor removed yesterday from Mr. Harry S. Truman was benign. And the Trumans' daughter, Mrs. Clifton Daniel, gave birth today to her second son.

President Eisenhower today signed a bill...increasing pensions and unemployment benefits under the Railroad Retirement Act. The legislation affects more than 800-thousand railroad employees.

James Hoffa, president of the teamsters union, today threatened a nationwide strike---if anti-trust legislation is passed against organized labor. Hoffa (who has said that all transportation unions should be combined) was speaking at a longshoremen's convention in Brownsville, Texas. He said, "They talk about a secondary boycott. We can call a primary strike all across the nation that will straighten out the employers for once and for all."

Contract negotiations resumed today in the basic steel industry after a three-day recess. David McDonald, president of the United Steelworkers, said that the industry had done a "tremendous sales job" on the subject of inflation with regard to wages. The profits of the industry, he charged, had been "exorbitant." Conrad Cooper, spokesman for the steel companies, said there was nothing phony about the effect inflation had on the economy since 1940. And the source of it, he argued, is to be found in rising employment costs.

Both sides gave figures in support of their arguments.

By June 30th, when the contract expires between the steel corporations and the steel workers union, the auto industry will have on hand a record reserve of nine hundred and thirty thousand new cars. It has been buying steel feverishly to build them, and has built them as feverishly, not because the market wants them now, but to make sure that the demand can be met if a steel strike stops production.

The auto industry also has been buying steel for its 1960 models, and Ford and General Motors are expected to have enough on hand to keep assembly lines busy till September. And they have instructed the makers of parts to build up a similar backlog against the possibility of a steel strike.

Auto makers are the largest consumers of steel in the country. If they are caught short of steel in a strike, they can exert more influence than anyone else on the steel industy to settle with its workers. This is the normal power relationship which the Union counts on exploiting. When it withdraws its labor it must hurt the users of steel along with the makers. It carefully studies the power factors in deciding whether and when to strike. It wishes to be sure the consumer will be hurt enough to bring pressure enough on the steel companies to produce a wage settlement that is worth the strike. Now the auto manufacturers have insured themselves so well against a strike that the strike may not develop, at least not by the end of June. The Union may decide it had better postpone a walkout until the steel reserves are used up. And if auto makers were the only consumers, that is probably what would happen.

But there are other customers, and these have not been as successful as the auto industry, in laying in steel reserves, many of them have enough for only a month or six weeks of a stoppage. Now the Union must decide whether these users can bring pressure enough by themselves to help win a strike. There is an added complication. If the strike is postponed, these other consumers will be given time to lay in their own reserves, and that would make a strike later on less effective.

These are the puzzling factors the steel union faces, as analyzed by the New York Times labor expert, A.S.Raskin.

On the public relations side of the struggle, the fear of inflation continues to be dominant.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In the current steel negotiations, both sides have published an array of facts and figures in support of their arguments pro and con. Many centuries ago, the Athenian dramatist Menander said, "Nothing is more pleasing than to know all the facts." Yet in the last century the British essayist Thomas Carlyle observed, "You may prove anything by figures."

Goodnight and Good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 20, 1959

This is the news:

Secretary of State Herter told the Geneva conference today that the Russians are proposing "a treaty for the permanent partition of Germany." Reunification under the Soviet proposal, he said, "would be as unlikely as Mr. Khrushchev's 'whistling shrimp'." Herter appealed to the Russians to work with the West to see that Germany is reunited. And he warned: "It is the teaching of history that the artificial partition of a strong and vigorous people can only result in disaster. Only the whole German people," he said, "can be entrusted with the task of determining the future of the German nation." Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko then insisted...in a 55-minute speech...that the draft treaty submitted by Russia be used as the basis of negotiations. "We are perfectly willing," he said,

"to discuss changes you might like to make in the draft treaty." And he denied that Russia was trying to keep the two Germanies forever apart.

Last night...in a private meeting...Gromyko told the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd, that Russia was willing to consider three specific items in the Western package---Berlin, a security zone in Middle Europe, and the formation of mixed German committees for increasing economic and cultural contacts between the two Germanies. Tonight, Assistant Secretary of State Berding said, "Gromyko wants to conclude a treaty with the two German governments. It always comes back to that."

Tomorrow night, Secretary Herter will be host at a private dinner for the British, French and Soviet foreign ministers. It is not a formal meeting, and precisely for that reason it will be watched.

It was announced in Moscow today that...next week...Khrushchev will make his first visit to Albania, the Communist satellite separated from all other Soviet-dominated territory by Yugoslavia. The announcement gives no details, other than that Khrushchev will be in Albania for twelve days. It says nothing of the possibility that he may use the opportunity to see President Tito of Yugoslavia along the way.

Khrushchev was interviewed recently by an editor from India...and an article...based on that interview...was published today in Bombay. The article quotes Khrushchev as saying that "for some reason" President Nasser of the United Arab Republic has forgotten what the Soviet Union did for Egypt when it was "beset with difficulties." Khrushchev said Russia had never ceased to be a sincere friend of the U.A.R....that, properly, Russia and the U.A.R. have no conflict. But Nasser, he said, had "criticized and distorted" Communism...and so, naturally, Communists must defend it.

The White House said today that President Eisenhower has bestowed on former Secretary of State Dulles the nation's highest civilian decoration, the Medal of Freedom. The award was presented by Mrs. Dulles yesterday on behalf of the President. There has been no official word on the condition of Mr. Dulles since yesterday, when the State Department said he was "growing weaker."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today heard testimony against Senator Mansfield's proposal that all outright grants under the foreign aid program be terminated within three years. Mansfield proposed that such gifts be replaced gradually by loans. The acting director of the International Cooperation Administration, Leonard Saccio (SASH'IO), said that if the United States took such a step, it would threaten the collapse of some countries heavily dependent on our help.

→

In the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Democratic Senator Wayne Hays of Ohio said that he would like to see the elimination of all military assistance to Latin America.

The Senate today passed...and sent to the House...a measure setting up a new program of international medical research. The program...which would be carried out in cooperation with other countries...would cost 50-million dollars a year.

The House approved a bill designed to limit the federal payment any one farmer may receive under the price support program. The ceiling on such payments was set at 50-thousand dollars. Some Democrats complained of "loop-holes" in the legislation. Republican Representative Avery of Kansas, sponsor of the bill, said that if this is true, then the Senate should tighten it up. The Senate Agriculture Committee decided today to make an investigation of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the government agency that deals with crop surpluses.

And the House rejected a housing bill supported by the Administration, which left out the public housing features called for by the Democrats. The vote was 203 to 177.

The AFL-CIO today formally announced that it will "wage a vigorous battle" to have the labor reform bill passed by the Senate changed in the House. President George Meany did not go into particulars...but he said the AFL-CIO is in favor of legislation that will help unions curb corruption.

President James Hoffa of the Teamsters Union said today that he had been misquoted...as saying that he could call a general nationwide strike, if Congress passed anti-trust legislation against organized labor. The Associated Press reporter...who covered Hoffa's speech yesterday... is sticking by his story.

Edward R. Murrow: May 20, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Up to the present the Four Power Conference at Geneva has not been much more than an international charade. The real conference is yet to begin. It will be held between few negotiations, talking behind closed doors and working without the daily press briefings. This is not said because it is news. Everybody having to do with the conference knows it. Everybody expected it. Nobody is taken in by the charade. If there is any difference between this and previous conferences with the Russians it is that the public is more sophisticated this time. The communications media carry the huge daily output from Geneva. Newspapers report the speeches. Editors and broadcasters comment. People read and listen. In a sense, they too are part of the charade. But while acting their role they are not deceived by it; (at least that is the impression of this reporter.) Enough of sober and sobering reality was stated in advance of the conference for anyone to realize that negotiations with the Russians have to go through a kind of rigamarole. There has to be a charade before the bargaining begins. And once the bargaining has started it is tough, protracted and, as a rule, not very fruitful. The best to be hoped for at the end is a start, so far as the solution of the European crisis is concerned. The small steps to be taken will be outlined in the restricted meetings that will begin probably next week, then, after the inevitable slow-motion wrangling, something will emerge that can be taken to the Summit. And that will round out Act One of this particular phase of history.

However, everything else that has happened at Geneva - what I have called the charade - is not without some meaning. Both sides had to state their maximum positions. It may have been futile to do this, but that is the way men behave. They do it even if they know they can't get their maximum or anything like it. But the point of the charade also is to impress onlookers as well as to speak for the record, and to do so before passing on to the minimum terms. Here the exercise is in the art of propaganda.

It is too early to say who is doing the better propaganda job at Geneva. The Russians have the obvious advantage that they can pose as being sweet and reasonable, which is all the better as propaganda for coming after the harsh and unreasonable demand that the Allies get out of Berlin by May 27th. The Russians are good at this sort of thing. They know how to be frightening and obnoxious and then clap on a mask of genial kindness. At Geneva so far Gromyko has always said his "Nyet" with a smile and something like a twinkle in his eye.

But the best stroke of propaganda so far was the interview Khrushchev gave a group of Florida businessmen which was released today. In it Khrushchev added another to his growing list of ~~superb~~ proverbs. "To achieve something difficult" he said, "it is necessary to eat a ton of salt. The Foreign Ministers", he went on, "will have to eat a lot of salt, and we are prepared to eat more than a ton if necessary." The conference, he predicted, will succeed, otherwise the Russians wouldn't have gone. Another prediction: There will never be war between the United States and Russia. Still another: Russia will have an increasing degree of democracy as its standard of living rises.

It was Judge Frank Smathers, father of the Senator, who asked about war. "I do not believe that your people want to fight to destroy Communism in our country", answered Khrushchev, "nor are we dreaming of destroying capitalism in your country. This is nonsense. Socialism will replace capitalism as an inevitable h istoric process. We will have to sweat plenty to catch up with you. But when we get there we shall not harm a single soul."

He talked about bombers and rockets. "Your Generals" he said, "speak about your wonderful bombing force. We say that to compare a bomber to a rocket is like comparing a buggy to an automobile. There is no defense against a ballistic missile." But he insisted that the Soviet weapons are defensive. "We will not start a war," he said, "and no lunatic in the United States will start one."

On the Western side, nobody knows how to be as chummy and ingratiating as Khrushchev in this mood. He makes it hard for a moment to remember how tough the Russians are to bargain with — or that his threats produced this Geneva meeting.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan

Word for Today

The best to be hoped for at the end of the foreign ministers meeting is a "beginning." What has happened so far is a kind of charade. Publilius Syrus said, "The little foolery that wise men have makes a great show." And this one is worth sitting through. "He that will have a cake out of the wheat," Shakespeare said, "must tarry the grinding."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 20, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Secretary of State Herter told the Geneva conference today that the Russians are proposing "a treaty for the permanent partition of Germany." Reunification under the Soviet proposal, he said, "would be as unlikely as Mr. Khrushchev's 'whistling shrimp.'" Herter appealed to the Russians to work with the West to see that Germany is reunited. And he warned: "It is the teaching of history that the artificial partition of a strong and vigorous people can only result in disaster. Only the whole German people," he said, "can be entrusted with the task of determining the future of the German nation." Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko then insisted...in a 55-minute speech...that the draft treaty submitted by Russia be used as the basis of negotiations. "We are perfectly willing," he said, "to discuss changes you might like to make in the draft treaty." And he denied that Russia was trying to keep the two Germanys forever apart. Last night...in a private meeting...Gromyko told the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd, that Russia was willing to consider three specific items in the Western package---Berlin, a security zone in Middle Europe, and the formation of mixed German committees for increasing economic and cultural contacts between the two Germanys. Tonight, Assistant Secretary of State Berding said, "Gromyko wants to conclude a treaty with the two German governments. It always comes back to that."

Tomorrow night, Secretary Herter will be host at a private dinner for the British, French and Soviet foreign ministers. It is not a formal meeting, and precisely for that reason it will be watched.

It was announced in Moscow today that...next week...Khrushchev will make his first visit to Albania, the Communist satellite separated from all other Soviet-dominated territory by Yugoslavia. The announcement gives no details, other than that Khrushchev will be in Albania for twelve days. It says nothing of the possibility that he may use the opportunity to see President Tito of Yugoslavia along the way.

Khrushchev was interviewed recently by an editor from India...and an article...based on that interview...was published today in Bombay. The article quotes Khrushchev as saying that "for some reason" President Nasser of the United Arab Republic has forgotten what the Soviet Union did for Egypt when it was "beset with difficulties." Khrushchev said Russia had never ceased to be a sincere friend of the U.A.R....that, properly, Russia and the U.A.R. have no conflict. But Nasser, he said, had "criticized and distorted" Communism...and so, naturally, Communists must defend it.

The White House said today that President Eisenhower has bestowed on former Secretary of State Dulles the nation's highest civilian decoration, the Medal of Freedom. The award was presented by Mrs. Dulles yesterday on behalf of the President. There has been no official word on the condition of Mr. Dulles since yesterday, when the State Departmett said he was "growing weaker."

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today heard testimony against Senator Mansfield's proposal that all outright grants under the foreign aid program be terminated within three years. Mansfield proposed that such gifts be replaced gradually by loans. The acting director of the International Cooperation Administration, Leonard Saccio, said that if the United States took such a step, it would threaten the collapse of some countries heavily dependent on our help.

In the House Foreign Affairs Committee, Democratic Senator Wayne Hays of Ohio said that he would like to see the elimination of all minitary assistance to Latin America.

The Senate today passed...and sent to the House...a measure setting up a new program of international medical research. The program...which would be carried out in cooperation with other countries...would cost 50-million dollars a year.

The House approved a bill destined to limit the federal payment any one farmer may receive under the price support prorgam. The ceiling on such payments was set at 50-thousand dollars. Some Democrats complained of "loop-holes" in the legislation. Republican Representative Avery of Kansas, sponsor of the bill, said that if this is true, then the Senate should tighten it up. The Senate Agriculture Committee decided today to make an investigation of the Commodity Credit Corporation, the government agency that deals with crop surpluses.

And the House rejected a housing bill supported by the Administration which left out the public housing features call for by the Democrats. The vote was 203 to 177.

The AFL-CIO today formally announced that it will "wage a vigorous battle" to have the labor reform bill passed by the Senate changed in the House.. President George Meany did not go into particulars...but he said the AFL-CIO is in favor of legislation that will help unions curb corruption.

President James Hoffa of the Teamsters Union said today that he had been misquoted...as saying that he could call a general nationwide strike, if Congress passed anti-trust legislation against organized labor. The Associated Press reporter...who covered Hoffa's speech yesterday...is sticking by his story.

Up to the present the Four Power Conference at Geneva has not been much more than an international charade. The real conference is yet to begin. It will be held between few negotiators, talking behind closed doors and working without the daily press briefings. This is not said because it is news. Everybody having to do with the conference knows it. Everybody expected it. Nobody is taken in by the charade. If there is any difference between this and previous conferences with the Russians it is that the public is more sophisticated this time. The communications media carry the huge daily output from Geneva. Newspapers report the speeches. Editors and broadcasters comment. People read and listen. In a sense, they too are part of the charade. But while acting their role they are not deceived by it; at least that is the impression of this reporter. Enough of sober and sobering reality was stated in advance of the conference for anyone to realize that negotiations with the Russians have to go through a kind of rigamarole. There has bo be a charade before the bargaining begins. And once the bargaining has started it is tough, protracted and, as a rule, not very fruitful. The best to be hoped for at the end is a start, so far as the solution of the European crisis is concerned. The small steps to be taken will be outlined in the restricted meetings that will begin probably next week, then, after the inevitable slow-motion wrangling, something will emerge that can be taken to the Summit. And that will round out Act One of this particular phase of history.

However, everything else that has happenedat Geneva - what I have called the charade - is not without some meaning. Both sides had to state their maximum positions. It may have been futile to do this, but that is the way men behave. They do it even if they know they can't get their maximum or anything like it. But the point of the charade is to impress onlookers as well as to speak for the record, and to do so before passing on to the minimum terms. Here the exercise is i n the art of propaganda.

It is too early to say who is doing the better propaganda job at Geneva. The Russians have the obvious advantage that they can pose as being sweet and reasonable, which is all the better as propaganda for coming after the harsh and unreasonable demand that the Allies get out of Berlin by May 27th. The Russians are good at this sort of thing. They know how to be frightening and obnoxious and then clap on a mask of genial kindness. At Geneva so far Gromyko has always said his "Nyet" with a smile and something like a twinkle in his eye.

But the best stroke of propaganda so far was the interview Khrushchev gave a group of Florida businessmen which was released today. In it Khrushchev added another to his growing list of proverbs. "To achieve something difficult," he said, "it is necessary to eat a ton of salt. The Foreign Ministers," he went on, "will have to eat a lot of salt, and we are prepared to eat more than a ton if necessary." The conference, he predicted, will succeed, otherwise the Russians wouldn't have gone. Another prediction: There will never be war between the United States and Russia. Still another: Russia will have an increasing degree of democracy as its standard of living rises.

It was Judge Frnnk Smathers, father of the Senator, who asked about war. "I do not believe that your people want to fight to destroy Communism in our country," answered Khrushchev, "nor are we dreaming of destroying capitalism in your country. This is nonsense. Socialism will replace capitalism as an inevitable historic process. We will have to sweat plenty to catch up with you. But when we get there we shall not harm a single soul."

He talked about bombers and rockets. "Your Generals," he said, "speak about your wonderful bombing force. We say that to compare a bomber to a rocket is like comparing a buggy to an automobile. There is no defense against a ballistic missile." But he insisted that the Soviet weapons are defensive. "We will not start a war," he said, "and no lunatic in the United States will start one."

On the western side nobody knows how to be as chummy and ingratiating as Khrushchev in this mood. He makes it hard for a moment to remember how tough the Russians are to bargain with or that his threats produced this Geneva Meeting.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The best to be hoped for at the end of the foreign ministers meeting is a "beginning." What has happened so far is a kind of charade. Publilius Syrus said, "The little foolery that wise men have makes a great show." And this one is worth sitting through. "He that will have a cake out of the wheat," Shakespeare said, "must tarry the grinding."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 21, 1959

This is the news:

The House today passed a multi-billion-dollar housing bill...after rejecting all Republican attempts to re-draft it along lines favored by the President. The final vote was 261 to 160. Mr. Eisenhower's principal objection to the measure as passed was its provision for a four-year public housing program. The bill also includes a three-year slum elimination program costing one and one-half billion dollars. About the only provision contained in the measure of which the President does approve is that increasing the mortgage insurance authority of the F.H.A. The House bill now goes to a conference committee for reconciliation with a similar measure passed by the Senate.

"he Geneva conference of foreign ministers took a "social" turn tonight...and for that story we switch now to Geneva and my colleague David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs approx 2 mins
Returns on cue: "---to ERM in NY."

The Communist news agency in East Germany today protested the presence in Geneva of the American secretary of defense. Secretary McElroy, the agency claimed, went to the conference because American generals and munitions makers are "disturbed" at the prospect there might be a settlement. Actually, McElroy went to Geneva as had been planned all along as an adviser to Secretary Herter on security matters.

Here in New York today, Secretary General Hammarskjold told a news conference that it was "undesirable" for a United Nations garrison force to be stationed in Berlin. He did think there should be a link between the United Nations and any summit conference for the benefit of other countries not represented.

The House Appropriations Committee today approved the creation of a special unit within the State Department to make a continuing, full-time study of the Soviet offensive in the economic field. The committee recommended 113-million dollars for running the United States Information Agency, 7-million dollars less than had been requested. And its overall recommendation for the State and Justice Departments and their related agencies was 650-million dollars, or a cut of about four percent.

Also in the House, the Public Works Committee approved legislation making it possible to proceed with the federal highway program. The nationwide project has been threatened with interruption, due to lack of funds. President Eisenhower asked that the federal gasoline tax be raised to keep the program operating on a "pay as you go" basis. But the bill, as approved today, would allow the Bureau of Public Roads to borrow from the Treasury.

The House took further action on the housing bill and gave the Administration its second defeat in two days. By a vote of 175 to 91, it defeated an attempt to knock all public housing authority out of the measure. Yesterday...by a vote of 203 to 177...it rejected a substitute bill that would have left out the public housing feature. The legislation in its present form would require the government to subsidize low-rent housing under contract with local agencies for 40 years. It also includes a three-year slum elimination program costing one and one-half billion dollars.

A series of tax reform bills were submitted in Congress today by four Democratic senators. One measure would eliminate many of the deductions that a businessman can make for entertainment. The others would cut down the depletion allowances granted oil companies and repeal the special tax credits allowed on ~~[illegible]~~ income derived from dividends.

The Senate Armed Services Committee today unanimously approved the nomination of Thomas S. Gates as deputy secretary of defense. The President named Gates...who is retiring as Navy secretary...to succeed Donald Quarles, who died of a heart attack last week.

The Air Force chief of staff, General Thomas White, said today that the money being spent on preparedness to fight a general war is...in his opinion..."not excessive." General White would not say which he regards as more probable---a limited war, or a general war. "But," he said, "I do know which I consider more dangerous."

→

At Vandenberg Air Force Base...in California...the launching of four mice into outer space was called off this afternoon because of unfavorable weather. The mice are to be placed in orbit in a capsule, contained in a Discoverer Three satellite, and then an effort will be made to recover them alive.

President Eisenhower has formally nominated John Cabot, a career diplomat (who is currently ambassador to Colombia), to be the new United States ambassador to Brazil. This is the post which Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce turned down after heated Senate debate.

Edward R. Murrow: May 21, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The grimmest side of history is written in the lives of soldiers and refugees. In some degree soldiers are honored. Those who survive can go home, and are given some help to adjust themselves to civilian life. The refugees ~~do~~ CAN not ~~CANNOT~~ go home. That is what it means to be a refugee. If they are fortunate they can be transplanted and some may go on to flourish in the new soil. But without this good fortune, refugees are herded into camps and shelters where "they live as a race apart from the world."

4 There are still refugees in the South of France from the civil war in Spain. There are still a hundred and twenty refugee camps in Europe. Numerically the worst refugee problems are the mainland Chinese in Hong Kong and the Arab refugees from Palestine. There are about a million in each group.

Secretary General Hammarskjold has estimated that forty million men, women and children have become refugees since the end of World War II, and that fifteen million remain without permanent homes. The United Nations helps two to three million of these. The remainder get such aid as they receive from individual governments and private organizations.

Last year the United Nations Assembly asked member states to observe a "world refugee year" starting this summer, and thirty-one nations have responded, the United States among them. President Eisenhower yesterday proclaimed the twelve months beginning July 1st as World Refugee Year in the United States, and asked all Americans to support the programs worked out during the year for refugees. Today in Washington a White House conference on world refugees was opened, attended by a hundred and sixty representatives of charity and welfare agencies.

A survey of refugees made by the New York Times ranges from Hong Kong to the Middle East, to the refugees remaining in Europe - those from Algeria already numbering a hundred and eighty thousand - to the latest victims of oppression, the Tibetans taking refuge in India.

The worst problem in Asia is in Hong Kong, where one of every three persons is a refugee. Seven hundred thousand live in squatter communities, in caves or huts patched together from tin and bamboo. The colony cannot provide work for many of them. There is no place for them to go. One child of three dies from tuberculosis. The British authorities are incapable of handling so massive a problem, and though the colony is spending large sums for dwellings, clinics and schools, large-scale outside help is needed. The United States is sending five million dollars' worth of food from surplus stocks, but it would cost a hundred million to cover the elementary needs of the refugees, a sum that simply will not be forthcoming.

The Palestine refugees registered with the United Nations Relief Agency number just under nine hundred and sixty thousand, over half of them living in Jordan, as many as two hundred and forty thousand in the narrow Gaza Strip and over a hundred thousand each in Lebanon and Syria. The agency's annual budget is thirty million dollars, of which the United States and Britain have been providing about ninety percent. Last year there was not enough money to continue a policy of grants or to give vocational training, both needed if the refugees are to be fit for any other life. ~~It is hoped enough money will be raised this year to resume these two programs. The problem of Palestinian refugees is, of course, enormously complicated by Arab politics. The Arab countries and the refugees' leaders themselves veto most of the plans for large-scale re-settlement.~~

4

It is not only the lack of money that makes the refugee problem unmanageable. It is having places to which the refugees can go. Here the United States can do far more than it has been doing. It used to be the American tradition to encourage the oppressed to go to free lands and start a new life. But the present-day restrictions on entry into this country keep us from doing anything like our share in solving the problem. One result of the World Refugee Year may be a generous revision of our immigration laws. The Immigration Sub-Committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduling hearings on several proposals to relax the conditions of entry. One of these, sponsored by Senator Javits, would establish a permanent refugee program authorizing the President to admit up to sixty thousand refugees a year. One lesson of modern history is that refugees do not return home. They must be absorbed somehow, somewhere.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.—

Word for Today

The problem of refugees is so big as to appear well-nigh insoluble, but the United States by changing its immigration laws can do much to help. This happens to be the 75th birthday of the Statue of Liberty...and finds engraved there the famous line by Emma Lazarus: "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday May 21, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

48
28

MURROW: The Geneva conference of foreign ministers took a social turn tonight, and for that story we switch now to Geneva and my collegue David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The big four have gone to bed after a hard day and a hearty dinner. The hearty dinner was hosted by Christain Herter who also had the hard day. The dinner was supposed to be the first working session in secret of the Big Four, but according to spokesmen tonight they didn't work. They just sat around, had a good dinner and exchanged light jokes. They observed the fact that the moon was full and that there was a superb view of the Mont Blanc from the terrace. That's about the only substantive thing that they discussed and there is only one correction to make -- the moon was not full. As for the hard day, it was quite an unusual one for Mr. Herter. For the first time since this conference began the gentlemanly, soft spoken American Secretary of State spoke sharply to Russia's Gromyko. The sharp exchange came at the end of today's session. Mr. Herter had sat silently through a long session of unproductive speeches. His face grew tight as he heard Mr. Bolz of East Germany charge that West Germany was a menace and that it threatened a revival of militarism. Mr. Herter's patience finally snapped when Gromyko renewed his charges that NATO was an aggressive threat to peace. Herter asked for the floor and said, "I had not planned to talk today, but I think I should say a word about some of the remarks that Mr. Gromyko made that had better have been left unsaid." The atmosphere in the room was tense at that moment as everyone waited to hear what Herter had on his mind. The American Secretary sharply denied the accusations against NATO and West Germany, and warned Gromyko that if he continued to carry on this kind of talk, then the chances of negotiating seriously here would be nullified very rapidly. Said Mr. Herter, and I Quote, "I therefore hope that in the course of the discussions as they will proceed in the future, this type of accusation and innuendo will cease, and that it will not, if repeated, leads to a type of discussion which can become a very great irritant and, more than that, might lead to very serious tension." At that point Chairman Lloyd adjourned the meeting, and the foreign ministers will meet again tomorrow afternoon. This is Geneva, David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. 5/25/59 JF

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 21, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The House today passed a multi-billion dollar housing bill...after rejecting all Republican attempts to re-draft it along lines favored by the President. The final vote was 261 to 160. Mr. Eisenhower's principal objection to the measure as passed was its provision for a four-year public housing program. The bill also includes a three-year slum elimination program costing one and one-half billion dollars. About the only provision contained in the measure of which the President does approve is that increasing the mortgage insurance authority of the F.H.A. The House bill now goes to a conference committee for reconciliation with a similar measure passed by the Senate.

The Geneva conference of foreign ministers took a "social" turn tonight... and for that story we switch now to Geneva and my colleague David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: The Big Four have gone to bed after a hard day and a hearty dinner. The hearty dinner was hosted by Christian Herter who also had the hard day. The dinner was supposed to be the first working session in secret of the Big Four, but according to spokesmen tonight they didn't work. They just sat around, had a good dinner and exchanged light jokes. they observed the fact that the moon was full and that there was a superb view of the Mont Blanc from the terrace. That's about the only substantive thing that they discussed and there is only one correction to make -- the moon was not full. As for the hard day, it was quite an unusual one for Mr. Herter. For the first time since this conference began the gentlemanly, soft-spoken American Secretary of State spoke sharply to Russia's Gromyko. The sharp exchange came at the end of today's session. Mr. Herter had sat silently through a long session of unproductive speeches. His face grew tight as he heard Mr. Bolz of East Germany charge that West Germany was a menace and that it threatened a revivial of militarism. Mr. Herter's patience finally snapped when Gromyko renewed his charges that NATO was an aggressive threat to peace. Herter asked for the floor and said, "I had not planned to talk today, but I think I should say a word about some of the remarks that Mr. Gromyko made that had better have been left unsaid." The atmosphere in the room was tense at that moment as everyone waited to hear what Herter had on his mind. The American Secretary sharply denied the accusations against NATO and West Germany, and warned Gromyko that if he continued to carry on this kind of talk, then the chances of negotiating seriously here would be nullified very rapidly. Said Mr. Herter, and I quote, "I therefore hope that in the course of the discussions as they will proceed in the future, this type of accusation and innuendo will cease, and that it will not, if repeated lead to a type of discussion which can become a very great irritant and, more than that, might lead to very serious tension." At that point Chairman Lloyd adjourned the meeting, and the foreign ministers will meet again tomorrow afternoon. This is Geneva, David Schoenbrun reporting. I return you now to Edward R. Murrow in N. Y.

MURROW: The Communists news agency in East Germany today protested the presence in Geneva of the American secretary of defense. Secretary McElroy, the agency claimed, went to the conference because American generals and munitions makers are "disturbed" at the prospect there might be a settlement. Actually, McElroy went to Geneva as had been planned all along as an adviser to Secretary Herter on security matters.

Here in New York today, Secretary General Hammarskjold told a news conference that it was "undesirable" for a United Nations garrison force to be stationed in Berlin. He did think this should be a link between the United Nations and any summit conference for the benefit of other countries not represented.

The House Appropriations Committee today approved the creation of a special unit within the State Department to make a continuing, full-time study of the Soviet offensive in the economic field. The committee recommended 113 million dollars for running the United States Information Agency, 7-million dollars less than had been requested. And its overall recommendation for the State and Justice Departments and their related agencies was 650-million dollars, or a cut of about four percent.

Also in the House, the Public Works Committee approved legislation making it possible to proceed with the federal highway program. The nationwide project has been threatened with interruption, due to lack of funds. President Eisenhower asked that the federal gasoline tax be raised to keep the program operating on a "pay as you go" basis. But the bill, as approved today, would allow the Bureau of Public Roads to borrow from the Treasury.

A series of tax reform bills were submitted in Congress today by four Democratic senators. One measure would eliminate many of the deductions that a businessman can make for entertainment. The others would cut down the depletion allowances granted oil companies and repeal the special tax credits allowed on income derived from dividends.

The Air Force chief of staff, General Thomas White, said today that the money being spent on preparedness to fight a general war is...in his opinion..."not excessive." General White would not say which he regards as more probable---a limited war, or a general war. "But," he said, "I do know which I consider more dangerous.

At Vandenberg Air Force Base...in California...the launching of four mice into outer space was called off this afternoon because of unfavorable weather. The mice are to be placed in orbit in a capsule, contained in a Discoverer Three satellite and that an effort will be made to recover them alive.

The grimmest side of history is written in the lives of soldiers and refugees. In some degree soldiers are honored. Those who survive can go home, and are given some help to adjust themselves to civilian life. The refugees can not go home. That is what it means to be a refugee. If they are fortunate they can be transplanted and some may go on to flourish in the new soil. But without this good fortune, refugees are herded into camps and shelters where "they live as a race apart from the world."

Secretary General Hammarskjold has estimated that forty million men, women and children have become refugees since the end of World War II, and that fifteen million remain without permanent homes. The United Nations helps two to three million of these. The remainder get such aid as they received from individual governments and private organizations.

Last year the United Nations Assembly asked member states to observe a world refugee year starting this summer, and thirty-one nations have responded, the United States among them. President Eisenhower yesterday proclaimed the twelve months beginning July 1st as World Refugee Year in the United States, and asked all Americans to support the programs worked out during the year for refugees. Today in Washington a White House conference on world refugees was opened, attended by a hundred and sixty representatives of charity and welfare agencies.

The worst problem in Asia is in Hong Kong, where one of every three persons in a refugee. Seven hundred thousand live in squatter communities, in caves or huts patched together from tin and bamboo. The colony cannot provide work forma ny of them. There is no place for them to go. One child of three dies from tuberculosis. The British authorities are incapable of handling so massive a problem, and though the colony is spending large sums for dwellings, clinics and schools, large-scale outside help is needed. The United States is sending five million dollars' worth of food from surplus stocks, but it would cost a hundred million to cover the elementary needs of the refugees, a sum that simply will not be forthcoming.

The Palestine refugees registered with the United Nations Relief Agency number just under nine hundred and sixty thousand, over half of them living in Jordan, as many as two hundred and forty thousand in the narrow Gaza Strip and over a hundred thousand each in Lebanon and Syria. The agency's annual budget is thirty million dollars, of which the United States and Britain have been providing about ninety percent. Last year there was not enough money to continue a policy of grants or to give vocational training, both needed if the refugees are to be fit for any other life.

It is not only the lack of money that makes the refugee problem unmanageable. It is having places to which the refugees can go. Here the United States can do far more than it has been doing. It used to be the American tradition to encourage the oppressed to go to free lands and start a new life. But the present-day restrictions on entry into this country keep us from doing anything like our share in solving the problem. One result of the World Refugee Year may be a generous revision of our immigration laws. The Immigration Sub-Committee of the Senate Judiciary Committee is scheduling hearings on several proposals to relax the conditions of entry. One of these, sponsored by Senator Javits, would establish a permanent refugee program authorizing the President to admit up to sixty thousand refugees a year. One lesson of modern history is that refugees do not return home. They must be absorbed somehow, somewhere.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The problem of refugees is so big as to appear well-nigh insoluble but the United States by changing its immigration laws can do much to help. This happens to be the 75th birthday of the Statue of Liberty...and finds engraved there the famous line by Emma Lazarus: "Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 22, 1959

This is the news:

The Western foreign ministers in Geneva today announced that the presentation of their "peace plan" is now completed. A Western spokesman said: "It is now to be hoped that the Soviet delegation will put forward next week some constructive new proposal that may serve as a basis for discussion." The spokesman added that it would be "impossible" to use the Soviet peace treaty as a basis for discussion. The Western ministers issued their announcement after the shortest "working session" of the conference so far---a session that lasted only an hour and fourteen minutes. Secretary of State Herter raised the question of resuming the disarmament talks which have been at a standstill for more than a year. "I should like to make clear," he said, "that the United States does not irrevocably link general disarmament measures with the reunification of Germany." He said: "We are prepared to resume general disarmament negotiations in an appropriate forum at any time."

Dispatches from Moscow quote two statements reportedly made by Khrushchev. One has Khrushchev telling the West German ambassador that Russia will sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany, if the Geneva conference fails. The other story quotes him as saying he would be "very glad" if an agreement is reached for the cessation of nuclear weapons tests. Khrushchev said he thought that a ban could be enforced by a limited number of inspections---the phrase he used was "selective" inspections. He thought there might be such an agreement by Christmas.

The State Department today gave Averell Harriman permission to visit Communist China as a correspondent. In asking that his passport be validated, Harriman said he would make the trip as a reporter for the North American Newspaper Alliance. The State Department says it has no information as to whether Red China will grant Harriman a visa. He is currently in Russia.

A breakfast guest at the White House today was United Nations Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold. Later in the morning, President Eisenhower flew to Annapolis, where...on the St. John's College campus...he spoke at a dedication ceremony. The fate of this nation, the President said, is bound up with the fate of others. We must answer the question: How to meet the world challenge of Communism and still preserve our way of life.

From Annapolis, the President flew by helicopter to Gettysburg for a week-end on his farm.

A White House conference on refugees adopted a resolution today...urging the United States to put up more money for the resettlement of homeless persons. It also called for the admission of more refugees to this country.

The proposal made by Democratic Senator Fulbright for expanding the foreign development loan fund received the endorsement today of the United Auto Workers Union, the Cooperative League, the A.F.L. - C.I.O., and Americans for Democratic Action. But a spokesman for the American Farm Bureau Federation...testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee... expressed the view that the program of loans to under-developed countries, instead of being expanded, should be cut. Senator Fulbright has asked the Administration to express its stand by the first of next week.

→

An Army spokesman said today that the proposed cutback in the Nike Hercules anti-aircraft missile program "menaces the nation's security." Last week, the Senate Armed Services Committee proposed that three-fourths of the launching sites planned for this type of missile be eliminated. The Army spokesman contended that the competing Bomarc missile system being developed by the Air Force cannot assume a "significant" defense role for at least two years.

The Senate voted today to put a 35-thousand-dollar ceiling on loans which can be made to any one farmer under the price support program. The provision was contained in a compromise wheat measure which the Senate passed and sent to the House. The House already has gone on record as favoring a maximum payment of 50-thousand dollars.

The government reports that the cost of living in April went up two-tenths of one percent. This contrasts with the report for the month of March which showed no change. Actually, the cost-of-living index has not varied more than two-tenths of a percentage point for the past ten months, a record for what the Labor Department calls "sustained stability."

Customs officers in Miami have seized ten persons...loading a transport plane with arms which, authorities say, apparently were destined for the Dominican Republic. The cargo included rifles and machine guns and 200-thousand rounds of ammunition. Custom officers say that the Dominican consul in Miami attempted to bribe two customs agents.

The foreign ministers meeting in Geneva has now gone through its second week. For a summation of the talks so far...and where they go from here.... we switch now to Geneva and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

Tape runs 5:00
Ends on cue: "New back to ERM in NY."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr, analyzing the foreign ministers conference thus far. [The conference resumes on Monday, Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko presiding.]

Word for Today

The foreign ministers are playing a "game of waiting"---each holding back, hoping to smoke the other side out. Dan Schorr suggested that the success of their talks will be written in gray---not black and white. A French diplomat was once asked how he thought an international conference would end. "Ah," he said, "it will end like all of them---with a communique."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, May 22, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

MURROW: The foreign ministers meeting in Geneva has now gone through its second week. For a summation of the talks so far and where they go from here, we switch to Genevam and my collegue, Daniel Shhorr.

SCHORR: Two weeks of the foreign ministers conference are over. For the West, despite minor intramuralpositions and irritations, this has been a fairly easy period, a period of dogged exposition of an agreed plan and equally dogged rejection of an unacceptable Soviet plan. The tough time lies ahead, the exercise in wait-man-ship, the time when unity will be tried and nerves will be tested. The Western strategy now is to sit back and to wait for new proposals from the Soviets. American spokesman Andres Bearding said tonight the Western presentation of its peace plan is complete. It's now to be hoped that the Soviet delegation will put forward next week some constructive new proposals. The Soviets are apparently prepared to play wait-man-ship too their own way. Soviet spokesman Mikhail Kamrlamov said blandly tonight the ministers have not met in several years. There are many things to discuss, these two weeks have not been a waste of time, this period is not the longest in the history of negotiations of this kind. On the Western side the aim is full of ideas on how to break through the morass of speech making including the suggestions for formal meetings only on alternate days allowing time for secret ~~xxxxxx~~ in between. On the Soviet side there's a posture of complete satisfaction with the progress made so far. And Russian spokesmen say they see no reason why the conference should not continue this way with barely formal meetings and informal social contacts. ~~After~~ As for those social contacts last night at Secretary Herter's dinner for the Big Four the Western ministers decided in advance to sit back and wait for Russia's Gromyko to suggest some new ideas. Gromyko decided also to sit back and after the fish, the chicken and the strawberries with no idea he invited the Western ministers to dinner at his villa next Tuesday.

In the game of wait-man-ship there are some obvious advantages on the Soviet side. Gromyko is one minister. The Western ministers are three or four if you count West Germany's Von Brentano, and the chances for division under strain are much greater. Already Britain's Selwyn Lloyd is reported to be tired of being attacked from the rear for his role of artist broker and has temporarily suggested that Secretary Herter take the lead from now on. On the Western side the advantage is that we know Khrushchev wants the summit conference. What the Russians know is that Macmillan wants one too, and they can afford to spend another few weeks in debate without jeprodizing the summit. The Soviet are well clothed. The Western positions, thanks to competitive leaks are almost naked. In the game of wait-man-ship most of the cards at the moment appear to be on the Soviet side. They can stall for some time on the pretext of a desire for full discussion. Among some Western diplomats there are serious doubts that Western unity will withstand this test for very long. Dictatorships are better at that kind of game than democracies. And that is why behind the facade of Western calm there's a certain nervousness, especially among the British and to some extent among the Americans. The French and the West Germans are less nervous because they have little stake in the success of this conference anyway. And that is why the British are trying harder than the others to arrange secret sessions for real negotiations. It is also why the British alone among all the delegations have any clear idea of what minimum success this conference could achieve. The British know that the West cannot give up its position, that German unification must come before a peace treaty, and they know the Russians will not yeild their position, that a peace treaty with a divided Germany must come first. The British feel the only chance now is to abandon hope of success written in balck and white, and to seek a more obscure success written in gray. The British would like to see this conference end with an agreed statement whose lines have already been suggested by Selwyn Lloyd. We agree on the need for German unity. We agree for the need for elections at some stage. We agree that in some form there must be discussion between the two parts of Germany about their election laws. We agree that a peace treaty must at some stage be concluded with Germany. Such a statement, emphasizing however subtly the points of agreements rather than disagreements must be considered enough progress to justify a summit meeting if accompanied by a tacit understanding that Western rights in Berlin will be preserved. And that is what the British are aiming for. But, before that or anything else can happen the West must first endure the trial by waiting. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. 6/5/59 JF

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 22, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Western foreign ministers in Geneva today announced that the presentation of their "peace plan" is now completed. A Western spokesman said: "It is now to be hoped that the Soviet delegation will put forward next week some constructive new proposal that may serve as a basis for discussion." The spokesman added that it would be "impossible" to use the Soviet peace treaty as a basis for discussion. The Western ministers issued their announcement after the shortest working session of the conference so far---a session that lasted only an hour and fourteen minutes. Secretary of State Herter raised the question of resuming the disarmament talks which have been at a standstill for more than a year. "I should like to make clear," he said, "that the United States does not irrevocably link general disarmament measures with the reunification of Germany." He said: "We are prepared to resume general disarmament negotiations in an appropriate forum at any time."

Dispatches from Moscow quote two statements reportedly made by Khrushchev. One has Khrushchev telling the West German ambassador that Russia will sign a separate peace treaty with East Genmany, if the Geneva conference fails. The other story quotes him as saying he would be "very glad" if an agreement is reached for the cessation of nuclear weapons tests. Khrushchev said he thought that a ban could be enforced by a limited number of inspections---the phrase he used was "selective" inspections. He thought there might be such an agreement by Christmas.

The State Department today gave Averell Harriman permission to visit Communist China as a correspondent. In asking that his passport be validated, Harriman said he would make the trip as a reporter for the North American Newspaper Alliance. The State Department says it has no information as to whether Red China will grant Harriman a visa. He is currently in Russia.

A breakfast guest at the White House today was United Nations Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold. Later in the morning, President Eisenhower flew to Annapolis, where...on the St. John's College campus...he spoke at a dedication ceremony. The fate of this nation, the President said, is bound up with the fate of others. We must answer the question: How to meet the world challenge of Communism and still preserve our way of life.

From Annapolis, the President flew by helicopter to Gettysburg for a weekend on his farm.

A White House conference on refugees adopted a resolution today, urging the United States to put up more money for the resettlement of homeless persons. It also called for the admission of more refugees to this country.

The proposal made by Democratic Senator Fulbright for expanding the foreign development loan fund received the endorsement today of the United Auto Workers Union, the Cooperative League, the A.F.L.-C.I.O., and Americans for Democratic Action. But a spokesman for the American Farm Bureau Federation...testifying before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee...expressed the view that the program of loans to under-developed countries, instead of being expanded, should be cut. Senator Fulbright has asked the Administration to express its stand by the first of next week.

An Army spokesman said today that the proposed cutback in the Nike Hercules anti-aircraft missile program menaces the nation's security. Last week, the Senate Armed Services Committee proposed that three-fourths of the launching sites planned for this type of missile be eliminated. The Army spokesman contended that the competing Bomarc missile system being developed by the Air Force cannot assume a "significant" defense role for at least two years.

The Senate voted today to put a 35-thousand-dollar ceiling on loans which can be made to any one farmer under the price support program. The provision was contained in a compromise wheat measure which the Senate passed and sent to the House. The House already has gone on record as favoring a maximum payment of 50-thousand dollars.

The government reports that the cost of living in April went up two-tenths of one percent. This contrasts with the report for the month of March which showed no change. Actually, the cost-of-living index has not varied more that two-tenths of a percentage point for the past ten months, a record for what the Labor Department calls "sustained stability."

Customs officers inMiami have seized ten persons...loading a transport plane with arms which, authorities say, apparently were destined for the Domincian Republic. The cargo included rifles and machine guns and 200-thousand rounds of ammunition. Custom officers say that the Dominican consul in Miami attempted to b ribe two customs agents.

The foreign ministers meeting in Geneva has now gone through its second week. For a summation of the talks so far...and where they go from here...we switch now to Geneva and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: Two weeks of the foreign ministers conference are over. For the West, despite minor intramural positions and irritations, this has been a fairly easy period, a period of dogged exposition of an agreed plan and equally dogged rejection of an unacceptable Soviet plan. The tough time lies ahead, the exercise in wait-man-ship, the time when unity will be tried and nerves will be tested. The Western strategy now is to sit back and to wait for new proposals from the Soviets. American spokesman Andrew Bearding said tonight the Western presentation of its peace plan is complete. It's now to be hoped that the Soviet delegation will put forward next week some constructive new proposals. The Soviets are apparently prepared to play wait-man-ship too their own way. Soviet spokesman Mikhail Karrlamov said blandly tonight the ministers have not met in several years. There are many things to discuss, these two weeks have not been a waste of time, this period is not the longest in the history of negotiations of this kind. On the western side the air is full of ideas on how to break through the morass of speech making including the suggestions for formal meetings only on alternate days allowing time for secret in between. On the Soviet side there's a posture of complete satisfaction with the progress made so far. And Russian spokesmen say they see no reason why the conference should not continue this way with barely formal meetings and informal social contacts. As for those social contacts last night at Secretary Herter's dinner for the Big Four, the Western ministers decided in advance to sit back and wait for Russia's Gromyko to suggest some new ideas. Gromyko decided also to sit back and after the fish, the chicken and the strawberries with no idea he invited the Western ministers to dinner at his villa next Tuesday.

In the game of wait-man-ship there are some obvious advantages on the Soviet side. Gromyko is one minister. The Western ministers are three or four if you count West Germany's Von Brentano, and the chances for division under strain are much greater. Already Britain's Selwyn Lloyd is reported to be tired of being attacked from the rear for his role of artist broker and has temporarily suggested that Secretary Herter take the lead from now on. On the Western side the advantage is that we know Khrushchev wants the summit conference. What the Russians know is that Macmillian wants one too, and they can afford to spend another few weeks in debate without jepordizing the summit. The Soviet are well-clothed. The Western position, thanks to competitive leaks are almost naked. In the game of wait-man-ship most of the cards at the moment appear to be on the Soviet side. They can stall for some time on the pretext of a desire for full discussion. Among some Western diplomats there are serious doubts that Western unity will withstand this test for very long. Dictatorships are better at that kind of game than democracies. And that is why behind the facade of Western calm there's a certain nervousness, especially among the British and to some extent among the Americans. The French and the West Germans are less nervous because they have little stake in the success of this conference anyway. And that is why the British are trying harder than the others to arrange secret sessions for real negotiations. It is also why the British alone among all the delegations have any clear idea of what minimum success this conference could achieve. The British know that the West cannot give up its position, that German unification must come before a peace treaty, and they know the Russians will not yield their position, that a peace treaty with a divided Germany must come first. The British feel the only chance now is to abandon hope of success written in black and white, and to seek a more obscure success written in gray. The British would like to see this conference end with an agreed statement whose lines have already been suggested by Selwyn Lloyd. We agree on the need for German unity. We agree for the need for elections at some stage. We agree that in some form there must be discussion between the two parts of Germany about their election laws. We agree that a peace treaty must at some stage be concluded with Germany. Such a statement emphasizing however subtly the points of agreements rather than disagreements must be considered enough progress to justify a summit meeting if accompanied by a tacit understanding that Western rights in Berlin will be preserved. And that is what the British are aiming for. But, before that or anything else can happen the West must first endure the trial by waiting. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The foreign ministers are playing a "game of waiting"---each holding back, hoping to smoke the other side out. Dan Schorr suggested that the success of their talks will be written in gray---not black and white. A French diplomat was once asked how he thought an international conference would end. "Ah," he said, "it will end like all of them---with a communique."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., May 25, 1959

This is the news:

The White House continues to receive messages of condolence in the death of former Secretary of State Dulles. And so does the Dulles family. Pope John cabled the President today that Mr. Dulles' "untiring efforts to achieve just solution to the world's problems had won admiration of all men of good will." Queen Elizabeth of England sent a message to Mrs. Dulles, expressing "heartfelt sympathy". In Congress today, the Democratic leader of the House...McCormack of Massachusetts...paid tribute to Dulles...calling him "a great American who will go down in history as one of our great secretaries of state." House Republican Leader Halleck described Dulles as "a rugged, honest, dedicated man with just unlimited capacity." Tomorrow, five of the foreign ministers at the Geneva conference will fly to Washington for Mr. Dulles' funeral...which will be held Wednesday afternoon. It had been known for more than 24 hours that Selwyn Lloyd of Britain, Von Brentano of West Germany and Couve de Murville of France would be attending with Secretary Herter, as well as with the foreign ministers of Italy and Japan. But late today it was announced that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko also will fly to Washington for the funeral service. The only foreign head of government to attend will be Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany.

Moscow radio today broke its editorial silence on the death of Dulles. The broadcast emphasized Mr. Dulles' legal and business background. It said he had "important connections with the Morgans."

The eleventh session of the Geneva foreign ministers conference opened with each delegation expressing regret over Mr. Dulles' death. In the debate that followed, Gromyko again rejected the Western package proposal and charged that West German "militarism" was a threat to world peace. Secretary of State Herter then accused Gromyko of trying to confuse the negotiations by making false charges. The truth, said Herter, is that...on the basis of population...East Germany has four to five times as many men under arms as West Germany. Gromyko retorted that Herter had said nothing about letting the West Germans have nuclear weapons.

The State Department today brushed aside Russia's latest note warning the United States to stop setting up missile bases in Western Europe. The department said it saw no need for carrying on the correspondence since there was nothing in the Soviet note which had not been effectively answered before. It would be "helpful", the department added, if the Soviet government would stop making these threats while negotiations on European security are still in progress.

The United States and Canada have signed an agreement providing for an exchange of atomic information for mutual defense. The agreement becomes effective in 60 days, unless rejected by Congress or by the Canadian parliament.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev arrived in Albania today for his first visit to that isolated satellite state. The fact that Khrushchev will be in Albania as long as twelve days has not been officially explained. One theory is that he will have the propaganda campaign the Albanian Communists have been waging against Yugoslavia toned down. While flying over Yugoslavia today, Khrushchev had a birthday greeting radioed to President Tito...who is 67...although a similar birthday message already had been sent from Moscow.

In Washington, the Justice Department announces that it will take no further part in the case of Mack Parker, the 23-year-old Negro lynched in Mississippi last month. Attorney General Rogers said it had been "clearly established" that persons responsible for the crime had not violated the federal kidnaping statute. Consequently, he said, the evidence obtained by F.B.I. agents had been turned over to Governor Coleman of Mississippi for prosecution on the state level. Coleman announced that the information would be made available to the next regular session of the Pearl River County grand jury in November. He said that pending grand jury action, he would not...under any circumstances...reveal any part of the F.B.I. report.

The Supreme Court today struck down a Louisiana state law barring competition between Negro and white athletes. The Supreme Court gave no written opinion. By unanimous action, it simply affirmed a lower Federal Court ruling that the state law was unconstitutional The case involved a Negro boxer, Joseph Dorsey, who contended that while the state has the right to regulate boxing, a statute prohibiting prize fights between persons of different race "plainly violates rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment." The state had argued that the law was not discriminatory because prohibitions and penalties were the same, regardless of race.

Voters in the Little Rock School District went to the polls today to recall all...or part...of the school board. The outcome could decide whether the Little Rock high schools will re-open next fall on an integrated or segregated basis. Three of the school board members are segregationists; the other three members are "moderates"...who have said they favor the re-opening of the high schools, "even if it means integration." Today's voting is described as heavy. The results will not be known for several hours.

Edward R. Murrow: May 25, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

If in the next thirty years or so this country falls behind its world rivals, in all the fields affected by skill and knowledge, it won't be because it has not been warned. / This week end brought a new warning. / It was in a report by the President's Science Advisory Commission under Dr. James Killian Jr. / It said in effect that the least that needs to be done, is to double the sum being currently spent on education. / This is four percent of our gross national product. / Put that way, it sounds manageable. / But it comes to eighteen billion dollars, and to find another eighteen billions a year for education, on top of the forty billions for defense, seems well-nigh impossible. / One needs only recall how hard it has been to get money to build only a fraction of the school rooms needed to accomodate the children now of school age, not to mention overcoming the shortage of teachers, and their inadequate training.

It was not the function of Dr. Killian's commission to map out how the additional eighteen billions could be raised every year. / That is up to the President, the Congress and the local communities. / But President Eisenhower, in a statement accompanying the report, said nothing about raising another eighteen billions a year for education. / He did not try to adjust his sights to any such figure, which obviously would play havoc with a balanced budget. All he said was that he hoped the report would be widely read, and would stimulate a wider understanding of the importance of excellence in our educational system. And that seems to doom the Killian report to be just another report, to be briefly summarized in the mass media, read by specialists, andthen filed away in the archives.

It would be a mistake to say that the threat of Soviet science and production was not realized in this country till the first Sputnik started circling the earth. There was no secret about the excellence and extent of Soviet education, about the numbers of engineers and technicians being turned out, and how much those numbers exceeded the turn-out in this country. The information was here. But it did not register with those who received it. The Sputnik dramatized the facts about scientific and technical progress and mounting industrial production in the Soviet Union, and the information became public property. But the public has not been any more stirred up than those who had the information in the first place.

This raises an interesting question. At what stage are the people and the leaders of this country capable of facing up to an oncoming calamity.

That they can stand up to it when it arrives was shown in two world wars. Then they showed fortitude and even creativeness. That is, they are not cowards or fools. But they do not have what might be called the capacity to face a calamity that still is some distance away, and that still can be avoided. It may be because we are a young nation, and not yet experienced enough in seeing ahead. We seem to have so much to do in solving today's problems that we don't want to be diverted by matters that fall due a few years hence. If we are going to double our expenditure on education, we have to change our ways basically, and changing our ways is unsettling. We are much too busy trying to be stable.

There is another difficulty that has to do with values. We are not stingy about spending money. Our defense, that costs forty billions a year, is four times the total cost of government thirty years ago. We have grasped the need of having enough military strength to avoid a war of nuclear destruction. But we still do not grasp the fact, that if the war of annihilation is averted, we still can lose to our rivals simply through their surpassing us in knowledge, skill and production.

Our educational system is just half good enough to assure our future.

The Killian report has spelled out in detail how it can be made fully adequate. Now what is needed is that enough people, in and out of government, understand the facts and act on them. If we are to remain ahead of our rivals thirty years from now we have to redouble our efforts now. To wake up in twenty or thirty years will be too late.

Word for Today

On the day he resigned as secretary of state, Mr. Dulles received a personal message from General de Gaulle...a man with whom he did not always agree. "All that you have done," the message read, "with so much faith for your country and for the free world belongs to the present and the future. Your courage and tenacity are a great example."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, MAY 25, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The White House continues to receive messages of condolence in the death of former Secretary of State Dulles. And so does the Dulles family. Pope John cabled the President today that Mr. Dulles' "untiring efforts to achieve just solution to the world's problems had won admiration of all men of good will." Queen Elizabeth of England sent a message to Mrs. Dulles, expressing "heartfelt sympathy." In Congress today, the Democratic leader of the House...McCormack of Massachusetts...paid tribute to Dulles...calling him "a great American who will go down in history as one of our great secretaries of state." House Republican Leader Halleck described Dulles as "a rugged, honest, dedicated man with just unlimited capacity." Tomorrow, five of the foreign ministers at the Geneva conference will fly to Washington for Mr. Dulles' funeral...which will be held Wednesday afternoon. It had been known for more than 24 hours that Selwyn Lloyd of Britain, Von Brentano of West Germany and Couve de Murville of France would be attending with Secretary Herter, as well as with the foreign ministers of Italy and Japan. But late today it was announced that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko also will fly to Washington for the funeral service. The only foreign head of governement to attend will be Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany.

Moscow radio today broke its editorial silence on the death of Dulles. The broadcast emphasized Mr. Dulles' legal and business background. It said he had "important connections with the Morgans."

The eleventh session of the Geneva foreign ministers conference opened with each delegation expressing regret over Mr. Dulles' death. In the debate that followed, Gromyko again rejected the Western package proposal and charged that West German "militarism" was a threat to world peace. Secretary of State Herter then accused Gromyko of trying to confuse the negotiations by making false charges.

The truth, said Herter, is that...on the basis of population...East Germany has four to five times as many men under arms as West Germany. Gromyko retorted that Herter had said nothing about letting the West Germans have nuclear weapons.

The State Department today brushed aside Russia's latest note warning the United States to stop setting up missile bases in Western Europe. The department said it saw no need for carrying on the correspondence since there was nothing in the Soviet note which had not been effectively answered before. It would be "helpful," the department added, if the Soviet government would stop making these threats while negotiations on European security are still in progress.

The United States and Canada have signed an agreement providing for an exchange of atomic information for mutual defense. The agreement becomes effective in 60 days, unless rejected by Congress or by the Candian parliament.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev arrived in Albania today for his first visit to that isolated satellite state. The fact that Khrushchev will be in Albania as long as twelve days has not been officially explained. One theory is that he will have the propaganda campaign the Albanian Communists have been waging against Yugoslavia toned down. While flying over Yugoslavia today, Khrushchev had a birthday greeting radioed to President Tito...who is 67...although a similar birthday message already had been sent from Moscow.

In Washington, the Justice Department announces that it will take no further part in the case of Mack Parker, the 23 year old Negro lynched in Mississippi last month. Attorney General Rogers said it had been "clearly established" that persons responsible for the crime had not violated the federal kidnaping statute. Consequently, he said, the evidence obtained by F.B.I. agents had been turned over to Governor Coleman of Mississippi for prosecution on the state level. Coleman announced that the information would be made available to the next regular session of the Pearl River County grand jury in November. He said that pending grand jury action, he would not...under any circumstances... reveal any part of the F.B.I. report.

The Supreme Court today struck down a Louisiana state law barring competition between Negro and white athletes. The Supreme Court gave no written opinion. By unanimous action, it simply affirmed a lower Federal Court ruling that the state law was unconstitutional. The case involved a Negro boxer, Joseph Dorsey, who contended that while the state has the right to regulate boxing, a statute prohibiting prize fights between persons of different race "plainly violates rights protected by the Fourteenth Amendment." The state had argued that the law was not discriminatory because prohibitions and penalties were the same, regardless of race.

Voters in the Little Rock School District went to the polls today to recall all...or part...of the school board. The outcome could decide whether the Little Rock high schools will re-open next fall on an integrated or segregated basis. Three of the school board members are segregationists; the other three members are "moderates"...who have said they favor the re-opening of the high schools, "even if it means integration." Today's voting is described as heavy. The results will not be known for several hours.

If in the next thirty years or so this country falls behind its world rivals, in all the fields affected by skill and knowledge, it won't be because it has not been warned. This week end brought a new warning. It was in a report by the President's Science Advisory Commission under Dr. James Killian Jr. It said in effect that the least that needs to be done, is to double the sum being currently spent on education. This is four percent of our gross national product. Put that way, it sounds manageable. But it comes to eighteen billion dollars, and to find another eighteen billions a year for education, on top of the forty billions for defense, seems well-nigh impossible. One needs only recall how hard it has been to get money to build only a fraction of the school rooms needed to accommodate the children now of school age, not to mention overcoming the shortage of teachers, and their inadequate training.

It was not the function of Dr. Killian's commission to map out how the additional eighteen billions could be raised every year. That is up to the President, the Congress and the local communities. But President Eisenhower, in a statement accompanying the report, said nothing about raising another eighteen billions a year for education. He did not try to adjust his sights to any such figure, which obviously would play havoc with a balanced budget. All he said was that he hoped the report would be widely read, and would stimulate a wider understanding of the importance of excellence in our educational system. And that seems to doom the Killian report to be just another report, to be briefly summarized in the mass media, read by specialists, and then filed away in the archives.

It would be a mistake to say that the threat of Soviet science and production was not realized in this country till the first Sputnik started circling the earth. There was no secret about the excellence and extent of Soviet education, about the numbers of engineers and technicians being turned out, and how much these numbers exceeded the turn-out in this country. The information was here. But it did not register with those who received it. The Sputnik dramatized the facts about scientific and technical progress and mounting industrial production in the Soviet Union, and the information became public property. But the public has not been any more stirred up than those who had the information in the first place.

This raises an interesting question. At what stage are the people and the leaders of this country capable of facing up to an oncoming calamity. That they can stand up to it when it arrives was shown in two world wars. Then they showed fortitude and even creativeness. That is, they are not cowards or fools. But they do not have what might be called the capacity to face a calamity that still is some distance away, and that still can be avoided. It may be because we are a young nation, and not yet experienced enough in seeing ahead. We seem to have so much to do in solving today's problems that we don't want to be diverted by matters that fall due a few years hence. If we are going to double our expenditure on education, we have to change our ways basically, and changing our ways is unsettling. We are much too busy trying to be stable.

There is another difficulty that has to do with values. We are not stingy about spending money. Our defense, that costs forty billions a year is four times the total cost of government thirty years ago. We have grasped the need of having enough military strength to avoid a war of nuclear destruction. But we still do not grasp the fact, that if the war of annihilation is averted, we still can lose to our rivals simply though their surpassing us in knowledge, skill and production.

Our educational system is just half good enough to assure our future. The Killian report has spelled out in detail how it can be made fully adequate. Now what is needed is that enough people, in and out of government, understand the facts and act on them. If we are to remain ahead of our rivals thirty years from now we have to redouble our efforts now. To wake up in twenty or thirty years will be too late.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: On the day he resigned as secretary of state, Mr. Dulles received a personal message from General deGaulle...a man with whom he did not always agree. "All that you have done," the message read, "with so much faith for your country and for the free world belongs to the present and the future. Your courage and tenacity are a great example."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., May 26, 1959

This is the news:

The foreign ministers met only briefly in Geneva today, then recessed until Friday so that the Big Four ministers might attend the funeral of former Secretary of State Dulles in Washington tomorrow afternoon. The one significant thing that happened in Geneva today was that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko and the Western foreign ministers agreed after twelve days of fruitless debate to start negotiating in secret when they return on Friday. The announcement of this was made after a private meeting this morning between Gromyko and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. American and Soviet sources say the initiative came from Lloyd. A British spokesman says the agreement arose "spontaneously". It is expected that only about three members of each of the United States, British, French and Soviet delegations will attend these restricted talks and that very little of what develops in each session will be made public from day to day.

The first foreign minister to arrive in Washington for the Dulles funeral was the minister from Japan. Most of the other ministers, including Gromyko, are due in tomorrow morning. It is reported that the rites probably will be the most impressive ever conducted for an American secretary of state.

The body of John Foster Dulles was placed today in Washington Cathedral, where it will remain until after the funeral services tomorrow afternoon. The public was admitted to the cathedral shortly after noon...and soon people began streaming past the closed, flag-draped coffin in a long line. Burial with full military honors will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

In a speech in Albania today, Soviet Premier Khrushchev called Mr. Dulles a "distinguished politician". Khrushchev also repeated his threat to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany, if there is no agreement with the West.

The only official appointment kept by President Eisenhower today was with the Republican congressional leaders who regularly meet with him on Tuesday. House Republican Leader Halleck told the President he had "only a forlorn hope" that any corrective labor legislation will come out of the House Labor Committee. Halleck blamed this on disagreement among Democratic members of the committee and on the opposition of organized labor to the Kennedy reform bill as amended in the Senate.

Senate Republican Leader Dirksen predicted some action next week on civil rights legislation. And Republican Senator Javits said that the two pending civil rights bills should be amended, so that they include a provision making lynching a federal crime. Javits said the need for such a provision had been demonstrated by the action of the Justice Department yesterday. Attorney General Rogers announced yesterday that the department was withdrawing from the Mack Parker case in Mississippi because no violation of federal statute was involved....presumably because the lynchers had not crossed a state line.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee voted tonight to cut 267-million dollars from President Eisenhower's foreign aid program. The President had asked for nearly 4-billion dollars for the program for the coming year. Most of the cut voted by the House committee was in military aid and in the President's "contingency fund"...the fund which the President may spend at his discretion in emergencies. The committee added a hundred million dollars to the 700-million dollars that Mr. Eisenhower had requested for the Development Loan Fund. This is the fund from which loans are made to underdeveloped countries for their economic and social development.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the nomination of Ogden Reid as ambassador to Israel. The vote was 10 to 4 against the opposition of Chairman Fulbright who called the former newspaper publisher unqualified for the post. Former Chairman Green of Rhode Island, who also voted against the appointment, issued a statement citing Reid's lack of diplomatic experience and calling the Middle East "one of the most critical areas in the world." The other two votes against the nomination were cast by Democratic Senators Kennedy of Massachusetts and Long of Louisiana. Four Democrats---Humphrey of Minnesota, Morse of Oregon, Gore of Tennessee and Lausche of Ohio---joined six Republicans in voting in favor of the appointment. The nomination now goes to the full Senate...which still has to act on the controversial nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce.

The Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved the appointment of John Cabot, a cereer diplomat, as ambassador to Brazil. This is the post which Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce turned down after heated Senate debate.

Yesterday, the people of Little Rock, Arkansas, removed three segregationist members of the school board in a recall election.

For a direct report on what this means, we switch nowto my colleague Harry Reasoner in Little Rock.

Tape runs 4:00
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

That was Harry Reasoner, reporting from Little Rock.

Back in a moment

George Bryan

~~FILL~~

Here in New York today, the steel negotiators met for two hours, then adjourned for a week with no sign of progress. The present three-year contract between the major steel producers and the Steelworkers Union expires at the end of next month.

In Kentucky today, Democratic voters nominated a new candidate for governor since Governor Chandler is not eligible to succeed himself after serving a four-year term. The candidate for nomination supported by Chandler is Lieutenant Governor Harry Lee Waterfield...who was opposed by Bert Combs, a former appeals court judge, who has the political backing of Senator Earle Clements. The winner in November faces former Congressman John Robsion...who today had only token opposition for the Republican nomination. So far, there are no significant returns.

The people of Little Rock have spoken out for education. There comes to mind the statements once made by two great Southern editors. Ralph McGill of Atlanta who said: "Problems are never "solved" but may be slowly ameliorated until they cease to exist." And Harry Ashmore of Little Rock: "History does not run backward, and it buries its own dead."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, May 26, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Yesterday the people of Little Rock, Arkansas, removed three segregationist members of the school board in a recall election. For a direct report on what this means, we switch now to my colleague Harry Reasoner in Little Rock.

REASONER: In Little Rock early today, at the election party of the people who had successfully organized the recall of the three arch segregationist members of the school board, men and women with exalted faces kept coming up to outside observers with suggestions for how the surprising results of the recall election should be described: "It is the hand of God," they would tell you; "It shows that in the end democracy really works;" "It shows that Little Rock is the decent, friendly city we always thought it was," they said. Well, other people equally exalted told you last Fall that the overwhelming vote to close the schools rather than integrate them, showed the hand of God; that those results showed that democracy really worked. And certainly the people who made up the big majority in that election were mostly decent, friendly folk, too. It's not easy then to say what is the real significance of the election in Little Rock. This is what happened in the 21 days that reached the climax early today: Three members of the school board entered the business of renewing contracts of teachers and other employes with a list of 44 men and women they wanted out of the school system, on undocumented charges that they taught integration or believed in its inevitability. These men were Ed McKinley, Robert Lawter and Ben Roland. The toehr three board members walked out of that meeting. These men were Ted Lamb, Russell Matson and Everett Tucker. Parent-Teacher associations, teacher groups and businessmen condemned what they called the purge of the teachers. They made an organization and called it "Stop" for Stop This Outrageous Purge, and filed petitions to recall McKinley, Laster and Roland. STOP got immediate, surprising support. Not only money but open organizational support. Segregationists whipped up a new organization, too, and called it "Cross" - the Committee To Retain Our Segregated Schools - and filed for the recall of moderates, Lamb, Matson and Tucker. In the election, all three of the Faubus supporters were thrown out of office by clear margins in heavy voting. All three of the moderates were retained by smaller margins. Segregationists say it was misplaced sympathy for the dismissed teachers that caused the election to go the way it did. This is partly true. Certainly the dismissal of the teachers was the catalyst that brought such a sudden flowering of public support to the moderate board members. But there were two other important elements: One was the entry into the contest, over the weekend, of Governor Faubus. He made two lengthy broadcast appeals. He labelled the election a test of integrationist sentiment and took his stand there. He got a thorough defeat, his first since he became the central and guiding figure in the Little Rock story. The second element is the undercover growth of moderate strength, which came out in the open in the teacher dismissal crisis. Business leaders had become concerned about Little Rock's reputation, a reputation demonstrably affecting the industrial growth of the area. The Little Rock Chamber of Commerce had flatly said that a poll of its members showed a majority in favor of somehow opening the schools, even at the cost of token integration. Substantial sentiment in the middle classes had developed in favor of reopening the schools on the best terms satisfactory to the Federal Court. The turn of events in Virginia had convinced many sincere but realistic segregationists that they couldn't win completely, that a compromise was necessary.

The election does not mean that any more people in Little Rock like integration. It does not mean that Governor Faubus is not still a powerful and perhaps decisive influence. But most significantly it does mean that the natural leadership group of the Little Rock community, which had abdicated its responsibility during two years of crisis, is now moving to re-assume a hand in the direction the community takes. It is moving in spite of the fear of business boycott, social pressure and violent abuse, which are the threats that the extremists use. And it is moving confidently because of yesterday's election, like an athletic team that is stronger than the form book after a happy upset victory.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, MAY 26, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The foreign ministers met only briefly in Geneva today, then recessed until Friday so that the Big Four ministers might attend the funeral of former Secretary of State Dulles in Washington tomorrow afternoon. The one significant thing that happened in Geneva today was that Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko and the Western foreign ministers agreed after twelve days of fruitless debate to start negotiating in secret when they return on Friday. The announcement of this was made after a private meeting this morning between Gromyko and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. American and Soviet sources say the initiative came from Lloyd. A British spokesman says the agreement arose "spontaneously." It is expected that only about three members of each of the United States, British, French and Soviet delegations will attend these restricted talks and that very little of what develops in each session will be made public from day to day.

The first foreign minister to arrive in Washington for the Dulles funeral was the mnnister from Japan. Most of the other ministers, including Gromyko, are due in tomorrow morning. It is reported that the rites probably will be the most impressive ever conducted for an American secretary of sttae.

The body of John Foster Dulles was placed today in Washington Cathedral, where it will remain until after the funeral services tomorrow afternoon. The public was admitted to the cathedral shortly after noon,..and soon people began streaming past the closed, flag-draped coffin in a long line, Burial with full military honors will be in Arlington National Cemetery.

In a speech in Albania today, Soviet Premier Khrushchev called Mr. Dulles a "distinguished politician." Khrushchev also repeated his threat to sign a spearate peace treaty with East Germany, if there is no agreement with the West.

The only official appointment kept by President Eisenhower today was with the Republican congressional leaders who regularly meet with him on Tuesday. House Republican Leader Halleck told the President he had "only a forlorn hope" that any corrective labor legislation will come out of the House Labor Committee. Halleck blamed this on disagreement among Democratic members of the committee and on the opposition of organized labor to the Kennedy reform bill as amended in the Senate.

Senate Republican Leader Dirksen predicted some action next week on civil rights legislation. And Republican Senator Javits said that the two pending civil rights bills should be amended, so that they include a provision making lynchings a federal crime. Javits said the need for such a provision had been demonstrated by the action of the Justice Department yesterday. Attorney General Rogers announced yesterday that the department was withdrawing from the Mack Parker case in Mississippi because no violation of federal statute was involved... presumably because the lynchers had not crossed a state line.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee voted tonight to cut 267-million dollars from President Eisenhower's foreign aid program. The President had asked for nearly 4-billion dollars for the program for the coming year. Most of the cut voted by the House committee was in military aid and in the President's contingency fund...the fund which the president may spend at his discretion in emergencies. The committee added a hundred million dollars to the 700-million dollars that Mr. Eisenhower had requested for the Development Loan Fund. This is the fund from which loans are made to underdeveloped countries for their economic and social development.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today approved the nomination of Ogden Reid as ambassador to Israel. The vote was 10 to 4 against the opposition of Chairman Fulbright who called the former newspaper publisher unqualified for the post. Former Chairman Green of Rhode Island who also voted against the appointment, issued a statement citing Reid's lack of diplomatic experience and calling the Middle East "one of the most critical areas in the world." The other two votes against the nomination were cast by Democratic Senators Kennedy of Massachusetts and Long of Louisiana. Four Democrats---Humphrey of Minnesota, Morse of Oregon, Gore of Tennessee and Lausche of Ohio---joined six Republicans in voting in favor of the appointment. The nomination now goes to the full Senate...which still has to act on the controversial nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce.

The Foreign Relations Committee unanimously approved the appointment of John Cabot, a career diplomat, as ambassador to Brazil. This is the post which Mts. Clare Boothe Luce turned down after heated Senate debate.

Yesterday, the people of Little Rock, Arkansas, removed three segrationist members of the school board in a recall election. For a direct report on what this means, we switch now to my colleague Harry Reasoner in Little Rock.

REASONER: In Little Rock early today, at the election party of the people who had successfully organized dthe recall of the three arch segrationist members of the school board, men and women with exalted faces kept coming up to outside observers with suggestions for how the surprising results of the recall election should be described: "It is the hand of God," they would tell you; "It shows that in the end democracy really works;" "It shows that Little Rock is the decent, friendly city we always thought it was," they said. Well, other people equally exalted told you last Fall that the overwhelming vote to close the schools rather than integrate them, showed the hand of God; that those results showed that democracy really worked. And certainly the people who made up the big majority in the election were mostly decent, friendly folk, too. It's not easy then to say what is the real significance of the election in Little Rock. This is what happened in the 21 days that reached the climax early today; Three members of the school board entered the business of renewing contracts of teachers and other employees with a list of 44 men and women they wanted out of the school system, on undocumented charges that they taught integration or believed in its inevitability. These men were Ed McKinley, Robert Laster and Ben Roland. The other three board members walked out of that meeting. These men were Ted Lamb, Russell Matson and Everett Tucker. Parent-Teacher associations, teacher group and businessmen condemned what they called the purge of the teachers. They made an organization and called it "STOP" for "Stop This Outrageous Purge," and filed petitions to recall McKinley, Laster and Roland. STOP got immediate, surprising, support. Not only money but open organizational support. Segregationists whipped up a new organization, too, and called it "Cross" - the "Committee to Retain Our Segregated Schools" - and filed for the recall of moderates, Lamb, Matson and Tucker. In the election, all three of the Faubus supporters were thrown out of office by clear margins in heavy voting. All three of the moderates were retained by smaller margins. Segregationists say it was misplaced sympathy for the dismissed teachers that caused the election to go the way it did. This is partly true. Certainly the dismissal of the teachers was the catalyst that brought such a sudden flowering of public support to the moderate board members. But there were two other important elements: One was the entry into the contest, over the weekend, of Governor Faubus. He made two lengthy broadcast appeals. He labelled the election a test of integrationist sentiment and took his stand there. He got a thorough defeat, his first since he became the central and guiding figure in the Little Rock story. The second element is the undercover growth of moderate strength, which came out in theopen in the teacher dismissal crisis. Business leaders had become concerned about Little Rock's reputation, a reputation demonstrably affecting the industrial growth of the area. The Little Rock Chamber of Commerce had flatly said that a poll of its members showed a majority in favor of somehow opening the schools, even at the cost of token integration. Substantial sentiment in the middle classes had developed infavor of reopening the schools on the best terms satisfactory to the Federal Court. The turn of events in Virginia had convinced many sincere but realistic segregationists that they couldn't win completely, that a compromise was necessary.

The election does not mean that any more people in Little Rock like integration. It does not mean that Governor Faubus is not still a powerful and perhaps decisive influence. But most signficantly it does mean that the natural leadership group of the Little Rock community,-which had abdicated its responsibility during two years of crisis, is now moving to re-assume a hand in the direction the community takes. It is moving in spite of the fear of business boycott, social pressure and violent abuse, which are the threats that the extremists use. And it is moving confidently because of yesterday's election, like an athletic team that is stronger than the form book after a happy upset victory.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Harry Reasoner, reporting from Little Rock.

Here in New York today, the steel negotiators met for two hours, then adjourned for a week with no sign of progress. The present three-year contract between the major steel producers and the Steelworkers Union expires at the end of next month.

In Kentucky today, Democratic voters nominated a new candidate for governor since Governor Chandler is not eligible to succeed himself after serving a four-year term. The candidate for nomination supported by Chandler is Lieutenant Governor Harry Lee Waterfield...who was opposed by Bert Combs, a former appeals court judge, who has the political backing of Earle Clements. The winner in November faces former Congressman John Robison...who today had only token opposition for the Republican nomination. So far, there are no significant returns.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But, first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The people of Little Rock have spoken out for education. There comes to mind the statements once made by two great Southern editors. Ralph McGill of Atlanta who said: "Problems are never solved, but may be slowly ameliorated until they cease to exist." And Harry Ashmore of Little Rock: "History does not run backward, and it buries its own dead."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., May 27, 1959

This is the news:

John Foster Dulles was buried today with tribute unprecedented for an American secretary of state. The services in Washington National Cathedral were attended by the foreign ministers of nearly all the major powers, including Russia, as well as by President Eisenhower, Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany, Prime Minister Menzies of Australia, members of Congress, cabinet officers and justices of the Supreme Court. Paul Henri Spaak, secretary-general of NATO, and Dag Hammarskjold, secretary-general of the United Nations, also were on hand. The Presbyterian service included no sermon but a reading of Scripture, a brief passage from Pilgrim's Progress, music and prayer. After the service (which lasted about forty minutes), the body was borne in a motorcade to the entrance of Arlington National Cemetery, where it was transferred to a horse-drawn caisson and taken to the grave on a hillside facing the Potomac. Burial was accompanied by a full 19-gun salute, three volleys of rifle fire...and taps.

Before the funeral service, the body had lain in state for 24 hours. A member of the cathedral staff estimated that in that time more than 20-thousand people had filed past the bier to pay their last respects. The cathedral, he said, had not witnessed the like since the Woodrow Wilson funeral in 1924.

This morning...before attending the funeral...President Eisenhower received a first-hand report from Secretary of State Herter on the Geneva conference thus far. The President also conferred with Prime Minister Menzies of Australia and then with Chancellor Adenauer. Details of these private talks are not divulged. News Secretary Hagerty announced, however, that at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will [redacted] discuss the Geneva conference with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd of Britain and Foreign Minister Couve de Murville of France. Mr. Herter also will be present. After this meeting, the President will give a White House luncheon for the foreign ministers and the visiting high officials of other governments.

The Big Four foreign ministers will fly back to Geneva together late tomorrow...and, on Friday, the conference will resume. But the sessions will now be secret. Mr. Herter told reporters today that, so far, "only small progress" had been made in the Geneva talks. It was his hope, he said, that sufficient progress would be made in the negotiating sessions that lie ahead to justify a meeting at the summit.

This day...May 27th...is the date originally set by Premier Khrushchev as the deadline for American, British and French forces to get out of West Berlin. With the prospect of an East-West meeting, Khrushchev himself postponed the deadline...and today Allied traffic in and out of Berlin was not molested.

Khrushchev is still visiting in Albania. The West took note today that he is being joined there by the defense minister of Red China, who has currently been making a tour of Eastern Europe. Khrushchev was accompanied to Albania by his defense minister, Marshal Malinovsky. And since Premier Grotewohl of East Germany also is in Albania, Khrushchev would seem to be making much more than a social visit. He said in a speech last night that if American missile bases are set up in Italy and Greece, Russia will set up missile bases in Albania and Bulgaria. And he repeated the warning tonight.

Two missing persons have been found. The British Foreign Office says that the wife of a Soviet military attache (who disappeared last Saturday from her home outside of London) has applied for political asylum. In Cuba, Raul Castro...younger brother of Prime Minister Fidel Castro...was found unharmed after his airplane crashed in a swamp. Raul Castro is commander-in-chief of the Cuban armed forces.

The French Army put out a communique today...saying that they had exercised their "right of hot pursuit" in following a band of Algerian rebels nearly a mile inside Tunisia. Thirty-two rebels were killed. The French placed their own losses at six dead and eleven wounded. Now the French Army has put out a revised communique...making no reference to "hot pursuit." A spokesman for the Algerian nationalists says that by these tactics, France runs the risk of full-scale war.

The United States Navy today asked Congress for money to build another aircraft carrier powered by conventional engines. Vice Admiral Rickover has urged that carriers, henceforth, be atomic powered...like the submarines he helped to develop. The Navy feels that the extra money should go for "other important ships."

Governor Faubus of Arkansas insisted today that the defeat of the segregationists in Monday's school board election in Little Rock was not a victory for those who favor integration. Integration, he told a news conference today, was not an issue...although he had indicated before the recall election that naming "moderates" to the school board would be a step toward integration.

In the Kentucky primary, Lieutenant Governor Waterfield today conceded the Democratic nomination for governor to Bert Combs, who had the backing of Earle Clements. Waterfield had the support of Governor Chandler, who is not eligible to succeed himself after serving a four-year term. Combs will now face the Republican nominee, John Robsion, in November.

An examiner for the Civil Aeronautics Board today recommended that the nation's airlines be allowed to impose an additional charge of one dollar on each fare. The additional income would be used to help the airlines make the transition from propellor aircraft to jets.

Edward R. Murrow: May 27, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

~~When~~ In the midst of the Four Power Conference, the British signed a new trade agreement in Moscow. The first question asked was whether they were stealing a march on their Allies. There was some asperity in the question because of reports that the British were offering huge trade credits to the Russians. But doubts about the deal were quickly put to rest. The deal itself was not big, and did not involve any credits. And it dealt with a class of Russian business that the United States itself had turned down. The British did not do much more than Mikoyan asked us to do when he was in Washington. We were not interested. They were.

What is noteworthy about the agreement is the light it throws on Russian conditions. The country is pinched not only by the shortage of goods, which is an old story, but by a shortage of manpower, which is both new and unexpected. The manpower shortage already has led to the curtailment of the vaunted Russian educational program, which now requires every student to spend two years before graduation on a farm or in a factory.

What the British are selling to the Russians is not so much goods as factories and processes. With these the Russians expect to increase their output per man-hour. Rather than take the time to develop their own labor-saving devices, they are importing them. They are doing it under the goad of the Seven Year Plan, which probably cannot be otherwise fulfilled. The objective of the plan is to increase Soviet production by eighty percent in the next seven years. There are obvious arguments against outsiders selling factories and processes to the Russians, and they are forcefully presented in Washington. It is asked, "why supply your future industrial rival with the means of competing with you."

So far only strategic trade with Russia has been under a collective ban of the Western allies. They have undertaken not to supply the Soviet Union or its satellites with anything of direct military value. The ethics of this action has never been questioned. But there has been no attempt to apply the same kind of action to purely economic competition. Later on it might be just as much a matter of survival not to have sold factories and processes as not to sell munitions. But we can only say for ourselves that we won't do it, which is what Under-Secretary Dillon told Mikoyan in Washington. We cannot tell our allies not to do it.

It isn't only the British who are supplying the Russians with factories and processes. A French company has just arranged to sell the Soviet Union the largest cement plant in the world with a daily capacity of five thousand, seven hundred and fifty tons. Another French company has sold plants to pre-cast housing parts of concrete, which will help fulfill the seven-year quota of sixteen million apartments and seven million new houses. A French auto company, partly owned in Detroit, is selling the Russians an auto assembly line. Another French company is selling twenty dry-cleaning units of two huge machines each. A state-owned plant in West Germany is selling two chemical plants. Italy is selling synthetic fiber equipment and machine tools. Sweden is expected to sell a paper-making plant.

It is objected in this country that such deals not only build up a future competitor, but that the trade is unhealthy. If one sells a factory to Russia he isn't likely to sell a second one. The Russians will get it, run it and copy it. This kind of trade has no future. But an answer to the argument is that no trade in capital goods is self-perpetuating. And if the Russians aren't going to buy the consumer goods the factories can make -- and they aren't going to - it is a question of selling the factories or nothing. That is how it looks to the British, French, Italians and West Germans.

The British trade agreement actually is quite modest. It aims to increase British sales to Russia from sixty-six million to two hundred and twenty-four million dollars a year, the Soviet sales to Britain to a like sum. This won't of itself make the Soviet Union into a trade rival of this country. The total foreign trade of the Soviet Union comes to about two billion dollars a year. American foreign trade is fourteen times as big. But Russian capacity to produce is rising faster than ours, and the very nature of the Russian economy is changing. And that is what the British trade agreement demonstrates.

Back in a moment

George Bryan

The British trade agreement demonstrates an interesting change in the Russian economy. Russia is always changing, and everything written on the subject is soon outdated. Way back in 1927, Will Rogers said: "I should have written earlier about Russia, but everybody was writing, and I thought I would wait till they all got through. But they aren't going to get through."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, MAY 27, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

John Foster Dulles was buried today with tribute unprecedented for an American secretary of state. The services in Washington National Cathedral were attended by the foreign ministers of nearly all the major powers, including Russia, as well as by President Eisenhower, Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany, Prime Minister Menzies of Australia, members of Congress, cabinet officers and justices of the Supreme Court. Paul Henri Spaak, secretary-general of NATO, and Dag Hammarskjold, secretary-general of the United Nations, also were on hand. The Presbyterian service included no sermon but a reading of Scripture, a brief passage from Pilgrim's Progress, music and prayer. After the service (which lasted about forty minutes), the body was borne in a motorcade to the entrance of Arlington National Cemetery, where it was transferred to a horse-drawn caisson and taken to the grave on a hillside facing the Potomac. Burial was accompanied by a full 19-gun salute, three volleys of rifle fire...and taps.

Before the funeral service, the body had lain in state for 24 hours. A member of the cathedral staff estimated that in that time more than 20-thousand people had filed past the bier to pay their last respects. The cathedral, he said, had not witnessed the like since the Woodrow Wilson funeral in 1924.

This morning...before attending the funural...President Eisenhower received a first-hand report from Secretary of State Herter on the Geneva conference thus far. The President also conferredwith Prime Minister Menzies of Australia and then with Chancellor Adenauer. Details of these private talks are not divulged. News Secretary Hagerty announced, however, that at 10:30 a.m. tomorrow, Mr. Eisenhower will discuss the Geneva conference with Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd of Britain and Foreign Minister Couve de Murville of France. Mr. Herter also will be present. After this meeting, the President will give a White House luncheon for the foreign ministers and the visiting high officials of other governments.

The Big Four foreign ministers will fly back to Geneva together late tomorrow...and, on Friday, the conference will resume. But the sessions will now be secret. Mr. Herter told reporters today that, so far, "only small progress" had been made in the Geneva talks. It was his hope, he said, that sufficient progress would be made in the negotiating sessions that lie ahead to justify a meeting at the summit.

This day...May 27th...is the date originally set up Premier Khrushchev as the deadline for American, British and French forces to get out of West Berlin. With the prospect of an East-West meeting, Khrushchev himself postponed the deadline...and today Allied traffic in and out of Berlin was not molested.

Khrushchev is still visiting in Albania. The West took note today that he is being joined there by the defense minister of Red China, who has currently been making a tour of Eastern Europe. Khrushchev was accompanied to Albania by his defense minister, Mrashal Malinovsky. And since Premier Grotewohl of East Germany also is in Albania, Khrushchev would seem to be making much more than a social visit. He said in a speech last night that if American missile bases are set up in Italy and Greece, Russia will set up missile bases in Albania and Bulgaria. And he repeated the warning tonight.

Two missing persons have been found. The British Foreign Office says that the wife of a Soviet military attache (who disappeared last Saturday from her home outside of London) has applied for political asylum. In Cuba, Raul Castro, younger brother of Prime Minister Fidel Castro...was found unharmed after his airplane crashed in a swamp. Raul Castro is commander-in-chief of the Cuban armed forces.

The French Army put out a communique today...saying that they had exercised their "right of hot pursuit" in following a band of Algerian rebels nearly a mile inside Tunisia. Thirty-two rebels were killed. The French placed their own loses at six dead and eleven wounded. Now the French army has put out a revised communique...making no reference to "hot pursuit." A spokesman for the Algerian nationalists says that by these tactics, France runs the risk of full-scale war.

The United States Navy today asked Congress for money to build another aircraft carrier powered by conventional engines. Vice Admiral Rickover has urged that carriers, henceforth, be atomic powered...like the submarines he helped to develop. The Navy feels that the extra money should go for "other important ships."

Governor Faubus of Arkansas insisted today that the defeat of the segregationists in Monday's school board election in Little Rock was not a victory for those who favor integration. Integration, he told a news conference today, was not an issue...although he had indicated before the recall election that naming "moderates" to the school board would be a step toward integration.

An examiner for the Civil Aeronautics Board today recommended that the nation's airlines be allowed to impose an additional charge of one dollar on each fare. The additional income would be used to help the airlines make the transition from propellor aircraft to jets.

In the midst of the Four Power Conference the British signed a new trade agreement in Moscow. The first question asked was whether they were stealing a march on their Allies. There was some asperity in the question because of reports that the British were offering huge trade credits to the Russians. But doubts about the deal were quickly put to rest. The deal itself was not big, and did not involve any credits. And it dealt with a class of Russians business that the United States itself had turned down. The British did not do much more than Mikoyan asked us to do when he was in Washington. We were not interested. They were.

What is noteworthy about the agreement is the light it throws on Russian conditions. The country is pinched not only by the shortage of goods, which is an old story, but by a shortage of manpower, which is both new and unexpected. The manpower shortage already has led to the curtailment of the vaunted Russian educational program, which now requires every student to spend two years before graduation on a farm or in a factory.

What the British are selling to the Russians is not so much goods as factories and processes. With these the Russians expect to increase their output per man-hour. Rather than take the time to develop their own labor-saving devices, they are importing them. They are doing it under the goad of the Seven Year Plan, which probably cannot be otherwise fulfilled. The objective of the plan is to increase Soviet production by eighty percent in the next seven years. There are obvious arguments against outsiders selling factories and processes to the Russians and they are forcefully presented in Washington. It is asked "why supply your future industrial rival with the means of competing with you."

So far only strategic trade with Russia has been under a collective ban of the Western allies. They have undertaken not to supply the Soviet Union or its satellites with anything of direct military value. The ethics of this action has never been questioned. But there has been no attempt to apply the same kind of action to purely economic competition. Later on it might be just as much a matter of survival not to have sold factories and processes as not to sell munitions. But we can only say for ourselves that we won't do it, which is what Under-Secretary Dillon told Mikoyan in Washington. We cannot tell our allies not to do it.

It isn't only the British who are supplying the Russians with factories and processes. A French company has just arranged to sell the Soviet Union the largest cement plant in the world with a daily capacity of five thousand, seven hundred and fifty tons. Another French company has sold plants to pre-cast housing parts of concrete, which will help fulfil the seven-year quota of sixteen million apartments and seven million new houses. A French auto company, partly owned in Detroit, is selling the Russians an auto assembly line. Another French company is selling twenty dry-cleaning units of two huge machines each. A state-owned plant in West Germany is selling two chemical plants. Italy is selling synthetic fiber equipment and machine tools. Sweden is expected to sell a paper-making plant.

It is objected in this country that such deals not only build up a future competitor, but that the trade is unhealthy. If one sells a factory to Russia he isn't likely to sell a second one. The Russians will get it, run it and copy it. This kind of trade has no future. But an answer to the argument is that no trade in capital goods is self-perpetuating. And if the Russians aren't going to buy the consumer goods the factories can make - and they aren't going to - it is a question of selling the factories or nothing. That is how it looks to the British, French, Italians and West Germans.

The British trade agreement actually is quite modest. It aims to increase British sales to Russia from sixty-six million to two hundred and twenty-four million dollars a year, and the Russian sales to Britain to a like sum. This won't of itself make the Soviet Union into a trade rival of this country. The total foreign trade of the Soviet Union comes to about two billion dollars a year. American foreign trade is fourteen times as big. But Russian capacity to produce is rising faster than ours, and the very nature of the Russian economy is changing. And that is what the British trade agreement demonstrates.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with a word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The British trade agreement demonstrates an interesting change in the Russian economy. Russia is always changing, and everything written on the subject is soon outdated. Way back in 1927, Will Rogers said: "I should have written earlier about Russia, but everybody was writing, and I thought I would wait till they all got through. But they aren't going to get through."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., May 28, 1959

This is the news:

The foreign ministers of the United States, Russia, Britain and France are fellow passengers tonight in a U.S. Air Force DC-6, bound for Geneva. The flight from Washington...across the Atlantic...is expected to take seventeen hours. Secretary of State Herter said that perhaps during the trip they might open up some "hopeful" avenue of discussion, which could be developed tomorrow when the Geneva conference resumes. The ministers on board the aircraft (besides Mr. Herter) are Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville, and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. This morning, all four of these diplomats met for half an hour with President Eisenhower. The White House issued a statement that Mr. Eisenhower had, of course, stressed the necessity of finding a peaceful solution. "The President," it said, "likewise expressed the hope that on their return to Geneva the foreign ministers would be able to achieve that measure of progress which would make a subsequent meeting of heads of government "desirable and useful." After this White House meeting, Mr. Eisenhower was host at a luncheon attended by the foreign ministers of fourteen countries. He thanked the visiting dignitaries for coming so far to attend the funeral of former Secretary of State Dulles yesterday. One of the statesmen attending the luncheon was Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany...and during the day he conferred privately with Vice President Nixon for more than an hour. Mr. Nixon also had a breakfast conference with Foreign Secretary Lloyd.

→

When the negotiations resume in Geneva tomorrow, they will be secret.

Those two monkeys...who penetrated 300 miles into outer space...are officially describes as "alive and well." The monkeys Able and Baker (both female) rode in the nose cone of an Army Jupiter missile, launched at Cape Canaveral at 3:35 a.m. One hour and thirty-three minutes later, they had been recovered from the South Atlantic, 15-hundred miles away.

For all but 15 minutes of this time, they had been "just sitting there..." waiting to be picked up. Not only were they the first primates to reach outer space, and return alive, but they seem to have suffered no ill effects. They had experienced "weightlessness"...and they had traveled at a speed of ten thousand miles an hour. Instruments radioed back the reactions of the monkeys during their flight. A full report may not be available for several weeks.

Dr. James Killian has resigned as special assistant to the President for science and technology. Dr. Killian said he was resigning for "compelling personal reasons." And he will now return to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology...from which he has been on leave since he took the government post a year and a half ago. In accepting the resignation, Mr. Eisenhower thanked Dr. Killian for his "highly significant" contribution. "It would be impossible," the President said, "for me to over-emphasize the vital importance of your work." Dr. Killian will be succeeded by Professor George Kistiakowsky (KISS-TIA KOW-SKY), a teacher of chemistry at Harvard. Dr. Kistiakowsky was born in Russia. He studied at the University of Berlin and came to the United States in 1926. During World War Two, he played an active part in defense research. And he helped build the first atomic bomb. More recently, he served as adviser to the Department of Defense.

Defense Secretary McElroy said today that he has asked the armed services to stop arguing over the merits of their respective anti-aircraft missiles in front of congressional committees. McElroy said that he had talked the matter over with the President. And that he---McElroy---had explained to the armed services that "rowing with out friends on Capitol Hill is not the best way to get a program adopted." The two missiles at issue are the Bomarc (developed by the Air Force) and the Nike-Hercules (developed by the Army). The Air Force suffered a set-back today at the hands of the House Appropriations Committee. The Air Force has asked for 447-million dollars for the Bomarc, and the committee slashed this by 162-million dollars. The Army had requested 95-million dollars for the Nike-Hercules and it got a recommendation for the full amount. Both missiles are able to carry nuclear warheads. McElroy said that a "master plan" for the nation's air defense will have been drawn up by the Pentagon "in a couple of weeks".

The nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce was debated again today on the Senate floor. Democratic Senator Morse of Oregon attacked Strauss for what Morse called a "shocking" appointment. The senator charged that Strauss had named a railroad financier...Armand Erpf... to head a committee looking into transportation policies. Democratic Senator Neuberger of Oregon said that while he had not made up his mind on the Strauss nomination, "I must confess that I am disappointed that Admiral Strauss has evidently not attempted to select impartial and independent people to survey the field of transportation for our government."

The Senate...without debate...today confirmed the nomination of John Cabot, a career diplomat, as United States ambassador to Brazil.

And in a move to curb inflation, the Federal Reserve Board authorized five federal reserve banks to raise interest rates on loans to commercial banks to three and one-half per cent. The present rate is three percent.

In Munich, Germany...the international Olympic Committee withdrew its recognition of the Olympic organization of the Nationalist Chinese government. Nationalist China may re-apply for membership under a different name...but the move would appear to pave the way for the admission of Red China to the Olympic committee.

Edward R. Murrow: May 28, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

"Conformity" has become a nasty word. Writers and speakers deplore it, while continuing to conform. We talk about the dignity, the independence, the freedom of the individual, and yet in hot weather the poor miserable male cannot free his own neck or his knees. In hot weather in this city of steam, scurry and scamper, he goes about attired in garb that is an offense against nature and logic. He may be a rebel, a dissenter, a spirit soaring free -- but he lacks courage, he is a conformist, and his attire proves it.

Have regard for a moment to the neck of the average city dweller in the hot months of summer. It is encased in a shirt; the collar of said shirt generally contains at least four layers of cloth. The neck is further swaddled by a necktie - at least two more layers; then the coat collar, another two or maybe four layers of cloth. What has happened to the American neck? Why is it so delicate as to require such protection in the heat of summer? What price the free, independent, non-conformist nature of the American male, when he submits so tamely to this torture? He is neither free nor enterprising. From head to toe he is a conformist. No pith helmet, no open-toed sandals; and above the shoes, the garters, which have the effect of contour plowing, namely to absorb or Retain the moisture. Men of mettle should appear on the streets, or in the office, in open-necked shirts and shorts. If the knees are knobby, so be it. If the stomach has undertaken an independent career, wear the shirt on the outside, thereby softening the lines of the contour.

No one has yet contended that it is un-American to be comfortable. We suffer as we do, because of an unwillingness on the part of the individual to break from the herd. We are the victims of a sad tradition, combined with timidity. There is even a possible class angle in this minor tragedy. If you observe taxi drivers, construction workers, farmers, you are not likely to find a buttoned shirt or a necktie in the lot. Those men are doing work no less important, no less dignified, than those office workers who present such a sorry spectacle of saturation as they walk down the street, afraid to break with the sartorial sanctions of the past. What pitiable figures are we all, the victims of our own timidity and conformity, more to be scorned than pitied. Maybe this unnecessary clothing is some sort of protective coloring, which we hope will make us appear more respectable and important than we are. But it isn't comfortable, and I suspect it isn't even as hygenic, as an open-necked shirt and shorts.

We deliberately inconvenience ourselves, in an age when it is possible that each one of may be turned into a radio-active cinder. Humans have devised a method of destroying humanity, but they lack the courage to be comfortable, while waiting to see whether that destruction will be accomplished.

Someone once said, that we are so busy dealing with the urgent that we never get around to the important. It is both urgent and important that something be done to liberate the neck and knees of the American male, but unhappily nothing can be done about it. We lack the courage required to escape this brutal bondage, particularly around the neck. We lack the courage, independence, indifference to custom, which would permit us to free ourselves. This is a shameful admission. It arises from an unwillingness to be different, or to be stared at.

Lest this be regarded as an effort to undermine the flourishing and imaginative necktie industry, permit me to say that I would willingly wear two neckties in the winter-time, if none need be worn in the summertime. After all, nations have been conquered and empires built, by men who never knew a necktie; and it's even money that Davy Crockett, in his better days, didn't wear one of the things.

And so, having uttered these futile words, in an air-conditioned Studio, this reporter will now swathe his neck in those ten or twelve layers of cloth, and depart --a beaten man, one of the herd --lacking in courage. Conformity, thy symbol is clothes.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan—

Word for Today

This reporter finds... after consulting every available dictionary of quotations. Much research that monkeys are grievously maligned. Henry Ward Beecher called monkeys "an organized sarcasm upon the human race." And Josh Billings concluded, "The monkey iz only valuable to look at and wonder what in thunder he iz going to do next." Now we know.

Goodnight and good luck!

Able + Baker —

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, MAY 28, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The foreign ministers of the United States, Russia, Britain and France are fellow passengers tonight in a U.S. Air Force DC-6, bound for Geneva. The flight from Washington...across the Atlantic...is expected to take seventeen hours. Secretary of State Herter said that perhaps during the trip they might open up some "hopeful" avenue of discussion, which could be developed tomorrow when the Geneva conference resumes. The ministers on board the aircraft (besides Mr. Herter) are Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko, French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville, and the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. This morning, all four of these diplomats met for half an hour with President Eisenhower. The White House issued a statement that Mr. Eisenhower had, of course, stressed the necessity of finding a peaceful solution. "The President," it said, "likewise expressed the hope that on their return to Geneva the foreign ministers would be able to achieve that measure of progress which would make a subsequent meeting of heads of government desirable and useful. After this White House meeting, Mr. Eisenhower was host at a luncheon attended by the foreign ministers of fourteen countries. He thanked the visiting dignataries for coming so far to attend the funeral of former Secretary of State Dulles yesterday. One of the statesmen attending the luncheon was Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany....and during the day, he conferred privately with Vice President Nixon for more than an hour. Mr. Nixon also had a breakfast conference with Foreign Secretary Lloyd.

When the negotiations resume in Geneva tomorrow, they will be secret.

Those two monkeys...who penetrated 300 miles into outer space...are officially described as alive and well. The monkeys Able and Baker (both female) rode in the nose cone of an Army Jupiter missile, launched at Cape Canaveral at 3:35 a.m. One hour and thirty-three minutes later, they had been recovered from the South Atlantic, 15-hundred miles away. For all but 15 minutes of this time, they had been just sitting there, waiting to be picked up. Not only were they the first primates to reach outer space, and return alive, but they seem to have suffered no ill effects. They had experienced "weightlessness"...and they had traveled at a speed of ten thousandmiles an hour. Instruments radioed back the reactions of the monkeys during their flight. A full report may not be available for several weeks.

Dr. James Killian has resigned as special assistant to the President for science and technology. Dr. Killian said he was resigning for "compelling personal reasons." And he will now return to the Massachsuetts Institute of Technology... from which he has been on leave since he took the government post a year and a half ago. In accepting the resignation, Mr. Eisenhower thanked Dr. Killian for his "highly significant" contribution. "It would be impossible," the President said, "for me to over-emphasize the vital importance of your work." Dr. Killian will be succeeded by Professor George Kistiakowsky, a teacher of chemistry at Harvard. Dr. Kistiakowsky was born in Russia. He studied at the University of Berlin and came to the United States in 1926. During World War Two, he played an active part in defense research. And he helped build the first atomic bomb. More recently, he served as advisor to the Department of Defense.

Defense Secretary McElroy said today that he has asked the armed services to stop arguing over the merits of their respective anti-aircraft missiles in front of congressional committees. McElroy said that he had talked the matter over with the President. And that he---McElroy---had explained to the armed services that "rowing with out friends on Capitol Hill is not the best way to get a program adopted." The two missiles at issue are the Bomarc (developed by the Air Force) and the Nike-Hercules (developed by the Army). The Air Force suffered a set-back today at the hands of the House Appropriations Committee. The Air Force has asked for 447 million dollars for the Bomarc, and the committee slashed this by 162-million dollars. The Army had requested 95-million dollars for the Nike-Hercules and it got a recommendation for the full amount. Both missiles are able to carry nuclear warheads. McElroy said that a master plan for the nation's air defense will have been drawn up by the Pentagon "in a couple of weeks."

The nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce was debated again today on the Senate floor. Democratic Senator Morse of Oregon attacked Strauss for what Morse called a "shocking" appointment. The senator charged that Strauss had named a railroad financier...Armand Erpf...to head a committee looking into transportation policies. Democratic Senator Neuberger of Oregon said that while he had not made up his mind on the Strauss nomination, "I must confess that I am disappointed that Admiral Strauss has evidently not attempted to select impartial and independent people to survey the field of transportation for our government."

The Senate...without debate...today confirmed the nomination of John Cabot, a career diplomat, as United States ambassador to Brazil.

And in a move to curb inflation, the Federal Reserve Board authorized five federal reserve banks to raise interest rates on loans to commercial banks to three and one-half percent. The present rate is three percent.

In Munich, Germany...the international Olympic Committee withdrew its recognition of the Olympic organization of the Nationalist Chinese government. Nationalist China may re-apply for membership under a different name...but the move would appear to pave the way for the admission of Red China to the Olympic Committee.

"Conformity" has become a nasty word. Writers and speakers deplore it, while continuing to conform. We talk about the dignity, the independence, the freedom of the individual, and yet in hot weather the poor miserable male cannot free his own neck or his knees. In hot weather in this city of steam, scurry, and scamper, he goes about attired in garb that is an offense against nature and logic. He may be a rebel, a dissenter, a spirit soaring free - but he lacks courage, he is a conformist, and his attire proves it.

Have regard for a moment to the neck of the average city dweller in the hot months of summer. It is encased in a shirt; the collar of said shirt generally contains at least four layers of cloth. The neck is further swaddled by a necktie - at least two more layers; then the coat collar, another two or maybe four layers of cloth. What has happened to the American neck? Why is it so delicate as to require such protection in the heat of summer? What price the free, independent, non-conformist nature of the American male, when he submits so tamely to this torture? He is neither free nor enterprising. From head to toe he is a conformist. No pith helmet, no open-toed sandals, and above the shoes, the garters,which have the effect of contour plowing, namely to absorb or retain the moisture. Men of mettle should appear on the street, or in the office, in open-necked shirts and shorts. If the knees are knobby, so be it. If the stomach has undertaken an independent career, wear the shirt on the outside, thereby softening the lines of the contour.

No one has yet contended that it is un-American to be comfortable. We suffer as we do, because of an unwillingness on the part of the individual to break from the herd. We are the victims of a sad tradition, combined with timidity. There is even a possible class angle in this minor tragedy. If you observe taxi drivers, construction workers, farmers, you are not likely to find a buttoned shirt or a necktie in the lot. Those men are doing work no less important, no less dignified, than those office workers who present such a sorry spectacle of saturation as they walk down the street, aftaid to break with the sartorial sanctions of the past. What pitiable figures are we all, the victims of our own timidity and conformity, more to be scorned than pitied. Maybe this unnecessary clothing is some sort of protective coloring, which we hope will make us appear more respectable and important than we are. But it isn't comfortable, and I suspect it isn't even as hygenic, as an open-necked shirt and shorts.

We deliberately inconvenience ourselves, in an age when it is possible that each one of us may be turned into a radio-active cinder. Humans have devised a method of destroying humanity, but they lack the courgge to be comfortable, while waiting to see whether that destruction will be acccomplished.

Someone once said, that we are so busy dealing with the urgent that we never get around to the important. It is both urgent and important that something be done to liberate the neck and knees of the American male, but unhappily nothing can be done about it. We lack the courage required to escape this brutal bondage, particularly around the neck. We lack the courage, independence, indifference to custom, which would permit us to free ourselves. This is a shameful admission. It arises from an unwillingness to be different, or to be stared at.

Lest this be regarded as an effort to undermine the flourishing and imaginative necktie industry, permit me to say that I would willingly wear two neckties in the winter-time, if none need be worn in the summertime. After all, nations have been conquered and empires built, by men who never knew a necktie; and it's even money that Davy Crockett, in his better days, didn't wear one of the things.

And so, having uttered these futile words, in an air-conditioned studio, this reporter will now swathe his neck in those ten or twelve layers of cloth, and depart - a beaten man, one of the herd - lacking in courage. Conformity, thy symbol is clothes.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: This reporter finds after consulting every available dictionary of quotations and much research...that monkeys are grievously maligned. Henry Ward Beecher called monkeys "an organized sarcasm upon the human race." And Josh Billings concluded, "The monkey iz only valuable to look at and wonder what in thunder he iz going to do next." Now we know.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., May 29, 1959

This is the news:

The Big Four foreign ministers today returned to Geneva and conferred informally, in secret, for two hours and five minutes. It was the first of a series of restricted meetings that will be held in an effort to break the deadlock on the German question. They met at the villa of the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd---without the representatives of either East or West Germany, or their press officers. And because the meeting was restricted, nothing has come out of it to report.

It was, actually, their second informal session in 24 hours. The first unique session took place late yesterday at about 17-thousand feet in an American aircraft bringing them back to Geneva, after attending the funeral of former Secretary of State Dulles. The foreign ministers of the United States, Russia, Britain and France were together on the flight for seventeen hours. A formal statement says they were able to discuss "certain details of their respective positions," and that this exchange of views was "most useful." An informant is quoted as saying later, however, that no substantial progress was made. We are given no details on what was said, but we are told that Herter retired early and that Gromyko drank about six Cokes.

Tomorrow, the foreign ministers will meet in a plenary session, where there will be some speeches. And then tomorrow night Gromyko will be host to the Western ministers at his villa for another informal talk.

It is now obvious that Soviet Premier Khrushchev is holding a conference of his own in Albania. Khrushchev began his tour of the small satellite state last Monday, in company with his defense minister. Premier Grötewohl of East Germany also is there, and yesterday they were joined by the defense minister of Communist China. Today, it was announced that the head of the Communist Party in North Korea is making a visit to Albania. And the Yugoslav government reports that in the past few days most of the countries of Southeastern Europe have asked for permission to fly over Yugoslavia to Albania.

While in Albania, Khrushchev has made speeches...warning that if American missile bases are set up in Italy and Greece, he will set up similar bases in Albania and Bulgaria. He told Greece yesterday that its decision entailed "serious consequences". Tonight, the State Department issued a statement of protest...saying that Khrushchev "should recognize the right of free people everywhere to decide for themselves the nature of their own defense." The department said that threats against these free countries are regarded by the United States "as a matter of mutual concern." The statements made by Khrushchev, it said, "can scarcely improve the chances of successful negotiation at any level."

In a speech today in Montreal, Adlai Stevenson said he thought that the disparity of living standards among the people of the world was the most important, most fateful fact now confronting us. It is not a problem, he said, to be solved by handouts. He said: "Our task, as the wealthy members of world society, is to link our resources to a systematic, long-term program of education and basic development, which will give the world masses the opportunity to help themselves."

In Washington today, James Riddleberger was sworn in as head of the International Cooperation Administration...the agency which administers the United States foreign aid program. Riddleberger is a career diplomat, who has served as ambassador to Yugoslavia and Greece. At the swearing in ceremony, Under Secretary of State Dillon said that foreign aid is the "keystone" of our foreign policy in the under-developed areas of the world. There is need, he said, to meet "head-on" the economic and political threat posed by Russia in these areas.

It was charged yesterday...in the course of Senate debate...that Lewis Strauss, acting as commerce secretary, had named a railroad financier, Armand Erpf, to head a committee looking into transportation policies. Democratic Senator Morse (who is fighting the confirmation of Strauss) said he was "shocked" that Strauss had made such an Partisan choice. Today, Mr. Strauss denied that the railroad official had been chosen to direct the study. The official, he said, had been only one of a number of executives in the transportation field who had been "sounded out" as to their availability. No appointments have been made.

For most Americans, the Memorial Day week-end has already begun. In Washington this afternoon, President Eisenhower went to his first baseball game of the season and saw the Senators defeat the Boston Red Sox, 7 to 6.

In the Gulf of Mexico, the season's first tropical storm "Arlene" has developed winds up to 50 miles an hour and is heading for the Texas-Louisiana border area at 12 to 15 miles an hour. At last report, the storm was about 170 miles southeast of Port Arthur, Texas.

Here in New York today, King Baudouin of Belgium was given a ticker-tape parade up lower Broadway. At the city luncheon that followed, the king met two former Army corporals....Joseph Kratzer and Joseph Sassano...members of a reconnaissance party which freed him from German custody in May, 1945.

The worst railroad wreck in Indonesia's history is reported from Jakarta. One hundred and eighty-five persons were killed and 200 injured when a passenger train in West Java plunged into a ravine.

clark for murrow may 29

Yesterday President Eisenhower nominated Dr. John Hpward Morrow, a Negro educator who has been head of the Department of Modern Foreign Languages at North Carolina College, to be our ambassador to the [redacted] republic of Guinea. Dr. Morrow will be this country's first ambassador to this new African state. My colleague Blair Clark was in Conakry, capital of Guinea, this winter when we opened our [redacted] diplomatic mission there.

Barbara Vermont

James Bryan

CLARK FOR MURROW MAY 29

CLARK: The way we began having diplomatic relations with the West African Republic of Guinea was hardly a thrilling saga of the adventures of the Stars and Stripes Abroad. The United States was caught flat-footed by Guinea's vote in September to be independent from France. We weren't prepared for it in any way, and when we sent a man in four months later, it was as halting a start to relations between this country and another as we have had in a while.

In the first place, we were late. The British, the French, the Swiss, among others, were ahead of us. The French, of course, had good reason to be there first since they HAD to set up quickly some new sort of connection with Guinea after the voters said No to belonging to the 5th French Republic. Guinea's Sekou Toure and 99 percent of the voters had just said NO in the referendum to a continuing direct and dpendent relationship with France. They had chosen the bold andb risky path of independence. For the French the problem was to protect their four-thousand nationals in Guinea and

~~all their interests there.~~ It's harder to see just why the British and the Swiss should have got there ahead of the United States.

But it's the limping WAY in which we set up our mission to Guinea that sticks in my head. I ran into the head of our mission in the dining room of the Hotel de France. He is a capable and experienced foreign service officer, named Robert Rinden. His rank is enough to be a minister in a first-class embassy. We didn't send a boy to do a man's job, but we gave our man no facilities. For example, he and his one assistant had no car. The British and the Swiss heads of mission, not to mention the French, had big cars with their flags flapping from the fenders. Our man Rinden had to take a taxi. Furthermore, his budget for our mission to Guinea allowed him only $2.50 a day for taxi fare. That meant that if he had any diplomatic messages to deliver beyond that one hour in the decrepit taxi of Monsieur Charbonneau, he paid for it out of his own pocket (which, in fact, he willingly did). It looked funny, though, to see the representative of the might and authority of the United States of America get into Monsieur Charbonneau's heaving pile of junk to ride up the street in the wake of the British, French and Swiss limousines.

~~on his way to his one-room temporary office~~. One time our man in Conakry had to hitch a ride in a French company's truck in order to deliver an important message to the Guinea government.

Our Mr. Rinden's assistant was even worse off, though his deprivations were more private, less noticeable. The State Department budget allowed him so little to live on ... to travel on and eat on ... that I figured that after paying for his minimum hotel room, his laundry and the fixed-price dinner at the only decent hotel in Conakry, he pocketed a total of $80 a month out of his salary.

The reason for this ... if you can call it that ... is that no one expected Guinea to cut loose from France back 18 months before, when the State Department budget was made up. And the only way we could open a diplomatic mission to Guinea at all was to take the money Congress approved for a consulate in Marrakech, Morocco, and use it for Conakry ... kind of slipping it to Mr. Rinden.

Personally, I was surprised when I checked this story in Washington this morning, to learn that Congress kept such a very close rein on our diplomatic missions abroad. The constitution gives the President the duty and power to name our representatives abroad ... but Congress provides the money. There is not much flexibility in this system, and we can count on other unexpected Guineas to turn up before too long.

3:00

# # #

Our new Ambassador, Dr. Morrow, can undoubtedly surmount this background to his mission ... whose comic memory has probably already been forgotten in volatile Conakry. But he will have one other problem when he gets there which comes from the fact that he is a Negro. Africans will ask him, as they seek to find out to what extent he really represents the United States and how loud his voice will ring in Washington, whether it is true that American Negroes are sent as ambassadors only to African countries and not to the rest of this many-colored world.

Now here is Ed Murrow.

3:35

That was my colleague,
Blair Clark

The British island colony of Singapore is holding its first popular election, under a new constitution granting it home rule. Voting is compulsory, for the more than half-million persons registered. And because much of the population is Chinese, the situation is being closely watched. Their feelings toward Red China could be a major factor. The anti-Communist parties were not able to form a united front against the left-wing Peoples Action Party, which is expected to win. The leader of this party is not a Communist...but he campaigns against the "white man", and demands that the British bases in Singapore be liquidated. At stake in the election are 51 ~~[illegible]~~ assembly seats. All local affairs...except internal security...will be under the control of the new government.

Back in a moment -

George Bryson

Word for Today

In international politics, there are always surprises...as indeed there are in every other field of human affairs. Many years ago, E. J. Hardy said, "It is the unexpected that constantly happens." We know this is true, but too often fail to act upon it. As former President Truman once observed, "Truth has to be told several times."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, May 29, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... My colleague Blair Clark was in Conakry, the capital of Guinea, this winter, when we opened our diplomatic mission there.

CLARK: The way we began having diplomatic relations with the West African Republic of Guinea was hardly a thrilling saga of the ventures of the Stars and Stripes abroad. The United States was caught flat-footed by Guinea's vote in September to be independent from France. We weren't prepared for it in any way, and when we sent a man in four months later it was as halting a start to relations between this country and another as we have had in a while. In the first place we were late. The British, the French, the Swiss among others were ahead of us. The French, of course, had good reason to be there first, since they had to set up quickly some new sort of connection with Guinea after the voters said "no" to belonging to the Fifth French Republic. It's harder to see just why the British and the Swiss should have got there ahead of the United States. But it's a limping way in which we set up our mission to Guinea that sticks in my head. I ran into the head of our mission in the dining room of the Hotel de France. He is a capable and experienced foreign service officer named Robert Rindone? His rank is enough to be a minister in a first-class embassy. We didn't send a boy to do a man's job, but we gave our man no facilities. For example: He and his one assistant had no car. The British and the Swiss heads of mission, not to mention the French, had big cars with their flags flapping from the fenders. Our man Rindone had to take a taxi. Furthermore, his budget for our mission to Guinea allowed him only $2.50 a day for taxi fare. That meant that if he had any diplomatic messages to deliver beyond that one hour, in the decrept taxi of Monsieur Chabineau?, he paid for it out of his own pocket, which in fact he willingly did. It looked funny though to see the representative of the might and authority of the United States of America get into Monsieur Chabineau's heaving pile of junk to ride up the street in the wake of the British, French and Swiss limousines. One time our man in Conakry had to hitch a ride in a French company's truck in order to deliver an important message to the Guinea government. Our Mr. Rindone's assistant was even worse off. Though his deprivations were more private and less noticeable. The State Department budget allowed him so little to live on, to travel on and eat on, that I figured that after paying for his minimum hotel room, his laundry and the fixed price dinner at the only decent hotel in Conakry, he pocketed a total of $80.00 a month out of his salary. The reason for this, if you can call it that, is that no one expected Guinea to cut loose from France back 18 months before, when the State Department budget was made up. And the only way we could open a diplomatic mission to Guiean at all was to take the money Congress approved for a consulate in Marrakech, Morocco, and use it for Conakry, and kind of slipping it to Mr. Rindone.

Personally I was surprised when I checked this story in Washington this morning, to learn that Congress kept such a very close financial rein on our diplomatic missions abroad. The Constitution gives the President the duty and power to name our representatives abroad. But Congress provides the money. There's not much flexibility in this system and we can count on other unexpected Guineas to turn up before too long.

Our new ambassador, Dr. Morrow can undoubtedly surmount this background to his mission, whose comic memory has probably been forgotten in volatile Conakry. But he will have one other problem when he gets there, which arises from the fact that he is a Negro. Africans will ask him, as they seek to find out, to what extent he really represents the United States and how loud his voice will ring in Washington, whether it is true that American Negroes are sent as ambassadors only to African countries and not to the rest of this many-colored world. Now here's Ed

Murrow.

MURROW: Thank you, Blair Clark.

Trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MAY 29, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Big Four foreign ministers today returned to Geneva and conferred informally, in secret, for two hours and five minutes. It was the first of a series of restricted meetings that will be held in an effort to break the deadlock on the German question. They met at the villa of the British foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd---without the representatives of either East or West Germany, or the press officers. And because the meeting was restricted, nothing has come out of it to report.

It was, actually, their second informal session in 24 hours. The first unique session took place late yesterday at about 17-thousand feet in an American aircraft bringing them back to Geneva, after attending the funeral of former Secretary of State Dulles. The foreign ministers of the United States, Russia, Britain and France were together on the flight for seventeen hours. A formal statement says they were able to discuss "certain details of their respective positions," and that this exchange of views was most useful. An informant is quoted as saying later, however, that no substantial progress was made. We are given no details on what was said, but we are told that Herter retired early and that Gromyko drank about six Cokes.

Tomorrow, the foreign ministers will meet in a plenary session, where there will be some speeches. And then tomorrow night Gromyko will be host to the Western ministers at his villa for another informal talk.

It is now obvious that Soviet Premier Khrushchev is holding a conference of his own in Albania. Khrushchev began his tour of the small satellite state last Monday, in company with his defense minister. Premier Grotewohl of East Germany also is there, and yesterday they were joined by the defense minister of Communist China. Today, it was announced that the head of the Communist Party in North Korea is making a visit to Albania. And the Yugoslav government reports that in the past few days most of the countries of Southeastern Europe have asked for permission to fly over Yugoslavia to Albania.

While in Albania, Khrushchev has made speeches...warning that if American missile bases are set up in Italy and Greece, he will set up similar bases in Albania and Bulgaria. He told Greece yesterday that its decision entailed "serious consequences." Tonight the State Department issued a statement of protest...saying that Khrushchev "should recognize the right of free people everywhere to decide for themselves the nature of their own defense." The department said that threats against these free countries are regarded by the United States "as a matter of mutual concern." The statements made by Khrushchev it said, "can scarcely improve the chances of successful negotiation at any level."

In a speech today in Montreal, Adlai Stevenson said he thought that the disparity of living standards among the people of the world was the most important, most fateful fact now confronting us. It is not a problem, he said, to be solved by handouts. He said: "Our task, as the wealthy members of world society, is to link our resources to a systematic, long-term program of education and basic development, which will give the world masses the opportunity to help themselves."

In Washington today, James Riddleberger was sworn in as head of the International Cooperation Administration...the agency which administers the United States foreign aid program. Riddleberger is a career diplomat, who has served as ambassador to Yugoslavia and Greece. At the swearing in ceremony, Under Secretary of State Dillon said that foreign aid is the "keystone" of our foreign policy in the under-developed areas of the world. There is need, he said, to meet head-on the economic and political threat posed by Russia in these areas.

It was charged yesterday...in the course of Senate debate...that Lewis Strauss, acting as commerce secretary, had named a railroad financier, Armand Erpf, to head a committee looking into transportation policies. Democratic Senator Morse (who is fighting the confirmation of Strauss) said he was "shocked" that Strauss had made such a partisan choice. Today, Mr. Strauss denied that the railroad official had been chosen to direct the study. The official, he said, had been only one of a number of executives in the transportation field who had been "sounded out" as to their availability. No appointments have been made.

For most Americans, the Memorial Day week-end has already begun. In Washington this afternoon, President Eisenhower wentto his first baseball game of the season and saw the Senators defeat the Boston Red Sox, 7 to 6.

In the Gulf of Mexico, the season's first tropical storm "Arlene," has developed winds up to 50 miles an hour and is heading for the Texas-Louisiana border area at 12 to 15 miles an hour. At last report, the storm was about 170 miles southeast of Port Arthur, Texas.

Here in New York today, King Baudouin of Belgium was given a ticker-tape parade up lower Broadway. At the city luncheon that followed, the king met two former Army corporals...Joseph Kratzer and Joseph Sassano...members of a reconnaissance party which freed him from German custody in May, 1945.

The worst railraad wreck in Indonesia's history is reported from Jakarta. One hundred and eighty-five persons were killed and 200 injured when a passenger train in West Java plunged into a ravine.

Yesterday President Eisenhower nominated Dr. John Howard Morrow, a Negro educator who has been head of the Department of Modern Foreign Languages at North Carolina College, to be our ambassador to the republic of Guinea. Dr. Morrow will be this country's first ambassador to this new African state. My colleague, Blair Clark was in Conakry, capital of Guinea, this winter when we opened our diplomatic mission there.

CLARK: The way we began having diplomatic relations with the West African Republic of Guinea was hardly a thrilling saga of the adventures of the Stars and Stripes Abroad. The United States was caught flat-footed by Guinea's vote in September to be independent from France. We weren't prepared for it in any way, and when we sent a man in four months later, it was as halting a start to relations between this country and another as we have had in a while.

In the first place, we were late. The British, the French, the Swiss, among others, were ahead of us. The French, of course, had good reason to be there first since they had to set quickly some new sort of connection with Guinea after the voters said no to belonging to the Fifth French Republic. It's harder to see just why the British and the Swiss should have got there ahead of the United States.

But it's the limping way in which we set up our mission to Guinea that sticks in my head. I ran into the head of our mission in the dining room of the Hotel de France. He is a capable and experienced foreign service officer, named Robert Rinden. His rank is enough to be a minister in a first-class embassy. We didn't send a boy to do a man's job, but we gave our man no facilities. For example, he and his one assistant had no car. The British and the Swiss heads of mission, not to mention the French, had big cars with their flags flapping from the fenders. Our man Rinden had to take a taxi. Furthermore, his budget for our mission to Guinea allowed him only $2.50 a day for taxi fare. That meant that if he had any diplomatic messages to deliver beyond that one hour in the decrepit taxi of Monsieur Charbonneau, he paid for it out of his own pocket (which, in fact, he willingly did.) It looked funny, though, to see the representative of the might and authority of the United States of America get into Monsieur Charbonneau's heaving pile of junk to ride up the street in the wake of the British, French and Swiss limousines. One time our man in Conakry had to hitch a ride in a French company's truck in order to deliver an important message to the Guinea government.

Our Mr. Rinden's assistant was even worse off, though his deprivations were more private, less noticeable. The State Department budget allowed him so little to live on...to travel on and eat on...that I figured that after paying for his minimum hotel room, his laundry and the fixed-price dinner at the only decent hotel in Conakry, he pocketed a total of $80 a month out of his salary.

The reason for this...if you can call it that...is that no one expected Guinea to cut loose from France back 18 months before when the State Department budget was made up. And the only way we could open a diplomatic mission to Guinea at all was to take the money Congress approved for a consulate in Marrakech, Morocco, and use it for Conakry...kind of slipping it to Mr. Rinden.

Personally, I was surprised when I checked this story in Washington this morning, to learn that Congress kept such a very close financial rein on our diplomatic missions abroad. The constitution gives the President the duty and power to name our representatives abroad...but Congress provides the money. There is not much flexibility in this system, and we can count on other unexpected Guineas to turn up before too long.

Our new ambassador, Dr. Morrow can undoubtedly surmount this background to his mission...whose comic memory has probably already been forgotten in volatile Conakry. But he will have one other problem when he gets there which comes from the fact that he is a Negro. Africans will ask him, as they seek to find out to what extent he really represents the United States and how loud his voice will ring in Washington, whether it is true that American Negroes are sent as ambassadors only to African countries and not to the rest of this many-colored world.

Now, here is Ed Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague Blair Clark.

The British island colony of Singapore is holding its first popular election under a new constitution granting it home rule. Voting is compulsory for the more than half-million persons registered. And because much of the population is Chinese, the situation is being closely watched. Their feelings toward Red China could be a major factor. The anti-Communist parties were not able to form a united front against the left-wing Peoples Action Party, which is expected to win. The leader of this party is not a Communist...but he campaigns against the "white man" and demands that the British bases in Singapore be liquidated.. At stake in the election are 51 assembly seats. All local affairs...except internal security, will be under the control of the new government.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In international politics, there are always surprises...as indeed there are in every other fiedd of human affairs. Many years ago, E.J. Hardy said, "It is the unexpected that constantly happens." We know this is true but too often fail to act upon it. As former President Truman observed, "Truth has to be told several times."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., June 1, 1959

This is the news:

The United States assistant secretary of state, Andrew Berding, said in Geneva today that the foreign ministers, so far, have made very little progress on Berlin. He also said, "If the Russians want a summit conference, a minimum degree of agreement will have to be reached." Berding made the report of "very little progress" after today's private negotiating session at the villa of Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko. A Russian spokesman had called today's meeting "useful". This conjured up a picture of Western concessions...which was not at all the case. The United States served notice that the broadcasts of its radio transmitter in West Berlin will neither be abolished nor restricted, that any agreement for reduction of propaganda must be reciprocal. The Western foreign ministers accused Russia of using East Berlin as a staging area for widespread subversive activity against West Germany...thus counter-attacking against the favorite Russian charge that West Berlin is being so used against East Germany.

There was much speculation in Geneva today over the story carried by the London Times...suggesting that if the Conservatives win the next general election, Selwyn Lloyd might be replaced as British foreign secretary. The report was seen in Geneva as undermining Lloyd's position at the foreign ministers conference. British sources knocked down the story...which spoke of the "burden" of the office and its inevitable effect on Mr. Lloyd's health. Prime Minister Macmillan, it said, had let the foreign secretary know that "enough was enough." Tonight, Mr. Macmillan sent Lloyd a cable...in which he is understood to have assured Lloyd of his complete confidence. The cable...according to a British source in Geneva...expressed astonishment at the Times report and said that the origin of the story was being investigated. An official of the London Times had said earlier in the day, "The article speaks for itself. What it says is still the view of the Times. We can't reveal its source."

Experts representing seven European countries met in Stockholm today to consider the formation of a second common market. The first common market...known as the European Economic Community...is made up of France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxemburg. The other countries (which have met in Stockholm to see if they can remove their trade barriers) are Britain, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Austria, Switzerland and Portgual. This meeting is being held on a purely technical level. It is expected to be followed by a political conference at which, it is hoped, firm decisions can be made.

Iraq has formally renounced American military aid on grounds that such aid conflicts with the Iraqi policy of "positive neutrality". An Iraqi note to this effect was polite. It said that Iraq desires a "growth of friendship" with the United States on the basis of mutual understanding. No American arms have been shipped to Iraq since last fall. The Russians have sent considerable military aid...and recently the Iraqi government negotiated an arms agreement with Britain.

The Administration foreign aid program was attacked today on the floor of the Senate. Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana offered five amendments to the Administration bill. One of these would cut off all foreign aid gifts and substitute long-term loans. This would not be done all at once but would be accomplished over a period of three years. Another amendment would require the government to make public whatever assistance---military or economic---it sends to another country. Senators now have access to this information, but they cannot make the figures public. Two Democratic senators---Young of Ohio and Gruening of Alaska---today spoke in support of this last proposal. "Taxpayers," Senator Young said, "are entitled to know the facts."

Senate Republican Leader Dirksen said today that in his "considered opinion", President Eisenhower will not withdraw the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. Dirksen made his prediction after checking the White House. He had no reason, he said, to believe that Strauss would not be confirmed. A recent charge made against Strauss was that he had chosen a railroad financier, Armand Erpf, to conduct a government survey of the transportation industry. It was argued that in making such a study, a man with major railroad interests was bound to be partisan. Mr. Strauss denied that he had chosen anyone chairman of the study committee, saying that Erpf was just one of "a number of transportation experts" he was considering for the post. But today Erpf asked to be counted out. His usefulness in such a project, he said, was being impaired. The Senate is due to open formal debate on the Strauss nomination on Thursday.

Four miners were killed...and 27 injured...in a mine cave-in today near Iron River, Michigan. The cave-in accompanied by fire occurred in an iron mine owned by the Inland Steel Company. The condition of two of the men rescued is described as "critical".

Edward R. Murrow: June 1, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The landslide of the People's Action Party in the Singapore election could hardly be called a happy ending, of a show-window demonstration of democracy at work. Not that the result misrepresented the people of Singapore. Voting was compulsory, and the People's Action Party won forty-three of the fifty-one seats in the Assembly. But the winners are crypto-communists, out to build an extreme welfare state. There are no communists in Singapore - that is, outside of jail. The party is banned. The defeated Chief Minister, Lim Yew Hock and his People's Alliance were openly anti-communist. The head of the People's Action Party, Lee Kuan Yew, was not. He was careful to say that he is not pro-communist. He described himself as simply non-communist. But since he campaigned as anti-British and anti-white, he and his party are much closer to Chinese communism than to Western democracy.

He has good reason to emphasize that he is not a communist, for he and everyone else in Singapore is sure that the British would come back with force and stamp out any attempt to set up a communist state. The Constitution now going into effect can be suspended in an emergency. It is not for the British alone to decide what an emergency is. That would be done by a security council in which the Malayans have the balance of votes.

But they would not hesitate to call back the British to keep communism out.

The result of the election gives the Chinese in Singapore control of the government, and this will be the first state outside mainland China and Formosa ruled by Chinese. Those who have banked on the friendliness of overseas Chinese for the West may be disappointed. But they should not overlook the fact that most of the overseas Chinese in Asia are minorities, being discriminated against by other Asians. In Singapore the Chinese were a vast majority being discriminated against by the British. That accounts for the overwhelmingly anti British sentiment.

But it was not only anti-British. Much of it was anti-white. And an episode that played some part in the campaign was the disclosure that unidentified friends in the United States had sent five hundred thousand dollars to help keep the crypto-communists out.

But not all the emotion that decided the election was anti-white. Much of it was due to economic conditions. Unemployment in Singapore is fifty thousand. Singapore is Britain's second largest port and is at the mercy of conditions governing world trade. The break in tin and rubber prices hurt the port, as did separation from Malaya. Already some of the rubber and tin that Singapore used to handle exclusively is leaving from Port Swettenham in Malaya. Another factor in Singapore's radicalism is the fact that ten thousand boys and girls leave school each year and have few jobs to go to. Singapore has not been as enterprising as Hong Kong in starting new industries. These unemployed young people join groups that are easily recruited by the friends of communism.

Lee Kuan Yew, who now becomes First Minister, is a Cambridge law graduate, said to be a man of charm and ability. In private life he is affable Harry Lee with friends among the colonials. But in public life he is a politician who says he is voicing the will of the people in his anti-British policies. In the campaign he promised to close down the British military base in Singapore as soon as union with Malaya is achieved. It was a cheap promise to make, as union with Malaya is years off. And he would not care to deprive the city of the thirty-five thousand jobs the base provides and the eighty million dollars a year it brings in.

He made a great point in the campaign of demanding the release of eight of his party associates imprisoned after the riots of 1956, but he did not promise to repeal the statute under which they have been held in prison XXXX without trial. On the contrary, he said he would use the statute himself.

The commonwealth status which Singapore is now acquiring is not sacred to Lee Kuan Yew. He told a news conference today that it had been "rather silly" for Radio Singapore to have played "God Save the Queen" in reporting the election.

He has not yet announced his Cabinet, saying he will not do so until the Governor-General releases the eight party leaders still in prison. But that is not a demonstration for civil liberties. It is an anti-British gesture.

Back in a moment.—

George Bryan.—

Word for Today

Singapore has held its first election under the new constitution granting it home rule. The anti-Communists were not able to form a united front...and as expected the left-wing People's Action Party won. This was a demonstration of democracy. But as Justice Brandeis once said, "Democracy is more difficult to maintain than to achieve."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 1, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The United States assistant secretary of state, Andrew Berding, said in Geneva today that the foreign ministers, so far, have made very little progress on Berlin. He also said, "If the Russians want a summit conference, a minimum degree of agreement will have to be reached." Berding made the report of "very little progress" after today's private negotiating session at the villa of Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko. A Russian spokesman had called today's meeting "useful." This conjured up a picture of Western concessions...which was not at all the case. The United States served notice that the broadcasts of its radio transmitter in West Berlin will neither be abolished nor restricted, that any agreement for reduction of propaganda must be reciprocal. The Western foreign ministers accused Russia of using East Berlin as a staging area for widespread subversive activity against West Germany...thus counter-attacking against the favorite Russian charge that West Berlin is being so used against East Germany.

There was much speculation in Geneva today over the story carried by the London Times...suggesting that if the Conservatives win the next general election, Selwyn Lloyd might be replaced as British foreign secretary. The report was seen in Geneva as undermining Lloyd's position at the foreign ministers conference. British sources knocked down the story...which spoke of the "burden" of the office and its inevitable effect on Mr. Lloyd's health. Prime Minister Macmillan, it said, had let the foreign secretary know that "enough was enough." Tonight, Mr. Macmillan sent Lloyd a cable...in which he is understood to have assured Lloyd of his complete confidence. The cable....according to a British source in Geneva...expressed astonishment at the Times report and said that the origin of the story was being investigated. An official of the London Times had said earlier in the day, "The article speaks for itself. What it says is still the view of the Times. We can't reveal its source."

Experts representing seven European countries met in Stockholm today to consider the formation of a second common market. The first common market.... known as the European Economic Community...is made up of France, West Germany, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxemburg. The other countries (which have met in Stockholm to see if they can remove their trade barriers) are Britain, Sweden, Norway, Denmark, Austria, Switzerland and Portugal. This meeting is being held on a purely technical level. It is expected to be followed by a political conference at which, it is hoped, firm decisions can be made.

Iraq has formally renounced American military aid on grounds that such aid conflicts with the Iraqi policy of "positive neutrality." An Iraqi note to this effect was polite. It said that Iraq desires a "growth of friendship" with the United States on the basis of mutual understanding. No American arms have been shipped to Iraq since last fall. The Russians have sent considerable military aid...and recently the Iraqi government negotiated an arms agreement with Britain.

The Administration foreign aid program was attacked today on the floor of the Senate. Democratic Senator Mansfield of Montana offered five amendments to the Administration bill. One of these would cut off all foreign aid gifts and substitute long-term loans. This would not be done all at once but would be accomplished over a period of three years. Another amendment would require the government to make public whatever assistance---military or economic---it sends to another country. Senators now have access to this information, but they cannot make the figures public. Two Democratic senators---Young of Ohio and Gruening of Alaska---today spoke in support of this last proposal. "Taxpayers," Senator Young said, "are entitled to know the facts."

Senate Republican Leader Dirksen said today that in his "considered opinion," President Eisenhower will not withdraw the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. Dirksen made his prediction after checking the White House. He had no reason, he said, to believe that Strauss would not be confirmed.

A recent charge made against Strauss was that he had chosen a railroad financier, Armand Erpf, to conduct a government survey of the transportation industry. It was argued that in making such a study, a man with major railroad interests was bound to be partisan. Mr. Strauss denied that he had chosen anyone chairman of the study committee, saying that Erpf was just one of "a number of transportation experts" he was considering for the post. But today Erpf asked to be counted out. His usefulness in such a project, he said, was being impaired. The Senate is due to open formal debate on the Strauss nomination on Thursday.

Four miners were killed...and 27 injured...in a mine cave-in today near Iron River, Michigan. The cave-in accompanied by fire occurred in an iron mine owned by the Inland Steel Company. The condition of two of the men rescued is described as "critical."

The landslide of the People's Action Party in the Singapore election could hardly be called a happy ending, of a show-window demonstration of democracy at work. Not that the result misrepresented the people of Singapore. Voting was compulsory, and the People's Action Party won forty-three of the fifty-one seats in the Assembly. But the winners are crypto-communists, out to build an extreme welfare state. There are no communists in Singapore - that is, outside of jail. The party is banned. The defeated Chief Minister, Lim Yew Hock and his People's Alliance were openly anti-communist. The head of the People's Action Party, Lee Kuan Yew, was not. He was careful to say that he is not pro-communist. He described himself as simply non-communist. But since he campaigned as anti-British and anti-white, he and his party are much closer to Chinese communism than to Western democracy.

He has good reason to emphasize that he is not a communist, for he and everyone else in Singapore is sure that the British would come back with force and stamp out any attempt to set up a communist state. The Constitution now going into effect can be suspended in an emergency. It is not for the British alone to decide what an emergency is. That would be done by a security council in which the Malayans have the balance of votes. But they would not hesitate to call back the British to keep communism out.

The result of the election gives the Chinese in Singapore control of the government, and this will be the first state outside mainland China and Formosa ruled by Chinese. Those who have banked on the friendliness of overseas Chinese for the West may be disappointed. But they should not overlook the fact that most of the overseas Chinese in Asia are minorities, being discriminated against by other Asians. In Singapore, the Chinese were a vast majority being discriminated against by the British. That accounts for the overwhelmingly anti-British sentiment.

But it was not only anti-British. Much of it was anti-white. And an episode that played some part in the campaign was the disclosure that unidentified friends in the United States had sent five hundred thousand dollars to help keep the crypto-communists out.

But not all the emotion that decided the election was anti-white. Much of it was due to economic conditions. Unemployment in Singapore is fifty thousand. Singapore is Britain's second largest port and is at the mercy of conditions governing world trade. The break in tin and rubber prices hurt the port, as did separation from Malaya. Already some of the rubber and tin that Singapore used to handle exclusively is leaving from Port Swettenham in Malaya. Another factor in Singapore's radicalism is the fact that ten thousand boys and girls leave school each year and have few jobs to go to. Singapore has not been as enterprising as Hong Kong in starting new industries. These unemployed young people join groups that are easily recruited by the friends of communism.

Lee Kuan Yew, who now becomes First Minister, is a Cambridge law graduate, said to be a man of charm and ability. In private life he is affable Harry Lee with friends among the colonials. But in public life he is a politician who says he is voicing the will of the people in his anti-British policies. In the campaign he promised to close down the British military base in Singapore as soon as union with Malaya is achieved. It was a cheap promise to make, as union with Malaya is years off. And he would not care to deprive the city of the thirty-five thousand jobs the base provides and the eighty million dollars a year it brings in.

He made a great point in the campaign of demanding the release of eight of his party associates imprisoned after the riots of 1956, but he did not promise to repeal the statute under which they have been held in prison without trial. On the contrary, he said he would use the statute himself.

The commonwealth status which Singapore is now acquiring is not sacred to Lee Kuan Yew. He told a news conference today that it had been "rather silly" for Radio Singapore to have played "God Save the Queen" in reporting the election.

He has not yet announced his Cabinet, saying he will not do so until the Governor-General releases the eight party leaders still in prison. But that is not a demonstration for civil liberties. It is an anti-British gesture.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Singapore has held its first election under the new constitution granting it home rule. The anti-Communists were not able to form a united front...and as expected the left-wing Peoples Action Party won. This was a demonstration of democracy. But as Justice Brandeis once said, "Democracy is more difficult to maintain than to achieve."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 2, 1959

This is the news:

In Geneva today, neither side budged. And there was some blunt talk on the part of the American secretary of state. For a direct report on today's plenary session, we switch to Geneva and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

(Tape runs 4:50
Ends on cue: "Now back to Ed Murrow in N.Y."

That was Dan Schorr, reporting on the Geneva foreign ministers conference now in its twenty-second day.

British Prime Minister Macmillan spoke in the House of Commons today in support of his foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. A member of the Labour opposition demanded to know who was responsible for the "inspired statement" in the London Times that Lloyd might be relieved of his post. "There have been," said Mr. Macmillan, "no inspired statements of any kind." He added, "The foreign secretary and I hope to carry on our work together for a very long time."

The British governor of Singapore today ordered the release of eight followers of the Peoples Action Party...which won last week's parliamentary election. The eight had been jailed after a series of riots in 1956. The leader of the Peoples Action Party had refused to form a government for carrying out home rule until after their release.

All political activity in Indonesia outside the government has been prohibited. The ban applies to all political meetings, posters, printed articles and demonstrations. It was ordered by the Army chief of staff...after the Indonesian assembly, for the third time, refused to return to the revolutionary constitution of 1945 as President Sukarno had asked. The constitution would give Sukarno almost dictatorial powers.

In the Sudan, President Abboud has placed two members of the military junta under house arrest. Sixteen other officers are in jail.

—)

The Sudanese government gave no reason for the arrests...saying that to do so would "prejudice the investigation now in progress." / Cairo newspapers say those arrested will be tried for treason.

President Eisenhower today nominated Assistant Secretary of State William Rountree to be ambassador to Pakistan. / Rountree will be succeeded in Washington by G. Lewis Jones, a career officer now serving as ambassador to Tunisia.

The State Department today attacked the decision of the International Olympic Committee to expel Nationalist China. / The department called the decision "a clear act of political discrimination" resulting from Communist pressure. / And it expressed hope that sports organizations in this country and overseas would try to have the decision reversed. / By its action, the international committee cleared the way for Communist China to take part in the next Olympics. / Red China withdrew from the games in 1956 because Nationalist China also was taking part.

President Somoza of Nicaragua claims that the small band of invaders (who flew into the country from Costa Rica two days ago) will soon be eliminated. / Tonight, the dictator-president suspended all import licenses, a move directed against enemies in the business community, who took part yesterday in a general strike.

Here in New York, wage negotiations between the major steel companies and the United Steelworkers resumed today after a six-day recess. The talks are entering their fourth week, with no progress reported. The Associated Press reports, however, from Washington that the Eisenhower Administration believes there is an "excellent chance" that a steel strike can be averted. The Administration is said to attribute this belief to Mr. Eisenhower's appeals to both sides to face up to their responsibilities. The present three-year contract expires at the end of this month.

Republican Senator Dirksen filled reporters in today on the unannounced meeting President Eisenhower had last night with congressional leaders. Secretary of the Treasury Anderson told the White House conference that action by Congress removing the interest ceiling on government bonds is urgent. Dirksen also quoted Anderson as advocating a higher debt limit and the authorization of a new series of savings bonds for education. These bonds would have "not too great a maturity period" and would be purchased by families to help meet educational costs. Dirksen said that the President may send this package to Congress later this week.

The Army announces that the r[redacted] monkey "Able" (which with the monkey named "Baker" rode a Jupiter rocket into space) died last night in a research laboratory at Fort Knox. "Able" was being operated on for the removal of part of a recording instrument used in the flight. The Army says there is "absolutely no evidence" that the animal was injured in the course of its adventure in space.

A truck carrying propane gas exploded near Pottsville, Pennsylvania today...on Route 122...killing eleven persons. At least 15 other persons were hurt.

In Galveston, Texas, a judge has ordered Governor Long of Louisiana committed to a hospital, [redacted] after a doctor had certified the governor as being mentally ill. A medical bulletin says that "with adequate care and treatment, the outlook for recovery is excellent."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

In these days, it's pretty hard to avoid pessimism. But few have reached the depths Mark Twain did when he wrote: "Etiquette requires us to admire the human race. But why was it ever created, or at least why wasn't something creditable created in its place? Often," said Twain, "it seems such a pity that Noah and his party didn't miss the boat."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, June 2, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... In Geneva today, neither side budged. And there was some blunt talk on the part of the American Secretary of State. For a direct report on today's plenary session, we switch to Geneva and my colleague Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: The Big Four Foreign Ministers and their East and West German advisers spent another three hours and ten minutes today, in plenary session on the Berlin issue, a session which ran so long that a restricted meeting scheduled for tonight, at Secretary Herter's villa, was put off until tomorrow. The three hour meeting accomplished nothing, or worse. Worse because the attitudes of studied amiability are beginning to unravel and a note of controlled exasperation is starting to creep into the proceedings. The Donnybrook between East German Foreign Minister Lothar Bolz and West German Ambassador Wilhelm Grewe, that was expected. The (indistinct) remarks of the Big Four ministers were the new element. Russia's Andrei Gromyko, in rejecting the Western seven point program for a united Berlin, said, "It is necessary to quit hopeless efforts to submit drafts deliberately made unacceptable." And he said that a hundred thousand speeches would not change his mind. Selwyn Lloyd of Britain retorted that an equal number of speeches would not change the mind of the West, and he accused Gromyko of putting into his mouth arguments he had not used. Lloyd said Gromyko was taking a very rigid position.

Secretary Herter spoke today for just a half minute. But it was a pointed half minute. Commenting on the manner in which the East German minister had brushed off Western rights in Berlin, Herter asked Gromyko, who was presiding, to suggest to Bolz that he familiarize himself with the basic documents relative to the surrender of Germany before again proposing to instruct the Western Powers about their rights.

This conference, now in its fourth week, is proceeding on two levels, semi-public and private. And on both levels it is deadlocked. I asked a Western delegate tonight "Where do we go from here?" He paused and replied, "I don't know." If one is to sum up the course of the conference briefly one would say, two weeks were spent airing rival long-range plans for Germany that were bound to be utterly incompatible and were put aside as unnegotiable. Then the Big Four concentrated on trying to patch together a temporary arrangement on Berlin that would hold up long enough to justify a summit conference. On that the positions also now seem hopelessly incompatible. In effect, Russia is saying "Let's write a new order for Berlin and trust us to look after your interests." The West is saying "Let's keep the old order and trust us to take care of any complaints that you have have."

It all looks very dismal and hopeless. And yet the spirit among the Western delegations is not one of dejection. Suggestions for an ultimatum to Gromyko to fish or cut bait have been put aside. The new position now is to wait as long as Gromyko is willing to wait. The Western delegations do not feel under any strong pressure. The main reason for this is that Western solidarity has turned out to be stronger than anyone dared to hope. Partly that is because the subject now is Berlin, on which unity is easier than on the broader German issue. Partly it's because - and this can be ranked as a major gain on the Western side - because Secretary Herter has begun to show his colors. And the colors he has shown are generally welcomed.

It was Herter who was the greatest unknown quantity when this conference began. The Soviet strategy was to try to woo him and Selwyn Lloyd and to isolate Adenauer's West Germany and de Gaulle's France. That maneuver has failed. At first Herter was reticent and retiring. More lately, and especially in the past week since his trip to Washington for the Dulles funeral, Herter has been acting more forthrightly and more sure-footedly. At dinner at Gromyko's villa last Saturday night, Herter told the Soviet Minister in no uncertain terms that we would not back down on fundamental Allied rights in Berlin - and he spelled them out. All this week there have been relieved comments from other delegations: "That Herter is all right. He can really tell them." No one any longer talks of a Moscow-London axis. And certainly not of a Moscow-Washington axis. This is partly the fruit of Soviet rigidity. But tonight when a Western delegates says that he doesn't know where we go from here, it is without trepidation. He knows that wherever we go from here, we are likely to go together. Where we are likely to go is into a long and dreary waiting period. No one on the Western side is nervously packing his bags or fidgeting. Christian Herter is at the wheel, courteous as always, but increasingly firm - and his colleagues, all of them, are happy to have him there.

Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

Trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 2, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

In Geneva today, neither side budged. And there was some blunt talk on the part of the American Secretary of State. For a direct report on today's plenary session, we switch to Geneva and my colleague Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: The Big Four Foreign Ministers and their East and West German advisers spent another three hours and ten minutes today, in plenary session on the Berlin issue, a session which ran so long that a restricted meeting scheduled for tonight, at Secretary Herter's villa, was put off until tomorrow. The three hour meeting accomplished nothing, or worse. Worse because that attitudes of studied amiability are beginning to unravel and a note of controlled exasperation is starting to creep into the proceedings. The Donnybrook between East German Foreign Minister Lothar Bolz and West German Ambassador Wilhelm Grewe, that was expected. The (indistinct) remarks of the Big Four ministers were the new element. Russia's Andrei Gromyko, in rejecting the Western seven point program for a united Berlin said, "It is necessary to quit hopeless efforts to submit drafts deliberately made unacceptable." And he said that a hundred thousand speeches would not change his mind. Selwyn Lloyd of Britain retorted that an equal number of speeches would not change the mind of the West, and he accused Gromyko of putting into his mouth arguments he had not used. Lloyd said Gromyko was taking a very rigid position.

Secretary Herter spoke today for just a half minute. But it was a pointed half minute. Commenting on the manner in which the East German minister had brushed off Western rights in Berlin, Herter asked Gromyko, who was presiding, to suggest to Bolz that he familiarize himself with the basic documents relative to the surrender of Germany before again proposing to instruct the Western Powers about their rights.

This conference, now in its fourth week, is proceeding on two levels, semi-public and private. And on both levels it is deadlocked. I asked a Western delegate tonight "Where do we go from here?" He paused and replied, "I don't know."

If one is to sum up the course of the conference briefly one would say, two weeks were spent airing rival long-range plans for Germany that were bound to be utterly incompatible and were put aside as unnegotiable. Then the Big Four concentrated on trying to patch together a temporary arrangement on Berlin that would hold up long enough to justify a summit conference. On that the positions also now seem hopelessly incompatible. In effect, Russia is saying "Let's write a new order for Berlin and trust us to look after your interests." The West is saying "Let's keep the old order and trust us to take care of any complaints that you have."

It all looks very dismal and hopeless. And yet the spirit among the Western delegations is not one of dejection. Suggestions for an ultimatum to Gromyko to fish or cut bait have been put aside. The new position now is to wait as long as Gromyko is willing to wait. The Western delegations do not feel under any strong pressure. The main reason for this is that Western solidarity has turned out to be stronger than anyone dared to hope. Partly that is because the subject now is Berlin, on which unity is easier than on the broader German issue. Partly it's because - and this can be ranked as a major gain on the Western side - because Secretary Herter has begun to show his colors. And the colors he has shown are generally welcomed.

It was Herter who was the greatest unknown quantity when this conference began. The Soviet strategy was to try to woo him and Selwyn Lloyd and to isolate Adenauer's West Germany and de Gaulle's France. That maneuver has failed. At first Herter was reticent and retiring. More lately, and especially in the past week since his trip to Washington for the Dulles funeral, Herter has been acting more forthrightly and more sure-footedly. At dinner at Gromyko's villa last Saturday night, Herter told the Soviet Minister in no uncertain terms that we would not back down on fundamental Allied rights in Berlin - and he spelled them out. All this week there have been relieved comments from other delegations: "That Herter is all right. He can really tell them." No one any longer talks of Moscow-London axis. This is partly the fruit of Soviet rigidity. But tonight when a Western delegate says that he doesn't know where we go from here, it is without trepidation. He knows that wherever we go from here, we are likely to go together. Where we are likely to go is into a long and dreary waiting period. No one on the Western side is nervously packing his bags or fidgeting. Christian Herter is at the wheel, courteous as always, but increasing firm - and his colleagues, all of them, are happy to have him there.

Now, back to Ed Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Dan Schorr, reporting on the Geneva foreign ministers conference now in its twenty-second day.

British Prime Minister Macmillan spoke in the House of Commons today in support of his foreign secretary, Selwyn Lloyd. A member of the Labour opposition demanded to know who was responsible for the "inspired statement" in the London Times that Lloyd might be relieved of his post. "There have been," said Mr. Macmillan, "no inspired statements of any kind." He added, "The foreign secretary and I hope to carry on our work together for a very long time."

The British governor of Singapore today ordered the release of eight followers of the Peoples Action Party...which won last week's parliamentary election. The eight had been jailed after a series of riots in 1956. The leader of the Peoples Action Party had refused to form a government for carrying out home rule until after their release.

All political activity in Indonesia outside the government has been prohibited. The ban applies to all political meetings, posters, printed articles and demonstrations. It was ordered by the Army chief of staff...after the Indonesian assembly, for the third time, refused to return to the revolutionary constitution of 1945 as President Sukarno had asked. The constitution would give Sukarno almost dictatorial powers.

In the Sudan, President Abboud has placed two members of the military junta under house arrest. Sixteen other officers are in jail. The Sudanese government gave no reason for the arrests...saying that to do so would "prejudice the investigation now in progress." Cairo newspapers say those arrested will be tried for treason.

President Eisenhower today nominated Assistant Secretary of State William Rountree to be ambassador to Pakistan. Rountree will be succeeded in Washington by G. Lewis Jones, a career officer now serving as ambassador to Tunisia.

The State Department today attacked the decision of the International Olympic Committee to expel Nationalist China. The department called the decision "a clear act of political discrimination" resulting from Communist pressure. And it expressed hope that sports organizations in this country and overseas would try to have the decision reversed. By its action, the international committee cleared the way for Communist China to take part in the next Olympics. Red China withdrew from the games in 1956 because Nationalist China also was taking part.

President Somoza of Nicaragua claims that the small band of invaders (who flew into the country from Costa Rica two days ago) will soon be eliminated. Tonight, the dictator -president suspended all import licenses, a move directed against enemies in the business community, who took part yesterday in a general strike.

Here in New York, wage negotiations between the major steel companies and the United Steelworkers resumed today after a six-day recess. The talks are entering their fourth week, with no progress reported. The Associated Press reports, however, from Washington that the Eisenhower Administration believes there is an "excellent chance" that a steel strike can be averted. The Administration is said to attribute this belief to Mr. Eisenhower's appeals to both sides to face up to their responsibilities. The present three-year contract expires at the end of this month.

Republican Senator Dirksen filled reporters in today on the unannounced meeting President Eisenhower had last night with congressional leaders. Secretary of the Treasurey Anderson told the White House conference that action by Congress removing the interest ceiling on government bonds is urgent. Dirksen also quoted Anderson as advocating a higher debt limit and the authorization of a new series of savings bonds for education. These bonds would have not too great a maturity period and would be purchased by families to help meet educational costs. Dirksen said that the President may send this package to Congress later this week.

The Army announces that the monkey Able (which withthe monkey named Baker rode a Jupiter rocket into space) died last night in a research laboratory at Fort Knox. Able was being operated on for the removal of part of a recording instrument used in the flight. The Army says there is "absolutely no evidence" that the animal was injured in the course of its adventure in space.

A truck carrying propane gas exploded near Pottsville, Pennsylvania today... on Route 122...killing eleven persons. At least 15 other persons were hurt.

In Galveston, Texas, a judge has ordered Governor Long of Louisiana committed to a hospital after a doctor had certified the governor as being mentally ill. A medical bulletin says that "with adequate care and treatment, the outlook for recovery is excellent."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: In these days, it's pretty hard to avoid pessimism. But few have reached the depths Mark Twain did when he wrote: "Etiquette requires us to admire the human race. But why was it ever created, or at least why wasn't something creditable created in its place? Often," said Twain, "it seems such a pity that Noah and his party didn't miss the boat."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 3, 1959

This is the news:

The Air Force today launched into outer space, a missile carrying four black mice. / The mice were sent up, from Vandenberg Air Force Base in California, in the nose cone of a Discoverer rocket. / The rocket was aimed to place them in orbit around the earth, but the Air Force doubts that a successful orbit has been achieved. / Scientists had hoped...if all went well... to recover the animals, alive, in a pre-designated area of the Pacific ....perhaps tomorrow...by means of parachute. / If the mice were to return alive and be recovered...it would be for the first time.

The monkeys which rode the Jupiter rocket last week, were not placed in orbit. They simply went up to a height of 300 miles, and came down.

In Geneva today, the Big Four foreign ministers again met in secret to discuss the Berlin question. Both sides maintained their basic positions, but the Western ministers are said to have advanced a new compromise proposal. They are said to have offered to make a token reduction in the number of American, British and French forces in West Berlin, in return for a guarantee that our rights and privileges in the city will be preserved. The United States assistant secretary of state, Andrew Berding, said the discussion was carried out in "friendly fashion". And a British diplomat said, "For the first time, the two sides now seem to be coming to grips with possible solutions."

Today's meeting lasted two and one-half hours. Another private session is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon and then a full, formal meeting on Friday.

President Eisenhower said at his news conference today that, so far, there has been no "detectable progress" at the Geneva talks which would justify a summit conference. And he was specific as to just what progress would justify a meeting of heads of government. He said: Until Germany is reunified, there should be "a clear commitment" that our rights and privileges in West Berlin should not be impeded. He did not see how the head of any self-respecting government could go to an international conference "in response to any kind of thing that can be interpreted as a threat."

The President said it would be "indeed tragic" if the question of anti-Semitism were injected into the Senate fight over the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. And he rejected the idea that, because of the controversy, the effectiveness of Strauss as commerce secretary had been destroyed. (I shall ~~should like~~ to try to examine this further in a few minutes).

Mr. Eisenhower said that the charge made by John L. Lewis that he had sided with industry and against labor in the current steel dispute was "completely untrue". What he had done, he said, was to appeal to both labor and management to exercise self-discipline because of the danger of inflation. He did not want to see wages and prices spiral until some kind of drastic action would be required.

The executive board of the United Steelworkers Union has been summoned to meet here in New York tomorrow in emergency session. The 33-man board will discuss the deadlocked wage negotiations, now in their fourth week. The union contract expires the end of this month...and in the past the steelworkers have adhered to a policy of "no contract, no work." /#

This afternoon, a management source said that there is a possibility that the industry will "modify" its wage freeze proposal before the strike deadline. /The source did not wish to be identified.

In Congress tonight, the House voted nearly 39-billion dollars for running the defense establishment in the fiscal year, starting July first. And the bill now goes to the Senate. /The House rejected an amendment which...if finally approved...would have compelled the Administration to maintain an Army of at least 900-thousand men. (The Pentagon now plans an Army of 870-thousand men). The House cut the money requested by the Air Force for its Bomarc anti-aircraft missile...but gave the Army more than it requested for the development of the Nike-Hercules missile.

Congress today completed action on the first regular appropriation bill for the next fiscal year. This was a measure providing three billion dollars for the Post Office and Treasury Departments.

The Senate today passed a four-billion-dollar farm bill...by a vote of 74 to 10. The measure provides that no more than 50-thousand dollars can be paid to any one farm operator in the form of price supports. This would apply to total support payments on all crops. The House has passed a slightly more liberal bill...and the two measures will now be taken up by a conference committee. A move by Republican Senator Williams of Delaware to slash 75-million dollars from the 450-million authorized for the soil bank program was voted down.

The House Ways and Means Committee has approved a one-year extension of the excise taxes on new automobiles, cigarettes, liquor and beer. The current tax on corporate income also would be continued. A proposal that the taxes be extended at their present level for two years was turned down.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee gave final approval to President Eisenhower's foreign aid bill but cut the program by nearly 267 million dollars. While reducing military assistance, the measure would increase the amount of money available for long-term [redacted] loans.

—7

Edward R. Murrow: June 3, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The first private poll taken of the Senate Committee considering the nomination of Admiral Strauss as Secretary of Commerce stood fourteen to three in his favor. He finally squeaked through nine to eight. The change in votes was due to two things. To the vigorous attack on his record, but also on his own inability to make friends, by his own testimony.

It is being said at the Capitol that Admiral Strauss proved to be his own worst enemy. To say that may be a reflection on Senators Anderson, Kefauver and Morse who led a most ~~persistent~~ determined attack on him. But he certainly was one of the worst. And it was not only because of the things he had done. It was partly because he wrapped himself in a mantle of infallibility.

It is well to remark that this rise in feeling was pretty much due to intangibles. It was not the direct result of important new facts brought out in cross-examination. The charge most often made against Mr. Strauss was that he failed to tell the truth to the committee, the public or Congress. ~~But when it came to a study of these failures, they dealt with half-truths and three-quarter-truths and were not simple to document. One might have assumed that the absence of specific and flagrant lies, would have made his confirmation increasingly certain.~~ He had one factor working in his favor. It was the President's right to choose his own advisors. Unless the Senate can find positive reasons that disqualify a man nominated to a Cabinet post, it is expected to approve the appointment. This is not like a vote on an Ambassador, since that has to do with foreign affairs, for which the Senate has some direct responsibility.

10

Now an issue has been injected in the Strauss affair, that may make confirmation quite certain. It is anti-Semitism. Opposition to the Admiral is being ascribed to prejudice against him as a Jew. The charge was raised by two Republican Congressmen, Representative Derounian of New York, and Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania. This was done on the eve of the debate due to open in the Senate tomorrow. Senator Scott said that before the debate was over "the people will be well aware of the kind of harrassment" which has been accorded to Admiral Strauss and "will react as solidly" as the French reacted in the Dreyfus case. Congressman Derounian said it had been impressed on him constantly that the opposition to Admiral Strauss is in reality based on relifious prejudice. "If that is true," he said in a press release, "it revolts me as an American citizen."

The anti-Semitic issue was brought up in President Eisenhower's news conference. The President might have said right off that he deplored that such an issue had even been mentioned, but he didn't. He was told that Republicans had made the charges, and he said he hadn't known that they emanated from Republicans. But he went on to say that it would be indeed tragic if Admiral Strauss were to be attacked in that way. There is some confusion as to just what the President said, because it sounded as though he said it would be tragic if Admiral Strauss were accused of anti-Semitism. But it was clear as he went on that he would consider it "very, very sad if a man of Mr. Strauss' character, ability and years of public devotion should be belittled or hurt.

The injection of the anti-Semitic issue is the culmination of an unusually intense and well-organized campaign to assure Admiral Strauss' confirmation. Pressures have been brought on Senators from many quarters. Marquis Childs reports that John L. Lewis has called up several Senators to say it would be helpful to the coal interests to have Strauss as Secretary of Commerce. Other Senators were told it would be good for the oil interests. Senator Humphrey received word from Minnesota banking interests that if he wanted to stay in the national picture, he had better rise above petty factional politics and vote for Strauss.

The question naturally arises whether Mr. Strauss can be an effectual

Secretary of Commerce after such a storm over his confirmation. / But the President said today that he had not been criticized at all as Acting Secretary, so anticipated no trouble on that score. / He also put himself on record that he will not withdraw the nomination, even if asked by Mr. Strauss to do so. / Since at least some Democrats are playing Party politics with the nomination, the President is entitled to answer in kind. / It would have been better all around if the vote on Mr. Strauss were to be no more than a judgment on his service, without reference to his race. But that now is out of the question.

Back in a moment. -

George Bryan. -

Word for Today

At his news conference today, the President called Mr. Strauss "a man of the highest type of character who has devoted many years of his life to public service." Whatever Mr. ~~Strauss~~ his's qualifications, the question has now been obscured by the charge that anti-Semitism is involved. "The buzz of a mosquito," Henry Miller said, "can drown out the ocean's roar."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 3, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Air Force today launched into outer space, a missile carrying four black mice. The mice were sent up, from Vandenberg Air Force Base in California in the nose cone of a Discoverer rocket. The rocket was aimed to place them in orbit around the earth, but the Air Force doubts that a successful orbit has been achieved. Scientists had hoped...if all went well...to recover the animals, alive, in a pre-designated area of the Pacific...perhaps tomorrow...by means of parachute. If the mice were to return alive and be recovered...it would be for the first time.

The monkeys which rode the Jupiter rocket last week, were not placed in orbit. They simply went up to a height of 300 miles, and came down.

In Geneva today, the Big Four foreign ministers again met in secret to discuss the Berlin question. Both sides maintained their basic positions, but the Western ministers are said to have advanced a new compromise proposal. They are said to have offered to make a token reduction in the number of American, British and French forces in West Berlin, in return for a guarantee that our rights and privileges in the city will be preserved. The United States assistant Secretary of state, Andrew Berding, said the discussion was carried out in "friendly fashion." And a British diplomat said, "For the first time, the two sides now seem to be coming to grips with possible solutions."

Today's meeting lasted two and one-half hours. Another private session is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon and then a full, formal meeting on Friday.

President Eisenhower said at his news conference today that, so far, there has been no detectable progress at the Geneva talks which would justify a summit conference. And he was specific as to just what progress would justify a meeting of heads of government. He said: Until Germany is reunified, there should be "a clear commitment" that our rights and privileges in West Berlin should not be impeded. He did not see how the head of any self-respecting government could go to an international conference "in response to any kind of thing that can be interpreted as a threat."

The President said it would be "indeed tragic" if the question of anti-Semitism were injected into the Senate fight over the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. And he rejected the idea that, because of the controversy, the effectiveness of Strauss as commerce secretary had been destroyed. (I shall try to examine this further in a few minutes).

Mr. Eisenhower said that the charge made by John L. Lewis that he had sided with industry and against labor in the current steel dispute was "completely untrue." What he had done, he said, was to appeal to both labor and management to exercise self-discipline because of the danger of inflation. He did not want to see wages and prices spiral until some kind of drastic action would be required.

The executive board of the United Steelworkers Union has been summoned to meet here in New York tomorrow in emergency session. The 33-man board will discuss the deadlocked wage negotiations, now in their fourth week. The union contract expires the end of this month...and in the past the steelworkers have adhered to a policy of "no contract, no work." This afternoon, a management source said that there is a possibility that the industry will "modify" its wage freeze proposal before the strike deadline. The source did not wish to be identified.

In Congress tonight, the House voted nearly 39-billion dollars for running the defense establishment in the fiscal year, starting July first. And the bill now goes to the Senate. The House rejected an amendment which...if finally approved...would have compelled the Administration to maintain an Army of at least 900-thousand men. (The Pentagon now plans an Army of 870-thousand men). The House cut the money requested by the Air Force for its Bomarc anti-aircraft missile...but gave the Army more than it requested for the development of the Nike-Hercules missile.

The Senate today passed a four-billion-dollar farm bill...by a vote of 74 to 10. The measure provides that no more than 50-thousand dollars can be paid to any one farm operator in the form of price supports. This would apply to total support payments on all crops. The House has passed a slightly more liberal bill.. and the two measures will now be taken up by a conference committee. A move by Republican Senator Williams of Delaware to slash 75-million dollars from the 450 million authorized for the soil bank program was voted down.

The House Ways and Means Committee has approved a one-year extension of the excise taxes on new automobiles, cigarettes, liquor and beer. The current tax on corporate income also would be continued. A proposal that the taxes be extended at their present level for two years was turned down.

The House Foreign Affairs Committee gave final approval to President Eisenhower's foreign aid bill but cut the program by nearly 267 million dollars. While reducing military assistance, the measure would increase the amount of money available for long-term loans.

The first private poll taken of the Senate Committee considering the nomination of Admiral Strauss as Secretary of Commerce stood fourteen to three in his favor. He finally squeaked through nine to eight. The change in votes was due to two things. To the vigorous attack on his record, but also on his own inability to make friends, by his own testimony.

It is being said at the Capitol that Admiral Strauss proved to be his own worst enemy. To say that may be a reflection on Senators Anderson, Kefauver and Morse who led a most determined attack on him. But he certainly was one of the worst. And it was not only because of the things he had done. It was partly because he wrapped himself in a mantle of infallibility.

It is well to remark that this rise in feeling was pretty much due to intangibles. It was not the direct result of important new facts brought out in cross-examination. The charge most often made against Mr. Strauss was that he failed to tell the truth to the committee, the public or Congress.

Now an issue has been injected in the Strauss affair, that may make confirmation quite certain. It is anti-Semitism. Opposition to the Admiral is being ascribed to prejudice against him as a Jew. The charge was raised by two Republican Congressmen, Representative Derounian of New York, and Senator Hugh Scott of Pennsylvania. This was done on the eve of the debate due to open in the Senate tomorrow. Senator Scott said that before the debate was over "the people will be well aware of the kind of harrassment" which has been accorded to Admiral Strauss and "will react as solidly" as the French reacted in the Dreyfus case. Congressman Derounian said it had been impressed on him constantly' that the opposition to Admiral Strauss is in reality based on religious prejudice. "If that is true," he said in a press release, "it revolts me as an American citizen."

The anti-Semitic issue was brought up in President Eisenhower's news conference. The President might have said right off that he deplored that such an issue had even been mentioned, but he didn't. He was told that Republicans had made the charges, and he said he hadn't known that they emanated from Republicans. But he went on to say that it would be indeed tragic if Admiral Strauss were to be attacked in that way. There is some confusion as to just what the President said, because it sounded as though he said it would be tragic if Admiral Strauss were accused of anti-Semitism. But it was clear as he went on that he would consider it "very, very sad if a man of Mr. Strauss' character, ability and years of public devotion should be belittled or hurt.

The injection of the anti-Semitic issue is the culmination of an unusually intense and well-organized campaign to assure Admiral Strauss' confirmation. Pressures have been brought on Senators from many quarters. Marquis Childs reports that John L. Lewis has called up several Senators to say it would be helpful to the coal intersts to have Strauss as Secretary of Commerce. Other Senators were told it would be good for the oil interests. Senator Humphrey received word from Minnesota banking interests that if he wanted to stay in the national picture, he had better rise above petty factional politics and vote for Strauss.

The qeustion naturally arises whether Mr. Strauss can be an effectual Secretary of Commerce after such a storm over his confirmation. But the President said today that he had not been criticized at all as Acting Secretary, so anticipated no trouble on that score. He also put himself on record that he will not withdraw the nomination, even if asked by Mr. Strauss to do so. Since at least some Democrats are playing Party politics with the nomination, the President is entitled to answer in kind. It would have been better all around if the vote on Mr. Strauss were to be no more than a judgment on his service, without reference to his race. But that now is out of the question.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: At his news conference today, the President called Mr. Strauss "a man of the highest type of character who has devoted many years of his life to public service." Whatever his qualifications, the question has now been obscured by the charge thtt anti-Semitism is involved. "The buzz of a mosquito," Henry Miller said, "can drown out the ocean's roar."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 4, 1959

This is the news:

The West German news agency...D.P.A....said today that Konrad Adenauer wants to remain in the office of chancellor instead of running for president. Two months ago, Adenauer said he wanted to be president of West Germany in order to insure the "continuity" of his policy. And he accepted the nomination of the Christian Democratic Party. Although under the West German constitution the chancellor determines policy, Adenauer said there was far more power in the presidency than people generally supposed. It was almost a foregone conclusion that Adenauer would be succeeded as chancellor by Ludwig Erhard, the minister of economics. The news agency D.P.A. says "it is believed" that instead of running for the presidency himself, Adenauer would like his finance minister, Franz Etzel, to be the candidate. The chancellor was not available for comment...but it is understood that the parliamentary committee of the Christian Democratic Party will meet tomorrow to discuss the new situation in Adenauer's presence. A member of the cabinet (who would not permit the use of his name) expressed the view tonight that it was too late for Adenauer to reverse his decision.

→

It has now been officially announced that the Communist leaders of East Germany will go to Moscow on Monday. The delegation will include Premier Grötewohl and Walter Ulbricht, head of the East German communist party.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev today cut short his tour of Albania and flew to Hungary for what is called an "unofficial" visit. Khrushchev was accompanied to Budapest by the Albanian defense minister...as well as by his own defense minister, Marshal Malinovsky, who has been with him ever since he left Moscow ten days ago.

The Berlin problem was discussed privately again today by the Big Four foreign ministers. The Western powers are said to have offered to reduce their military garrison in West Berlin by one-third---if Russia would guarantee them free access to the city. In a few minutes, we will switch to Geneva for a first-hand report.

→

In Paris today, the new National Assembly began its first formal debate of the Algerian question. In opening the debate, Premier Debré said that outside aid to the Algerian rebel forces will be "relentlessly opposed." Naming no specific countries, he said: "We will take reprisals which will cost dearly to those who do not understand that solidarity with France on Algeria is essential." He emphasized at the same time that France still holds the door open for talks leading to a possible cease-fire.

Iraq announced tonight that it is negotiating with Britain to quit the sterling bloc. Henceforth, it said, "we shall depend on our own money, our own resources and our own strength." Premier Kassem said that although Iraq was determined to quit the sterling area, "we and the British shall remain friends. We desire friendship with all nations. We shall be stooges to none."

The Senate today...after only one hour of debate...confirmed the nomination of Ogden Reid as United States ambassador to Israel. The action came on a voice vote...after Democratic Senator Fulbright, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, had said that confirmation would be "irresponsible" in view of the critical situation in the Middle East and Reid's complete lack of diplomatic experience. Democratic Senator Morse supported the nomination...saying that in his testimony before the Foreign Relations Committee the 33-year-old former newspaper executive had shown intellectual honesty and a high order of competence.

On another voice vote...and without debate...the Senate approved the nomination of Thomas S. Gates as deputy secretary of defense. It also confirmed the appointment of two aides to Lewis Strauss in the Commerce Department. The Senate did not get around to formal debate on the Strauss nomination. It probably will tomorrow.

Early today, the Senate voted nearly half a billion dollars for the Civilian Space Agency....all the money that was asked for.

The Discoverer Three rocket...which was to place four black mice in orbit around the earth...no longer exists. Dr. Roy Johnson, director of the advanced Research Projects Agency, says that according to "all available data" the rocket was burned up late yesterday as it re-entered the earth's atmosphere. The rocket was not placed in orbit...and Dr. Johnson says this may have been because the "injection angle" of the vehicle into space was "improper". Radio reports received from the rocket during the first thirteen minutes of flight are being studied.

In Washington today, the Organization of American States debated the small airborne invasion of Nicaragua. As of airtime, no action had been taken.

Now, for that direct report from Geneva on today's meeting of foreign ministers, here is my colleague, Ernest Leiser.

Tape runs 4:30

Ends on cue: "--to ERM IN NY."

Stop - Fall Back Position - Airlines wanted Back in a moment. - George Bryan -

That was my colleague, Ernest Leiser, reporting the very modest progress which appears to have been made today at the foreign ministers talks.

In Canada today...Howard Green, minister of public works, was sworn in as the new minister of external affairs in the Conservative government. He succeeds the late Sidney Smith.

President and Mrs. Eisenhower will leave Washington tomorrow to spend the week-end at their Gettysburg farm. On Saturday, they will hold a garden party for some 200 members of the White House staff.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a mement with the Word for Today. (pause). But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The Geneva talks have taken ~~an~~ A SLIGHTLY encouraging turn. Chester Bowles recently said that although progress toward peace is slow, "let us not discount the significance of every forward step." And a century ago the British historian Macaulay said, "The smallest actual good is better than the most magnificant promises of impossibilities."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Thursday, June 4, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now for that direct report from Geneva, on today's meeting of Foreign Ministers, here's my colleague Ernest Leiser.

LEISER: The Geneva Conference has now come to a point at which when a senior Western participant says that the Big Four have made a little progress here, instead of saying that they've made very little progress, that's news. In fact, the big news of the day was the report being circulated by the Western delegation that at last the conference is inching toward a tolerable conclusion. And U.S. Secretary of State Herter is now understood to have discerned some sign of give in the negotiating position of Russia's Gromyko. This is news because for the first three weeks of the meeting, there was no progress worthy of note. The most significant achievement in all that time was a tacit agreement between Gromyko and the West about what would not be debated here, namely the totally, mutually unacceptable grand designs of both sides for the future of Germany. That left only Berlin, the cause of the crisis, to talk about. But when they began discussing Berlin, both in public and private, the Soviets and the Western Three were and remained poles apart. Thus when there are reports, and they've arisen only in the past 24 hours, that the differences are narrowing a little the whole complexion of this conference changes. So far from the information that we can eke out of the secret sessions where business is now being done, most of the give has come from the West. It was learned here this afternoon, for instance, that the Western allies would be willing to reduce their Berlin garrison, now totalling not quite 12,000 men, by as much as 30% if we got in exchange a long term guarantee from the Russians accepting our position in Berlin and our right to get in and out without hindrance. We would give even more under those conditions. The Western Three have now presented Gromyko with what one conferee has labeled a "talking paper." It talks about six points on which concessions could be traded for Soviet counter concessions. Included besides are troop strength and troop armaments. We would guarantee that they would remain defensive only in Berlin. We would also undertake to curb propaganda activities. How is not spelled out, if the Soviets did likewise. And although this has not yet been tabled, we're willing to let the East Berlin Communists sit in as advisers with the Big Four and the West Berliners on a kind of appeals commission to hear complaints about any trouble in Berlin.

None of these concessions, we feel, would jeopardize our basic position in Berlin, but they would go part of the way toward meeting some of the recent Soviet criticisms of our role in the city. And they would add up to a face-saving solution for Moscow if Khrushchev is interested in calling off the crisis.

The Russian side of the concession scale is considerably lighter in the balance. We consider Gromyko's statement that he does not question our legal right to be in Berlin a concession only if the Soviets will put it into writing and see that it's implemented. But authoritative sources do see a concession in Soviet willingness to talk now about alternatives to changing the status of our troops in Berlin. Russia originally insisted that our troop position based on the right of conquest must be terminated. Now at least the Soviets have begun to talk around this issue.

Secretary Herter is known to believe today that it's still too early to predict an outcome to this conference. But he's also known to be showing no signs of impatience at the way it's going and he's willing to sit here so long as things move ahead, even at their present snail-like pace.

But before there can be an sudden, decisive break in the conference, Western sources think that Gromyko will have to get new instructions from Khrushchev. And there are unconfirmed reports that the Soviet Foreign Minister will go to Budapest or Moscow over the week-end to get these instructions. With the news confirmed that the two top men of East Germany, party boss Walter Ulbricht and Premier Otto Grotewohl, are going to Moscow Monday the conclusive phase of the conference now seems near.

One theory you hear in the corridors here tonight is that Ulbricht and Grotewohl have been summoned by Khrushchev to get a separate peace treaty with East Germany, ready to go immediately if the talks here break down and no summit meeting is arranged. But an equally tenable theory, especially in view of today's developments, is that the Soviet chief is telling the East Germans that they'll have to give up their plans to take over West Berlin because Nikita Khrushchev is now playing for other stakes.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 4, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The West German news agency...D.P.A....said today that Konrad Adenauer wants to remain in the office of chancellor instead of running for president. Two months ago, Adenauer said he wanted to be president of West Germany in order to insure the "continuity" of his policy. And he accepted the nomination of the Christian Democratic Party. Although under the West German constitution the chancellor determines policy, Adenauer said there was far more power in the presidency than people generally supposed. It was almost a foregone conclusion that Adenauer would be succeeded as chancellor by Ludwig Erhard, the minister of economics. The news agency D.P.A. says it is believed that instead of running for the presidency himself, Adenauer would like his finance minister, Franz Etzel, to be the candidate. The chancellor was not available for comment...but it is understood that the parliamentary committee of the Christian Democratic Party will meet tomorrow to discuss the new situation in Adenauer's presence. A member of the cabinet (who would not permit the use of his name) expressed the view tonight that it was too late for Adenauer to reverse his decision.

It has now been officially announced that the Communist leaders of East Germany will go to Moscow on Monday. The delegation will include Premier Grotewohl and Walter Ulbricht, head of the East German communist party.

Soviet Premier Khrushchev today cut short his tour of Albania and flew to Hungary for what is called an unofficial visit. Khrushchev was accompanied to Budapest by the Albanian defense minister...as well as by his own defense minister, Marshal Malinovsky, who has been with him ever since he left Moscow ten days ago.

The Berlin problem was discussed privately again today by the Big Four foreign ministers. The Western powers are said to have offered to reduce their military garrison in West Berlin by one-third---if Russia would guarantee them free access to the city. In a few minutes, we will switch to Geneva for a first-hand report.

In Paris today, the new National Assembly began its first formal debate of the Algerian question. In opening the debate, Premier Debre said that outside aid to the Algerian rebel forces will be relentless opposed. Naming no specific countries, he said; "We will take reprisals which will cost dearly to those who do not understand that solidarity with France on Algeria is essential." He emphasized at the same time that France still holds the door open for talks leading to a possible cease-fire.

Iraq announced tonight that it is negotiating with British to quit the sterling bloc. Henceforth, it said, "we shall depend on our own money, our own resources and our own strength." Premier Kassem said that although Iraq was determined to quit the sterling area, "we and the British shall remain friends. We desire friendship with all nations. We shall be stooges to none."

The Senate today...after only one hour of debate...confirmed the nomination of Ogden Reid as United States ambassador to Israel. The action came on a voice vote...after Democratic Senator Fulbright, chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, had said that confirmation would be "irresponsible" in view of the critical situation in the Middle East and Reid's complete lack of diplomatic experience. Democratic Senator Morse supported the nomination...saying that in his testimony before the Foreign Relations Committee the 33-year old former newspaper executive had shown intellectual honesty and a high order of competence.

On another voice vote...and without debate...the Senate approved the nomination of Thomas S. Gates as deputy secretary of defense. It also confirmed the appointment of two aides to Lewis Strauss in the Commerce Department. The Senate did not get around to formal debate on the Strauss nomination. It probably will tomorrow.

Early today, the Senate voted nearly half a billion dollars for the Civilian Space Agency...all the money that was asked for.

The Discoverer Three rocket...which was to place four black mice in orbit around the earth...no longer exists. Dr. Roy Johnson, director of the advanced Projects Agency, says that according to all available data, the rocket was burned up late yesterday, as it re-entered the earth's atmosphere. The rocket was not placed in orbit...and Dr. Johnson says this may have been because the "injection angle" of the vehicle into space was "improper." Radio reports received from the rocket during the first thirteen minutes of flight are being studied.

In Washington today, the Organization of American States debated the small airborne invasion of Nicaragua. As of airtime, no action had been taken.

Now, for that direct report from Geneva on today's meeting of foreign ministers, here is my colleague, Ernest Leiser:

LEISER: The Geneva Conference has now come to a point at which when a senior participant says that the Big Four have made a little progress here, instead of saying that they've made very little progress, that's news. In fact, the big news of the day was the report being circulated by the Western delegation that at last the conference is inching toward a tolerable conclusion. And U.S. Secretary of State Herter is now understood to have discerned some sign of give in the negotiating position of Russia's Gromyko. This is news because for the first three weeks of the meeting, there was no progress worthy of note. The most significant achievement in all that time was a tacit agreement between Gromyko and the West about what would not be debated here, namely the totally, mutually unacceptable grand designs of both sides for the future of Germany. That left only Berlin, the cause of the crisis, to talk about. But when they began discussing Berlin, both in public and private, the Soviets and the Western three were and remained poles apart. Thus when there are reports, and they've arisen only in the past 24 hours, that the differences are narrowing a little the whole complexion of this conference changes. So far from the information that we can eke out of the secret sessions where business is now being done, most of the give has come from the West. It was learned here this afternoon, for instance, that the Western allies would be willing to reduce their Berlin garrison, now totalling not quite 12,000 men, by as much as 30% if we got in exchange a long term guarantee from the Russians accepting our position in Berlin and our right to get in and out without hindrance. We would give even more under those conditions. The Western Three have now presented Gromyko with what one conferee has labeled a "talking paper." It talks about six points on which concessions could be traded for Soviet counter concessions. Included besides are troop strength and troop armaments. We would guarantee that they would remain defensive only in Berlin. We would also undertake to curb propaganda activities. How is not spelled out, if the Soviets did likewise. And although this has not yet been tabled, we're willing to let the East Berlin Communists sit in as advisers with the Big Four and the West Berliners on a kind of appeals commission to hear complaints about any trouble in Berlin.

None of these concessions, we feel, would jeopardize our basic position in Berlin, but they would go part of the way toward meeting some of the recent Soviet criticisms of our role in the city. And they would add up to a face-saving solution for Moscow if Khrushchev is interested in calling off the crisis.

The Russian side of the concession scale is considerably lighter in the balance. We consider Gromyko's statement that he does not question our legal right to be in Berlin a concession only if the Soviets will put it into writing and see that it's implemented. But authoritative sources do see a concession in Soviet willingness to talk now about alternatives to changing the status of our troops in Berlin. Russia originally insisted that our troop position based on the right of conquest must be terminated. Now at least the Soviets have begun to talk around this issue.

Secretary Herter is known to believe today that it's still too early to predict an outcome to this conference. But he's also known to be showing no signs of impatience at the way it's going and he's willing to sit here so long as things move ahead, even at their present snail-like pace.

But before there can be a sudden, decisive break in the conference, Western sources think that Gromyko will have to get new instructions from Khrushchev. And there are unconfirmed reports that the Soviet Foreign Minister will go to Budapest or Moscow over the week-end to get these instructions. With the news confirmed that the two top men of East Germany, party boss Walter Ulbricht and Premier Otto Grotewohl, are going to Moscow Monday, the conclusive phase of the conference now seems near.

One theory you hear in the corridors here tonight is that Ulbricht and Grotewohl have been summoned by Khrushchev to get a separate peace treaty with East Germany, ready to go immediately if the talks here break down and no summit meeting is arranged. But an equally tenable theory, especially in view of today's developments, is that the Soviet chief is telling the East Germans that they'll have to give up their plans to take over West Berlin because Nikita Khrushchev is now playing for other stakes.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Ernest Leiser, reporting the very modest progress which appears to have been made today at the foreign ministers talks.

In Canada today...Howard Green, minister of public works, was sworn in as the new minister of external affairs in the Conservative government. He succeeds the late Sidney Smith.

President and Mrs. Eisenhower will leave Washington tomorrow to spend the week-end at their Gettysburg farm. On Saturday, they will hold a garden party for some 200 members of the White House staff.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The Geneva talks have taken a slightly encouraging turn. Chester Bowles recently said that although progress toward peace is slow, "let us not discount the significance of every forward step." And a century ago the British historian Macaulay said, "The smallest actual good is better than the most magnificent promises of impossibilities."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 5, 1959

This is the news:

Konrad Adenauer today won party approval for his decision not to run for president of the West German Republic. Adenauer's determination to stay on as chancellor---which is to say, as head of government---has produced strong reaction. And for the full story, we switch now to my colleague, Ernest Leiser, in Bonn.

(Tape runs 4:25
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

That was Ernest Leiser, reporting from Bonn.

Ludwig Erhard, the West German economics minister who had been the choice of the Christian Democratic Party to succeed Adenauer, is presently in Washington. He told a news conference that he "certainly would not think" of being a candidate for the chancellorship...now that Adenauer had said he wanted to stay in the office. Dr. Adenauer's decision, he conceded, had taken him "very much by surprise." But Erhard said the subject of West German politics did not come up this morning, when he was received by President Eisenhower. Erhard is in this country on an economic mission.

→

Moscow radio said tonight that Chancellor Adenauer's decision marks an open crisis in the leadership of the Christian Democratic Party. "The chancellor," said Moscow, "is making another desperate effort to save the bankrupt policy of cold war."

At the foreign ministers conference today...in Geneva...there was no official comment on the political development in West Germany. The reaction expressed privately, however, was unfavorable. The impression among West German representatives was that the East Germans might now think that the Bonn government is weak. At today's plenary session, Secretary of State Herter again charged East Germany with trying to "smother" the present freedom of West Berlin by means of subversion. Communist East Berlin, he said, is the site of "one of the heaviest concentrations of subversive activities in the world." Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko asked the Western ministers to spell out certain details of their master plan for a German settlement. One of the points (on which Gromyko requested elucidation) was the Western proposal for a zone in Europe of limited forces. But Gromyko has refused so far to discuss the Western proposals on Berlin, and there is a feeling that he is stalling...waiting for new instructions from Moscow.

Premier Khrushchev will fly back to Moscow tomorrow after a two-day visit in Hungary. The talks in Budapest are believed...according to one report...to have centered on Hungary's inclusion in an atom-free zone in Central Europe. Upon his return to Moscow, Khrushchev will make a speech in the Lenin Stadium...and he may divulge more of the prupose of his trip at that time. On Monday, the Communist leaders of East Germany also will be in Moscow.

Off the China coast today, the Nationalist-held islands of Quemoy and Matsu were both hit by Communist shells. And the Peiping radio charged that a ship of the United States Seventh Fleet had "provocatively encroached upon" Red China's territorial waters. Peiping claims that its territorial waters extend twelve miles off shore. The United States recognizes only the three-mile limit.

The Senate today opened formal debate on the nomination of Lewis Strauss (Straws) as secretary of commerce. Democratic Leader Johnson took the unusual action of issuing a statement saying that the issue before the Senate is "solely and simply the merits of the appointment." He urged his fellow senators to read the record, based on the hearings of the Commerce Committee...and any efforts to pressure the Senate in either direction, or to mislead it, he said, will be bound to backfire. In talking to reporters, Johnson referred to the statement made yesterday by Democratic Senator Smathers of Florida. Smathers had said that...in at least two instances...telegrams urging him to vote for Strauss had been forgeries. As the debate opened today, Democratic Senator Magnuson pictured Strauss as a man lacking in integrity and competence. Republican Representative Schoeppel praised him as a devoted public servant...and accused the opposition of "slinging mud."

Today...in Atlanta, Georgia...a two-judge federal court said that racial segregation in the public schools of Atlanta must be recognized as illegal. The ruling was preliminary. It is not immediately effective and came as the court began hearing the suit brought by ten Negro parents for an injunction...saying that Negro children may not be barred from attending public schools in Atlanta solely because of race. Later in the day the court granted the injunction and ordered compliance "within a reasonable time."

President Somoza of Nicaragua insists that the small-scale invasion of his country is being overcome. However, leaders of the revolt ~~claim~~ say that their effort to overthrow the Somoza government has just begun. The rebel radio tonight claimed the capture of a village in northern Nicaragua. (Insert material on next page, which was used)

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

FILL

In Washington, the Organization of American States has decided to ask countries in the Caribbean area for information on the invasion. The special committee...set up by the O.A.S...announced no specific plans to go to Nicaragua itself.

Here in New York, the United Steelworkers Union has summoned its wage policy committee to meet next Friday to map strategy in the contract talks... which have now gone through their fourth week.

Word for Today

Adenauer has changed his mind...and will stay on as chancellor instead of running for president. Although Adenauer has what he regards as his own good reasons, confusion and recrimination have been two of the immediate results. There is warning in the observation of the English essayist, John Foster, who said: "The souls of men of undecided purpose are the graveyards of good intent."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, June 5, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Adenauer's determination to stay on as Chancellor, which is to say - as head of the government - has produced strong reaction. And for the full story we switch now to my colleague Ernest Leiser in Bonn.

LEISER: Eighty-three year old Konrad Adenauer today gave the most spectacular demonstration of the ten years that he's been Chancellor of West Germany, that he has the politics and his country completely in hand; in an iron and unyielding old hand. Last night Adenauer abruptly made known that he's reversed the deicion, made only two months ago, to step aside as the active political leader of the West German Republic, and accept nomination, instead, as President of the Republic, a post of honor but less power. And today Adenauer made his new decision to stay on as Chancellor because of the grave world situation, he made this decision stick. The autocratic old man achieved this against what this morning seemed to be an angry majority of the members of his own party in the Parliament. The President of the Parliament, one of the leaders of Adenauer's Christian Democratic union, called the Chancellor's reversal "absolutely incorrect." One of the party's two parliamentary chairmen termed it a "catastrophe." And when Franz Etzel, who had been the Chancellor's chosen instrument to succeed him, learned that Adenauer reportedly now wanted Etzel to be President instead he said bitterly, "Why not Pope?" Yet after a three hour session here in Bonn this afternoon, Adenauer's party first surrendered and then collapsed at Adenauer's feet. A statement acclaiming the old Chancellor's decision unanimously was issued by a party spokesman and Adenauer read it triumphantly on radio and television tonight.

Behind the Chancellor's new resolve to stay on in his post are motives that can be described as the zeal of a man with a mission or the arrogance of a man unconcerned by effective operation of democracy or the mistrust of an old man suspicious of his own colleagues and allies or the insatiable hunger of a man who's tasted power long and fully. Some political observers say that the Chancellor's motives were a combination of all these.

Adenauer said that he's concluded his decision to step aside as Chancellor would not be approved by the German people or by the world abroad. In fact, it has generally been hailed as the final wisdom of a great old man. The Chancellor said that he'd changed his mind because of the world political situation, because it has worsened in the past two months. This view is not shared by most of his own close associates. Adenauer said that his Foreign Minister, von Brentano, had reported to him that the situation at the Geneva conference was now more serious than when the conference began. If this is so, von Brentano was talking quite differently in Geneva as recently as yesterday afternoon.

Whatever his reasons, Adenauer's decision will not be unwelcome to U.S. officials here for the short run. The old man has been suspicious, emotional, subject to moods of blackest anxiety and pessimism which extend to his allies, but by and large he has been a consistent and loyal partner of the U.S. even when it seemed that the course of political opportunism was otherwise. But as they look at the long run, American observers here are less enthusiastic. This new move makes Adenauer's party little more than a rubber stamp, and for the future the U.S. had hoped for an increasingly vigorous Christian Democratic union with its Western orientation. The move saps the strength of genuine democracy here; and that democracy had already been stunted over the past decade in the shadow of its towering father figure.

What effect it will have on the present negotiations with Russia in Geneva and on the prospects for and of the future summit meeting, is harder to judge immediately. Adenauer has been made the personal villain of peace by Communist propaganda in recent weeks; and if the Communists believe their own propaganda at all, his decision to remain in power may make the Soviets less interested in negotiating with the West.

In any case, Adenauer in his statement tonight made it clear that he did not really trust the West to negotiate without him in office.

However the Russians may judge his decision, or his allies or his people, the old man himself seemed jauntier and more vigorous than ever when the battle was over this evening. He strode out of the long party meeting in the Parliament Building; he waved at the crowd and he told reporters in his best ...? (in German) - meaning "I'm satisfied. Everything's in order.)

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Friday, June 5, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Konrad Adenauer today won party approval for his decision not to run for president of the West German Republic. Adenauer's determination to stay on as chancellor ---which is to say, as head of government ---has produced strong reaction. And for the full story, we switch now to my colleague, Ernest Leiser, in Bonn.

LEISER: Eighty-three year old Konrad Adenauer today gave the most spectacular demonstration of the ten years that he's been Chancellor of West Germany, that he has the politics and his country completely in hand; in an iron and unyielding old hand. Last night Adenauer abruptly made known that he's reversed the decision made only two months ago, to step aside as the active political leader of the West German Republic, and accept nomination, instead, as President of the Republic, a post of honor but less power. And today Adenauer made his new decision to stay on as Chancellor because of the grave world situation, he made this decision stick. The autocratic old man achieved this against what this morning seemed to be an angry majority of the members of his own party in the Parliament. The President of the Parliament, one of the leaders of Adenauer's Christian Democratic union, called the Chancellor's reversal "absolutely incorrect." One of the party's two parliamentary chairmen termed it a "catastrophe." And when Franz Etzel, who had been the Chancellor's chosen instrument to succeed him, learned that Adenauer reportedly now wanted Etzel to be President instead he said bitterly, "Why not Pope?" Yet after a three hour session here in Bonn this afternoon, Adenauer's party first surrendered and then collapsed at Adenauer's feet. A statement acclaiming the old Chancellor's decision unanimously was issued by a party spokesman and Adenauer read it triumphantly on radio and television tonight.

Behind the Chancellor's new resolve to stay on in his post are motives that can be described as the zeal of a man with a mission or the arrogance of a man unconcerned by effective operation of democracy or the mistrust of an old man suspicious of his own colleagues and allies or the insatiable hunger of a man who's tasted power long and fully. Some political observers say that the Chancellor's motives were a combination of all these.

Adenauer said that he's concluded his decision to step aside as Chancellor would not be approved by the German people or by the world abroad. In fact, it has generally been hailed as the final wisdom of a great old man. The Chancellor said that he'd changed his mind because of the world political situation, because it has worsened in the past two months. This view is not shared by most of his own close associates. Adenauer said that his foreign Minister, von Brentano, had reported to him that the situation at the Geneva conference was now more serious than when the conference began. If this is so, von Brentano was talking quite differently in Geneva as recently as yesterday afternoon.

Whatever his reasons, Adenauer's decision will not be unwelcome to U. S. officials here for the short run. The old man has been suspicious, emotionally subject to moods of blackest anxiety and pessimism which extend to his allies, but by and large he has been a consistent and loyal partner of the U. S. even when it seemed that the course of political opportunism was otherwise. But as they look at the long run, American observers here are less enthisiastic. This new move makes Adenauer's party little more than a rubber stamp, and for the future the U. S. had hoped for an increasingly vigorous Christian Democratic union with its Western orientation. The move saps the strength of genuine democracy here; and that democracy had already been stunted over the past decade in the shadow of its towering father figure.

What effect it will have on the present negotiations with Russia in Geneva and on the prospects for and of the future summit meeting, is harder to judge immediately. Adenauer has been made the personal villain of peace by Communist propaganda in recent weeks; and if the Communists believe their own propaganda at all, his decision to remain in power may make the Soviets less interested in negotiating with the West.

In any case, Adenauer in his statement tonight made it clear that he did not really trust the West to negotiate without him in office.
However, the Russians may judge his decision, or his allies or his people, the old man himself seemed jauntier and more vigorous than ever when the battle was over this evening. He strode out of the long party meeting in the Parliament Building; he waved at the crowd and he told reporters in his best ...(German)... meaning, "I'm satisfied."

Mow back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was Ernest Leiser, reporting from Bonn.

Ludwig Erhard, the West German economics minister who had been the choice of the Christian Democratic Party to succeed Adenauer, is presently in Washington. He told a news conference that he "certainly would not think" of being a candidate for the chancellorship...now that Adenauer had said he wanted to stay in the office. Dr. Adenauer's decision, he conceded, had taken him "Very much by surprise." But Erhard said the subject of West German politics did not come up this morning, when he was received by President Eisanhower. Erhard is in this country on an economic mission.

Moscow radio said tonight that Chancellor Adenauer's decision marks an open crisis in the leadership of the Christian Democratic Party. "The Chancellor," said Moscow, "is making another desperate effort to save the bankrupt policy of cold war."

At the foreign ministers conference today...in Geneva...there was no official comment on the political development in West Germany.

The reaction expressed privately, however, was unfavorable. The impression among West German representatives was that the East Germans might now think that the Bonn government is weak. At today's plenary session, Secretary of State Herter again charged East Germany with trying to "smother" the present freedom of West Berlin by means of subversion. Communist East Berlin, he said, is the site of "one of the heaviest concentrations of subversive activities in the world." Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko asked the Western ministers to spell out certain details of their master plan for a German settlement. One of the points (on which Gromyko requested elucidation) was the Western proposal for a zone in Europe of limited forces. But Gromyko has refused so far to discuss the Western proposals on Berlin, and there is a feeling that he is stalling...waiting for new instructions from Moscow.

Premier Khrushchev will fly back to Moscow tomorrow after a two-day visit in Hungary. The talks in Budapest are believed...according to one report...to have centered on Hungary's inclusion in an atom-free zone in Central Europe. Upon his return to Moscow, Khrushchev will make a speech in the Lenin Stadium...and he may divulge more of the purpose of his trip at that time. On Monday, The Communist leaders of East Germany also will be in Moscow.

Off the China coast today, the Nationalist-held islands of Quemoy and Matsu were both hit by Communist shells. And the Peiping radio charged that a ship of the United States Seventh Fleet had "provocatively enroached upon" Red China's territorial waters. Peiping claims that its territorial waters extend twelve miles off shore. The United States recognizes only the three-mile limit.

The Senate today opened formal debate on the nomination of Lewis Strauss as Secretary of commerce. Democratic Leader Johnson took the unusual action of issuing a statement saying that the issue before the Senate is "solely and simply the merits of the appointment." He urged his fellow senators to read the record, based on the hearings of the Commerce Committee...and any efforts to pressure the Senate in either direction, or to mislead it, he said, will be bound to backfire. In talking to reporters, Johnson referred to the statement made yesterday by Democratic Senator Smathers of Florida.

Smathers had said that...in at least two instances...telegrams urging him to vote for Strauss had been forgeries. As the debate opened today, Democratic Senator Magnuson pictured Strauss as a man lacking in integrity and competence. Republican Representative Schoeppel praised him as a devoted public servant...and accused the opposition of "slinging mud."

Today...in Atlanta, Georgia...a two-judge federal court said that racial segregation in the public schools of Atlanta must be recognized as illegal. The ruling was preliminary. It is not immediately effective and came as the court began hearing the suit brought by ten Negro parents for an injunction...saying that Negro children may not be barred from attending public school in Atlanta solely because of race. Later in the day the court granted the injunction and ordered compliance "within a reasonable time."

President Somoza of Nicaragua insists that the small-scale invasion of his country is being overcome. However, leaders of the revolt say that their effort to overthrow the Somoza government has just begun. The rebel radio tonight claimed the capture of a village in northern Nicaragua.

In Washington, the Organization of American States has decided to ask countries in the Caribbean area for information on the invasion. The special committee... set up by the O. A. S...announced no specific plans to go to Nicaragua itself.

Here in New York, the United Steelworkers Union has summoned its wage policy committee to meet next Friday to map strategy in the contract talks...which have now gone through their fourth week.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word For Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN
MURROW: Adenauer has changed his mind - and will stay on as chancellor instead of running for president. Although Adenauer has what he regards as his own good reasons, confusion and recrimination have been two of the immediate results. There is warning in the observation of the English essayist, John Foster, who said: "The souls of men of undecided purpose are the graveyards of good intent." Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., June 8, 1959

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today asked Congress to raise the interest rate on U.S. Savings Bonds by one-half of one percent. He would have the new rate...of three and three-quarter percent...apply to all Series "E" and Series "H" bonds sold after June first. The President also asked for legislation abolishing the interest ceiling on long-term Treasury bonds. And he requested that the permanent ceiling on the national debt be raised to 288-billion dollars. That would be an increase in the permanent debt ceiling of five billion dollars. The President would have the temporary debt ceiling raised to 295-billion dollars...or an increase of seven billion dollars. Mr. Eisenhower told Congress...in a special message...that these actions are necessary in order to "safeguard the public credit." He pointed out that present interest rates make it virtually impossible to sell Government bonds in the competitive market. "In our democracy," he said, "no man can be compelled to lend to the Government on terms he would not voluntarily accept."

The President's proposals were immediately attacked by Democratic Senator Byrd of Virginia and Democratic Representative Patman of Texas. Byrd charged that a higher limit on the national debt would only serve to stimulate inflation...and Patman claimed that there was "no excuse" for higher interest rates on Government bonds except---in his phrase---"to give the bankers and big money lenders a larger share of the national income." The ranking Republican on the House Banking Committee...Representative Killian of New York...said the President was right---"If we're going to get the money we need, we've got to raise interest rates." Senate Democratic Leader Johnson has said that the questions of debt and interest "must both have the aggressive attention of Congress." He indicated that he expects more controversy to surround the rate issue than the question of raising the debt ceiling.

The House today approved...and sent to the Senate...a bill that would extend the federal excise taxes on liquor, cigarettes and new cars at their present level for another year.

And Congress completed action on a measure authorizing nearly half a billion dollars for space development and research.

In California today, the experimental rocket ship X-15 was put through its first glide test...and it was a success. The rocket ship, with its test pilot, was cut loose from the belly of a B-52 bomber at 38-thousand feet. It glided...without power...to a safe landing at Edwards Air Force Base.

The Navy today made the first delivery of United States mail...using a missile. The mail was in a Regulus guided missile, fired from a submarine about a hundred miles off the Florida coast. Its pay-load of letters... ~~addressing~~ addressed to members of Congress and high Government officials... were successfully delivered, each bearing a special four-cent stamp.

The Supreme Court...on a technicality...today set aside a ruling by a lower federal court, which said that three Virginia laws aimed at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were unconstitutional. It said...in a 6 to 3 decision...that the lower court should not have passed on the validity of the laws until state courts had been given a reasonable opportunity to give their own interpretations.

The Supreme Court upheld the requirement...set forth in North Carolina... that prospective voters must be able to read and write any section of the state's constitution.

~~And in Little Rock, a three-judge Federal Court said that the state of Arkansas can not prohibit public agencies from hiring members of the N.A.A.C.P.~~

The talks on nuclear weapons tests resumed in Geneva today after a four-week recess. The United States proposed that the conference set up a technical group...representing the three atomic powers...to study the problems involved in controlling high altitude tests.

The foreign ministers of East and West continued their talks in Geneva today, and again no progress is reported.

President DeGaulle [redacted] today demanded that more of America's nuclear secrets be shared with France. He indicated that France might find it more difficult to cooperate with NATO if this is not done.

Final returns in the parliamentary election in Sicily show the five-party alliance...supported by the Communists...victorious over the anti-Communist coalition by about 200-thousand votes. The election was important to the Italian Communists...who are seeking, by means of their inroads in local and regional government, to regain some of their old power. And it is no less important to the ruling Christian Democratic Party, which is trying to hold onto its power. No less than eight parties played a prominent role in the Sicilian election. No one knows the final outcome... but CBS News Correspondent Winston Burdett reports: "One thing is sure--in the weeks to come there will be a furious scramble to form political alliances."

It has been proposed at the Atlantic Congress in London that the West sponsor a new international organization...open to all nations... which would have for its primary purpose the promotion of liberty as opposed to totalitarian Communism. The new organization would be called "The Free World Association." This is just one of a number of recommendations on which the Atlantic Congress will act before it adjourns on Wednesday.

I have asked my colleague in London...Alex Kendrick...if he would describe the nature and the fuhction of this congress, and here is his report.

Tape runs 3:55

Ends on cue: "Back now to Ed Murrow."

Maine is great country. In 1870...when he was looking forward to such an existence, however temporary...Mark Twain said: "Not that I mean to lead a stupid, useless life in the woods. By no means. I shall use method in my exercise. I shall change and change about---not lying under one tree until injury from over-exertion sets in."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, June 8, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... I've asked my colleague in London Alex Kendrick if he would describe the nature and the function of this confress. And here's his report.

KENDRICK: One of Britain's leading weeklies, The Spectator, has come out with this question printed large on its front page: "Why NATO?" With the possible exception of the Council of Europe, it points out, there's no institution more productive of yawns than the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. But there have been no yawns detected as yet among the 650 delegates, leading citizens of the NATO countries, who have assembled in London for the first Atlantic Congress. This is not a governmental body nor an official one. It might best be described as a NATO town meeting, the parliamentarians, editors, businessmen, economists, lawyers, churchmen and even retired generals making up the congress, have hired a hall to ask themselves and one another not "why NATO?" - they think they know why, but "NATO - how?" This is the tenth anniversary of the North Atlantic alliance. But the Atlantic Congress is less concerned with the past ten years than with the next: Is NATO only a military concept? Is it to be concerned only with troops, ships, rockets and strategy? Or can it play a role in aid of under-developed countries? Should it think only in terms of power politics in Europe? Or can it act as an economic, political and cultural bridge with other continents? Is centralism or federation a better future for NATO? How much are individual defense and individual policy to be affected by the requirements of common defense and common policy? These are some of the problems that are being examined here during these six days - and there are no yawns among them either.

The delegates assembled here are present in their individual capacities; whatever they say or do, whatever resolutions are passed, need have no bearing on what their respective governments or parliaments may do about the future of NATO. But they firmly believe that the Atlantic Congress is not just another overseas junket, that it will have its effect on NATO policies for the next ten years; ten years which will produce problems NATO in its original form never had to take into account: the emergence of African and Asian colonies into statehoods, the rising scientific and industrial prowess and potential of the Communist bloc, the growth of nationalism on the one hand as against the growth of such multi-national structures as the Common Market on the other.

There are many who have come here to plug their own ideas; every variation of international organization, every variation of internationalism do-goodism and its spokesmen here. But all of them have focused their hopes, their desires, and their criticisms on the North Atlantic community as the logical vehicle for their aspirations. It is a large and comforting umbrella that has been erected at Church House this week.

The American delegation here is not only the biggest, 130 delegates out of 650, but it is the most productive. It has more papers in the hopper than any other group, though the British are not far behind. Seven members of the U.S. Senate are here, eight members of the House of Representatives. There are historians, bankers, former governors, university presidents, judges, novelists, economists from many states. There are bishops, mayors, rabbis, scientists, professors, the director of an art museum and the owner of a cattle ranch. Some may have been coming to Europe anyway. Some, obviously, were not. But these delegates did not have to spend a whole week locked up in committee rooms and listening to speeches about NATO, not in Europe's sunniest, most pleasurable, most interesting Spring in decades. That they are doing so is itself some sort of comment on the NATO idea and perhaps an answer to The Specta-

tor's question: "Why NATO?"

Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: For many years the voice of my friend Harry Marble was one of the best known on the CBS Radio Network. He worked in New York. He had money, he had sponsors, he had about as much security as one can get in this business. And then about four years ago, he escaped from New York, and we found him now here in Portland, Maine, at Station WGAM. Harry, why did you leave us?

MARBLE: Well, Ed, first may I not miss this opportunity to tell you first of all how delighted we folks down here in the northeast corner are to have you in Maine today.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

MARBLE: And wish you could stay long enough to get in some Spring fishing.

MURROW: So do I.

MARBLE: But I found, to answer your question, Ed, I was working pretty hard; harder perhaps than I even wanted to. Things were going well and everything was fine but I found that I was doing not much of anything, actually, Ed, but work and sleep seven days a week - and a good many evenings. I found I was seeing nothing of my wife, no trees, no grass - and if I were 30 years old, I'm sure I would still be in New York, Ed. But when I found that I was getting a little bit over 30, I said, 'Well, now I think perhaps there is something more to our one trip through this life than just working and sleeping.' And so we pulled up and came up here to Maine, where, of course, I started. I think that had a lot to do with it, Ed. I was born up here. My grandfather enlisted a couple of terms in the Civil War up here and my roots were here and so I came back home. I've been delighted to be here because I've run into a bunch of people to work with, whom I respect for their honesty and their integrity and their ability. And I'm able at the same time to live in Maine and to keep in the radio business, dealing with news - the part of it that I always liked best.

MURROW: Well, now, Harry, what's it like up here or down here, as you would say.

MARBLE: Well, it's pretty good down here, Ed. It's awfully good. I have a long drive. I live down the coast 60 miles further than you are now, in a little town that I had never heard of in Maine, till I moved there. It's a little town called Bremen? And we found what they call down here in Maine, a salt water farmhouse. It sits on the shores of Greenland? Cove and looks out to sea; and I find that after a day here, a drive home 60 miles through the state of Maine - we're known, as you've noticed, as vacationland on our plates - but we folks who live here all the time feel that we are more than a vacationland. It's sort of a different way of living. And I find when I go home, at night, that I've got plenty of room to swing my arms around, about 30 acres, and sit down if it's in the wintertime after a long drive through a snowstorm, to walk into a library with about three two foot birch logs on the fireplace - it's an awful good feeling.

MURROW: And you do, in fact, see pheasant and deer driving to work and back. Harry Marble, you're a lucky man. Nice to chat with you.

MARBLE: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today.

ANNOUNCER: ...

Trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 8, 1959
7:45-8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

President Eisenhower today asked Congress to raise the interest rate on U. S. Savings Bonds by one-half of one percent. He would have the new rate...of three and three-quarter percent...apply to all Series "E" and Series "H" bonds sold after June first. The President also asked for legislation abolishing the interest ceiling on long-term Treasury bonds. And he requested that the permanent ceiling on the national debt be raised to 288-billion dollars. That would be an increase in the permanent debt ceiling of five billion dollars. The President would have the temporary debt ceiling raised to 295-billion dollars...or an increase of seven billion dollars. Mr. Eisenhower told congress...in a special message... that these actions are necessary in order to "safeguard the public credit." He pointed out that present interest rates make it virtually impossible to sell Government bonds in the competive market. "In our democracy," he said, "no man can be compelled to lend to the Government on terms he would not voluntarily accept."

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson has said that the questions of debt and interest "must both have the aggressive attention of Congress." He indicated that he expects more controversy to surround the rate issue than the question of raising the debt ceiling.

In California today, the experimental rocket ship X-15 was put through its first glide test...and it was a success. The rocket ship, with its test pilot, was cut loose from the belly of a B-52 bomber at 38-thousand feet. It glided... without power...to a safe landing at Edwards Air Force Base.

The Navy today made the first delivery of United States mail...using a missile. The mail was in a Regulus guided missile, fired from a submarine about a hundred miles off the Florida coast. Its pay-load of letters.....

addressed to members of Congress and high Government officials.... were successfully delivered, each bearing a special four-cent stamp.

The Supreme Court...on a technicality...set aside a ruling by a lower federal court, which said that three Virginia laws aimed at the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People were unconstitutional. It said... in a 6 to 3 decision...that the lower court should not have passed on the validity of the laws until state courts had been given a reasonable opportunity to give their own interpretations.

The Supreme Court upheld the requirement...set forth in North Carolina... that prospective voters must be able to read and write any section of the state's constitution.

The talks on nuclear weapons tests resumed in Geneva today after a four-week recess. The United States proposed that the conference set up a technical group...representing the three atomic powers...to study the problems involved in controlling high altitude tests.

The foreign ministers of East and West continued their talks in Geneva today, and again no progress is reported.

President DeGaulle today demanded that more of America's nuclear secrets be shared with France. He indicated that France might find it more difficult to cooperate with NATO if this is not done.

Final returns in the parliamentary election in Sicily show the five-party alliance....supported by the Communists...victorious over the anti-Communist coalition by about 200-thousand votes.

It has been proposed at the Atlantic Congress in London that the West sponsor a new international organization...open to all nations...which would have for its primary purpose the promotion of liberty as opposed to totalitarian Communism. The new organization would be called "The Free World Association." This is just one of a number of recommendations on which the Atlantic Congress will act before it adjourns on Wednesday.

I have asked my colleague in London....Alex Kendrick ..if he would describe the nature and the function of this congress,and here is his report.

KENDRICK: One of Britain's leading weeklies, The Spectator, has come out with this question printed large on its front page: "Why NATO?" With the possible exception of the Council of Europe, it points out, there's no institution more productive of yawns than the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. But there have been no yawns detected as yet among the 650 delegates, leading citizens of the NATO countries, who have assembled in London for the first Atlantic Congress. This is not a governmental body nor an official one. It might best be described as a NATO town meeting, the parliamentarians, editors, businessmen, economists, lawyers, churchmen and even retired generals making up the congress, have hired a hall to ask themselves and one another not "Why NATO?" - theythink they know why, but "NATO - how?" This is the 10th anniversary of the North Atlantic alliance. But the Atlantic Congress is less concerned with the past ten years than with the next: Is NATO only a military concept? Is it to be concerned only with troops, ships, rockets and srrategy? Or can it play a role in aid of under-developed countries? Should it think only in terms of power politics in Europe? Or can it act as an economic, political and cultural bridge with other continents? Is centralism or federation a better future for NATO? How much are individual defense and individual policy to be affected by the requirements of common defense and common policy? These are some of the problems that are being examined here during these six days - and there are no yawns among them either.

The delegates assembled here are present in their individual capacities; whatever they say or do, whatever resolutions are passed, need have no bearing on what their respective governments or parliaments may do about the future of NATO. But they firmly believe that the Atlantic Congress is not just another overseas junket, that it will have its effect on NATO policies for the next ten year; ten years which will produce problems NATO in its original form never had to take into account: the emergence of African and Asian colonies into statehoods, the rising scientific and industrial prowess and potential of the Communist bloc, the growth of nationalism on the one hand as against the growth of such multi-national structures as the Common Market on the other.

There are many who have come here to plug their own ideas; every variation of international organization, every variation of internationalism do-goodism and its spokesmen here. But all of them have focused their hopes, their desires, and their criticisms on the North Atlantic community as the logical vehicle for their aspirations. It is a large and comforting umbrella that has been erected at Church House this week.

The American delegation here is not only the biggest, 130 delegates out of 650, but it is the most productive. It has more papers in the hopper than any other group, though the British are not far behind. Seven members of the U.S. Senate are here, eight members of the House of Representatives. There are historians, bankers, former governors, university presidents, judges, novelists, economists from many states. There are bishops, mayors, rabbis, scientists, professors, the director of an art museum and the owner of a cattle ranch. Some may have been coming to Europe anyway. Some, obviously, were not. But these delegates did not have to spend a whole week locked up in committee rooms and listening to speeches about NATO, not in Europe's sunniest, most pleasurable, most interesting Spring in decades. That they are doing so is itself some sort of comment on the NATO idea and perhaps an answer to the Spectator's question, "Why NATO?"

Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: For many years the voice of my friend Harry Marble was one of the best known on the CBS Radio Network. He worked in New York. He had money, he had sponsors, he had about as much security as one can get in this business. And then about four years ago, he escaped from New York, and we found him now here in Portland, Maine, at Station WGAM. Harry, why did you leave us?

MARBLE: Well, Ed, first may I not miss this opportunity to tell you first of all how delighted we folks down here in the northeast corner are to have you in Maine today.

MURROW: Thank you very much.

MARBLE: And wish you could stay long enough to get in some Spring fishing.

MURROW: So do I.

MARBLE: But I found, to answer your question, Ed, I was working pretty hard; harder perhaps than I even wanted to. Things were going well and everything was fine, but I found that I was doing not much of anything, actually, Ed, but work and sleep seven days a week - and a good many evenings. I found I was seeing nothing of my wife, no trees, no grass - and if I were 30 years old, I'm sure I would still be in New York, Ed. But when I found that I was getting a little bit over 30, I said, "Well, now I think perhaps there is something more to our one trip through this life than just working and sleeping." And so we pulled up and came up here to Maine, where, of course, I started. I think that had a lot to do with it, Ed. I was born up here. My grandfather enlisted a couple of terms in the Civil War up here and my roots were here and so I came back home. I've been delighted to be here because I've run into a bunch of people to work with, whom I respect for their honesty and their integrity and their ability. And I'm able at the same time to live in Maine and to keep in the radio business, dealing with news - the part of it that I always liked best.

MURROW: Well, now, Harry, what's it like up here or down here, as you would say?

MARBLE: Well, it's pretty good down here, Ed. It's awfully good. I have a long drive. I live down the coast 60 miles further than you are now, in a little town that I had never heard of in Maine, till I moved there. It's a little town called Bremen. And we found what they call down here in Maine, a salt water farmhouse. It sits on the shores of Greenland Cove and looks out to sea; and I find that after a day here, a drive home 60 miles through the state of Maine - we're known, as you've noticed, as vacationland on our plates - but we folks who live here all the time feel that we are more than a vacationland. It's sort of a different way of living. And I find when I go home, at night, that I've got plenty of room to swing my arms around, about 30 acres, and sit down if it's in the wintertime after a long drive though a snowstorm, to walk into a library with about three two foot birch logs on the fireplace - it's an awful good feeling.

MURROW: And you do, in fact, see pheasant and deer driving to work and back. Harry Marble, you're a lucky man. Nice to chat with you.

MARBLE: Thank you, Ed.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Maine is great country. In 1870...when he was looking forward to such an existence, however temporary...Mark Twain said: "Not that I mean to lead a stupid, useless life in the woods. By no means. I shall use method in my exercise. I shall change and change about---not lying under one tree until injury from over-exertion sets in."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 9, 1959

THis is the news:

In Moscow today, Premier Khrushchev conferred with the Communist leaders of East Germany. And the Soviet news agency Tass says that there was "complete unanimity" on all questions discussed. According to Moscow Radio, the question given special consideration was that dealing with West Berlin and the foreign ministers conference. The Moscow broadcast gave no details. Russia, however, has threatened to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany if no agreement is reached at Geneva... and there is speculation that the terms of such a treaty are now being drawn up. (In a few minutes we will have a direct report from Geneva on the foreign ministers talks.)

Representatives of the United States, Britain and Russia today held their 91st meeting at the Geneva conference dealing with nuclear weapons tests. Conference sources described today's meeting as "inclusive". There were signs, however, that Russia might be moving toward the Western position that inspection teams should be of a truly international character. Moscow has insisted that most of the inspectors stationed in Russia be Russians.

This afternoon, the President summoned the nation's military leaders to a meeting at the White House that lasted an hour and twenty minutes. All News Secretary Hagerty would say when the meeting was called was that it would "deal with the air defense of the United States." When the conference broke up, the new deputy secretary of defense...Thomas Gates...did say that he did not think the "master" air defense plan, prepared by the Pentagon, would be submitted to Congress tomorrow as originally scheduled. The Senate Armed Services Committee had said that it would like to see such a plan...one that would give it a clear picture of how the Defense Department intended to deal with the rivalry between the Army and Air Force in the field in anti-aircraft missiles. Today, this rivalry apparently was discussed.

The first "ballistic missile submarine" was launched by the Navy today at Groton, Connecticut. The submarine...named the George Washington... is nuclear powered and 380 feet in length. It is designed to fire the Polaris missile, either on the surface or submerged. And President Eisenhower voiced the "prayerful hope" that it will never have to be used in war. The submarine will become operational next year.

The White House announces that when Vice President Nixon goes to Russia next month to open the American exposition in Moscow, he will be accompanied by Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother who has often served as this country's "goodwill ambassador".

West Germany's finance minister...Ludwig Erhard...returned to Bonn today after his visit to the United States. Erhard had been expected to succeed Konrad Adenauer as chancellor this summer...but Adenauer now intends to hold onto the office and not seek the presidency as originally planned. Erhard said today that he will demand a full debate on Adenauer's "change of mind" within the ruling Christian Democratic Party.

Late today...in Washington...the Senate confirmed the nomination of Douglas Dillon as under-secretary of state.

The United States Court of Appeals today upheld the right of the State Department to refuse to issue a passport for travel to an area of potential trouble, such as Red China. The court acted in the case of William Worthy, a newsman who visited China in 1956...although his passport was marked "not valid" for travel to that country. Worthy argued that a citizen has the constitutional right to travel where he pleases, barring the most severe international emergency. And he has called the refusal of the State Department to renew his passport an abridgement of freedom of the press. The appeals court said today that in foreign affairs, an individual's "uninhibited yen to go and to inquire" may be circumscribed. To say that the government cannot restrict travel, it argued, would be "to hold that the protection of the peace against American-caused incidents in foreign countries is outside the realm of foreign affairs," which comes under the authority of the President and the Secretary of State. The court said there was no connection between Worthy's case and the recent Supreme Court ruling...which said that the State Department may not deny a passport because of the political beliefs and associations of the applicant. In this instance, it said, no such beliefs and associations are involved. Worthy has indicated that he will take his case to the Supreme Court.

Now here is that report from Geneva, by my colleague Daniel Schorr.

(Tape runs 5:40
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr...reporting that the crisis in Geneva has "only just begun."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

These words by Abraham Lincoln: "At what point then is the approach of danger to be expected? I answer, if it ever reaches us, it must spring up amongst us. It cannot come from abroad. If destruction be our lot, we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of free men, we must live through all time---or die by suicide."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, June 9, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... Now here is that report from Geneva by my colleague Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: Tonight for the first time, Western spokesmen are saying that the Big Four foreign ministers' conference has reached the crisis stage. In three secret meetings since last Saturday, the negotiations have remained stuck at the same point: Gromyko of Russia refuses to accept continuation of Western occupation rights in Berlin. The Western ministers refuse to relinquish those rights. A plenary session is being held tomorrow, at Gromyko's request, where the crisis may erupt into the open. The next private meeting has not yet been scheduled. The attitudes of affability that the ministers have doggedly sustained for the past four weeks, have begun to turn sour. Gromyko, who speaks English when he wants to appear friendly, spoke in Russian at yesterday's and today's meetings. And American spokesman, Andrew Berding, noted that Gromyko gave him only a half-smile when he left today's meeting.

Secretary of State Herter is authoritatively described as gloomy about the conference. He is not even sure that it will be possible to get from this conference any agreed statement of what the East and West disagree about. If there is no statement that can be described as a narrowing of differences, this conference will have failed to meet President Eisenhower's minimum requirement for going to a summit meeting. Whether we will go to the summit all the same remains to be seen. Britain's Macmillan believes that a failure of this conference will make a summit meeting more necessary than ever.

Herter's sense of gloom and disappointment grow out of a dawning awareness that he may have made a fundamental miscalculation. Herter has been proceeding on the assumption that Khrushchev is anxious for a summit meeting and would make concessions to get one. Why Khrushchev was so keen on a summit meeting Herter was not quite sure. Perhaps because he wants to be recognized as a great world leader; to be a member of the club so to speak.

But Khrushchev's yearning for a summit was taken as a premise of Western strength. Now Khrushchev has upset that premise. In an interview in Budapest over the week-end, Khrushchev said flatly, "We will not perpetuate the occupation regime in West Berlin. If agreements are not reached at the foreign ministers' conference, they will be reached at a summit meeting. If there is no desire for a summit meeting, it will not take place." And this he added, "will not be without consequences."

It is a fact startling but true that despite the thousands of words of intelligence reports that are cabled daily to Geneva, for the information of the Western ministers, these ministers were not aware of the Khrushchev statement which had been used on a news wire on Sunday, when they went into the meeting with Gromyko yesterday. And when Gromyko made a reference to the interview at a secret session, Herter asked if he could have a copy of it. The Soviet delegation provided him with a text as published in Pravda.

Not knowing that this key statement by Khrushchev was only a small error of liaison. The big error, it would now appear, was betting too heavily on this one card, Khrushchev's yearning for a meeting with other heads of government. The Soviet experts on all the three Western delegations had counselled that this factor should not be overestimated, that Khrushchev wanted a summit meeting not for personal glory, as Herter supposed, but to get Western acceptance of Communist Europe as an entity. To reaffirm Western rights in Berlin would defeat that aim and was not a price worth paying. This was the estimate of Soviet experts in the three Western governments, some of whom are now on the delegations here gloomily surveying the apparent confirmation of their warnings. It didn't help that at a crucial juncture in this conference, West Germany was upset by Chancellor Adenauer's decision to remain as Chancellor and the whole North Atlantic alliance by France's decision not to allow atomic stockpiles on French territory. These facts were undoubtedly read in Moscow as added elements of weakness behind Western lines that would justify a tough policy in Geneva. This does not seem a time when concessions to the West were necessary.

There is considerable gloom among the Western delegation tonight: If Gromyko does not relent - and Western experts see no reason why he should - then this conference will end in failure. The belief is widely held that Russia will move in the near future to turn over control of the Berlin access routes to the East Germans. After a summit meeting, if there is one, or very soon if there is not. Those who hope we might at least get a status quo arrangement for Berlin have revised their hopes downward.

The resources of Western diplomacy are not entirely exhausted. The crisis has only begun. It is not yet at an end, although Soviet delegates are openly saying they expect this conference regardless of results to be over by the middle of next week. Efforts may still be made to get another conference, of foreign ministers or their deputies. But the Soviets seem in no mood to dillydally. Already the Soviet press is hard at plugging the propaganda line that the West is committed to a summit meeting next.

From the outset Khrushchev made clear he was interested in a foreign ministers meeting only if we wanted to make our surrender at such a meeting. He has at least been consistent.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Tuesday, June 9, 1959
7:45-8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

In Moscow today, Premier Khrushchev conferred with the Communist leaders of East Germany. And the Soviet news agency Tass says that there was "complete unanimity" on all questions discussed. According to Moscow Radio, the question given special consideration was that dealing with West Berlin and the foreign ministers conference. The Moscow broadcast gave no details. Russia, however, has threatened to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany if no agreement is reached at Geneva...and there is speculation that the terms of such a treaty are now being drawn up. (In a few minutes we will have a direct report from Geneva on the foreign ministers talk.)

Representatives of the United States, Britain and Russia today held their 91st meeting at the Geneva Conference dealing with nuclear weapons tests. Conference sources described today's meeting as "inclusive".

There were signs, however, that Russia might be moving toward the Western position that inspection teams should be of a truly international character. Moscow has insisted that most of the inspectors stationed in Russia be Russians.

This afternoon, the President summoned the nation's military leaders to a meeting at the White House that lasted an hour and twenty minutes. All news Secretary Hagerty would say when the meeting was called was that it would "deal with the air defense of the United States." When the conference broke up, the new deputy secretary of defense...Thomas Gates...did say that he did not think the "master" air defense plan, prepared by the Pentagon, would be submitted to Congress tomorrow as originally scheduled.

The first "ballistic missile submarine" was launched by the Navy today at Groton, Connecticut. The submarine...named the George Washington...is nuclear powered and 380 feet in length. It is designed to fire the Polaris missile, either on the surface or submerged.

And President Eisenhower voiced the "prayerful hope" that it will never have to be used in war. The submarine will become operational next year.

The White House announced that when Vice President Nixon goes to Russia next month to open the American exposition in Moscow, he will be accompanied by Dr. Milton Eisenhower, the President's brother who has often served as this country's goodwill ambassador.

West Germany's finance minister...Ludwig Erhard...returned to Bonn today after his visit to the United States. Erhard had been expected to succeed Konrad Adenauer as chancellor this summer...but Adenauer now intends to hold onto the office and not seek the presidency as originally planned. Erhard said today that he will demand a full debate on Adenauer's "change of mind" within the ruling Christian Democratic Party.

Late today...in Washington...the Senate confirmed the nomination of Douglas Dillon as under-secretary of state.

The United States Court of Appeals today upheld the right of the State Department to refuse to issue a passport for travel to an area of potential trouble, such as Red China. The court acted in the case of William Worthy, a newsman who visited China in 1956...although his passport was marked "not valid" for travel to that country. Worthy argued that a citizen has the constitutional right to travel where he pleases, barring the most severe international emergency. And he has called the refusal of the State Department to renew his passport an abridgement of freedom of the press. The appeals court said today that in foreign affairs, an individual's "uninhibited yen to go and to inquire" may be circumscribed. To say that the government cannot restrict travel, it argued, would be "to hold that the protection of the peace against American-caused incidents in foreign countries is outside the realm of foreign affairs," which comes under the authority of the President and the Secretary of State.
The court said there was no connection between Worthy's case and the recent Supreme Court ruling...which said that the State Department may not deny a passport because of the political beliefs and associations of the applicant. In this instance, it said, no such beliefs and associations are involved. Worthy has indicated that he will take his case to the Supreme Court.

Now here is that report from Geneva, by my colleague Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: Tonight for the first time, Western spokesmen are saying that the Big Four foreign ministers' conference has reached the crisis stage. In three secret meetings since last Saturday, the negotiations have remained stuck at the same point; Gromyko of Russia refuses to accept continuation of Western occupation rights in Berlin. The Western ministers refuse to relinquish those rights. A plenary session is being held tomorrow, at Gromyko's request, where the crisis may erupt into the open. The next private meeting has not yet been scheduled. The attitudes of affability that the ministers have doggedly sustained for the past four weeks, have begun to turn sour. Gromyko, who speaks English when he wants to appear friendly, spoke in Russian at yesterday's and today's meetings. And American spokesman, Andrew Berding, noted that Gromyko gave him only a half-smile when he left today's meeting.

Secretary of State Herter is authoritatively described as gloomy about the conference. He is not even sure that it will be possible to get from this conference any agreed statement of what the East and West disagree about. If there is no statement that can be described as a narrowing of differences, this conference will have failed to meet President Eisenhower's minimum requirement for going to a summit meeting. Whether we will go to the summit all the same remains to be seen. Britain's Macmillan believes that a failure of this conference will make a summit meeting more necessary than ever.

Herter's sense of gloom and disappointment grow out of a dawning awareness that he may have made a fundamental miscalculation. Herter has been proceeding on the assumption that Khrushchev is anxious for a summit meeting and would make concessions to get one. Why Khrushchev was so keen on a summit meeting Herter was not quite sure. Perhaps because he wants to be recognized as a great world leader; to be a member of the club so to speak.

But Khrushchev's yearning for a summit was taken as a premise of Western strength. Now Khrushchev has upset that premise. In an interview in Budapest over the week-end, Khrushchev said flatly, "We will not perpetuate the occupation regime in West Berlin. If agreements are not reached at the foreign ministers' conference, they will be reached at a summit meeting. If there is no desire for a summit meeting, it will not take place. And this," he added, "will not be without consequences."

It is a fact startling but true that despite the thousands of words of intelligence reports that are cabled daily to Geneva, for the information of the Western ministers, these ministers were not aware of the Khrushchev statement which had been used on a news wire on Sunday, when they went into the meeting with Gromyko yesterday. And when Gromyko made a reference to the interview at a secret session, Herter asked if he could have a copy of it. The Soviet delegation provided him with a text as published in Pravda.

Not knowing that this key statement by Khrushchev was only a small error of liaison. The big error, it would now appear, was betting too heavily on this one card, Khrushchev's yearning for a meeting with other heads of government. The Soviet experts on call the three Western delegations had counselled that this factor should not be overestimated, that Khrushchev wanted a summit meeting not for personal glory, as Herter supposed, but to get Western acceptance of Communist Europe as an entity. To reaffirm Western rights in Berlin would defeat that aim and was not a price worth paying. This was the estimate of Soviet experts in the three Western governments, some of whom are now on the delegations here gloomily surveying the apparent confirmation of their warnings. It didn't help that at a crucial juncture in this conference, West Germany was upset by Chancellor Adenauer's decision to remain as Chancellor and the whole North Atlantic alliance by France's decision not to allow atomic stockpiles on French territory. These facts were undoubtedly read in Moscow as added elements of weakness behind Western lines that would justify a tough policy in Geneva. This does not seem a time when concessions to the West were necessary.

There is considerable gloom among the western delegation tonight: If Gromyko does not relent - and Western experts see no reason why he should - then this conference will end in failure. The belief is widely held that Russia will move in the near future to turn over control of the Berlin access routes to the East Germans. After a summit meeting, if there is one, or very soon if there is not. Those who hope we might at least get a status quo arrangement for Berlin have revised their hopes downward.

The resources of Western diplomacy are not entirely exhausted. The crisis has only begun. It is not yet at an end, although Soviet delegates are openly saying they expect this conference regardless of results to be over by the middle of next week. Efforts may still be made to get another conference, of foreign ministers or their deputies. But the Soviets seem in no mood to dillydally. Already the Soviet press is hard at plugging the propaganda line that the West is committee to a summit meeting next.

From the outset Khrushchev made clear he was interested in a foreign ministers meeting only if we wanted to make our surrender at such a meeting. He has at least been consistent.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: That was my colleague, Daniel Schorr...reporting that the crisis in Geneva has "only just begun."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: These words by Abraham Lincoln: "At what point then is the approach of danger to be expected? I answer, if it ever reaches us, it must spring up amongst us. It cannot come from abroad. If destruction be our lot, we must ourselves be its author and finisher. As a nation of free men, we msst live through all time---or die by suicide."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wednesday, June 10, 1959

This is the news:

Russia today formally served the West a new ultimatum to get out of Berlin in a year. The Western foreign ministers in Geneva promptly rejected the deadline -- and the tone behind it.

For the full story, we switch now to my colleague Dan Schorr in Geneva.

TAPE RUNS 4:40

Ends on cue: "... To ERM in New York."

That was Dan Schorr, reporting from Geneva.

The Russian action left Western diplomats disappointed and gloomy. But Premier Khruschev says the soviet proposal for a peace treaty with Germany and the ending of the occupation regime in Westberlin -- indicated "the right road" to follow.

The Soviet news agency Tass says Khruschev made the comment in Riga, Soviet Latvia -- where he is visiting. He spoke at a meeting there -- about the "growing friendship" between the peoples of the Soviet union and East Germany.

The three-power nuclear test suspension conference met for the 92nd time in Geneva today. And delegates from the United States, Britain and Russia all reported some progress toward setting up a scientific study of ways to control high altitude explosions.

The 14-nation Atlantic congress wound up six days of discussions in London today -- with a final declaration calling for expansion of NATO'S political and economic role in the cold war. The declaration called -- among other points -- for increasing European military forces to minimum Nato strength as soon as possible ..... and prohibiting national governments from taking major decisions affecting Nato without previous consultation. ... France's bid for a full partnership with the United States and Britain in the business of running Nato's nuclear defenses brought on such hot debate yesterday -- the French delegate warned the issue might even lead to French withdrawal from Nato.

The United States said today it is making "every effort" to work out an agreement with France and Britain on the demands of President Charles de Gaulle to share custody of Nato nuclear weapons. / (Any agreement with France involving control of weapon stockpiles would require a change in United States law). / State department news officer Lincoln White says tri-partite talks are in progress in Washington -- to work out a mutual agreement on De Gaulle's demands.

In Paris, it's reported the bulk of Nato's atomic fighter-bomber force will be moved soon from France to Britain -- unless De Gaulle drops his request.

In Bonn, Chancellor Konrad Adenauer today won a decisive round in his battle with economics minister Ludwig Erhard -- to remain uncontested head of the West German government. / At a 40-minute private meeting of the Christian democratic party parliamentary group -- the two men made up their quarrel and Erhard accepted a vote of confidence. Both the 83-year-old Adenauer and the party apologized to Erhard for statements that were "apt to damage his esteem" in the struggle over West German leadership.

Erhard -- the chief architect of West Germany's post-war economic recovery -- had been the Christian democratic party's choice -- but not Adenauer's -- to succeed as chancellor when Adenauer decided to run for president. But then Adenauer changed his mind about moving on to the largely ceremonial job of president. And Erhard publicly challenged his decision to remain on as chancellor. The two men had two inconclusive meetings earlier in the day. After the party caucus -- and the apology from all -- Erhard agreed to stay in Adenauer's cabinet as economics minister. Erhard said he was satisified -- but newsmen said he didn't look it. The open fight between the two men apparently was settled -- but the hard feelings clearly lingered on. Erhard mumbled his "satisfaction" and posed for handshakes. But when he spoke during the party session, he said he had been deeply insulted by recent events.

Adenauer's unusual apology apparently placed Erhard on the road to the Chancellorship at some future date -- perhaps even before 1961-- the time for the next general elections.

In Washington, the government TODAY reported ~~today~~ one million more Americans found jobs in May. The increase makes a total of [redacted] 66-million-16-thousand employed -- a record for the month. The report also shows the number of idle workers ~~fell~~ dropped by 238-thousand. Which makes a total of three-million-390-thousand still unemployed. ~~An unusually large pick-up in factory employment accompanied the seasonal May rise in Farm work. There were substantial job gains in steel, and other primary metals industries ... in fabricated metals ... and machinery industries. There even was a small gain in auto employment.~~

President Eisenhower was described as "pleased" by the May improvement in the employment situation.. But the White House said he was still "concerned" about the continued existence of un-employment.

The senate foreign relations committee rebuffed the president today -- by [redacted] voting to put the foreign aid program's development loan fund on a long-term financial basis. The committee approved -- 11 to 4 -- chairman Fulbright's proposal. It calls for the treasury to finance the fund from regular government revenues. The treasury would put up one billion dollars a year for five years.

A federal appeals court ruled today that Teamsters union president James Hoffa and his union -- must obey reforms recommended by court-appointed monitors. The teamsters had sought to over-turn the broad anti-corruption program laid down by the monitors, and approved by Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts. ~~The decision also gave Judge Letts power to veto a special union convention called by Hoffa to conduct new elections and end the monitors' supervision of teamsters affairs.~~

(Tallahassee — was used, next page)

Back in a moment

Jerry Bryan

In Tallahassee, Florida -- an all-male, all-white jury was picked tonight to try four white young men charged with the criminal assault of a 19-year-old negro coed.

It now appears that West German Chancellor Adenauer has avoided a split within his own party, and the Old Man will serve out his term as Chancellor. The manoevering in Bonn underlines the wisdom of C.C. Colton who said: "He that aspires to be the head of a party will find it more difficult to please his friends than to perplex his foes."

Good night - and good luck!.

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, June 10, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: For the full story we swithh now to my collegue, Dan Schorr, in Geneva.

SCHORR: The reasons for the deep gloom that descended over the Western spokesmen at the Big Four conference last night are now known. At yesterday's secret session Gromyko of Russia submitted what amounted to an ultimatum and said he would put it on the record at the plenary session today. This he has now done. Gromyko has offered the West a one year extension of its occupation rights in Berlin, on several tough conditions. One is that Western forces be reduced to token strength. In secret session he mentioned one platoon for each of the Western three powers. Another is that all propaganda and so-called subversive activities against East Germany and other Communist countries of West Berlin be halted. Another is that during this year a peace treaty be negotiated with a divided Germany and an all German committee be formed as a forerunner of a confederation. If this proposal is not accepted, says Gromyko, then the Soviet Union will not be willing to confirm its consent to the continuation of the occupation regime in West Berlin. And, if the West does not negotiate a peace treaty, then a separate treaty will be signed with East Germany. The Western response to this has been prompt and unequivocal. At today's past three hour session Secretary Herter said that the sum and tone of these conditions are improper for presentation in a serious negotiation between soverèign states. This, he said is the same sort of threat with a time limit that the Russians launched last November. "Must we conclude," Herter asks, "that this statement has been made to interrupt the negotiations." And he said, "We are unwilling to negotiate under that threat, and we hope therefore, that the Soviet government will reconsider its position. Another plenary session was set for Friday. Later American spokesman Andrew Berding spelled out more clearly what Herter had in mind. Said Berding, "The private negotiations have been interrupted. We are now more or less on a day-to-day basis. A great deal will depend on the plenary session on Friday. Our feeling," said Berding, "is that the next move is up to Gromyko." The Soviet spokesman, Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian Zorin denied that the Soviet proposal represents an ultimatum. "We have submitted our proposal to the Western Powers," he said, "and are ready to discuss them. Let them present their proposals." But, he added that if the Soviet plan is rejected Russia will not be willing to continue the present occupation arrangement with all the consequences ~~which~~ that will emanate from that fact. Those consequences are clear. The threat of Soviet interferance with Western access to Berlin. The crisis is now complete. The issue is joined. Gromyko has presented a proposal which the West refuses to discuss. Russia refuses to withdraw its proposal. This is as Western delegates here tonight, a Soviet attempt to force a breakdown in the conference, but lay the blame on the West. There are few tonight who will offer any bets that this conference will last longer than another several days. The only hope is that Gromyko at the last moment will withdraw his proposal and that hope is not very strong. The disappointment to the top Western delegates is great. They had not banked very heavily on substantial results from this conference. They had hoped at least for a stop-gap arrangement that would safeguard their rights in Berlin and open the way to a summit meeting. But, it now appears likely that if this conference ends in failure the Soviets will soon begin applying pressure against our exposed position in West Berlin. There is not much more for the West to offer. Another foreign ministers meeting or a meeting of the ministers deputies. It is not likely the Russians would accept that. It is not likely another meeting would accomplish much anyway. There is bitter disappointment among those, such as Selwyn Lloyd of Britain, who had hoped that the threat could be staved off by keeping the Soviets engaged in negotiation. Tonight Lloyd is left with no room for manaaver. Backing up Herter at today's session he said, "Mr. Gromyko's stake smacks of a take it or leave it attitude. If this is meant as a dictot then Mr. Gromyko mistakes the character of the people to whom he is speaking." It remains only to analyze why Russia has decided to precipitate this crisis. Undoubtedly Moscow feels that it's dealing from a position of strength. Undoubtedly counts on a weakening of Western morale when the showdown comes. The showdown, it appears, is now upon us and there are some grave moments ahead. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. 5/16/59 J.F.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Wednesday, June 10, 1959
7:45-8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Russia today formally served the West a new ultimatum to get out of Berlin in a year. The Western foreign ministers in Geneva promptly rejected the deadline -- and the tone behind it.

For the full story, we switch now to my colleague Dan Schorr in Geneva.

SCHORR: The reasons for the deep gloom that descended over the Western spokesmen at the Big Four conference last night are now known. At yesterday's secret session Gromyko of Russia submitted what amounted to an ultimatum and said he would put it on the record at the plenary session today. This he has now done. Gromyko has offered the West a one year extension of its occupation rights in Berlin, on s everal tough conditions. One is that Western forces to reduced to token strength In secret session he mentioned one platoon for each of the Western three powers. Another is that all propaganda and so-called subversive activities against East Germany and other Communist countries of West Berlin be halted. Another is that during this year a peace treaty be negotiated with a divided Germany and an all German Committee be formed as a forerunner of a confederation, If this proposal is not accepted, says Gromyko, then the Soviet Union will not be willing to confirm its consent to the continuation of the occupation regime in West Berlin. And, if the West does not negotiate a peace treaty, then a separate treaty will be signed with East Germany. The Western response to this has been prompt and unequivocal. At today's past three hour session, Secretary Hertrr said that the sum and tone of these conditions are improper for presentation in a serious negotiation between sovereign states. This, he said is the same sort of threat with a time limit that the Russians launched last November. "Must we conclude," Herter asks, "that this statement has been made to interrupt the negotiations." And he said, "We are unwilling to negotiate under that threat, and we hope therefore, that the Soviet government will reconsider its position. Another plenary session was set for Friday. Later American spokesman Andrew Berding spelled out more clearly what Herter had in mind. Said Berding, "The private negotiations have been interrupted. We are now more or less on a day-to-day basis. A great deal will depend on the plenary session on Friday. Our feeling," said Berding, "is that the next move is up to Gromyko." The Soviet spokesman, Deputy Foreign Minister Valerian Zorin denied that the Soviet proposal represents an ultimatum. "We have sumbitted our proposal to the Western Powers," he said, "and are ready to discuss them. Let them present their proposals." But, he added that if the Soviet plan is rejected Russia will not be willing to continue the present occupation arrangement with all the consequences that will emanate from that fact. Those consequences are clear. The threat of Soviet interference with Western access to Berlin. The crisis is now complete. The issue is joined. Gromyko has presented a proposal which the West refuses to discuss. Russia refuses to withdraw its proposal. This is as Western delegates here tonight, a Soviet attempt to force a breakdown in the conference, but lay the blame on the West. There are few tonight who will offer any bets that this conference will last longer than another several days. The only hope is that Gromyko at the last moment will withdraw his proposal and that hope is not very strong. The disappointment to the top Western delegates is great. They had not banked very heavily on substantial results from this conference. They had hoped at least for a stop-gap arrangment that would safeguard their rights in Berlin and open the way to a summit meeting. But, it now appears likely that if this conference ends in failure the Soviets will soon begin applying pressure against our exposed position in West Berlin. There is not much more for the West to offer. Another foreign ministers meeting or a meeting of the ministers deputies. It is not likely the Russians would accept that. It is not likely another meeting would accomplish much anyway. There is bitter disappointment among those, such as Selwyn Lloyd of Britain, who had hoped that the threat could be staved off by keeping the Soviets engaged in negotiation. Tonight Lloyd is left with no room for maneuver. Backing up Herter at today's session he said, "Mr. Gromyko's stake smacks of a take it or leave it attitude. If this is meant as a dictat then Mr. Gromyko mistakes the character of the people to whom he is speaking."

It remains only to analyze why Russia has decided to precipitate this crisis. Undoubtedly Moscow feels that it's dealing from a position of strength. Undoubtedly counts on a weakening of Western morale when the showdown comes. The showdown, it appears, is now upon us and there are some grave moments ahead.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

That was Dan Schorr, reporting from Geneva.

The Russian action left Western diplomats disappointed and gloomy. But Premier Khruschev says the soviet proposal for a peace treaty with Germany and the ending of the occupation regime in West Berlin -- indicated "the right road" to follow. The Soviet news agency Tass says Khruschev made the comment in Riga, Soviet Latvia -- where he is visiting. He spoke at a meeting there about the "growing friendship" between the peoples of the Soviet Union and East Germany.

The three-power nuclear test suspension conference met for the 92nd time in Geneva today. And delegates from the United States, Britain and Russia all reported some progress toward setting up a scientific study of ways to control high altitude explosions.

The 14-nation Atlantic congress wound up six days of discussions in London today --with a final declaration calling for expansion of NATO's political and economic role in the cold war. The declaration called -- among other points -- for increasing European military forces to minimum NATO strength as soon as possible ....and prohibiting national governments from taking major decisions affecting NATO without previous consultation ... France's bid for a full partnership with the United States and Britain in the business of running NATO's nuclear defenses brought on such hot debate yesterday -- the French delegate warned the issue might even lead to French withdrawal from NATO.

The United States said today it is making "every effort" to work out an agreement with France and Britain on the demands of President Charles de Gaulle to share custody of NATO nuclear weapons. (Any agreement with France involving control of weapon stockpiles would require a change in United States law). State Department news officer Lincoln White says tri-partite talks are in progress in Washington -- to work out a mutual agreement on De Gaulle's demands. In Paris, it is reported the bulk of NATO's atomic fighter-bomber force will be moved soon from France to Britain, unless De Gaulle drops his request.

In Bonn, Chancellor Konrad Adenauer today won a decisive round in his battle with economics minister Ludwig Erhard -- to remain uncontested head of the West German government. At a 40-minute private meeting of the Christian democratic party parliamentary group -- the two men made up their quarrel and Erhard accepted a vote of confidence. Both the 83-year-old Adenauer and the party apologized to Erhard for statements that were "apt to damage his esteem" in the struggle over West German leadership. Erhard -- the chief architect of West Germany's post-war economic recovery -- had been the Christian democratic party's choice---but not Adenauer's --- to succeed as chancellor when Adenauer decided to run for president. But then Adenauer changed his mind about moving on to the largely ceremonial job of president. And Erhard publicly challenged his decision to remain on as chancellor. The two men had two inconclusive meetings earlier in the day. After the party caucus -- and the apology from all Erhard agreed to stay in Adenauers cabinet as economics minister. Erhard said he was satisfied -- but newsmen said he didn't look it. The open fight between the two men apparently was settled -- but the hard feelings clearly lingered on. Erhard mumbled his "satisfaction" and posed for handshakes. But when he spoke during the party session, he said he had been deeply insulted by recent events.

Adenauer's unusual apology apparently placed Erhard on the road to the Chancellorship at some future date -- perhaps even before 1961 -- the time for the next general elections.

In Washington, the government today reported one million more Americans found jobs in May. The increase makes a total of 66-million-16-thousand employed -- a record for the month. The report also shows the number of idle workers dropped by 238-thousand, which makes a total of three-million-390-thousand still unemployed.

President Eisenhower was described as "pleased" by the May improvement in the employment situation. But the White House said he was still "concerned" about the continued existence of un-employment.

The Senate foreign relations committee rebuffed the president today -- by voting to put the foreign aid program's development loan fund on a long-term financial basis. The committee approved -- 11 to 4 -- chairman Fulbright's proposal. It calls for the treasury to finance the fund from regular government revenues. The treasury would put up one billion dollars a year for five years.

A federal appeals court ruled today that Teamsters union president James Hoffa and his union -- must obey reforms recommended by court-appointed monitors. The teamsters had sought to over-turn the broad anti-corruption program laid down by the monitors, and approved by Federal Judge F. Dickinson Letts.

In Tallahassee, Florida -- an all-male, all-white jury was picked tonight to try four white young men charged with the criminal assault of a 19-year-old negro coed.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: It now appears that West German Chancellor Adenauer has avoided a split within his own party, and the Old Man will serve out his term as Chancellor. The maneuvering in Bonn unlerlines the wisdom of C.C. Colton who said; "He that aspires to be the head of a party will find it more difficult to please his friends than to perplex his foes."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thursday, June 11, 1959

This is the news:

The Western Foreign ministers today put the Geneva Big Four talks on a day-to-day basis. And secretary of State Christian Herter told Soviet Foreign minister Andrei Gromyko that his plane is ready to leave for Washington on four hours' notice --- if the Russians refuse to negotiate "reasonably."

At his own request, Herter had a two-hour private meeting with Gromyko -- in an effort to save the month-old conference from collapse. They met at the Russian's villa. United States officials said it was a tense meeting. Herter told Gromyko that Russia's new ultimatum of yesterday -- that the west must get out of Berlin in a year or "face the consequences"-- had seriously damaged hopes for an East-West cold war settlement.

After their meeting, Herter and the other foreign ministers decided to go ahead with the Geneva conference on a day-to-day basis -- to give the Soviet union a chance to drop its one-year deadline for ending the occupation of West Berlin. A joint communique issued by the United States, Britain, France and West Germany said: "It was made clear to Mr. Gromyko by Secretary Herter that the talks in the next few days would determine the outcome of the conference." American officials said the session was designed to convince the Russians that Herter meant business when he said yesterday the United States never will negotiate under "deadlines, duress or threats."

Western officials declined to disclose Gromyko's reaction to his meeting with Herter. CBS news correspondent Daniel Schorr cables from Geneva that SOVIET sources are saying that Gromyko assured Herter his Berlin proposal was not meant as a threat or ultimatum -- and that Herter expressed himself as pleased with this statement. Schorr says American sources told him the first part was true -- but that Herter would be pleased with Gromyko's denial of the ultimatum -- if it were true. Soviet sources also are saying Gromyko and Herter discussed a summit conference -- which Herter said would depend on the success of THIS conference.

Correspondent Schorr says the soviet sources also say Herter and Gromyko are planning further talks Saturday and Sunday -- but this he has not been able to verify.

Communist sources also say Gromyko is planning a week-end visit to Moscow for an urgent meeting with Soviet premier Khruschev.

Khruschev -- now visiting the Latvian capital of Riga -- stood firm on the new soviet proposals on Berlin. He said today the West is pursuing what he called a "power policy" ... and that Gromyko's proposals "would lower tension in Europe and liquidate forever the remnants of World war Two."

Khruschev said West German Chancellor Konrad Adenauer is "the present inspirer of the unwise policy of positions of strength."

Adenauer was having his own troubles in Bonn. The patched-up truce between Adenauer and Economics minister Ludwig Erhard wavered a bit after a day of angry debate in parliament. Opposition parties bitterly attacked Adenauer -- and criticized the Christian Democratic party for accepting his decision to remain chancellor. In a 20-minute speech, Adenauer said he has proved he STANDS on the principles of democracy. He said the "whole situation in the world" demanded that he change his mind not to run for president, and to stay on as chancellor.

Britain's home secretary said today, atom spy Klaus Fuchs will be released from prison late this month -- and can go to the Communist East if he wishes. Fuchs is the german-born scientist jailed in 1950 for betraying western atomic secrets to the Russians.

President Eisenhower asked Congress today to approve a limited sharing of nuclear secrets with the government of Greece. He submitted an agreement between the United States and Greek governments -- designed to strengthen the North Atlantic Treaty nations.

The United States today formally questioned the Cuban government on the way Premier Fidel Castro's land reform program is being carried out. The main point is concern that the land reform might take property away from Americans -- without adequate compensation. Castro has called land reform "more important than the revolution itself." It means the breaking up of estates and corporation-controlled farms for redistribution to farmers. And it has been attacked both within Cuba -- and outside.

~~In Washington, the Federal Civil rights commission announced today it will hold public hearings in Shreveport, Louisiana next month -- to investigate charges that negroes were barred from voting in northwest Louisiana. Louisiana officials had refused to allow Civil Rights~~

Edward R. Murrow: June 11, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The right of Americans to travel abroad is in the news again. The case involves reporter William Worthy, Jr.,. In 1956 he went to Communist China and to Hungary, countries for which his passport was not valid. When he came home the State Department lifted his passport, but offered him another if he would agree to accept the restrictions. Worthy refused, and went to court to plead his right as a newsman to go where he pleases.

A three-judge United States Court of Appeals has upheld the State Department's action - has in effect said that the Secretary of State, acting on behalf of the President, can at his discretion deny American citizens the right to travel to specific areas. The court said: "In foreign affairs, especially in the intimate posture of today's world of Jets, radio and atomic power, an individual's yen to go and to enquire may be circumscribed." And it want on to say: "A blustering inquisitor, avowing his own freedom to go and do as he pleases, can throw the whole international neighborhood into turmoil."

This curious doctrine may come as a surprise to foreign correspondents who have worked for many years under dictatorships without either blustering or creating turmoil.

The court held that the Constitution gives the President the authority to evaluate the military and political exigencies in foreign countries. The courts are the least able of all organs of government to make such evaluation, and they are wholly without authority to make them. "Judgement of what course of action will promote our foreign relations has been entrusted to the President, not to the courts, journalists, scholars, or even public opinion." So the court ruled against Mr. Worthy.

It will now be for the Supreme Court to decide whether this is the last word on the rights of unrestricted travel, for the case has been appealed. It is a simple issue. The Supreme Court has already ruled that the State Department cannot deny a citizen a passport because of his political affiliations or associations. This question is not raised in the Worthy case. The question at issue is whether the Secretary of State may say to a reporter or any other citizen: "You may not visit the following countries..."

The State Department has revised its policy about American reporters going to Communist China. The Department has agreed to give passports for Red China to representatives of a number of periodicals and agencies normally dealing with foreign news. The number has now risen to forty-four. But the Chinese are insisting on reciprocity -- that an equal number of Chinese correspondents be permitted to enter this country. The presence of these reporters in China would be no more a peril to peace, nor more of a cause of turmoil than the presence of Mr. Worthy. And the President would be just as incapable of guaranteeing their safety. So what Mr. Worthy strove for has been going on even if he goes on losing. But the principles involved in this case have not been satisfied by the revised rules for newsmen in Communist China. The State Department is still saying "No" to everybody else who wants a passport to go to the forbidden areas.

It is clear that if the present ruling stands -- if it is not reversed by the Supreme Court -- then this Administration may continue to ban travel to certain areas of the world. This would mean that it would also be possible for any future Administration to ban travel to any other part of the world. It would, for example, be possible for a future Secretary of State - whatever his reasons, or for no reason -- to ban travel to Latin America, or to Italy, or to the Middle East. He could, in fact, prevent all of us from leaving the territory of the United States. What the Court of Appeals has said is that the President, through the Secretary of State, has the power to forbid travel abroad. That is the Court's interpretation of the Constitution. That is the law, says the Court, and we can't do anything to prevent it.

It seems to this reporter that more is involved in this case than just Mr. Worthy's right to go where he pleases. His ability as a reporter is not in question. Whether he is a "blustering inquisitor" or a mild, scholarly man, has no bearing. What is most at stake is the public's right to know, not only in China but everywhere, any place at any time. A close reading of the Court's ruling does not reveal any mention or recognition of this right. It is perhaps fantasy to suggest that at some future time some future Secretary of State could lock us all up in this country, could deny the right of exit, but under this ruling it could happen.

Back in a moment—

George Bryan—

WORD FOR THE DAY. June 11, 1959.

G. K. Chesterton once said: "I sometimes think it is a pity that people travel in foreign countries - it narrows their minds so much". But Samuel Johnson was nearer the mark when he said: "The use of travelling is to regulate imagination by reality, and instead of thinking how things may be, to see them as they are."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

Edward R. Murrow Friday, June 12, 1959

This is the news:

The Big Four foreign ministers met in formal session in Geneva for more than three hours today. They were ... trying to break out of a major crisis over Russia's proposal of a one-year deadline for western withdrawal from West Berlin. The Western ministers have lebeled the Soviet plan as totally unacceptable ... as an ultimatum ... and as a move to wreck the Geneva conference. Soviet foreign minister Andrei Gromyko said today his proposal was not an ultimatum. But he stood firmly behind his plan as a basis for further negotiations. And he insisted that a summit conference should be held ... even if the foreign ministers fail to make any progress.

One American official said it appeared "Gromyko was saying the requiem for this conference."

We will bring you a full report on Geneva from my colleague Dan Schorr in a few moments.

In Bonn, Germany -- Economics minister Ludwig Erhard got up before the parliament today and said he was interested in "cleaning up the past." He said Chancellor Konrad Adenauer DID say on May 14th at a cabinet meeting -- that his resolve to run for West German president was slipping away. But in truth, Erhard added, he did not know before he left for New York on June First -- that Adenauer had decided to remain in office as chancellor -- and not run for president as he had announced on April 7th. (Erhard has been widely regarded as the logical heir to the powerful position of chancellor.) Yesterday Adenauer told the parliament that when Erhard left for the United States -- he knew Adenauer was just about ready to renounce his candidacy for the figurehead position of ~~chancellor~~ President. Today Erhard said : "I am not looking backward -- but forward." And a spokesman for him said later that he considered the matter now closed.

In Washington, Defense secretary Neil McElroy today unveiled a new air defense plan. It calls for a five year, one and a half-billion dollar cutback in continental defense against manned bombers ... and heavy new emphasis on protection against enemy missiles. The new master plan proposes stepped-up spending on the army's Nike-zeus project. The nike-zeus, still years away from perfection -- is intended to intercept oncoming intercontinental ballistic missiles.

The new plan would mean less money for the army's nike hercules, and the air force bomarc. These are missiles capable of downing bombers, but too slow to cope with 18-thousand mile an hour ballistic missiles... and involved in the current army-air force feud. ..... Chairman Richard Russell of the senate armed services committee -- endorsed the new plan. He called the nike-zeus .. (an anti-missile missile) .. the "hope for the Future" in defending against enemy rockets. And he said development of the weapon could run into "billions" in defense spending in years to come. ... But another democrat on the committee -- former air force secretary Stuwart Symington -- blasted the new defense plan. He said ~~the "so-called revised combined air defense program is~~ the plan is at best only a compromise effort to satisfy each of the quarreling services." and he said it is certain to waste billions of dollars.

A White house panel of scientific experts called today for a new series of underground atomic and conventional explosions as soon as possible -- to help set up a fool-proof nuclear test detection system. The experts reported that it would be comparatively easy for any nation to cheat on a test detection system set up now. The 14-man panel said a vigorous research program is needed to resolve the present uncertainties in distinguishing an underground atomic explosion -- from an earthquake.

United States ambassador James Wadsworth introduced the report to the three-power nuclear conference in Geneva. And the United States insisted that the conference make a complete analysis of underground explosions, to prevent cheating on an atomic test ban.

In the deadlocked steel contract talks -- the 12 major steel companies today refused to engage in separate bargaining talks with the United Steel workers union. [redacted] The union's 171-man international wage policy committee met in New York and ... after the company refusal ... authorized union officers to "take whatever steps they deem necessary to cope with the present situation." The current contract covering half a million steel-workers -- expires June 30th.

Federal mediation chief Joseph Finnegan said he would confer later this month with the two top representatives of the union and industry. There is no indication now when the negotiations might be resumed.

The House brushed aside administration protests today -- and passed a bill to increase price supports and curb costly wheat surpluses. The vote was 188 to 177. The senate had passed a different bill. A committee now will work on a compromise measure.

Now here is Dan School Report from Geneva -

Back in a moment -
George Bunyan -

WORD FOR THE DAY June 12, 1959.

Traditionally the Russians are tough, patient, bitter bargainers. The Roman Emperor, Marcus Aurelius, pretty well described the situation in Geneva today when he wrote: "All things are the same - familiar in enterprise, momentary in endurance, coarse in substance. All things now are as they were in the day of those whom we have buried."

Goodnight and Good Luck!

CBS RADIO NEWWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW

Friday, June 12, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: And now, here is Dan Schorr's report from Geneva.

SCHORR: At the end of its fifth week the foreign ministers conference is still afloat but foundering badly. Today some emergency repairs were made to the leaky hull which may keep it above water for another few days. At today's plenary session Secretary Herter asked Gromyko of Russia to repeat for the record what he had told him privately yesterday, that his tough proposal on Berlin was not meant as an ultimatum. Gromyko somewhat beligerantly complied. He said the Soviet plan was not an ultimatum, a threat or a dictot, and he hoped he wouldn't hear such terms used any more. Gromyko did not however, withdraw the proposal itself which has a built-in ultimatum. It offers a stay of execution of Western occupation rights for one year or perhaps gradual extension is a better way of putting it. If the proposal is not accepted Russia refuses to recognize Western rights which means swift execution. The Western ministers noted Gromyko's assurance that he intended no ultimatum. On the strength of this they scheduled another private meeting with Gromyko on Monday. What happens after that is still obscure. The British, anxious to push on with these talks hoping against hope for some outcome before Parliament adjourns in a few weeks, are inclined to take Gromyko's assurances at face value and go on negotiating. The Americans, the West Germans, and the French are inclined to press for withdrawal of the Soviet proposal and if Gromyko refuses to say there is little point in continuing this conference. Sometime early next week if Gromyko sticks to his guns, the Western ministers will have the problem of harmonizing their views. It is not likely if Gromyko still is stubborn that Britain's Selwyn Lloyd will prevail against his collegues. The technique then probably will be to propose a recess of about a month in the conference with the ministers' deputies perhaps meeting in between. But, this would probably not be acceptable to the Russians who say they want to go upward not downward from here, that is, they want a summit conference next. In fact, it seemed today to the American deligates, that Gromyko was already sounding the requiem for the foreign ministers conference and pointing toward the summit. Yesterday in a private talk between Herter and Gromyko the summit problem came up for the first time since Herter in his opening speech a month ago laid down the criteria for American assent to a top level meeting. Herter warned Gromyko that President Eisenhower would not go unless there was progress at this meeting at least on Berlin. Gromyko objected to setting such conditions. Today in the plenary session Gromyko expanded on that point. He said, "A summit meeting cannot be approached from the viewpoint of a bargain or a deal." He said any link between the results of a foreign ministers conference and a heads of government meeting is unjustified. And any government that places obstacles on the road to the summit, Gromyko warned, would be accepting grave responsibilities. For reasons unknown no Western minister chose to reply to Gromyko on this point today. Less officially American sources said tonight that the American position on the summit meeting had not changed. And, as of now, none of the American criteria for such a meeting has been met. Those criteria are positive agreement over as wide a field as possible and narrowing of differences between viewpoints and preparation of constructive proposals for the heads of government. It appears likely that a good part of the closing days of this conference will be devoted to a debate about the summit. The Soviets take the position that the West, having had the foreign ministers conference it asked for and regardless of the meager results which Khrushchev in fact forecast, that the West is now committedto go to the summit. The West with varying degrees of emphasis thinks otherwise and will argue otherwise.

But, when this conference collapses as it now seems almost certain it will, the West will have to reasses its position on the a summit or, at least, so the Soviets seem to be sure. At that point the only way to stave off the Soviet threat to close in on Berlin would be to give in to Soviet pressure for a top level parley that would not end the Berlin threat. It would at that point appear as the only way of buying a little more time. The Soviets are playing their cards here with cool precision. They have in the past few days played a somewhat tougher hand that was expected six weeks ago when the Communist foreign ministers met in Warsaw to plan their tactics. At that time it seemed the Russians would go through the motions of arguing here in Geneva, but avoiding any breakdown that would jeopardize a summit meeting. If their attitude has stiffened, it is partly because the Western position under German pressure has also stiffened, making impossible a tacit understanding to just let things be until the summit. The West has demanded confirmation if its position in Berlin, not just until a summit but until German unification. This is not the moderate price the Russians expected to pay. And in Adenauer's decision to stay in the driver's seat in Bonn the Russians see no early prospects of a softening of West Germany's attitude. So apparently they have decided to risk a breakdown of the foreign ministers conference and count on their ability to get a summit conference anyway. Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. 6/10/59 J.F.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 12, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Big Four foreign ministers met in formal session in Geneva for more than three hours today. They were trying to break out of a major crisis over Russia's proposal of a one-year deadline for western withdrawal from West Berlin. The Western ministers have labeled the Soviet plan as totally unacceptable...as an ultimatum...and as a move to wreck the Geneva conference. Soviet foreign minister Andrei Gromyko said today his proposal was not an ultimatum. But he stood firmly behind his plan as a basis for further negotiations. And he insisted that a summit conference should be held...even if the foreign ministers fail to make any progress.

One American official said it appeared "Gromyko was saying the requiem for this conference."

We will bring you a full report on Geneva from my colleague Dan Schorr in a few moments.

In Bonn, Germany --- Economics minister Ludwig Erhard got up before the parliament today and said he was interested in "cleaning up the past." He said Chancellor Konrad Adenauer did say on May 14 at a cabinet meeting -- that his resolve to run for West German president was slipping away. But in truth, Erhard added, he did not know before he left for New York on June first --- that Adenauer had decided to remain in office as chancellor -- and not run for President as he had announced on April 7th. Erhard has been widely regarded as the logical heir to the powerful position of chancellor. Yesterday Adenauer told the parliament that when Erhard left for the United States --- he knew Adenauer was just about ready to renounce his candidacy for the figurehead position of President. Today Erhard said: "I am not looking backward --- but forward." And a spokesman for him said later that he considered the matter now closed.

In Washington, Defense secretary Neil McElroy today unveiled a new air defense plan. It calls for a five year, one and a half-billion dollar cutback in continental defense against manned bombers...and heavy new emphasis on protection against enemy missiles. The new master plan proposes stepped-up spending on the army's Nike-Zeus project. The nike-zeus...still years away from perfection --- is intended to intercept oncoming intercontinental ballistic missiles. The new plan would mean less money for the army's nike hercules, and the air force bomarc. These are missiles capable of downing bombers, but too slow to cope with 18-thousand mile an hour ballistic missiles... and involved in the current army-air force feud...Chairman Richard Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee---endorsed the new plan. He called the nike-zeus... (an anti-missile missile)...the "hope for the future" in defending against enemy rockets. And he said development of the weapon could run into "billions" in defense spending in years to come. But another democrat on the committee--- former air force secretary Stuart Symington...blasted the new defense plan. He said at best the plan is 'only a compromise effort to satisfy each of the quarreling services." And he said it is certain to waste billions of dollars.

A White House panel of scientific experts called today for a new series of underground atomic and conventional explosions as soon as possible --- to help set up a fool-proof nuclear test detection system. The experts reported that it would be comparatively easy for any nation to cheat on a test detection system set up now. The 14-man panel said a vigorous research program is needed to resolve the present uncertainties in distinguishing an underground atomic explosion---from an earthquake.

United States ambassador James Wadsworth introduced the report to the three-power nuclear conference in Geneva. And the United States insisted that the conference make a complete analysis of underground explosions, to prevent cheating on an atomic test ban.

In the deadlocked steel contract talks---the twelve major steel companies today refused to engage in separate bargaining talks with the United Steel workers union. The union's 171-man international wage policy committee met in New York and...after the company refusal...authorized union officers to "take whatever steps they deem necessary to cope with the present situation."

Now here is Dan Schorr reporting from Geneva.

SCHORR: At the end of its fifth week the foreign ministers conference is still afloat but foundering badly. Today some emergency repairs were made to the leaky hull which may keep it above water for another few days. At today's plenary session Secretary Herter asked Gromyko of Russia to repeat for the record what he had told him privately yesterday, that his tough proposal on Berlin was not meant as an ultimatum. Gromyko somewhat beligerantly complied. He said the Soviet plan was not an ultimatum, a threat or a dictat, and he hoped he wouldn't hear such terms used any more. Gromyko did not however, withdraw the proposal itself which has a built-in ultimatum. It offers a stay of execution of Western occupation rights for one year or perhaps gradual extension is a better way of putting it. If the proposal is not accepted Russia refuses to recognize Western rights which means swift execution. The Western ministers noted Gromyko's assurance that he intended no ultimatum. On the strength of this they scheduled another private meeting with Gromyko on Monday. What happens after that is still obscure. The British, anxious to push on with these talks hoping against hope for some outcome before Parliament adjourns in a few weeks, are inclined to take Gromyko's assurances at face value and go on negotiating. The Americans, the West Germans, and the French are inclined to press for withdrawal of the Soviet proposal and if Gromyko refuses to say there is little point in continuing this conference. Sometime early next week if Gromyko sticks to his guns, the Western ministers will have the problem of harmonizing their views. It is not likely if Gromyko still is stubborn that Britain's Selwyn Lloyd will prevail against his colleagues. The technique then probably will be to propose a recess of about a month in the conference with the ministers' deputies perhaps meeting in between. But, this would probably not be acceptable to the Russians who say they want to go upward not downward from here, that is, they want a summit conference next. In fact, it seemed today to the American delegates, that Gromyko was already sounding the requiem for the foreign ministers conference and pointing toward the summit. Yesterday in a private talk between Herter and Gromyko the summit problem came up for the first time since Herter in his opening speech a month ago laid down the criteria for American assent to a top level meeting. Herter warned Gromyko that President Eisenhower would not go unless there was progress at this meeting at least on Berlin. Gromyko objected to settling such conditions. Today in the plenary session Gromyko expanded on that point. He said, "A summit meeting cannot be approached from the viewpoint of a bargain or a deal." He said any link between the results of a foreign ministers conference and a heads of government meeting is unjustified. And any government that places obstacles on the road to the summit, Gromyko warned, would be accepting grave responsibilities. For reasons unknown no Western minister chose to reply to Gromyko on this point today. Less officially American sources said tonight that the American position on the summit meeting had not changed. And, as of now, none of the American criteria for such a meeting has been met. Those criteria are positive agreement over as wide a field as possible and narrowing of differences between viewpoints and preparation of constructive proposals for the heads of government. It appears likely that a good part of the closing days of this conference will be devoted to a debate about the summit. The Soviets take the position that the West, having had the foreign ministers conference it asked for and regardless of the meager results which Khrushchev in fact forecast, that the West is now committeed to go to the summit. The West with varying degrees of emphasis thinks otherwise and will argue otherwise.

But, when this conference collapses as it now seems almost certain it will, the West will have to reassess its position on a summit or, at least, so the Soviets seem to be sure. At that point the only way to stave off the Soviet threat to close in on Berlin would be to give in to Soviet pressure for a top level parley that would not end the Berlin threat. It would at that point appear as the only way of buying a little more time. The Soviets are playing their cards here with cool precision. They have in the past few days played a somewhat tougher hand than was expected six weeks ago when the Communist foreign ministers met in Warsaw to plan their tactics. At that time it seemed the Russians would go through the motions of arguing here in Geneva, but avoiding any breakdown that would jeopardize a summit meeting. If their attitude has stiffened, it is partly because the Western position under German pressure has also stiffened, making impossible a tacit understanding to just let things be until the summit. The West has demanded confirmation of its position in Berlin, not just until a summit but until German unification. This is not the moderate price the Russians expected to pay. And in Adenauer's decision to stay in the driver's seat in Bonn the Russians see no early prospects of a softening of West Germany's attitude. So apparently they have decided to risk a breakdown of the foreign ministers conference and count on their ability to bet a summit conference anyway.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Traditionally the Russians are tough, patient, bitter bargainers. The Roman Emperor, Marcus Aurelius, pretty well described the situation in Geneva today when he wrote: "All things are the same - familiar in enterprise, momentary in endurance, coarse in substance. All things now are as they were in the day of those whom we have buried."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Monday June 15, 1959

This is the News:

The Big Four foreign ministers met for two and a half hours in private session in Geneva today ... then recessed until Wednesday -- still deadlocked. United states delegation spokesman Andrew Berding said the talks -- centered on an interim settlement for Berlin -- were inconclusive and no progress was made. But he said there was no talk of a long recess or adjournment of the conference. ... French sources described the situation as a total impasse. They said the time between now and the next meeting would allow reflection on how the conference should be wound up.

Soviet foreign minister Andrei Gromyko stalked grim-faced out of today's crucial session. Western spokesmen said his unyielding attitude at the meeting -- gave no encouragement whatever that the soviets would back off on their demand for a one-year deadline for allied occupation of west berlin.

12

(follow Geneva, which is lead to come)

Important progress WAS made today at the [redacted] Nuclear test suspension conference in Geneva. The Russians accepted an American proposal to join a three-power scientific study of the problem of detecting high altitude nuclear explosions. Russian experts will join Western scientists in Geneva on June 22nd -- to study instruments and methods of detecting [redacted] atomic explosions at altitudes ranging from eighteen to thirty miles. The group will report back to the full conference in a week.

(19)

In Washington, congress today passed and sent to President Eisenhower a 230-million dollar authorization bill for atomic energy construction. The bill is about fifty-one million dollars beyond the president's budget figure ... but he is expected to sign it.

(23)

One atomic energy [redacted] official -- Ulysses Staebler of the commission's reactor development [redacted] division -- said today the government is considering construction of a plant for converting sea water into fresh water with nuclear heat. He said a design decision may be made this month.

9:65 13 4
5:10 52 2
4:35

(59)

15

Leaders of West Germany's ruling Christian Democratic party today chose agriculture minister Heinrich Luebke as their new presidential candidate. Fifty-seven party leaders unanimously chose the 64-year-old LUEBKE at a five-hour meeting called by Chancellor Konrad Adenauer. He will oppose socialist Carlo Schmid -- considered by some a strong candidate -- and Free democrat Max Becker on July first. Luebke -- scarcely known outside farming circles -- was announced as a mediator who would fill the ceremonial post of federal president "with great dignity." ... ~~Showed firmly into the background at the today's meeting was the domestic and foreign furor caused by Adenauer's decision on June fourth -- to step out of the presidential race and stay as chancellor.~~

32

24

The back-swell from the quarrel between economics minister Ludwig Erhard and Adenauer when Adenauer reversed his decision to run for the presidency -- was still so strong today that Luebke asked for formal assurance of future support from both the party and Adenauer before he accepted the nomination.

36

27

French labor unions have called off a threatened railroad strike set for tomorrow. President Charles De Gaulle's government said it would draft the railroad men into the army for fear the scheduled strike would produce transport chaos, and set off a general strike movement. The French transport minister has promised the rail workers to discuss increased bonuses.

32

~~In Italy, bank clerks today joined the striking seamen's unions. The seamen's walk-out has tied up more than forty ships with about ten thousand passengers all over the world. The seamen want higher pay.~~

In India, the government has moved its armed forces into the communist-ruled state of Kerala -- after five more persons were killed today. The five were killed -- and at least 20 injured -- when police opened fire into a crowd picketing a government-run school. Ten persons have been killed in clashes between police and anti-reds in the Indian state in the last three days. Kerala is the only state in the world with a freely-elected communist government. The clashes began when opposition parties launched their campaign to oust the communist regime.

40

Dominican exiles in Havana say an armed uprising has begun against the government of General Rafael Trujillo. They say a radio broadcast -- from exiles violently hostile to Trujillo -- reports that a rebel force ambushed a truckload of soldiers. The exiles gave no indication of the size of the uprising. Reports from the Dominican capital said there was no information available about an uprising.

President Eisenhower is considering making some speeches outside Washington -- to rally the nation behind his labor, foreign aid and other major legislative proposals. Republican national chairman Thruston Morton told newsmen of the proposed speeches after a white house conference with the president this morning. ..... ~~Report of the talks brought hot criticism from senate democratic leader Lyndon Johnson. He said: "It is strange the president doesn't wait for congress to get through its work before using the republican national committee to pass judgment on its accomplishments."~~

Just today the House began debate on president Eisenhower's multi-billion dollar foreign aid bill. Chairman Thomas Morgan of the house foreign affairs committee -- urged his colleagues to be "hardboiled and realistic." But he said further cuts in the administration bill could lead to defeat in the cold war.

Earlier, the house passed and sent to the senate a veterans' pension reform bill. The vote was 226 to 34. The measure would set up a sliding scale of payments based on veterans' outside income -- rather than the present flat-rate payments. 53

In the senate, majority leader Lundon Johnson said today that if necessary, he will keep the senate in overtime sessions this week -- to vote on the confirmation of commerce secretary Lewis Strauss and other priority business. 56

70

65

9:65
5:30
4:35

13
52
7
59

WORD FOR THE DAY June 15, 1959.

one said

Woodrow Wilson: "Nobody can guarantee the world against the ugly passions that sometimes get abroad. But if the nations of the world will in deed and truth agree to put arbitration and discussion always first and war always last, I say that we have an immense insurance against war."

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 15, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Big Four foreign ministers met for two and a half hours in private session in Geneva today...then recessed until Wednesday -- still deadlocked. United States delegation spokesman, Andrew Berding said the talks --- centered on an interim settlement for Berlin -- were inconclusive and no progress was made. But he said there was no talk of a long recess or adjournment of the conference... French sources described the situation as a total impasse. They said the time between now and the next meeting would allow reflection on how the conference should be wound up.

Soviet foreign minister Andrei Gromyko stalked grim-faced out of today's crucial session. Western spokesmen said his unyielding attitude at the meeting -- gave no encouragement whatever that the Soviets would back off on their demand for a one-year deadline for allied occupation of West Berlin.

Important progress was made today at the Nuclear Test Suspension Conference in Geneva. The Russians accepted an American proposal to join a three-power scientific study of the problem of detecting high altitude nuclear explosions. Russian experts will join Western scientists in Geneva on June 22nd---to study instruments and methods of detecting atomic explosions at altitudes ranging from eighteen to thirty miles. The group will report back to the full conference in a week.

In Washington, Congress today passed and sent to President Eisenhower a 230-million dollar authorization bill for atomic energy construction. The bill is about fifty-one million dollars beyond the president's budget figure...but he is expected to sign it.

Oneatomic energy official---Ulysses Staebler of the Commission's reactor development division -- said today the government is considering construction of a plant for converting sea water into fresh water with nuclear heat. He said a design decision may be made this month.

Leaders of West Germany's ruling Christian Democratic Party today chose agriculture minister Heinrich Luebke as their new presidential candidate. Fifty-seven party leaders unanimously chose the 64-year old Luebke at a five-hour meeting called by Chancellor Konrad Adenauer. He will oppose socialist Carlo Schmid -- considered by some a strong candidate -- and Free Democrat Max Becker on July first. Luebke -- scarcely known outside farming circles-- was announced as a mediator who would fill the ceremonial post of federal president "with great dignity." The back-swell from the quarrel between economics minister Ludwig Erhard and Adenauer when Adenauer reversed his decision to run for the presidency - was still so strong today that Luebke asked for formal assurance of future support from both the party and Adenauer before he accepted the nomination.

French labor unions have called off a threatened railroad strike set for tomorrow. President Charles DeGaulle's government said it would draft the railroad men into the Army for fear the scheduled strike would produce transport chaos, and set off a general strike movement. The French transport minister has promised the rail workers to discuss increased bonuses.

In India, the government has moved its armed forces into the communist-ruled state of Kerala -- after five more persons were killed today. The five were killed, and at least 20 injured -- when police opened fire into a crowd picketing a government-run school. Ten persons have been killed in clashes between police and anti-reds in the Indian state in the last three days. Kerala is the only state in the world with a freely-elected communist government. The clashes began when opposition parties launched their campaign to oust the communist regime.

President Eisenhower is considering making some speeches outside Washington -- to rally the nation behind his labor, foreign aid and other major legislative proposals. Republican national chairman Thruston Morton told newsmen of the the proposed speeches after a White House conference with the president this morning.

Just today the House began debate on President Eisenhower's multi-billion dollar foreign aid bill. Chairman Thomas Morgan of the House Foreign Affairs Committee -- urged his colleagues to be "hardboiled and realistic." But he said further cuts in the administration bill could lead to defeat in the cold war.

Earlier, the House passed and sent to the Senate a vererans' pension reform bill. The vote was 226 to 34. The measure would set up a sliding scale of payments based on veterans' outside income -- rather than the present flat-rate payments.

In the Senate, majority leader Lyndon Johnson said today that if necessary, he will keep the Senate in overtime sessions this week - to vote on the confirmation of commerce secretary Lewis Strauss and other priority business.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Woodrow Wilson once said: "Nobody can guarantee tha world against the ugly passions that sometimes get abroad. But if the nations of the world will in deed and truth agree to put arbritration and discussion always first and war always last, I say that we have an immense insurance against war."

Goodnight and good luck.

DAN SCHORR: Geneva piece not transcribed.

to Edward R. Murrow

Pawling, New York
Tues., June 16, 1959

This is the news:

The defense department said today communist jet fighters attacked a United States navy patrol plane over the international waters of the Sea of Japan last night. One of the fourteen crewmen aboard was seriously wounded. The navy plane -- although riddled -- managed to fly seven hundred miles to safety to an air base on the southern Japanese island of Kysuhu. The Pentagon said at least two Russian-built Mig fighters were involved. They bore red star markings -- the communist insigne. The Russians, Red Chinese and communist north Koreans all use migs. The point of attack was over international waters about 85 miles east of Wonsan, North Korea. This is within jet fighter range of Red China and Russian terrritory. The defense department said the navy plane was on a Routine training patrol from its base on Japan. It has not been reported whether the American plane fired back. The red jets made six passes -- firing tracer bullets. The crew is still undergoing intensive questioning by naval intelligence officers.

16

16

x x x (intelligence officers.)

The state department in Washington termed the attack "vicious and unwarranted." It said the United States would protest as soon as the nationality of the attackers is learned. ... This is the first such incident in the Far East since last november. There have been 33 such incidents involving American and communist aircraft since 1950.

Assistant secretary of state Walter Robertson -- who has charge of Far Eastern Affairs -- said the attack was "deliberately timed to create tension" at a critical stage in the Geneva talks."

24

(pick-up geneva intro to Schorr).

For the day's developments in the Big Four foreign ~~ministerial~~ ministers' conference, we switch now to my colleague Dan Schorr in Geneva:

tape runs ~~[illegible]~~ approx: 2:11 ∞ end cue ... sent it off to Gromyko. Now back to ERM in New York.

(erm)

Assistant secretary of state Andrew Berding says the fate of the current Big Four talks will depend on the reception Gromyko gives to the Western plan tomorrow.

29

5

Steel wage negotiators met for more than two and a half hours in New York city today -- but failed to agree on how further talks should be conducted. The negotiators issued a joint statement in which they said they had not been able to solve a procedural dispute over whether their talks should continue on a joint basis ... or a company-by-company basis. But both sides indicated there would be further efforts to solve the problem and set up a firm schedule of meetings. ... They met as Democratic senator Stuart Symington of Missouri called on President Eisenhower to prevent a strike when the current steel contracts expire June 30th. Symington recalled that presidents roosevelt and Truman stepped in during other steel crises.
40

15

The House Ways and Means committee today approved President Eisenhower's request for a temporary increase in the national debt ceiling to 295 Billion dollars. But it refused to grant the full increase he wanted in the permanent ceiling. He had asked that the permanent legal limit to the national debt be increased to 288 billion dollars. The committee voted on 285 billion. ~~If the action is upheld by the House and Senate -- the administration would almost be forced to come back to Congress in the 1960 election year -- to ask for a further increase in the permanent limit.~~

21

The House Ways and Means committee also put aside for later consideration, President Eisenhower's request that interest rate limits be removed from individual savings bonds and long-term marketable bonds.

Rebpblican congressman Alvin Bentley of Michigan said today he may try to cut President Eisenhower's nearly four billion dollar foreign air request by up to six hundred million dollars. Bentley is a member of the House foreign affairs committee -- and a long-time critic of high foreign aid spending. ..... Yesterday the senate foreign relations committee voted to increase the [redacted] total to four-billion-165-million dollars. The House version -- which came up for debate today-- totals some three and a half billion dollars. Republican leaders said after a White House meeting this morning -- that President Eisenhower had warned national security would suffer -- if funds for over-seas military aid are cut.

35

47

Page 6

FCC-12

47

Gaby — on the a Story
FCC is Missing,
It runs 12 lines,
I think.
minor

WORD FOR TODAY June 16, 1959.

one said of compromise

1) Thomas Hughes: "He never wants anything but what's right and fair; only when you come to settle what's right and fair, it's everything that he wants and nothing that you want. And that's his idea of a compromise."

2) Edmund Burke: "All government - indeed, every human benefit and enjoyment, every virtue and every prudent act - is founded on compromise and barter."

3) Rudyard Kipling: "Man propounds negotiations, Man accepts the compromise. Very rarely will he squarely push the logic of a fact to its ultimate conclusion in unmitigated act."

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Tuesday, June 16, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: ... For the day's developments in the Big Four foreign ministers' conference, we switch now to my colleague, Dan Schorr in Geneva.

SCHORR: The West tonight delivered to Soviet delegation headquarters a paper for the attention of Foreign Minister Gromyko. It was the Western proposal on Berlin; the sum of what the Western ministers have been talking about in public and private sessions for the past three weeks. It states that Western troops, perhaps in somewhat reduced numbers, must remain in West Berlin. It said that propaganda activities should be controlled "if" the control applies to East as well as West Berlin. It says the West must have continued access to Berlin. It does not insist that the occupation regime be specifically reaffirmed, as long as it's understood that these rights do persist.

The contents of the proposal have already been rejected by Gromyko. This is for the record. For the people of the world to judge who has been more reasonable. If Gromyko officially rejects the Western proposal tomorrow, and continues to insist on his own, which we have rejected, then this conference is about over, at least for now. The West would then propose a recess, which the Soviets are unlikely to accept. The Western delegations know this and they're prepared to face the consequences.

For the first time tonight there's a sense of real unanimity in the Western camp. The British are no longer looking for ways out. They've given up their search for some patchwork limited agreement that would pass the buck to the (indistinct). And the astonishing thing is that the tightening of the Western position is due to Gromyko. At the crucial moment, an hour-and-a-half before the decisive meeting of the Western ministers, Gromyko paid a call on Secretary Herter. At the same time Communist sources launched rumors that Gromyko was proposing a last minute compromise, a standstill arrangement in Berlin, a summit meeting, then another foreign ministers session. It turned out to be no such thing. As Herter reported to this waiting colleagues, Gromyko said his mission was merely to inquire where we stand in the conference, and he indicated there was no change in the Soviet position. That about settled it as far as the Western ministers were concerned. They completed drafting their proposal, sent it off to Gromyko.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. - P. O.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 16, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Defense Department said today Communist jet fighters attacked a United States navy patrol plane over the international waters of the Sea of Japan last night. One of the fourteen crewmen aboard was seriously wounded. The navy plane, although riddled, managed to fly seven hundred miles to safety to an air base on the southern Japanese island of Kysuhu. The Pentagon said at least two Russian-built Mig fighters were involved. They bore red star markings, the Communist insigne. The Russians, Red Chinese and Communist North Korean all use Migs. The point of attack was over international waters about 85 miles east of Wonsan, North Korea. This is within jet fighter range of Red China and Russian territory. The Defense Department said the Navy plane was on a routine training patrol from its base on Japan. It has not been reported whether the American plane fired back. The red jets made six passes --- firing tracer bullets. The crew is still undergoing intensive questioning by naval intelligence officers.

The State Department in Washington termed the attack "vicious and unwarranted." It said the United States would protest as soon as the nationality of the attackers is learned. This is the first such incident in the Far East since last November. There have been 33 such incidents involving Amerccan and Communist aircraft since 1950.

Assistant Secretary of State Walter Robertson---who has charge of Far Eastern Affairs---said the attack was "deliberately timed to create tension" at a critical stage in the Geneva talks."

For the day's developments in the Big Four foreign ministers' conference, we switch now to my colleague, Dan Schorr in Geneva.

SCHORR: The West tonight delivered to Soviet delegation headquarters a paper for the attention of Foreign Minister Gromyko. It was the Western proposal on Berlin; the sum of what the Western ministers have been talking about in public and private sessions for the past three weeks. It states that Western troops, perhaps in somewhat reduced numbers, must remain in West Berlin. It said that propaganda activities should be controlled "if" the control applies to East as well as West Berlin. It says the West must have continued access to Berlin. It does not insist that the occupation regime be specifically reaffirmed, as long as it's understood that these rights do persist.

The contents of the proposal have already been rejected by Gromyko. This is for the record. For the people of the world to judge who has been more reasonable. If Gromyko officially rejects the Western proposal tomorrow, and continues to insist on his own, which we have rejected, then this conference is about over, at least for now. The West would then propose a recess, which the Soviets are unlikely to accept. The Western delegations know this and they're prepared to face the consequences.

For the first time tonight there's a sense of real unamity in the Western camp. The British are no longer looking for ways out. They've given up their search for some patchwork limited agreement that would pass the buck to (indistinct) And the astonishing thing is that the tightening of the Western position is due to Gromyko. At the crucial moment, an hour-and-a-half before the decisive meeting of the Western ministers, Gromyko paid a call on Secretary Herter. At the same time Communist sources launched rumors that Gromyko was proposing a last minute compromise, a standstill arrangment in Berlin, a summit meeting, then another foreign ministers session. It turned out to be no such thing. As Herter reported to this waiting colleagues, Gromyko said his mission was merely to inquire where we stand in the conference, and he indicated there was no change in the Soviet position. That about settled it as far as the Western ministers were concerned. They completed drafting their proposal, sent it off to Gromyko.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Assistant Secretary of State Andrew Berding says the fate of the current Big Four talks will depend on the reception Gromyko gives to the Western plan tomorrow.

Steel wage negotiators met for more than two and a half hours in New York City today -- but failed to agree on how further talks should be conducted. The negotiators issued a joint statement in which they said they had not been able to solve a procedural dispute over whether their talks should continue on a joint basis...or a company-by-company basis. But both sides indicated there would be further efforts to solve the problem and set up a firm schedule of meetings. They met as Democratic Senator Stuart Sumington of Missouri called on President Eisenhower to prevent a strike when the current steel contracts expire June 30th. Symington recalled that presidents Roosevelt and Truman stepped in during other steel crises.

The House Ways and Means Committee today approved President Eisenhower's request for a temporary increase in the national debt ceiling to 295 billion dollars. But it refused to grant the full increase he wanted in the permanent ceiling. He had asked that the permanent legal limit to the national debt be increased to 288 billion dollars. The committee voted on 285 billion. The House Ways and Means Committee also put aside for later consideration, President Eisenhower's request that interest rate limits be removed from individual savings bonds and long-term marketable bonds.

Republican Congressman Alvin Bentley of Michigan said today he may try to cut President Eisenhower's nearly four billion dollar foreign aid request by up to six hundred million dollars. Bentley is a member of the House foreign affairs committee---and a long time critic of high foreign aid spending. Yesterday the Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted to increase the total to four-billion, 165-million dollars. The House version -- which came up for debate today, totals some three and a half billion dollars. Republican leaders said after a White House meeting this morning -- that President Eisenhower had warned national security would suffer -- if funds for over-seas military aid are cut.

The Federal Communications Commission has refused to reverse its ruling that equal time on newscasts be given to all qualified political candidates. Last March President Eisenhower called the ruling ridiculous. Today White House News Secretary Hagerty said the President still feels that it is a ridiculous situation. The President has asked Attorney General William Rogers to see what action the government can take. The original ruling grew out of a case brought by Lar Daly, a perennial candidate for mayor of Chicago earlier this year. The Commission then ruled that the Federal Communications Act referring to equal use of broadcast facilities by legitimate candidates in a political campaign also covers news programs, and not merely paid advertising or personal appearance time. CBS President Frank Stanton said in a speech that he feared what would happen once crackpot candidates realized what an opportunity lay before them to be seen and heard.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Thomas Hughes once said of compromise, "He never wants anything but what's right and fair; only when you come to settle what's right and fair, it's everything that he wants and nothing that you want. And that's his idea of a compromise."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 17, 1959

This is the news:

There was no "showdown" at the Big Four foreign ministers meeting today. For a direct report on what did happen, we switch to Geneva and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

(Tape runs 3:55
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

What President Eisenhower did at his news conference today was to make a slight but significant revision in his refusal heretofore to go to a summit meeting under the threat of a Soviet ultimatum on the Berlin issue. He made it clear that if any reasonable progress were made on other issues that would justify a summit meeting, he would go. Mr. Eisenhower had been asked about the possibility of a summit meeting on disarmament, nuclear test suspension, or some other subject. "I certainly am not going to indulge prejudice or preconceived notions or anything else," he said, "to such an extent that it will stand in the way of some kind of tiny step toward easing tensions in the world." There have been reports that Russia might use the negotiations on a nuclear test ban to get around the Berlin deadlock and open the way to the summit. Mr. Eisenhower seemed to be saying "yes" to this so long as "reasonable" progress is being made. But he held forth on the general value of the meetings of foreign ministers and would not...as he put it..."revamp our entire diplomatic procedures in order to go to a summit meeting every thirty days or so." The democracies, he said, can empower their foreign ministers to negotiate and so can a dictator. He called reliance on meetings at the summit "a step backward in diplomacy." It would be, he said, "like Alexander and Napoleon meeting on a raft in a river and settling the fate of the world."

→

The President was asked about the attack...two days ago...on a Navy patrol bomber over the Sea of Japan. / The aircraft was fired on by Communist Migs...and Mr. Eisenhower said he was "greatly concerned" over the apparent inability of the Americans to fire back. / He said he had asked the Navy for a complete report of the incident. / Members of the crew told reporters in Japan today, that the forward gun turret was non-operating because of a lack of spare parts. / Members of Congress also demanded an explanation. Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee said he wanted to know what prompted the Navy "to send out a partially helpless plane, in an area known to be dangerous." / Admiral Arleigh Burke, chief of naval operations, personally ordered an investigation. / And less than three hours after the President's news conference, the Defense Department issued a statement, based on a preliminary report. / The statement points out that the aircraft was assigned to reconnaissance, and not to anti-submarine duty. For this reason, it says, the forward gun turret "deliberately was rendered inoperable, by utilizing the space for reconnaissance-type equipment. The top turret had been removed for a similar purpose. / And it gives this account of what took place in the American aircraft when the attack occurred: "The pilot swung the plane away from the attacking Migs in order to bring the tail turret (which was operable) to bear for defensive purposes. When the pilot and tail gunner attempted simultaneously to talk with each other over the plane's inter-com~~munication~~ system, they momentarily blocked each other out. By the time that situation had cleared, the fire from the attacking planes had disabled the tail gunner's position and wounded the gunner."

—)

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson has ordered a thorough study of the incident to be made by the staff of his preparedness subcommittee. ###

Congress late today passed and sent to the White House a compromise bill for airport development in the next two years. The measure...approved by the Senate and House in quick succession...calls for 126 million dollars in federal assistance, considerably less than the Democrats originally proposed. Congress also completed action today on a scaled-down G.I. housing bill.

The House during the day narrowly defeated an attempt to cut military foreign aid by 140 million dollars. The vote was 103 to 101. The action came as the House drove toward passage of a three-billion, 600-million-dollar authorization bill for both military and economic assistance.

A House judiciary subcommittee approved a compromise civil rights bill today that would allow the government to take a direct part in school integration disputes. At the same time, a Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights took an opposite stand...voting not to give the attorney general injunctive power to force compliance.

Senate-House conferees have given their formal approval to a stop-gap bill aimed at reducing the surplus of wheat. Wheat farmers would be paid 5 percent more in price supports if they plant 20 percent less. This, despite Mr. Eisenhower's statement at his news conference that he did not believe price supports should be raised.

Mr. Eisenhower rejected the idea that representatives in the steel dispute be called to a White House conference in an effort to avert a nationwide strike. But he welcomed a reporter's suggestion that the government issue impartial figures on productivity and wages in the steel industry. Union and company negotiators did reach agreement today on how to proceed with the contract talks, and regular collective bargaining---that is, direct negotiation with four representatives on each side---will resume on Friday. //

Here in New York today, a federal grand jury indicted former Teamsters President Dave Beck on charges of accepting 200 thousand dollars from two trucking companies in June, 1954. Under the Taft-Hartley law, a union is prohibited from taking money from management. Roy Fruehauf of Detroit and Burge Seymour of New York---two trucking executives---also were indicted. Arraignment has been set for a week from today.

The government announces that...last month...personal income in the United States rose to a new record annual rate. The government said it saw in this a "strong hope" for further increases in employment.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

This is the sixth anniversary of the anti-Communist uprising in East Germany, and in West Berlin tonight fifty thousand persons marked the anniversary with a torch-light parade. Thomas Jefferson said "The people are the only sure reliance for the preservation of liberty." And George Chapman, the ~~British dramatist~~ said, "Blood, though it sleep a time, never dies."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Wednesday, June 17, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P. M.

MURROW: This is the news. There was no showdown at the Big Four foreign ministers meeting today. For a direct report on what did happen we switch to Geneva and my collegue Daniel Schorr.

SCHORR: Gromyko dropped one shoe today but not the other. At a secret session of the Big Four foreign ministers Gromyko spent 15 minutes attacking the so called final Western proposal on Berlin, but did not pronounce his final rejection. Gromyko said his remarks were preliminary,reserved the right to make further comments at another private meeting tomorrow. The whole session today with translation lasted about a half hour, the shortest one yet. It left the Western ministers with no doubt in their minds that the basic concept of the Western plan is unacceptable to the Russians, but unclear about how the Russians would proceed from here. The contents of the Western proposal embodied in a paper of less than 600 words are now known. The proposal does not ask specific confirmation of the occupation regime in Berlin, but implies it by speaking of the existing situation and the agreement now in force. It says that Western forces in Berlin will be held at their present level of about 11,000, perhaps to be reduced if developments permit and that they'll be armed only with conventional weapons. It says that there will be unrestricted access to West Berlin, but agrees that German personnel may be used on the routes without prejudice to existing basic responsibilities which means that the East Germans will be acting as agents for the Soviets. It says that disputes about access will be settled by a Big Four commission which could consult German experts if necessary. It says measures should be taken in both parts of Berlin to avoid actions which might disturb public order, and finally, it proposes that these arrangements remain in effect until German unification unless modified by Four Power agreement. The concessions to the Soviet viewpoint are the ceiling on our troops and the implied promise of reduction, the promise not to introduce atonmic weapons into Berlin, the acceptance of East Germans as Russian agents in controlling the life line to West Berlin. Gromyko indicated today that these concessions do not go far enough. Russia wants the occupation regime ended. It wants Western troops not just limited but reduced to token strength, a platoon per country. But, this was not Gromyko's last word on the subject. It is not certain that Gromyko's last word will come tomorrow. It may be of significance that the East German news agency tonight withdrew a midday dispatch saying the Western proposal could not be accepted as a basis for discussion, and substituted one saying that it contains points that could be used as a basis for negotiation if the West is ready to give satisfactory explainations. Communist sources here say tonight that Gromyko is awaiting instructions from Moscow. The Western ministers, however, are not very hopeful that the new instructions will reverse the negative Soviet attitude. At best, it is thought Gromyko will try to get a simulteneous discussion of the Western and Soviet proposals, trying to wed some elements of ours to the main points of theirs. The impression persists that the Soviets are getting ready to write off the foreign ministers conference and to try to force a summit meeting without a Berlin settlement. In this air, Gromyko today won an advantage by delaying his final reply. Today's foreign ministers session began at the precise moment that President Eisenhower started his news conference in Washington. Bromyko was surely aware of the New York Times story indicating that the President might be willing to go to the summit without a Berlin settlement. But, by delaying his answer to the Western proposal Gromyko gained the advantage of knowing what the President had to say. The risks for the Soviets in rejecting the Western plan on Berlin now seem greatly reduced. Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans 6/19/59 J.F.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 17, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

There was no "showdown" at the Big Four foreign ministers meeting today. For a direct report on what did happen, we switch to Geneva and my colleague, Daniel Schorr.

DAN SCHORR: Gromyko dropped one shoe today but not the other. At a secret session of the Big Four foreign ministers Gromyko spent 15 minutes attacking the so-called final Western proposal on Berlin, but did not pronounce his final rejection. Gromyko said his remarks were preliminary, reserved the right to make further comments at another private meeting tomorrow. The whole session today with translation lasted about a half hour, the shortest one yet. It left the Western ministers with no doubt in their minds that the basic concept of the Western plan is unacceptable to the Russians, but unclear about how the Russians would proceed from here. The contents of the Western proposal embodied in a paper of less than 600 words are now known. The proposal does not ask specific confirmation of the occupation regime in Berlin, but implies it by speaking of the existing situation and the agreement now in force. It says that Western forces in Berlin will be held at their present level of about 11,000, perhaps to be reduced if developments permit and that they'll be armed only with conventional weapons. It says that there will be unrestricted access to West Berlin, but agrees that German personnel may be used on the routes without prejudice to existing basic responsibilities which means that the Esst Germans will be acting as agents for the Soviets. It says that disputes about access will be settled by a Big Four commission which could consult German experts if necessary. It says measutes should be taken in both parts of Berlin to avoid actions which might disturb public order, and finally, it proposes that these arrangements remain in effect until German unification unless modified by Four Power agreement.

The concessions to the Soviet viewpoint are the ceiling on our troops and the implied promise of reduction, the promise not to introduce atomic weapons into Berlin, the acceptance of East Germans as Russian agents in controlling the life line to West Berlin. Gromyko indicated today that these concessions do not go far enough. Russia wants the occupation regime ended. It wants Western troops not just limited but reduced to token strength, a platoon per country. But, this was not Gromyko's last word on the subject. It is not certain that Gromyko's last word will come tomorrow. It may be of significance that the East German news agency tonight withdrew a midday dispatch saying the Western proposal could not be accepted as a basis for discussion, and substituted one saying that it contains points that could be used as a basis for negotiation if the West is ready to give satisfactory explanations. Communist sources here say tonight that Gromyko is awaiting instructions from Moscow. The Western ministers, however, are not very hopeful that the new instructions will reverse the negative Soviet attitude. At best, it is thought Gromyko will try to get a sumultaneous discussion of the Western and Soviet proposals, trying to wed some elements of ours to the main points of theirs. The impression persists that the Soviets are getting ready to write off the foreign ministers conference and to try to force a summit meeting without a Berlin settlement. In this air, Gromyko today won an advantage by delaying his final reply. Today's foreign ministers session began at the precise moment that President Eisenhower started his news conference in Washington. Gromyko was surely aware of the New York Times story indicating that the President might be willing to go to the summit without a Berlin settlement. But, by delaying his answer to the Western proposal Gromyko gained the advantage of knowing what the President had to say. The risks for the Soviets in rejecting the Western plan on Berlin now seem greatly reduced.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: What President Eisenhower did at his news conference today was to make a slight but significant revision in his refusal heretofore to go to a summit meeting under the threat of a Soviet ultimatum on the Berlin issue. He made it clear that if any reasonable progress were made on other issues that would justify a summit meeting, he would go. Mr. Eisenhower had been asked about the possibility of a summit meeting on disarmament, nuclear test suspension, or some other subject. "I certainly am not going to indulge prejudice or preconceived notions or anything else," he said, "to such an extent, that it will stand in the way of some kind of tiny step towurd easing tensions in the world." There have been reports that Russia might use the negotiations on a nuclear test ban to get around the Berlin deadlock and open the way to the summit. Mr. Eisenhower seemed to be saying yes to this so long as reasonable progress is being made. But he held forth on the general value of the meetings of foreign ministers and would not...as he put it... "revamp our entire diplomatic procedures in order to go to a summit meeting every thirty days or so." The democracies, he said, can empower their foreign ministers to negotiate and so can a dictator. He called reliance on meetings at the summit "a step backward in diplomacy." It would be, he said, "like Alexander and Napoleon meeting on a raft in a river and settling the fate of the world."

The President was asked about the attack...two days ago...on a Navy patrol bomber over the Sea of Japan. The aircraft was fired on by Communist Migs... and Mr. Eisenhower said he was "greatly concerned" over the apparent inability of the Americans to fire back. He said he had asked the Navy for a complete report of the incident. Members of the crew told reporters in Japan toddy that the forward gun turret was non-operating because of a lack of spare parts. Members of Congress also demanded an explanation. Chairman Russell of the Senate Armed Services Committee said he wanted to know what prompted the Navy "to send out a partially helpless plane in an area known to be dangerous." Admiral Arleigh Burke, chief of naval operations, personally ordered an investigation. And less than three hours after the President's news conference the Defense Department issued a statement based on a preliminary report. The statement points out that the aircraft was assigned to reconnaissance and not to anti-submarine duty. For this reason, it says, the forward gun turret "deliberately was rendered inoperable by utilizing the space for reconnaissance-type equipment. The top turret had been removed for a similar purpose. And it gives this account of what took place in the American aircraft when the attack occurred; "The pilot swung the plane away from the attacking Migs in order to bring the tail turret (which was operable) to bear for defensive purposes. When the pilot and tail gunner attempted simultaneously to talk with each other over the plane's intercomm system, they momentarily blocked each other out. By the time that situation had cleared, the fire from the attacking planes had disabled the tail gunner's position and wounded the gunner."

Senate Democratic Leader Johnson has ordered a thorough study of the incident to be made by the staff of his preparedness subcommittee.

Congress late today passed and sent to the White House a compromise bill for airport development in the next two years. The measure...approved by the Senate and House in quick succession...calls for 126 million dollars in federal assistance, considerably less than the Democrats originally proposed. Congress also completed action today on a scaled-down G.I. housing bill.

The House during the day narrowly defeated an attempt to cut military foreign aid by 140 million dollars. The vote was 103 to 101. The action came as the House drove toward passage of a three-billion 600-million-dollar authorization bill for both military and economic assistance.

A House judiciary submommittee approved a compromise civil rights bill today that would allow the government to take a direct part in school integration disputes. At the same time, a Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights took an opposite stand...voting not to give the attorney generalinjunctive power to force compliance.

Senate-House conferees have given their formal approval to a stop-gap bill aimed at reducing the surplus of wheat. Wheat farmers would be paid 5 percent more in price supports if they plant 20 percent less. This, despite Mr. Eisenhower's statement at his news conference that he did not believe price supports should be raised.

Mr. Eisenhower rejected the idea that representatives in the steel dispute be called to a White House conference in an effort to avert a nationwide strike But he welcomed a reporter's suggestion that the government issue impartial figures on productivity and wages in the steel industry. Union and company negotiators did reach agreement today on how to proceed with the contract talks, and regular collective bargaining---that is, direct negotiation with four representatives on each side--will resume on Friday.

Here in New York today, a federal grand jury indicted former Teamsters President Dave Beck on charges of accepting 200 thousand dollars from two trucking companies in June, 1954. Under the Taft-Hartley law, a union is prohibited from taking money from management. Roy Fruehauf of Detroit and Burge Seymour of New York---two trucking executives---also were indicted. Arraignment has been set for a week from today.

The government announces that...last month...personal income in the United States rose to a new record annual rate. The government said it saw in this a "strong hope" for further increases in employment.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: This is the sixth anniversary of the anti-Communist uprising in East Germany, and in West Berlin tonight fifty thousand persons marked the anniversary with a torch-light parade. Thomas Jerferson said, "The people are the only sure reliance for the preservation of liberty." And George Chapman said, "Blood, though it sleep a time, never dies."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 18, 1959

This is the news:

The House tonight passed legislation authorizing three and a half billion dollars for foreign aid. This is a figure 366-million dollars below President Eisenhower's original request. The measure now goes to the Senate, where the foreign relations committee has approved a bill authorizing 200-million dollars more than the President asked for. Both measures would have the money for the Development Loan Fund come out of the Treasury...a move which was opposed by Mr. Eisenhower, who said that it makes heavy new government borrowing necessary. The House...in taking its final action...eliminated the extra 100 million dollars voted by the Foreign Affairs Committee for loans to under-developed countries.

Senate-House conferees have reached agreement on an omnibus housing bill. The measure...calling for expenditure of one and a third billion dollars... is a compromise. The amount was sharply reduced from what both chambers had approved earlier in order to avert a presidential veto.

The Senate may vote late tonight on the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. The outcome would be close. ~~Democratic Senator Dodd of Connecticut said today that he would vote for confirmation.~~ He is the eighth Democrat to announce that he would side with the ~~Administration on this~~ issue.

The House today...by a margin of 14 votes...rejected the compromise bill to curb wheat surpluses. The measure would have increased the price supports on wheat.

In Geneva today, the foreign ministers conference again marked time... after Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko announced that he would like another 24 hours in which to reply to the latest Western proposal on Berlin. It is assumed that Gromyko is awaiting new instructions from Moscow. If he rejects the final Western offer, it is assumed that the conference will adjourn. Secretary of State Herter's aircraft arrived in Geneva today to bring him home, just in case.

The Defense Department said today that no orders have been sent to the Far East Command to provide jet escort for patrol flights. However, it said, under existing orders commanders "may or may not provide escort at their own discretion." The Navy issued a similar statement...after congressional sources had said that because of the attack on a patrol bomber on Monday reconnaissance aircraft henceforth would be accompanied by jet fighters. The Navy called the attack (by two Communist Migs over the Sea of Japan) an act of "lawless banditry". It said: "We are not escorting patrol planes, we are not escorting commercial airliners or surface ships operating through free air or sea spaces of the world."

The Senate Armed Services Committee today recommended that the promotion of Air Force General Emmett O'Donnell to four-star rank be approved. The promotion had been opposed by Senator Margaret Chase Smith of Maine...who accused O'Donnell of "smearing" her reputation as a member of the Air Force Reserve, a charge which he has denied. O'Donnell is due...upon Senate confirmation...to command the Air Force in the Pacific.

A Senate subcommittee today opened hearings on various bills proposed for amending Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act. The Federal Communications Commission has said...in a 4 to 3 ruling...that candidates for public office not only must be allowed equal opportunity for making political broadcasts...but that minor and major candidates must also be given equal time on regularly scheduled news programs. President Eisenhower has called the ruling "ridiculous". Today, as the hearings opened, it was proposed by five of the seven members of the F.C.C. that Congress rewrite Section 315...exempting newscasts and the coverage of political conventions and other special events from the equal-time provision. The F.C.C. majority contended that under the law...as now written...it had no choice but to rule as it did. The first industry witness was Frank Stanton, president of CBS...who urged enactment of the measure introduced by Democratic Senator Hartke of Indiana. In addition to exempting newscasts from the equal time provision, the Hartke bill also would make the provision apply only to major candidates. Also exempted would be panel discussions, news documentaries and political debate. Stanton said that the issue...as it affects newscasts...is most urgent.

If a change is not made in this respect, he said, "simple mathematics establishes that we will have no choice but to turn our microphones and cameras away from all candidates during campaign periods."

Rioting broke out ~~today~~ in Durban, South Africa today between Negroes and whites. Shots were exchanged...and at least a dozen persons, including a police constable, were wounded as the violence spread throughout the native quarter. Cars were stoned. A school was set on fire, and according to one report, the situation is still out of control. ~~The rioting began with a demonstration growing out of the government's ban on home-brewed beer. But South Africa's apartheid policy and growing nationalistic sentiment in Africa are believed to have been contributing factors.~~

In Dublin tonight, Eamon de Valera was officially announced winner in ~~[illegible]~~ yesterday's election for president. The presidency of Eire is largely a ceremonial office. The real power rests in the ~~office~~ post of prime minister, which deValera...now 77...had long held.

Queen Elizabeth and her husband, Prince Philip, arrived in Canada today for a six-week tour...after flying from London by jet. Next week, at Montreal, the Queen will participate with President Eisenhower in the formal dedication of the St. Lawrence Seaway. And on July sixth, she will visit Chicago for one day.

→

Ethel Barrymore died in Hollywood today, at the age of 79. She had suffered from a chronic heart condition.

In Little Rock today, a three-judge federal court declared the Arkansas law...under which the Little Rock high schools had been closed... unconstitutional.

Edward R. Murrow: June 18, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

It may be too simple to say that the reason the Russians have been so tough in Geneva, is because they are exploiting the weakness that has developed in the Western alliance. But it certainly is a plausible explanation. And it is given weight by the news that President Eisenhower, Prime Minister Macmillan and President De Gaulle may meet in Paris this summer. The chief object of such a meeting would be to iron out differences with the French. Not that the French problem is the only symptom of a Western illness. Dr. Adenauer's decision to hang onto the West German Chancellorship was certainly no gesture of strength but its opposite. It revealed his fear of an increasing peril to the alliance.

To speak of weakness in the alliance is not to say that the unity at the Four Power talks at Geneva has broken down. It hasn't. The diplomatic front has been solid. No member of the team has been tempted to give in to the Russians on Berlin. The weakness is in the organization and power of NATO, and the Russians are in the advantageous position of knowing that whatever the Foreign Ministers say at Geneva, the chief organization of their strength in Europe is in critical disorder. For France has served notice that it will not go on co-operating with NATO as it now stands.

This has not been done all at once. General De Gaulle has not laid down any ungracious ultimatum to his associates. He has used a series of decisions to alert them to his determination to win for France a greater role in NATO and world affairs. The first was his withdrawal of French Mediterranean forces from NATO Command. Then he wrote to Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Macmillan proposing that a directorate of the three take over the guidance of NATO. He asked for a concerted military policy outside Europe by the three countries. He complained that the United States is not supporting France in its dealings with Algeria, as much as to say that we must do so if we want French co-operation. He told his associates that it is wrong to expect France to be the main base of operations in Europe without having a voice in decisions about using nuclear weapons. He also has insisted on France becoming a nuclear power. And more recently he has rejected the assignment by NATO of nuclear stockpiles to France unless France shares the authority over the bombs. ~~He also wants Frenchmen in three NATO posts, one to be deputy Supreme Allied Commander in Europe, another to be Commander of Allied Forces in the Mediterranean, and the third to be Commander of the Iberian sector of the Atlantic Naval Command.~~

3

One after another these demands have been raised, always quietly and without stirring up public passions. But they are most far-reaching demands. They ask that France be promoted from being a second-rate power to membership in the nuclear club of the great powers. They ask a special partnership with the United States and Britain, not only inside NATO, but in world affairs outside Europe.

De Gaulle does not pretend that France has the military strength that entitles it to these additional powers. But this is because he does not believe that military strength is an essential criterion. All the same, France is in a strong position to bargain with its Allies. Western defense in Europe without France would be unthinkable. And De Gaulle himself is in a unique bargaining position. When he took over in France last year, the choice for the French people was to give him vast presidential powers in a weakened republic, or submit to a fascism of French colonels. The people did not hesitate, they preferred De Gaulle. The alternative to De Gaulle today is the same, it still is a fascism of French Colonels, and the Allies can be in no doubt as to which they prefer. They must appease De Gaulle or risk losing virtually everything.

This being the situation it is remarkable that no meeting of Eisenhower, Macmillan and De Gaulle has been mentioned before. But as President Eisenhower told his news conference, De Gaulle has been repeatedly invited here since becoming President. / Now, it seems, Mr. Eisenhower is ready to do the travelling himself. / He told newsmen, that he is an old comrade-in-arms of De Gaulle, and since both men are now heads of state, they may be able to find solutions that otherwise wouldn't be apparent. / But it should be clear, that the West cannot exert its maximum influence in the world, until its own house is in order.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan. -

Word for Today

NATO would seem in need of some overhauling...so that as allies we can act together more effectively. I recall an observation that ~~Lord~~ Field Marshall Montgomery recently made to this reporter with reference to NATO. He said: "We don't understand that change is inevitable. We don't understand that progress is not inevitable. Progress depends on courage to face facts, and then to take decisions based on those facts."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 18, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The House tonight passed legislation authorizing three and a half billion dollars for foreign aid. This is a figure 366-million dollars below President Eisenhower's original request. The measure now goes to the Senate, where the foreign relations committee has approved a bill authorizing 200-million dollars more than the President asked for. Both measures would have the money for the Development Loan Fund come out of the Treasury...a move which was opposed by Mr. Eisenhower, who said that it makes heavy new government borrowing necessary. The House...in taking its final action...eliminated the extra 100 million dollars voted by the Foreign Affairs Committee for loans to under-developed countries.

Senate-House conferees have reached agreement on an omnibus housing bill. The measure...calling for expenditure of one and a third billion dollars...is a compromise. The amount was sharply reduced from what both chambers had approved earlier in order to avert a presidential veto.

The Senate may vote late tonight on the nomination of Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. The outcome would be close.

The House today...by a margin of 14 votes...rejected the compromise bill to curb wheat surpluses. The measure would have increased the price supports on wheat.

In Geneva today, the foreign ministers conference again marked time...after Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko announced that he would like another 24 hours in which to reply to the latest Western proposal on Berlin. It is assumed that Gromyko is awaiting new instructions from Moscow. If he rejects the final Western offer, it is assumed that the conference will adjourn. Secretary of State Herter's aircraft arrived in Geneva today to bring him home, just in case.

The Defense Department said today that no orders have been sent to the Far East Command to provide jet escort for patrol flights. However, it said, under existing orders commanders "may or may not provide escort at their own discretion." The Navy issued a similar statement...after congressional sources had said that because of the attack on a patrol bomber on Monday reconnaissance aircraft henceforth would be accompanied by jet fighters. The Navy called the attack (by two Communist Migs over the Sea of Japan) an act of "lawless banditry." It said: "We are not escorting patrol planes, we are not escorting commercial airliners or surface ships operating through free air or sea spaces of the world."

A Senate subcommittee today opened hearings on various bills proposed for amending Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act. The Federal Communications Commission has said...in a 4 to 3 ruling...that candidates for public office not only must be allowed equal opportunity for making political broadcasts, but that minor and major candidates must also be given equal time on regularly scheduled news programs. President Eisenhower has called the ruling "ridiculous." Today, as the hearings opened, it was proposed by five of the seven members of the F.C.C. that Congress rewrite Section 315...exempting newscasts and the coverage of political conventions and other special events from the equal-time provision. The F.C.C. majority contended that under the law...as now written...it had no choice but to rule as it did. The first industry witness was Frank Stanton, president of C.B.S....who urged enactment of the measure introduced by Democratic Senator Hartke of Indiana. In addition to exempting newscasts from the equal time provision, the Hartke bill also would make the provision apply only to major candidates. Also exempted would be panel discussions, news documentaries and political debate. Stanton said that the issue...as it affects newscasts... is most urgent. If a change is not made in this respect, he said, "simple mathematics establishes that we will have no choice but to turn our microphones and cameras away from all candidates during campagin periods."

Rioting broke out in Durban, South Africa today between Negroes and whites.

Shots were exchanged...and at least a dozen persons, including a police constable, were wounded as the violence spread throughout the native quarter. Cars were stoned. A school was set on fire, and according to one report, the situation is still out of control.

Queen Elizabeth and her husband, Prince Philip, arrived in Canada today for a six-week tour...after flying from London by jet. Next week, at Montreal, the Queen will participate with President Eisenhower in the formal dedication of the St. Lawrence Seaway. And on July sixth, she will visit Chicago for one day.

Ethel Barrymore died in Hollywood today at the age of 79. She has suffered from a chronic heart condition.

In Little Rock today, a three-judge federal court declared the Arkansas law...under which the Little Rock high schools had been closed...unconstitutional.

It may be too simple to say that the reason the Russians have been so tough in Geneva, is because they are exploiting the weakness that has developed in the Western alliance. But it certainly is a plausible explanation. And it is given weight by the news that President Eisenhower, Prime Minister Macmillan and President DeGaulle may meet in Paris this summer. the chief object of such a meeting would be to iron out differences with the French. Not that the French problem is the only symptom of a Western illness. Dr. Adenauer's decision to hang onto the West German Chancellorship was certainly no gesture of strength but its opposite. It revealed his fear of an increasing peril to the alliance.

To speak of weakness in the alliance is not to say that the unity at the Four Power talks at Geneva has broken down. It hasn't. The diplomatic front has been solid. No member of the team has been tempted to give in to the Russians on Berlin. The weakness is in the organization and power of NATO, and the Russians are in the advantageous position of knowing that whatever the Foreign Ministers say at Geneva, the chief organization of their strength in Europe is in critical disorder. For France has served notice that it will not go on co-operating with NATO as it now stands.

This has not been done all at once. General DeGaulle has not laid down any ungracious ultimatum to his associates. He has used a series of decisions to alert them to his determination to win for France a greater role in NATO and world affairs. The first was his withdrawal of French Mediterranean forces from NATO Command. Then he wrote to Mr. Eisenhower and Mr. Macmillan proposing that a directorate of the three take over the guidance of NATO. He asked for a concerted military policy outside Europe by the three countries. He complained that the United States is not supporting France in its dealings with Algeria, as much as to say that we must do so if we want French co-operation. He told his associates that it is wrong to expect France to be the main base of operations in Europe without having a voice in decisions about using nuclear weapons. He also has insisted on France becoming a nuclear power. And more recently he has rejected the assignment by NATO of nuclear stockpiles to France unless France shares the authority over the bombs.

One after another these demands have been raised, always quietly and without stirring up public passions. But they are most far-reaching demands. They ask that France be promoted from being a second-rate power to membership in the nuclear club of the great powers. They ask a special partnership with the United States and Britain, not only inside NATO, but in world affairs outside Europe.

De Gaulle does not pretend that France has the military strength that entitles it to these additional powers. But this is because he does not believe that military strength is an essential criterion. All the same, France is in a strong position to bargain with its Allies. Western defense in Europe without France would be unthinkable. And De Gaulle himself is in a unique bargaining position. When he took over in France last year, the choice for the French people was to give him vast presidential powers in a weakened republic, or submit to a fascism of Franch colonels. The people did not hesitate, they preferred

DeGaulle. The alternative to De Gaulle today is the same, it still is a fascism of French Colonels, and the Allies can be in no doubt as to which they prefer. They must appease DeGaulle or risk losing virtually everything.

This being the situation it is remarkable that no meeting of Eisenhower, Macmilland DeGaulle has been mentioned before. But as President Eisenhower told his news conference, DeGaulle has been repeatedly invited here since becoming President. Now, it seems, Mr. Eisenhower is ready to do the travelling himself. He told newsmen that he is an old comrade-in-arms of DeGaulle, and since both men are now heads of state they may be able to find solutions that otherwise wouldn't be apparent. But it should be clear that the West cannot exert its maximum influence in the world until its own house is in order.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: NATO would seem in need of some overhauling...so that as allies we can act together more effectively. I recall an observation that Field Marshall Montgomery recently made to this reporter with reference to NATO. He said: "We don't understand that change is inevitable. We don't understand that progress is not inevitable. Progress depends on courage to face facts, and then to take decisions based on those facts."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 19, 1959

This is the news:

The Big Four foreign ministers have agreed to recess their conference for three weeks. They will hold another plenary session tomorrow, go home...and then meet in Geneva again on July 13th. The call for a recess came from the West, after Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko answered the final Western proposals on Berlin with a set of counter-proposals which the West found unacceptable. Gromyko suggested the signing of a non-aggression treaty between the two Germanies, pending reunification. And he offered to extend the occupation status of West Berlin for 18 months. (He had set a 12-month deadline for the Western occupation forces to get out of the city). Secretary of State Herter joined the foreign ministers of Britain and France in a statement making clear that they have no intention of agreeing to the liquidation of their rights in Berlin. A three-week recess, they said, would give all governments concerned an opportunity to examine the deadlock which has resulted after six weeks of talks.

→

For a report on how the situation looks at first hand, we now switch to Geneva and David Schoenbrun.

(Tape runs 4:05
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY.")

Soviet Premier Khrushchev said today in a speech in Moscow that if the foreign ministers conference fails, then a meeting at the summit will become "all the more necessary." He would be "glad", he said, to go...not only to one...but to several summit meetings. Khrushchev accused the West of hindering a German settlement. And he said that if the West continues in this policy, nothing remains for the Soviet Union but to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany. If Russia is forced to sign such a treaty, he said, it would be an "illusion" for the West to believe that the East Germans would simply serve as agents of Russia in administering the communications to West Berlin. He claimed East Germany would then be a sovereign state and that the fate of the Allied lifeline to Berlin would be completely up to the East Germans. Khrushchev made these statements at a Kremlin ceremony...marking the end of two weeks of talks with East German leaders.

It is announced in Bonn that the West German presidential election will be held next July first in Berlin, as originally scheduled. Under the West German constitution, the president is elected by Parliament. A decision on whether the West German parliament would meet in Berlin had not been expected until next Tuesday.

The West German economics minister...Ludwig Erhard...indicated today that he might resign, as a result of disparaging remarks made about him by Chancellor Adenauer. Erhard told a Christian Democratic Party caucus: "I can only continue my work if it is guaranteed that I remain protected from such disparagment and that my work within the framework of my present responsibilities is secured."

In Argentina, reports persist that Army commanders are about to call on President Frondizi to resign. And there are rumors that a majority of naval officers are siding with the Army in the government crisis. The capital city of Buenos Aires remained calm today, but troops were seen massing in various parts of the city. According to one report, Frondizi will be asked to step down in favor of his vice president. Another report is that he will be permitted to stay in office if he changes his policies and officials said to favor the return of Peron are ousted from the government.

In Congress today, the House approved a measure that would raise the legal (ceiling on the national debt..."temporarily"...) to 295-billion dollars. The permanent ceiling, under the bill, would be 285-billion dollars. The measure now goes to the Senate.

Today...for the second time since he took office...President Eisenhower called reporters into his office so that they might hear him read a special statement. The first occasion was in 1957, when he criticized action taken by Congress on a foreign aid measure. Today he was provoked by refusal of the Senate to confirm Lewis Strauss (straws) as secretary of commerce. The vote...49 to 46 against confirmation...was taken late last night. Senators opposed to the appointment thought that Strauss in his dealings with Congress when chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission had been less than candid. There was also opposition to him because of his role in the Dixon-Yates power controversy. In his statement...read to reporters today... Mr. Eisenhower called Admiral Strauss "a man who in war and in peace has served his nation loyally, honorably and effectively under four different Presidents." "If the nation," he said, "is to be denied the right to have as public servants in responsible positions men of his proven character, ability and integrity...then indeed it is the American people who are the losers through this sad episode."

Vice President Nixon said in Chicago today that the majority in the Senate had used its power to kick the President "in the teeth." The public, he predicted, will be outraged. He said Democratic Leader Johnson "may have won the victory, but he will lose the war."

The government reports that...last month...the cost of living reached a new all-time high. / The consumer index went up one-tenth of one percent...due to higher prices in all major categories, including food, clothing, transportation and medical care. / A Labor Department spokesman calls the increase "seasonal". There has been no break-through, he says, on the cost-of-living front. / The take-home pay of factory workers last month also reached a new high.

Today...in the steel dispute...union and management negotiators met for two hours, then recessed until Monday. / Both sides declined comment after today's meeting. Their contract runs out on July first.

The Public Health Service announces that the incidence of paralytic polio continues to be higher than it was a year ago. / Fifty-five new paralytic cases were reported last week, compared with twenty-five in the same week in 1958.

Leeth-er

The lieutenant governor of Louisiana...Lether Frazar...today accepted the opinion of the state attorney general that he take over as acting chief executive...in view of the committment of Governor Earl Long to a mental institution. / Long was committed last night after he walked out of a New Orleans hospital and announced that he would start performing the duties of his office "at once". On entering the hospital voluntarily, he had agreed to undergo treatment for at least two weeks.

→

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. (pause) But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

Word for Today

The foreign ministers are taking a three-week recess. Russia is adamant... and, in making concessions, we have gone about as far as we can go. As James Thurber once said, "You might as well fall flat on your face as lean over too far backward." Or, as Benjamin Franklin expressed it, "One sure way to get the last word in an argument is to say "all right."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, June 19, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: For a report on how the situation looks at first hand we now switch to Geneva and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: There isn't a scowl in Geneva tonight. All is sweetness and light. No more tension, no more suspense, no threat of crisis, above all no more dialogues of deaf men, at least ~~xxxx xxxx~~ not for 3 and a half weeks. The news that the ministers had agreed to recess this conference until July 13 was greeted by cheers here at the Maison de la Press. Weary newsmen, nerve-racked by days of reporting that tomorrow will bring the absolutely final climactic breakdown session congratulated each other joyfully for having at last reached the point where we can say that tomorrow will be the last session of the ~~xxxxxxxxxx~~ current phase of negotiations. The deputies will meet tomorrow morning at 10:00 A.M. to draft the final communique. At 11:00 the ministers will meet to endorse the communique and officially to formalize the agreement to recess the conference until July 13. The decision to recess was taken this afternoon at a secret session. It was the West that asked for the recess. Gromyko agreed readily enough but he had to have one last argument before leaving so he disagreed about the date of the return. The West had proposed the middle of next month, July 15, but Gromyko didn't like that because it was in the middle of the week. This bothered him for some unknown reason. Maybe he has an orderly mind. He proposed instead July 13, which is Monday, beginning of the work week. There was some argument about this too but finally the West decided to make a concession and ~~xxx~~ yielded the point so, after six weeks, ten secret sessions, 18 plenary sessions, the twain shall separate to meet again another day. As one Western official put it smilingly, "It's better than war~~xx~~", to which most people would say, "Amen." The question is, however, how much better than war is it? Or, rather, how much has it helped to put the threat of war further off. Just what, in fact, has happened here in 6 weeks time? Has this conference been the total failure that it appears to be in recessing without agreement? On the face of the facts, yes. It has been a total failure, With East and West as far apart as ever on the fundamental issue which is the existence of a free Western Sector in Berlin with an unrestricted lifeline to the Federal Republic. The West is united on this issue and will not retreat on it. Nothing that restricts, limits or brings into question in any way the right of Western troops to station in Berlin and circulate freely will be accepted. Yet, it is that very right which the Soviets have challenged throughout this meeting and which, according to Western delegations tonight, they challenged once again at today's first secret session. The Western spokesmen say that Gromyko's proposals for Berlin are written in such a way that they would cancel out our rights. For example, one Soviet clause provides that communications of West Berlin with the outside world would be kept in their present set up for the duration of a new agreement proposed for 18 months. Western experts on Russia say that if we accepted this 18 month stand-still it would mean that the Russians would argue at the end of the period that our rights had expired. Now this is not what the words say but it's the way Russians interpret words and we cannot give them that chance. Gromyko denies this. His spokesman, Kharlamov, said that he told Herter today it wasn't true but the West doesn't trust him and he will not clear things up by saying specifically, explicitly that our rights would be preserved. This being the case there was little point in continuing the talks so both sides agreed that a recess might be useful. Tempers can cool down, irreconcilable positions will grow a bit fuzzy as times goes by. This conference has already usefully cleared away a lot of underbrush and each side knows more about the other's views and if you'll remember the deadline of May 27 has come and gone and has already been forgotten. This is, therefore, not the beginning of the end of peace talks. It is the end of the beginning of a new round of negotiations. One might say tonight that he who talks and runs away will live to talk another day.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans. 7/2/59-B.K.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 19, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The Big Four foreign ministers have agreed to recess their conference for three weeks. They will hold another plenary session tomorrow, go home...and then meet in Geneva again on July 13th. The call for a recess came from the West, after Soviet Foreign Minister Gromyko answered the final Western proposals on Berlin with a set of counter-proposals which the West found unacceptable. Gromyko suggested the signing of a non-aggression treaty between the two Germanies, pending reunification. And he offered to extend the occupation status of West Berlin for 18 months. (He had set a 12-month deadline for the Western occupation forces to get out of the city). Secretary of State Herter joined the foreign ministers of Britain and France in a statement making clear that they have no intention of agreeing to the liquidation of their rights in Berlin. A three-week recess, they said, would give all governments concerned an opportunity to examine the deadlock which has resulted after six weeks of talks.

For a report on how the situation looks at first hand, we now switch to Geneva and David Schoenbrun.

SCHOENBRUN: There isn't a scowl in Geneva tonight. All is sweetness and light. No more tension, no more suspense, no threat of crisis, above all no more dialogues of deaf men, at least not for three and a half weeks. The news that the ministers had agreed to recess this conference until July 13th was greeted by cheers here at the Maison de la Press. Weary newsmen, nerve-racked by days of reporting that tomorrow will bring the absolutely final climactic breakdown session congratulated each other joyfully for having at least reached the point where we can say that tomorrow will be the last session of the current phase of negotiations. The deputies will meet tomorrow morning at 10:00 AM to draft the final communique. At 11:00 the ministers will meet to endorse the communique and officially to formalize the agreement to recess the conference until July 13. The decision to recess was taken this afternoon at a secret session. It was the West that asked for the recess. Gromyko agreed readily enough but he had to have one last argument before leaving so he disagreed about the date of the return. The West had proposed the middle of next month, July 15, but Gromyko didn't like that because it was in the middle of the week. This bothered him for some unknown reason. Maybe he has an orderly mind. He proposed instead July 13, which is Monday, beginning of the work week. There was some argument about this too but finally the West decided to make a concession and yielded the point so, after six weeks, ten secret sessions, 18 plenary sessions, the twain shall separate to meet again another day. As one Western official put it smilingly, "It's better than war," to which most people would say, "Amen." The question is, however, how much better than war is it? Or, rather, how much has it helped to put the threat of war further off? Just what, in fact, has happened here in six weeks time? Has this conference been the total failure that it appears to be in recessing without agreement? On the face of the facts, yes. It has been a total failure, with East and West as far apart as ever on the fundamental issue which is the existence of a free Western Sector in Berlin with an unrestricted lifeline to the Federal Republic. The West is united on this issue and will not retreat on it. Nothing that restricts, limits or brings into question in any way the right of Western troops to station in Berlin and circulate freely will be accepted. Yet, it is that very right which the Soviets have challenged throughout this meeting and which, according to Western delegations tonight, they challenged once again at today's first secret session. The Western spokesmen say that Gromyko's proposals for Berlin are written in such a way that they would cancel out our rights. For example, one Soviet clause provides that communications of West Berlin with the outside world would be kept in their present set up for the duration of a new agreement proposed for 18 months. Western experts on Russia say that if we accepted this 18 month stand-still it would mean that the Russians would argue at the end of the period that our rights had expired. Now this is not what the words say but it's the way Russians interpret words and we cannot give them that chance. Gromyko denies this. His spokesman, Kharlamov, said that he told Herter today it wasn't true but the West doesn't trust him and he will not clear things up by saying specifically, explicitly that our rights would be preserved. This being the case there was little point in continuing the talks so both sides agreed that a recess might be useful. Tempers can cool down, irreconcilable positions will grow a bit fuzzy as time goes by. This conference has already usefully cleared away a lot of underbrush and each side knows more about the other's views and if you'll remember the deadline of May 27 has come and gone and has already been forgotten. This is, therefore, not the beginning of the end of peace talks. It is the end of the beginning of a new round of negotiations. One might say tonight that he who talks and runs away will live to talk another day.

Now, back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Soviet Premier Khrushchev said today in a speech in Moscow that if the foreign ministers conference fails, then a meeting at the summit will become "all the more necessary." He would be "glad," he said, to go...not only to one... but to several summit meetings. Khrushchev accused the West of hindering a German settlement. And he said that if the West continues in this policy, nothing remains for the Soviet Union but to sign a separate peace treaty with East Germany. If Russia is forced to sign such a treaty, he said, it would be an "illusion" for the West to believe that the East Germans would simply serve as agents of Russia in administering the communications to West Berlin. He claimed East Germany would then be a sovereign state and that the fate of the Allied lifeline to Berlin would be completely up to the East Germans. Khrushchev made these statements at a Kremlin ceremony...marking the end of two weeks of talks with East German leaders.

It is announced in Bonn that the West German presidential election will be held next July first in Berlin, as originally scheduled. Under the West German constitution, the president is elected by Parliament. A decision on whether the West German parliament would meet in Berlin had not been expected until next Tuesday.

The West German economics minister...Ludwig Erhard...indicated today that he might resign, as a result of disparaging remarks made about him by Chancellor Adenauer. Erhard told a Christian Democratic Party caucus: "I can only continue my work if it is guaranteed that I remain protected from such disparagement and that my work within the framework of my present responsibilities is secured."

In Argentina, reports persist that Army commanders are about to call on President Frondizi to resign. And there are rumors that a majority of naval officers are siding with the Army in the government crisis. The capital city of Buenos Aires remained calm today, but troops were seen massing in various parts of the city. According to one report, Frondizi will be asked to step down in favor of his vice president. Another report is that he will be permitted to stay in office if he changes his policies and officials said to favor the return of Peron are ousted from the government.

In Congress today, the House approved a measure that would raise the legal ceiling on the national debt..."temporarily"...to 295-billion dollars. The permanent ceiling, under the bill, would be 285-billion dollars. The measure now goes to the Senate.

Today...for the second time since he took office...President Eisenhower called reporters into his office so that they might hear him read a special statement. The first occasion was in 1957, when he criticized action taken by Congress on a foreign aid measure. Today, he was provoked by refusal of the Senate to confirm Lewis Strauss as secretary of commerce. The vote...49 to 46 against confirmation...was taken last night. Senators opposed to the appointment thought that Strauss in his dealings with Congress when Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission had been less than candid. There was also opposition to him because of his role in the Dixon-Yates power controversy. In his statement read to reporters today...Mr. Eisenhower called Admiral Strauss "a man who in war and in peace has served his nation loyally, honorably and effectively under four different Presidents." "If the nation," he said, "is to be denied the right to have as public servants in responsible positions men of his proven character, ability and integrity...then indeed it is the American people who are the losers through this sad episode."

Vice President Nixon said in Chicago today that the majority in the Senate had used its power to kick the President "in the teeth." The public, he predicted, will be outraged. He said Democratic Leader Johnson "may have won the victory, but he will lose the war."

The government reports that...last month...the cost of living reached a new all-time high. The consumer index went up one-tenth of one percent...due to higher prices in all major categories, including food, clothing, transportation, and medical care. A Labor Department spokesman calls the increase "seasonal." There has been no break-through, he says, on the cost-of-living front. The take-home pay of factory workers last month also reached a new high.

Today...in the steel dispute...union and management negotiators met for two hours, then recessed until Monday. Both sides declined comment after today's meeting. Their contract runs out on July first.

The Public Health Service announces that the incidence of paralytic polio continues to be higher than it was a year ago. Fifty-five new paralytic cases were reported last week, compared with twenty-five in the same week in 1958.

The lieutenant governor of Louisiana...Lether Frazar..today accepted the opinion of the state attorney general that he take over as acting chief executive... inview of the committment of Governor Earl Long to a mental institution. Long was committed last night after he walked out of a New Orleans hospital and announced that he would start performing the duties of his office "at once." On entering the hospital voluntarily, he had agreed to undergo treatment for at least two weeks.

This is Ed Mrrrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The foreign ministers are taking a three-week recess. Russia is adament... and, in making concessions, we have gone about as far as we can go. As James Thurber once said, "You might as well fall flat on your face as lean over too far backward." Or, as Benjamin Franklin expressed it, "One sure way to get the last word in an argument is to say all right."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Mon., June 22, 1959

This is the news:

A new satellite was launched today at Cape Canaveral. The vehicle was a Vanguard rocket. All three stages fired successfully. It is presumed that the twenty-two and a half pound satellite...about the size of a basketball...failed to orbit. The satellite contained instruments for measuring the intensity of direct sunlight and the amount of heat reflected by the earth...information which could help in forecasting the earth's weather.

In Washington today, the joint congressional atomic energy committee opened hearings on the effects of large-scale nuclear war. A Defense Department expert, Dr. Frank Shelton, made the statement that even in the event of a massive nuclear assault, "the worldwide hazard to the countries not attacked would not be very important in terms of their survival." Dr. Shelton conceded, under questioning, that he was referring to fallout from the high altitude bombs, not to local fallout. Intense local fallout could spread for hundreds of miles.

(more)

14

Secretary of State Herter will report to the American people tomorrow night on the deadlocked foreign ministers conference...which is scheduled to resume on July thirteenth. CBS Radio will carry the broadcast at 9 p.m. tomorrow, Eastern Time. Mr. Herter also will appear before the House Foreign Affairs Committee tomorrow morning, and then before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in the afternoon. This morning, he reported in person to the President. He said yesterday...on his return from Geneva...that Russia had "revealed clearly" that the true desire is to absorb West Berlin into Communist East Germany and keep the country divided until it can be brought under Soviet influence. Today, in talking with Mr. Eisenhower, he reportedly was not optimistic... although he is still hoping that some progress can be made. When Mr. Herter saw reporters today, he declined to speculate on the possibility of a meeting at the summit.

27

[redacted]

In West Germany today the parliamentary leaders of the Christian Democratic Party met today in an effort today to heal the breach between Chancellor Adenauer and the economics minister, Ludwig Erhard...a feud which threatens to split the party on the eve of the election of a new president. The feud began [redacted] when Adenauer reversed his decision to quit as chancellor and seek the presidency. The party had favored Erhard to take over as chancellor, but Adenauer opposed Erhard, arguing that he was not qualified. Erhard, for his part, has demanded a guarantee from Adenauer against further attacks. No formula was devised at today's meeting for ending the conflict, and party leaders will hold another session tomorrow.

The Soviet newspaper Pravda today attacked the decision of the West German government to hold its presidential election next month in West Berlin. Pravda charged that those responsible for the decision were trying to poison the international atmosphere, so as to "break" the Geneva talks/

(more)

42

In Geneva today, scientists of Russia, Britain and the United States began a new technical study on how to control high-altitude nuclear tests. They are to report their findings within a week.

Reports from Cairo...which are not confirmed...say that Premier Kassem of Iraq has arrested the top Communist officer in the Iraqi army. No reason was given...but Kassem has been reported alarmed over growing Communist influence.

The United States Supreme Court referred to the Jencks case today while upholding the action taken in criminal trials by two lower courts. In separate decisions...written by Justice Frankfurter... the Supreme Court said that congressional legislation, and not its own prior ruling in the Jencks case, now determines what information from government files must be supplied to the defense in the course of federal prosecution.

55

(more)

In Tallahassee, the four white youths convicted of raping a Negro co-ed were sentenced today to life imprisonment. In returning a verdict of guilty, the jury had recommended mercy. Otherwise, the judge would have been required to impose the death penalty. [No white man ever has gone to the electric chair in Florida for attacking a Negro woman. Thirty-seven Negroes have paid the supreme penalty for attacks on white women.]

White House News Secretary Hagerty was operated on this afternoon for appendicitis. His condition...after removal of the appendix...is described as being "as comfortable as could be expected."

My colleague David Schoenbrun is standing by in Paris with a special report...so we switch now to the French capital. /Note...tape runs six minutes and ten seconds, with standard return cue. Consequently, to allow time for sign-off, we should go into tape at seven thirty-five straight up./

That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting from Paris on the "sickness" in the NATO alliance.

67

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

Word as follows: The British historian Macaulay said: "It is evident that many great and useful objects can be obtained in this world only by cooperation. It is equally evident," he said, "that there cannot be efficient cooperation if men proceed on the principle that they must not cooperate for one object unless they agree about other objects." Goodnight and good luck. Miss

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Monday, June 22, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: My colleague, David Schoenbrun, is standing by in Paris with a special report so we switch now to the French Capital.

SCHOENBRUN: French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville today reported to NATO on the results or rather the lack of results of the last six weeks of talks in Geneva. As the resident minister in this capital of the Atlantic Alliance, the French diplomat spoke for his British and American colleagues who could not be here in person for today's meeting. He was speaking, therefore, not only for France but for America and Britain too, a fact that should give at least symbolic satisfaction to the French who've been demanding for a long time now a close coordination of the three big powers of NATO who, the French insist, should speak with one voice to report one common policy for the security of the Free World. This French view of three power cooperation was laid down first in a letter sent by General De Gaulle to Prime Minister Harold Macmillan and to President Eisenhower last September 24th. The text of that letter has never been published but some of the major points it made have been revealed in all three capitals this past month and have been the storm center of a controversy that has shaken the Atlantic Alliance. Hardly a week goes by without some new irritation, some prodding of the old sore. Indeed the controversy between France and her principal partners in NATO did not begin on September 24th last year and it was not provoked by Charles De Gaulle alone. The (indistinct) of the Atlantic Alliance, the frictions between France and America have very deep roots which were planted in the soil of the Fourth Republic long before that ill fated institution collapsed. The roots of evil that are poisoning the Atlantic Alliance were planted first on the soil of North Africa. That's where the trouble began and that's where it must end or the Alliance may end with it. Ever since the Algerian revolt broke out in November, 1954 there has been a strain between France and America and a sickness inside the Atlantic Alliance. Algeria is the principal source of infection but it's not the only source. Like a cancer that spreads through a healthy body, the clash of interests in North Africa from Rabat, Morocco to Cairo, Egypt has been sapping the strength of the Western allies. When finally, as was inevitable, the Tunisian nationalist leader Habib Bourguiba and the King of Morocco came back from exile in triumph we moved immediately to win back their friendship in order to make that area more secure, more friendly for the West. And, just as inevitably, that move, necessary though it was, ended defeated in the frustrated French and when, as was also inevitable, Bourguiba and the King of Morocco expressed their sympathy for the cause of Algerian independence the situation worsened because this for the French was a stab in the back, indeed in the heart. Two years ago the British and the Americans sent arms to Bourguiba to build up his small forces, to give some solidity to his regime, and this infuriated the French because Bourguiba was helping the Algerian rebels. The Atlantic Alliance was already in danger of being shipwrecked in the Mediterranean region. Coming as this did after the very grave crisis of Suez, when America joined with Russia in comdemning the Anglo-French invasion of Egypt, it almost broke up the Alliance. Now all of that happened before Charles De Gaulle came back to power and this should be kept in mind at all times if we are to understand what is happening and what might be done to end this eternal menace to the Western world at a moment when we are challenged as never before by the Russians. Thus, when Charles De Gaulle came back to power we find that he inherited a long term sickness of the Alliance. It is the French peoples' feeling that the Americans were good allies in Europe but false allies in Africa. De Gaulle himself felt this very deeply but De Gaulle felt even more than this for De Gaulle has a vision of the world, a vision of French grandeur and a vision too of the role of the West in its competition with the East. According to De Gaulle, NATO is an organization that is far too limited to Europe and to a very narrow military alliance. He thinks that the three powers of NATO ought to have a global strategy, a political one, an economic one and a military one to meet the Russians everywhere in every area to make our world safe. Now this is a policy he has expressed to President Eisenhower. President Eisenhower may feel very much the same way in principle but De Gaulle is asking in practice for some things that President Eisenhower simply cannot give to him. He cannot, for example, share atomic secrets with the French because we have a law preventing that and he cannot give the French a veto over our use of the atomic weapon as De Gaulle is demanding and as for a pool of help to the other countries in the world America is a big and rich nation with many interests; France is a small and not so rich nation and De Gaulle is asking for equality where equality really doesn't exist and so France and America are far apart with many irritations with De Gaulle feeling that we are false allies; with De Gaulle feeling he is being kept out of the councils of the great and we are irritated with the French because they won't integrate their air defense with our air defense. They won't give us atomic bases in France in the common cause. We feel that they're trying to blackmail us. Now where does this end up? Which one of these sides is going to win its debate? Only one thing is predictable, only Russia can win this kind of a debate. It is now more urgent than ever for Eisenhower and De Gaulle to get together and with Macmillan too to try to work out a truly common front of the Western world to face the crisis that we are bound to face over Berlin.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans.-7/2/59-B.K.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, JUNE 22, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

A new weather satellite was launched today at Cape Canaveral. The vehicle used was a Vanguard rocket. All three stages fired successfully, but it is presumed that the twenty-two and a half pound satellite...about the size of a basketball...failed to orbit. The satellite contained instruments for measuring the intensity of direct sunlight and the amount of heat reflected by the earth... information which could help in forecasting the earth's weather.

In Washington today, the joint congressional atomic energy committee opened hearings on the effects of large-saale nuclear war. A Defense Department expert, Dr. Frank Shelton, made the statement that even in the event of a massive nuclear assault, "the worldwide hazard to the countries not attacked would not be very important in terms of their survival." Dr. Shelton conceded, under questioning, that he was referring to fallout from the high atmosphere not to local fallout. Intense local fallout could spread for hundreds of miles.

Secretary of State Herter will report to the American people tomorrow night on the deadlocked foreign ministers conference...which is scheduled to resume on July 13th. CBS Radio will carry the broadcast at 9 PM tomorrow, Eastern Time. Mr. Herter also will appear before the House Foreign Affairs Committee tomorrow morning, and then before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in the afternoon. This morning, he reported in person to the President. He said yesterday...on his return from Geneva that Russia had "revealed clearly" that its true desire to absorb West Berlin into Communist East Germany and keep the country divided until it can be brought under Soviet influence. Today, in talking with Mr. Eisenhower, he reportedly was not optimistic...although he is still hoping that some progress can be made. When Mr. Herter saw reporters today, he declined to speculate on the possibility of a meeting at the summit.

In West Germany today, the parliamentary leaders of the Christian Democratic Party met in an effort to heal the breach between Chancellor Adenauer and the economics minister, Ludwig Erhard...a feud which threatens to split the party on the eve of the election of a new president. The feud began when Adenauer reversed his decision to quit as chancellor and seek the presidency. The party had favored Erhard to take over as chancellor, but Adenauer opposed Erhard, arguing that he was not qualified. Erhard, for his part, has demanded a guarantee from Adenauer against further attacks. No formula was devised at today's meeting for ending the conflict, and party leaders will hold another session tomorrow.

The Soviet newspaper Pravda today attacked the decision of the West German government to hold its presidential election next month in West Berlin. Pravda charged that those responsible for the decision were trying to poison the international atmosphere, so as to "break" the Geneva talks.

In Geneva today, scientists of Russia, Britain and the United States began a new technical study on how to control high-altitude nuclear tests. They are to report their findings within a week.

Reports from Cairo...which are not confirmed...say that Premier Kassem of Iraq has arrested the top Communist officer in the Iraqi army. No reason was given...but Kassem has been reported alarmed over growing Communist influence.

The United States Supreme Court referred to the Jencks case today while upholding the action taken in criminal trials by two lower courts. In separate decisions...written by Justice Frankfurter...the Supreme Court said that congressional legislation, and not its own prior ruling in the Jencks case, now determinies what information from government files must be supplied to the defense in the course of federal prosecution.

In Tallahassee, the four white youths convicted of raping a Negro co-ed were sentenced today to life imprisonment. In returning a verdict of guilty, the jury had recommended mercy. Otherwise, the judge would have been required to impose the death penalty. No white man ever has gone to the electric chair in Florida for attacking a Negro woman. Thirty-seven Negroes have paid the supreme penalty for attacks on white women.

White House News Secretary Hagerty was operated on this afternoon for appendicitis. His condition...after removal of the appendix...is described as being "as comfortable as could be expected."

My colleague David Schoenbrun is standing by in Paris with a special report, so we switch now to the French capital.

SCHOENBRUN: French Foreign Minister Couve de Murville today reported to NATO on the results on rather the lack of results of the last six weeks of talks in Geneva. As the resident minister in this capital of the Atlantic Alliance, the French diplomat spoke for his British and American colleagues who could not be here in person for today's meeting. He was speaking, therefore, not only for France but for America and Britain too, a fact that should give at least symbolic satisfaction to the French who've been demanding for a long time now a close coordination of the three big powers of NATO who, the French insist, should speak with one voice to support one common policy for the security of the Free World. This French view of three power cooperation was laid down first in a letter sent by General DeGaulle to Prime Minister Harold Macmillan and to President Eisenhower last September 24th. The text of that letter has never been published but some of the major points it made have been revealed in all three capitals this past month and have been the storm center of a controversy that has shaken the Atlantic Alliance. Hardly a week goes by without some new irritation, some prodding of the old sore. Indeed the controversy between France and her principal partners in NATO did not begin on September 24th last year and it was not provoked by Charles DeGaulle alone. The (indistinct) of the Atlantic Alliance, the frictions between France and America have very deep roots which wree planted in the soil of the Fourth Republic long before that ill fated institution collapsed.

The roots of evil that are poisoning the Atlantic Alliance were planted first on the soil of North Africa. That's where the trouble began and that's where it must end or the Alliance may end with it. Ever since the Algerian revolt broke out in November, 1954, there has been a strain between France and America and a sickness inside the Atlantic Alliance. Algeria is the principal source of infection but it's not the only source. Like a cancer that spreads through a healthy body, the clash of interests in North Africa from Rabat, Morocco to Cairo, Egypt has been sapping the strength of the Western allies. When finally, as was inevitable, the Tunisian nationalist leader Habib Bourguiba and the King of Morocco came back from exile in triumph we moved immediately to win back their friendship in order to make that area more secure, more friendly for the West. And, just as inevitably, that move, necessary though it was, ended defeated in the frustrated French and when, as was also inevitable, Bourguiba and the King of Morocco expressed their sympathy for the cause of Algerian independence the situation worsened because this for the French was a stab in the back, indeed in the heart. Two years ago the British and the Americans sent arms to Bourguiba to build up his small forces, to give some solidarity to his regime, and this infuriated the French because Bourguiba was helping the Algerian rebels. The Atlantic Alliance was already in danger of being shipwrecked in the Mediterranean region. Coming as this did after the very grave crisis of Suez, when America joined with Russia in condemning the Anglo-French invasion of Egypt, it almost broke up the Alliance. Now all of that happened before Charles deGaulle came back to power and this should be kept in mind at all times if we are to understand what is happening and what might be done to end this eternal menace to the Western world at a moment when we are challenged as never before by the Russians. Thus, when Charles DeGaulle came back to power we find that he inherited a long term sickness of the Alliance. It is the French peoples' feeling that the Americans were good allies in Europe but false allies in Africa. DeGaulle himself felt this very deeply but De Gaulle felt even more than this, for DeGaulle has a vision of the world, a vision of French grandeur and a vision too of the role of the West in its competition with the East. According to DeGaulle, NATO is an organization that is far too limited to Europe and to a very narrow military alliance. He thinks that the three powers of NATO ought to have a global strategy, a political one, an economic one and a military one to meet the Russians everywhere in every area to make our world safe. Now this is a policy he has expressed to President Eisenhower. President Eisenhower may feel very much the same way in principle but DeGaulle is asking in practice for some things that President Eisenhower simply cannot give to him. He cannot, for example, share atomic secrets with the French because we have a law preventing that and he cannot give the French a veto over our use of the atomic weapon as DeGaulle is demanding and as for a pool of help to the other countries in the world America is a big and rich nation with many interests; France is a small and not so rich nation and DeGaulle is asking for equality where equality really doesn't exist and so France and America are far apart with many irritations with DeGaulle feeling that we are false allies; with DeGaulle feeling he is being kept out of the councils of the great and we are irritated with the French because they won't integrate their air defense with our air defense. They won't give us atomic bases in France in the common cause. We feel that they're trying to blackmail us. Now where does this end up? Which one of these sides is going to win its debate? Only one thing is predictable, only Russia can win this kind of debate. It is more urgent than ever for Eisenhower and DeGaulle to get together and with Macmillan too to try to work out a truly common front of the Western world to face the crisis that we are bound to face over Berlin.

Now back to Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: That was my colleague, David Schoenbrun, reporting from Paris on the "sickness" in the NATO alliance.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BYRAN

MURROW: The British historian Macaulay said: "It is evident that many great and useful objects can be obtained in this world only by cooperation. It is equally evident," he said, "that there cannot be efficent cooperation if men proceed on the principle that they must not cooperate for one object unless they agree about other objects."

Goodnight and good luck.

Edward R. Murrow Tues., June 23, 1959

This is the news:

Congress completed action on a compromise housing bill today and sent it to President Eisenhower for his signature. The measure contains public housing features which are opposed by the Administration, and Budget Director Maurice Stans says he will recommend to the President that he exercise his veto power. The vote in the House today was 241 to 177...a margin short of the two-thirds majority necessary to override a veto. The bill authorizes expenditures of 1-billion, 375-million dollars over a two-year period; it also contains provisions for continuing the mortgage insurance program administered by the F.H.A. The Senate passed the measure last night.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today issued a 72-page report calling for a "major transformation" in the foreign aid program. The committee would have much more emphasis placed on military assistance to Western Europe and on economic help to the under-developed countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America. It recommends enactment of a four-billion-dollar foreign aid measure...authorizing the Development Loan Fund each year (for the next five years) to borrow up to one billion dollars from the Treasury. It would also have President Eisenhower submit a definite plan for the progressive reduction and eventual elimination of virtually all economic assistance under the program, except loans. The committee report calls foreign aid "an indispensable tool" of American foreign policy.

~~At nine o'clock tonight, Eastern time,~~ Tonight Secretary of State Herter will make his radio and television report on the deadlocked foreign ministers conference. During the day, Mr. Herter briefed members of the House Foreign Affairs and Senate Foreign Relations Committees. Chairman Morgan of the House committee says, "We were assured that the policy of firmness will stand. No optimism was expressed by the secretary so far as the Russians are concerned." Republican Senator Dirksen (who heard the other briefing) says that Herter nevertheless has not given up hope that an agreement which could lead to a summit conference may be reached.

In London today, British Prime Minister Macmillan told the House of Commons that it would be "a mistake" to under-rate what has been accomplished thus far in the Geneva talks. "The positions," he said, "certainly are more clarified and in some respects nearer together."

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer and Economics Minister Erhard today exchanged a new set of letters in their intra-party dispute. Erhard had been offended by statements made by Adenauer, questioning his ability to serve as chancellor. Today, Adenauer sent a new letter to Erhard saying: "You have my full confidence as a politician and as a man. I am looking forward to a resumption of cooperation, full of trust." Erhard replied: "I am prepared to subjugate my personal sensitivities." But he insisted, "I must have the guarantee that I may continue my work undisturbed." Leaders of the Christian Democratic Party say that they now consider the argument settled.

President DeGaulle flew to Italy today for a five-day visit. He was greeted at the Milan airport by the president and premier of Italy and received a 101-gun salute. Officially, General DeGaulle is participating in the 100th anniversary celebration of battles which led to unification of the Italian states. The visit would appear, however, to have a deeper meaning. DeGaulle predicted today that his conversations with Italian leaders would be "of considerable importance for Europe and the world."

A French Army communique reports 534 Algerian rebels killed in action in the past week. French losses in the same period are listed as 39 dead.

In Argentina, President Frondizi has begun consulting various business and political leaders preparatory to forming a new coalition cabinet. In this, Frondizi is bowing to pressure from the Army, which has accused him of allowing Communists and followers of Peron to take part in the government. The former cabinet resigned last night.

Dr. Klaus Fuchs today was released from a British prison...after serving nine years and three months of a fourteen-year sentence for passing nuclear secrets to Russia. Police immediately escorted him to a Polish airliner, bound for East Berlin.

Steel negotiations WENT ON today...as (a wildcat strike) continued against the Jones & Laughlin plant in Pittsburgh. Two other steel mills in Cleveland, Ohio and Vandergrift, Pennsylvania, were crippled by similar walkouts. The wage policy committee of the United Steelworkers Union has been summoned to meet here in New York next Thursday. Union President David McDonald said the committee "always meets when we get close to the deadline." The present contracts expire a week from tomorrow.

In Springfield, Missouri...the riot by more than a hundred mental patients in a federal prison hospital has been put down by tear gas. All five guards who had been held hostage were released. Two of them suffered lacerations.

Edward R. Murrow: June 23, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Eight state governors called on President Eisenhower yesterday on their way to Russia, where they will meet heads of federated states of the Soviet Union. A week from today a deputy prime minister of the Soviet Union, Fral Kuzlov, will open a Soviet exposition in New York and then engage in a two-week tour of the country on an official visit. In August Vice President Nixon will go on a similar mission to Moscow, open an exposition there and tour the country officially. Yet this is the time when negotiations between the three Western powers and the Soviet Union over Berlin have broken down, and when, if the crisis were grave, the air would be filled with foreboding. Quiet, grim and discreet military preparations would be the order of the day. Exchanges of high officials would be in jeopardy, if not already postponed. Travelers would be frightened, if not actually forbidden to venture into the territory of their country's rivals. The world would know that the statesmen had failed, and that the consequences could be both tremendous and catastrophic.

It is well to point out what a grave international crisis is like to make it clear that the present breakdown of the four-power talks is not yet like this.

But to say what it is like is not easy. At present each side ~~is~~ is exercising skill and patience to avoid getting blame for a failure from world opinion. The West has re-affirmed its intention to uphold the freedom of West Berlin and its own right of occupation. The East has offered to extend the deadline of Western occupation but insists on a new regime in which Western troops are reduced to a symbolic handful, and access is under the control of East Germany. Ultimately, if neither side budges on essentials, the day will come when there must be a showdown. A showdown would mean the use of force, the use of force would be local war, and local war would bring a nuclear war dangerously close. But that is still some way off.

Before the four-power conference began, many insiders -- probably most insiders -- were sure it was going to succeed, that is, permit a meeting at the Summit. Khrushchev had acknowledged the legal right of the Western occupation of West Berlin, and had offered the status of a free city with United Nations participation. So the job of the conference, it seemed, was to substitute a new free city statute for the present Western rights of occupation.

For unexplained reasons the conference did not focus on a new West Berlin statute. Both sides presented their maximum terms, and when it came to minimum demands, something had happened to change the original concept of a probable agreement. Gromyko even tried to nullify Khrushchev's admission that the allies had a legal right to be in West Berlin. And somehow the issue over Berlin changed from the right of West Berlin to be free to the right of the West to be there. The two are not the same, though of course the right of West Berlin to be free is guaranteed by the continuation of the Western occupation.

But West Berlin could be free -- free in theory, that is -- as a free city guaranteed by the great powers with United Nations participation. The ten thousand Western troops in Berlin are themselves only a symbol. In event of war they could not by themselves defend West Berlin. So some other symbol should be conceivable. And if the West freely negotiated the nature of this symbol and the terms of a new statute, the Berlin issue could be honorably resolved, at least until its terms were violated or challenged by East Germany or the Soviet Union.

What presumably kept the conference from developing into this kind of negotiation was a hardening in the Kremlin. Khrushchev seems to have been tempted to take a tough line by noting the growing paralysis of NATO due to France's differences with its allies, and the break within the Adenauer ranks in West Germany. He may have thought the Allies were conveniently going to pieces for his benefit.

If Western disunity brought on the tough line, the situation is one that Western unity might correct. And the thing to watch for, is not only talks with the Russians, but between President Eisenhower, President De Gaulle and Prime Minister Macmillan. It just may be that Khrushchev has overplayed his hand. By getting tough he might actually drive the Allies together. Stalin managed to unite them when all other arguments failed. It could happen again.

Back in a moment.-

George Bryan-

Word for Today

Nations...as well as individuals...forget their differences in the face of common danger. And Khrushchev, simply by getting tough, might cause Allied unity to be restored. A long time ago, John Dryden noted that friendship is made more sacred by adversity. And E.W. Howe said, "A good scare is worth more to a man than good advice."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, JUNE 23, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

Congress completed action on a compromise housing bill today and sent it to President Eisenhower for his signature. The measure contains public housing features which are opposed by the Administration, and Budget director Maurice Stans says he will recommend to the President that he exercise his veto power. The vote in the House today was 241 to 177...a margin short of the two-thirds majority necessary to override a veto. The bill authorizes expenditures of 1-billion, 375-million dollars over a two-year period; it also contains provisions for continuing the mortgage insurance program administered by the F.H.A. The Senate passed the measure last night.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee today issued a 72-page report calling for a major transformation in the foreign aid program. The committee would have much more emphasis placed on military assistance to Western Europe and on economic help to the under-developed countries of Asia, Africa and Latin America. It recommends enactment of a four-billion-dollar foreign aid measure...authorizing the Development Loan Fund each year (for the next five years) to borrow up to one billion dollars from the Treasury. It would also have President Eisenhower submit a definite plan for the progressive reduction and eventual elimination of virtually all economic assistance under the program, except loans. The committee report calls foreign aid "an indispensable tool" of American foreign policy.

Tonight, Secretary of State Herter will make his radio and television report on the deadlocked foreign ministers conference. During the day, Mr. Herter briefed members of the House Foreign Affairs and Senate Foreign Relations Committees. Chairman Morgan of the House committee says, "We were assured that the policy of firmness will stand. No optimism was expressed by the secretary so far as the Russians are concerned." Republic Senator Dirksen (who heard the other briefing) says that Herter nevertheless has not given up hope that an agreement which could lead to a summit conference may be reached.

In London today, British Prime Minister Mammillan told the House of Commons that it would be "a mistake" to under-rate what has been accomplished thus far in the Geneva talks. "The positions," he said, "certainly are more clarified and in some respects nearer together."

In West Germany, Chancellor Adenauer and Economics Minister Erhard today exchanged a new set of letters in their intra-party dispute. Erhard had been offended by statements made by Adenauer questioning his ability to serve as chancellor. Today, Adenauer sent a new letter to Erhard saying: "You have my full confidence as a politician and as a man. I am looking forward to a resumption of cooperation, full of trust." Erhard replied: "I am prepared to subjugate my personal sensitivities." But he insisted, "I must have the guarantee that I may continue my work undisturbed." Leaders of the Christian Democratic Party say that they now consider the argument settled.

President DeGaulle flew to Italy today for a five-day visit. He was greeted at the Milan airport by the president and premier of Italy and received a 101-gun salute. Officially, General DeGaulle is participating in the 100-th anniversary celebration of battles which led to unification of the Italian states. The visit would appear, however, to have a deeper meaning. DeGaulle predicted today that his conversations with Italian leaders would be "of considerable importance for Europe and the world."

A French Army communique reports 534 Algerian rebels killed in action in the past week. French losses in the same period are listed as 39 dead.

In Argentina, President Frondizi has begun consulting various business and political leaders preparatory toforming a new coalition cabinet. In this, Frondizi is bowing to pressure from the Army, which has accused him of allowing Communists and followers of Peron to take part in the government. The former cabinet resigned last night.

Dr. Klaus Fuchs today was released from a British prison...after serving nine years and three months of a fourteen-year sentence for passing nuclear secrets to Russia. Police immediately escorted him to a Polish airliner, bound for East Berlin.

Steel negotiations went on today...as a wildcat strike continued against the Jones & Laughlin plant in Pittsburgh. Two other steel mills in Cleveland, Ohio and Vandergrift, Pennsylvania, were crippled by similar walkouts. The wage policy committee of the United Steelworkers Union has been summoned to meet here in New York next Thursday. Union President David McDonald said the committee "always meets when we get close to the deadline." The present contracts expire a week from tomorrow.

In Springfield, Missouri...the riot by more than a hundred mental patients in a federal prison hospital has been put down by tear gas. All five guards who had been held hostage were released. Two of them suffered lacerations.

Eight state governors called on President Eisenhower yesterday on their way to Russia, where they will meet heads of federated states of the Soviet Union. A week from today a deputy prime minister of the Soviet Union, Fral Kuzlov, will open a Soviet exposition in New York and then engage in a two-week tour of the country on an official visit. In August Vice President Nixon will go on a similar mission to Moscow, open an exposition there and tour the country officially. Yet this is the time when negotiations between the three Western powers and the Soviet Union over Berlin have broken down, and when, if the crisis were grave, the air would be filled with foreboding. Quiet, grim and discreet military preparations would be the order of the day. Exchanges of high officials would be in jeopardy, if not already postponed. Travelers would be frightened, if not actually forbidden to venture into the territory of their country's rivals. The world would know that the statesmen had failed, and that the consequences could be both tremendous and catastrophic.

It is well to point out what a grave international crisis is like to make it clear that the present breakdown of the four-power talks is not yet like this.

But to say what it is like is not easy. At present each side is exercising skill and patience to avoid getting blame for a failure from world opinion. The West has re-affirmed its intention to uphold the freedom of West Berlin and its own right of occupation. The East has offered to extend the deadline of Western occupation but insists on a new regime in which Western troops are reduced to a symbolic handful, and access is under the control of East Germany. Ultimately, if neither side budges on essentials, the day will come when there must be a showdown. A showdown would mean the use of force, the use of force would be local war, and local war would bring a nuclear war dangerously close. But that is still some way off.

Before the four-power conference began, many insiders - probably most insiders - were sure it was going to succeed, that is, permit a meeting at the Sumimt. Khrushchev had acknowledged the legal right of the Western occupation of West Berlin, and had offered the status of a free city with United Nations participation. So the job of the conference, it seemed, was to substitute a new free city statute for the present Western rights of occupation.

For unexplained reasons the conference did not focus on a new West Berlin statute. Both sides presented their maximum terms, and when it came to minimum demands, something had happened to change the original concept of a probable agreement. Gromyko even tried to nullify Khrushchev's admission that the allies had a legal right to be in West Berlin. And somehow the issue over Berlin changed from the right of West Berlin to be free to the right of the West to be there. The two are not the same, though of course the right of West Berlin to be free is guaranteed by the continuation of the Western occupation.

But West Berlin could be free- free in theory, that is - as a free city guaranteed by the great powers with United Nations participation. The ten thousand Western troops in Berlin are themselves only a symbol. In event of war they could not by themselves defend West Berlin. So some other symbol should be conceivable. And if the West freely negotiated the nature of this symbol and the terms of a new statute, the Berlin issue could be honorably resolved, at least until its terms were violated or challenged by East Germany or the Soviet Union.

What presumably kept the conference from developing into this kind of negotiation was a hardening in the Kremlin. Khrushchev seems to have been tempted to take a tough line by noting the growing paralysis of NATO due to France's differences with its allies, and the break within the Adenauer ranks in West Germany. He may have thought the Allies were conveniently going to pieces for his benefit.

If Western disunity brought on the tough line, the situation is one that Western unity might correct. And the thing to watch for, is not only talks with the Russians, but between President Eisenhower, President DeGaulle and Prime Minister Macmillan. It just may be that Khrushchev has overplayed his hand. By getting tough he might actually drive the Allies together. Stalin managed to unite them when all other arguments failed. It could happen again.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: Nations...as well as individuals...forget their differences in the face of common danger. And Khrushchev, simply by getting tough, might cause Allied unity to be restored. A long time ago, John Dryden noted that friendship is made more sacred by adversity. And E.W. Howe said, "A good scare is worth more to a man than good advice."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Wed., June 24, 1959

This is the news:

According to a French Army communique, the rebel force which attacked the Algerian port city of Bone early today has been wiped out. The action took place on the outskirts of Bone...about a mile from the city limits... and lasted for eight hours. For the first five hours, the rebels were engaged by French commandos...driven into a pocket...and then surrounded by tanks. Fighter-bombers were dispatched to the scene of the action, and for the next three hours the rebel force...said to number forty-six men...was bombed and strafed. The French say that thirty-one of the rebels were killed and fifteen captured. None escaped. Six French soldiers died in the operation. The number of French wounded is not reported. It was the largest direct attack made by the rebels on a majpr city since the start of the four-and-a-half-year-old Algerian revolt...even though it appears, from its size, to have been a suicide mission. (I should like to examine the Algerian problem further in a few minutes).

→

Chancellor Adenauer of West Germany wants a meeting with President Eisenhower, British Prime Minister Macmillan and French President DeGaulle before the foreign ministers conference resumes on July thirteenth. My colleague, Ernest Leiser, cables me from Bonn tonight that Adenauer has been "rebuffed" in his efforts to arrange such a meeting. The reason given, Leiser says, is that it is "technically impossible" for the heads of the four Western governments to get together. This is partly true because of General DeGaulle's current visit to Italy. Leiser reports, however, that the main reason the meeting almost certainly will not be held is that both President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Macmillan are understood to be unenthusiastic about the idea. Publicly, the West German government is saying that Adenauer has taken no initiative to bring such a meeting about. Although this is formally correct, he has let it be known that he thinks a meeting of Western heads of government should take place within the next three weeks. If this meeting does not occur, it is highly likely that Adenauer will go to London and have a talk with Macmillan anyway.

He does not agree with the prime minister that the West should meet Russia at the summit and would seek to convince Macmillan that real danger is involved.

In Congress today, Secretary of State Herter received praise from both sides of the aisle for his report to the American people last night on the deadlocked foreign ministers conference. Senate Democratic Leader Johnson said it was a "good" talk, placing the blame for the stalemate "squarely where it belongs"---on Russia. Senate Republican Leader Dirksen said that Mr. Herter had "demonstrated forcefully that he is worthy of his spurs as secretary of state."

In the House today, Republicans joined Southern Democrats to pass a states rights bill strongly opposed by the Administration. The measure... which now goes to the Senate...provides that federal laws may not override state laws in the same field, such as civil rights. There are two exceptions to this provision. A federal law may cancel out a state law on the same subject if Congress at some future date says specifically that it may. Or, if the state law is in direct conflict with the federal statute. The House passed a similar bill last year, but it died in the Senate.

The Senate today passed legislation authorizing the expenditure of more than four billion dollars for running various federal agencies, including the Department of Health, Education and Welfare. A move to cut down on the money for this department was defeated, and the measure... altogether...authorizes 388-million dollars more than the President requested. More than 180-million dollars extra was voted for the research programs carried on by the National Institutes of Health. The House has passed a similar bill...authorizing slightly less money, and the two measures now go to a conference committee.

The Senate Rules Committee today approved a measure that would make public the names and salaries of all Senate employes. The vote in the committee was unanimous.

The Senate Finance Committee voted 9 to 8 for the repeal of the 10 percent federal excise tax on all passenger travel. But strong resistance to the measure is expected in the House.

President Eisenhower today issued a special statement calling again for an increase in the federal gasoline tax...in order to put the nation's super-highway program on a pay-as-you-go basis. He said that by not increasing the tax, Congress already had jeopardized "the orderly development of our vital road network." It was a situation, he said, in which every motorist should show "great concern".

The steel industry today proposed an indefinite extension of the union contracts due to expire next Tuesday midnight. But the spokesman for the industry denied a story..published in Iron Age..that the companies were about to make a new settlement proposal. The companies' position, he said, is that there must be no increase in employment costs. Earlier in the day, the president of the steelworkers...David McDonald... had called the report "news to me." Negotiations in the steel dispute are continuing.

A federal judge today refused to dismiss the contempt of Congress charges brought against Bernard Goldfine, the Boston industrialist who befriended Sherman Adams. Goldfine is charged with refusing to answer questions about his gifts to Adams put to him by a House investigating subcommitee.

In Argentina, President Frondizi has reshuffled his cabinet in an effort to stave off criticism and stay in office. The major change has the member of a small minority party... Alvero - ALBO ga Rye ~~Alvero Alsogaray~~... taking over both the ministeries of labor and economics. The new cabinet member thus becomes virtual "czar" of economics in Argentina.

Edward R. Murrow: June 24, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

The sudden outburst of rebel ~~strength at Bone~~ activity in Algeria puts a stop to the confident French talk that the Algerian revolution has been brought to the point of collapse. De Gaulle has done wonders, but he has not done this. Peace still eludes him. He has uprooted the army disloyalists who put the cause of the Colonists ahead of their duty to France. He has extended civil rights to the Moslems, and laid the ground for a new social order in which they will be first-class citizens running their own affairs. He has made integration attractive instead of a doom. But he has not made it as alluring as independence. The war goes on.

The test of De Gaulle's Fifth Republic is peace in Algeria. He can achieve his other goals - a reformed parliamentary system, a stabilized economy, restored prestige in the world, and still fail if he does not make peace in Algeria. He and his success are captives in that land. If he fails there, he fails everywhere. The alternative to him last year was a coup by fascist colonels. It will be the same if he does not wind up the business of bloodshed and hatred in North Africa. The survival of democracy in France itself is at stake.

But it is only fair to point out that in North Africa De Gaulle may be attempting the impossible. He cannot make Algeria independent, throwing away the labor, investment and talent of a century of colonists, whose contribution is essential to France itself. He cannot make it less than independent - so it now seems - without continuing a war that saps France's lifeblood, its economy and the good will of its allies. There are, to be sure, glimpses of a Sahara brought to bloom, running with oil, and of the birth of a new non-colonial commonwealth of French associates in which Algeria would have both wealth and well-being. But this vision also calls for peace.

American policy is much more at the mercy of events in Algeria than we like to think. By our nature and tradition we are committed to the cause of people seeking independence from imperial rule. So we are bound to be sympathetic with the Algerian revolutionists. We sympathized with them very warmly when the Fourth Republic tried to crush them without offering the basic social changes De Gaulle has now begun. But if it is independence they want, we still sympathize with them.

This is more than sentimentality on our part. It is both spiritually and politically profitable. It preserves for us the regard of the common people of Africa, the Middle East, and Asia. We do not like or deserve to be called imperialists. It affects our position in the world. We want it to be part of our strength that we encourage people who aspire to be free. So we do not see Algeria as De Gaulle sees it.

But we are the victims of two irreconcilable facts in our French policy. We cannot see the Algerians as De Gaulle sees them, but he is our ally in Europe, and we need him for our own security. De Gaulle complains because we do not support him in Algeria, which helps keep the revolt alive. He has a right to complain. We make him weaker. But we cannot suppress our natures, repudiate our traditions and snuff out our beliefs in the liberties of common people for De Gaulle's sake, even if it is in our interest to have De Gaulle a pillar of strength in Europe. We are inconsistent. We cannot dispense with the co-operation of France in Europe. But we cannot think like De Gaulle about Algeria.

The British, who are older hands in world affairs than we are, understand these philosophical pitfalls better than we. They know that there may be problems for which solutions simply do not exist. "One works at problems, one does not necessarily solve them," Prime Minister Macmillan said on a recent visit to this country.

Well, the State Department and the opinion-makers in this country have a problem to work on - how to encourage freedom in North Africa and still preserve the alliance with France. They had better work at it wisely, for this may be one of the problems for which there is no solution.

Word for Today

There was a character...created by Charles Dickens...called Mr. Podsnap, who felt that whatever he put behind him automatically ceased to exist. "Mr. Podsnap," says Dickens, "even acquired a peculiar flourish of his right arm in often clearing the world of its most difficult problems by sweeping them behind him." Certainly the problem of Algeria cannot so easily be swept aside.

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Thurs., June 25, 1959

This is the news:

The United Steelworkers Union said today that it would extend its present contracts in the basic steel industry until July 15th, if any benefits won in the continued negotiations were made retroactive. The union was answering an industry proposal that the contracts be extended indefinitely beyond midnight Tuesday, when they are due to expire. There was no mention in the industry proposal of retroactivity. And a spokesman for the industry said...again...that there must be no increase in employment costs. He warned that if the union did not agree to an extension today, the steel companies would have to start banking their furnaces tomorrow. The union president, David McDonald, notified the twelve major steel producers of his offer...after being authorized to do so by the union's wage policy committee. "The union," he said, "desires to avoid a shutdown." It is offering to extend the contracts until the fifteenth of July "for the sole purpose of providing additional time in which to attempt to conclude a settlement."

—>

(management reply to come?)

President Eisenhower today vetoed the price-support measures for tobacco and wheat. The wheat bill...while reducing acreage allotments by 25 percent...would have raised the level of government price supports to 90 percent of parity. Mr. Eisenhower...in his veto message...called this "a step backward", one which would make the wheat program "excessively expensive." The other vetoed measure would have held price supports for tobacco at the 1958 level for the next four or five years. The Administration wants the supports to be more flexible.

The Senate today passed...and sent to the White House...legislation raising the temporary ceiling on the national debt to 295-billion dollars.

—7

This is an increase of seven billion dollars over the present "temporary" debt ceiling. Soon after the Senate took this action, the Treasury announced that it will borrow five billion dollars in new cash early next month in order to pay its bills through September. It will raise the money by auctioning off short-term securities.

The Senate also voted today to repeal the 10 percent federal tax on passenger travel...but to take away the special tax advantage now enjoyed by people who own stock. Henceforth, in figuring their income tax, stockholders would not be able to subtract 4 percent of their income derived from dividends. These were amendments tacked onto a bill which may be passed later tonight.

The Senate Rackets Committee today resumed public hearings on the activities of the teamsters union. The business manager of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegraph...William POKE Poch...testified that (THE NEWSPAPER) paid an official of the union more than 100-thousand dollars over a nine-year period in order to avoid labor trouble. He identified the teamsters official as Theodore COZA Cozza, president of Local 211 in Pittsburgh. Cozza was placed on the payroll of the newspaper, he said, but did "little work". When Cozza was called to the witness stand, he invoked the Fifth Amendment.

The joint congressional committee...inquiring into the effect which an all-out nuclear attack would have on this country...received a report today from the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization. The committee was told that such an attack...involving some 260 nuclear weapons...probably would result in the death of 48-million, 900-thousand Americans. The experts "guessed" that about 23-million persons would be killed the first day...and that nearly 26-million others would suffer such severe injuries that they would die. It was pointed out that "even with this weight of attack," about three out of every four people in the United States would survive. The chairman of the committee...Representative Holifield of California...said that the "fact" is that the country has not faced up to the problem of survival in the event of nuclear attack.

The House Appropriations Committee refused today to grant President Eisenhower's request for two and a half million dollars for an underground shelter in Texas, from which civil defense operations might be directed if nuclear war comes. It approved a nine-million-dollar request for modernization of the National Space Agency's jet propulsion laboratory in Pasadena, California.

Tonight...at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California...the Air Force launched a Discoverer satellite, carrying a "life capsule" which it hoped to place in orbit and then retrieve as the satellite makes its 17th pass over the Pacific Ocean area. It is too early to tell whether orbit was successfully achieved. The satellite capsule would be ejected 26 hours after launching...if all goes well... and then parachuted to earth.

Russia today delivered notes to the United States and seven other countries...formally proposing the creation of an atom-free zone in the Balkans. Khrushchev first made the proposal in a speech as he was visiting Albania early this month.

In Rome today, President DeGaulle of France conferred with Italian leaders. They reportedly discussed...among other subjects...a proposal by DeGaulle for a security pact for the Western Mediterranean, linked to NATO.

In Spoleto, Italy... the condition of Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong is still reported grave, although he showed some slight improvement during the day. Armstrong is suffering from acute pneumonia. His physician says that reports that he suffered a heart attack are not true.

Averell Harriman can have a visa to go to China as a newsman but Justice William O. Douglas can't. This is the decision of the State Department. It told the National Geographic that the Supreme Court Justice does not qualify for a visa under procedures adopted by the Department.

Both the North American Newspaper Alliance, for which Governor Harriman is writing, and the National Geographic, which proposed to send Justice Douglas to China, are on the State Department's list of thirty-one organizations entitled to receive visas for Mainland China. When Governor Harriman was given a visa, National Geographic believed the way was clear to send Justice Douglas as its representative. He is a celebrated traveler, his books on Central Asia and the Middle East are among the most highly regarded in that field. It is not unfair to say that he is more of a professional traveler and more of a professional writer on his travels than Mr. Harriman. His qualifications to write about China are beyond challenge. But the State Department ignored his qualifications, and centered on a single disqualification-- he has another job. He is a high government official. The Department does not argue that if he went it would be a step nearer de facto recognition of Communist China. All it says is that he would not be a full-time correspondent.

If anyone lifts an eyebrow at this and asks how Averell Harriman comes to be regarded as a full-time correspondent, there is an answer. Dean Acheson, who represented him as his Attorney at the State Department, contended that he has no other employment than with the North American Newspaper Alliance. Mr. Acheson did not contend that Mr. Harriman has no other means of support, or that journalism is his livelihood. After all, Mr. Harriman is the heir to the Harriman railroad fortune. Mr. Acheson said his work for the news syndicate is his only job at present. And he was prepared to go into court to establish that fact.

When the State Department set up its procedures about visas to China, it may have intended to restrict the privilege to professional journalists. But it did not say so in so many words. That let Mr. Harriman slip through. Justice Douglas couldn't.

It would be hard to argue that it makes a dime's worth of difference to United States interests to have Mr. Harriman go to China and to keep Justice Douglas out. Obviously both men should be free to go. Mr. Harriman is an elder statesman of acute political judgment, and anything he can report on conditions in China would be of prime interest. What Justice Douglas would have to say might be of even greater interest. He has won his spurs as a keen observer of foreign peoples and countries.

But the State Department denies the Editor of the National Geographic the right to choose Justice Douglas, for all his attributes. It exercises a control over the Editor's selection of his own correspondent. Possibly the Department should have some control, so as to prevent some periodical or agency sending someone notoriously undesirable for political reasons. But to rule out a man, because he has a job, a job that happens to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, is hardly a tenable position.

The Worthy case, which raises the question of the right of the State Department to restrict the travel of newsmen, has been appealed to the Supreme Court. No doubt it is improper to assume, that Justice Douglas would rule against the State Department in that case, though it is not improper to point out, that he is one of the steadfast liberals in the court, and the liberals tend to prefer individual freedom, to arbitrary government regulations. But if the Worthy case does come before the court, Justice Douglas presumably would have to disqualify himself from judging it, since he has himself experienced State Department control. So the State Department not only has silenced Justice Douglas on China, it may also have silenced him on its right to silence him.

Back in a moment —

George Bryan —

Word for Today

The State Department has ruled that Justice Douglas may not be granted a passport to visit Red China because he has a job. Mr. Harriman, who is a millionaire...but has no job except with the North American Newspaper Alliance... was issued a passport. One recalls the observation made by the elder Oliver Weldell Holmes a hundred years ago: "Logic is logic, that's all I say."

Goodnight and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JUNE 25, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

The United Steelworkers Union said today that it would extend its present contracts in the basic steel industry until July 15th, if any benefits won in the continued negotiations were made retroactive. The union was answering an industry proposal that the contracts be extended indefinitely beyond midnight Tuesday, when they are due to expire. There was no mention in the industry proposal of retroactivity. And a spokesman for the industry said...again...that there must be no increase in employment costs. He warned that if the union did not agree to an extension today, the steel companies would have to start banking their furnaces tomorrow. The union president, David McDonald, notified the twelve major steel producers of his offer...after being authorized to do so by the union's wage policy committee. "The union," he said, "desires to avoid a shutdown." It is offering to extend the contracts until the fifteenth of July "for the sole purpose of providing additional time in which to attempt to conclude a settlement."

President Eisenhower today vetoed the price-support measures for tobacco and wheat. The wheat bill...while reducing acreage allotments by 25 percent... would have raised the level of government price supports to 90 percent of parity. Mr. Eisenhower...in his veto message...called this "a step backward," one which would make the wheat program "excessively expensive," The other vetoed measure would have held price supports for tobacco at the 1958 level for the next four or five years. The Administration wants the supports to be more flexible.

The Senate today passed...and sent to the White House...legislation raising the temporary ceiling on the national debt to 295-billion dollars. This is an increase of seven billion dollars over the present "temporary" debt ceiling. Soon after the Senate took this action, the Treasury announced that it will borrow five billion dollars in new cash early next month in order to pay its bills through September. It will raise the money by auctioning off short-term securities.

The Senate also voted today to repeal the 10-percent federal tax on passenger travel...but to take away the special tax advantage now enjoyed by people who own stock. Henceforth, in figuring their income tax, stockholders would not be able to subtract 4 percent of theirincome derived from dividends. These were amendments tacked onto a bill which may be passed later tonight.

The Senate Rackets Committee today resumed public hearings on the activities of the teamsters union. The business manager of the Pittsburgh Sun-Telegrahh... William Poch...testified that the newspaper paid an official of the union more than 100-thousand dollars over a nine-year period in order to avoid labor trouble. He identified the teamsters official as Theodore Cozza, president of Local 211 in Pittsburgh. Cozza was placed on the payroll of the newspaper, he said, but did "little work." When Cozza was called to the witness stand, he invoked the Fifth Amendment.

The joint congressional committee...inquiring into the effect which an all-out nuclear attack would have on this country...received a report today from the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization. The committee was told that such an attack...involving some 260 nuclear weapons...probably would result in the death of 48-million, 900-thousand Americans. The experts "guessed" that about 23-million persons would be killed the first day...and that nearly 26-million others would suffer such severe injuries that they would die. It was pointed out that "even with this weight of attack," about three out of every four people in the United States would survive. The chairman of the committee...Representative Holifield of California...said that the "fact" is that the country has not faced up to the problem of survival in the event of nuclear attack.

The House Appropriations Committee refused today to grant President

Eisenhower's request for two and a half million dollars for an underground shelter in Texas, from which civil defense operations might be directed if nuclear war comes. It approved a nine-million-dollar request for modernization of the National Space Agency's jet propulsion laboratory in Pasadena, California.

Tonight...At Vandenberg Air Force Base in California...the Air Force launched a Discoverer satellite, carrying a "life capsule" which it hoped to place in orbit and then retrieve as the satellite makes its 17th pass over the Pacific Ocean area. It is too early to tell whether orbit was successfully achieved. The satellite capsule would be ejected 26 hours after launching... if all goes well... and then parachuted to earth.

Russia today delivered notes to the United States and seven other countries... formally proposing the creation of an atom-free zone in the Balkans. Khrushchev first made the proposal in a speech as he was visiting Albania early this month.

In Rome today, President DeGaulle of France conferred with Italian leaders. They reportedly discussed...among other subjects...a proposal by DeGaulle for a security pact for the Western Mediterranean, linked to NATO.

In Spoleto, Italy...the condition of Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong is still reported grave, although he showed some slight improvement during the day. Armstrong is suffering from acute pneumonia. His physician says that reports that he suffered a heart attack are not true.

Averell Harriman can have a visa to go to China as a newsman but Justice William O. Douglas can't. This is the decision of the State Department. It told the National Geographic that the Supreme Court Justice does not qualify for a visa under procedures adopted by the Department.

Both the North American Newspaper Alliance, for which Governor Harriman is writing, and the National Geographic, which proposed to send Justice Douglas to China, are on the State Department's list of thirty-one organizations entitled to receive visas for Mainland China. When Governor Harriman was given a visa,

National Geographic believed the way was clear to send Justice Douglas as its representative. He is a celebrated traveler, his books on Central Asia and the Middle East are among the most highly regarded in that field. It is not unfair to say that he is more of a professional traveler and more of a professional writer on his travels than Mr. Harriman. His qualifications to write about China are beyond challenge. But the State Department ignored his qualifications, and centered on a single disqualification -- he has another job. He is a high government official. The Department does not argue that if he went it would be a step nearer de facto recognition of Communist China. All it says is that he would not be a full-time correspondent.

If anyone lifts an eyebrow at this and asks how Averell Harriman comes to be regarded as a full-time correspondent, there is an answer. Dean Acheson, who represented him as his Attorney at the State Department, contended that he has no other employment than with the North American Newspaper Alliance. Mr. Acheson did not contend that Mr. Harriman has no other means of support, or that journalism is his livelihood. After all, Mr. Harriman is the heir to the Harriman railroad fortune. Mr. Acheson said his work for the news syndicate is his only job at present. And he was prepared to go into court to establish that fact.

When the State Department set up its procedures about visas to China, it may have intended to restrict the privilege to professional journalists. But it did not say so in so many words. That let Mr. Harriman slip through. Justice Douglas couldn't.

It would be hard to argue that it makes a dime's worth of difference to United States interests to have Mr. Harriman go to China and to keep Justice Douglas out. Obviously, both men should be free to go. Mr. Harriman is an elder statesman of acute political judgement, and anything he can report on conditions in China would be of prime interest. What Justice Douglas would have to say might be of even greater interest. He has won his spurs as a keen observer of foreign peoples and countries.

The State Department denies the Editor of the National Geographic the right to choose Justice Douglas for all his attributes. It exercises a control over the Editor's selection of his own correspondent. Possibly the Department should have some control so as to prevent some periodical or agency sending someone notoriously undesirable for political reasons. But to rule out a man because he has a job, a job that happens to be Associate Justice of the Supreme Court, is hardly a tenable position.

The Worthy case, which raises the question of the right of the State Department to restrict the travel of newsmen, has been appealed to the Supreme Court. No doubt it is improper to assume that Justice Douglas would rule against the State Department in that case, though it is not improper to point out that he is one of the steadfast liberals in the court, and the liberals tend to prefer individual freedom to arbitrary government regulations. But if the Worthy case does come before the court, Justice Douglas presumably would have to disqualify himself from judging it, since he has himself experienced State Department control. So the State Department not only has silenced Justice Douglas on China, it may also have silenced him on its right to silence him.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: The State Department has ruled that Justice Douglas may not be granted a passport to visit Red China because he has a job. Mr. Harriman, who is a millionaire...but has no job except with the North American Newspaper Alliance... was issued a passport. One recalls the observation made by the elder Oliver Wendell Holmes a hundred years ago: "Logic is logic,that's all I say."

Goodnight and good luck!

Edward R. Murrow Fri., June 26, 1959

This is the news:

A Trans-World Airlines plane crashed in a thunderstorm near Milan, Italy, today...killing all 68 persons on board. Eyewitnesses say that the aircraft was struck by lightning soon after taking off from the Milan airport on a non-stop flight to Chicago. At least 22 of the passengers and six of the crew of nine were Americans. Three employes of the airline also were on board as non-paying passengers. The flight...No. 891...had originated in Athens and had made one previous stop in Rome. The wreckage...in what is believed to be the worst air accident ever to take place in Italy... was still burning two hours after the crash, despite heavy rain and the effort of seven fire-fighting companies.

In Washington, the Federal Aviation Agency today proposed that civil air regulations be revised so as to increase pilot proficiency and assure greater public safety. The agency says that it intends to ground all commercial pilots who have reached their 60th birthday and to prohibit all pilots 55 or older from commanding jets---unless they were qualified to pilot such aircraft before reaching age 55. Co-pilots would be required to qualify on every type of aircraft to which they might be assigned. The agency says that it will give interested parties an opportunity to file comments before putting these new orders in effect.

The United Steelworkers Union today broke off its negotiations with the four-man bargaining team representing the basic steel industry and proposed...instead...that the union negotiate directly with the twelve steel companies principally involved. The union president, David McDonald, suggested that the negotiating be done with the heads of these companies. The negotiating team representing the industry, he charged, had been indulging in a "farcical filibuster". [redacted]

Tonight, the industry turned down McDonald's suggestion. "No useful purpose," it said, "can be served by changing the present bargaining procedures." The negotiations thus would appear to be completely broken down.. ~~Here is some of the background:~~ Yesterday, the union offered to extend its present ~~negotiations~~ contracts until July 15th, if any benefits won in the continued negotiations were made retroactive. Last night, the industry rejected the offer...saying that any reference to retroactivity

"implied" that the steel companies eventually would grant concessions which they have no intention of making. Earlier, the union had turned down an industry offer to extend the contracts indefinitely...but nothing was said about making any agreements which might be reached retroactive. The strike deadline is now only four days away...since the present contracts expire at midnight Tuesday. Joseph Finnegan, director of the Federal Mediation Service, says that he knows of no government plan to intervene. But his agency, he points out, can always be invited to step in. Most of the steel companies say they will not start banking their furnaces until the week-end.

Teamsters President James Hoffa today made his 13th appearance before the Senate Rackets Committee in two and a half years. A member of the committee...Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts...accused Hoffa of failing to clean up his union as he had promised. In the past two days, Kennedy said, more than twenty union officials had invoked the Fifth Amendment when asked about alleged wrong-doing in the union. The Democratic senator told Hoffa: "I have no confidence in your ability...or willingness.. to get rid of any of these people." Hoffa replied that he was not going to be "stampeded"...but that each case would be investigated carefully before any decision was made. The teamsters president called Kennedy's labor bill "a strike-breaking, union-busting measure." "If you're trying to penalize the American labor movement because of Hoffa," said Hoffa, "then exempt them all except Hoffa."

→

Senate-House conferees agreed today on a compromise measure...continuing special corporate and excise taxes for another year. ~~Several of the provisions...written into the bill by the Senate yesterday...were knocked out.~~ One of these provisions...now eliminated...would have taken away the special tax advantage enjoyed by people who own stock. Another provision stricken from the bill would have increased the federal grants received by the states for old age assistance. It was agreed to repeal the 10 percent tax on local telephone charges, effective June 30th next year and to cut the 10 percent tax on passenger travel in half.

In Louisiana today, Governor Long fired the director of state hospitals and the superintendent of the mental institution to which he had been committed. The new officials...named to take their place...immediately gave the governor his release. Then within minutes a state judge signed papers dismissing the original commitment order...saying that, in view of what had happened, it was the only course he could take. Veteran political observers in Louisiana say that now that Long is again in fact governor, his opponents will feel his power. When a reporter asked Long this afternoon whether he would seek revenge, he said: "You wait and see."

We are happy to report the condition of Louis "Stachmo" Armstrong much improved. The latest dispatch from Italy says that he sat up in bed today....wiggled his fingers as though he were playing his trumpet...and hummed "The Sunny Side of the Street".

Queen Elizabeth and President Eisenhower today formally opened the St. Lawrence Seaway as a symbol of cooperation between Canada and the United States. For that story we switch to an American destroyer...cruising in that seaway...and my colleague, Robert Pierpoint.

(Tape runs 3:13
Ends on cue: "--to ERM in NY."

(Into final piece no later than 7:39:30)

Edward R. Murrow: June 26, 1959. 7.45 p.m.

Tonight this reporter departs this microphone for a year's leave of absence - (a departure which has been rather overpublicised). Permit me a few words of personal explanation. I haven't been fired....haven't quit.... my health is alright. For many years, there has been a clause in my long-term contract with C.B.S., permitting me to take a year off...I asked for it - and the corporation granted it. For twelve of the more than twenty years that I have been broadcasting, reports have been made at this time. They have represented the work of many people, here and abroad. I am especially indebted to Raymond Swing and Ed Bliss. We have tried not to abuse this privileged opportunity to communicate and have not knowingly done violence to the truth. I would speak my gratitude to my colleagues and critics - both too numerous to mention by name.

The next year will be spent travelling, reading, listening, keeping silent - in the language of radio, receiving instead of transmitting - trying to fill in some of the enormous gaps in my knowledge of this fascinating world. Unless curiosity curdles, I shall return to face this frightening microphone with a little more knowledge and assurance - at least the illusion that I know what I'm talking about.....being fully aware that some of you are of the opinion that this reporter has suffered from an acute case of that illusion for many years.. My thanks to those of you who have reminded me that an amplified voice does not increase the wisdom or understanding of the speaker.

At the end of the year I shall hope to have learned a little.. The hope may be vain....but the prospect of trying is most pleasing.

Batch Vickert

Back in a moment,

my old friend George Bryan —

This reporter now takes leave to travel, to examine at first-hand, to listen more and talk less...in hope that in the interval he may learn. Josh Billings had the right idea when he said, "It's better to know less than so much that ain't so." And of course Billings also had something when he said, "Silence is one of the hardest arguments to refute."

Goodnight and good luck!

CBS RADIO NETWORK

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

Friday, June 26, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 P.M.

MURROW: For that story we switch to an American destroyer cruising in that Seaway and my colleague, Robert Pierpoint.

PIERPOINT: As the President and Mrs. Eisenhower stepped off the Columbine and onto Canadian soil this morning they were ~~xx~~ met personally by Queen Elizabeth. "This is a very great honor", said President Eisenhower, smilingly shaking hands first with ~~the~~ the queen, dressed today ~~k~~ in bright ~~xxxx~~ turquoise silk, then with Prince Philip and Canada's Prime Minister Diefenbaker. After the brief welcoming ceremony at the airport the queen ~~xx~~ and the President rode together in one car down to the nearby St. Lawrence Seaway Canal while Mamie Eisenhower and Prince Philip followed behind in their own limousine. For perhaps the first time in history, at ~~xxxxxxx~~ least the first time in memory, no member of the U. S. Secret Service rode with the President who for once was guarded only by Britain's gracious queen and her military aide. At St. Lambert's Lock, just across the St. Lawrence River from Montreal, the official opening ceremonies were held. President Eisenhower called the 2300 mile long, billion dollar St. Lawrence Seaway the culmination of the x dreams of thousands of ~~xxxx~~ individuals on both sides of our common border. Far more than a technical and commercial triumph, said the President, it is above all a magnificent symbol to the entire world of the achievements possible to democratic nations working peacefully together. All the speakers, including the queen, were polite enough not to mention that most of the original impetus and the largest share of the funds for this vastly impressive project have come from Canada. Queen Elizabeth spoke in both English and fluent French, applauded the creative vision that had conceived and constructed a highway which will open the middle of this continent to the commerce of the world. It is, said the queen, a magnificent monument to the enduring friendship of our two nations. That part of the opening ceremonies completed, the Presidential party joined the queen for a short trip aboard her 5,000 ton yacht Britannia. As the stately blue-hulled ship pulled slowly away from her mooring and entered a symbolic gateway to the canal the queen and the president stood side by side on the bridge. Fireworks exploded ~~xxxxxx~~ overhead parachuting down flags of Canada, Britain and America. Colored balloons were loosed to float upwards; a band played; crowds along the banks ~~xxxx~~ shouted and waved and everyone, including the President and the Queen, seemed to be having a great time. Borrowing binoculars from Prince Philip, ~~xxx~~ President Eisenhower interestedly watched the ~~xxxx~~ locks machinery as the Britannia was lifted from one level to another. During the five hour trip a chicken in wine ~~xxx~~ sauce stately luncheon was given by the Queen for the Presidential party. Meantime thousands of people gathered along the banks of the canal, stared, waved and cheered. Some folks even brought children in baby carriages to see the Queen and the President sail by and a tribe of Iroquois Indianas parked canoes and teepees along the canal, saluted the royal and presidential parties in full indian dress. At Lake St. Louis the Britannia proceeded slowly by a smart review of 16 Canadian and American ~~Skipx~~ Navy ships in full flagged array. Finally about 5:00 o'clock this evening the presidential party took leave of the Britannia, the Queen and Prince Philip, and President and Mrs. Eisenhower flew back to Washington having helped come true ~~xxxxxxxx~~ a magnificent dream, the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway. This is Robert Pierpoint aboard the U. S. Navy Destroyer DuPont and now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

Trans.-7/2/59-B.K.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, JUNE 26, 1959
7:45 - 8:00 PM EDT

This is the news:

A Trans-World Airlines plane crashed in a thunderstorm near Milan, Italy, today...killing all 68 persons on board. Eyewitnesses say that the aircraft was struck by lightening soon after taking off from the Milan airport on a non-stop flight to Chicago. At least 22 of the passengers and six of the crew of nine were Americans. Three employees of the airline also were on board as non-paying passengers. The flight...No. 891...had originated in Athens and had made one previous stop in Rome. The wreckage...in what is believed to be the worst air accident ever to take place in Italy...was still burning two hours after the crash, despite heavy rain and the effort of seven fire-fighting companies.

In Washington, the Federal Aviation Agency today proposed that civil air regulations be revised so as to increase pilot proficiency and assure greater public safety. The agency says that it intends to ground all commercial pilots who have reached their 60th birthday and to prohibit all pilots 55 or older from commanding jets---unless they were qualified to pilot such aircraft before reaching age 55. Co-pilots would be required to qualify on every type of aircraft to which they might be assigned. The agency says that it will give interested parties an opportunity to file comments before putting these new orders in effect.

The United Steelworkers Union today broke off its negotiations with the four-man bargaining team representing the basic steel industry and proposed.... instead...that the union negotiate directly with the twelve steel companies principally involved. The union president, David McDonald, suggested that the negotiating be done with the heads of these companies. The negotiating team representing the industry, he charged, had been indulging in a "farcical filibuster."

Tonight, the industry turned down McDonald's suggestion. "No useful purpose", it said, "can be served by changing the present bargaining procedures." The negotiations thus would appear to be completely broken down. Yesterday, the union offered to extend its present contracts until July 15th, if any benefits won in the continued negotiations were made retroactive. Last night, the industry rejected the offer...saying that any reference to retroactivity "implied" that the steel companies eventually would grant concessions which they have no intention of making. Most of the steel companies say they will not start banking their furnaces until the week-end.

Teamsters President James Hoffa today made his 13th appearance before the Senate Rackets Committee in two and a half years. A member of the committee... Senator Kennedy of Massachusetts...accused Hoffa of failing to clean up his union as he had promised. In the past two days, Kennedy said, more than twenty union officials had invoked the Fifth Amendment when asked about alleged wrong-doing in the union. The Democratic senator told Hoffa: "I have no confidence in your ability...or willingness to get rid of any of these people." Hoffa replied that he was not going to be "stampeded"...but that each case would be investigated carefully before any decision was made. The teamsters president called Kennedy's labor bill "a strike-breaking, union-busting measure." "If you're trying to penalize the American labor movement because of Hoffa," said Hoffa, "then exempt them all except Hoffa."

Senate-House conferees agreed today on a compromise measure...continuing special corporate and excise taxes for another year.

In Louisiana today, Governor Long fired the director of state hospitals and the superintendent of the mental institution to which he had been committed. The new officials...named to take their place...immediately gave the governor his release. Then within minutes, a state judge signed papers dismissing the original commitment order...saying that, in view of what had happened, it was the only course he could take. Veteran observers in Louisiana say that now that Long is again in fact governor, his opponents will feel his power. When a reporter asked Long this afternoon whether he would seek revenge, he said: "You wait and see."

We are happy to report the condition of Louis "Satchmo" Armstrong much improved. The latest dispatch from Italy says that he sat up in bed today... wiggled his fingers as though he were playing his trumpet...and hummed "The Sunny Side of the Street."

Queen Elizabeth and President Eisenhower today formally opened the St. Lawrence Seaway as a symbol of cooperation between Canada and the United States. For that story we switch to an American destroyer...cruising in that Seaway...and my colleague, Robert Pierpoint.

PIERPOINT: As the President and Mrs. Eisenhower stepped off the Columbine and onto Canadian soil this morning they were met personally by Queen Elizabeth. "This is a very great honor," said President Eisenhower, smilingly shaking hands first with the Queen dressed today in bright turquoise silk, then with Prince Philip and Canada's Prime Minister Diefenbaker. After the brief welcoming ceremony at the airport the Queen and the President rode together in one car down to the nearby St. Lawrence Seaway Canal while Mamie Eisenhower and Prince Philip followed behind in their own limousine. For perhaps the first time in history, at least the first time in memory, no member of the U.S. Secret Service rode with the President who for once was guarded only by Britain's gracious queen and her military aide. At St. Lambert's Lock, just across the St. Lawrence River from Montreal, the official opening ceremonies were held. President Eisenhower called the 2300 mile long, billion dollar St. Lawrence Seaway the culmination of the dreams of thousands of individuals on both sides of our common border. Far more than a technical and commercial triumph, said the President, it is above all a magnificent symbol to the entire world of the achievements possible to democratic nations working peacefully together. All the speakers, including the Queen, were polite enough not to mention that most of the original impetus and the largest share of the funds for this vastly impressive project have come from Canada. Queen Elizabeth spoke in both English and fluent French, applauded the creative vision that had conceived and constructed a highway which will open the middle of this continent to the commerce of the world. It is, said the Queen, a magnificent monument to the enduring friendship of our two nations. That part of the opening ceremonies completed, the Presidential party joined the Queen for a short trip aboard her 5,000ton yacht Britannia. As the stately blue-hulled ship pulled slowly away from her mooring and entered a symbolic gateway to the canal the Queen and the President stood side by side on the bridge. Fireworks exploded overhead parachuting down flags of Canada, Britain and America. Colored balloons were loosed to float upwards; a band played; crowds along the banks shouted and waved and everyone, including the President and the Queen seemed to be having a great time. Borrowing binoculars from Prince Philip, President Eisenhower interestedly watched the locks machinery as the Britannia was lifted from one level to another. During the five hour trip a chicken in wine sauce stately luncheon was given by the Queen for the Presidential party. Meantime thousands of people gathered along the banks of the canal, stared, waved and cheered. Some folks even brought children in baby carriages to see the Queen and the President sail by and a tribe of Iriquois Indians parked canoes and teepees along the canal, saluted the royal and presidential parties in full Indian dress. At Lake St. Louis the Britannia proceeded slowly by a short review of 16 Canadian and American Navy ships in full flagged array. Finally about 5 o'clock this evening the presidential party took leave of the Britannia, the Queen and Prince Philip and President and Mrs. Eisenhower flew back to Washington having helped come true a magnificent dream, the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway. This is Robert Pierpoint aboard the U.S. Navy Destroyer DuPont and now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: Tonight this reporter departs this microphone for a year's leave of absence - a departure which has been rather overpublicised. Permit me a few words of personal explanation. I haven't been fired...haven't quit...my health is all right. For many years, there has been a clause in my long-term contract with C.B.S., permitting me to take a year off...I asked for it - and the corporation granted it.

For twelve of the more than twenty years that I have been broadcasting, reports have been made at this time. They have represented the work of many people, here and abroad. I am especially indebted to Raymond Swing and Ed Bliss. We have tried not to abuse this privileged opportunity to communicate and have not knowingly done violence to the truth. I would speak my gratitude to my colleagues and critics - both too numerous to mention by name.

The next year will be spent travelling, reading, listening, keeping silent - in the language of radio, receiving instead of transmitting - trying to fill in some of the enormous gaps in my knowledge of this fascinating world. Unless curiosity curdles, I shall return to face this frightening microphone with a little more knowledge and assurance - at least the illusion that I know what I'm talking about...being fully aware that some of you are of the opinion that this reporter has suffered from an acute case of that illusion for many years. My thanks to those of you who have reminded me that an amplified voice does not increase the wisdom or understanding of the speaker.

At the end of the year I shall hope to have learned a little. The hope may be vain...but the prospect of trying is most pleasing.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today. But first here is my old friend George Bryan with a word about the weather.

GEORGE BRYAN

MURROW: This reporter now takes leave to travel, to examine at first-hand, to listen more and talk less...in hope that in the interval he may learn. Josh Billings had the right idea when he said, "It's better to know less than so much that ain't so." And of course Billings also had something when he said, "Silence is one of the hardest arguments to refute."

Goodnight and good luck!

Dewey

STATE OF NEW YORK
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER
ALBANY

R. BURDELL BIXBY
ASSISTANT SECRETARY TO THE GOVERNOR

June 10, 1948

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Since Governor Dewey is out of the city, I want to thank you on his behalf for your letter of June 8th and for the very generous things you say about his appearance on your news program. I know he will appreciate them very much indeed.

With many thanks and kindest regards,

Cordially yours,

R. Burdell Bixby

RBB:HO

June 8, 1948

The Honorable
Thomas E. Dewey
Governor of the State of
New York
Albany, New York

Dear Governor:

Please accept my thanks for answering questions on my news program.

The response indicates that it was well received.

Sincerely yours,

FORD BOND RADIO PRODUCTIONS, INC.

810 RCA Building West • New York 20, N.Y. • Circle 7-2236

June 2, 1948

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

The Governor has asked me to advise you that he will appear with you Friday, June 4th, 7:45 to 8:00 PM, but to give you warning of a possibility that may occur due to his travel plans.

He is leaving Boston on Friday at 3 PM on special plane to fly to New York. If the weather permits him to get through, he will be with you in the studio at whatever time you suggest. Please let me know at what hour and in what studio you would like him to meet you.

If the weather does prevent the plane from getting through, then he will appear with you on Monday evening, if this is satisfactory to you.

Very truly yours,

Ford

FB:JS FORD BOND

Pursuant to your suggestion - if weather does get in the way, I'll keep myself available on Friday to set up a two-way job between here and Boston

FB

June 1, 1948

The Honorable
Thomas E. Dewey
Governor of New York
Room 1527
Roosevelt Hotel
Madison Avenue and 45 Street
New York City

Dear Governor:

I am delighted. Here they are. Many too many. Some too blunt. Will do it wherever, whenever you say. Mr. Hagerty can reach me at any time, day or night, on Plaza 5-[illegible]000.

Sincerely yours,

STATE OF NEW YORK
EXECUTIVE CHAMBER
ALBANY

JAMES C. HAGERTY
EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT

April 12, 1948.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
485 Madison Avenue,
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

On behalf of Governor Dewey I wish to thank you very much indeed for your thoughtfulness and courtesy in inviting him to participate in your radio interview.

I regret very much that although the Governor would like to do so his schedule is such that it is impossible for him at this time to accept your kind invitation.

Sincerely yours,

James C. Hagerty

2/26/48

The Honorable Thomas E. Dewey
Governor of the State of New York
Albany

The Honorable Earl Warren
Governor of the State of California
Sacramento

I WOULD GREATLY APPRECIATE A REPLY TO MY WIRE OF FEBRUARY 12TH. IN ORDER TO SAVE YOUR SECRETARY'S TIME THE WIRE READS: DURING LAST WEEK OF MAY AND FIRST WEEK OF JUNE I PLAN TO TRAVEL ABOUT THE COUNTRY INTERVIEWING SUCH CANDIDATES FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION AS ARE WILLING STOP DURATION OF INTERVIEW TEN MINUTES TO BE DONE FROM SCRIPT ON THE BASIS OF QUESTIONS EYE WOULD SUBMIT TO YOU AT LEAST ONE WEEK BEFORE DATE OF BROADCAST STOP INTERVIEW WOULD BE BROADCAST OVER COMPLETE FACILITIES OF CBS STOP ORIGINALLY AT 7:15 PM EASTERN STANDARD TIME AND AGAIN IN RECORDED FORM TO REACH THE PACIFIC COAST AT 9:15 PM STOP INFORMATIVELY THIS IS PERIOD OF MY OWN NEWS PROGRAM HEARD FIVE NIGHTS WEEKLY MONDAY THRU FRIDAY AT THIS TIME STOP RESEARCHERS ESTIMATE NIGHTLY AUDIENCE IN EXCESS OF TEN MILLION MY SOLE INTEREST IN MAKING THIS SUGGESTION IS TO PUT TO YOU CERTAIN QUESTIONS WHICH WILL BE UPPERMOST IN THE MINDS OF RADIO LISTENERS STOP PROGRAM CAN ORIGINATE WHEREVER YOU SAY STOP IF YOU ARE PREPARED TO PARTICIPATE I WILL WORK OUT WITH YOUR SECRETARY EXACT DATE AND POINT OF ORIGINATION STOP WOULD APPRECIATE TELEGRAPHIC REPLY AT YOUR EARLIEST CONVENIENCE REGARDS

EDWARD R. MURROW
CBS, NEW YORK

JA got letter promise from Haggerty... Feb ?

JZ talked with Worley, in Haggerty office, Friday april 2

JZ talked with Haggerty, Monday April 5 and was told letter going into mail

JZ talked with Worley, Wed April 7, said he couldn't find copy of letter in files..promised relay dope to Haggerty who in Nebraska until Monday.

Mac Arthur

URGENT

May 27/48

SULLIVAN
MU-3-9388

GENERAL DOUGLAS MAC ARTHUR
SUPREME ALLIED HEADQUARTERS
TOKYO

On March nine eye wired you inviting you to discuss your views as a candidate for the presidential nomination dash this to be done in a nine minute interview over full facilities of the Columbia Broadcasting System stop at that time you wired it would be impracticable to accept stop In view of today's invitation by Senate Appropriations Committee to return home would very much like you to reconsider my original proposal stop informatively, all Republican candidates have seldom been interviewed will be by end of next week stop several days still available if you care to participate stop would appreciate telegraphic reply at your earliest convenience best regards

Edward R. Murrow
CBS
New York

CLASS OF SERVICE

This is a full-rate Telegram or Cablegram unless its deferred character is indicated by a suitable symbol above or preceding the address.

WESTERN UNION

A. N. WILLIAMS
PRESIDENT

1220

(34)

SYMBOLS

DL = Day Letter
NL = Night Letter
LC = Deferred Cable
NLT = Cable Night Letter
Ship Radiogram

1948 MAR 12 AM 2 48

The filing time shown in the date line on telegrams and day letters is STANDARD TIME at point of origin. Time of receipt is STANDARD TIME at point of destination

NG24 GOVT DL PD=NEWYORK NY 12 136A

EDWARD R MURROW, REPORT DELIVERY=

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM 485 MADISON AVE=

PAREN Z-41720 PAREN APPRECIATE YOUR INVITATION BUT REGRET IT WILL BE IMPRACTICABLE TO ACCEPT PD REGARDS PD=

MACARTHUR GHQ FAR EASTERN CMD /CINCFE/

TOKYO JAPAN 120513Z.

Z-41720 PD PD GHQ CMD CINCFE 120513Z.

THE COMPANY WILL APPRECIATE SUGGESTIONS FROM ITS PATRONS CONCERNING ITS SERVICE

MARCH 9, 1948

GENERAL DOUGLAS MAC ARTHUR

SUPREME ALLIED HEADQUARTERS

TOKIO

DURING LAST WEEK OF MAY AND FIRST WEEK OF JUNE I AM INTERVIEWING SUCH CANDIDATES FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION AS ARE WILLING STOP INFORMATIVELY ALL CANDIDATES SO FAR CONTACTED HAVE ACCEPTED INVITATION STOP DURATION OF INTERVIEW TEN MINUTES TO BE DONE FROM SCRIPT ON THE BASIS OF QUESTIONS I WOULD SUBMIT TO YOU IN ADVANCE STOP YOUR REPLIES COULD BE RECORDED AT YOUR CONVENIENCE AND THE RECORDING THEN SHIPPED BACK TO THE STATES STOP INTERVIEW WOULD BE BROADCAST OVER COMPLETE FACILITIES OF CBS STOP ESTIMATED AUDIENCE ON MY FIVE NIGHTS WEEKLY NEWS SHOW IN EXCESS OF TEN MILLION STOP MY SOLE INTEREST IN MAKING THIS SUGGESTION IS TO PUT TO YOU CERTAIN QUESTIONS WHICH WOULD BE UPPERMOST IN THE MINDS OF RADIO LISTENERS STOP AS MENTIONED PREVIOUSLY YOUR REPLIES COULD BE RECORDED AT ANY TIME CONVENIENT TO YOU STOP IF YOU ARE PREPARED TO PARTICIPATE I WILL WORK OUT FURTHER DETAILS WITH YOUR SECRETARY STOP WOULD APPRECIATE TELEGRAPHIC REPLY AT YOUR EARLIEST CONVENIENCE BEST REGARDS

ED MURROW

CBS NEW YORK

Martin

WESTERN UNION

RECEIVED
1948 MAY 20 AM 11:53
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU13 GOVT PD

BX WASHINGTON DC MAY 20 949A

EDWARD R MURROW

CBS

MUST DECLINE FOR TWO REASONS. FIRST I AM NOT A CANDIDATE.
SECONDLY DATES NOT AGREEABLE.

JOSEPH W MARTIN JR MC

1047A.

5/18/48

THE HONORABLE JOSEPH E. MARTIN
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
WASHINGTON, D. C.

DURING LAST WEEK OF MAY AND FIRST WEEK OF JUNE I PLAN TO TRAVEL ABOUT THE COUNTRY INTERVIEWING SUCH CANDIDATES FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION AS ARE WILLING STOP DURATION OF INTERVIEW TEN MINUTES TO BE DONE FROM SCRIPT ON THE BASIS OF QUESTIONS EYE WOULD SUBMIT TO YOU AT LEAST ONE WEEK BEFORE DATE OF BROADCAST STOP INTERVIEW WOULD BE BROADCAST OVER COMPLETE FACILITIES OF CBS AT 7:45 PM EASTERN DAYLIGHT TIME STOP INFORMATIVELY THIS IS PERIOD OF MY OWN NEWS PROGRAM HEARD FIVE NIGHTS WEEKLY MONDAY THRU FRIDAY AT THIS TIME STOP RESEARCHERS ESTIMATE NIGHTLY AUDIENCE IN EXCESS OF TEN MILLION MY SOLE INTEREST IN MAKING THIS SUGGESTION IS TO PUT TO YOU CERTAIN QUESTIONS WHICH WILL BE UPPERMOST IN THE MINDS OF RADIO LISTENERS STOP PROGRAM CAN ORIGINATE WHEREVER YOU SAY STOP IF YOU ARE PREPARED TO PARTICIPATE DATES STILL OPEN ARE MONDAY, MAY 24, WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, MONDAY, MAY 31, OR TUESDAY, JUNE 1st. STOP IF AGREEABLE WILL WORK OUT WITH YOUR SECRETARY EXACT DATE AND POINT OF ORIGINATION STOP WOULD APPRECIATE TELEGRAPHIC REPLY AT YOUR EARLIST CONVENIENCE REGARDS

EDWARD R. MURROW
CBS NEW YORK

HAROLD E. STASSEN
1010 PILLSBURY BUILDING
MINNEAPOLIS 2, MINNESOTA

June 1, 1948

Mr. Edward Murrow
c/o Columbia Broadcasting System
Rockefeller Plaza
New York, New York

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Just a note to express my appreciation and pleasure at the opportunity to be with you on your broadcast last Wednesday evening.

Please accept my sincere thanks.

I shall look forward to seeing you sometime in the near future, possibly during the Convention in Philadelphia.

Best regards,

Harold E. Stassen

HES/el

Ed Jansen

May 24/48

WARREN BURGER
STASSEN-FOR-PRESIDENT HEADQUARTERS
MINNEAPOLIS

Regarding Mr. Stassen's Wednesday night interview with Edward R. Murrow this confirms Boston origination from studios of WBZ 7:45 pm edt. Charles Ashley is the News Editor and knows about the arrangements. It would be extremely helpful if Mr. Stassen could be in the studio around ~~at~~ 5:30 to go over the questions with Mr. Murrow. The Stassen-Murrow spot will run nine minutes and in that period we would like to cover following questions sent in by listeners. If you have one or two you'd like to add yourself that's agreeable with us. These are questions worded in general way: (1) You have done more traveling at home and abroad than any of other Republican candidates. In speaking to people what do you find is their dominant attitude and concern (2) You've been quoted as saying you wouldn't accept Vice-Presidential nomination on ticket with Dewey. Why (3) If nominated and elected, who would you appoint Postmaster General (4) You have said you are against helping Socialist countries in Europe. Please clarify (5) In February 1948 you said the high price curve has definitely been broken. Do you still think so (6) How much of the current high prices can be blamed on speculation (7) You, Dewey and Taft claim you will each have the most pledged delegates when the convention opens. What's your estimate (8) Why do you want to be President (9) What's the best book you've read recently (10) How would you deal with Russia if elected (11) What advice would you give a young man wanting to enter politics (12) Where do you stand on the President's Civil Rights Program (13) How have you stood the rigors of the campaign so far (14) what's your favorite quotation and questions. I presume you'll arrange to get these questions to Mr. Stassen tomorrow. I'll call you around noon tomorrow and check further with you. Many thanks for your kind cooperation. Best regards.

John Aaron
CBS
New York

WESTERN UNION

RECEIVED
1948 MAY 20 PM 3:18
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

M

WU31 PD

BD MINNEAPOLIS MINN MAY 20 1238P

JOHN A AARON

CBS

GOVERNOR STASSEN MAY HAVE TO MAKE RECORDING IN NEW YORK TUESDAY OR WEDNESDAY DUE TO CONFLICT IN DATES FOR FRIDAY. CONSIDER AND ADVISE WHAT ARRANGEMENTS AVAILABLE

WARREN E BURGER STASSEN FOR PRESIDENT HEADQUARTERS

209P..

N

March 8/48

Warren Burger
Stassen-For-President Headquarters
Minneapolis

Just to confirm our telephone conversation Edward R. Murrow will expect Mr. Stassen on his broadcast Friday evening, May 28th, 7:45 p.m. edt for roughly ten minutes, point of origination to be either Washington or New York. Will keep you advised on further details. Many thanks for your kind cooperation. Best regards.

John A. Aaron
CBS, New York

Stassen

WESTERN UNION

RECEIVED
1948 FEB 17 PM 4:08
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WUN25 PD

MINNEAPOLIS MINN FEB 17 204P

EDWARD R MURROW

CBS

PLEASED TO ACCEPT YOUR INVITATION JOIN IN CBS INTERVIEW BROADCAST.

WORK OUT SCHEDULING WHEN READY

WITH WARREN BURGER MY HEADQUARTERS, PHONE MAIN 5212,

MINNEAPOLIS, MINNESOTA. BEST REGARDS

HAROLD E STASSEN

343P

5212

HAROLD E. STASSEN
1028 CONNECTICUT AVENUE, N. W.
WASHINGTON 6, D. C.

EARL E. HART
SECRETARY

February 13, 1948.

Mr. Edward R. Murrow,
Columbia Broadcasting System,
New York, New York.

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Your telegram of February 12, 1948, to Governor Stassen comes to our office when he is out of the city.

It is being forwarded to him immediately for his personal consideration.

Sincerely,

Leonard E. Edwards

Leonard E. Edwards.

BC

Stassen

June 8, 1948

The Honorable
Harold E. Stassen
1010 Pillsbury Bldg.
Minneapolis 2, Minn.

Dear Mr. Stassen:

Please accept my belated thanks for answering questions on my news program.

The response indicates that it was well received.

Sincerely yours,

Taft

June 8, 1948

Senator Robert A. Taft
United States Senate
Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Taft:

Please accept my belated thanks for answering questions on my news program.

The response indicates that it was well received.

Sincerely yours,

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

RN N

Taft

RECEIVED

1948 FEB 20 PM 12:45

C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU25 PD

WASHINGTON DC FEB 20 1157A

EDWARD R MURROW

CBS

SENATOR TAFT IS WILLING ON INTERVIEW PLEASE LET US KNOW SUGGESTED DAY AS SOON AS POSSIBLE REGARDS

BILL MCADAMS PUBLIC RELATIONS ADVISER TO SENATOR TAFT

1231P

Thomas

June 8, 1948

Mr. Norman Thomas
303 Fourth Avenue
New York 10, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Thomas:

Please accept my belated thanks for answering questions on my news program. The response indicates that it was well received.

Sincerely yours,

Socialist Party U. S. A.

303 FOURTH AVENUE • NEW YORK 10, N. Y. • GRamercy 7-9584

May 24, 1948

Mr. Henry A. Wallace
39 Park Avenue
New York City

Dear Mr. Wallace:

I read with interest your debate challenge to discussion of foreign policies with leaders of the old parties. If the debate is to be well rounded and comprehensive, it should certainly include a spokesman for the Socialist Party and its position. There are two reasons of especial force to support this suggestion.

1. Since 1944, we have steadily supported a policy differing both from the present bipartisan policy and from your own. Our policy, in the light of events, would greatly have promoted peace.

2. In important particulars, we represent the point of view of those European socialists who are the main hope of the world for a democratic peace.

As you know, our Socialist program for peace would, in some important points, agree with yours. But we think your discussion of universal disarmament inadequate, especially in respect to the necessary controls. Moreover, we find it hard to believe in the validity of any man's approach to lasting peace who supports, as apparently you do, not only the Yalta and Potsdam agreements, but the Russian interpretation of them.

Believe me,

Sincerely yours,

Norman Thomas

NT:BM

Socialist Party U. S. A.

303 FOURTH AVENUE • NEW YORK 10, N. Y. • GRamercy 3-4286

FOR RELEASE after 5 PM Sunday, May 23, 1948

THOMAS UPHOLDS "THE RIGHTS OF MAN"

In a major campaign address on civil liberties and freedom, Norman Thomas, the Socialist presidential candidate, declared that: "In America we Socialists have fought for human freedom and racial equality in innumerable struggles in which we have met no allies from the National Association of Manufacturers."

His address on "The Rights of Man" was carried on the nationwide "Living-1948" program of the National Broadcasting Company Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Thomas attacked all totalitarianism - both fascist and communist - as well as private capitalism. He insisted that the "socialist ideal is not a society equivalent to a herd of 'contented cows' still milked by a master."

The Socialist nominee declared that the Mundt Bill is "a dangerous and unnecessary piece of legislation" which might "become a cover for dangerously repressive activity" and under which "Communists might escape better than others since they are more practiced in underground activities."

While not attacking loyalty tests in general, Mr. Thomas vigorously opposed the present conduct of loyalty tests and the general attitude of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. He called for legislation to remove racial discrimination by both public and private agencies, called for repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act, asked for compensation for the Japanese-Americans evacuated from the West Coast during the war; and opposed all forms of peacetime conscription.

The full text of Mr. Thomas' speech follows:

THE RIGHTS OF MAN

Radio Speech on "Living-1948" over the National Broadcasting Company, May 23, 1948 by Norman Thomas, Socialist Party Candidate for President of the United States

We Socialists use the great phrase "freedom, peace and plenty" to characterize the kind of society which men might establish. The condition of these blessings is the practice of fraternity among men regardless of race or creed or nationality or color.

In two former speeches on the air since my nomination, I have dealt principally with problems of plenty and peace. I have argued that inflationary prices, expectation of depression, and the continuing tensions which breed serious strikes, are inherent in the jumbled capitalism, miscalled free interprise, and not excrescenses on it. Specific reforms may accomplish a little, but only by intelligent planning under democratic control in an economy whose commanding heights are in possession of the people, can depression and poverty be conquered. Our Socialist platform, which can be had by writing the Party office, 303 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N.Y., outlines our program specifically for the winning of plenty.

It also sets forth our program for the winning of peace. Indeed freedom, peace and plenty are tied together beyond the power of any nation or party successfully to separate them. But there could be a triumphant policy for winning peace which the Administration is destroying by its sins of ommission and commission. No military aid to regional alliances will save peace in a world in which the armament race continues. The failure of the Administration to realize this, specifically its failure to take advantage of the opportunity the Soviet dictatorship presented it to state the case for universal disarmament under the effective international controls for which Henry Wallace did not ask, is disastrous in terms of world leadership and the confidence of mankind. To be sure, Secretary Marshall is right in saying that the Kremlin should show its desire for peace by cooperation in a long series of matters in which it now balks progress. Stalin's critics are right in pointing out the irregularities of his policy, including his efforts to act as a campaign adviser and assistant to his American ally, Henry Wallace. Nevertheless, whatever may be Stalin's reasons, his attitude does present a hope for mitigating the cold war and taking it out of the field of military competition. President Truman's refusal to take advantage of the situation is not only an error in tactics but an ominous indication that in his confused and uncoordinated policy hope in extravagant military power which has never yet saved mankind from war is prevailing over more constructive elements. From time to time, I shall discuss the whole foreign policy at length. I now point out that if my insistent demand for the end of an armament race and the creation of an international security force had been heeded, the United States would not be shamefully confronted by the contemptuous rejection of all pleas for order and peace in the Middle East.

In this speech, my main concern is the problem of freedom. More and more it is the fashion of the apologists of an American capitalism which cannot explain its failure to conquer poverty to declare that capitalism is the economic condition of freedom whereas Socialism in Hayek's much-quoted phrase is the road to serfdom. Actually the road to serfdom in Europe was built by capitalism and passionate nationalism: by the failure of the social order to conquer poverty or prevent depression: by men's fear of freedom and its responsibilities: and by their docile acceptance of peactime military conscription as part of an insensate armament race. Hayek loses claim to confidence when he ignores these factors. Democratic socialism in contrast to fascist and communist totalitarianism has stood for human rights. The freest countries in Europe are those in which democratic socialism is the most powerful factor. In America we Socialists have fought for human freedom and racial equality in innumerable struggles in which we have met no allies from the National Association of Manufacturers.

In our complex times there can be no true freedom save in fellowship. Unnecessary poverty breeds tyranny. The workers and their children cannot eat freedom in place of bread. Freedom has always languished in every military state. In our day it can flourish only in a society dedicated to the conquest of war and poverty in which men are citizens in industry as well as in the political state. This is the cardinal principle of democratic socialism. We Socialists are dedicated to the achievement of a fellowship of free men. In our minds, the state exists for men rather than men for the state and nothing is more important than the preservation and increase of civil liberty.

It is America's glory that it has given in its Bill of Rights legal expression to the great teaching of men like Milton and Mill and Thomas Jefferson concerning men's inalienable right to freedom from arbitrary arrest and cruel and unusual punishment; to orderly public trial for alleged offenses; to liberty of conscience, speech and association. We Americans have not always lived up to our ideals but in this country men have had a freedom unknown in military and totalitarian states. We have prospered as we have respected Jefferson's advice that the time for the state to intervene is against overt acts or the clear and present danger of them. Our history proves Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes' famous formula that "the best test of truth is the power of the thought to get itself accepted in the competition of the market." I do not say that truth always wins. I say that its chances of victory are better under conditions of freedom than when governments of self-seekers or honest fanatics try to enforce their concept of truth by repression and cruelty.

Most Americans give lip-service to these ideals but in practice we Americans have not been altogether free from the universal human tendency of men to cry for freedom when they are in a minority and then, if they get power, to transfer their devotion to "truth" which must be enforced against freedom by all the cruel devices of the authoritarian state. Hence the battle for liberty is never won. The eternal vigilance of the people will always be the price of their liberty.

The concept of freedom, or what constitutes civil liberties, inevitably must change with changing times. Freedom can't mean exactly the same thing to a pioneer like Daniel Boone in the wilderness of America and to the dweller in a crowded city. The modern state has been compelled to assume social function foreign to Jefferson's time. Years ago the nation had to intervene to abolish chattel slavery. Today, in addition to the old freedom, men are talking and demanding the right to work under decent conditions and the right to leisure. Such demands inevitably tie up with the whole economic structure and are one more proof of the way in which freedom, peace and plenty are indivisible.

It is easier to embody the right to work and the right to leisure into legal declarations than to carry them out under a militaristic or authoritarian state. There is a tendency not confined to the Soviet bloc of nations to equate freedom with an equality of slavery among men kept more or less happy on the Roman formula by bread and circuses. Our socialist ideal is not a society equivalent to a herd of "contented cows" still milked by a master.

If some of our concrete problems of civil liberty arise from the necessity of invoking positive state action in behalf of racial equality and workers' rights to a decent life, a different problem is presented by the existence in considerable number of men and organizations who demand civil liberty for themselves although they are openly contemptuous of the Jeffersonian doctrine of freedom. There is for instance such an organization as the Ku Klux Klan. In the middle thirties around Tampa, Florida, I came in close contact with that infamous organization. It was responsible for innumerable whippings and the ghastly Shoemaker murder. It is an old and honored principle in Anglo-American law that guilt must be personal: that crime cannot be proved by association. I think we must recognize that in the case of a secret, invisible "empire" with the record of the Ku Klux,Klan there is no such thing as an innocent membership; that to join it is to enter into conspiracy against public peace and order and that legal action, recognizing this fact, is not in violation of a Bill of Rights.

Far less simple is the problem presented by the Communist party and its front organizations. They are not engaged in overt acts of subversion at this moment. The party has every right to advocate its own social and economic theories. If we are to give reality to the American idea that ballots can be a blessed and effective substitute for bullets, we must lean over backwards to protect the rights of the most radical parties. The difficulty that the organized Communist movement presents is threefold. (1) In power it denies all civil liberties and establishes a completely totalitarian system. (2) On the road to power its great leader Lenin expressly justified the use of lies and deceits so that today it is a matter of party discipline for communists wherever possible to deny their allegiance. (3) Communists demand for themselves a liberty that they will not extend to others when they get power and which they seek to deny to others even now whenever they temporarily have power. For example, communists and communist sympathizers in considerable numbers proceeded from a Madison Garden meeting where they applauded Henry Wallace as a champion of liberty to take part in a riotous demonstration against the showing of a film, "The Iron Curtain", in a New York theater.

Not only does the American communist movement partake of these three characteristics, but it has proved by its changes of line that it is completely subservient to a foreign dictator in Moscow. All this presents a problem Thomas Jefferson never envisaged. How are we to deal with those who would deny freedom and still keep it for ourselves?

It is, of course, impossible to discuss all the questions I have raised or suggested in one short speech. My best immediate service will be to explain our Socialist position in reference to specific issues.

(1) The Mundt Bill: We believe this a dangerous and unnecessary piece of legislation. The House passed it in something approaching the kind of hysteria which led it once to pass President Turman's demand for power to draft labor, which later was blocked in the Senate. The Mundt Bill should share the same fate. I say this although I am in sympathy with the alleged purpose of the bill, namely, to deal with Communism by a program of pitiless publicity. I have been saying for years that we need a Pure Food and Drug Act for labeling American social and political movements so that the people may recognize them for what they are. But the Mundt Bill does more than that. Part of the confusion in the unsatisfactory debate between Messrs. Stassen and Dewey arose from the fact that the bill in action would, if successful, outlaw the Communist Party and impose grave criminal penalties on communists. And that is entirely contrary to American regard for civil liberty. The bill's effect would go far beyond its declared intention. Under the great powers given the Attorney General, the operation of the bill might be extended to organizations not communist controlled and become a cover for dangerously repressive activity. Communists might escape better than others since they are more practiced in underground activities. I doubt the bill's constitutionality in it's present form and I am certain that it raises dangers to civil liberties greater than any evils it may cure. There is no such clear and simple case against the Communist Party as there is against the Ku Klux Klan and the wrong way of dealing with it might present greater dangers to American democracy than the party now presents.

(2) Loyalty tests: Of course the government has the right and the duty to take precautions to assure itself that its employees will work in good faith without sabotage or betrayal of secrets. The question involved is not the opinion of government employees but their probable conduct under pressure of a disciplined party. The communists have only themselves to blame that both their avowed theory and their practice, for example in Canada during the war, make suspicion reasonable. Socialists have recognized the fact even while they have disapproved of the present conduct of loyalty tests and the general attitude of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The latter organization has always tended to confuse judgements on opinions to which every American has a right with the loyal performance of obligation in the public service. The Committee has neither properly defined its terms nor properly and fairly conducted its inquiries. Dies, Rankin and J. Parnell Thomas have been perfect illustrations of the type of men who ought not to be chairmen of an investigating committee concerned only with turning on the light. There can be no question that reactionary forces are deliberately trying to stir up hysteria on the so-called loyalty issue. This is the basis of all Socialist criticism of the procedures of the House Committee and of the Truman Administration in connection with loyalty tests.

(3) Legislation to remove racial discrimination by public and private agencies: Notice that I say public and private agencies. Labor unions, Bar and Medical associations, exercise the equivalent of governmental powers in their field. By all means it is desirable that such agencies, on their own volition, should remove discriminations, as most labor unions and now the Bar and medical associations are doing. Legislation, however, in their fields, as in the field of fair employment, is emphatically in order. We endorse the specific proposals of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. There can be no other basis for democracy than the practice of the doctrine that each individual is entitled to equal and positive protection of the laws and that, regardless of race, creed, or color, he shall have the rights and obligations common to all American citizens.

It is true that our great hope of winning the positive fraternity on which, rather than any mere toleration, our democratic hope depends, requires the education of all in the right attitudes. Nothing can be more important than the kind of work in this field done by certain labor unions in the South and such admirable organizations as the Fellowship of Southern Churchmen. But the educational process requires expression in law and may itself be stimulated by properly considered legislation.

The best way to prevent continued discrimination in the matter of voting, we Socialists long have held, would be the enforcement of the provision in the 14th Amendment empowering Congress to reduce representation in proportion as the right to vote is denied by racial discrimination in law and the enforcement of it. In 1944 one vote in the State of Mississippi had the weight of approximately 7 votes in New York. Partly this was due to the dangerously undemocratic method of electing the President through the electoral college. A constitutional amendment for the election of the President is imperatively in order. Partly the situation was due to race discrimination in violation of the American doctrine of civil liberty and in contempt of the American effort to persuade other nations to conduct elections fairly. It must be ended.

(4) Labor legislation: Necessarily, labor legislation is bound up with the issue of civil liberties. The subject is too big for full discussion in this speech. It is a legitimate function of government to protect the right of labor to organize and to strike, a right the exercise of which has been a tremendous force in social progress and the vindication of the human dignity of the worker. The government also has a right to protect the interests of the community as a whole. The objection to the Taft-Hartley Act is that it fails properly to fulfill either of these functions. The case against it is briefly stated in the Socialist platform, and in its civil liberties aspects, has been carefully elaborated by the American Civil Liberties Union. I endorse the specific demand of my party for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Act.

In so doing I admit that there is room for constructive legislation. I am particularly concerned that we find a way to give individual workers in the unions - to which all of them ought to belong - the protection of a bill of rights against the practices of those unions in which disciplinary and other procedures are unfair and undemocratic. I believe that such protection can be given without injecting the government into the actual conduct of the internal affairs of unions. Under all circumstances, even in a socialist society, unions must be free, that is, not the creatures of the state as they are in Stalin's empire.

(5) Legislation in compensation for the injustice of wartime evacuation of Japanese-Americans on the West Coast: What was done by the military evacuation in the war created a precedent enormously dangerous to all our liberties. Injustice to the evacuees and the harm to our liberties may be partially repaired by giving evacuees compensation for their economic losses and by admitting men and women born in Japan (who have proved their loyalty through long years of residence in this country) to the naturalization denied them under our discriminatory laws.

(6) Peacetime military conscription: Of all governmental offenses against civil liberties, none is more serious in its effect on the individual in society than the present proposal to enact peacetime military conscription in America. This is a demand that young men surrender 1, 2, 3 years of their lives to the absolute disposal of the military state which imposes its will on their conscience and trains them in implicit obedience, the fine flower of which is acceptance of the totalitarian state. In no way is such peacetime service analagous to the positive and beneficial compulsions of education or to obligation for jury service. In Europe it has proved a chief enemy of democracy.

Any of the various bills now before Congress will not only violate an ancient American freedom - its enforcement will embitter and divide American opinion. Already Negro spokesmen have made their determined opposition to the segregation probable under such conscription. There are no absolutely fair standards under which local draft boards can select a comparatively small number of young men for this service while others live their normal lives. The economic and ideological costs of conscription will be enormous. On the basis of European experience, it has never guaranteed any nation's safety. The overwhelming necessity which might justify so drastic an action has not been proved by brass-hats zealous for their own power. It is only the Army - not the Air Force or the Navy - which says that it cannot get enough men by voluntary enlistment of free men. Not only will the enactment of peacetime conscription be a tremendous blow to the ancient tradition of American freedom, but also by its direct and indirect effects it will make less likely the ending of the armament race on which all our hope of peace depends.

We Socialists will fight the enactment of any form of peacetime military conscription under Selective Service with or without military training. If such legislation is enacted, we shall carry on the fight for its repeal. Here is a supreme illustration of the way the struggle for plenty, peace, and freedom are bound together. To that whole struggle, we Socialists shall dedicate ourselves.

Its various aspects will require more detailed examination in other speeches. This speech and the Socialist Platform may be had on application to the Socialist Party Office, 303 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, New York.

****

1948 MAY 17 PM 6:58
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT.

MR JOHN AARON, CBS, NY

MSG NO 9, KGGM ALB2 MAY 17

RE YOUR QST 1842, WISH TO ADVISE THAT IT WILL CERTAINLY BE OKAY TO CARRY HENRY WALLACE, 9 ON JUNE 3, 1948, TO BE COVERED BY EDWARD R MURROW. WE WILL LOOK FORWARD TO CARRY THE PGM ON THIS DATE 4.45-5.00 PM MST,.

A R HEBENSTREIT

333 Fourth Ave
New York May 20/48

Edward R Murrow
Radio Sta W.C.B.S. Cit

Dear Mr Murrow

you most generous offer to night for questions to be asked presidential hopefuls would be most wonderful "if" you are "big" enough to answer mine, which effects every man woman and child, even if they are not aware of it - here it is if you dare ask it

How is it Mr Thomas after nearly five years of loyal support of my advertising fight, you have not even once, in all your many speeches, as much as uttered the word, and why he ignored my telegram of congratulations, copy attached David B Lewis

A Telegram to Mr Thomas
Still to be answered

Copy

Mr Norman Thomas
71 Irving Place City

"Heartiest Congratulations to your Nomination of the Candidacy for President to the office of the United States by the Socialist party You and your party cannot lose the election if you will only expose how the two other major parties and their Stable commissions have systematically withheld for years the knowledge from the General public the manner of billions of dollars annually being paid by them in indirect taxes for useless and fraudulent advertising that I predict ~~the~~ will amount for 1948 to as much as the recent tax reduction effecting not all the people as does indirect taxation Stop Good luck and count on my fullest cooperation David B Levy

One million copies of the attached letter have been pledged to be distributed exclusively by disabled veterans before election, as they unfortunately will not be able to forget the last war to their dying day, while the "would be" Americans act as if nothing ever happened and for a little advertising contribute to confessed traitors (of the very war that left them disabled) radio programs, helping to swindle their fellow Americans by the million What rats!

I predict that million letters will readily mount to ten million letters, when it becomes generally known, that these same traitors (who ordinarily would be shot at sun rise) tried to railroad me to prison on the false charge, that I tried to bring physical harm to President Truman, a damnable lie, intended to get rid of me So with your cooperation, they could carry on their swindles uninterruptedly

Copy to contributors to the "Bride & Groom" program daily - 4 P.M.

Edward J. Leary

71 IRVING PLACE
NEW YORK 3, N. Y.

February 6, 1948

Mr. David B. Levy, Pres.
Sterling Products Corp.
333 Fourth Ave.
New York City 10

Dear Mr. Levy:

Thank you for your last letter. As I frequently say to various people, you are doing an heroic one-man job.

Unfortunately I was speaking myself out of town and could not hear Morris Ernst.

Sincerely yours,

Norman Thomas

Norman Thomas

NT:JM "THE GREATEST SWINDLE ON EARTH"

Mr. Thomas is one of the founders and trustees of the American Broadcasting Co. (WJZ) Town Hall who had Bishop G. Bromley Oxman debate the Ten Commandments and immediately following refused Mr. Thomas and myself a debate on "Honest Advertising," costing their fellow-Americans many MANY millions of dollars on Bayer Aspirin ALONE in their swindles.

(COPY TO PRESS AND RADIO, THE CO-SWINDLERS)

I GLADLY WAIVE MY FREE SPEECH RIGHTS to tell you in no uncertain terms that you will be a traitor to the American public, now that your country is leading up again to a state of great emergency, if you continue as a co-swindler to promote Sterling Drug, Inc. swindle products, unless the Federal Trade Commission denies officially my charges on their following products: Bayer Aspirin

OUT OF 65 BRANDS TESTED
✓21 PROVED SUPERIOR TO BAYER'S

Philip's Milk of Magnesia, Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder, Molle Shaving Cream, which are either actual swindles or fraudulent claims. There is no room in this country for proven traitors - swindlers and all round cheats. So you can get your share of their loot

Only idiots buy BAYER ASPIRIN costing ten times that of other brands. Would these same morons entrust their lives, in the event of another war, to TRUMAN and his cabinet, who with the F.T.C., F.C.C., SEC, F.B.I. DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, DEP'T. OF STATE, TREASURY DEP'T., U.S. SENATE posistently for years refused to protect their interest in the face of dozens of appeals? accompanied with similar proof as this.—over—

Ehrenburg Calls Americans Hypocrites and Gangsters.

Moscow, May 1 (A. P.).—Ilya Ehrenburg, in one of the most critical commentaries on the United States so far published in

STERLING DRUG, INC. ARE FOUNDERS OF BRAND NAMES F'D'T'N

In the name of full justice this circular in its entirety was first submitted to STERLING DRUG, INC. to insure the accuracy of its charges

"Stop Kidding" Mr Commissioner

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
WASHINGTON

EWIN L. DAVIS
COMMISSIONER

January 6, 1948.

Bait for the POOR and IGNORANT

Mr. David B. Levy, President,
Sterling Products Corporation,
333 Fourth Avenue,
New York 10, New York.

Dear Mr. Levy:

I am in receipt of copies of your communications to and replies from certain Government officials and agencies, which you mailed to me under date of December 31, 1947, and which I have noted.

I am passing these on to the appropriate parties in the Commission for their consideration in connection with any pending related matters.

Yours sincerely,

Ewin L. Davis

Ewin L. Davis,
Commissioner.

Get this exquisite
FLEUR-DE-LIS CHATELAINE with Crescent Moon and Star finished in real gold and set with genuine imported Rhinestone! Yours for only 25¢

(including tax and postage) and a Lyons Toothpaste carton ... or a Dr. Lyon's Tooth Powder box top.

Order today... send coupon below.

September 18, 1945.

Receipt is acknowledged of your letter dated September 8, 1945, in further reference to the practices of Sterling Drug, Inc., in advertising and distributing Bayer Aspirin and Phillips' Milk of Magnesia, and requesting to be informed as to the present status of the above-numbered application for complaint.

"cease and desist orders" F.T.C. Docket No. 3596. 3rd violation

In reply, you are advised that the investigation of this matter has been completed and the facts developed are receiving consideration with a view to determining appropriate action, with respect to which you will be fully informed

Ewin L. Davis

FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Instead Suppressed

Truman

RECEIVED
1948 MAY -5 PM 2:14
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU 16 PD

RB WASHINGTON DC MAY 5 1111A

EDWARD R MURROW

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

ACKNOWLEDGING YOUR WIRE OF MARCH 9 AND FOLLOW UP OF APRIL 26 STOP DUE TO ERROR REPLY TO ORIGINAL WIRE WAS NOT SENT STOP CONCERNING SUGGESTED TRUMAN INTERVIEW COMMA WE REGRET PRESIDENT IS UNABLE REPEAT UNABLE TO ACCEPT INVITATIONS TO APPEAR ON EXCLUSIVE BROADCASTS OR COMMERCIAL PROGRAMS STOP RECOGNIZE AND APPRECIATE YOUR MOTIVES AND THOUGHTFUL APPROACH TO CAMPAIGN SITUATION BUT BELIEVE YOU UNDERSTAND AND CAN APPRECIATE PRESIDENTS POSITION

J HOWARD MCGRATH EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE

1235P

9 26.

April 26, 1948

J.H.MC GRATH
CHAIRMAN, DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE
WASHINGTON, D.C.

I WOULD GREATLY APPRECIATE A REPLY TO MY ~~MR~~ WIRE OF MARCH 9TH. IN ORDER TO SAVE YOUR SECRETARY'S TIME IT READ AS FOLLOWS: DURING LATE PART OF MAY AND EARLY PART OF JUNE I PLAN TO TRAVEL ABOUT THE COUNTRY INTERVIEWING SUCH CANDIDATES FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION AS ARE WILLING STOP INFORMATIVELY ALL THOSE CONTACTED SO FAR HAVE ACCEPTED INVITATION STOP DURATION OF INTERVIEW TEN MINUTES TO BE DONE FROM SCRIPT ON BASIS OF QUESTIONS I WOULD SUBMIT AT LEAST ONE WEEK BEFORE DATE OF BROADCAST STOP INTERVIEW WOULD BE BROADCAST OVER COMPLETE FACILITIES OF CBS ORIGINALLY AT 7:45 EASTERN STANDARD TIME AND AGAIN IN RECORDED FORM TO REACH THE PACIFIC COAST AT 9:45 PM STOP INFORMATIVELY THIS IS PERIOD OF MY OWN NEWS PROGRAM HEARD FIVE NIGHTS WEEKLY MONDAY THRU FRIDAY AT THIS TIME STOP RESERRCHES ESTIMATE NIGHTLY AUDIENCE IN EXCESS OF TEN MILLION STOP MY SOLE INTEREST IN MAKING THIS SUGGESTION IS TO PUT TO MR. TRUMAN CERTAIN QUESTIONS WHICH WILL BE UPPERMOST IN THE MINDS OF RADIO LISTENERS STOP PROGRAM CAN ORIGINATE WHEREVER YOU AND MR. TRUMAN SUGGEST STOP BEST AVAILABLE DATES ARE MAY 21, 24, or 25 OR JUNE 7 THRU 11 STOP HOWEVER IF ALTERNATIVE DATE IS PREFERRED I MIGHT BE ABLE TO DO SOME RESHUFFLING STOP ~~WEEK~~ WOULD APPRECIATE YOUR DISCUSSING THIS WITH MR. TRUMAN AND IF HE IS PREPARED TO PARTICIPATE I WILL WORK OUT FURTHER DETAILS WITH YOU STOP WOULD APPRECIATE TELEGRAPHIC REPLY AT YOUR EARLIEST CONVENIENCE BEST REGARDS

EDWARD R. MURROW
CBS NEW YORK

March 9, 1948

J.H. McGRATH
CHAIRMAN, DEMOCRATIC NATIONAL COMMITTEE
WASHINGTON, D.C.

DURING LATE PART OF MAY AND EARLY PART OF JUNE I PLAN TO TRAVEL ABOUT THE COUNTRY INTERVIEWING SUCH CANDIDATES FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION AS ARE WILLING STOP INFORMATIVELY ALL THOSE CONTACTED SO FAR HAVE ACCEPTED INVITATION STOP DURATION OF INTERVIEW TEN MINUTES TO BE DONE FROM SCRIPT ON BASIS OF QUESTIONS I WOULD SUBMIT AT LEAST ONE WEEK BEFORE DATE OF BROADCAST STOP INTERVIEW WOULD BE BROADCAST OVER COMPLETE FACILITIES OF CBS ORIGINALLY AT 7:45 PM EASTERN STANDARD TIME ~~AND AGAIN IN RECORDED FORM TO REACH THE PACIFIC COAST AT 9:45 PM~~ STOP INFORMATIVELY THIS IS PERIOD OF MY OWN NEWS PROGRAM HEARD FIVE NIGHTS WEEKLY MONDAY THRU FRIDAY AT THIS TIME STOP RESEARCHERS ESTIMATE NIGHTLY AUDIENCE IN EXCESS OF TEN MILLION STOP MY SOLE INTEREST IN MAKING THIS SUGGESTION IS TO PUT ~~TO MR. TRUMAN~~ TO YOU CERTAIN QUESTIONS WHICH WILL BE UPPERMOST IN THE MINDS OF RADIO LISTENERS STOP PROGRAM CAN ORIGINATE WHEREVER YOU ~~AND MR. TRUMAN~~ SUGGEST STOP BEST AVAILABLE DATES ARE MAY 21, 24, or 25 OR JUNE 7 THRU 11 STOP HOWEVER IF ALTERNATIVE DATE IS PREFERRED I MIGHT BE ABLE TO DO SOME RESHUFFLING STOP WOULD APPRECIATE YOUR DISCUSSING THIS WITH MR. TRUMAN AND IF HE IS PREPARED TO PARTICIPATE I WILL WORK OUT FURTHER DETAILS WITH YOU STOP WOULD APPRECIATE TELEGRAPHIC REPLY AT YOUR EARLIEST CONVENIENCE BEST REGARDS

ED MURROW
CBS NEW YORK

Hon Joseph E. MARTIN
House of Rep
Wash. D.C

HENRY A. WALLACE

39 PARK AVENUE
NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

July 8, 1948

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
485 Madison Avenue
New York 22, New York

Dear Ed Murrow:

Thank you for your note of June 8. I am glad that you had good response to the broadcast we did from Albuquerque.

It was a real pleasure to appear on your program. I feel you must have one of the best informed audiences in America because of the generally high caliber of your program.

Sincerely yours,

H A Wallace

10

June 8, 1948

Mr. Henry A. Wallace
Wallace for President Hq.
39 Park Avenue
New York, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Wallace:

Please accept my belated thanks for answering questions on my news program.

The response indicates that it was well received.

Sincerely yours,

UP184

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M., JUNE 3-(UP)-HENRY A. WALLACE SAID TONIGHT THAT THE REAL PROBLEMS OF TODAY ARE BEING OBSCURED BY CHARGES OF "COMMUNIST AND RED."

THEN IN A RADIO INTERVIEW (CBS) WALLACE COMMENTED ON THE FACT THAT COMMUNISTS SUPPORT HIM AS A CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT.

THE THIRD-PARTY LEADER SAID THAT IF THE COMMUNISTS BACK THE SAME THINGS HE BACKS, THEN THEY ARE FOR HIM IN THAT RESPECT.

WALLACE ENDED A 15,000 MILE WESTERN SWING AT AN ALBUQUERQUE RALLY TONIGHT WITH A CALL FOR A "PROGRESSIVE POLITICAL MOVEMENT" TO END THE PRESENT BI-PARTISAN FOREIGN POLICY.

LR1240A

ADDX

(EDD)

ALBUQUERQUE, N. M., JUNE 3--(AP)--HENRY WALLACE SAID TONIGHT HE "WILL NOT REPUDIATE ANY SUPPORT WHICH COMES TO ME ON THE BASIS ON INTEREST IN PEACE."

"COMMUNISTS," HE ADDED, "ARE INTERESTED IN PEACE....."

HIS ADDITION OF COMMUNIST SUPPORT CAME ON AN INTERVIEW OVER A NATIONAL RADIO NETWORK (NBC). HE WAS ASKED:

"HOW MUCH SUPPORT DO YOU GET FROM THE COMMUNISTS AND DO YOU WELCOME IT?"

WALLACE ANSWERED:

"According to the newspapers I am getting a lot of support from the Communists --- and the Communist leaders seem to think they have to endorse me every other day or so.

"There's no question that this sort of thing is a political liability.

"The Communists offer my support of progressive capitalism. They support me because I say that we can have peace with Russia. I will not repudiate any support which comes to me on the basis of interest in peace. The Communists are interested in peace because they want a successful socialist experiment in Russia. I am interested in peace because I want our American system to demonstrate the enduring vitality of which it is capable...."

HE DECLARED IN AN ADDRESS PREPARED FOR DELIVERY LATER AT A RALLY THAT IF THE TAFT-HARTLEY BILL SHOULD PASS, "WE SHALL DEFY IT."

"THREATS OF THE YEARS OF IMPRISONMENT WILL NOT STOP THE NEW PARTY (CAPS N, P) FROM FIGHTING FOR PEACE," HE SAID.

WALLACE WILL LEAVE TOMORROW FOR NEW YORK.

FJ754PCS

A36WX

LABOR DISPUTES (450)

BY MAX

BUST IT

A36KX (LA-T)

(WEST OUT)

ALBUQUERQUE, N.M., JUNE 4--(AP)--HENRY WALLACE COMPLETED HIS WESTERN TOUR HERE LAST NIGHT WITH THE ASSERTION HE "WILL NOT REPUDIATE ANY SUPPORT WHICH COMES TO ME ON THE BASIS OF INTEREST IN PEACE."

WALLACE ADDED THAT "COMMUNISTS ARE INTERESTED IN PEACE..."

THE THIRD PARTY PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE FLIES BACK TO NEW YORK TODAY.

HE SPOKE TO AN ESTIMATED 3,000 PERSONS AT A NEW PARTY (CAPS N, P) RALLY. HE DELETED FROM HIS ADDRESS IN DELIVERY A PHRASE IN THE PREPARED SPEECH THAT IF THE MUNDT-NIXON BILL SHOULD PASS "WE SHALL DEFY IT." HE SAID MERELY THAT IF THE BILL PASSES "THREATS OF TEN YEARS OF IMPRISONMENT WILL NOT STOP THE NEW PARTY FROM FIGHTING FOR PEACE."

VR304ACS

May 28/48

Ed Frisby
Wallace-For-President Headquarters
39 Park Avenue
New York City

This is to confirm Mr. Wallace's interview with Edward R. Murrow on Thursday, June 3 7:45 pm edt or 4:45 pm New Mexico time with point of origination CBS studios in Albuquerque - KOGM. A.R. Hebenstreit is station manager and contact there. We have two way lines ordered from 7:30 to 8:00 pm edt and suggest if possible that Mr. Wallace arrange to be at KOGM by 7:30 edt so that he and Mr. Murrow can try out circuits before air time. I'll call you early next week to check final arrangements. Questions follow:

May 17/48

A.R. Mebenstreit
KGGM
Albuquerque
New Mexico

Informatively Edward R. Murrow is doing presidential candidates series with declared candidates on question and answer live basis and would appreciate your cooperation. He would like to do Henry Wallace from KGGM studios on Thursday night, June 3 7:45 pm edt. Mr. Wallace has agreed to this arrangement. We will order two way lines into KGGM and will contact you again well in advance of broadcast date. Many thanks for your assistance. Regards

John Aaron
CBS
New York

Wed
Dewey - June 2
Wallace - June 3 Thurs

Henry Wallace

WESTERN UNION

RECEIVED

1948 FEB 16 PM 2:15

C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU17 PD

EU NEWYORK NY FEB 16 1246P

EDWARD R MURROW

CBS

MR WALLACE WILL BE GLAD TO GIVE YOU INTERVIEW AS OUTLINED IN YOUR WIRE OF FEB 12. HIS ITINERARY FOR END OF MAY NOT CLEAR YET, BUT SHOULD KNOW IN ABOUT TWO WEEKS

RALPH E SHIKES PUBLIC RELATIONS DIRECTOR NATIONAL WALLACE FOR PRESIDENT COMMITTEE MU 3 5580

204P

12 3 5580.

Warren

June 8, 1948

The Honorable
Earl Warren
Governor of the State of California
Sacramento, California

Dear Governor Warren:

Please accept my belated thanks for answering questions on my news program.

The response indicates that it was well received.

Sincerely yours,

UPS

SACRAMENTO, CAL., JUNE 3.--(UP)--CALIFORNIA'S GOV. EARL WARREN MADE CLEAR TODAY THAT THE CALIFORNIA DELEGATION SUPPORTING HIS PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION HAS NOT BEEN PLEDGED TO ANY "SECOND CHOICE" CANDIDATE.

IN A RADIO INTERVIEW (CBS), WARREN REITERATED THAT THE CALIFORNIA DELEGATION IS PLEDGED TO HIM AS A FAVORITE SON CANDIDATE AND TO HIM ALONE.

POLITICAL OBSERVERS SAID THAT WARREN'S ULTIMATE CHANCES AS A CANDIDATE HINGED ON THE POSSIBILITY OF A COMPROMISE IN THE EVENT THE CONVENTION BECOMES DEADLOCKED.

JS1046A

UP135

1ST GENERAL LEAD POLITICS

BY UNITED PRESS

THE LURE OF THE WEST BECKONED THREE PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES TODAY.

PRESIDENT TRUMAN HITS THE TRAIL TONIGHT, BOARDING A SPECIAL TRAIN FOR A PRE-CONVENTION WESTERN TOUR ON WHICH HE WILL MAKE FIVE MAJOR SPEECHES AND NUMEROUS REAR-PLATFORM APPEARANCES.

REPUBLICAN PRESIDENTIAL ASPIRANT HAROLD E. STASSEN IS EN ROUTE TO CALIFORNIA FOR A CONFERENCE WITH GOV. EARL WARREN. TODAY HE STOPPED AT DES MOINES FOR A LUNCHEON DATE WITH 19 OF IOWA'S 23 DELEGATES TO THE GOP NATIONAL CONVENTION. NONE OF THE DELEGATES IS COMMITTED TO ANY CANDIDATE.

HENRY A. WALLACE, THIRD-PARTY PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE, ALREADY IS IN THE WEST. HE SPOKE LAST NIGHT AT PHOENIX, ARIZ., AND WILL ADDRESS A RALLY TONIGHT AT THE UNIVERSITY OF NEW MEXICO STADIUM IN ALBUQUERQUE TONIGHT.

MEANWHILE, THE POLITICAL NEWS OUT OF CALIFORNIA WAS NOT REASSURING--

EITHER TO THE FAVORITES IN THE GOP PRESIDENTIAL RACE OR TO THE DEMOCRATIC PARTY.

GOV. WARREN HAS SERVED NOTICE THAT THE CALIFORNIA DELEGATION SUPPORTING HIS GOP PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDACY HAS NOT BEEN PLEDGED TO ANY "SECOND CHOICE" CANDIDATE. THIS WILL NOT BE ANY COMFORT TO CANDIDATES SUCH AS GOV. THOMAS E. DEWEY OF NEW YORK, SEN. ROBERT A. TAFT OF OHIO AND STASSEN--EACH OF WHOM IS COUNTING ON "SECOND CHOICE" SUPPORT TO WIN THE NOMINATION. CALIFORNIA HAS A FAT 53 VOTES.

THE BAD NEWS FOR THE DEMOCRATS IN CALIFORNIA IS THAT AT LEAST NINE OF THE STATE'S 23 CONGRESSMEN AT THE NEXT SESSION WILL BE REPUBLICANS. THREE WILL BE DEMOCRATS. THE OTHER 11 WILL BE DECIDED IN THE NOVEMBER ELECTION. THE MINIMUM OF NINE GOP SEATS WAS ASSURED ON THE BASIS OF NEARLY COMPLETE RETURNS FROM TUESDAY'S PRIMARY. THE NINE REPUBLICANS AND THREE DEMOCRATS WON THE NOMINATIONS OF BOTH PARTIES IN A STATE WHERE REGISTERED DEMOCRATS HOLD A 3 TO 2 EDGE OVER REPUBLICANS.

OUT OF THE WEST ALSO CAME A POLITICAL PREDICTION. FORMER REP. CLARE BOOTH LUCE, R., CONN., PREDICTED AT OMAHA THAT SEN. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG OF MICHIGAN WILL GET THE GOP PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION "INSTANTLY" IF THE REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

June 2, 1948

EARL WARREN
EXECUTIVE MANSION
SACRAMENTO, CALIFORNIA

MANY THANKS FOR REALLY FIRST RATE BROADCAST BOTH IN CONTENT AND IN MANNER OF PRESENTATION STOP SORRY TO HAVE JUMPED THE QUESTIONS AROUND BUT MAYBE WE CAN ANSWER THE OTHERS IN XXXXXXXXXX XX BROADCASTS FROM PORTSMOUTH OR PHILADELPHIA AGAIN MANY THANKS

ED MURROW

(MORE)835PM..

MURROW: GOVERNOR WARREN, HERE'S A QUESTION THAT SEVERAL LISTENERS

RECEIVED
1948 JUN -2 PM 9:48
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

6/2

CBS 12-- CALIFORNIA'S GOVERNOR WARREN TELLS MURROW: STATE G. O.P. DELEGATION DOES NOT HAVE SECOND CHOICE... PREDICTS WALLACE WILL WIN HALF MILLION VOTES IN STATE

GOVERNOR EARL WARREN OF CALIFORNIA TOLD EDWARD R. MURROW TONIGHT THAT HIS STATE'S DELEGATION TO THE REPUBLICAN NATIONAL CONVENTION, PLEDGED TO WARREN, DOES NOT HAVE A SECOND CHOICE.

INTERVIEWED BY MR.MURROW /CBS 7.45PM EDT/ WHO WAS IN NEW YORK, GOVERNOR WARREN IN SACRAMENTO, ALSO ESTIMATED THAT HENRY WALLACE, THE THIRD PARTY PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATE, MIGHT WIN AS MANY AS A HALF MILLION OF THE FOUR MILLION VOTES HE EXPECTS TO BE CAST IN CALIFORNIA.

THIS WAS ANOTHER IN A SERIES OF INTERVIEWS WITH PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES BY MR. MURROW. HIS AUDIENCE HAS HEARD FROM SENATOR TAFT, HAROLD STASSEN AND NORMAN THOMAS. TOMORROW MR. MURROW WILL ASK QUESTIONS OF HENRY WALLACE IN ALBUQUERQUE, NEW MEXICO. ON FRIDAY NIGHT, GOVERNOR DEWEY WILL BE INTERVIEWED IN NEW YORK.

HERE IS THE TEXT OF THE MURROW-WARREN INTERVIEW:

MURROW: AS I UNDERSTAND IT, THE CALIFORNIA DELEGATION IS COMMITTED TO YOU. HAVE THEY MADE A SECOND CHOICE?

WARREN: NO, THEY HAVE NOT. THIS IS A FIRST-CHOICE DELEGATION, ELECTED YESTERDAY FOR A SPECIFIC PURPOSE. IT WILL REMAIN SO AS LONG AS THERE IS AN OPPORTUNITY TO ACCOMPLISH THAT PURPOSE. IT WAS FORMED BY OUR REPUBLICAN STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE, THE STATEWIDE REPUBLICAN ORGANIZATIONS AND ELECTED REPUBLICAN OFFICIALS. I CONSENTED TO ITS FORMATION ONLY WHEN ASSURED THAT IT WAS A BONAFIDE MOVEMENT AND NOT DESIGNED TO STOP OR HELP SOMEONE ELSE UNDER COVER. I HAVE RECENTLY BEEN ASSURED BY THE INDIVIDUAL DELEGATES THAT THEY DO NOT HAVE A SECOND CHOICE.

MURROW: GOVERNOR WARREN, WHAT STRENGTH WILL YOU HAVE AT PHILADELPHIA IN ADDITION TO THAT CALIFORNIA DELEGATION?

WARREN: THAT'S SOMETHING THAT NO ONE HAS THE ANSWER TO RIGHT NOW. I HAVE NOT SOUGHT THE ELECTION OF DELEGATES PLEDGED TO ME, EXCEPT IN CALIFORNIA. I HAVE MADE NO CAMPAIGN IN ANY OTHER STATE. I HAVE SPENT NO MONEY AND HAVE NO ORGANIZATION WORKING. BUT MY NAME WILL BE PLACED IN NOMINATION. AND IT MUST BE REMEMBERED THAT THERE ARE AT LEAST HALF OF THE DELEGATES TO THE CONVENTION WHO ARE UNPLEDGED BY THEIR STATES. WHAT THESE DELEGATES WILL DO WHEN CONFRONTED WITH THE ACTUAL CONDITIONS OF THE CONVENTION REMAINS TO BE SEEN. I MAKE NO PRETENSION CONCERNING DELEGATE STRENGTH AT THIS TIME.

6/2

CBS 12-- FIRST ADD.. MURROW..

MURROW: WELL, GOVERNOR, THE WAY THAT CONVENTION LOOKS, IT SEEMS THAT ANYONE WHOSE NAME IS PLACED IN NOMINATION MAY GET IT. SO WE'LL GET AHEAD WITH SOME QUESTIONS. IF YOU WERE PRESIDENT AND FACED WITH A CHOICE OF REDUCING TAXES OR REDUCING THE NATIONAL DEBT, WHICH WOULD YOU DO?

WARREN: NOW THAT QUESTION COULD BE CONSTRUED AS ASKING IF I AM FOR HIGH TAXES OR NO HIGH TAXES.

MURROW: WELL THAT WASN'T THE WAY IT WAS MEANT.

WARREN: BUT I AM SURE THAT IS NOT WHAT YOU MEAN, BECAUSE THE PEOPLE MUST PAY FOR THE NATIONAL DEBT THROUGH TAXES AT ONE TIME OR ANOTHER. IT IS MY BELIEF THAT NO BUSINESS, INDIVIDUAL OR GOVERNMENT, CAN BE ON THE ROAD TO SOLVENCY AS LONG AS IT HAS AN ENORMOUS DEBT

AND FAILS TO DO ANYTHING ABOUT IT. I BELIEVE THAT IF THE UNITED STATES IS TO REMAIN ON THE ROAD TO SOLVENCY, IT MUST NOT ONLY QUIT DEFICIT SPENDING BUT MUST ALSO MAKE SUBSTANTIAL ANNUAL PAYMENTS ON THE PRINCIPLE OF THE NATIONAL DEBT. I DO NOT BELIEVE IT WILL BE NECESSARY TO MAKE A CHOICE BETWEEN SUCH PAYMENTS AND TAX REDUCTION. BECAUSE AMERICA WITH FULL STEAM UP IS CAPABLE OF DOING BOTH AT THE SAME TIME. HOWEVER, IF FORCED TO A CHOICE, I WOULD SAY THAT WE MUST FIRST REDUCE THE NATIONAL DEBT

MURROW: GOVERNOR, AS I READ THESE CAMPAIGN SPEECHES, IT SEEMS TO ME THAT THE WEST HAS PICKED UP ANYTHING FROM...OH... ONE TO THREE CABINET MEMBERS. AT LEAST THEY'VE BEEN PROMISED. DO YOU THINK ANYTHING WILL COME OF IT?

WARREN: WELL, I'M NOT FAMILIAR WITH WHAT OTHER CANDIDATES HAVE SAID ON THIS SUBJECT, BUT IT STANDS TO REASON THAT THE WESTERN STATES ARE ENTITLED TO FAIR REPRESENTATION AT THE POLICY-MAKING AND ADMINISTRATIVE LEVELS OF THE NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION. I AM SURE THAT NO SUCCESSFUL REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE WOULD DEPRIVE THE WEST OF SUCH REPRESENTATION AS DID THE NEW DEAL FOR 12 CONSECUTIVE YEARS. DURING THAT TIME THERE WAS NOT A SINGLE CABINET MEMBER OR HIGH ADMINISTRATIVE OFFICER FAMILIAR WITH WESTERN AFFAIRS BY REASON OF HAVING LIVED IN THAT PART OF THE COUNTRY. EVERY PART OF THE UNITED STATES SHOULD BE FAIRLY REPRESENTED, TO GIVE THE NATIONAL ADMINISTRATION AN UNDERSTANDING OF THE PROBLEMS OF THE NATION AS A WHOLE.

THE FUTURE CONDITIONS OF THE CONVENTION REMAINS TO BE SEEN. I MAKE NO PRETENSION CONCERNING DELEGATE STRENGTH AT THIS TIME.

MURROW: GOVERNOR WARREN, HERE'S A QUESTION THAT SSEVERAL LISTENERS HAVE SENT IN. THEY SAY THAT RETAIL PRICES ARE STILL GOING UP. IF YOU'RE ELECTED PRESIDENT, WHAT'LL YOU DO ABOUT THE HIGH COST OF LIVING?

WARREN: THERE'S NO MAGIC FORMULA FOR REDUCING PRICES. THE ANSWER HOWEVER IS TO BE FOUND IN INCREASED PRODUCTION AND NATIONAL MORALE. OUR WORLD RECOVERY PROGRAMS AND DEFENSE PROGRAM COMPETE WITH OUR PEOPLE FOR ESSENTIALS OF LIFE AND CRITICAL MATERIALS, LEAVING MOST COMMODITIES IN SHORT SUPPLY. SO LONG AS THIS CONDITION EXISTS, PEOPLE WILL BID FOR WHAT THEY NEED OR WANT AND IT WILL BE A CONTINUOUS BATTLE TO BRING OUR PRICES DOWN. WE ARE COMMITTED TO BOTH OUR RECOVERY AND DEFENSE PROGRAMS AS ESSENTIAL FOR THE SECURITY OF OUR COUNTRY. EVEN THOUGH THEY DO HAVE A TENDENCY TOWARD INFLATION. THIS MAKES IT NECESSARY THAT WE BRING INTO PLAY GOVERNMENTAL POLICIES THAT WILL STIMULATE PRODUCTION TO A POINT WHERE THE AMOUNT OF GOODS AVAILABLE WILL BALANCE WITH THE DEMAND FOR THEM. WHEN THIS IS ACCOMPLISHED, COMPETITION WILL REDUCE PRICES TO MORE REASONABLE LEVELS. NOW, THERE ARE SO MANY OF THESE THINGS THAT WE COULDN'T ENUMERATE THEM ALL AT ONE TIME. BUT WE MUST DESIGN OUR TAX LAWS SO AS TO ATTRACT AVAILABLE CAPITAL INTO PRODUCTIVE ENTERPRISES. WE MUST IMPROVE THE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCESS TO PREVENT MAJOR WORK STOPPAGES. WE MUST SEE TO IT DURING THIS TIME OF SHORTAGES THAT OUR PUBLIC WORKS ARE LIMITED TO THOSE THAT ARE ESSENTIAL EITHER FROM A HUMANITARIAN OR WEALTH-PRODUCING VIEWPOINT. WE MUST TAKE MORE INTEREST IN BOTH GOVERNMENT AND PRIVATE RESEARCH FOR NEW PRODUCTS AND NEW METHODS.

MURROW: GOVERNOR WARREN, HERE'S A QUESTION THAT SSEVERAL LISTENERS HAVE SENT IN. THEY SAY THAT RETAIL PRICES ARE STILL GOING UP. IF YOU'RE ELECTED PRESIDENT, WHAT'LL YOU DO ABOUT THE HIGH COST OF LIVING?

WARREN: THERE'S NO MAGIC FORMULA FOR REDUCING PRICES. THE ANSWER HOWEVER IS TO BE FOUND IN INCREASED PRODUCTION AND NATIONAL MORALE. OUR WORLD RECOVERY PROGRAMS AND DEFENSE PROGRAM COMPETE WITH OUR PEOPLE FOR ESSENTIALS OF LIFE AND CRITICAL MATERIALS, LEAVING MOST COMMODITIES IN SHORT SUPPLY. SO LONG AS THIS CONDITION EXISTS, PEOPLE WILL BID FOR WHAT THEY NEED OR WANT AND IT WILL BE A CONTINUOUS BATTLE TO BRING OUR PRICES DOWN. WE ARE COMMITTED TO BOTH OUR RECOVERY AND DEFENSE PROGRAMS AS ESSENTIAL FOR THE SECURITY OF OUR COUNTRY. EVEN THOUGH THEY DO HAVE A TENDENCY TOWARD INFLATION. THIS MAKES IT NECESSARY THAT WE BRING INTO PLAY GOVERNMENTAL POLICIES THAT WILL STIMULATE PRODUCTION TO A POINT WHERE THE AMOUNT OF GOODS AVAILABLE WILL BALANCE WITH THE DEMAND FOR THEM. WHEN THIS IS ACCOMPLISHED, COMPETITION WILL REDUCE PRICES TO MORE REASONABLE LEVELS. NOW, THERE ARE SO MANY OF THESE THINGS THAT WE COULDN'T ENUMERATE THEM ALL AT ONE TIME. BUT WE MUST DESIGN OUR TAX LAWS SO AS TO ATTRACT AVAILABLE CAPITAL INTO PRODUCTIVE ENTERPRISES. WE MUST IMPROVE THE COLLECTIVE BARGAINING PROCESS TO PREVENT MAJOR WORK STOPPAGES. WE MUST SEE TO IT DURING THIS TIME OF SHORTAGES THAT OUR PUBLIC WORKS ARE LIMITED TO THOSE THAT ARE ESSENTIAL EITHER FROM A HUMANITARIAN OR WEALTH-PRODUCING VIEWPOINT. WE MUST TAKE MORE INTEREST IN BOTH GOVERNMENT AND PRIVATE RESEARCH FOR NEW PRODUCTS AND NEW METHODS.

WE HAVE TO DEVELOP SKILLED WORKMEN AND MANAGERS THRU VOCATIONAL TRAINING. WE CAN STIMULATE HEALTHY WORLD TRADE ON A RECIPROCAL BASIS. WE CAN REALLY ATTACK MONOPOLY AND ITS ARTIFICIALLY-FIXED PRICES. AND LASTLY, WE CAN ORGANIZE A FEDERAL GOVERNMENT TO ELIMINATE SO FAR AS POSSIBLE BOTH DUPLICATION AND WASTE. IF THESE THINGS ARE DONE BY AN UNDERSTANDING ADMINISTRATION, WE CAN KEEP AMERICA ECONOMICALLY STRONG AS SHE MUST BE IF SHE IS TO SERVE BOTH HERSELF AND THE WORLD.

MURROW: GOVERNOR, TELL ME THIS; WHY DOES ANYBODY WHO LIVES IN CALIFORNIA, WILLINGLY CONTEMPLATE LIVING IN WASHINGTON?
IN OTHER WORDS: WHY DO YOU WANT TO BE PRESIDENT?
WARREN: NOW, THAT'S THE MOST DIFFICULT QUESTION OF ALL.
THERE IS NO SIMPLE ANSWER TO IT. MY WIFE HAS ASKED ME THE SAME QUESTION ABOUT ALL THE OFFICES I HAVE HELD THRU THE YEARS. I HAVE ANSWERED HER BY SAYING THIS: WHY DO OUR BOYS UNDERGO RIGOROUS TRAINING FOR MONTHS TO PLAY ON A FOOTBALL TEAM WHEN THEY COULD MORE COMFORTABLY SIT IN THE GRANDSTAND AND WATCH SOMEONE ELSE PLAY? WHY DOES A BOY WANT TO PLAY QUARTERBACK WHEN HE KNOWS THAT IF THE GAME IS LOST, HE PROBABLY WILL BE BLAMED FOR IT, WHEN HE COULD AS EASILY LET SOMEONE ELSE CALL THE SIGNALS? THE ANSWER IS TO BE FOUND, IN MY OPINION, IN THE AMERICAN CHARACTER. THE DESIRE TO SERVE WELL IN ONE'S CHOSEN FIELD, REGARDLESS OF WHERE THAT MAY BE. IF THE MEN AND WOMEN OF AMERICA WERE NOT SO MOTIVATED, OUR COUNTRY WOULD NEVER HAVE ACHIEVED ITS PRESENT GREATNESS.

MURROW: WELL GOVERNOR, HERE'S A QUESTION IN A SLIGHTLY DIFFERENT AREA. WHERE DO YOU STAND ON THE EXTENSION OF THE RECIPROCAL TRADE ACT?

WARREN: I BELIEVE IN THE PRINCIPAL OF RECIPROCAL TRADE AND THAT THE RECIPROCAL TRADE ACT SHOULD BE EXTENDED. WORLD TRADE SHOULD BE A TWO-WAY STREET. THIS MUST BE RECOGNIZED PARTICULARLY BY A NATION THAT HAS BECOME, LIKE WE HAVE, A GREAT WORLD CREDITOR. IF WE EXPECT THE PEOPLE OF OTHER COUNTRIES TO BUY FROM US THE THINGS WE PRODUCE IN TREMENDOUS QUANTITIES, WE MUST ALSO BUY FROM THEM.

MURROW: WELL GOVERNOR, HERE'S A QUESTION YOU MAY OR MAY NOT CARE TO ANSWER. IT'S CERTAINLY IN THE FIELD OF SPECULATION. BUT, HOW MANY VOTES DO YOU THINK HENRY WALLACE WILL GET OUT IN CALIFORNIA?

WARREN: WELL, I DO NOT CLAIM TO BE A PROPHET AND I'M NOT THE SON OF A PROPHET. BUT I MIGHT SAY THAT WE HAVE APPROXIMATELY FOUR MILLION, SEVEN HUNDRED AND FIFTY THOUSAND REGISTERED VOTERS IN CALIF. IN ALL PROBABILITY, FOUR MILLION OF THOSE WILL VOTE AT THE COMING ELECTION. THERE'S USUALLY A LARGE PROTEST VOTE IN CALIFORNIA AND I WOULD NOT BE SURPRISED IF MR. WALLACE RECEIVES AS MANY AS A HALF MILLION VOTES HERE.

MURROW: WELL WE HAVE TIME I THINK, FOR ONE MORE QUESTION, ALTHO IT'S A BIG QUESTION FOR A SHORT TIME. HOW, IF AT ALL, WOULD YOU CHANGE THE PRESENT BI-PARTISAN POLICY IN THIS COUNTRY, PARTICULARLY IN DEALING WITH RUSSIA?

WARREN: WELL MR. MURROW, IT'S RATHER LATE ON THE PROGRAM TO DISCUSS FOREIGN POLICY, BUT I BELIEVE WE SHOULD HAVE A BI-PARTISAN POLICY BECAUSE THERE IS ROOM FOR ONLY ONE AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY NOW AND THRU THE YEARS - WHENEVER WHEN WE HAVE A BI-PARTISAN FOREIGN POLICY

THRU THE YEARS. HOWEVER WHEN WE HAVE A BI-PARTISAN FOREIGN POLICY, I BELIEVE IT SHOULD BE BI-PARTISAN IN THE STRICTEST SENSE OF THE WORD. NAMELY, THAT BOTH PARTIES SHOULD HAVE A PART IN THE MAKING OF THE POLICY AS WELL AS FOLLOWING IT.

MURROW: WELL GOVERNOR WARREN, I APOLOGIZE FOR HAVING THROWN YOU SUCH A BIG QUESTION WHEN WE HAD ONLY ABOUT 45 SECONDS TO GO. BUT THANK YOU VERY MUCH. I'LL SEE YOU IN PHILADELPHIA, I HOPE.

WARREN: THANK YOU SI, I'LL LOOK FORWARD TO IT

CBS NY JZ-MB 943PM

/LAST LINE THANK YOU SIR, I'LL ETC.../

CBS CLR 943PM..

May 28/48

VERNE SCOGGINS
EXECUTIVE MANSION
SACRAMENTO
CALIFORNIA

This is to confirm Governor Warren's interview with Edward R. Murrow on Wednesday June 2 7:45 pm edt or 4:45 pm your time with point of origination CBS studios in Sacramento - KROY. Clyde Coombs is station manager and contact there. We have two way lines ordered from 7:30 to 8:00 pm edt and suggest if possible that the Governor arrange to be at KROY by 7:30 edt so that he and Mr. Murrow can try out circuits before air time. I will call you Tuesday to check final arrangements. Questions follow:

RADCLIFF
PGM. DIR.

May 17/48

Clyde Coombs
KROY
Sacramento
California

Informatively Edward R. Murrow is doing Presidential candidates series with declared candidates on question and answer live basis and would appreciate your cooperation. He would like to do Governor Warren from KROY studios on Wednesday night June 2 7:45 pm edt. Governor Warren has agreed to this arrangement. We will order two way lines into KROY and will contact you again well in advance of broadcast date. Many thanks for your assistance. Regards

John Aaron
CBS
New York

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

RECEIVED

1948 MAR -5 AM 9:49

C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU6 NL PD

SACRAMENTO CALIF MAR 4

EDWARD R MURROW, COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

GOVERNOR WARREN WILL BE AVAILABLE HERE FIRST WEEK IN JUNE FOR YOUR BROADCAST BUT WOULD PREFER TO MAKE BROADCAST EARLY IN WEEK

VERNE SCOGGINS PRESS SECRETARY.

945A.

Earl Warren

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

WESTERN UNION

(17)

RECEIVED
1948 MAR -1 PM 3:53
C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT. N.Y.

WU42 PD

WUX SACRAMENTO CALIF MAR 1 1142A

EDWARD R MURROW

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

GOVERNOR WARREN WILL BE HAPPY TO APPEAR ON YOUR PROGRAM SOME TIME DURING LAST WEEK IN MAY. WE AWAIT YOUR SUGGESTION AS TO POSITIVE DATE DURING THIS WEEK

VERNE SCOGGINS PRESS SECRETARY.

349P

SULLIVAN
MU-3-9388

THE PRESIDENTIAL LIST

MURROW SHOW

FLEISHMAN GR-3-4286
Tuesday, May 25 ..... NORMAN THOMAS ..... New York
Bill McADAMS NATIONAL 0001
Thursday, May 27..... ROBERT TAFT ..... Washington
WARREN BURGER MAIN 5212
Friday, May 28..... HAROLD STASSEN ..... New York

VERNE SCOGGINS SAC-2-4711
Wednesday, June 2 ..... EARL WARREN ..... Sacramento
ED FRISBY MU-6-5300
Thursday, June 3..... HENRY WALLACE ..... Albuquerque

MAC ARTHUR, DEWEY & TRUMAN: Invited but did not accept.

39 Pah

RUSH

1

ED MURROW c/o CHARLES ASHLEY
[redacted]
[redacted] NEWS ROOM
WEEI
BOSTON, MASS.

MAY 26, 1948

THOMAS ON STASSEN QUOTE AS AN AMERICAN I'M GLAD TO SAY THAT I THINK ALL THE REPUBLICANS MENTIONED FOR THE NOMINATION COULD PASS FAIRLY RESPECTABLY A TEST OF CHARACTER AND ABILITY STOP I PERSONALLY DON'T THINK ANY OF THEM WOULD PASS VERY BRILLIANTLY BUT I REPEAT THA[redacted] PREJUDICED STOP THE ONE THAT I'M MOST SUSPICIOUS OF IS AN ABLE MAN, [redacted] MEAN MR. STASSEN, AND I'M SUSPICIOUS OF HIM AND I'M SUSPICIOUS OF THE AMERICAN QUALITY OF JUDGMENT BECAUSE HE PASSES FOR A LIBERAL WHEREAS ON THE RECORD I THINK HE'S ABOUT THE LEAST LIBERAL OF THEM ALL STOP HE HAS SOME CURIOUS NOTIONS LIKE THAT OLD IDEA OF HIS OF KEEPING THE PEACE WITH 25 BOMBERS FIVE FROM EACH OF THE BIG FIVE, EACH WITH ONE OF OUR ATOM BOMBS STOP HE WANTS THAT FORGOTTEN STOP HE [redacted] "FUZZY" WITH STALIN A [redacted] AGO: NOW HE WANTS TO SUPPRESS THE COMMUNIST PARTY OUT OF HAND STOP HE WANTED TO TIE ALL KINDS OF STRINGS TO THE MARSHALL PLAN AND HE DOESN'T KNOW AND DOESN'T WANT TO KNOW SOCIALISM FROM COMMUNISM STOP IF THAT'S A LIBERAL I'M A MOHAMMEDAN...AND I'M NOT END QUOTE.

JOHN AARON
CBS NEW YORK

MYN-1 FIRST LEAD AND SUB

BOSTON, MAY 26--(INS)--HAROLD E. STASSEN SAID TONIGHT HE HAD A "VERY ENCOURAGING" DAY IN MASSACHUSETTS.

THE FORMER MINNESOTA GOVERNOR SAID HE WAS SEEKING SECOND AND THIRD CHOICE VOTES TO GO ALONG WITH HIS ESTIMATED 340 FIRST BALLOT VOTES AT THE REPUBLICAN PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION CONVENTION IN PHILADELPHIA NEXT MONTH.

HE EXPRESSED CONFIDENCE THAT HIS "SHOPPING TOUR" FOR SUPPORT AFTER FAVORITE SON CANDIDATES HAVE BEEN ACCORDED THEIR HONORS HAD NETTED RESULTS AMONG BAY STATE'S 35 DELEGATES.

STASSEN DECLINED TO COMMIT HIMSELF ON A CHOICE OF A RUNNING MATE IN THE EVENT HE BECOMES THE GOP NOMINEE. HE DID SAY HE BELIEVED AN EASTERNER--FROM NEW ENGLAND OR THE MIDDLE ATLANTIC STATES--WOULD BE IDEAL.

STASSEN TOLD NEWSMEN HE WAS SEEKING TO BE SECOND OR THIRD CHOICE OF THE DELEGATES TO "COVER CONTINGENCIES THAT MIGHT ARISE IN PHILADELPHIA."

FAR FROM BEING DISCOURAGED BY HIS DEFEAT IN OREGON BY GOVERNOR THOMAS E. DEWEY, STASSEN SAID HE HAD MERELY REDOUBLED HIS WORKING SCHEDULE. HE WAS BUSY TODAY.

HE ARRIVED BY PLANE IN BOSTON DESPITE A THICK FOG. HE APPEARED BRIEFLY BEFORE MEMBERS OF THE WOMEN'S REPUBLICAN CLUB OF MASSACHUSETTS AND THEN WAS CLOSETED FOR MORE THAN TWO HOURS WITH 22 OF THE 35 MEMBERS OF THE MASSACHUSETTS DELEGATES TO THE NATIONAL CONVENTION. HIS FINAL ACTIVITY OF THE DAY WAS A N APPEARANCE ON EDWARD MURROW'S CBS RADIO PROGRAM.

650PMD

SENATOR TAFT OF OHIO TOLD EDWARD R. MURROW IN A NATIONWIDE RADIO INTERVIEW TONIGHT (THURS) THAT HE FAVORS EXTENSION OF THE RECIPROCAL TRADE ACT FOR ONLY ONE YEAR. EARLIER IN THE DAY, SENATOR VANDENBERG EXPRESSED PREFERENCE FOR A TWO OR THREE-YEAR EXTENSION AS ADVOCATED BY THE ADMINISTRATION.

HOWEVER, TAFT SAID: "I WOULD BE VERY MUCH OPPOSED TO RETURNING TO THE OLD METHOD BY WHICH CONGRESS PASSED ON TARIFF RATES."

THE TEXT OF THE RADIO INTERVIEW:

Johnny Aaron: Apologies for the typos, but we ain't teletype operators, and the communications people said the Petrson had given them "top priority" other copy. we had to send this ourselves. Ed B

MORE

RECEIVED 1948 MAY 27 PM 4:00 C.B.S. TRAFFIC DEPT.

MAKE FIRST LINE ABOVE READ CBS 6

TAFT SAYS HES AGAINST RETURN TO OLD WAY OF SETTING TARIFFS

MURROW: SENATOR,IN YOUR OPINION,DOES THE TAFT HARTLEY LAW NEED ANY SUBSTANTIAL CHANGES?

TAFT: NO,MR MURROW, I DONT THINK IT NEEDS ANY SUBSTANTIAL CHANGES. THE COMMITTEE IS NOW HEARING REQUESTS FOR VARIOUS PROPOSALS FOR MODIFICZTIONS,I THINK PROBABLY ITS UNNECESSARY TO HOLD ELECTIONS ON UNION SHOP CASES.

A TREMENDOUS NUMBER HAVE ACCUMULATED SO THAT THEY'RE PREVENTING T XXXXXPREVENTING THE OPERATION OF THE BOARD ALMOST.

I THINK PROBABLY THE PROVISION REGARDING THE PRESS,THE CONTRIBUTIONS FOR POLITICAL PURPOSES BY UNIONS,SHOULD BE MODIFIED BECAUSE IT'S TOO BROAD.THOSE ARE THE ONLY TWO THINGS,I THINK [redacted] ARE VERY INTERESTING AND THEY 'RE NOT VERY SUBSTANTIAL.

MORE

RROW: WELL,SENATOR,TO TURN TO ANOTHER QUESTIION, AND THIS ONE COMES FROM A LISTENER WAY OUT IN YAKIMO,IN WASHINGTON,WHO SAYS THE LATEST STATISTICS INDICATE THAT PRICES ARE GOING UP AGAIN, AND THERE ARE PREDICTIONS THA XXXXXTHAT THEY'LL CONTINUE TO RISE IF YOU'RE ELECTED PRESIDENT,

WHAT WILL YOU DO ABOUT HIGH PRICES?

TAFT : WELL,IN THE FIRST PLACE,MR MURROW,I DON'T THINK THAT IT'S QUITE CORRECT TO SAY THAT THERE MAY BEXXBE HIGHER PRICES. THE WHOLESALE INDEX TODAY IS NOT ANY HIGHER THAN IT WAS LAST DECEMBER.

THE COST OF LIVING INDEX IS SLIGHTLY HIGHER,BUT I THINK THERE'S A VERY REASONABLE CHANCE THAT PRICE ARE FAIRLY WELL STABILIZED. IF THEY ARE,OUR JOBS IS TO BIXXXBRING UP THE WAGES OF FEDERAL EMP

OYEES AND OTHERS,WHO ARE LESS THAN THE COST OF LVINXXX LIVING SO THAT WE CAN STABILIZE HXXX THE WHOLE BUSINESS AT THE NEW LEVEL. I THINK IF THE PRICES DO GO UP, THE ONLY THING TO DO IS TO TRY TO CUT DOWN THESE TREMENDOUS GOVERNMNET PROGRAMS,CUT DOWN GOVERNMENT SPENDING,AND I FELL CONVINCED THAT PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS COOPERATING FOR ECONOMY COULD TAKE THREE OR FOUR BILLION DOLLARS OUT OF THE GOVERNMENTSSPENDING BUDGET, AND REDUCE VARIOUS OTHER PROGRAMS. THE TREMENDOUS VOLUME OF EXPORRXXXEXPORTS.NONE OF THESE HAVE TO BE ABANDONDED,BUT WHAT THE TROUBLE WITH INFLATION IS WE'RE TRYIN XXX TRYING TO DO MORE THINGS THAN WE ARE ABLE TO DO, EVEN WITH THE TREMENDOUS PRODUCTION WHICH THIS COUNTRY HAS. I THINK THAT PRICE COHXXXCONTROLS,WHICH HAVE BEEN PROPOSED BY THE PRESIDENT, WOULD BE WHOLLY INEFFECFIVEXXXINEFFECTIVE,THINK THEY'D COMPLETELY BREAK DOWN,THINK THEEEV'$ INTERFERE WITH THE FURTHER INCREASE IN PRODUCTION,WHICH IS THE ULTIMATE SOLUTION OF THESE DEMANDS TO DO SO MANY THINGS WHICH WE WOULD LIKE TO DO.

MORE

V O

O

MORE MURROW TAFT

REPEATING LAST PART LAST TAKE

QUOTING SENATOR TAFT " I THINK THAT PRICE CHXX CONTROLS, WHICH HAVE BEEN PROPOSED BY THE 0438$3,5XXXPRESIDENT, WOULD BE WHOLLY INEFFECTIVE,THINK THEY'D COMPLETELY BREAK DOWN, THINK THEY'D INTERFERE WITH THE FURTHER INCREASE TLXODUCTION, WHICH IS THE ULTIMATE SOLUTION OF THESE DEMANDS TO DO SO MANY THINGS WHICH WE WOULD LIKE TO DO.

MRXXMORE

MORE MURROW TAFT

MURROW: WELL,SENATOR, A NUMBER OF LISTENERS WOULD LIKE TO CASE YOU IN THE RO PHET AND THEY'VE ASKED:WHICH CANDIDATE WI XXXWILL HAVE THE MOST VOTES ON THAT FIRST BALLOT IN O£8PHILADELPHIA?

TAFT: WELL,THAT'S A [redacted] GUESS, MR MURROW, BUT I THINK ACCORDING TO THE WAY THE DELEGATES ARE LEANING TODAY,I'LL PROBABLY HAVE MORE VOTES THAN EITHER OF THE OTHER CANDIDATES.

MOR

IN SECON LINE ABOVE ITS SHLD READ YOU IN THE ROLE OF PROPHET

MORE

MORE MURROW TAFT

MURROW: WELL,SENATOR,THIS QUESTION IS NOT FROM A LISTENER. IT THOUGHT THSXXXTHIS ONE UP MYSELF.
IF YOU'RE ELECTED,WILL YOU KEEP THAT BALCONY ON THE WHITE HOUSE?

TAFT:WELL MUR MURROW, I HAVEN'T EVEN TAKEN A GOOD LOOK AT THAT BALCONY YET.I DOMXXX DON'T THINK I CAN DECIDE THAT QUESTION UNTIL I LOOK IT OVER CAREFULLUXXXCAREFULLY.

MURROW:YOU WANT TO ASTUDY ALL OF THE POSSIBILITIES? ISTXX IS THAT R

TAFT: THAT'S IT.

MURROW: WELL, NOWHERES A MORE SERIOUS QUESTIONTXX IT COMES FROM ST LOUIS, AND IT SAYS: WHAT IN YOUR OPINION CAN BE DONE,IF ANYTHING, TO IMPROVE RELATIONS BETWEEN MOSCOW AND WASHINGTON?

TAFT: WELL THAT IS CERTAINLY A DIFFICULT PROBLEM. I THINK THAT WE CAN ONLY DO WHAT WE'RE DOING NOW,PURSUE THE GENERAL POLICY WE'RE DOING NOW,OF TRYING TO PREVENT THE SPREAD OF COMMUNISM AT EVERY POINT THROUGHOUT THE WORLD WHERE WE MEET IT
I THINK IF WE PURSUE THAT POLICY,AS WE HAVE BEEN PURSUING IT, AND THE MARSHALL PLANSXXX PLAN,AND THE TRUMAN GREEK PLAN,IN THE SUPPORT FOR THE CONSERVATIVES IN THE ITALIAN ELECTIONS AND OTHER WAYS., THAT ULTIMATELY THE RUSSIANS MAY COME TO SEE THAT THEIR HOPE THAT THEY CAN SPREAD COMMUNISM THROUGH THE ENTIRE WORLD IS VAIN,. IF THEY ONCE COME TO THAT CONCLUSION,I THINK WE CAN SIT DOWN WIRH XXX WITH THEM AND WORK OUT A SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEMSS. IN THEIR PRESENT STATE OF MINE,IT IS ALMST IMPOSSIBLE TO HOPE THAT A MEETING WOULD BE SUCCESSFUL IN IMPROVING RELATIONS.

MORE

MORE MURROW TAFT

MURROW: WELL, SENATOR, HERE'S ANOTHER QUESTION ALONG VERY MUCH THE SAME LINE. GOVERNOR DEWEY AND MR. STASSEN HAVE HAD SOME CONSIDERABLE ARGUMENT ABOUT THIS ONE, BUT WE'D LIKE TO KNOW WHAT YOU THINK. DOES THE MUNDT BILL OUTLAW COMMUNISM OR DOESN'T IT?"

TAFT: "WELL, MR. MURROW, I DON'T THINK THE AUTHORS OF THE MUNDT BILL INTENDED TO OUTLAW COMMUNISM. AT LEAST, WE'LL PUT IT THIS WAY, HOWEVER, IT DOES OUTLAW THE EXTREME FORM OF COMMUNISM, IF YOU CAN PROVE IT, IN WHICH A CONSPIRACY IS ACTUALLY IN COURSE TO OVERTHROW THE GOVERNMENT OF THE UNITED STATES TOGETHER WITH SOME OVERT ACTS CARRIED OUT---THAT'S OUTLAWED. I DON'T THINK, IN ITS PRESENT FORM IT OUTLAWS COMMUNISM. IN FACT, MY DOUBT ABOUT IT IS WHETHER IT'S VERY EFFECTIVE AT ALL.

"I'D RATHER QUESTION WHETHER THE DEFINITION OF COMMUNISM THERE COULD BE PROVED AGAINST ANY---EVEN THE COMMUNIST PARTY OF THE UNITED STATES ITSELF. AND I THINK IT WILL REQUIRE SIXXX SOME MODIFICATION TO MAKE IT EFFECTIVE. I'M IN FAVOR OF REQUIRING ANY ORGANIZATIONS WHICH ARE CLOSELY RELATED TO COMMUNISTS, OR TO COMMUNISM, TO REGISTER, BUT I'D RATHER DOUBT WHETHER ANYBODY WOULD HAVE TO REGISTER UNDER THIS LAW AND THEREFORE I DON'T THINK IT CAN BE SAID TO OUTLAW THE COMMUNIST PARTY.

MORE

MURROW: "WELL, HERE'S A QUESTION IN A SLIGHTLY DIFFERENT AREA WHICH IS CERTAINLY THE SUBJECT OF A LOT OF DISCUSSION HERE IN WHSHINGTON NOW. ARE YOU IN FAVOR OF A THREE-YEAR EXTENSION OF THE RECIPROCAL TRADE ACT?"

TAFT: "NO, I WOULD PREFER TO CONTINUE IT FOR ONE YEAR. CONDITIONS TODAY, COSTS IN DIFFERENT COUNTRIES., THE PRODUCTION OF DIFFERENT COUNTRIES, ARE SO UNCERTAIN, IT'S VARYING SO RAPIDLY, THAT I DOUBT IF WE SHOULD ESTABLISH A DEFINITE TARIFF POLICY FOR MORE THAN A PERIOD OF ONE YEAR. AS TO THE HOUSE BILL, I'M SATISFIED WITH THE BILL AS IT IS, ALTHOUGH I WOULDN'T OBJECT TO MODIFICATIONS IN IT. I HAVE ALWAYS BELIEVED THAT WE SHOULD NOT LEAVE TO THE UNRESTRAINED DISCRETION OF THE PRESIDENT THE POWER TO REMOVE ALL TARIFFS OR REDUCE THEM TO A POINT WHERE THEY AMOUNT TO FREE TRADE, AS CAN BE DONE UNDER THE PRESENT LAW. I'VE ALWAYS FELT THERE SHOULD BE A STANDARD.

"I DON'T THINK CONGRESS SHOULD DELEGATE ITS LEGISLATIVE POWER TO AN EXECUTIVE BOARD OR TO THE PRESIDENT, WITHOUT SPELLING OUT THE PRINCIPLES UPON WHICH HE SHALL ACT. THE PRESIDENT MAY DESTROY AN AMERICAN INDUSTRY AT HIS DISCRETION IF HE WISHES TO DO SO. THEREFORE, I THINK THE PROVISION WHICH REQUIRES THE TARIFF COMMISSION TO PASS ON THE QUESTION IN EACH CASE AND TO CERTIFY THAT THE PROPOSED REDUCTION WILL NOT DESTROY AN AMERICAN INDUSTRY IS A REASONABLE PROVISION.

MORE

ADD MURROW TAFT

"I DON'T SEE HOW ANYONE COULD WANT A TARIFF TO BE REDUCED TO A POINT WHERE AN AMERICAN INDUSTRY WAS DESTROYED AND A LARGE AMOUNT OF UNEMPL

OYM

CREATED.

THERE IS A QUESTION IN MY MIND AS TO WHETHER IT'S WISE EVER TO COMBE BACK TO CONGRESS, EVEN TO RATIFY A RECIPROCAL TRADE TREATY TURNED XXXXTURNED DOWN BY THE TARIFF COMMISSION.

I WOULD BE VERY MUCH OPPOSED TO RETURNING TO THE OLD METHOD BY WHICH CONGRESS PASSED ON TARIFF RATES.

IN GENERAL,I'M IN FAVOR OF A LOW,REASONABLE TARIFF AND ONLY WHEN IT'S NECESSARY TO PREVENT THE DESTRUCTION OF AN AMERICAN INDUSTRY.

I THINK,HOWEVER,IT SHUXXX SHOULD BE PROBABLY LEFT TOO AN ADMINISTRATIVE TRX PASS ON ALL THE FACTS UNDER SOME STANDARD DECREED IN THE LAW.

MURROW:SENATOR TAFT I THINK WE HAVE TIME FOR JUST ONE MORE QUICK QUESTION?WHERE DO YOU STA

REPEATNG FROM FOURTH LINE ABO E

I THINK,HOWEVE,IT H SHOULD BE PROBABLY LEFT TO AN ADMINISRATIVE BOARD TO PASS ON ALL THEFACTS UNDERSOME STANDARD DECREED IN THE LAW

MURROW:SENATR TAFT I THINK WE HAVE TIME FOR JUST ONE MORE QUIK QUESTIN. WHEREDO YOU STAND ON THE DRAFT?

TAFT: WELL ,I'VE T STATED,MR.MURROW, I'M OPOXXX OPPOSED REPEATING XXXX REPTING

TAFT:WELLL I'VE STATED,MR.MURROW,I'M OPPOSED TO UNIVERSAL MILITARY TRAINING. WE MUST HOWEVER, HAVE A CERTAIN NUMBER OF MEN IN THE REGUAXXX REGULAR ARMY.IF WE CAN'T GET THOSE MEN BY VOLUNTARY ENLISTMENT, THEN I DONT SEE ZNXXX ANY CHOICE EXCEPT TO SET UP A SELECTIVER SERVICE SYSTEM.

T MU

MURROW: THANK YOU VERY MUCH,SENATOR TAFT.

END FRM CBS 11PM

UP141

NEW YORK, MAY 25--(UP)--NORMAN THOMAS TONIGHT ASSAILED THE "VERY BAD RECORD" OF THE PRESENT CONGRESS, CHARGED THAT MR. TRUMAN IS AN "INADEQUATE" PRESIDENT AND SAID THE SOCIALISTS WANT TO HELP BUILD A STRONG, GENUINELY DEMOCRATIC THIRD PARTY.

THE SIX-TIME SOCIALIST CANDIDATE FOR PRESIDENT, HOWEVER, SAID IN A RADIO INTERVIEW (CBS) THAT A GOOD THIRD PARTY "CAN NOT BE MANIPULATED BY COMMUNIST COMRADES AND FELLOW TRAVELERS" AND "OUGHT NOT TO CENTER AROUND A MESSIAH."

ASKED ABOUT THE RECORD OF THE REPUBLICAN-DOMINATED CONGRESS, THOMAS SAID:

"BAD. VERY BAD. THE ONLY THING I CAN SAY ABOUT IT IS THAT IT COULD BE WORSE...THE REPUBLICAN CONGRESS IS SHOWING HOW BAD IT IS BY THIS REALLY SHOCKING PERFORMANCE IN THE HANDLING OF THE RECIPROCAL TRADE AGREEMENT EXTENSION... IT LOOKS ALSO AS IF THE REPUBLICANS WOULD DEFEAT EVEN (SEN. ROBERT A.) TAFT'S RATHER DECENT HOUSING LAW."

HE SAID MR. TRUMAN HAD SWUNG TO LEFT AND RIGHT AND PAUSED IN THE MIDDLE.

"I WOULD SAY IN GENERAL THAT MR. TRUMAN'S RECORD IS THE RECORD OF A MAN COMPLETELY INADEQUATE TO THE DIFFICULT TASK OF THE TIME," THOMAS SAID. "THAT ISN'T ALTOGETHER HIS FAULT, BUT IT'S JUST OUR MISFORTUNE. I WOULD ALSO SAY THAT I MISTRUST MR. TRUMAN'S TENDENCY TO SUBSTITUTE FOR A COHERENT POLICY A SHOW OF STRENGTH, A DEPENDENCE ON MILITARY MIGHT, AND SUDDEN INSISTENCE WITH VEHEMENCE ON ONE POLICY TODAY AND ONE TOMORROW."

HE WAS SHARPLY CRITICAL OF HENRY WALLACE, SAYING "I DON'T BELIEVE IN PEACE BY APPEASEMENT OF STALIN AND I DON'T THINK MR. WALLACE CAN WORK WITH COMMUNISTS WHERE JAN MASARYK (CZECHOSLOVAKIAN FOREIGN MINISTER WHO KILLED HIMSELF AFTER THE COMMUNIST COUP THERE) FAILED, SO I'M NOT FOR HIS PARTY."

HE INDICATED HE FEELS THE CHIEF VALUE OF THE WALLACE PROGRESSIVE PARTY MOVEMENT IS TO CALL ATTENTION TO "THE GREAT BODY OF WORRY, OF FEAR, OF DISCONTENT AMONG AWFULLY DECENT PEOPLE, PEOPLE WHO FEAR WAR, WHO FEAR A NEW DEPRESSION, WHO ARE PPROFOUNDLY DISAPPOINTED, AND WITH REASON, AT THE REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATIC RECORD IN THE STATE DEPARTMENT AND IN CONGRESS."

THOMAS SAID THE REPUBLICANS FACE A "DIFFICULT CHOICE" IN PICKING A PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEE.

"THE ONE THAT I AM MOST SUSPICIOUS OF IS AN ABLE MAN--I MEAN MR. (HAROLD E.) STASSEN," HE SAID, "AND I'M SUSPICIOUS OF HIM AND I'M SUSPICIOUS OF THE AMERICAN QUALITY OF JUDGEMENT BECAUSE HE PASSES FOR A LIBERAL WHEREAS, ON THE RECORD, I THINK HE'S ABOUT THE LEAST LIBERAL OF THEM ALL."

S1031P

from mail re candidates

1- isnt it unfair to keep excise taxes on cosmetics, handbags and other "necessities" to women in moderate circumstances

2- do you favor equal rights to extent of Negro marrying into your family..living in part of your house?

3- for Wallace: will you withdraw if Dems nominate Douglas

4- for Wallace: in what way does your platform differ from view of US communist party

5- for Taft et others: dont vets deserve better housing bill than has been offered

6- what you intend to do for widows of war vets

7- for Wallace: what would u have done to prevent Czech coup what you plan to reachagreement with Russia

8- Wallace: how come so many world leaders fear Communism..not democracy

9- Wallace: why does Communist refuse to admit openly he's Communist

10- Wallace: what Russians ever done to get peace

11- why do you wish to be president

12- wud u agree for US troops to replace Russian troops in all Germany and Austria...with Russian replacing US and Br troops around Dardanelles and Bosporus

13- Isnt it possible to fight Communism and Fascism as Americans..instead of fighting Communism with Fascism

14- what u think about federal participation in support of education without federal control of educational program

TAFT

1. In 1940 said:"Being President is dubious pleasure." Do you still feel same way about it now ?

2. Would you accept VP nomination ?

3. Can you explain your stand in voting against the Ives Anti-Discrimination Bill ?

4. You have called for changes in the U.N. Charter but never stated what changes you had in mind. What are they ?

5. You have said that US created a vacum in Central Europe by demanding unconditional surrender. What would you have done ?

6. What makes you so certain when you say "Russia is content to wage a war of ideologies ?

STASSEN

1. How would you deal with Russia if you were President in view of statement you made saying "neither appeasement nor trust should guide our relations with the Kremlin."

2. You're quoted as saying you wouldn't run for VP on a ticket with Dewey. Why ?

3. In Feb '48 you said:"The high price curve has definitely been broken." Do you still think so ?

4. You say time has come to rebuild two party system in the south. Ho do you propose to do this ?

5. You said reappointment of Lilienthal should be based on fitness alone, not politics. Would you reappoint him if you were President ?

WARREN

1. You have come out strongly in favor of stimulating construction of homes. Have any ideas on how to accomplish this ?

2. Recently you said "GOP should be liberal in the finest sense of the word." How do you define liberal ?

TAFT

--who killed O.P.A. (relative Wherry quote that Repubs did it to

--how often you been in WH since Truman in..are you friendly each other..

--Truman seems made u his particular target..has that hurt or help

--re Tafter-Hartley act..think it needs any fixing yet..think it administered well

--my memories of when PO in WH..when start talking about it (story that Grover Cleveland once told him hoped he never got to be pres.. job too tough..or may have been Cleveland to TR

--what u think Truman has done well

--how do you estimate opponents

--h

General

--why do you want to be president

--why do you think you ought to be elected..nominated..

--wht kind of President you think you(ll make...expect to lede Congress (FDR) or let Congress lede (Hoover, Harding)..what conception job of presidency

--what President hope to emulate

--if not you, who

-- WARRENL why u in race in view little campaigning

--how stand on military mind (Dewey attacks)

--what about Commie problem (Mundt bill..Stassen for outlawing..Dewey for keeping eye on)

--what about meeting Stalin..you want to do it..who should..what preparations...

-- attitude on civil rights program?
--what do u think of Harry Truman
-- think any undue interference with Wallace campaigning?

--how do you predict you'll do at convention

Taft attacks Stassen for not being in Cong to help shape ~~[illegible]~~ legislat.. what do Warren, Stassen think of this

--what your personal estimate other candidates

--in event nomination and election, what your first objective??

--what kind of a guy are you

(letters)

--Stassen..why u against re al oleo taxes

--Taft..do u favor mil preparedness now even if draft and umt not popular in election year

--what intend do about strikes that tie up industry all over nation

--Taft..why did u pigeon hole housing bill until just before election

Q-How has Toynbee influenced thinking on foreign policy ;;he says "not only industrialism but democracy itself when hampered by parocjial state, ie, nationalism, tends to promite more dead ly wars
--(Landlord objects to rent controls)

-- do u favor reciporcal trade agreement

--favor raising postal employes pay..Baldwin bill..raising 800- a year.... Republican letter carrier wants ask Stassen who has in mind for Postmaster general

--thinks Stassen has hedged on statement he anti helping Socialist govts of Europe..Meet the Press program hedge on original statement.... where does he stand

--what is Liberal..ask Taft

--satified with present labor legislation or willing make it stricter (from meat packers strikers wife)

-- do u seriously exoect to cut down useless office holders

--Ohio constiuent to taft: what office will you feel should be given to Senator Bricker (God help us) if you become president

-- favor civil rights with teeth in it what extent will u give Negroes important govt jobs..cabinet secretary, for exampl do you favor: cloture..anti-lynch..get tough with Russia.. women in important jobs add questions from listeners

--(Stassen) how come the great US democracy supporting wealth and privilege and not great masses ..Middle East..China..East Indies

--how u stand on tariffs

--how do u intend to lower prices

--(Taft) u repeatedly condemn New Deal..what New Deal law or laws wud u recommend repealing

--(all) Can this country from a standpoint of political economy be governed to look to and benefit all the people here

--where stand on Federal World Government (same dame) why Stassen lining up with big sheep and cattlemen

--Wallace..how definitely u gonna establish lasting peace

--will u recognize Jewish state in Pal

--how stand on Townsend plan

--how stand on soil conservation

--(From Fred Eastman, Chicago Teho Seminary: Emergency Com of Atomic Scientists has said: no defense against A bomb..none expected.. preparedness against A war futile..A bombs will ruin civilization etc"

in light of this: 1* what attitude toward huge military expenditure mil forces urging on Congress 2: creation of world government with sufficient power maintain law among nations

--wud you support proposal of peace dept with full cabinet power equal to war dept

--how on civil rights program by HT

--what attitude on laws to curb liquor industry

15- Taft: do you favor idea of "next time" drafting the dollar as well a s drafting manpower

16- do u favor increased old age pensions

17- wasnt new deal Marxist...

isnt federal aid for education designed for fed mgtm of schools why is govt publicity permitted arent subsidies bribes for votes should political boss be placed in charge of Post Office shouldnt it be possible to recalled Supreme Court judges by two-thirds vote of congress arent big labor unions conspiracies in retraint of trade

why not abolish all holidays and teach youth that labor is a duty

18-what your wqualifications for job..how well equipped are you...

will you be president of party or of all the people can you harmoniously and honestly strive to assist labor will you make study of Declaration of Ind..Const...compulsory

Re Thomas: (in addition some questions attached)

--how do you size up your opponents

--lot of talk about New Realism still an issue..and its connection with Communism..just what did New Deal borrow from Socialist platforms of 1932 and prior

--what sort of campaign u gonna make..radio..speeches..how many

--in your campaigns in past have you ever experienced some of difficu,ties Wallace running into

--what do you think of value of third, fourth and fifth party on American scene

--do u wanna be the man who sits down with Stalin

--what world strength of your brand of Socialism..how differentiated from Communism..

what sort of personal satisfaction u get from being perennial also-ran.

--would u consider job in cabinet of New Administration..which one would u like to have

--Do u think Communism in this country will ever get mantle of respectability now adorning Socialism

--whats right with the country

--who is your vp candidate.. and what about him

--how you estimate value of Republican controlled Congress

--what sort of job u think Truman done

--in amplification of one of above questions: what "planks" first offered country by Socialists today part of our unquestioned law

2/12/48

The Honorable Thomas E. Dewey
Albany, New York

The Honorable Earl Warren
Sacramento, California

Henry A. Wallace
The New Republic
40 East 49th Street
New York

The Honorable Robert A. Taft
U. S. Senate
Washington, D.C.

The Honorable Harold E. Stassen
1026 Connecticut Ave. N.W.
Washington, D.C.

DURING LAST WEEK OF MAY AND FIRST WEEK OF JUNE I PLAN TO TRAVEL ABOUT THE COUNTRY INTERVIEWING SUCH CANDIDATES FOR PRESIDENTIAL NOMINATION AS ARE WILLING STOP DURATION OF INTERVIEW TEN MINUTES TO BE DONE FROM SCRIPT ON THE BASIS OF QUESTIONS EYE WOULD SUBMIT TO YOU AT LEAST ONE WEEK BEFORE DATE OF BROADCAST STOP INTERVIEW WOULD BE BROADCAST OVER COMPLETE FACILITIES OF CBS STOP ~~ORIGINALLY~~ AT 7:45 PM EASTERN STANDARD TIME ~~AND AGAIN IN RECORDED FORM TO REACH THE PACIFIC COAST AT 9:45 PM~~ STOP INFORMATIVELY THIS IS PERIOD OF MY OWN NEWS PROGRAM HEARD FIVE NIGHTS WEEKLY MONDAY THRU FRIDAY AT THIS TIME STOP RESEARCHERS ESTIMATE NIGHTLY AUDIENCE IN EXCESS OF TEN MILLION MY SOLE INTEREST IN MAKING THIS SUGGESTION IS TO PUT TO YOU CERTAIN QUESTIONS WHICH WILL BE UPPERMOST IN THE MINDS OF RADIO LISTENERS STOP PROGRAM CAN ORIGINATE WHEREVER YOU SAY STOP IF YOU ARE PREPARED TO PARTICIPATE I WILL WORK OUT WITH YOUR SECRETARY EXACT DATE AND POINT OF ORIGINATION STOP WOULD APPRECIATE TELEGRAPHIC REPLY AT YOUR EARLIEST CONVENIENCE REGARDS

EDWARD R. MURROW

CBS NEW YORK

DATES STILL OPEN ARE MONDY, ~~Jun~~ May 24, WEDNESDY, MAY 26, Monday, ~~Jne~~ May 31 or Tuesday June 1.

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

EDWARD R. MURROW - INTERVIEW WITH NORMAN THOMAS

TUESDAY, MAY 25, 1948

7:45 - 8:00 PM EDST

MURROW: Tonight, we begin a series of interviews with presidential candidates. The questions are based on letters from listeners. Most of those letters say, in one way or another, - pin him down! Don't let him dodge! Or, I know the answer but I just want to hear him give it. Tonight, our guest is Mr. Norman Thomas, the socialist candidate.

Mr. Thomas, this is the sixth time you have run for President and several people have written in to say - why do you keep on doing it?

THOMAS: If the Socialist Party hadn't run a campaign this year it would have abdicated. Never was its message of democratic socialism so necessary. We couldn't possibly support a Republican, - Mr. Truman, or Mr. Wallace, on the record, so, of course, we have to run a campaign. The man I wanted wouldn't run. My comrades literally drafted me. I don't think a man ought to run six times, but I'm doing it, and I'm in earnest, and I expect to make a campaign.

MURROW: Right! Now, would you tell us a little about your vice presidential candidate, Mr. Thomas?

THOMAS: A fine, colorful man, Tucker Smith, now Professor of Economics in Olivet College, Michigan. (MORE)

THOMAS (CTD): He's been a labor organizer and a teacher and he's a corking good speaker. A lot of Americans ought to listen to him.

MURROW: Mr. Thomas, Several people have written to say, - what sort of campaign are you going to make?

THOMAS: More or less the usual extensive campaign without benefit of private cars and all the brass bands. We will emphasize, however, our honest desire to educate the public in the necessity of Socialist planning for the common good, for the conquest of war and poverty, and we we'll stress the building of the Socialist organization. In doing it, we're not forgetting our purpose, to cooperate in building a strong and genuinely democratic Third Party, of which we can be a part. That Party cannot be manipulated by Communist comrades and fellow-travelers and that Party ought not to center around a Messiah.

MURROW: Well, now your mention of a Third Party raises the question of a fourth party, Mr. Wallace's, - what do you think its usefulness is in the political scene, Mr. Thomas?

THOMAS: It has at least this usefulness. It ought to wake up a lot of Americans to the fact that there is a great body of worry, of fear, of discontent among awfully decent people; people who fear war, who fear a new depression, who are profoundly disappointed, and with reason, at the Republican and Democratic record in the

(MORE)

THOMAS (CTD): State Department and in Congress. I disagree with Mr. Wallace on a great many important points. I was a strong critic of the record he made when he was Secretary of Agriculture with regard to sharecroppers and others. I don't believe in peace by appeasement of Stalin and I don't think Mr. Wallace can work with Communists where Jan Masaryk failed, so I'm not for his party. I wish I could be. We Socialists wish we could be, but at least it ought to call attention to some things that need thinking about in America.

MURROW: Mr. Thomas, several people have written in, asking whether or not you would like to say anything about the Republican candidates for the Presidency.

THOMAS: You'll admit I'm prejudiced! I'm interested in getting votes for the Socialist ticket and not helping the Republicans out in making a rather difficult choice. As an American, I'm glad to say that I think all the Republicans mentioned for the nomination could pass fairly respectably, a test of character and ability. I personally don't think any of them would pass very brilliantly, but I repeat that I'm prejudiced. The one that I'm most suspicious of is an able man, - I mean Mr. Stassen, and I'm suspicious of him and I'm suspicious of the American quality of judgement because he passes for a Liberal, whereas, on the record, I think he's about the least liberal of them all.

(MORE)

rw

THOMAS (CTD): He has some curious notions like that old idea of his keeping the peace with 25 bombers, five from each of the Big Five, each with one of our atom bombs. He wants that forgotten! He played "Footy" with Stalin a year or so ago; now he wants to suppress the Communist Party out of hand. He wanted to tie all kinds of strings to the Marshall Plan and he doesn't know, and doesn't want to know, Socialism from Communism. If that's a Liberal, I'm a Mohammedan ... and I'm not!

rw

MURROW: Well, that's an interesting comment on Mr. Stassen and we'll raise that question with him when we interview him in Boston tomorrow night.

THOMAS: I'd be more worried if I thought he'd get the nomination! Go right ahead!

MURROW: Well, now, Mr. Thomas, here's a question that has come in from several people. It's in two parts: what's the world's strength of your brand of Socialism, and, how does it differ from Communism?

THOMAS: The strength is very considerable. Remember, that what you call my "brand of socialism", democratic socialism, that is, has pretty much control or altogether control of Government in Great Britain, in Australia, in New Zealand. It's strongly represented in the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in Canada. It has the Government in the Scandinavian countries. It is a very powerful factor in France, in the Low Countries, and even in Italy. It differs radically from Communism as Communism has become. Communism in our judgment, has betrayed Socialism.

(MORE)

pd

THOMAS: (CTD) The economics of Communism in Russia is state capitalism where all the power of the old private capitalist class has been added to a repressive police state with horrible results. Communism in action has revived chattel slavery, literally in concentration camps. It has completely suppressed liberty of all sorts. We are radically and totally opposed to it. We believe that democracy and planning can go together, that civil liberty is a condition for successful operation of any modern government, and we stand on that conviction.

MURROW: Well, that's certainly a clear enough definition of the difference between Socialism and Communism. Here's another question that several people have asked. You've been a candidate for more than 25 years and in that time you have seen a lot of political changes and changes in parties, but how many of the Socialist planks of 25 years ago have been adopted by other parties and made the law of the land?

pd

THOMAS: I should honestly say that all the immediate demand planks that we have proposed have, after a fashion, been adopted. I don't like the way some of them have been adopted. After all, if you want a child well brought up, you better leave him with his parents and not let a rich uncle kidnap him. But they have been adopted after some fashion. I remember the time that I heard a Democratic orator over in Brooklyn speak on this line: "Now, folks, you know I used to tell you that this here old age pension was Socialist, but it ain't any more. We Democrats are for it!" That shows you what's happened. But, while they've taken our immediate demands, they've never taken our essential plank. We believe that the people themselves must own the commanding heights of the modern economic orator: the natural resources, the system of money, banking, and currency, the great monopolies and semi-monopolies, in order, democratically, to control them and to plan for abundance and nobody's taken that and that's why I'm running.

MURROW: Mr. Thomas, here's another question that several people have sent in. What do you think of the record of this Republican Congress?

AP

THOMAS: Bad! ... very bad! The only thing I can say about it is that it could be worse. If a modern Dante lived, he'd have more than seven circles in Hell. The Republican Congress is showing how bad it is by this really shocking performance in the handling of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement extension. It's bad enough to try to mangle the reciprocal trades in view of the present state of the world, but it's worse to do it with gag laws. I'm ashamed of democracy for the proceedings in the House of Representatives and that's only one illustration. It looks also as if the Republicans would defeat even Taft's rather decent housing law. It's a bad record!

MURROW: Well, would you like to say anything about Mr. Truman's record?

THOMAS: Well, you'd have to give me more time in order to say at which point, whether on the left swing or the right swing or the pause in the middle.

MORE

AP

THOMAS: (CTD.) I would say in general that Mr. Truman's record is the record of a man completely inadequate to the difficult task of the time. That isn't altogether his fault, but it's just our misfortune. I would also say that I mistrust Mr. Truman's tendency to substitute for a coherent policy, a show of strength, a dependence on military might, and sudden insistence with vehemence on one policy today and one tomorrow. And, in other words, I'm not for Mr. Truman.

MURROW: Well, you've made that clear enough, too. Thank you very much, indeed, Mr. Norman Thomas.

ap

Mr. E. R. Murrow 174 6-B-1

Norman Thomas

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

EDWARD R. MURROW

Tuesday, May 25, 1948
7:45-8:00 p.m.

CHAPPELL: (Commercial)

Now, Edward R. Murrow!

MURROW: This is the news! The State Department says this country will not recognize a naval blockade of Palestine started by Egypt and Syria. They told us about this last week. We told them it violates our traditional freedom-of-the-seas policy. They haven't replied yet, but today Lebanon offered to release 41 American citizens taken off an American ship if they all promise to go home.

In Tel-Aviv tonight, Israel Army Headquarters reported that unidentified planes have bombed residential quarters of Jerusalem for the first time in history. There are no details. Reporters with the Arab Legion say the Arabs dynamited four buildings in the Old City, trapping many Jews. The Egyptians claim they have cut the major road between Jewish settlements in the north and in the south. The Arab leaders met in Trans-Jordan today, to prepare their answer by noon tomorrow to the United Nations "cease-fire" order. The Syrian delegate to the United Nations says they won't accept it unless Israel is abolished. Dr. Weizmann, the President of Israel, called on President Truman today, then told reporters he thinks some Arab States will accept the "cease-fire" order. The President gave him some sort of hope that our arms embargo may be lifted soon. They discussed a possible 100-million-dollar loan to Israel.

(more)

A British Foreign Office spokesman says "if we give Israel a loan without warning, it will be regarded as a most regrettable action, might jeopardize an Arab decision to cease fire." The British are studying the Egyptian and Syrian blockade of Palestine and the British spokesman says "we must consult international law very carefully in such matters."

In Washington, the Senate Appropriations Committee asked Marshall Plan Administrator Hoffman to find out if the British are using any recovery funds to support the Trans-Jordan Legion.

There will be no CIO Auto Workers strike at General Motors plants on Friday. They've reached an agreement on a new contract that gives workers an eleven-cents-an-hour increase, part of it based on what happens to the cost-of-living index every three months. For every point and a fraction it goes up, the workers get an extra penny an hour. If the index comes down, the workers can lose not more than five of their eleven-cents-an-hour raise. This is something new for the auto industry. It just might be the basis for settling the Chrysler strike. The Federal Mediation Service hopes it will be the key to settling most current disputes.

Republican Chairman Eaton, of the House Foreign Affairs Committee, is against the Republican plan to extend the Reciprocal Trade Act for only one year. He favors three years as requested by the Administration and Democratic Senator George, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, predicts that next year Congress will be asked to approve three to six billion dollars to help arm our friends in Europe.

(more)

E. R. MURROW-5/25/48

Tonight, we begin a series of interviews with presidential candidates. The questions are based on letters from listeners. Most of those letters say, inm one way or another, - pin him down! Don't let him dodge! Or, I know the answer but I just want to hear him give it. Tonight, our guest is Mr. Norman Thomas, the Socialist candidate.

Mr. Thomas, this is the sixth time you have run for President and several people have written in to say - why do you keep on doing it?

THOMAS: If the Socialist Party hadn't run a campaign this year it would have abdicated. Never was its message of democratic socialism so necessary. We couldn't possibly support a Republican, - Mr. Truman, or Mr. Wallace, on the record so, of course, we have to run a campaign. The man I wanted wouldn't run. My comrades literally drafted me. I don't think a man ought to run six times, but I'm doing it, and I'm in earnest, and I expect to make a campaign.

MURROW: Right! Now, would you tell us a little about your vice presidential candidate, Mr. Thomas?

THOMAS: A fine, colorful man, Tucker Smith, now Professor of Economics in Olivet (?) College, Michigan. He's been a labor organizer and a teacher and he's a corking good speaker. A lot of Americans ought to listen to him.

MURROW: Mr. Thomas, several people have written to say, - what sort of campaign are you going to make?

THOMAS: More or less the usual extensive campaign without benefit of private cars and all the brass bands. We will emphasize, however, our honest desire to educate the public in the necessity of Socialist planning for the common good, for the conquest of war and poverty, and we'll stress the building of the Socialist organization. In doing it, we're not forgetting our purpose, to cooperate in building a strong and genuinely democratic Third Party, of which we can be a part. That Party cannot be manipulated by comrades ... (correction by speaker) by Communist comrades and fellow-travelers and that Party ought not to center around a Messiah.

MURROW: Well, now, your mention of a Third Party raises the question of a fourth party, Mr. Wallace's, - what do you think its usefulness is in the political scene, Mr. Thomas?

THOMAS: It has at least this usefulness. It ought to wake up a lot of Americans to the fact that there is a great body of worry, of fear, of discontent among awfully decent people; people who fear war, who fear a new depression, who are profoundly disappointed, and with reason, at the Republican and Democratic record in the State Department and in Congress. I disagree with Mr. Wallace on a great many important points. I was a strong critic of the record he made when he was Secretary of Agriculture with regard to sharecroppers and others. I don't believe in peace by appeasement of Stalin and I don't think Mr. Wallace can work with Communists where Jan Masaryk failed, so I'm not for his party. I wish I could be, m We Socialists wish we could be, but at least it ought to call attention to some things that need thinking about in America.

MURROW: Mr. Thomas, several people have written in, I should think a half dozen or so, asking whether or not you would like to say anything about the Republican candidates for the Presidency.

THOMAS: You'll admit I'm prejudiced! I'm interested in getting votes for the Socialist ticket and not helping the Republicans out in making a rather difficult choice. As an American, I'm glad to say that I think all the Republicans mentioned for the nomination could pass fairly respectably, a test of character and ability. I personally don't think any of them would pass very brilliantly, but I repeat that I'm prejudiced. The one that I'm most suspicious of is an able man, - I mean Mr. Stassen, and I'm suspicious of him and I'm suspicious of the American quality of judgment because he passes for a Liberal, whereas, on the record, I think he's about the least liberal of them all. He has some curious notions like that old idea of his of keeping the peace with 25 bombers, five from each of the Big Five, each with one of our atom bombs. He wants that forgotten! He played "putty" with Stalin a year or so ago; now he wants to suppress the Communist Party out of hand. He wanted to tie all kinds of strings to the Marshall Plan and he doesn't know, and doesn't want to know, Socialism from Communism. If that's a Liberal, I'm a Mohammedan ... and I'm not!

MURROW: Well, that's an interesting comment on Mr. Stassen and we'll raise that question with him when we interview him in Boston tomorrow night.

THOMAS: I'd be more worried if I thought he'd get the nomination! Go right ahead!

MURROW: Well, now, Mr. Thomas, here's a question that has come in from several people. It's in two parts: what's the world's strength of your brand of Socialism, and, how does it differ from Communism?

THOMAS: The strength is very considerable. Remember, that what you call my "brand of Socialism," democratic Socialism, that is, has pretty much control or altogether control of Government in Great Britain, in Australia, in New Zealand. It's strongly represented in the Commonwealth Federation ... Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in Canada. It has the Government in the Scandinavian countries. It is a very powerful factor in France, in the Low Countries, and in ... even in Italy. It differs radically from Communism as Communism has become. Communism, in our judgment, has betrayed Socialism. The economics of Communism in Russia is state capitalism where all the power of the old private capitalist class has been added to a repressive police state with horrible results. Communism in action has revived chattel slavery literally in concentration camps. It has completely suppressed liberty of all sorts. We are radically and totally opposed to it. We believe that democracy and planning can go together, that civil liberty is a condition for successful operation of any modern government, and we stand on that conviction.

MURROW: Well, that's certainly a clear enough definition of the difference between Socialism and Communism. Here's another question that several people have asked. You've been a candidate for more than 25 years and in that time you have seen alot of political changes and changes in parties, but how many of the Socialist planks of 25 years ago have been adopted by other parties and made the law of the land?

THOMAS: I should honestly say that all the immediate demand planks that we have proposed have, after some fashion, been adopted. I don't like the way some of them have been adopted. After all, if you want a child well brought up, you better leave him with his parents and not let a rich uncle kidnap him. But they have been adopted after some fashion. I remember the time that I heard a democratic orator over in Brooklyn speak on this line: "Now, folks, you know I used to tell you that this here old age pensions was Socialist, but it ain't any more. We Democrats are for it!" That shows you what's happened. But, while they've taken our immediate demands, they've never taken our essential plank. We believe that the people themselves must own the commanding heights of the modern economic orator, the natural resources, the system of money, banking, and currency, the great monopolies and semi-monopolies, in order, democratically, to control them and to plan for abundance and nobody's taken that and that's why I'm running.

MURROW: Mr. Thomas, here's another question that several people have sent in. What do you think of the record of this Republican Congress?

THOMAS: Bad! ... very bad! The only thing I can say about it is that it could be worse. If a modern Dante lived, he'd have more than seven circles in Hell. The Republican Congress is showing how bad it is by this really shocking performance in the handling of the Reciprocal Trade Agreement extension. It's bad enough to try to mangle the reciprocal trades in view of the present state of the world, but it's worse to do it with gang laws. I'm ashamed of democracy for the proceedings in the House of Representatives and that's only one illustration. It looks also as if the Republicans would defeat even Taft's rather decent housing law. It's a bad record!

MURROW: Well, would you like to say anything about Mr. Truman's record?

THOMAS: Well, you'd have to give me more time in order to say at which point, whether on the left swing or the right swing or the pause in the middle.

I would say in general that Mr. Truman's record is the record of a man completely inadequate to the difficult task of the time. That isn't altogether his fault, but it's just our misfortune. I would also say that I mistrust Mr. Truman's tendency to substitute for a coherent policy a show of strength, a dependence on military might, and sudden insistence with vehemence on one policy today and one tomorrow. And, in other words, I'm not for Mr. Truman.

MURROW: Well, you've made that clear enough, too.

Thank you very much, indeed, Mr. Norman Thomas, for coming here to answer our listeners' questions. We didn't have time for all of them, but we covered considerable ground and Mr. Thomas spoke without a single note.

(more)

Tomorrow night, we'll be in Boston, putting some questions to Harold Stassen, and on Thursday night we'll interview Senator Taft in Washington. Next week, we'll put some of your questions to Mr. Henry Wallace and Governor Warren. Governor Dewey did not choose to answer questions.

Now, a word from Ernest Chappell.

CHAPPELL: (Commercial)

This is CBS ... the COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Ed.trans.-Adele A. Cardiff

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

EDWARD R. MURROW - INTERVIEW WITH STASSEN

WEDNESDAY, MAY 26, 1948

7:45 - 8:00 PM EDST

MURROW: And, now, it's time to put a few questions to another candidate for the Republican nomination. Harold Stassen has been here in Boston, talking with Massachusetts Republican leaders, and he's here in the studio now. Mr. Stassen, how did you make out? Did you pick up any second-choice votes?

STASSEN: I had a very encouraging day, Mr. Murrow. I had a very enjoyable luncheon with many of the members of the delegation and leaders of the Republican Party here in Massachusetts. Of course, we fully respect the favorite sons of Massachusetts and will not in any way compete with them. But we do realize that this will be an extended balloting and we are encouraged by friends in these states who look forward to the possibility that may arise in a release and then the development of second-choice strength.

MURROW: Well, that's a careful and comprehensive statement! Mr. Stassen, last night on this program Norman Thomas said that you don't know the difference between Socialism and Communism. He said you were the least liberal of the Republican candidates. What do you say?

pmt

STASSEN: Did he define the difference? (both speaking-indistinct) ..... part of that thinking that says to be a Liberal you have to coddle Communism or be soft to those totaliterian forms. I feel very strongly that Communism and Fascism are the twin dangers to human freedom and human liberties and, of course, I'm very direct and emphatic that we must counter these infiltration tactics of the Communists. I feel that that is the rule of a true Liberal, to advance the freedom of man in social, economic, political, and religious rights. You cannot advance man's rights and freedoms these days without opposing this Communist ideology.

MURROW: Well, I suppose, Mr. Stassen, that no candidate in history has ever worked so hard to secure the nomination. I suppose, too, that you probably lost all count of the miles you've travelled and the tired chicken you've eaten. Several people have written in to ask how do you stand the pace and, before you answer that, I would like to insert that from appearances you're certainly standing it very well.

STASSEN: Well, thank you, Mr. Murrow. I suppose I might say with a smile perhaps, it's my boyhood on the farm in Minnesota that lets me stand it. Actually, though, I relax and rest very well while I travel, particularly on these air flights. Fortunately, I can sleep in the air.

pmt

MURROW: Well, how much sleep do you average a night on this campaign?

STASSEN: Oh, I think between six and seven hours.

MURROW: Well, here's a question in a totally different vein. A woman out in California writes in and says if you are nominated and elected who will you appoint Postmaster General? And she asked that question for good reason because her husband is a letter carrier.

STASSEN: You are asking some unusual questions this evening, Mr. Murrow! Well, it's a little previous on that. As a matter of fact, though, I might well appoint an outstanding Republican woman as the first Postmistress General for the United States. I think a woman should be on the Cabinet and that that's one possible place -- to take an outstanding woman executive and appoint her as the first Postmistress General of the United States.

MURROW: Well, now, here's a question in still another vein. Several people have written in and they have quoted you, some of them incorrectly, but you have been quoted as saying that you're against American aid for Socialist countries in Europe. Would you like to clarify that?

STASSEN: Well, that's partly a misquotation. What I have said was that American aid should not be used to increase Socialization or nationalization in Europe.

-more-

pmt

STASSEN: (Ctd.) It's a part of my very fundamental belief that if you nationalize and socialize the major industries and productive effort of a country you thereby take away the economic freedom of the people. In other words, it soon reaches the point where men are no longer free to buy and to sell, to work, and to earn, and invest and profit on their own decisions. You've lost what we have in this country, for example, and if you lose your economic freedom you cannot long defend your social, civil, and political freedoms. I think that's been experienced in country after country. I've also, of course, been very emphatic that with the current policy of the Soviet Union we should stop shipping, completely, machine tools, electronic devices, electrical machinery, and anything that might fit into a war machine. So I say an absolute stop to those that are in the totalitarian approach and that we should seek to persuade, to encourage, the other countries that we are aiding under the Marshall Plan not to go an additional distance into nationalization or socialization. In other words, I believe very much, fundamentally, in a free economy, what I call a modern people's capitalism, as the American Way, as in different forms, with adjusted conditions being the best manner for other countries to work back toward freedom and better conditions.

-more-

pmt

STASSEN: (Ctd.) As a matter of fact, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, and Norway, are the four countries in Europe, of the occupied countries, that have made the best recovery since the war and they are the four that have given their people the most freedom and done the least of nationalizing.

MURROW: Well, now, let's move to another subject, and we're trying to cover a lot of ground here, but a man here in Boston has written in and asked me to ask you this. He says that back in February of this year you said the high price curve has definitely been broken. Do you still think so?

STASSEN: Yes, I think so! I think we're in a favorable position to level off and stabilize our economy without going on up in an inflationary boom. We do need some policies to assist in it. But, if you recall, that very sharp, dangerously rising price curve in January and February -- that's been broken. With a good food crop this year, which I feel is coming up from observations in the West, with a good food crop this year - I think we're on our way to a stabilized economic situation.

MURROW: Well, here's another question about the political crop, and it's this. What's your estimate of the relative strength at Philadelphia, the relative strength between Stassen, Dewey, and Taft, let's say, on the first ballot?

pmt

STASSEN: It's our estimate from a nationwide survey that we will have, by a small margin, the largest number of votes on the first ballot and that we have in reserve the largest amount of second-choice support; that these two together will add up to a nomination.

MURROW: Well, now, here's another question that several people have sent in, and you realize, of course, that these questions are all based on correspondence from listeners. Several people have written in, particularly a man from Glendale, in N. Y., who puts you a very blunt question. He says - why do you want to be President?

STASSEN: That is a question! To do everything within my power to prevent a World War Three, to keep this country free, moving ahead with a better living, and happier homes, without depressions or wars. That's the great challenge which I feel is the overshadowing objective and the basis toward which I want to do everything I can.

MURROW: Well, that is both a question and an answer! And, now, a lady in Florida asks another unusual question. She wants to know what's the best book you've read recently?

STASSEN: Well, "Churchill's Memoirs" ... Churchill's "Memoirs," I think, that are coming out in "Life" and "New York Times" and in a book form, are really sweeping in their coverage, challenging in what they show of the actions between the two wars.

pmt

MURROW: Well, here's another one. Several listeners want to know how you would deal with Russia if you're elected.

STASSEN: With a firm hand and with open information to the people. I think, for example, that it was very sad that our people should learn from Moscow of the note, or the message, given to the Russian Government. I think with very open information to the American people and with a firm approach, I'm optimistic that we can fight our way through to a change in Russian policy, to the strengthening of the United Nations, and moving on toward peace.

MURROW: One final question, I think we have time for, - what advice would you give to a young man entering politics?

STASSEN: Well, to study broadly economics and social subjects and then to begin to actively participate in the local level in whichever political party he chooses.

MURROW: And one additional question, this one is mine. What's your favorite quotation?

STASSEN: Well, my favorite quotation is one from the Bible that I think is the concept from which we've drawn the basis of our whole system of Government. This matter of individual human rights. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of these, even the least, ye have done it unto Me."

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Harold Stassen.

pmt

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Harold Staven

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, May 26, 1948
7:45-8:00 p.m.

CHAPPELL: (Commercial)

Now, Edward R. Murrow!

MURROW: This is the news! The seven Arab States tonight ~~sm~~ the United Nations Security Council demand for an end to the fighting in Palestine. The Arabs say if the Security Council can agree on political terms for a truce, if the Council finds a way to guarantee that the Jews will stop fighting, if steps are taken to break up Israel, if immigration to Israel ends, if no arms are shipped to the Jews, then the Arab States are willing to give swift consideration to the Security Council's proposals and answer them within 48 hours. The Jewish Agency, on behalf of Israel, says this is a flagrant rejection of the Council's truce appeal. Senator Austin says the situation is serious and needs careful consideration by the American Government.

The war in Palestine goes on.

In London, Foreign Secretary Bevin told the House of Commons that two of the 37 British officers serving with the Trans-Jordan Legion have been withdrawn. The other 35 are not actually fighting, Mr. Bevin says, and he told Commons that Britain might end her treaty with Trans-Jordan if it became inconsistent with any action of the United Nations. A British Foreign Office spokesman says President Truman's consideration of a loan to Israel is ill-timed, might influence the Arabs against a truce. Secretary of State Marshall says all he knows about any such loan is what he reads in the papers, that is, Dr. Weizmann's statement on the subject, and the Secretary says the future of our embargo on the shipment of arms to the Middle-East depends on what the United Nations does, but the State Department is preparing for possible trouble. The Department says 24 air transports are now on the British-controlled Island of Cyprus, in the eastern Mediterranean, ready to remove Americans if they must leave the Middle-East because of trouble.

In Washington, a bill has been introduced in the House to give Israel one million dollar's worth of military Lend-Lease and today the House overrode all Democratic objections to pass a one-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act. Secretary Marshall, former Secretary of State Hull, the President, had all recommended a three-year extension without what they called crippling amendments, but the Republicans rode the bill through, banning any amendments from the floor. The vote was 234-149.

In Finland today, President Passikivi settled the trouble caused by the ouster from his Cabinet of the Communist Interior Minister. He appointed the ousted Cabinet Minister's wife, the leader of Finland's Communists, as Minister-without-Portfolio, and the new Interior Minister is acceptable to the Communists.

Secretary Marshall today blamed Russia for the failure of the allies to agree on a treaty for Austria and the President told House Speaker Martin that unless the House approves a bill to provide Federal aid for education our educational system faces the danger of a serious breakdown. The Senate already has approved such a bill.

And, now, it's time to put a few questions to another candidate for the Republican nomination. Harold Stassen has been here in Boston, talking with Massachusetts Republican leaders, and he's here in the studio now.

Mr. Stassen, how did you make out? Did you pick up any second-choice votes?

STASSEN: I had a very encouraging day, Mr. Murrow. I had a very enjoyable luncheon with the ... many of the members of the delegation and leaders of the Republican Party here in Massachusetts. Of course, we fully respect the favorite sons of Massachusetts and will not in any way compete with them, but we do realize that this will be an extended balloting and we are encouraged by friends in these States who look forward to the possibility that may arise in a release and then the development of second-choice strength.

MURROW: Well, that's a careful and comprehensive statement! Mr. Stassen, last night on this program Norman Thomas said that you don't know the difference between Socialism and Communism. He said you were the least liberal of the Republican candidates. What do you say?

STASSEN: Did he define the difference? (both speaking-indistinct) ..... part of that thinking that says to be a Liberal you have to coddle Communism or be soft to those totalitarian forms. I feel very strongly that Communism and Fascism are the twin dangers to human freedom and human liberties and, of course, I'm very direct and emphatic that we must counter these infiltration tactics of the Communists and I feel that that is the rule of a true Liberal, to advance the freedom of man in social, economic, political, and religious rights. You cannot advance man's rights and freedoms these days without opposing this Communist ideology.

MURROW: Well, I suppose, Mr. Stassen, that no candidate in history has ever worked so hard to secure the nomination. I suppose, too, that you probably lost all count of the miles you've traveled and the tired chicken you've eaten. Several people have written in to ask how do you stand the pace and, before you answer that, I would like to insert that from appearances you're certainly standing it very well.

STASSEN: Well, thank you, Mr. Murrow. I suppose I might say with a smile perhaps, it's my boyhood on the farm in Minnesota that lets me stand it. Actually, though, I relaxed and rest very well while I travel, particularly on these air flights. Fortunately, I can sleep in the air.

MURROW: Well, how much sleep do you average a night on this campaign?

STASSEN: Oh, I think between six and seven hours.

MURROW: Well, here's a question in a totally different vein. A woman out in California writes in and says if you are nominated and elected who will you appoint Postmaster General? And she asked that question for good reason because her husband is a letter carrier.

STASSEN: You are asking some unusual questions this evening, Mr. Murrow! Well, it's a little previous on that. As a matter of fact, though, I might well appoint an outstanding Republican woman as the first Postmistress General for the United States. I think a woman should be on the Cabinet and that that's one possible place is ... take an outstanding woman executive and appoint her as the first Postmistress General of the United States.

MURROW: Well, now, here's a question in still another vein. Several people have written in and they have quoted you, some of them incorrectly, but you have been quoted as saying that you're against American aid for Socialist countries in Europe. Would you like to clarify that?

STASSEN: Well, that's partly a misquotation. What I have said was that American aid should not be used to increase the Socialization or nationalization in Europe and it's a part of my very fundamental belief that if you nationalize and Socialize the major industries and productive effort of a country you thereby take away the economic freedom of the people. In other words, it soon reaches the point where men are no longer free to buy and to sell, to work, and to earn, and invest and profit on their own decisions. You've lost what we have in this country, for example, and if you lose their economic freedoms they cannot long defend their social, civil, and political freedoms. I think that's been experienced in country after country. I've also, of course, been very emphatic that with the current policy of the Soviet Union we should stop shipping, completely stop shipping, machine tools, electronic devices, electrical machinery, and anything that might fit into a war machine, so I say an absolute stop to those countries that are in the totalitarian approach and that we should seek to persuade, to encourage, the other countries that we are aiding under the Marshall Plan not to go an additional distance into nationalization or socialization. In other words, I believe very much, fundamentally, in a free economy, what I call a modern people's capitalism, as the American way, as in different forms, with adjusted conditions being the best manner for other countries to work back toward freedom and better conditions. As a matter of fact, Denmark, Holland, Belgium, and Norway, are the four countries in Europe, of the occupied countries, that have made the best recovery since the war and they are the four that have given their people the most freedom and done the least of nationalizing.

MURROW: Well, now, let's move to another subject, and we're trying to cover a lot of ground here, but a man here in Boston has written in and asked me to ask you this. He says that back in February of this year you said the high price curve has definitely been broken. Do you still think so?

STASSEN: Yes, I think so! I think we're in a favorable position to level off and stabilize our economy without going on up in an inflationary boom. We do need some policies to assist in it, but, if you recall, that very sharply, dangerously rising price curve in January and February, that's been broken. With a good food crop this year, which I feel is coming up from observations in the west, good food crop this year ... I think we're on our way to a stabilized economic situation.

MURROW: Well, here's another question about the political crop, and it's this. What's your estimate of the relative strength at Philadelphia, the relative strength between Stassen, Dewey, and Taft, let's say, on the first ballot?

STASSEN: It's our estimate from a nationwide survey that we will have, by a small margin, the largest number of votes on the first ballot and that we have in reserve the largest amount of second-choice support; that these two together will add up to a nomination.

MURROW: Well, now, here's another question that several people have sent in, and you realize, of course, that these questions are all based on correspondence from listeners, but several people have written in, particularly a man from Glendale, in N. Y., who puts you a very blunt question. He says - why do you want to be President?

STASSEN: That is a question! Todo everything within my power to prevent a World War Three, keep this country free, moving ahead with a better living, and happier homes, without depressions or wars. That's the great challenge which I feel is the overshadowing objective and the basis toward which I want to do everything I can.

MURROW: Well, that is both a question and an answer! And, now, a lady in Fireida asks another unusual question. She wants to know what's the best book you've read recently?

STASSEN: Well, "Churchill's Memoirs," Churchill's "Memoirs," I think, that are coming out in "Life" and "New York Times" and in a book form, are really sweeping in their coverage, challenging in what they show of the actions between the two wars.

MURROW: Well, here's another one. Several listeners want to know how you would deal with Russia if you're elected.

STASSEN: With a firm hand and with open information to the people. I think, for example, that it was very sad that our people should learn from Moscow of the note, or the message, given to the Russian Government. I think with a very open information to the American people and with a firm approach, I'm optimistic that we can fight our way through to a change in Russian policy, to the strengthening of the United Nations, and moving on toward peace.

MURROW: One final question, I think we have time for, - what advice would you give to a young man entering politics?

STASSEN: Well, to study broadly in economics and social subjects and then to begin to actively participate in the local level in whichever political party he chooses.

MURROW: And one additional question, this one is mine. What's your favorite quotation?

STASSEN: Well, my favorite quotation is one from the Bible that I think is the concept from which we've drawn the basis of our whole system of Government. This matter of individual human rights. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one ~~number~~ of these, even the least, ye have done it unto Me."

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Harold Stassen, for coming along to answer questions here tonight.

STASSEN: Thank you, Edward Murrow! It's been a pleasure to have been your guest tonight.

MURROW: Thank you! Tomorrow night I shall be in Washington ~~[illegible]~~ to put a fewlisteners' questions to another candidate, Senator Robert A Taft.

And, now, here is Ernest Chappell.

CHAPPELL: (Commercial)

This is CBS ... the COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Ed.tran.-Adele A. Cardiff

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

EDWARD R. MURROW -- INTERVIEW WITH TAFT

THURSDAY, MAY 27, 1948

7:45 - 8:00 PM EDST

MURROW: And now, it's time to put a few questions to another candidase for the Republican presidential nomination - Senator Robert Taft, of Ohio, who is here in the studio tonight.

Senator, in your opinion, does the Taft-Hartley Law need any substantial changes?

TAFT: No, Mr. Murrow, I don't think it needs any substantial changes. The Committee is now hearing requests for various proposals for modifications, some of which undoubtedly ought to be made. But they're not very substantial. I think probably it's unnecessary to hold elections on union shop cases. A tremendous number have accumulated so that they're preventing the operation of the Board almost. I think probably the provision regarding the press -- the contributions for political purposes by unions -- should be modified because it's too broad. Those are the only two things, I think, that are very interesting and they're not very substantial.

ha

MURROW: Well, Senator, to turn to another question and this one comes from a listener way out in Yakima, in Washington, who says: the latest statistics indicate that prices are going up again and there are predictions that they'll continue to rise. If you're elected President, what will you do about high prices?

TAFT: Well, in the first place, Mr. Murrow, I don't think that it's quite correct to say that there may be high prices. The wholesale index today is not any higher than it was last December. The cost-of-living index is slightly higher, but I think there's a very reasonable chance that prices are fairly well stabilized. If they are, our job is to bring up the wages of Federal employees and others, who are less than the cost-of-living, so that we can stabilize the whole business at the new level. I think if the prices do go up, the only thing to do is to try to cut down these tremendous Government programs, cut down government spending, and I feel convinced that President and Congress cooperating for economy could take three or four billion dollars out of the Government's spending budget, and reduce various other programs. None of these have to be abandoned, but we ... the trouble with inflation is we're trying to do more things than we are able to do, even with the tremendous production which this country has.

(MORE)

ha

TAFT: (CTD) I think this has to be sealed down unless we want inflation. I think that price controls, which have been proposed by the President, would be wholly ineffective, think they'd completely break down, think they'd interfere with the further increase in production, which is the ultimate solution of these demands to do so many things which we would like to do.

MURROW: Well, Senator, a number of listeners would like to cast you in the role of a prophet and they've asked: which candidate will have the most votes on that first ballot in Philadelphia?

TAFT: Well, that's a guess, Mr. Murrow, but I think, according to the way the delegates are leaning today, I'll probably have more votes than either of the other candidates.

MURROW: Well, Senator, this question is not from a listener. I thought this one up myself. If you're elected, will you keep that balcony on the White House?

TAFT: Well, Mr. Murrow, I haven't even taken a good look at that balcony yet. I don't think I can decide that question until I look it over carefully.

MURROW: You want to study all of the possibilities? Is that right?

TAFT: That's it!

MURROW: Well, now, here's a more serious question. It comes from St. Louis, and it says: what, in your opinion, can be done, if anything, to improve relations between Moscow and Washington?

TAFT: Well, that is certainly a difficult problem. I think that we can only do what we're doing now, pursue the general policy we're doing now, of trying to prevent the spread of Communism at every point throughout the world where we meet it. I think if we pursue that policy, as we have been pursuing it, and the Marshall Plan, and the Truman Greek plan, in the support for the conservatives in the Italian elections and other ways, that ultimately the Russians may come to see that their hope that they can spread Communism through the entire world is vain. If they once come to that conclusion, I think we can sit down with them and work out a solution of the problems. In their present state of mind, it is almost impossible to have hope that a meeting would be successful in improving relations.

ha

MURROW: Well, Senator, here's another question along very much the same line. Governor Dewey and Mr. Stassen have had some considerable argument about this one, but we'd like to know what you think: does the Mundt Bill outlaw Communism or doesn't it?

TAFT: Well, Mr. Murrow, I don't think the authors of the Mundt Bill intended to outlaw Communism. At least, we'll put it this way --however, it does outlaw the extreme form of Communism, if you can prove it, in which a conspiracy is actually in course to overthrow the Government of the United States together with some overt acts carried out, - that's outlawed. I don't think, in its present form, it outlaws Communism. In fact, my doubt about it is whether it's very effective at all. I'd rather question whether the definition of Communism there could be proved against anyone, even the Communist Party of the United States itself, and I think it will require some modification to make it effective. I'm in favor of requiring any organizations, which are closely related to Communists, or to Communism, to register, but I'd rather doubt whether anybody would have to register under this law and, therefore, I don't think it can be said to out-law the Communist Party.

MURROW: Well, here's a question in a slightly different area, which is certainly the subject of a lot of discussion here in Washington now. Are you in favor of a three-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act?

ha

TAFT: No, I would prefer to continue it for one year. Conditions today, costs in different countries, the production of different countries, are so uncertain, it's varying so rapidly, that I doubt if we should establish a definite tariff policy for more than a period of one year. As to the House bill, I'm satisfied with the bill as it is, although I wouldn't object to modifications in it. I have always believed that we should not leave to the unrestrained, discretion of the President the power to remove all tariffs or reduce them to a point where they amount to free trade, as can be done under the present law. I've always felt there should be a standard. I don't think Congress should delegate its legislative power to an executive board or the President, without a spelling out of the principles upon which he shall act. Today there is no principle. The President may destroy an American industry in his discretion if he wishes to do so. Therefore, I think the provision which requires the tariff comission to pass on the question in each case and to certify that the proposed reduction will not destroy an American industry is a reasonable provision. I don't see how anyone could want a tariff to be raduced to a point where an American industry was destroyed and a large amount of unemployment created.

more

TAFT: (CTD) There is a question in my mind as to whether it's wise ever to come back to Congress even to ratify a reciprocal trade treaty turned down by the Tariff Commission. I would be very much opposed to returning to the old method by which Congress passed on tariff rates. In general, I'm in favor of a low, reasonable tariff and only when it's necessary to prevent the destruction of an American industry. I think, however, it should be probably left to an administrative board to pass on all the facts under some standard decreed in the law.

MURROW: Senator Taft, I think we have time for just one more quick question. Where do you stand on the draft?

TAFT: Well, I've stated, Mr. Murrow, I'm opposed to universal military training. We must, however, have a certain number of men in the regular Army. If we can't get these men by voluntary enlistment, then I don't see any choice except toset up a Selective Service system.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Senator Taft.

Radio Info.

6a

Robert Taft

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

EDWARD R. MURROW

Thursday, May 27, 1948
7:45-8:00 p.m.

CHAPPELL: (Commercial)

Now, Edward R. Murrow!

MURROW: This is the news! The British tonight gave the United Nations Security Council another plan for ending the war in Palestine, - a four weeks armistice, both Arabs and Jews to agree not to import more arms or fighting men, which would end some Jewish immigration. The Council to agree on worldwide arms embargo for the Middle-East. If it's effective, the British say they'll stop shipping arms to Arab States under their treaties. The British also suggest that the U. N. send military observers to Palestine to see that all this is carried out and they say that only 21 of the 37 British officers with the Trans-Jordan Legion are actually under British orders. These men would be recalled. The rest are hired independently. All this came soon after Russia proposed the final 36-hour ultimatum to the Arabs, - stop fighting or we'll either send a force to make you stop or impose economic sanctions against you. Today, King Abdullah visited the old city of Jerusalem, touring the Moslem and Christian quarters. His Legion has captured two more British synagogues in the Old City and the battle seems to be swinging to the Tel-Aviv-Jerusalem road where both sides admit they're concentrating large forces.

(more)

The State Department has sent a second protest to Lebanon against the detention in Beirut of 41 American citizens taken off an American ship last week. We're not told what this second protest says.

Here, in Washington today, there were loud and angry cries in both the Senate and the House against an NBC short-wave broadcast to Latin-America some months ago, a part of the "Voice of America." The broadcast, in the view of most congressmen, cast slurs on several states, the Mormons and Quakers, so, the President is investigating; at least two Senate Committees and one in the House are going to try to find out how and why this happened. Chairman Vandenberg, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, today came out against the House-approved Reciprocal Trade Act extension. He doesn't care much whether the law is extended for one year, as in the House bill, or for three as requested by the Administration, but he's against giving Congress the virtual power to veto some future presidential tariff agreements. He said the old law should be extended as is because it is indispensable in today's world.

The Russian Ambassador, here in Washington, is going home. He says to get new instructions on how to wind up his country's 11-billion-dollar Lend-Lease account and the State Department has flatly turned down the Russian protests over American planes off Japan interfering with Soviet shipping. The Department says General MacArthur is using planes to prevent illegal entry into Japan. The General has been asked to come home in early June to testify on Far Eastern affairs before the Senate Appropriations Committee. The President says he's invited the General to Washington at least twice. Some congressmen think the MacArthur invitationis politics. Representative Miller, of Nebraska, a MacArthur-for-President supporter, says if he comes it's bound to make him more popular.

The Senate Finance Committee has OK'd the House-approved bill to end Federal taxes on oleomargarine with one change, - places that serve olee will have to post signs saying so.

General Motors and the CIO Electrical Workers have agreed on a new contract - 11¢-an-hour raises and the cost-of-living provisions included in the auto workers' contract.

And in South Africa, Prime Minister Smuts has been defeated in his own constituency, lost his seat in Parliament, and, therefore, must resign as Prime Minis ... his Prime Minister's post.

(more)

E. R. MURROW-5/27/48

MURROW: And,now, it's time to put a few questions to another candidate for the Republican presidential nomination - Senator Robert Taft, of Ohio, who is here in the Studio tonight.

Senator, in your opinion, does the Taft-Hartley Law need any substantial changes?

TAFT: No, Mr. Murrow, I don't think it needs any substantial changes. The Committee is now hearing requests for various proposals for modifications, some of which undoubtedly ought to be made, but they're not very substantial. I think probably it's unnecessary to hold elections on union shop cases. A tremendous number have accumulated so that they're preventing the operation of the Board almost. I think probably the provision regarding the press, the contributions for political purposes by unions, should be modified because it's too broad. Those are the only two things, I think, that are very interesting and they're not very substantial.

MURROW: Well, Senator, to turn to another question and this one comes from a listener way out in Yakimo, in Washington, who says: the latest statistics indicate that prices are going up again and there are predictions that they'll continue to rise. If you're elected President, what will you do about high prices?

TAFT: Well, in the first place, Mr. Murrow, I don't think that it's quite correct to say that there may be high prices. The wholesale index today is not any higher than it was last December. The cost-of-living index is slightly higher, but I think there's a very reasonable chance that prices are fairly well stabilized. If they are, our job is to bring up the wages of Federal employees and others, who are less than the cost-of-living, so that we can stabilize the whole business at the new level. I think if the prices do go up, the only thing to do is to try to cut down these tremendous Government programs, cut down Government spending, and I feel convinced that President and Congress cooperating for economy could take three or four billion dollars out of the Government's spending budget, and reduce various other programs. The tremendous volume of exports. None of these have to be abandoned, but we ... what the trouble with inflation is we're trying to do more things than we are able to do, even with the tremendous production which this country has. I think has to be sealed down unless we want inflation. I think that price controls, which have been proposed by the President, would be wholly ineffective, think they'd completely break down, think they'd interfere with the further increase in production, which is the ultimate solution of these demands to do so many things which we would like to do.

MURROW: Well, Senator, a number of listeners would like to cast you in the role of a prophet and they've asked: which candidate will have the most votes on that first ballot in Philadelphia?

TAFT: Well, that's a guess, Mr. Murrow, but I think, according to the way the delegates are leaning today, I'll probably have more votes than either of the other candidates.

MURROW: Well, Senator, this question is not from a listener. I thought this one up myself. If you're elected, will you keep that balcony on the White House?

TAFT: Well, Mr. Murrow, I haven't even taken a good look at that balcony yet. I don't think I can decide that question until I look it over carefully.

MURROW: You want to study all of the possibilities? Is that right?

TAFT: That's it!

MURROW: Well, now, here's a more serious question. It comes from St. Louis, and it says: what, in your opinion, can be done, if anything, to improve relations between Moscow and Washington?

TAFT: Well, that is certainly a difficult problem. I think that we can only do what we're doing now, pursue the general policy we're doing now, of trying to prevent the spread of Communism at every point throughout the world where we meet it. I think if we pursue that policy, as we have been pursuing it and the Marshall Plan, and the Truman Greek plan, in the support for the conservatives in the Italian elections and other ways, that ~~XXX~~ ultimately the Russians may come to see that their hope that they can spread Communism through the entire world is vain. If they once come to that conclusion, I think we can sit down with them and work out a solution of the problems. In their present state of mind, it is almost impossible to ~~XXXX~~ hope that a meeting would be successful in improving relations.

MURROW: Well, Senator, here's another question along very much the same line. Governor Dewey and Mr. Stassen have had some considerable argument about this one, but we'd like to know what you think: does the Mundt Bill outlaw Communism or doesn't it?

TAFT: Well, Mr. Murrow, I don't think the authors of the Mundt Bill intended to outlaw Communism. At least, we'll put it this way, however, it does outlaw the extreme form of Communism, if you can prove it, in which a conspiracy is actually in course to overthrow the Government of the United States together with some overt acts carried out, - that's outlawed. I don't think, in its present form, it outlaws Communism. In fact, my doubt about it is whether it's very effective at all. I'd rather question whether the definition of Communism there could be proved against any, even the Communist Party of the United States itself, and I think it will require some modification to make it effective. I'm in favor of requiring any organizations, which are closely related to Communists, or to Communism, to register, but I'd rather doubt whether anybody would have to register under this law and, therefore, I don't think it can be said to outlaw the Communist Party.

MURROW: Well, here's a question in a slightly different area, which is certainly the subject of a lot of discussion here in Washington now. Are you in favor of a three-year extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act?

TAFT: No, I would prefer to continue it for one year. Conditions today, costs in different countries, the production of different countries, are so uncertain, it's varying so rapidly, that I doubt if we should establish a definite tariff policy for more than period of one year. As to the House bill, I'm satisfied with the bill as it is, although I wouldn't object to modifications in it. I have always believed that we should not leave to the unrestrained, discretion of the President the power to remove all tariffs or reduce them to a point where they amount to free trade as can be done under the present law. I've always felt there should be a standard. I don't think Congress should delegate its legislative power to an executive board or president ... or the President, without a very spelling out the principles upon which he shall act, and today there is no principle.-(sentence sic) The President may destroy an American industry in his discretion if he wishes to do so, therefore, I think the provision which requires the tariff commission to pass on the question in each case and to certify that the proposed reduction will not destroy an American industry is a reasonable provision. I don't see how anyone could want a tariff to be reduced to a point where an American industry was destroyed and a large amount of unemployment created. There is a question in my mind as to whether it's wise ever to come back to Congress even to ratify a reciprocal trade treaty turned down by the Tariff Commission. I would be very much opposed to returning to the old method by which Congress passed on tariff rates. In general, I'm in favor of a low, reasonable tariff and only when it's necessary to prevent the destruction of an American industry. I think, however, it should be probably left to an administrative board to pass on all the facts under some standard decreed in the law.

MURROW: Senator Taft, I think we have time for just one more quick question. Where do you stand on the draft?

TAFT: Well, I've stated, Mr. Murrow, I'm opposed to universal military training. We must, however, have a certain number of men in the regular Army. If we can't get those men by voluntary enlistment, then I don't see any choice except to set up a Selective Service system.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Senator Taft, for coming down here to answer a few questions.

On Wednesday of next week, I shall be interviewing Mr. Henry Wallace and on Thursday, Governor Warren.

And, now, here is Ernest Chappell for Franco-American.

CHAPPELL: (Commercial)

This is CBS ... the COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Ed. trans.-Adele A. Gardiff

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

EDWARD R. MURROW - INTERVIEW WITH EARL WARREN

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 2, 1948

7:45 - 8:00 PM EDST

MURROW: And now it's time to put a few questions to another candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination; Governor Earl Warren of California. This isn't going to be exactly an arms-length discussion, for the Governor is out in Sacramento where I'd like to be, and I'm here in New York. But with a little cooperation from the engineers we'll probably get on alright. Are you there Governor?

WARREN: Yes sir.

MURROW: Right. Well here's the first question. As I understand it, the California Delegation is committed to you. Have they made a second choice?

WARREN: No, they have not. This is a first-choice delegation, elected yesterday for a specific purpose. It will remain so as long as there is an opportunity to accomplish that purpose. It was formed by our Republican State Central Committee, the statewide Republican organizations and elected Republican officials. I consented to its formation only when assured that it was a bonafide movement and not designed to stop or help someone else under cover. I have recently been assured by the individual delegates that they do not have a second choice.

pmt

MURROW: Well Governor Warren, what strength will you have at Philadelphia in addition to that California Delegation?

WARREN: Well that's something that no one has the answer to right now. I have not sought the election of delegates pledged to me, except in California. I have made no campaign in any other state. I have spent no money and have no organizations working. But my name will be placed in nomination and it must be remembered that there are at least half of the delegates to the Convention who are unpledged by their states. What these delegates will do when confronted with the actual conditions of the Convention remains to be seen. I make no pretension concerning delegate strength at this time.

MURROW: Well Governor, the way that Convention looks it seems that anyone whose name is placed in nomination may get it. So we'll go ahead with some "iffy" questions. If you were President and faced with a choice of reducing taxes or reducing the national debt, which would you do?

WARREN: Now, that question could be construed as asking if I am for high taxes or no high taxes.

MURROW: Well that wasn't the way it was meant.

pmt

WARREN: But I am sure that is not what you mean, because the people must pay for the national debt through taxes at one time or another. It is my belief that no business, individual or Government, can be on the road to solvency as long as it has an enormous debt and fails to do anything about it. I believe that if the United States is to remain on the road to solvency, it must not only quit deficit spending but must also make substantial annual payments on the principle of the national debt. I do not believe it will be necessary to make a choice between such payments and tax reduction. Because America with full steam up is capable of doing both at the same time. However, if forced to a choice, I would say that we must first reduce the national debt.

MURROW: Well Governor, as I read these campaign speeches, it seems to me that the West has picked up anything from ... oh ... one to three Cabinet members. At least they've been promised. Do you think anything will come of it?

WARREN: Well I'm not familiar with what other candidates have said on this subject, but it stands to reason that the western states are entitled to fair representation at the policy-making and administrative levels of the national administration. I am sure that no successful Republican candidate would deprive the West of such representation as did the New Deal for 12 consecutive years.

-more-

pmt

WARREN: (Ctd.) During that time there was not a single Cabinet member or high administrative officer familiar with Western affairs by reason of having lived in that part of the country. Every part of the United States should be fairly represented, to give the national administration an understanding of the problems of the nation as a whole.

MURROW: Well, Governor Warren, here's a question that several listeners have sent in. They say that retail prices are still going up. If you're elected President, what'll you do about the high cost of living?

WARREN: There's no magic formula for reducing prices. The answer however is to be found in increased production and national morale. Our world recovery programs and defense program compete with our people for essentials of life and critical materials, leaving most commodities in short supply. So long as this condition exists, people will bid for what they need or want and it will be a continuous battle to bring our prices down. We are committed to both our recovery and defense programs as essential for the security of our country, even though they do have a tendency toward inflation. This makes it necessary that we bring into play governmental policies that will stimulate production to a point where the amount of goods available will balance with the demand for them.

-more-

pmt

WARREN: (Ctd.) When this is accomplished, competition will reduce prices to more reasonable levels. Now, there are so many of these things, that we couldn't enumerate them all at one time. But we must design our tax laws so as to attract available capital into productive enterprises. We must improve the collective bargaining process to prevent major work stoppages. We must see to it during this time of shortages that our public works are limited to those that are essential either from a humanitarian or wealth-producing viewpoint. We must take more interest in both government and private research for new products and new methods. We have to develop skilled workmen and managers through vocational training. We can stimulate healthy world trade on a reciprocal basis. We can really attack monopoly and its artificially-fixed prices. And lastly, we can organize a federal government to eliminate so far as possible both duplication and waste. If these things are done by an understanding administration, we can keep America economically strong as she must be, if she is to serve both herself and the world.

MURROW: Governor, tell me this; Why does anybody who lives in California willingly contemplate living in Washington? In other words; why do you want to be President?

WARREN: Now that's the most difficult question of all. There is no simple answer to it.

-more-

pmt

WARREN: (Ctd.) My wife has asked me the same question about all the offices I have held through the years. I have answered her by saying this; Why do our boys undergo rigorous training for months to play on a football team when they could more comfortably sit in the grandstand and watch someone else play? Why does a boy want to play quarterback when he knows that if the game is lost, he probably will be blamed for it, when he could as easily let someone else call the signals? The answer is to be found, in my opinion, in the American character. The desire to serve well in one's chosen field, regardless of where that may be. If the men and women of America were not so motivated, our country would never have achieved its present greatness.

MURROW: Well Governor, thanks very much. Here's a question in a slightly different area. Where do you stand on the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act?

WARREN: I believe in the principle of reciprocal trade and that the Reciprocal Trade Act should be extended. World trade should be a two-way street. This must be recognize particularly by a nation that has become like we have -- a great world creditor. If we expect the people of other countries to buy from us the things we produce in tremendous quantities, we must also buy from them.

pmt

MURROW: Well Governor, here's a question you may or may not care to answer. It's certainly in the field of speculation, but; How many votes do you think Henry Wallace will get out in California?

WARREN: Well, I do not claim to be a prophet and I'm not the son of a prophet. But I might say that we have approximately four million, seven hundred and fifty thousand registered voters in California. In all probability, four million of those will vote at the coming election. There's usually a large protest vote in California and I would not be surprised if Mr. Wallace receives as many as a half million votes here.

MURROW: Well we have time I think, for one more question, although it's a big question for a short time. How, if at all, would you change the present bi-partisan policy in this country, particularly in dealing with Russia?

WARREN: Well Mr. Murrow, it's rather late on the program to discuss foreign policy, but I believe we should have a bi-partisan policy because there is room for only one American foreign policy now and through the years. However, when we have a bi-partisan foreign policy, I believe it should be bi-partisan in the strictest sense of the word; namely that both parties should have a part in the making of the policy as well as following it.

pmt

MURROW: Well Governor Warren, I apologize for having thrown you such a big question when we had only about 45 seconds to go. But thank you very much. I'll see you in Philadelphia, I hope.

WARREN: Thank you sir, I'll look forward to it.

pmt

Earl Warren
~~Newsroom~~
2

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, June 2, 1948
7:45-8:00

ANNCR: Now-Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. The war is still on in Palestine. But the Security Council has told its mediator Count Bernadotte to arrange for a definite time for both Arabs and Jews to stop fighting. Probably within a few days. The Council feels that both sides accepted its Cease Fire proposal unconditionally. Despite Jewish assumptions and Arab explanations of what that proposal really means. King Abdullah said today; the Arabs never under any circumstances will accept a Jewish State. A Jewish spokesman in Tel Aviv says Jewish forces have lost only a fraction of their territory and conquered one-third of the land assigned to the Arabs in the past 19 days of battle.

In the Pacific Northwest tonight the Columbia River is still a threat to a number of communities. Six of them have been labeled "critical areas". But it appears that flood fighters are holding their own.

The House of Representatives took but two hours today to approve a big Army and Air Force budget appropriation. Tomorrow a Navy bill will probably get quick approval. Add the funds in these three bills to the three billions already approved for airplanes and you have a defense budget for the next fiscal year of almost 14 billion dollars. A House Committee revealed today that it had been told by Admiral Denfield, Chief of Naval Operations, that our warships are actually in the Meditterranean to warn Russia not to overrun any more free countries. And to remove Americans if the Russians don't listen.

The President made it known today that he wants Congress to approve a Housing Bill, extend the Reciprocal Trade Act, and approve Federal Aid to Education before it adjourns for the political conventions.

Outside the White House; more than 3,000 persons, by Secret Service count, picketed against the Mundt Bill to control Communism and for Civil Rights legislation.

Leon Henderson, the head of the Americans For Democratic Action, says the Mundt Bill is just what the Communists want to form another front with American liberals.

An NBC official told Congress today that the Government should handle all Voice of American international broadcasts. And NBC is willing to lease its Short Wave stations to the Government for $1.00 a year. The State Dept. says that together with five countries of Western Europe, we have reached a provisional agreement on the future of Western Germany. The Dept. hopes all will approve the agreement soon. It has not been made public.

The magazine Newsweek reports that a poll of 50 Washington correspondents shows all agreed that the Republicans will win the Presidential election. A majority think it will be Senator Vandenberg. And President Truman wrote a Missouri Dentist who advised him not to run, that; "I was not brought up to run away from a fight."

...More...

MURROW: And now it's time to put a few questions to another candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination; Governor Earl Warren of California. This isn't going to be exactly an arms-length discussion, for the Governor is out in Sacramento where I'd like to be, and I'm here in New York. But with a little cooperation from the engineers we'll probably get on alright.

Are you there Governor?

WARREN: Yes sir.

MURROW: Right. Well here's the first question. As I understand it, the California Delegation is committed to you. Have they made a second choice?

WARREN: No, they have not. This is a first-choice delegation elected yesterday for a specific purpose. It will remain so as long as there is an opportunity to accomplish that purpose. It was formed by our Republican State Central Committee, the statewide Republican organizations and elected Republican officials. I consented to its formation only when assured that it was a bonafide movement and not designed to stop or help someone else under cover. I have recently been assured by the individual delegates that they do not have a second choice.

MURROW: Well Governor Warren, what strength will you have at Philadelphia in addition to that California Delegation?

WARREN: Well that's something that no-one has the answer to right now. I have not sought the election of delegates pledged to me except in California. I have made no campaign in any other state. I have spent no money and have no organizations working. But my name will be placed in nomination and it must be remembered that there are at least half of the delegates to the Convention who are unpledged by their states. What these delegates will do when confronted with the actual conditions of the Convention remains to be seen. I make no pretension concerning delegate strength at this time.

MURROW: Well Governor, the way that Convention looks it seems that anyone whose name is placed in nomination may get it. So we'll go ahead with some jiffy questions. If you were President and faced with a choice of reducing taxes or reducing the National Debt, which would you do?

WARREN: Now that question could be construed as asking if I am for high taxes or no high taxes.

MURROW: Well that wasn't the way it was meant.

WARREN: But I am sure that is not what you mean, because the people must pay for the National Debt thru taxes at one time or another. It is my belief that no business, individual or Government, can be on the road to solvency as long as it has an enormous debt and fails to do anything about it. I believe that if the United States is to remain on the road to solvency, it must not only quit deficit spending but must also make substantial annual payments on the principle of the National Debt. I do not believe it will be necessary to make a choice between such payments and tax reduction. Because America with full steam up is capable of doing both at the same time. However, if forced to a choice, I would say that we must first reduce the National Debt

MURROW: Well Governor, as I read these campaign speeches, it seems to me that the West has picked up anything from...oh...one to three Cabinet members. At least they've been promised. Do you think anything will come of it?

WARREN: Well I'm not familiar with what other candidates have said on this subject, but it stands to reason that the Western States are entitled to fair representation at the policy-making and administrative levels of the national administration. I am sure that no successful Republican candidate would deprive the West of such representation as did the New Dealfor 12 consecutive years. During that time there was not a single Cabinet member or high administrative officer familiar with Western affairs by reason of having lived in that part of the country. Every part of the United States should be fairly represented, to give the national administration an understanding of the problems of the nation as a whole.

MURROW: Well Governor Warren, here's a question that several listeners have sent in. They say that retail prices are still going up. If you're elected President, what'll you do about the high cost of living?

WARREN: There's no magic formula for reducing prices. The answer however is to be found in increased production and national morale. Our world recovery programs and defense program compete with our people for essentials of life and critical materials. Leaving most commodities in short supply. So long as this condition exists, people will bid for what they need or want and it will be a continuous battle to bring our prices down. We are committed to both our recovery and defense programs as essential for the security of our country. Even tho they do have a tendency toward inflation. This makes it necessary that we bring into play Governmental policies that will stimulate production to a point where the amount of goods available will balance with the demand for them. When this is accomplished, competition will reduce prices to more reasonable levels. Now there are so many of these things that we couldn't enumerate them all at one time. But we must design our tax laws so as to attract available capital into productive enterprises. We must improve the collective bargaining process to prevent major work stoppages. We must see to it during this time of shortages that our public works are limited to those that are essential either from a humanitarian or wealth-producing viewpoint. We must take more interest in both Government and private research for new products and new methods. We have to develop skilled workmen and managers thru vocational training. We can stimulate healthy world trade on a reciprocal basis. We can really attack monopoly and its artificially-fixed prices. And lastly, we can organize a Federal Government to eliminate so far as possible both duplication and waste. If these things are done by an understanding Administration, we can keep America economically strong as she must be if she is to serve both herself and the world.

MURROW: Governor, tell me this; Why does anybody who lives in California willingly contemplate living in Washington? In other words; why do you want to be President?

WARREN: Now that's the most difficult question of all. There is no simple answer to it. My wife has asked me the same question about all the offices I have held thru the years. I have answered her by saying this; "Why do our boys undergo rigorous training for months to play on a football team when they could more comfortably sit in the grandstand and watch someone else play. Why does a boy want to play quarterback when he knows that if the game is lost, he probably will be blamed for it, when he could as easily let someone else call the signals." The answer is to be found, in my opinion, in the American character. The desire to serve well in one's chosen field, regardless of where that may be. If the men and women of Amerba were not so motivated, our country would never have achieved its present greatness.

MURROW: Well Governor, thanks very much. Here's a question in a slightly different area. Where do you stand on the extension of the Reciprocal Trade Act?

WARREN: I believe in the principal of reciprocal trade and that the Reciprocal Trade Act should be extended. World trade should be a two-way street. This must be recognized particularly by a nation that has become like we have; a great world creditor. If we expect the people of other countries to buy from us the things we produce in tremendous quantities, we must also buy from them.

MURROW: Well Governor, here's a question you may or may not care to answer. It's certainly in the field of speculation, but; How many votes do you think Henry Wallace will get out in California?

WARREN: Well I do not claim to be a prophet and I'm not the son of a prophet. But I might say that we have approximately four million, seven hundred and fifty thousand registered voters in Calif. In all probability, four million of those will vote at the coming election. There's usually a large protest vote in California and I would not be surprised if Mr Wallace receives as many as a half million votes here.

MURROW: Well we have time I think, for one more question, altho it's a big question for a short time. How, if at all, would you change the present bi-partisan policy in this country, particularly in dealing with Russia?

WARREN: Well Mr. Murrow, it's rather late on the program to discuss foreign policy, but I believe we should have a bi-partisan policy because there is room for only one American foreign policy now and thru the years. However when we have a bi-partisan foreign policy, I believe it should be bi-partisan in the strictest sense of the word. Namely that both parties should have a part in the making of the policy as well as following i t.

MURROW: Well Governor Warren, I apologize for having thrown you such a big question when we had only about 45 seconds to go. But thank you very much. I'll see you in Philadelphia, I hope.

WARREN: Thank you sir, I'll look forward to it.

MURROW: Thank you again. Tomorrow night we shall be interviewing Mr. Henry Wallace and on Friday night Govem or Thomas E. Dewey is coming to the studio to answer questions. Meanwhile...

Announcer-Commercial

This is CBS...THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM.

Ed.Trans/T.Madanchick

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

ED MURROW INTERVIEWS HENRY WALLACE

THURSDAY, JUNE 3, 1948

7:45 - 8:00 PM EDST

MURROW: And now we continue our interviews with Presidential candidates. Tonight again it will have to be done at something of a distance. For Mr. Henry Wallace is campaigning in the West. He is out at KGGM in Albuquerque, New Mexico. How's the weather out your way, Mr. Wallace; the crops look good?

WALLACE: Oh it's beautiful weather and the crops are pretty fair.

MURROW: Good. Well most of the people who have written in have said; put these questions bluntly and directly. So we'll start in that fashion. Is there any possibility that you will abandon your campaign?

WALLACE: No, Mr. Murrow, we're not going to abandon the work of building a new progressive political party. The voters are entitled to a choice, between a program for peace and the policy of the Republicans and Democrats which is undermining our most sacred American principles and leading us toward war.

MURROW: Well how many votes do you expect to get in this contest?

WALLACE: We're going to get the votes of people who want practical plans for peace. Plans which will protect American principles and the public interest.

-more-

pmt

WALLACE: (Ctd.) We're going to get the votes of those who are tired of seeing Democrats and Republicans join hands to pass anti-Labor legislation; defeat Civil Rights legislation; and bottle up measures to improve health education and social security. We shall get the votes of people who dislike the way in which the old parties pinch pennies on public power, flood control and resource development, while they spend billions for arms. I wouldn't attempt to translate our expected vote into round figures. But we shall get millions of votes that the opinion polls will not register. The fear-makers have made it dangerous for millions of people openly to express their opinions. But they will speak quietly and effectively in the secrecy of the voting booths next November.

MURROW: Mr. Wallace, how much support are you getting from the Communists? And do you welcome it?

WALLACE: According to the newspapers, I'm getting a lot of support from the Communists. And the Communist leaders seem to think they have to endorse me every day or so. There's no question that this sort of thing is a political liability. The Communists oppose my advocacy of progressive capitalism. They support me because I say that we can have peace with Russia. I will not repudiate any support which comes to me on the basis of interest in peace.

-more-

pmt

WALLACE: (Ctd.) The Communists are interested in peace because they want a successful Socialist experiment in Russia. I am interested in peace because I want our American system to demonstrate the enormous vitality of which it is capable, that vitality which is being wasted in preparations for war. If, during the war, we had accepted the idea that you can't work with Communists, we might not have succeeded in our joint efforts to stop Hitler. If you accept the idea that Communists have no right to express their opinions, then you don't believe in Democracy. And if you accept the notion that it is impossible to live in a world with sharply differing ideas, then you accept the inevitability of war. I don't believe in the inevitability of war. I do believe in Democracy.

MURROW: Well, Mr. Wallace, several people have written in to ask whether or not you would care to give us your own estimate of the other candidates in this contest.

WALLACE: No, I wouldn't. They don't have any fundamental differences among themselves on program. I say an election should be decided on the basis of policy differences and not on differences in personality. That is a major reason for the new party. I wish that Senator Vandenberg and General Marshall or Senator Connally would accept my challenge to a series of debates on foreign policy.

-more-

pmt

WALLACE: (Ctd.) Those debates would show that there is no real difference between the Republicans and Democrats, regardless of the names and the personalities of the candidates.

MURROW: Well here's another question, Mr. Wallace. Do you believe that American Communists are dedicated to the overthrow of our Government by violence?

WALLACE: If it is true that the American Communists are dedicated to the violent overthrow of the Government, we have laws on the books to prosecute the Communists in court. We spend enough every year for J. Edgar Hoover's FBI. They should get the evidence. Politicians, like the Attorney General, always say that the Communists advocate the violent overthrow of the Government. But they never take the matter to court. They are either lax in their duties or it just isn't true. I can't understand how the Communists can advocate the violent overthrow of the Government without saying it. Or how they can work to that end without the FBI getting the evidence that will stand up in the Supreme Court. If any group, Communists or any other, wants to advocate the violent overthrow of the Government, they are not dangerous provided they are free to speak their piece. (INTERRUPTION) ... Just a moment please. They won't get far if we make our Democracy work and solve the problems of the people.

MURROW: I apologize for the interruption, but we can't get our cues quite straight at this distance, Mr. Wallace.

pmt

WALLACE: That's fine Ed, go ahead.

MURROW: Right. Now, Mr. Justice Holmes once used the phrase "clear and present danger." What in your opinion is the "clear and present danger" now facing this country?

WALLACE: Justice Holmes's phrase "clear and present danger" applies to free speech. And there is no danger to our country which can be met by limiting free speech. Legislation such as the Mundt Bill, which would undermine free speech, press and assembly, is a real danger. The whole campaign to create a Red menace is a danger. It is intended to distract people from grave problems of health, housing, social security, declining real wages and so forth. I expect to make a broadcast on Sunday in which I shall point out that if we are going to understand the international crisis, we can't focus all our attention on the Communist movement. There are other international political movements of greater immediate significance to Americans. One is international big business which own state and local governments, dominates our foreign policy and controls governments abroad.

MURROW: Now Mr. Wallace, if you were elected, whom would you name as Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense?

WALLACE: I won't name names at this time. I can say that my Secretary of State would not be a general or Wall Street lawyer.

-more-

pmt

WALLACE: (Ctd.) He might be an independent business man interested in world trade, rather than in privileges for monopolies. He might be a church leader with a real devotion to the teachings of the prophets and Jesus, to peace and the brotherhood of man. He would be an American who would defend every American principle and public interest, but who wouldn't confuse the interests of international big business with the public interest. My Secretary of Defense would not be a Wall Street banker or a man whose interests or training would make him eager to serve the manufacturers of munitions. I would want a man who would know how to use modern science to provide real defense. And I would want him to be interested in building world security through a United Nations' Police Force. I think my Secretary of Defense might come from the ranks of the practical scientists. The men who know precisely what another war would mean.

MURROW: Mr. Wallace, are you convinced that in face to face conversations with Marshal Stalin, you could solve the major outstanding differences between this country and Russia?

WALLACE: I'm convinced that in an official position I could settle the outstanding differences. And that I could settle them without sacrificing a single American principle or public interest.

pmt

MURROW: Well, one final question, Mr. Wallace. What do you plan to do if you are not elected?

WALLACE: Well I'm a great advocate of planning, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I know you are.

WALLACE: But right now all my planning is directed to building the new party, the peace party. We are going to speak the language politicians understand, the language of votes next November. And I'm not making personal plans beyond that election day.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mr. Wallace out at KGGM in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

pmt

~~Mr. Murrow~~
Henry Wallace

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

E.R.MURROW

Thursday, June 3, 1948
7:45-8:00

ANNCR: Now-Edward R. Murrow.

MURROW: This is the news. The President tonight appointed a Fact-Finding Board to investigate a dispute between six Pacific Coast Maritime Unions and the ship owners. He says a strike for higher wages, set for June 15, would imperil the national health and safety.

And in Oakridge, Tenn., AFL atomic energy workers have turned down an offer of a 10¢ an hour wage increase from the Carbide and Carbon Chemicals Corp., which runs some plants for the Government. The union asked Atomic Energy Commission Chairman Lilienthal to force the company to arbitrate. He refused, saying that would interfere with the prerogatives of management. An 80-day Taft-Hartley injunction against a strike expires at midnight Monday.

The President tonight leaves for an 18-state tour. Tomorrow night he makes a major speech in Chicago. And the White House says when he gets to the Pacific Northwest next Friday, he'll inspect the flood areas of Oregon by airplane. As the Columbia River floods were rushing thru their last 40 miles to the sea, river forecasters warned melting snows in the Columbia's headwaters are starting a new flood. It won't be as bad as this week's, but people who evacuated their homes have been warned not to go back yet.

The House of Representatives today passed a Naval Appropriation Bill. Finishing its work on more than 10 billion dollars worth of defense appropriations. Then the House got an Appropriations Committee bill for foreign recovery and relief; six billion dollars. But 26% less than the Administration asked. The Committee cut some funds from the various bills and ordered the rest of the money to be stretched over 15 months rather than a year Marshall Plan Administrator Hoffman hopes the Senate will restore this money. He says; the less money we have, the less recovery we can expect to get.

The United Nations Security Council decided today that it's mediator in Palestine, Count Folke Bernadotte, will be responsible for settling all conflicting Arab and Jewish interpretations of what the Cease Fire proposal means. Today he talked with the Arabs in Amman and the Jews in Tel Aviv. The Egyptian Government reports that its Navy has bombarded the Jewish port midway between Tel Aviv and Haifa. The Jews say they shot down two Egyptian bombers over Tel Aviv.

The British have placed an embargo on the shipment of arms to all Arab countries.

Republican Senator Millikin of Colorado charges that Secretary of State Marshall is treating Congress the way he'd treat a soldier who fails to put proper polish on his boots. The Senator says he doesn't like the ultimatums Congress gets from the Secretary. Particularly the advice that it would be better to let the Reciprocal Trade Act ~~expx~~ die, rather than to accept House-approved alterations.

The Finnish Premier told his people today that Russia has reduced Finland's war reparations payments by 50%. Proof, he said, of Russia's friendship for Finland.

...More...

MURROW: And now we continue our interviews with Presidential candidates. Tonight again it will have to be done at something of a distance. For Mr. Henry Wallace is campaigning in the West. He is out at KGGM in Albuquerque, New Mexico. How's the weather out your way, Mr. Wallace; the crops look good?

WALLACE: Oh it's beautiful weather and the crops are pretty fair.

MURROW: Good. Well most of the people who have written in have said; put these questions bluntly and direct. So we'll start in that fashion. Is there any possibility that you will abandon your campaign?

WALLACE: No, Mr. Murrow, we're not going to abandon the work of building a new progressive political party. The voters are entitled to a choice, between a program for peace and the policy of the Republicans and Democrats which is undermining our most sacred American principles and leading us toward war.

MURROW: Well how many votes do you expect to get in this contest?

WALLCE: We're going to get the votes of people who want practical plans for peace. Plans which will protect American principles and the public interest. We're going to get the votes of those who are tired of seeing Democrats and Republicans join hands to pass anti-Labor legislation; defeat Civil Rights legislation; and bottle up measures to improve health education and social security. We shall get the votes of people who dislike the way in which the old parties pinch pennies on public power, flood control and resource development, while they spend billions for arms. I wouldn't attempt to translate our expected vote into round figures. But we shall get millions of votes that the opinion polls will not register. The fear-makers have made it dangerous for millions of people openly to express their opinions. But they will speak quietly and effectively in the secrecy of the voting booths next November.

MURROW: Mr. Wallace, how much support are you getting from the Communists and do you welcome it?

WALLACE: According to the newspapers, I'm getting a lot of support from the Communists. And the Communist leaders seem to think they have to endorse me every day or so. There's no question that this sort of thing is a political liability. The Communists oppose my advocacy of progressive capitalism. They support me because I say that we can have peace with Russia. I will not repudiate any support which comes to me on the basis of interest in peace. The Communists are interested in peace because they want a successful Socialist experiment in Russia. I am interested in peace because I want our American system to demonstrate the enormous vitality of which it is capable. That vitality which is being wasted in preparations for war. If, during the war, we had accepted the idea that you can't work with Communists, we might not have succeeded in our joint efforts to stop Hitler. If you accept the idea that Communists have no right to express their opinions, then you don't believe in Democracy. And if you accept the notion that it is impossible to live in a world with sharply differing ideas, then you accept the inevitability of war. I don't believe in the inevitability of war. I do believe in Democracy.

MURROW: Well Mr. Wallace, several people have written in to ask whether or not you would care to give us your own estimate of the other candidates in this contest.

WALLACE: No, I wouldn't. They don't have any fundamental differences among themselves on program. I say an election should be decided on the basis of policy differences and not on differences in personality. That is a major reason for the new party. I wish that Senator Vandenberg and General Marshall or Senator Connally would accept my challenge to a series of debates on foreign policy. Those debates would show that there is no real difference between the Republicans and Democrats,regardless of the names and the personalities of the candidates.

MURROW: Well here's another question, Mr. Wallace. Do you believe that American Communists are dedicated to the overthrow of our Government by violence?

WALLACE: If it is true that the American Communists are dedicated to the violent overthrow of the Government, we have laws on the books to prosecute the Communists in court. We spend enough every year for J. Edgar Hoover's FBI. They should get the evidence. Politicians, like the Attorney General, always say that the Communists advocate the violent overthrow of the Government. But they never take the matter to court. They are either lax in their duties or it just isn't true. I can't understand how the Communists can advocate the violent overthrow of the Government without saying it. Or how they can work to that end without the FBI getting the evidence that will stand up in the Supreme Court. If any group, Communists or any other, wants to advocate the violent overthrow of the Government, they are not dangerous provided they are free to speak their piece. ...Just a moment please. They won't get far if we make our democracy work and solve the problems of the people.

MURROW: I apoligize for the interruption, but we can't get our cues quite straight at this distance, Mr. Wallace.

WALLACE: That's fine Ed, go ahead.

MURROW: Right. Now, Mr. Justice Holmes once used the phrase "clear and present danger." What in your opinion is the clear and present danger now facing this country?

WALLACE: Justice Holmes' phrase "clear and present danger" applies to free speech. And there is no danger to our country which can be met by limiting free speech. Legislation such as the Mundt Bill, which would undermine free speech, press and assembly, is a real danger. The whole campaign to create a Red menace is a danger. It is intended to distract people from grave problems of health, housing, social security, declining real wages and so forth. I expect to make a broadcast on Sunday in which I shall point out that if we are going to understand the international crisis, we can't focus all our attention on the Communist movement. There are other international political movements of greater immediate significance to Americans. One is international big business which own state and local governments dominates our foreign policy and controls governments abroad.

MURROW: Now Mr. Wallace, if you were elected, whom would you name as Secretary of State and Secretary of Defense?

WALLACE: I won't name names at this time. I can say that my Secretary of State would not be a General or Wall Street lawyer. He might be an independent business man interested in world trade, rather than in privileges for monopolies. He might be a Church leader with a real devotion to the teachings of the prophets and Jesus, to peace and the brotherhood of man. He would be an American who would defend every American principle and public interest, but who wouldn't confuse the interests of international big business with the public interest. My Secretary of Defense would not be a Wall Street banker or a man whose interests or training would make him eager to serve the manufacturers of munitions. I would want a man who would know how to use modern science to provide real defense. And I would want him to be interested in building world security thru a United Nations' Police Force. I think my Secretary of Defense might come from the ranks of the practical scientists. The men who know precisely what another war would mean.

MURROW: Mr. Wallace, are you convinced that in face to face conversations with Marshal Stalin, you could solve the major outstanding differences between this country and Russia?

WALLACE: I'm convinced that in an official position I could settle the outstanding differences. And that I could settle them without sacrificing a single American principle or public interest.

MURROW: Well, one final question, Mr. Wallace. What do you plan to do if you are not elected?

WALLACE: Well I'm a great advocate of planning, Mr. Murrow.

MURROW: I know you are.

WALLACE: But right now all my planning is directed to building the new party, the peace party. We are going to speak the language politicians understand, the language of votes next November. And I'm not making personal plans beyond that election day.

MURROW: Thank you very much, Mr. Wallace out at KGGM in Albuquerque, New Mexico. I've been sitting here in New York asking a few questions of Mr. Henry Wallace who is out in Albuquerque. Governor Thomas E. Dewey had planned to join us at this microphone tomorrow night. But his plans have changed, so he'll be here to answer questions on Monday night of next week.

And now...

Announcer-Commercial

This is CBS...THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Ed.Trans/T.Madanchick

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

MURROW INTERVIEWS GOVERNOR THOMAS E DEWEY.

MONDAY, JUNE 7, 1948

7:45 - 8:00 PM EDST

MURROW: And now, it is time to put a few questions to Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York. This interview will be entirely un-hearsed, Governor Dewey has said that he would answer any questions that I might care to put to him. So we'll start with a statement that the Governor issued today, on the matter of restoring the House cuts that have been made in the Marshall Plan appropriation. You issued a statement, I believe, today, Governor, just what does it say?

DEWEY: Here it is, Mr. Murrow: For the first time since the end of the war our government has been making affirmative progress in the building of the peace, through strengthening of the free world as a result of the proding and leadership of the Republican Party. There has undoubtedly been waste and improvidence in the handling of the huge foreign relief funds in the past -- parenthetically that is over 20 billion dollars -- and this has aroused justifiable resentment. The new program, however, has been carefully built. The legislation has been passed by both Houses of Congress and there is reason to believe that the abuses of the past will stop. A good administrator will spend only what is needed to do the job.

-more-

pmt

DEWEY: (Ctd.) As I have repeatedly said, it is better to appropriate the full amount and give the administrator the tools with which to work than to handicap him at the very outset. The original authorizations for the European and China recovery programs were, in my judgment, the proper amounts required for the great purposes of these programs. I earnestly hope that the amounts which have been cut will be restored, thereby maintain the confidence of the people of the free world in our good faith and leadership.

I might add that there is no magic in the particular sum, if we had appropriated seven billion dollars or five billion dollars when the program was passed then all I would like to see us do is to stick to it, because we have been making progress in this cold war all over the world. The people are again beginning to rally to our leadership as we prodded it through the Republican Party into becoming an affirmative, constructive, intelligent program. I do not want those people to think that we promised something and let them down.

MURROW: Now, that is certainly a clear answer, Governor. Now, here is another one. And I should preface this by saying that a lot of people who have wirtten in say "put them to him bluntly, don't let him dodge." So that's what we'll try to do.

pmt

DEWEY: I hope they didn't suggest that with regard to your questions to me!

MURROW: No, they did not. This is a general subject Governor. How do you stand on the admission of displaced persons into this country?

DEWEY: I've favored it for a good many years and said so, since it was first proposed.

MURROW: Governor, I know that you have answered this one, but again a few people have written in saying, " I know the answer to this one, but I just want to hear him say it." Here is the question. Would you consider the vice-presidential nomination?

DEWEY: Well, this makes it official, then, the answer is no.

MURROW: Well, now they have heard that.

DEWEY: The people of my state would, I think, believe that I'd be much more useful sticking on the job I now hold.

MURROW: Right. Well, now here is the next one, Governor. You and Mr. Stassen and Senator Taft have all claimed the most first ballot votes in Philadelphia. Do you still stand by that estimate?

DEWEY: Can a guest correct his host?

MURROW: Oh, certainly. It has been done before. (BOTH LAUGHING)

pmt

DEWEY: Well, I haven't made any claims.

MURROW: That's true, but your spokesmen have, I think.

DEWEY: Others have, yes. As a matter of fact, the last figures that I have seen were printed in newspapers by impartial observers -- one was a syndicated columnist of last week, another one was a syndicated columnist in the Sunday papers and by a miracle they agreed. Their figures -- these are not mine -- their figures were that we would start with something over 300 votes on the first ballot, Mr. Taft would have something like 250, Mr. Stassen something like a hundred and fifty and I rather think they are about right. (BOTH LAUGHING) I'm not making any forecasts!

MURROW: Right. Well, here is a question in a slightly different vein, Governor. If you are nominated and elected would you keep that balcony on the White House?

DEWEY: I haven't seen it. I just don't know. If it is comfortable and doesn't spoil the looks I think I would.

MURROW: All right, now here we change pace again. Where do you stand on the President's civil rights program?

DEWEY: Well, he borrowed that. That is a pale and a rather clumsy copy of the Republican platform of 1944 on which I ran, badly presented, but on our program in '44 it was a good one and I stand on it.

pmt

MURROW: Governor, we seem to be changing our areas here with great speed, but since we can ask any questions, here comes one in a slightly different vein. Would you advise your two sons to enter politics?

DEWEY: Yes, if they had first established their own business or profession, so they weren't dependent upon politics for a livelihood.

Now, I think it is the most important service a man can give and if he has anything to give he ought to go into politics. Either on a local basis, or an alderman, or assemblyman, or state Senator or in the national scene if he has got his groundwork and his training in government, but first he ought to have his own breadwinning established so that when he is licked he is happy to be able to go back to private life so he can live more comfortable and better than he did in public office.

MURROW: Well, now Governor, speaking of breadwinning, I don't want to ask any indiscreet questions, but that farm of yours up in Pawling? Is that a business proposition? Does it pay its own way or is it a sort of hobby?

DEWEY: Well, it breaks even. It has to. Because I can't pay any deficits. But aside from my family and my job it is my greatest interest in life and dairy farming is, to me, the most exciting thing I do.

pmt

MURROW: Well, now, Governor, back to another exciting thing.. Politics. What do you think of the value of third and fourth parties in the American political scene?

DEWEY: I think they have practically no value unless one of two major parties is disintergrating and fading from the scene. That has happened, really, three times in the history of the United States --- when one of the major parties had so fallen apart and lost its touch with the people, or lost its relationship to basic principles a third party was necessary as the instrumentality of providing an opposition. But basically I think third and fourth parties are extremely dangerous because if we should ever develop three or four strong parties we would then be heading toward the multi-party system which is what brought on Hitler in Germany, what has brought the chaos in France and in Italy. Premier de Gasperi at dinner told me a few months ago his great problem -- he spends most of his time with sheer politics, and why? He has 26 parties to deal with. Nobody can govern a country if he has got to spend his time doing business with 26 political parties. The two party system has been the greatest contribution this government has made towards the science of free government and I think it is the most valuable political tradition we have. I hope we never lose it.

pmt

MURROW: Well, certainly anyone who tried to cover that Italian election, as I did, with the 26 parties can appreciate the value of a two party system. But, Governor, from domestic politics back to international affairs and trade. Where do you stand on the matter of reciprocal trade?

DEWEY: I favored the reciprocal trade treaties from the very beginning, I favor the extension now for the full three years and I believe that with a Republican Administration we can avoid the abuses that have caused so much of the criticism. I am entirely confident that these policies are sound, are necessary for the development of trade. Trade is the route by which peace is brought about. It is of great importance.

MURROW: Well, Governor, this is a question that interests me particularly. Out in Portland you made a speech, a powerful and persuasive speech, against outlawing Communism. I think most of our listeners are probably familiar with your stand on that issue. What I want to know is how long did it take you to write it?

DEWEY: You mean the debate or the speech?

MURROW: The speech, not the debate.

DEWEY: The speech that I delivered shortly after I got out there I worked -- Oh I guess about 12 to 15 hours on; it is rather less than usual for a major 30 minute speech.

MURROW: 12 to 15 hours?

DEWEY: Yes. The research was pretty extensive and I think I rewrote it five times.

MURROW: Well, I think a lot of broadcasts would probably be better if they represented the party at San Francisco in the shaping of the United Nations Conference and there with Senator Vandenberg, and between them they have represented our country at all the conferences since, either one or both of them. To the extent that our policy has been genuinally bipartisan, with consultation before action was taken, it was successful. To the extent, as in the case of the Greek, the Turkish, the China and many other of our major policies which, in my judgment, have not been successful, those policies were conceived in the administration and handed to the Congress as a faite accompli. The policies, where they have been bipartisan, have been successful and should be carried on.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York.

pmt

Thomas E. Dewey

COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

EDWARD R. MURROW

Monday, June 7, 1948
7:45-8:00 PM

ANN'CR: (faulty recording) EDWARD R. MURROW. As his guest tonight Mr. Murrow has Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York in the final interview in his series of talks with presidential candidates. Now, Mr. Murrow:

MURROW: This is the news:

Six Western countries today announced their plans to set up a seperate federal government for Western Germany, with the United States, Britain and France agreeing to keep their armed forces in Germany until the peace is secured. These three countries, together with Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg, also agree that their representatives will control the coal, coke and iron production of the Ruhr. The British Cabinet has accepted the plan. President Truman or Secretary Marshall will shortly announce American approval. No congressional action is necessary. But the French are facing a fight. A number of deputies who ordinarily vote with the government are describing the plan as "profoundly shocking, hairraising," they fear the possibility that German interests may eventually hold the deciding vote on decisions affecting the Ruhr and thus split the six powers who conceived the plan. Russian objections were expected and have started to be registered.

The Russians also objected at the United Nations today against the possibility that no Russians will be included among the military observers to Palestine to keep track of the truce agreement. The United Nations mediator, Count Bernadotte, has asked for American, French and Belgian observers. Mr. Gromyko wants to know why no Russians. Count Bernadotte today gave both Jews and Arabs his peace proposals. He wants a straight-forward answer within 48 hours. The Arabs say they will make their decision Wednesday morning. And the fighting in Palestine goes on.

Edward Benes, the President of Czechoslovakia resigned today, 24 hours before the deadline for signing the new Communist written constitution. Mr. Benes gave ill health as one of his reasons. Another was the problems of the whole political situation. It would appear that Mr. Benes had enough of the Communist, their coup, their constitution and their recent election.

In Washington the Senate today shelved six anti-segregation amendments to the draft act, all proposed by Senator Langer, North Dakota. Republican Senator Vandenberg got support today in his effort to restore a 26 per cent House cut in Marshall Plan funds.

The President is in Idaho today where he attacked what he called reductions by the Republican Congress in funds he wanted to spend on reclamation and power developments in the West.

In the Pacific Northwest, as the second flood crest of the Columbia River started to go down, melting snows in the river's headwaters brought predictions of another and third crest.

John L. Lewis opened his new contract negotiations with the soft coal operators today. He said he was there undre duress, meaning a court order that he bargain with the Southern Coal Producer's association. He also said he is waiting for the operators to make the miners a new wage offer and he said he expects the operators to guarantee payments to distressed miners under the 1946 welfare fund which is running out of money. An operator's spokesman said, "We are pretty far apart. I hope we are not deadlocked."

And now it is time to put a .....MORE.....

MURROW:.....And now, it is time to put a few questions to Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York. This interview will be entirely un-hearsed, Governor Dewey has said that he would answer any questions that I might care to put to him. So we'll start with a statement that the governor issued today, on the matter of restoring the House cuts that have been made in the Marshall Plan appropriation.

You issued a statement, I believe, today, Governor, just what does it say?

DEWEY: Here it is, Mr. Murrow: For the first time since the end of the war our government has been making affirmative progress in the building of the peace, through strengthening of the free world as a result of the g proding and leadership of the Republican Party. There has undoubtedly been waste and improvidence in the handling of the huge foreign relief funds in the past -- parenthetically that is over 20 billion dollars -- and this has aroused justifiable resentment. The new program, however, has been carefully built and the legislation passed by both Houses of Congress and there is reason to believe that the abuses of the past will stop. A good Administrator will spend only what is needed to do the job.

As I have repeatedly said, it is better to appropriate the full amount and give the Administrator the tools with which to work than to handicap him at the very outset. The original authorizations for the European and China recovery programs were, in my judgment, the proper amounts required for the great purposes of these programs. I earnestly hope that the amounts which have been cut will be restored, thereby maintain the confidence of the people of the free world in our good faith and leadership.

I might add that there is no magic in the particular sum, if we had appropriated seven billion dollars or five billion dollars when the program was passed them all I would like to see us do is to stick to it, because we have been making progress in this cold war all over the world. The people are again beginning to rally to our leadership as we prodded it through the Republican Party into becoming an affirmative, constructive, intelligent program. I do not want those people to think that we promised something and let them down.

MURROW: Now, that is certainly a clear answer, Governor. Now, here is another one. And I should preface this by saying that a lot of people who have written in say "put them to him bluntly, don't let him dodge." So that's what we'll try to do. Here is...

DEWEY: I hope they didn't suggest that with regard to your questions to me!

MURROW: No, they didnot. This is a general subject governor. Next question is, How do you stand onthe admission of displaced persons into this country?

DEWEY: I've favored it for a good many years and said so, since it was first proposed.

MURROW: Now, the next one, governor. And I know that you have answered this one, but again a few people have written in saying, "I know the answer to this one, but I just want to hear him say it." Here is the question. Would you consider the vice presidential nomination?

DEWEY: Well, this makes it official, then, the answer is no.

MURROW: Well, now they have heard that.

DEWEY: The people of my state would, I think, believe that I'd be much more useful sticking on the job I now hold.

MURROW: Right. Well, now here is the next one, governor. You and Mr. Stassen and Senator Taft have all claimed the most first ballot votes in Philadelphia. Do you still stand by that estimate?

DEWEY: Can a guest correct his host?

MURROW: Oh, certainly. It has been done before. (BOTH LAUGHING)

DEWEY: Well, I haven't made any claims.

MURROW: That's true, but your spokesmen have, I think.

DEWEY: Others have, yes. And the -- as a matter of fact, the last figures that I have seen were printed in newspapers by the impartial observers-- one was a syndicated columnist of last week, another one was a syndicated columnist in the Sunday papers and by a ~~xxxx~~ miracle they agreed. Their figures, these are not mine. Their figures were that we would start with something over 300 votes on the first ballot, Mr. Taft would have something like 250, Mr. Stassen something like a hundred and fifty and I rather think they are about right.

Both laughing

I'm not making any forecasts!

MURROW: Right. Well, here is a question in a slightly different ~~xxxx~~ vein, Governor. If you are nominated andelected would you keep that balcony on the White House?

DEWEY: I haven't seen it. I just don't know. If it is comfortable and doesn't spoil the looks I think I would.

MURROW: All right, now here we change pace again. Where do you stand on the President's x civil rights program?

DEWEY: Well, he borrowed that. That is a ~~xxxx~~ pale and a rather clumsy copy of the Republican platform of 1944, on which I ran, badly presented, but on our program ~~xxxx~~ in '44 it was a good one and I stand on it.

MURROW: Governor, we seem to be changing our areas here with great speed, but since we can ask any questions, here comes one in a slightly different area. Would you advise your two sons to enter politics?

DEWEY: Yes, if they had first established their own business or ~~xxx~~ profession, so they weren't dependent upon politics for a livelihood.

Now, I think it is the most important service a man can give and if he has anything to give he ought to go into politics. Either on a local basis, as an alderman, or assemblyman, or state Senator or in the national scene if he has got his groundwork and his training in government, but first he ought to have his own bread-winning established so that when he is licked he is happy to be able to go back to private life so he can live more comfortably and better than he did in public office.

MURROW: Well, now, governor, speaking of breadwinning, I don't want to ask any indiscreet questions, but that farm of yours up in Pawling? Is that a business proposition? Does it pay its own way or is it a sort of hobby?

DEWEY: Well, it breaks even, it has to because I can't pay any deficits. But it is my -- aside from my family and my job it is my greatest interest in life and dairy farming is, to me, the most exciting thing I do.

MURROW: Well, now, Governor, back to another exciting thing. Politics. What do you think of the value of third and fourth parties in the American political scene?

DEWEY: I think they have practically no value unless one of two major parties is disintergrating and fading from the scene. That has happened, really three times in the history of the United States, and when one of the major parties had so fallen apart and lost its touch with the people, or lost its relationship to basic principles a third party was necessary as the instrumentality of providing an opposition. But basically I think third and fourth parties are extremely dangerous because if we should ever develop three or four strong parties we would then be heading toward the multi-party system which is what brought on Hitler in Germany, what has brought the chaos in France and in Italy and -- well, Premier de Gasperi at dinner told me a fewmonths ago his great problem -- he spends most of his time with sheer politics, and why? He has 26 parties to deal with. Nobody can govern a country if he has got to spend his time doing business with 26 political parties. The two party system has been the greatest contribution this government has made towards the science of free government and I think it is the most valuable political tradition we have. I hope we never loose it.

MURROW: Well, certainly anyone who tried to cover that political convention (corrects self) that Italian election as I did with the 26 parties can appreciate the value of a two party system but, Governor, from domestic politics back to international affairs and trade. Where do you stand on the matter of reciprocal trade?

DEWEY: I favored the reciprocal trade treaties from the very beginning, I favor the extension now for the full three years and I believe that with a Republican administration we can avoid the abuses that have caused so much of the criticism. I am entirely confident that these policies are sound, are necessary for the development of trade. Trade is the root by which peace is brought about. It is of great importance.

MURROW: Well, governor, this is a question that interests me particularly. Out in Portland you made a speech, and a powerful and persuasive speech. Against outlawing Communism and I think most of our listeners are probably familiar with your stand on that issue. What I want to know is how long did it take you to write it?

DEWEY: You mean the debate or the speech?

MURROW: No, the speech, not the debate.

DEWEY: The speech that I delivered shortly after I got out I worked there -- oh I guess about 12 to 15 hours on, it is rather less than usual for a major 30 minute speech.

MURROW: 12 to 15 hours?

DEWEY: Yes. The research was pretty extensive and I think I rewrote it five times.

MURROW: Well, I think a lot of broadcasts would probably be better if they were re-written four or five times.

DEWEY: Of course the debate was almost wholly extremperaneous.

MURROW: Yes, now Governor Dewey, again we change pace. I'm wondering how your golf game is getting on. I once saw you, I think, shoot an 84. Have you done any better than that?

DEWEY: My golf is pretty rusty. I have never done better than 84. In fact, since I did it I haven't come within three of it and I played only -- I played 18 holes only twice this year and they were both in the 90s.

MURROW: Well, this campaigning probably interferes, but I...

DEWEY: It certainly does.

MURROW: Governor, another question. There have been reports of various deals and gangings up and the names have varied and the combination have differed, but various stories about you combining with someone and two other people combining against you and that sort of thing. Have you any comment to make on that?

MURROW: Well, I think most of those are conversation, there is practially no substance to any of them so far as I know, and all -- I'm the only person I can speak for and so far as I am concerned there have been none, either by me or anybody on my behalf and I don't believe there will be any.

MURROW: I think, governor Dewey, we have time for one final question. If you are nominated and elected, how, if at all, will you change the present bi-partisan foreign policy, particularly in dealing with Russia?

DEWEY: Well, as you recall I founded the bipartisan foreign policy in the summer of 1944 during the presidential campaign, so that we could present to the world at the crisis of the war a united front so that our enemies would get no aid and comfort from the divisive effects of a presidential campaign. I did that when I accepted Mr. Hull's invitation to conference by appointing Mr. John Foster Dulles to represent me at Dumbarton Oaks and he thereafter represented the party at San Francisco in the shaping of the United Nations Conference and there with Senator Vandenberg, and between them they have represented our country at all the conferences since, either one or both of them, and to the extent that our policy has been genuinally bipartisan with consultation before action was taken it was successful. To the extent, as in the case of the Greek, the Turkish, the China and many other of our major policies which, in my judgment, have not been successful, those policies were conceived in the administration and handed to the Congress as a faite accompli ~~XX XXX XXXXXXXXXXXXXX XXXXXXXXXX XX XXX XXXXX~~ The policies, where they have been bipartisan, have been successful and should be carried on.

MURROW: Thank you very much, indeed, Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York.

ANN'CR: You have been listening to EDWARD R. MURROW AND THE NEWS and his guest, Governor Thomas E. Dewey of New York. CBS correspondent Ned Calmer will take over this news period until Mr. Murrow returns from his vacation on August 2nd.

THIS IS CBS...THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM

Ediphone Trans/R.Knopf

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

EXCERPT FROM BROADCAST OF
JUNE 6 , 1952

There comes a time when a reporter wearies or reporting political speeches. This is the season of Commencement speeches. For generations, each graduating class has been told that it is emerging from the cloistered academic halls into a world beset with doubt, uncertainty and perplexing problems. That is true today, and probably always will be. It's always a mistake to give advice, and it's a major error to give good advice. But it has always seemed to me that Commencement speakers ought to be a little more specific and practical in their advice. To the trim, hard-muscled athlete, who is going to sit in an office, they should recall the words of Margaret Halsey, (for they will be aplicable ten or fifteen years from now): "He must have had a magnificent build, before his stomach went in for a career of its own." To those who long for the "good old days," Mr. Dooley might be quoted: "The past always looks better than it was; it's only pleasant because it isn't here." For those graduates inclined to be argumentative, a word from William Hazlitt:"We are not satisfied to be right, unless we can prove others to be quite wrong." To the graduate who barely squeaked by in Latin, some consolation from Heinrich Heine: "If the Romans had been obliged to learn Latin, they would never have found time to conquer the world." Two bits of counsel from Don Herold - to the graduate who is inclined to overwork: "Work is a form of nervousness." Someone once said:"My father taught me to work, but not to love it." To the holder of the sheepskin who's manners have not been polished as well as they might have been:"Be kind and considerate to others, depending somewhat upon whom they are!" To the graduate who may regret youthful indiscretions, Katherine Mansfield says: "Regret is an appalling waste of energy; you can't build on it; it's only good for wallowing in." Advice for the student who wants to be a writer, from Don Marquis:"If you want to get rich from writing, write the sort of thing that's read by persons who move their lips when they're reading to themselves." Somerset Maugham has wise words for the co-ed looking for a husband: "American women expect to find in their husbands a perfection that Englishwomen only hope to find in their butlers. And for those who just want to be a gentleman, Billy Phelps said:"The final test for him is his respect for those who can be of no possible service to him."

Samuel Butler maintained that:"Life is the art of drawing sufficient conclusions from insufficient premises." Sydney Smith, on the other hand, took what might be called the clinical approach to this question when he said: "The great secret of life is digestion." The philosophical approach was perhaps best expressed by Susan Ertz, who remarked: "Millions who long for immortality do not know what to do with themselves on a rainy Sunday afternoon."

All of these words of wisdom will of course be forgotten, just like all Commencement speeches, so lets return to the traditional theme. This year's graduates are being told to have courage. Channing Pollock once said: "No man in the world had more courage than the man who can stop after eating one peanut."

I have an ideathat a wholly serious Commencement speech could be done in a single paragraph. Something like this: Graduates who have achieved this distinction by hard work, cheating, or the indifference of your professors - you have had a good break; no one of you paid your own freight. No matter how wealthy your parents, how exclusive your school, society had paid some part of the cost of your education; you are it its debt. That sheepskin won't get or hold a job for you; it doesn't guarantee you personal profit at the expense of the society which made possible your superior intellectual training.

Maybe you have been taught to think, (we will know more about that in twenty years), but somewhere along the way you must have picked up some ideas about the dignity and the freedom of the infididual, about his right to be wrong, and his rights under the law. You have finished your education at a time of uncertainty, unrest, and unprecedented change. Don't overdevelop your instinct for being unhappy. Don't conclude prematurely that the indivudual is of little importance. If you don't like the books you read, go and write one. You are the at least partially educated brood of the most luxurious, powerful nation in the world Maybe you are coming out of college into a drepession, a war, certainly all kinds of alarms and excursions, constant tension and uncertainty. But look around the world and compare your lot with that of your contemporaries elsewhere.

These words were written by the great German poet and philosopher, Goethe, and will, like most commencement speeches, be forgotten. But just for the beauty of the language, and the clarity of the thought, I should like to read you the "complete" commencement speech in a half-dozen lines. "There are nine requisites for contented living: Health enough to make work a pleasure; wealth enough to support your needs; strength to battle with difficulties and overcome them; grace enough to confess your sins and foresake them; patience enough to toil until some good is accomplished; charity enough to see some good in your neighbor; love enough to move you to be useful and helpful to others; faith enough to make real the things of God; hope enough to remove all anxious fears concerning the future."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moemnt with the "Word for Today." Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: This is graduation time, and what Will Rogers said 18 years ago, still stands up: "It's not a bright future that we ask the college graduate to enter into. They feel they are the ones to right it; we feel we are the ones that lost it, and will find it. We can't help but look back; they can't help but look forward. But we are both standing on the same goounds - and their feet are there as firmly as ours."

Good Night and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW

Wednesday, December 24, 1952
7:45 8:00 PM EST

MURROW: This is Korea!...Christmas Eve! ...and I should like to make this brief report for Casey, our seven-year-old son. This may be an abuse of privilege, but I hope not. There are a lot of fathers out here and when you talk to them about this time of year, ask them what they would like to be doing at Christmas, they say they'd like to see their sons or daughters around the Christmas tree and, of course, their wives. The other day one of those fathers was showing me pictures of his son...they all carry pictures and will show them to you without any urging... and he said: "Why don't you do a broadcast for Casey and for other little boys whose fathers are out here? Tell 'em what it's like." I said I'd try but probably wouldn't do it very well because I haven't been out here very long, certainly not as long as the other Dads, and I'd be going home pretty soon and maybe I'd get it all wrong, never tried anything like it before, but here goes, and, if you're listening, Case, don't go to sleep in the middle of this one the way you usually do.

I'm talking from a place called Seoul. When the war started the North Koreans captured it because they surprised the South Koreans and they had more soldiers and more tanks. The city was bombed and shelled and most of the houses were knocked down. Finally, our soldiers and the soldiers of the other nations that had decided they would fight rather than have the Communists capture this country, we took the city. They landed from boats at a place called Inchon, not far from here, and the people of Seoul were glad to see them because the Communists ran away and they were free again. A lot of our soldiers were killed, fighting their way back up here, because Korea is mostly mountains and the Communists would sit up on the high hills and shoot at our boys with rifles and cannons and our boys had to climb up the hills, but they were brave and the Air Force helped a lot, dropping bombs on the enemy, and the Navy helped by firing big guns from the warships and putting soldiers and Marines ashore behind the enemy lines. They used landing barges, just like that toy one you have, Case, only much bigger, of course. But the Communists were brave, too, and they fought well, but our boys were helped by the South Koreans and also by soldiers from England and Turkey and France and all the countries that had agreed to fight alongside us, and now our General Van Fleet has his headquarters here in Seoul and the soldiers have put up a big Merry Christmas sign with cardboard reindeer on it, also a Christmas tree with colored lights. Today, Santa Claus arrived there in a helicopter and the General gave out presents.

The Korean children are very quiet and well-behaved. Their eyes are black, their skin a sort of golden brown, and when it's cold their cheeks shine like the red side of a well-polished apple, and a lot of them have no mother or father to give them presents at Christmas time because their parents were killed during the fighting, so the American soldiers give them presents and parties. The Korean kids remind them of their own kids back home and, if you could see the big smile on a little Korean boy's face when he gets just one little toy costing maybe ten cents, you would realize what a lucky fellow you are. The Korean children don't have much warm clothing, but then they can stand the cold better than we can (they're used to it) and they don't skate the way we do, standing up. They squat down and push themselves along with two little sticks. They raise a lot of rice in Korea and they work very hard and the people are terribly poor, but they are proud and friendly and they love their country as much as we do ours. They work way up on the side of mountains, building little terraces for the rice and right now there's a little snow in the bottom of the furrows, but the brown edges are bare. Looks like someone had scattered flour in the furrows or traced with white chalk on a brown blackboard. The Koreans don't have many authomobiles and they carry huge loads on their backs. A Korean half my size can carry twice what I could. Their legs are strong from climbing those mountains. These people are fighting for their country just like we once did. Ask Mom to show you that picture of Valley Forge again and you'll get the idea. It's pretty cold out here,

Casey boy, but not much colder than when we were putting those lights on the outdoor tree last Christmas. Our soldiers have lots of warm clothing and all the food they can eat. The presents from home have been pouring in. There must be more fruit cake in Korea than you could put in the Empire State Building. Our soldiers are up there in the mountains north of Seoul. Mostly they live in tents or holes dug in the ground and lined with logs. They keep warm by burning oil in little round stoves. There ~~xxx~~ isn't any electricity up there and they use candles or lanterns and right at the front they daren't show any kind of light or the Communists will shoot at them and right now some boy's Dad, lots of them, in fact, will be looking, straining his eyes, to see if the Communists are trying to sneak up the hill and kill him. The war doesn't stop for Christmas, you know, and, then, when that father can get back to his tent, he'll have some hot coffee and relax and there will be a picture, maybe on the wall of his tent, probably in his pocketbook, and he'll take that picture out and look at it, picture of his wife and a little guy about your size, -- who forgot to comb his hair! -- and that soldier will be so lonesome that he won't want to ~~xxxx~~ talk to anyone, just sit there and think of home. He remembers the first time he took his boy fishing, just as I remember that two-pound heavy bass you caught, and may be he'll smoke that new pipe his son sent him. ~~MS~~ Maybe he'll decide to write his son a letter, but it probably won't be a very good letter, just as this isn't a very good report to you, because loneliness on Christmas Eve must be felt, not written about, and that Dad up near the front won't be waked early tomorrow morning by the shouts of his son who found that new train under the tree. He will be waked by a Sergeant or he may be ~~xx~~ waked by a Communist artillery~~xx~~ shell exploding, but if it's a quiet night with no fighting he may dream that he's home and when he wakes there will be that second when he thinks maybe he is home and then he will have to go back to the fighting. He will probably pick up his gun, put on his helmet, tap the pocket that holds the pictures, and go out to his tank or his gun and he will still be lonely. I can't quite figure out how to tell you how lonely that father will be, Casey boy. I suppose it's as though you went away, thousands of miles away, to a strange school and you wouldn't see Mom or Dad for maybe a couple of years and the boys in the next school were always trying to kill you. You'd be mighty lonely on Christmas Eve. Maybe you'd have trouble, keeping from crying just a little when you talked with the other fellows about home. Well, there are a lot of Dads out here in Korea who feel sort of that way tonight and I think it would be all right with them if I said, for them, to all the little boys and girls who have Dads out here...God bless you, Merry Christmas, do what Mom tells you or I'll wallop you when I get home.

Good night and good luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FRIDAY, MAY 1, 1953

7:45 - 8:00 PM EST
CBS RADIO NETWORK

Tomorrow ten or twelve horses will go to the post for the Kentucky Derby. "Native Dancer" is the favorite - officials at Churchill Downs say the trace will be fast. We are unable to speak with authority about horse races, and there is little enough room for tradition or repetition in a news broadcast. But three or four years ago, admitting that we knew more about work horses than race horses, we repeated as a tribute to all horses, a few words written by Mark Twain on how to harness one. Mr. Twain said he was not an expert on horses, didn't speak with assurance, but could always tell which was the front end of a horse; beyond that his art was not above the ordinary. Mr. Twain continued his description of how to harness a horse, Continental fashion:

"The man stands up the horses on each side of the thing that projects from the front end of the wagon, and then, throws the tangled mess of gear on top of the horses, and passes the thing that goes forward through a ring and hauls it aft, and passes the thing through the other ring and hauls it aft, on the other side of the other horse, opposite to the first one, after crossing them and bringing the loose end back, and then buckles the other thing underneath the horse, and takes another thing and wraps it around the thing I spoke of before, and puts another thing over each horse's head with broad flappers to it (to keep the dust out of his eyes), and puts the iron thing in his mouth for him to grit his teeth on, uphill, and brings the ends of those things aft over his back, after buckling another one around under his neck to hold his head up, and hitching another thing on a thing that goes over his shoulders, to keep his head up when he is climbing a hill; and then takes the slack of the thing which I mentioned a while ago, and fetches it aft, and makes it fast to the thing that pulls the wagon, and hands the other thing up to the driver, to steer with. I have never buckled up a horse myself," said Twain, "but I do not think we do it that way."

The harnessing of a horse, like the reorganization of the Defense Department, should perhaps be left to those who understand it.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: Once again, the Kentucky Derby is with us. And while we are not in the habit of making predictions, we can find no reason not to agree with Emerson: "Let the victory fall where it will, we are on that side." There's a line from the Old Testament that would also seem appropriate tonight: "Hast thou given the horse strength? hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" If not, it's probably too late not."

Good Night and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, MARCH 5, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Secretary of State Dulles charged in Venezuela today that Guatemala is trying to disrupt the Inter-American conference. The Secretary issued his statement after the foreign minister of Guatamala charged that a resolution proposed by the United States to investigate Communist infiltration in this hemisphere was actually a move to force Latin America back to the policies of the "big stick" and "dollar diplomacy." Mr. Dulles called this an "abusive attack" and evidence that Guatemala opposes a declaration by the conference against Communism. With this, tomorrow's conference meeting was cancelled to let tempers cool.

In Indo-China today the Communists raided the civil airport at Hanoi - destroyed or badly damaged at least ten newly refitted C-47 cargo planes and then were beaten off by French defenders. The attack crippled the French airlift. It was the boldest raid of the war.

In Paris, Premier Laniel says all France wants to negotiate a settlement of the Indo-China war. The French will accept reasonable proposals if the rebels evacuate their troops from Laos and Cambodia and establish a neutral no-man's-land around the Red River delta. Foreign Aid Chief Stassen said in Washington that we will deliver more than one and a third billion dollars of military aid to Indo China this year.

And the President told Congress that he has ordered that foreign aid be continued to five European nations even though they have shipped more than 6 million dollars worth of strategic materials to Russia and her satellites. The President says it would be detrimental to our security to cut off military and economic aid to the United Kingdom, France, Italy, Norway and Denmark.

In Washington today, John F. Kane, special assistant to Army Secretary Stevens, resigned his job in protest against what he said was the failure of Steven's superiors to support the Secretary in his fight with Senator McCarthy.

And McCarthy dropped a two million dollar libel and slander suit against former Democratic Senator Benton of Connecticut. McCarthy said the suit was dropped because his lawyers could find no one who believed Benton's statement. And Benton, repeating his charge that McCarthy has committed perjury, fraud and calculated deceit on the people, says McCarthy dropped the suit because he "refuses to face examination in court."

The McCarthy committee today heard Peter Gragis of Livittown, New York identify himself as a former Communist in a New Jersey electronics laboratory. Gragis said he knows nothing about spying at the plant.

Adlai Stevenson in Miami today, says he is sure that the Army has not coddled Communists "any more than previous Democratic administrations ever coddled a single subversive, traitor or spy deliberately.

And Senate Democratic Leader Johnson of Texas says he believes the Democrats will win control of Congress this year campaigning on the country's economic condition. He doesn't believe the Communists-in-government issue will be effective Republican campaign material.

The four Puerto Ricans who shot five Congressmen on Monday today pleaded innocent on assault charges. And the condition of Representative Bentley of Michigan shot by the Puerto Ricans is still considered serious.

Here in New York, police found nine cases of anti-tank guns five cases of hand grenades and 25 M-1 rifles in a Manhattan building. They arrested two men identified as Cubans.

The Army says it has arrested former prisoner of war Claude Batchelor and charged him with collaborating with the Communists while he was in a Korean prison camp. The government says Batchelor's collaboration with the enemy "caused other American prisoners of war punishment and hardship."

Karl Loos, solicitor for the Agriculture Department, told Senators today that under the Administration's new farm program the President could give away two and a half billion dollars worth of surplus wheat, cotton and dairy products.

And examiner for the Civil Aeronautics Board ruled today that Arthur Godfrey deliberately buzzed the Teterboro, New Jersey, airport control tower last January. The examiner recommended that Godfrey's private pilot certificate be suspended for six months - the maximum possible period. A spokesman for Godfrey says he "respectfully accepts" the suspension decision.

And the president of the Pan American coffee Bureau says we must expect coffee prices to go higher. Senator Frear of Delaware says retail prices might hit $1.23 a pound by the end of the year.

Books

A celebrated bookstore in Baltimore is about to close, and its going calls for more than local notice. It is the Peabody Bookshop, belongin to Siegfried Weisberger, notable asone of the only bookstores in this country that sells alcoholic refreshments, and for the fact that in its beer-room H.L. Mencken used to hold forth to his cronies. But what commands attention is more than this souvenir of the 1920's. It is the reason Mr. Weisberger gives for selling. He has on his shelves 100,000 volumes which he declares nobody wants to read. "The age of the boob is upon us" he asserted, and predicted very dark days for America. "Everyone in the cities used to look up to the doctor, the lawyer, the professor. They were idols" he declared. "Today they all look up to the business man." And he snorted: "People don't want books, ideals and culture. They only want dollars."

A customer of the Weisberger store found the new books out in front; the rare books and a notable collection of them - on shelves in a studio behind this, and the bar and beer room in the rear warmed by an old stone fireplace. Mr. Weisberger is retiring to his Maryland farm and writing a book on Mencken. Mr. Weisberger's scorn for American reading recalls the old gag about the girl whose boy friend suggested buying her a book for Christmas and who replied: "Don't buy a book; I gotta book." It sent this reporter to the book trade asking questions about America's reading habits. He came upon a number of startling facts. A Gallup poll published last November showed that of those asked if they were reading a book - any book - only seventeen percent said yes. To the same question the year before, eighteen percent said yes, and the year before twenty-one percent. This is not necessarily proof that the age of the boob is upon us. In this country

85 to 90 percent of the adult population reads a daily newspaper, 80 to 85 percent listens for an hour or more a day to the radio. If some of them read less it may be because they have changed over to other media of communication. And it is part of the picture that the reading of magazines is high and that magazines bring much that formerly came only in books.

Even so, there isn't a lot of comfort in the statistics about reading. Those adults at present reading a book in this country were 17 percent. In England where the general level of education is well below ours, the percentage was 55, more than three times as high. In Australia it was 34 percent - twice as high - and in Canada 31 percent. Another startling figure shows that an English child who stays in school to the age of 14 has read as many books as the average college graduate in this country.

But even this does not necessarily mean a change for the worse in the United States. One needs to know whether the number of volumes published has gone down over the years. And anyone who has thought about this may say offhand that it can't have gone down because of the enormous output of paper-backed books. Here are the figures. Twenty-five years ago the total number of volumes published was about 235 million. This fell off in the first recession year to 155 million. Last year it rose to an estimated 800,000,000. But all of the increase cannot be ascribed to the paper-backed books. Last year the total of these was 259 million. Some of the increase in volumes published was in textbooks. But textbooks and paperbacks and the rise in population all being considered, a great many more books are being published than 25 years ago. So more are being read.

Well, one must ask, what kind of books? Here I have information only about paper-backed books, but they will do. Novels make up much the greater part, more than double the number of mysteries. Actually mysteries were down last year, though the number of westerns came up almost exactly as much as the mysteries went down. But non-fiction books went up. They were up 5 million over the year before, and 7 million over two years before. One company reports that its heaviest sale was not of a work of fiction, but a book about baby and child care that sold 4½ million in four years. The next largest sale was a pocket dictionary, the next a cookbook. In four years Shakespeare's tragedies sold 1 million 3 hundred thousand. A pocket book of verse has sold 2 million copies, Homer's Odyssey well over half-a-million.

It comes easy to say that reading has gone off as television has come in. But actually the studies so far made don't bear that out as a permanent trend. In regions where TV is new, reading of books goes off for a while. Then it rises again to its former level.

These figures aren't tested, they are only indicative. Some are encouraging, some discouraging. I leave some discouraging ones to the last. One is that only one college graduate in six was reading a serious book at the time a recent survey was made. And only just over half of the college graduates could name a book they even cared to read. Another fact is that 10 percent of the public does 70 percent of the reading, paper-backs and all. There always has been some such disparity in this country. The Founding Fathers were fabulous readers, they knew virtually everything that had been written. But the rank and file of their time read little. Today almost all the serious book reading is left to a small segment of the people. And even the light books are read by less than one fourth of the population.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We have been talking of books and reading habits. Several years ago, the President of Yale, Alfred Griswold remarked: "Ours is an age of action, hair-trigger action, and we cannot resign from it. But what is to become of us when action no longer finds inspiration or discipline in thought because thought has not been able to find inspiration or discipline in books."

Good Night and Good Luck!

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, JULY 1, 1954
7:45 - 8:00 PM EST

This is the news:

Some 15-thousand French troops are withdrawing from the Red River Delta of Indo-China tonight and are moving north toward Hanoi. The withdrawal began on Tuesday but because of military censorship, was not made known until today. The French say they have had to pull back because of "defense needs" - the protection of Hanoi and the rail and supply lines that feed the city.

Vietnamese political leaders immediately called the withdrawal a "sell-out." They noted that so far the operation has been carried out without a single instance of interference by the Communists. But the French say there is no "deal" - that at least six enemy divisions are concentrated in the Hanoi area and that this sector must be given first priority.

Our State Department said it had no advance word that the withdrawal was to take place. The British Foreign office expressed "anxiety" over the situation. But dispatches received so far fail to indicate whether a showdown battle will possibly take place before the monsoon rains ends in early fall.

What the French have given up is an area roughly the size of Rhode Island. They leave behind four major outposts - 60% of the rice fields of the delta - and some four million Vietnamese who now come under communist control.

Senate Majority Leader Knowland described the French action as a "thinly disguised surrender." He said this is a "communist victory of no mean proportion." And asked his colleagues in the Senate: "How many more Communist victories must be gained in Asia before the free world recognizes its danger? Where is the line to be drawn? Knowland said that he now anticipates a new drive to seat Communist China at the U.N. If the Communists are seated, he said, he will resign as Majority leader and do all that he can to bring to an end our membership in the United Nations. He said his "conscience would not allow him to remain silent if this last grand act of appeasement takes place."

Prime Minister Churchill left this country today on the Queen Elizabeth. Sir Winston had nothing to say to reporters. But Sir Roger Makins, the British ambassador, said theprime minister's talks with President Eisenhower have increased the prospects of world peace.

Moscow reacted to the Washington talks by hinting that Communist China might withdraw its offer to "normalize" relations with Great Britain, if the British join a Southeast Asia alliance. A Moscow broadcast claimed that British membership in such an alliance might also harm Britain's relations with India.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt says that she has called off her trip to Russia - because Soviet officials would not grant a visa to a magazine writer who was to have accompanied her.

Talks on a peace settlement for Guatemala have resumed in San Salvador, with some sources predicting an agreement between the rival anti-Communist leaders in the next 24 hours. The big question seems to be: who will control the armed forces? John Peurifoy, the United States ambassador to Guatemala, has arrived in San Salvador to take a direct hand in patching up a settlement.

New violence has broken out in Israel with one dead and 23 wounded. Most of the fighting took place along the Arab-Israeli border in Jerusulem after an earlier cease-fire had been agreed on. Both sides have charged the other with aggression, and Israel says it will lodge a complaint against Jordan in the United Nations Security Council. U.N. officials on the scene are trying to establish a cease-fire.

In Congress today, the House refused to accept the Administration program of flexible price supports for farmers and voted instead for a compromise plan that would support basic commodities at from 82 and a half to 90 percent of parity. Both action are tentative. There'll be a final vote tomorrow.

The Senate pushed toward final action on a new tax bill. By a vote of 71 to 13, it killed a major part of the Administration's plan for easing the taxes stockholders have to pay on income from dividends. It also rejected an amendment to give relief to income taxpayers in general. The amendment, offered by Democratic Senator Long of Louisiana, would have given a tax cut of 20 dollars to individual taxpayers and a 40-dollar reduction to married couples filing joint returns.

The death toll in the flood of the Rio Grande has now reached 55, with at least 90 persons missing. And the Senate has approved a resolution favoring emergency relief for flood victims on both sides of the border. President Eisenhower has declared six Texas counties to constitute a disaster area.

Democratic Senator Butler of Nebraska is reported in critical condition in the Bethesda Naval Hospital, following a stroke last night at his Washington home. A late bulletin says that Senator Butler is receiving oxygen and that his condition is "essentially unchanged."

The Republican leadership in the Senate has proposed a new set of rules for investigating committees. The rules, nine in number, are designed to protect the rights of withesses and curtail the power of committee chairmen.

This being the start of the vacation season, I am in receipt of a communicatic from my colleague in Vienna - Alex Kendrick. He cables that a pamphlet on table etiquette - called "Cultural Habits in Eating" - has just come off the presses in the Soviet Union. And by the first reaction it could, says Kendrick, outsell all of Stalin's works. The pamphlet is written by Nikolai Smirnov - the Emily Post of Russia. We thought you might be interested in some of the excerpts. They speak for themselves. You can draw your own conclusions.

The pamphlet begins by saying table manners are not an invention of the aristocrats but represent rules of Hygiene developed by the experience of many centuries. There are many cultured ways of eating, but fundamentally they reduce themselves to two - first to keeping dirt and bacteria out of food, and secondly eating in such a way as not to spoil other peoples' appetites. After warning against slopping one's teaabout in his glass, the pamphlet declares that the well-mannered diner "will not eat off his knife, knowing very well that a knife thrust into the mouth might cut his tongue or lips; and besides, such a habit creates a most unpleasant impression on the people around him."

The pamphlet continues: "Outer garments - coat, raincoat, etcetera - hamper movements of the eater, and the person who eats with his overcoat on frequently stains it with food. He thus gives the impression of being slovenly. However, it is important not only to protect the outer garments from food but still more to protect food from contact with outer garments. Outer garments are in constant contact with the most varied surroundings in the street or subway or bus. Outer garments are the most dirty ones, and it is necessary to protect food from them by removing before eating. Even if it is cold in the dining room it is recommended that outer garments be taken off, as the intake of hot food evens out the temperature, and the eater doesn't feel cold. The same can be said about eating in a cap or other headgear. This is unhygienic, and also increases the flow of blood to the face and especially to the nose, making the face and nose red and shiny.

After explaining how the napkin is used, and revealing the secret of the napkin ring which "enables one to use the same napkin several times in an hygienic way," the pamphlet cautions against drumming on the table with the fingers, or hitting the glass or plate with a knife since "all this causes unpleasant impression on one's neighbors."

Then comes the subject of reading during meals, and the pamphlet says: "Such a habit should be given up, first because reading during meals has a most unfavorable effect on the digestion, and secondly because the person who reads at the table thereby shows disregard and disrespect for others. Moreover, it is possible that the newspaper or book might be stained with food during the meal."

The pamphlet continues: "Food should be eaten in such a way as not to spoil the appetite of those present - without any hurry, and without loud chewing or smacking of lips. Loud chewing can be avoided if the food is masticated with the mouth closed. It is not recommended to converse when the mouth is full of food. Soup is eaten bending forward slightly over the plate. Small quantities are taken into the spoon - then it cools quicker and doesn't splash. Blowing into the spoon, and still more into the plate of soup is not recommended, as splashes may fly about. "It is not permitted to take bread out of the common dish with the fingers, since none of those present can be sure of the cleanliness of other people's hands. Bread is usually taken with a clean fork. Meat dishes are eaten with knife and fork. Knife and fork are used simultaneously and are retained in the hands throughout process of eating. It is considered ugly to use the knife and fork in turn, that is, first to cut meat into small pieces, and then putting knife down and using the fork to raise them to the mouth. Fish is eaten with the fork alone. In order to hold the fish more easily when removing the small bones, a piece of bread is used in the other hand. To eat with the hands alone - without knife, fork or spoon - is permitted only in the case of very small game or crayfish.

"Fruit is raised to the mouth by the fingers - under no conditions the knife. From the vase of fruit or sweets a selection should be made with the eye, and the selected article taken directly, without turning over the whole contents of the vase by hand.

"If you spill something during the meal, or accidentally knock over a glass, there's no need to turn such a minor event into a big thing, or talk or gasp a lot about it. Chekhov said something profound on this subject, namely: 'Good manners don't consist in not spilling cause on the tablecloth, but in taking no notice if somebody else does it."

There endeth, selected excerpts from the New Russian pamphlet, called "Curtural Habits in Eating."

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

BOB DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: We were talking of good manners - perticularly the etiquette of eating. The Frenchman Savarin who was an expert on food as he was on politics once remarked: "The table is the only place where a man is never bored during the first hour." The Englishman, Samuel Butler took another view when he said: "Man is the only animal that can remain on friendly terms with the victims he intends to eat until he eats them."

Good Night and Good Luck!

IN THE EYE OF A HURRICANE

by EDWARD R. MURROW

Excerpt from EDWARD R. MURROW AND THE NEWS
CBS Radio Network, Aug. 10, 1955.

So that other people may be warned, a few men in the U. S. air forces make it their business to track approaching hurricanes by riding them out in airplanes. Last year, Edward R. Murrow went along on such a mission with the crew of an Air Force B-29 that flew into the calm dead-center, the "eye," of a hurricane called Edna. His account of the experience was rebroadcast last month on a night when the East Coast, from the Carolinas to Cape Cod, was braced for the approach of a similar storm called Connie.

This is Murrow's description of the flight through Edna, beginning as the plane approached the hurricane:

We went down to 7,500; surface winds now estimated at about 60 miles an hour. Flew right along the top of a flat cloud with the feeling that if the pilot let his wheels down he'd leave a track in it. The next time we saw water, the wind was cutting the top off the white-caps, and there was a thin gauze of spray as far as we could see. Then into the cloud again and that ghostly gray light that seemed to rub off on the faces of the crew members and cause them all to look as though they were ill and hadn't slept for a long time.

The radar kept reaching out, looking for Edna's eye. It showed a high bank of clouds to the right and to the left. We were flying blind in that gray stuff in a sort of valley between. Suddenly there was a hole in the clouds, maybe a quarter of a mile across, and at the bottom there was foam. It was like looking down a deep well with a huge egg-beater churning up milk at the bottom.

We flew on, and then began the real search for the eye of the hurricane. There were sudden changes in temperature, more rain. Radar reported. The engineer reported. The navigator wanted to know if anybody could see surface winds. The radarscope didn't show anything, and we were bounced around a little.

The skipper said, "There's a storm around here somewhere. Let's go find it." The navigator asked for a turn to the left, and in a couple of minutes the B-29 began to shudder. It was a twisting, tortured, ringing sort of motion. The co-pilot said, "I think we're in it." The pilot said, "We're going up," although every control was set to take us down. Something lifted us about 300 feet and the pilot said, "We're going down," although he was doing everything humanly possible to take her up. Edna was in control of the aircraft. We were on an even keel but being staggered by short, sharp blows. Then we hit something with a bang that was audible above the roar of the motors, and more than one man flinched. It was a solid sheet of water. Seconds later, brilliant sunshine hit us like a hammer, and a little rainbow spun off the starboard outboard prop, and someone shouted: "There she is," and we were in the eye.

Calm air, flat calm sea below. A great amphitheater, round as a dollar with white clouds sloping up to 25 or 30 thousand feet. The water down below looked like a blue alpine lake with snow-clad mountains coming right down to the water's edge. It was a great bowl of sunshine. Someone, I think it was the right scanner, shouted: "So help me, there's a ship down there!" And there was, right in the center of the eye. We guessed her to be a 10,000-ton merchant ship, moving very slowly in that calm water with only a thin feather of wake behind her. She appeareed to be in no trouble, but trouble was inevitable sometime because she was surrounded by those cloud mountains and raging water.

The eye was 20 miles in diameter. We went down to 1,500 feet and flew back and forth across it, making shallow penetration to the storm area. The temperature went up 14 degrees. The altimeter said 4,000 feet, but we were actually at 1,500. The civilian weather officer aboard looked at Edna with a clinical eye and said: "She's a copy-book hurricane, beautifully formed." We took her temperature, measured her speed, threw overboard scientific gear which might help to chart her future movement, while we continued to fly around in the calm at the bottom of that funnel of white clouds.

The eye of a hurricane is an excellent place to reflect on the puniness of man and his works. If an adequate definition of humility is ever written, it's likely to be done in the eye of a hurricane.

☆ ☆ ☆

6-A-17

Press Clippings

RADIO TV Scripts
THE LISTENER'S DIGEST
119 WEST 57th STREET • NEW YORK 19, N. Y. • COlumbus 5-2013

September 23, 1955

Dear Mr. Murrow:

Enclosed are advance first-issue copies of RADIO-TV SCRIPTS, our effort to perpetuate in print some of the fine informative material produced by radio and television. This issue contains the "See It Now" report on "Cigarettes and Lung Cancer" and your Aug. 10 rebroadcast on the flight through Hurricane Edna. We are very much indebted for the privilege of using these scripts and hope you will approve of the treatment given them.

The magazine is getting into circulation a little later than first intended so this issue will be re-dated for distribution in October, and monthly publication will take effect in November. I would be very much interested in any criticism or suggestions you might make toward improving the magazine on the basis of this issue.

Sincerely,

Fred McGhee

Fred McGhee
Editor

Mr. Edward R. Murrow
Columbia Broadcasting System
485 Madison Avenue
NYC

• A FACTS ON FILE PUBLICATION •

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, SEPTEMBER 10, 1954
7:45--8:00 P.M. E.S.T.

This is the news:

Hurricane Edna is moving north-northeast faster and with higher winds at her center. The latest from the Weather Bureau is this: Edna's speed has increased from ten miles an hour to between 17 and 22 miles an hour. She was last reported centered 80 miles slightly "east of south" of Cape Hattteras, North Carolina. The center is expected to pass the cape at midnight. Previously the highest winds near the center were 115 miles per hour. Now they are 125 miles per hour. The weathermen expect the hurricane to step up its forward speed in the next few hours. Tonight hurricane warnings...a central white light with two red lights on each side...are displayed from North Carolina to Maine. Here in New York, the weatherman has told us: "It could be one of the most serious hurricanes in the city's history." There is a slight possibility that it may go out to sea..but we have all been adequately warned. The phone companies here and in New England are ready with their "master disaster plan." Military and naval planes have been flown inland from all shore installations. Civil defense agencies, the Red Cross, are ready. Coastal residents of Connecticut have been urged to move inland before midnight. Sand bags have been piled around buildings in Providence, Rhode Island, hard hit by Hurricane Carol. On Martha's Vineyard, bulldozers are pushing up sand dikes to protect low inland areas. Ham radio networks have been set-up to relay emergency messages. Three thousand National Guardsmen in New Hampshire have been ordered on a stand by alert. Yesterday I flew into Hurricane Edna's eye...with the Air Force. I'd like to try to describe what I saw in a few minutes.

In Washington today Senator McCarthy scored a voctory at the censure hearings..The special Senate committee hearing the charges against McCarthy agreed to receive in evidence the famour "FBI letter". But the committee, after consulting with Attorney General Brownell, refused to make the document public. McCarthy has claimed that the purported letter shows that the Army was guilty of "gross neglect" in handling subversives. At today's hearing, Senator McCarthy also challenged the validity of the Senate elections subcommittee he is accused of snubbing, two years ago. The point was raised on a technicality that senators said "will take looking into." Under cross-examination, McCarthy insisted he was justified in his statements, questioning the fitness of Brigadier General Zwicker to wear the country's uniform. After today's hearing recessed, the Defense Department accounced that both General Zwicker and Major General Kirke Lawton will testify at the hearings... within the limits imposed by a presidential order. Lawton has refused to testify on grounds of a presidential security order.

Democratic Senator Johnson of Colorado , vice chairman of the investigating committee, today made public a letter to Senator McCarthy in which he said it would be "strange indeed" if most Democratic leaders did not loathe him after the vicious things that he--McCarthy--had said about the Democratic Party. Johnson said that he personally had never said he loathed McCarthy and he reiterated that he would hear the censure charges fairly. Johnson and McCarthy then shook hands.

The West today rejected Russia's recent proposal for a Big Four meeting on European security. Washington, London and Paris told Moscow progress on German and Austrian problems should come first.

The Chinese announce that they will send one of their top diplomats to Great Britain..the first such move since Great Britain established relations with Red China in January of 1950.

And today, Chinese Nationalist planes hit the Communist coast of China for the fifth straight day. Warships joined the attack. Still no sign of enemy Migs.

The U.N. Security council agreed today to a full airing of the American charges that the Russians violated international law in firing on the U.S. Navy plane over the Sea of Japan.

Yesterday this reporter had the privilege of looking into the eye of Hurricane Edna. We took off from Bermuda at 11:30 a.m. in a specially equipped B-29. The Air Force boys were working for the taxpayers, going out to chart, measure, map and study the hurricane. We climbed to ten thousand, blue sky overhead, blue water without a single whitecap below, and headed West. For about an hour-and-a-half there was nothing to do except remember that flying is made up of many hours of boredom, interspersed with a few minutes of stark terror. Then there were a few whitecaps, but no cloud. Then the whitecaps grew in size-surface wind about thirty miles an hour; a few scattered cumulous clouds ahead. A big cloud seemed to summon its niighbors and they built castles and lakes and cities on hillsides, all white abainst the blue of the sky. We bored through a few and skirted others. Then there was a big mountain of clouds ahead, and we went in. A few rain squalls, but little turbulence. The texture of the cloud changed, became a ghostly grey; we couldn't see the wing-tips of the aircraft. Twenty minutes later there was a little blue-grey light, but it seemed to come from all around us. Suddenly blue water again, no whitecaps, but the ocean was heaving as though a giant were shaking a rug. Into another cloud, out on the other side, and the ocean had changed its face.

Long irregular furrows, like a drunken ploughman had been ploughing a field of blue velvet and turning up snow. We went down to seventy-five hundred - surface winds now estimated at sixty miles an hour; flew right along the top of a flat cloud, with the feeling that if the pilot let his wheels down he'd leave a track in it. The next time we saw water, the wind was cutting the top off the whitecaps, and there was a thin gause of spray as far as we could see. Then into the cloud again, and that ghostly grey light that seemed to rub off on the faces of the crew members, and cause them all to look as though whey were ill and hadn't slept.

Radar kept reaching out, looking for Edna's eye. It showed a high bank of clouds to the right and to the left - we were flying blind in that grey stuff in the valley between. Suddenly there wea a hole in the cloud - maybe a quarter-mile across - and at the bottom there sea foam, like looking down a deep well with a huge egg-beater churning up milk at the bottom. We flew on, and began the real search for the eye of the hurricane. There were sudden changes in temperature, more rain; Radar prported, the engineer reported, the navigator wanted to know if anybody could see surface wind. The radarscope didn't show anything; we were bounced around a little; the skipper said: "There's a storm around here somewhere - let's find it."

The navigator asked for a turn to the left, and in a couple of minutes the B-29 began to shudder. It was a twisting tortured motion. The co-pilot said: "I think we're in it." The pilot said: "We're going up," although every control was set do take us down. Something lifted us about three hundred feet, then the pilot said; "We're going down", although he was doing everything humanly possible to take us up. Edna was in control of the aircraft. We were on an even keel but being staggered by short, sharp blows. Then we hit something with a bang that was audible above the roar of the motors; more than one man flinched -- It was a solid sheet of water. Seconds later brilliant sunlight hit us like a hammer; a little rainbow spun off the starboard outboard prop. Someone shouted "There she is", and we were in the eye. Calm air, flat, calm sea below; a great ampitheatre, round as a dollar, with white clouds sloping up to twenty-five or thirty thousand feet. The water looked like a blue alpine lake with snow-clad mountains coming right down to the water's edge. A great bowl of sunshine. Someone, I think it was the right scanner, shouted, "So help me, there's a ship down there", and there was - right in the center of the eye. We guessed her to be a ten thounand ton merchant ship, moving very slowly in that calm water, with only a thin feather of wake behind her. She appeared to be in no trouble, but trouble was inevitable sometime, because she was surrounded by those cloud mountains and raging water. The eye was twenty miles in diameter. We went down to fifteen hundred feet and flew back and forth across it, making shallow penetrations of the storm area. The temperature went up fourteen degrees, the altimeter said four thousand feet, but we were actually at fifteen hundred. The civilian weather officer aboard looked at Edna with a clinical eye, and said:" She's a copybook hurricane - beautifully formed." We took her temperature, measured her speed, threw overboard scientific gear which might help to chart her future movements, while we continued to fly around in the calm at the bottom of that funnel of white clouds.

The eye of a hurricane is an excellent place to reflect upon the punyness of man and his works. If an adequate definition of humility is ever written, it's likely to be done in the eye of a hurricane.

The engineer reported some trouble with the Number three engine; we climbed to ten thousand feet, and bored in to the wall of white cloud that surrounded the eye. It was not as rough going out as coming in because the navigator had picked his exit well.

Going back to Bermuda we talked of hurricanes. One of the pilots said: "We were certainly disappointed in Carol; we just didn't think she would do what she did." He had flown through Carol so often that he regarded her as a friend who had committed a major misdemeanor.

These young men who fly the Air Weather Service are doing all that can be humanly done to provide information upon which adequate warning can be based. After all, the only thing you can do about a hurricane is to watch it and get ready for it.

After flying only nine hours with those young men of the Air Force yesterday, on a routine mission, I think they deserve combat pay.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the word for today... but first, Bob Dixon.

DIXON : COMMERCIAL

MURROW: It is probably ture, as O.Henry said that "we may achieve climate, but weather is thrust upon us." But it is equally true that even though we can do little about weather, we can at least prepare ourselves for the worst. Cervantes put it this way; "The man who is prepared has half his battle fought." Those assigned to the Air Force Weather Service are doing all they can to help win the battle.

Good Night and Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 17, 1954
7:45-8:00 P.M. E.S.T.

This is the news:

French Premier Mendez-France and British Froeign Secretary Eden today announced that they have agreed on some of the Eden plan for a 7-nation European Defense alliance. A joint communique says both men have agreed on the importance of strengthening the Atlantic community and achieving unity "in which the United Kingdom will play a full part." A French foreign office spokesman says this means agreement on the basic ideas of the Eden plan. And Eden..back in London..indicated that he does not yet have full French or American support for all phases of the plan to re-arm West Germany. The seven nations concerned with the Eden plan are: West Germany, Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands and Luxembourg. Despite the optimistic reports from Paris and London, my colleague Blair Clark reports from Paris by cable that no real solution has yet been found for West Germany's entry into the North Atlantic Treaty organization. And Clark quotes NATO diplomatic sources as saying that at the Mendez-France-Eden meeting little actual progress was made toward French acceptance of West Germany in the North Atlantic group...without discrimination.

In West Germany today, Secretary of State Dulles conferred with Chancellor Adenauer on how to give Germany soverignty and arms without alienating France. There has been no official report on the more than three hours of conference. When he arrived in Bonn today Mr. Dulles said only thet he is seeking a way to bring Germany into the "society of the free as an equal partner." And Chancellor Adenauer greeting him at the airport, said to the secretary: "The best Europeans come from the United States." Mr Dulles flies to London tomorrow to talk with Mr. Eden and Sir Winston Churchill.

He will not stop at Paris.

Some British newspapers today called this a "snub" to Premier Mendez-France. The Manchester Guardian refers to the decision as "political ineptitude" and a "studied insult to France." But for the second time, the State Department says this is not so. "No snub was intended and there has been none."

The West German parliament today heard charges from Socialist deputies that Chancellor Adenauer's system of what's called "secret decisions" is a danger to democracy in West Germany.

And Chairman Wiley of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said in Paris today: continued aid to Europe is not in the interest of the United States unless West Germany contributes to the defense of the free world.

In Italy, Vatican sources said today that Pope Pius has suffered a recurrence of his stomach trouble...a Swiss specialist has been at his summer residence for a week, treating the Pope.

In the Far East, Chinese Nationalist planes and warships again attacked the Red China coast near Quemoy. One Communist junk was reported sunk.

And General de Castries, the French commander of Dien Bien Phu said today that the fortress could have been saved from the Communists by "a very massive intervention of the American Air Force." De Castries says that an American air attack, in the early days of the siege of the French fortress, could have changed the battle in which the French ultimately surrendered. He feels that the Geneva agreement will lead to a general peace in Southeast Asia and "in the rest of the world."

The Magazine Aviation Age says today that Russia now has based almost her entire fleet of long range bombers ..as well as other army and navy air forces at airfields along the coast of the Arctic Ocean. The private trade magazine says: "Like the United States, Soviet Russia views the polar regions as the main avenue for aerial warfare in the event of World War Three." Aviation Age says that a few months ago not one Russian long range bomber squadron was known to be stationed in western or southern Russia. The Soviet news agency Tass says Russia has carried out successful new tests of atomic weapons. Tass says Russia has obtained data to help Soviet scientists defend the country against any atomic attack.

Chairman Straws of our Atomic Energy Commission says that so much emphasis is placed on the production of atomic weapons, and so little on peaceful uses of atomic energy, that this plays into the hands of Russian propagandists.

The Republican National Committee today told its party members that if the November election results in the net loss of one Republican senate seat, "the nation will swing back...leftward...to Trumanism."

Senator McCarthy said today that he will limit his campaigning this fall ammost exclusively to radio and television speeches. He has decided his investigations "would be more effective than campaign speeches" in proving that the Republicans are making good their pledge to clean up "the mess in Washington." McCarthy does plan to make one speech in Omaha and two in Illinois.

The Agriculture Department says it lost a record sum of 419 -million dollars on farm price supports in the last fiscal year ...and could lose over one billion dollars more.

Here in New York, the Marciano-Charles heavyweight championship fight has been postponed again...to tomorrow night...because of rain.

Somewhere in the Bible there is a phrase that says, in effect: "The eyes of a fool are on the ends of the earth." We are concerned about Indochina, European unity - or lack of it - Formosa, Trieste, the disposition of the Russian Air Force. There is no shortage of distant matters giving rise to deep concern. But there is a situation near at hand which merits concern and attention. This week and next the public schools of this country will admit more than thirty and one half million students. That's a million-and-a-half more than last year. More than four-and-a-half million will be entering the first grade. The position, unlike diplomatic negotiations, relative to atomic strength and all the rest, can be simply stated. There are too few teadhers, too many teachers who are not fully qualified to teach, classrooms are too crowded, some schools will be working three shifts, holding classes in cafeterias, churches, synagogues, and in at least one case a converted chicken coop. There is a shortage of almost a hundred and twenty-five thousand teachers, and this shortage must be made up for in "emergency" teachers. Children are being cheated. Over crowding is worse than it has been before. This year there will be about six-and-a-half-percent fewer teachers than last year. Also last year something like seventy-five thousand teachers quit their jobs for better pay and further opportunity. And the peak in students attending public schools will not come until 1960. The figures are not to be disputed. We require more teachers and more classrooms, which in turn means more money.

There is some reassurance today for the roughly nine million parents whose children have entered the first grade. A spokesman of the National Education Association said:" Twenty years ago we still had the idea children should progress exactly alike. Now we know that's impossible. I like to compare learning to read with learning to walk. Some youngsters may be able to walk at thirteen months, and others not until they're twenty months old. Yet, twenty years later the one who walked at thirteen months won't necessarily be the better walker. Reading is the same way. Children simply don't get ready to read at the same time." Doctor Robert Eaves, of the N.E.A. also says that the new crop of parents who came on after the war are showing far more interest in our schools. They're much more alert and much more concerned about education. There's an eagerness there.

Probably no country in the world pays more unanimous lip sersive to universal education that we do. It seems at times that we will do andthing except pay for it. Teachers, like the rest of us, work for a living but generally more is expected of teachers than is required of the ordinary workman. There is a tendency on the part of parents to assign their duties and responsibilities to the teacher. The teacher is expected to lead a more exemplary existence than is required of the rest of us. In ethics, morals, and example the teacher must be a first-class citizen. But when it comes to income, the teacher occupies a second-class position.

There is considerable evidence to indicate that teachers behave pretty much like other mortals. Communities that pay good salaries and offer good working conditions are generally able to keep their teachers, and find good replacements. In communities where salaries are low, and conditions unfavorable, there is a teacher shortage, both of quantity and of quality. Well-prepared teachers go where the rewards and opportunities are best.

It seems to this reporter that the average citizen can do but little to influence or control directly most of the major issues that confront the nation. He can't advise Mr. Dulles in Bonn or London. He can't directly influence what the Russians are going to do. He can't measure the importance of a billion dollars more or less in the military budget. But he can recognize that we haven't got enough good schools with enough competent and well-paid teachers; about that, he can do something, in the hope that his investment will pay dividends in terms of human beings better able to cope with the problems that will still be there, when they grow up. Dr. Eaves is undoubtedly right when he suggests that the child who walks at thirteen months and the one who doesn't walk till twenty months, may both walk equally well twenty years later. But the important thing, surely, is the direction in which they walk collectively. They can walk forward or backward. Their direction will be determined, in part at least, by what they know. There could be a new definition of S.O.S., and it could be: "Save Our Schools".

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. but first, Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: No one placed a higher value on education that Joseph Addison when he said: "Education is a companion which no misfortune can depress, no crime destroy, no enemy can alienate, no despotism can enslave. Without education, what is man? A splendid slave, a reasoning savage." Bismarck put itthis way: "The nation that has the schools has the future."

Good Night and Good Luck"

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 15, 1954
7:45-8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the News:

Hurricane Hazel has now moved from Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, through Maryland. She's still going strong...and is still very dangerous. She's now expected to be passing through east-central Pennsylvania on her way to New York State. Hazel registered winds up to 98 miles an hour in Washington and dropped to 84 miles an hour west of Baltimore. The Baltimore Weather Bureau says Hazel is going northwest with winds of 50 to 60 miles an hour. Here in New York the weather Bureau reports gusts up to 80 miles an hour. The center of Hurricane Hazel is expected to pass from 80 to 100 miles west of this city later tonight. But we are warned not to take this "as a lessening influence so far as weather in the Metropolitan area is concerned." In her path northward Hazel has killed at least five persons...injured many... left thousands homeless...and done damage in the millions. At New Port News the uncompleted 80-million dollar battleship Kentucky is adrift in the waters of Hampton Roads. But a watchmen aboard reports no danger. At Annapolis says: no danger to the men. In Washington, some precious old trees were knocked down on the Capitol grounds; windows were shattered.. power lines and transportation disrupted. Government workers had been sent home early in the afternoon and schools were closed. My colleague, Ted Church has been spending most of the day at the Weather Bureau in Washington. And this is his report:

CHURCH: For a time, perhaps 25-minutes, Hurricane Hazel had the capital of the nation for its eye. It was an eerie feeling to know that in any direction one looked, the storm raged but here it was quiet. The top-side of the stormy wheel had passed, leabing considerable destruction throughout the city. The high tides of Chesapeake Bay backed up the Potomac River and famed Haines Point, visited by millions of Americans, is reported flooded. Then the bottom-side of the twister hit town. Although these winds were not expected to meet the nearly one hundred mile an hour challenge of the first wave, they seemed to be even worse. Seasoned weathermen here view Hazel with an appreciative eye. As they tell it, "She has a long history, longer than most indeed, and when she hit the American mainland at the Carolinas she sort of wound up and took off. She gathered speed and venom as she moved inland. Weather advisories, trying to see into the future, figured her for 35 miles an hour, in a northward movement, and she reeled off 50 miles an hour. Here at the United States weather station, at the National Airport in Washington, a cautious crew, under weatherman Rheinhardt C. Schmidt watched her movements closely, issuing special advisories more often than usual as reports poured in demonstrating the new strength and speed of the monster. And, unmistakably the charts showed Hazel headed straight for Washington. A close check of the radar screen showed it to be a shade to the West, but only a shade. But by this evening, brows began to clear slightly for Hurricane Hazel seemed to be showing some of the same characteristics of the tropical hurricane of September 17th, 1876. This one, like Hazel, came ashore in the North Carolina, generally near Wilmington. Its center, like Hazel's, passed directly over Washington between four and six o'clock; the present one was a shade late. The old gal, unlike most, then veered off to the northwest. Apparently Hazel is not going completely to the northwest, but also she seems not going to the East. The best prediction available at broadcast time tonight is that Hazel will pass about one hundred miles due west of New York City, at about 9 O'clock tonight. As has beensaid, she is moving fast and exports think she'll be well into Canada by 7:30 tomorrow morning.

About fifteen minutes ago, the bureau took storm warnings down south of the Delaware breakwater. Old residents here in Washington don't like to talk about it much, but there have been eight hurricanes whose eyes have passed diredtly overhead. What they will talk about for some time to come, however, is how Hurricane Hazel broke one of the most unusual safety records ever run up by a major city. For fifty days, up until today, metropolitan Washington had not had a fatality due to an automobile accident. But at the height of the storm this afternoon, a 71-year old woman met death by auto on a stormy northeast Washington street, hit actually, I suppose, by Hurricane Hazel.

So the weather reports here have said Hurricane Hazel is a dangerous storm, and apparently still is. This is Ted Church at the Washington Weather Bureau, in Washington.

MURROW: Thank you, Ted Church.

President Eisenhower ended his eight-week "work and play" vacation in Colorado today and flew to Indianapolis, where he will make a major address tonight on the Administration farm program. Mr. Eisenhower's speech is billed as a non-partisan. It is being sponsored by the National Institute of Animal Agriculture which invited the President "to tell the nation's farmers the significance of a sound farm and food policy." After the speech, the President and Mrs. Eisenhower will fly on to Washington...weather permitting.

It was announced today that the President will make a political talk in New York City next Thursday night.

The President today accepted the resignation of Earl Coke as an assistant secretary of agriculture. He will be succeeded by Ervin L. Peterson, director of the Oregon State Agriculture Department.

The New York World-Telegram and Sun said tonight that charges linking a sister of Clifford P Case, Republican candidate for the Senate from New Jersey, to Communist front groups were due to "mistaken identity". Miss Bella V. Dodd, a former Communist leader told the newspaper that she never said, nor did she mean to imply that the Miss Case she knew was related to the Republican candidate. Her Miss Case, Miss Dodd said, was a Columbia University professor who died in 1948. The Republican candidate's sister is a teacher at a girl's school in Michigan...and is now under a physician's care. Caddidate Case has referred to the charges against his sister as "gutter politics". He is preparing a full reply.

Leaders of the C.I.O. and the A.F. of L. today agreed on plans to merge their two organizations into a single labor body. A committee preparing the groundwork for the merger has decided to unite first, and then work out jurisdictional problems. A.F. of L. President Meany, thinks the merger can be accomplished by the end of the next year. C.I.O. President Reuther is also optimistic.

A truck strike that would paralyze much of the business of New York City is set for midnight tonight. The drivers are demanding a 25-cent-an-hour package increase. The trucking companies are offering 10 cents.

Efforts to settle the London dock strike collapsed tonight. And the government warned that Britain's food supplies are endangered. Forty-Five hundred tugboatmen are scheduled to join the walkout on Sunday. Together with the spreading strike of submen, the Churchill government is faced with its worst labor crisis since it came to power, three yeara ago.

Russia told the U.N. General Assembly today that tue United States is responsible for recent attacks by the Chinese Nationalists on the Red China coast. Soviet Delegate Vishinsky charged that the Narionalist attacks were supported by the U.S. Seventh Fleet...through its protection of the Formosa Straits...and the United States should be directed to end what Vishinsky termed "those acts of aggression." U.S. Ambassador Lodge replied: "To say that the United States has engaged in any aggressive action in the area of Formosa...or anywhere else....is a plain lie."

My only excuse for talking about the hurricane is that Hazel is now harrassing us and because a few weeks ago this reporter spent a little time flying around in the eye of Hurricane Edna in a B-29. Hurricanes are considerably more impressive when viewed from the ground than from the air, but the net impression is pretty much the same...a combination of helplessness and humility. There is no human power that can control, direct or influence a hurricane. The puniness, the ineffectiveness of man with all his knowledge and scientific devices becomes apparent. There is no power to hold back the huge waves. The roof will come off the house of a man who has in his head all the secrets of atomic energy, quite as easily as it can be removed from the home af a humble working man. The falling tree or telephone pole will smash the newest air-conditioned limousine, or the most ancient jalopy with complete impartiality. There is an equality of danger, a companionship of fear, in a hurricane, comparable to that which exists in a night bombing raid.

When we were flying around inside the yee of Edna, in that unnatural quiet on the center of the storm, I asked a weather expert how much energy he thought the thing was generating. And he said: "Who knows? There's no way of measuring it." But he thought it was the equivalent of a great many hydrogen bombs. And when I asked him what he thought would happen if a hydrogen bomb should be dropped into a full-blown hurricane, he laughed and said he didn't have the least idea, but he thought probably the hurricane would spit it right back.

On the ground the hurricane is a thing of terror, vicious and unpredictable, which often brings out the humanity, the compassion and the neighborliness that somehow seems to come to the surface only during times of disaster - from the air it is a thing of solemn majesty in the center, surrounded by a frenzied fury. Tt is a place to reflect upon the limited capacity of the individual to determine his own fate, and to wonder what forces do indeed command it. There is a quiet in the eye af a hurricane, a serenity and lack of pressure that can be seen in the faces of certain saints, of of men of great faith who are dying, and know it.

With all our scientific and technolelical advances no one has yet devised a method of opening a trainwindow that is stuck, curing the common cold, or diverting a hurricane from its path.

At times of personal danger, some men pray, others are profane; each in his own way recognizing that they no longer exercise control over the forces at play. And each feels that indescribably sense of serenity when the stars come out again, when there is quiet, and light and life.

There are few things like a hurricane to cut a man down to size.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. But first, Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: In Mark Twain's "A Tramp Abroad" there are these appropriate lines: "We watched ahe weather all through that awful night and kept an eye on the barometer for the least change, but there was none. Words can not describe the comfort that that friendly, hopeful steadfast thing was in that season of trouble. It was a defective barometer. But if I should be in such a situation again, I would not wish for any barometer but that one."

Good night and good luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1954
7:45--8:00 P. M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The President agrees with Secreatry of State Dulles that an air or naval blockade of Communist China would amount to "war actions"..Mr. Dulles said last night that we want to use peaceful means to sustain our international rights...and those of our citizens...rather than resorting to "war actions." White House Secretary Hagerty today told reporters the President agrees. And Senate Majority Leader Knowland who suggested the blockade, says he'll support any effective alternate plan that will secure the release of the 13 Americans now in Red Chian's jails. Knowland also said his split with the Administration's foreign policy is not as great as some would lake it appear to be. Mr. Dulles promised vigorous action to get the release of the 13 Americans. Knowland says he'll wait to find out what this will be.

We now have told Red China that we are indignant over "their deliberate flouting of international agreements and civilized practices."...in the way they handled the 13 Americans. This message was communicated by an American official in Geneva. The Chinese refused to accept the protest. And the Communist radio today broadcast details purporting to prove that two of the imprisoned Americans were spies.

In Washington tonight, reporters were told that the Administration will ask Congress for authority to join in a new economic program to help the free nations of South Asia and the Far East. West European nations will be asked to join. There's no suggestion yet on how big the project will be.

The Senate today heard opposing views on whether to censure McCarthy. Democratic Senator Fulbright of Arkansas said his colleagues must demonstrate their honor and self-respect by rebuking McCarthy for having "shaken confidence in schools, the churches and government." But Republican Senator Mundt said if McCarthy is censured the Communists will misrepresent it as a retreat in the fight against Communism. Fulbright said McCarthy aas "so preyed upon the fears and hatreds of the uninformed and credulous people that he has started a prarie fire" which neither he nor anyone else may be able to control. He said since this debate started the character of his mail has changed. Fulbright said: "It is no longer criticism, it is unadulterated hate, vituperation and abuse. It is highly emotional, irrational and designed to intimidate and over-awe" the Senate. And Senator Mundt said that to censure McCarthy for his alleged abuse of General Zwicker would "shrivel and shrink" the prestige of Congress as against what he called the "arrogance" of executive agencies. Mundt said that through the New Deal years Congress lost power to the executive branch of government..because Congress didn't dare stand up. He says he will have no part of what he called "this new surrender." And Mundt warned Southern Senators to beware. He said there was " a hidden bomb" in the censure resolution that "someday is going to explode all over Dixie". Mundt called for what he described as a "third course" in the censure debate. He would set up new rules for investigation committees and have a study made on a code of conduct for Senators...on and off the Senate floor. Republican Senator Martin of Pennsylvania says he'll vote against censure...has long admired McCarthy's Americanism. And new Senator Brown of Nevada said censure would establish dangerous precedents limiting Congressional investigations.

Defense Secretary Wilson says the next Congress will be asked to extend the draft law for four years beyond its expiration date..now set for the end of June. Wilson says Congress will also be asked to set-up a modified universal military training program ..to train 100-thousand men a year for six-months periods and then assign them to reserve outifts. Wilson will also sk for pay increases for military men...ranging from three to six percent of present schedules.

Field Marshal Montgomery said in Los Angeles today that the United States must be ready to "take it"..and to strike back...if we are to survive in the years of "co-existence with conflict" we face in the future. He said history will measure American success "not so much by the quantity of your dollars as by the quality of your leadership."

South Africas governing Nationalist party today chose Johannes Strytom to be the new prime minister. He favors a stern policy of racial segregation...would abandon use of the English language..and make his country a republic. It's not clear whether he wants South Africa to remain in the British Commonwealth of Nations.

The British are an emotional, sentimental people, with a great fondness for antiquity. The sentiment and the emotion are seldom displayed, but it happened in London today. The occasion was the 80th birthday of Sir Winston Churchill - a flood of gifts, a joint session of Parliament, nonpartisan oratory, a portrait, a fund that may go to three million dollars - all in honor of perhaps the most considerable man to talk the stage of history in our time. His own island, wrapped in the Atlantic mists, was never a large enough stage for him to play upon. He has served six soverigns; his experience of war extends from the last full-dress calalry charge to the Hydrogen Bomb. For 52 years he has sat in the House of Commons. He hasnot always bee right; but never has he been ambiguous.

Today was the most memorable public occasion of his life. Today, in recalling the war years, he said: "The people's will was resolute and remoreseless. I only expressed it. They had the lion's heart, I had the luck to be called upon to give it the roar."

This ancient aristocrat, born in the tranquil, serene Victorian era, has spent much of his life as a man of war. His recognition of the enemy's of freedom was sure and certain. His faith in constitutional procedure was never shaken. During the late was Sir Winston Churchill presided over a coalition government, equipped with dictatorial powers, and was scrupulous in his regard for the authorith of the House of Commons.

His political obituary was being written when he had scarcely passed 40. He sat for years in the House, warning of the menace of Nazi-ism, while the big clock above the Speaker's Chair ticked off the wasted hours. He was a lonely but not a bitter man, always enjoying the cut and thrust of parliamentry debate, where no man was his match. When he came to power in the Spring of 1940, he brooked no recrimination about the past, lest the future thereby be lost. He mobilized the English language and sent it into battle, to steady his fellow-countrymen and hearten those Europeans upon whom the long dark night of tyranny had descended. He understood the first principle of war, which is to recognize the enemy; and had Hitler invaded Hell, Mr. Churchill would have found opportunity in the House of Commons to make pasing and not altogether unfavorable reference to the Devil.

He is both a humble and an arrogant man. Once, after a particularly savage right raid on the East End of London, he walked and scrambled over hills of broken brick, through puddles of shattered glass; and the gallant grimy Londoners ceased their digging for buried bodies, and cheered him. And he said with bewilderment in his voice, and tears in his eyse: "They act as though I had brought them a great victory."

I am sure that if he could pluck one year from the incredible eighty, and print it indelibly in the pages of history, he would choose that one year when Britain stood alone, while those who were half asleep became half prepared. He would choose it, not because of his rhetoric, not because of the Battle of Britain, or the steadiness of the civilian population; but rather because democratic processes, the rights of the individual, did not shrivel or shrink even when held so near the fire of total war.

The British Prime Minister is both a gambler and a crying man - Mr. Lincoln did considerable crying too. One of the greatest gambles in the history of warfare occurred in the Autumn of 1940, when he stripped the Island of its pitiful remnants of armor - most of it had been lost at Dunkirk - and shipped it aound the Cape to Egypt.

When the German beam was on London, guiding their bombers in, he would drive up from the country for no other reason than to be there with the other subjects of the King. There was a grim gaity about the man; a certain fascination with physical danger; a restless, roving mind which caused him to be concerned about minute details - memorandum showering right and left, reading : "Pray inform me on this matter within 24 hours" - telephone calls to Cabinet Ministers in the middle of the night. And always the ability to savor and taste a well-turned phrase, to polish it until it would come out in the House of Commons in a fashion described by a friend as a "Thunderous and well-rehearsed improvisation."

When victory had been achieved his fellow-countrymen turned him out to grass. With one brilliant exception he did not complain. His mind had changed on very few subjects, and it was a time of change. He wrote and he painted, and sought power again. Finally it was his. Scarred and toughened as he was by political wars, the charge that hurt most in that last campaign was that he was a man of war not to be trusted with power. He remains the man of war seeking peace. Younger men, waiting for him to lay down the heavy burdens of office, grow old and impatient while waiting/

He moves with uncertain steps; some of the fire has gone from his voice; but his language continues to illuminate the political scene in England and abroad. He said today: "I am now nearing the end of my journey, but I hope I still have some services to render". His services to date have not been inconsiderable, for men who love freedom, and indeed those who now enjoy it, are considerably in his debt. He has enriched our language and fortified our heritage.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a minute with the Word for Today. But first, a word from Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: When the definite history of our times is written, there will be a special place in it for Sir Winston Churchill, who in 1943, speaking of nations as well as individuals, said: "The price of greatness is responsibility." Perhaps Sir Winston was too modest to conclude, as Thomas Fuller once did that "Great hopes make great men." Whatever the case, Will Rogers put it well when he said: "It is great to be great, but it is greater to be human."

Good Night and Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 28, 1955
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good evening:

President Eisenhower resumed active political leadership of his party today..in a conference with the Republican national chairman, Leonard Hall. The meeting took place at the temporary White House in Gettysburg, and lasted 45 minutes. Afterward, Hall told a news conference it was his personal opinion that President Eisenhower will seek another term, "if he feels he is able." Hall said a great deal depends on the medical checkup Mr. Eisenhower will undergo late in January, but he..Hall..is "very much encouraged" as a result of today's meeting, although the President made no promises. "So far as I am concerned," Hall said, "there is no other candidate". He described Mr. Eisenhower as looking extremely well.."a million percent". He told reporters the President is concerned about falling farm prices, and "will meet the problem". He said they had d general discussion of what to do.

Hall said it was wrong of Governor Harriman..and other Democratic leaders ..to attack the Administration's foreign policy. "It seems to me," he said, that such attacks are pretty dangerous and certainly not in the best interest of the country."

The Democratic national chairman..Paul Butler..referred today to the President's recent appeal for bipartisanship in foreign policy. "If Mr. Eisenhower does not want foreign policy to be a poltiical issue," Butler said, "let him order Mr. Hall to drop the peace slogan as part of Republican campaign strategy. Let Mr. Eisenhower say that from now on, false and exaggerated claims will not be tolerated by him."

President Eisenhower today issued an executive order tightening the "conflict of interest" regulations for dollar-a-year men in the government. Henceforth, government employees..including part-time experts and consultants..must file statements in the federal register, listing their financial interests. The new order also limits the function of experts to advising top government officials. It specifically bars them from making recommendations. The presidential order is designed to prevent reoccurence of incidents such as that of Adolf Wenzell, who acted both as an adviser to the Government and as an executive of the bank that handled the financing arrangements for Dixon-Yates.

The White House conference on Education opened tonight in Washington with a message from President Eisenhower, recorded on film. The President spoke of the dilemma in education. He said, "If we depend too much on outside help, we will lose independence and initiative. But if the Federal Government does not step in with leadership..and with money and credit where necessary.. there will be a lack of schools in certain important areas." The chairman of the conference, Neil McElroy, said earlier today that federal school aid is by no means "the only important question" to be taken up at the meeting. The teacher shortage, he said, "is perhaps the most stubborn problem of all."

The annual Farm Outlook Conference....sponsored by the Department of Agriculture..also met in Washington today, and heard of a gloomy prediction from Frederick Waugh, the department's director of economics. Waugh said the "cost-price squeeze" on the nation's farmers can be expected to continue in 1956. The squeeze, he said, probably will be marked by some further drop in farm income..with little if any drop in farm production costs.

An agreement has been reached in the four-month-old strike of the United Auto workers against the Perfect Circle plant at New Castle, Indiana. The agreement is subject to ratification tomorrow by the union rank and file. No details of the settlement have been announced.

The United States is drafting a "vigorous protest" to Soviet officials, over the seizure yesterday of two American congressmen by Communist police in East Berlin. Representatives Boland of Massachusetts and Ostertag of New York..and Mrs. Ostertag..were held for four hours, reportedly because the Army car in which they were riding had a radio-telephone. The United States protest will be delivered in Berlin tomorrow.

A small battle was fought by Israeli and Egyptian forces today in the Gaza strip. Israel says Egyptian troops attacked an Israeli patrol on Israeli territory, wounding two men. Egypt claims three Israelis were killed, and that the trouble started when an Israeli outpost opened automatic fire in an Egytian position.

Soviet Premier Bulganin spoke today at a civic reception in Madras, praising India for its "wise decision" in not entering military agreements with the West. Aisan nations that permit foreign bases on their soil, he said, "should clearly understand the great daggers this will bring for their territories in any new war." Bulganin was cheered by his Indian listeners when he said that Russia suppots India's "right" to oust the Portugese from their small Indian colonies. He called the Portugese possession of Goa "a shame to civilized opeple." An important Indian newspaper..the Hindustan Standard..today criticized Communist Party Boss Khruschef for announcing Russia's explosion of a hydrogen bomb..during his visit in India. The paper says the Soviet leader should have picked another time and place to make such an announcement, calling it "inappropriate and embarrassing to his Indian hosts."

Here in New York, the head of the Indian delegation to the United Nations..Krishna Minon..said Russia's explosion of the hydrogen bomb was "contrary to the current of peace."

Mr. Murrow is in Paris tonight, not, one hastens to add, on a pleasure trip but for the business of reporting. The flight across the chanel from England was one he has made before under different circumstances and when he had landed, he recorded this script.

MURROW: About twelve hours out of New York, you step out of a Super-Constellation, walk across a hundred yards of concrete and climb into a two-engined chartered aircraft bound for Villacoublay. There are seats in the aircraft for eight persons - but you're all alone. A winter sun is losing its fight against the mist that shrouds the island. As you taxi to the end of the runway, memory takes you back to other take-offs, when the air was filled with the thunder of motors and when the bellies of the aircraft were filled with bombs. The take-off is routine. At about 6,000 feet you break out of the clouds; the sun is just off your right wing; there's a full "bomber's" moon off the left wing. at 3:00 o clock high there are contrails of a jet. He comes out of the eye of the sun, close enough so you can see he's wearing a yellow scarf. The bold markings of the Royal Air Force show on the wing as he rolls away. The boy flying it was probably only ten years old, in knee pants, when the sky was torn and shaken by Spitfires and Messerschmidts during the Battle of Britain. The clouds below are ragged and broken, like a field of snow plowed by a drunken farmer.

Somewhere down there is Dover - and you wonder what's happened to that old grey seagull who used to sound the warning of approaching German aircraft before the sirens screamed. You notice that the seats in this chargered job are covered with plaid. And, for no reason, that reminds you fo Bob Sherwood, ofer the Bay of Biscay, in 1942, flying to Algiers in an unarmed plane. The pilot came back and said to Sherwood, "Keep an eye out for enemy aircraft"; and Sherwood said, "If I see one, what do I do? Ask for a prayerbook?" All voices of all the men you have ever flown with seem to come pounding into your ears. The pilot ought to be Colonel Joe Kelly, smoking that big cigar, flying level and straight in a bomb-run with all the B-26's strung out behind him. You wait for that sensual shudder that goes through an aircraft when the guns are tested. You remember the big sergeant from New Jersey, with his legs dangling out of the door of a C-47, going in for the Arnhem-Nijmegen drop, how he looked down and saw English girls harvesting potatoes. And you remember the drop across the Rhine, riding in a Halifax, pulling a glider, and you hear again the glider pilot just before he cut loose, saying in a casual fashion, "I'll be leaving you now. Thanks for the ride!"

At about this point you're over the Channel, although you can't see it, but you remember what it looked like on D-Day: all the ships like matchsticks in a bowl of soup. You look at the moon off your left wing, and it seems to be the same moon you saw over Berlin in '43, but then it was tinged with red from the fires below. Your chartered aircraft seems slow, as though the air were tired and thin from beign beaten by so many propellers, so many years ago.

It's a little difficult to breathe, although you're only at 7,000 feet. And that reminds you fo the time you left the waistgun position in a B-17 to go forward, forgot to pickup your oxygen bottle and almost passed out. Now there is a glimpse of the French countryside, and you remember flying an observer in an old P-6 in Korea at 100 feet or less, and you're ashamed you can't remember the pilot's name. You can hear his voice, remember that he was blond and that he could follow tank tracks like an Indian scout - but the name is gone. You remember how a bomber crew used to tighten up when they crossedthe enemy coast. The distance between a tailgunner and a pilot did not exist. Every man's whoulder was against the other.

You see a railroad switching yard below you, and you remember the time when a B-26 outfit lanced down through a hole in the clouds and took a similar switching yard as a target of opportunity - and left the rails looking like tortuous spaghetti.

At about this time the young pilot in the chartered job takes up the horn and calls the tower of Villacoublay. This is something you do remember: There was a fighter pilot; his name was Curley Rogers, and he came from Selma, Alabama, and he flew you piggy-back in a P-47 over the Remagen Bridge. All during this chartered flight from London to Villacoublay the voices of flying men who are now dead kept pounding through the intercom which didn't exist. You looked upstairs for your fighter cover - and it wasn't there. You looked back to see whether the other aircraft were in formation - and you saw only the emptiness, upon which the plush chartered job had not left a mark. You were up there all alone. And you wondered whether the scars cut by Spitfires and Messerschmidts on the green ground below had healded. And then your aircraft touched down at Villacoublay. The motors were cut and the ghosts were gone. And you decided that middle-aged reporters with about forty combat missions as parasites, should not fly alone. That's how this reporter reached Paris. Tomorrow night, with the help of my colleague David Schoenbrun, I shall try to tell you what's going on here. He tells me that, as of now, the Government will probably fall tomrrrow.

Good Night and Good Luck.

COLLINGWOOD: This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the Day's News. But first, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL.

COLLINGWOOD: Ed Murrow just reported from Paris that CBS News correspondent Dave Schoenbrun expects Premier Faure's government to fall tomorrow. Apparently Schoenbrun is not alone in his view. It seems to be shared by Premier Faure himself. When a well-wisher rose in the chamber of deputies and praised the work of his government today, Faure said he would make no response. "It is not customary", said the Premier of France, "for the corpse to reply to a funeral oration."

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, APRIL 30, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Senator Alben W. Barkley died today of a heart attack. The former Vice President had just finished addressing a mock political convention at Washington and Lee University..in Lexington, Virginia..when he collapsed. Death was pronounced a few minutes later at Stonewall Jackson Memorial Hospital. He was 78 years old.

President Eisenhower discussed his foreign aid program today with the leaders of Congress having most to do with foreign policy. Earlier in the day, Secretary of State Dulles testified in favor of the aid program before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Mr. Dulles urged Congress to approve the long-term features of the program. He called long-term foreign aid "an indispensible part" of our foreign policy.

General LeMay, commander of the Strategic Air Command, testified again today before the Senate subcommittee investigating the state of American air power. LeMay said on the basis of present programs Russia "will enjoy a numerical advantage in long-range bombers in the period 1958-1960." And he proposed that the number of B-52 bombers planned for his command be increased. LeMay said, "We believe we now have the capability of winning any war the Soviets might start. We are not capable of winning it without this country receiving very serious damage."

President Eisenhower told the convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce today that the policies of his administration have created record prosperity. "We must now find more ways," he said, "to assist less flourishing segments of our economy to share more equitably in this abundance. We must continue to champion fiscal integrety and promote healthy economic growth.

The House Agriculture Committee approved a new farm bill today. The new measure contains the soil bank..favored by the Administration..but no provision for paying farmers in advance for taking surplus crop acreage our of production. Committee approval was unanimous , after a Republican effort to insert the pre-payment feature was defeated on a vote that followed party lines. The effort is certain to be renewed then the measure reached the House floor. No action was taken on a companion bill that would provide subsidies, so as to raise prices to the equivalent of 90 percent of parity.

A Senate subcommittee approved a bill designed to cut down the illegal traffic in drugs. Under its provisions, a person convicted of selling heroin to youngsters under 18 could be sentenced to death. A person convicted of smuggling marijuana into the United States would be subject to 5 - to - 10 years imprisonment, instead of 1 - to - 5 year term provided under present law.

The Supreme Court has postponed a ruling on the constitutionality of the Internal Security Act of 1950. By a 6 - to - 3 decision, it remanded the case to the Subversive Activities Control Board to determine whether perjured testomony led to the board's finding..in 1953..that the Communist Party in the United States is a tool of Moscow and consequently must register under terms of the act. The party has contended that former Communist Harvey Matuso and other ex-Communists lied to the board in the course of the hearings. It has also challenged the constitutionality of the act. In a dissenting opinion..in which Justices Reed and Minton concurred. Justice Clark said, "Never before have more allegations of perjury, so flimsily supported, been considered grounds for repoening a proceeding or granting a new trial." As a result of today's majority decision, the Supreme Court cannot rule on the constitutionality of the Internal Security Act before next year.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold flew to Jerusalem today.. from Cairo..for a final round of talks with Israeli leaders. Hammarskjold met informally tonight with Israeli Foreign Minister Sharett. And tomorrow he is expected to see Premier Ben Gurion. Hammarskjold is seeking practical arrangements for enforcing the cease - fire agreed to by Israel and Egypt on April 18th. Israel accused Egypt today of breaking that agreement. A Foreign Office spokesman reported two Israelis killed yesterday in incidents along the Gaza Strip.

In North Africa, French troops today battled a strong rebel force only 12 miles from Algiers. According to unofficial reports, 83 rebels were killed in Algeria in the last 24 hours. French losses were unreported.

The Russian leaders returned to Moscow today from their 10-day visit in Britain. Both Soviet Premier Bulganin and Communist Party Boss Khrushchev praised British hospitality and said their visit had been profitable. "strange as it may seem," Khrushchev said, "the only organization which tried to spoil the atmosphere was the Labor Party". Khrushchev was referring to the request ..by some Laborites..of information on the fate of Socialists who had disappeared behind the Iron Curtain. He said the Soviet Union favors the establishment of good relations with the United States. He said, "We shall do everything in that direction."

In Washington, the State Department told the Polish Ambassador today to cease immediately"..trying to pressure Polish refugees into going back behind the Iron Curtain. The State Department note said it has learned that officials of the Polish Embassy had been "seeking out Polish nationals in this country" and trying..by various methods..to prevail upon them to go home.

In the woods, when a great and ancient tree that has weathered many storms suddenly comes crashing down, there is the noise of smaller trees snapping back into position, the rustle and cries of small creatures, and the descending noise of twigs. branches and bits of moss falling to the ground. And then there is silence, more complete and oppressive than any silence that went before. Frequently this happens on a dead calm day, for no apparent reason. So it was today with Senator Alben Barkley of Kentucky. He was making the keynote speech at Washington and Lee Univeristy. The occasion was their mock democratic convention. The Senator had just said: "I would rather be a servant in the House of the Lord than sit in the seat of the mighty." He collapsed and was pronounced dead ten minutes later.

It aas altogether typical of the man that he devoted his last hour to politics and to youth. He as a man without cant, without rancor; a politician respected and admired, even by his opponents. In defeat he was resolute, and in victory indeed magnanimous. Few men have ever so endeared themselves in the hearts of their fellow - men. He had humor, but seldom used it to hurt. He was a man who wore both power and popularity loosely, almost carelessly, like an old cloak. He was tolerant of most things, except intolerance. He had been in politics since 1905. He was helpful to young men. He was a tireless political campaigner. And he was an orator of what is generally called "the old shcool." Anyone who heard his keynote speech in Philadelphia in 1948, or his brilliant performance at Chicago ln 1952, heard political oratory at its best. At Chicago he had thought the presidential nomination to be within his grasp. He lost it - knew he had lost it - and then went before the Convention, shrugged his broad shoulders and proceeded to demonstrate how a good politician and a good loser should act and speak.

He served as Vice President under Mr. Truman, became known at "The Veep", and was always the Gentleman from Paducah. He loved the cut and thrust of parliamentary debate. He was known during his years in the Senate as "the Ready Man", ready at the drop of a gavel to deliver a brilliant and lengthy speech, without benefit of notes or ghost writers. While he was Vice President he refused to have a bodyguard, saying: "I'm a big boy now, and who would want to harm a young man like me, anyway?"

He was loyal to his Party, but did not hesitate to break with Roosevelt in 1944 when the President vetoed a Tax Bill.

He was a man with manners, whol liked people, who enjoyed good stories, some of them were old, but they were re- invigorated by the Barkley telling. After he finished his term as Vice President, he spent a couple of years in Kentucky and then went back to politics. He was elected the states Junior Senator for the term beginning in January of last year. So he went back to Congress where he had first arrived as a Representative in 1913. He once said he hoped to keep on politicking to the end - and he did.

The tributes, the expressions of shock and sorrow, are already coming in. Senator Knowland of Calfiornia says: "The country and Kentucky have lost a great citizen and a great senator." Senator Lehman of New York says: "Senator Barkley's death is a great shock to me, and a national disaster. His place in history is secure, but his place in our hearts will neve be filled." McClellan of Arkansas: "The nation has lost a great man: one of the most beloved men in America." Allender of Louisiana: "He was a great American and a great statesman. We have suffered a very grievous loss." Former President Truman called him "a citizen that the United States ann always be proud of." President Eisenhower said; "The nation is the poorer by this tragic event."

To this reporter Senator Barkley was always a man who took his duties and his responsibilities seriously, but who was always able to laugh, both at himself and his opposition. Ther will be many tributes to his ability , his loyalty and his humor. Some of them will be eloquent. But mostly they will resemble the sound of smaller trees snapping upright, branches, twigs and moss falling to the ground - after a giant tree has some crashing down.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is Bob Dixon.

DIXON: COMMERCIAL

MURROW: American policy is being transformed. William Congreve called reason the power to guess at right and wrong. In every change of national policy there is risk. But James B. Conant once observed, "Behold the turtle. He makes progress only when he sticks his neck out." Senator Barkley would have agreed.

Good Night and Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 31, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

Half an hour ago President Eisenhower spoke to the nation; reviewed recent events in Eastern Europe, promised economic aid for Poland and Hungary; said that if Russia withdraws her troops from such countries it will be a great forward stride toward justice, turst and understanding in the world.

On the subject of the Suez crisis the President took a "hands-off" policy pinning his hopes on the United Nations. Here, by recording, is part of what he had to say on that subject.

PRESIDENT EISENHOWER: On Sunday, the Israeli government ordered total mobilization. On Monday, their armed forces penetrated deeply into Egypt and to the vicinity of the Suez Canal, nearly 100 miles away. And on Tuesday, the British and French governments delivered a twelve - hour ultimatum to Israel and Egypt, now followed up by armed attack against Egypt.

The United States was not consulted in any way about any phase of these actions, nor were we informed of them in advance. As it is the manifest right of any of these nations to take such decisions and actions, it is likewise our right, if our judgement so dictates, to dissent. We believe these actions to have been taken in error, for we do not accept the use of force as a wise or proper instrument for the settlement of international disputes. To say this, in this particular instance, is in no way to minimize our friendships with these nations nor our determination to maintain those friendships; and we are fully aware of the grave anxieties of Israel, of Britain and France. We know that they have been subjected to grave and repeated provocations. The present fact, nonetheless, seems clear. The action taken can scarcely be reconciled with the principles and purposes of the United Nations, to which we have all subscribed. And beyond this, we are forced to doubt that resort to force and war will for long serve the (unintelligible) of the attacking nations. Now we must look to the future.

In the circumstances I have described, there will be no United States involvement in these present hostilities. I therefore have no plan to call the Congress in special session. Of course, we shall continue to keep in contact with congressional leaders of both parties. I assure you your government will remain alert to every possibility of this situation and keep in close contact and coordination with the legislative branch of this government.

At the same time it is, and it will remain, the dedicated purpose of your government to do all in its power ro localize the fighting and to end the conflict. We took our first measure in this action yesterday. We went to the United Nations with the request that the forces of Israel return to their own land and that hostilities in the area be brought to a close. This proposal was not adopted, because it was vetoed by Great Britain and by France. The processes of the United Nations, however, are not exhausted. It is out hope and intent that this matter will be brought before the United Nations General Assembly, there with no veto operating, the opinion of the world can be brought to bear in our quest for a just end to this tormenting problem. In the past, the United Nations has proved able to find a way to end bloodshed. We believe it can and that it will do so again.

My fellow citizens, as I review the march of world events in recent years, I am ever more deeply convinced that the United Nations represents the soundest hope for peace in the world. For this very reason, I believe that the processes of the United Nations need further to be developed and strengthened. I speak particularly of increasing its ability to secure justice under international law. In all the recent troubles in the Middle East, there have indeed been injustices suffered by all nations involved. But I do not believe that another instrument of injustice - war - is a remedy for these wrongs. There can be no peace without law. And there can be no law, if we were to invoke one mode of international conduct for those who oppose us and another for our friends. The society of nations has been slow in developing means to apply this truth, but the passionate longing for peace on the part of all people of the earth, compels us to speed out search for new and more effective instuments of justice. The peace we seek and need means much more than mere absence of war. It means the acceptance of law and the fostering of justice in all the world.."

MURROW: In the United Nations tonight, Yugoslavia called for an extraordinary meeting of the General Assembly to consider the action taken by Britain and France. The Seucrity council voted, over British and French objections, to grant the Yugoslav request.

Great Britain and France have attacked Egypt by air. So far, there is no word of a landing by British and French troops. Two hours ago, my colleague, Frank Kearns, came up from Cairo with an eye-witness report. Here is his first-hand, recorded story of what happened:

KEARNS: What started as an Israeli attack a few days ago, has not turned into a war and casualties. British jet bombers have attacked and burned in or near five key Egyptian cities and towns. Here in Cairo, the capitol, and Alexandria, Egypt's second city, and in a few towns along the Suez Canal - Port Said, Ismalia and Suez. This is official in an Egyptian communique. Their claim that seven persons were killed in the Cairo raid. Here in the capitol they have, with precision bombing, aimed at the key airfields around the city. Most of the bombs reportedly rioped Cairo's great international airport and nearby El Magra, the military airfield. Troops are on the desert of Cairo to the north just beyond suburban (unintelligible) Residents out there report the bombing set fire to an apartment building like a sever earthquake. The blasts of one were felt here in downtwon Cairo. During the blackout in the morning, considerable (unintelligible) bombs shattered the Egyptian night. Through the flames the red and white lights (unintelligible) and silhouetted the horizon like daylight. There is no panic - absolutely no panic. Cairo behaved like a veteran blitzed city but Cairo is a shocked and angry city tonight. Still no official comment, but unofficial comments from Egyptians is pure anger - anger laced with hate. They describe this as "pure, naked, ugly aggression," on one of the slimmest pretexts in history. "It's war now", one man said to me. "All out war. And if we lose the war, it will make Egypt a hell worse than Cyprus, Syria and Algeria rolled into one." Meanwhile no reports here as yet on whether the British and French are actually landing in Egypt. Now back to CBS News in New York.

MURROW: Immediately after this report was recorded, the Cairo transmitter went off the air, presumably because another raid was in progrsss. The British foreign secretary Selwyn Lloyd, told the House of Commons tonight that it is "untrue that Cairo proper has been bombed. Lloyd said the joint British-French operations were limited strictly to military targets, mainly airfields. The first official word of the attack came from the combined British and French headquarters on Cyprus. The announcement said : "An air offensive by bomber aircraft, under allied command, is at this moment being launched against military targets in Egypt." A few minutes later, the French Defense Ministry, in Paris, said attacks were being carried out against targets in the Suez Canal area at 6:40 p.m., Cairo time. That is 11:40 a.m., New York time. The French announcement spoke of a combined air and naval bombardment, indicating that warships, as well as aircraft, were involved. The bombardment began a little more than 14 hours after the Anglo-French ultimatum to Egypt and Israel expired.

Now, for a report on the action between Egypt and Israel from the Israeli point of view, we switch by recording to Winston Burdett in Tel Aviv.

BURDETT: The Israeli forces tonight are moving rapidly to cut off the Gaza Strip from Egypt and to complete the encirclement of the narrow panhandle on the eastern shore of the Mediterranean. There are 200,000 Arab refugees inside the Gaza area, and it's reported tonight that many of them are fleeing in panic down the coast road toward Port Said in Egypt, while others are trying to escape by boat before Israeli troops block the way. Military spokesmen here refused to confirm or deny this new Israeli thrust, but unofficial reports say that an Israeli tank force is striking toward the sea at the south end of the strip. Whether the Isrealis will invade the strip and occupy it, once they've sur-sounded it, we just don't know. What has happened to the Egyptian army? Where has it gone? That is the question that everyone here is asking. No major clash between Israeli and Egyptian troops has been reported here and yet the Israeli Radio said tonight that Egyptian resistance throughout the vast Sinai Peninsula, more than twice as big as Israel itself, has been liquidated. The Israeli still insist that their aim in this war is a limited aim, namely to wipe out all the Egyptian commando bases in the Sinai desert. If that is so, the Israelis will have no reason to go all the way to the Suez Canal . I asked an Israeli official tonight whether Israeli troops would go home after they have finished their job, or would they remain in the Sinai desert to make sure the Egyttians don't come back. His answer was, "That depends on circum-stances." Unquote. This may be a limited war, but the Israelis are as uncer-tain as everyone else how it will end. In the port of Haifa today about 100 Americans boarded a naval transport and left for Greece with an escort of two destoryers. That brings to 500 the number of Americans who have left Israel in the past two days. Now back to Ed Murrow in New York.

In Hungary today, Russian troops tnd tanks began pulling out of Budapest under threat of attack by the Hungarian air force. The Hungarian news agency says rebel leaders are demanding that the government "denounce" the Warsaw Pact. The pact was drawn up last year as Moscow's answer to NATO.

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The British andFrench are tyring to solve the Suez problem through force. This was not an easy decision to come by , right or wrong. Much patience was spent in fruitless negotiation. For as Alvin Johnson once remarked, "However bravely men may talk, they shrink from the appeal to force until there appears to be no other way out."

Goodnight and Good Luck.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

This is the news:

The Anglo-French invasion of Egupt appears imminent. The French Ministry of Defense announced today that the bombin of Egyptian arifields in preparation for the landings "is now practically over." A joint communique--issued on Cyprus..says that a hundred Egyptian aircraft have been caught on the ground, destroyed or made useless. Another communique...issued in Paris..says, "It can therefore be presumed that air and naval operations henceforth will aid at realizing the conditions necessary for temporary occupation of the Canal Zone." The British Admiralty warned all merchant shipping to stay clear of the approaches to the canal, both north and south. The Brtisih chancellor of the exchequer...Harold MacMillan, said crypticly . "Things will move rapidly in the next few days." British Canberra jets are reported to have knocked out Cairo's propaganda radio, "Voice of Arabia." The Egyptians say British and French bombers sank another ship in the Suez Canal, making two in all.

The Russians appear to be sealing off Hungary with troops and tanks. My colleague, Earnest Leiser, reports from Budapest that "very large" Soviet reinforcements have arrived in the country. Tank and machinegun fire was heard again in Budapest tonight, he says, after a quiet day. Leiser says the firing came from the western outskirts of the city. Other press reports say that Russian armored col mns have blocked the main highway leading from Budapest to Austria. The roadblock is said to have been establihhed six miles from the Austrian frontier. The United States Legation in Budapest reports that Russian troops refused to let a convoy of American diplomats..and their children..leave Hungary today. The legation says they were turned back at a point nine miles from the Austrian border.

The United Nations Security Council has met to consider "the critical situation in Hungary". The urgent meeting was requested by the United States, Britain and France. The Hungarian premier, Imre Nagy, appealed to the United Nations to protect Hungary's newly gained sovereignty, after reupdiating the Warsaw pact and demanding the withdrawal of Soviet troops. In the Security Council tonight, Russia tried to block discussions of the Hungarian question. ..but he was voted down, 10 to one. The American ambassador, Henry Cabot Lodge..then proposed that Secretary General Hammarskjold ascertain all the facts in the Hungarian situation and report back to the United Nations. The appeal from Nagy, he said, cannot be ignored.

President Eisenhower today offered to send Hungary 20-million dollar's worth of food and medical supplies. The White House announcement referred to this "initial" offer, indicating there is more to come. Most of the food will consist of American farm surpluses.

French Foreign Minister Pineau flew to London today to confer with British leasers. The conference concerned the call...by the United Nations General Assembly..for tn immediate cease-fire. In the House of commons today, leaders of the Labour Party demanded that Prime Minister Eden tell them whether Britain would comply Eden sa d he would have to be given an opportunity to study the United Nations resolution. The House of Commons then decided to meet tomorrow in emergency session to hear Eden's decision. London sources say the call for a cease-fire probably will be ingored. At the same time, the Conservative government is expected to announce its readiness to turn the policing of the Suez Canal Zone over to the United Nations, once the situation has been "stabilized." Canada already has endorsed such a proposal. Prime Minister Eden is making a special broadcast tomorrow night to the British people.

Now, let's switch by recording to Israel and my colleague Winston Bur-Burdett.

BURDETT: There are unconfirmed reports in Jerusalem and here in Tel Aviv tonight which, whould they prove true, would drastically change the situation in the Israeli war with Egypt. The reports say simply that Syrian troops have crossed the border southward into Jordan. No further explanation is given. It is not said whether this is an invasion of Jordan by her Arab neighbor or the the Syrian troops have moved at the invitation of the Jordanian government. To most observers here it seems unthinkable that Jordan would willingly receive Syrian troops on her territory, knowing that Israel would consider this a war-like provocation that might well involve Jordan herself in an expanding Israel-Arab war.

There are still other reports here, still equally unconfirmed that Iraqui troops have likewise crossed their border westward into Jordan. Iraq and Syria are arch rivals and the reports do not say whether it ias Iraq or Syria who moved first.

These reports may reflect nothing more than Israel's anxiety to keep the present war limited to a single front. When one Israeli officer heard the reports tonight he said "This would change everything." Certainly, one inevitable result of any such Arab military moves into Jordan would be the prolongation and extension of the war.

In a recent major policy speech, Prime Minister Ben Gurion said that the massing of the Iraqui troops on the Jordan frontier constituted a major change in the status quo. He specifically reserved Israel's complete freedom of action in meeting the change. During the past few days, Israel has made it repeatedly clear that she is doing everything the can to avoid a two- front war.

She has proclaimed her peaceful intentions toward her Arab neighbors to the east and north. Arab-language broadcasts from the Israeli government station have reiterated this point . But the presence of Syrian or Iraqui troops in Jordan would create a new and dangerous situation. Anxiety is further heightened here tonight by reports that Syria intends to honor immediately her mutual defense pact with Egypt. All these disturbing reports have come at the very climax of Israel's victorious fight against Egypt. The Israelis say tonight that practically the whole of the Sinai Peninsula and the whole of the Gaza Strip are in their hands, and that Egypt no longer has any effective forces in the field to the east of Suez. For this very reason some observers here find it hard to believe that Syria would take this moment to attack.

And now back to Edward R. Murrow in New York.

MURROW: The United Press quotes Arab sources in Washington tonight as saying that Jordan and Syria have decided to declare war, and will send their troops into action soon. This report...so far..is unconfirmed.

The United States today prohibited American arms shipments to Israel. The ban also applies to Egypt. The State Department took the action "in pursuance of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly calling on member nations to refrain from introducing military goods in the area of hostilities." The development of new economic aid programs for Egypt and Israel has also been blocked by our government; so has the development of new aid programs for Syria and Jordan.

In Warsaw today, the Communist leadership issued a manifesto warning the Polish people not to stage anti-Russian demonstrations, or call for the withdrawal of Soviet troops. The warning came from the central committee of the Polish Communist Party. "Reactionary elements," it said, "are again raising their voices against the Polish Soviet alliance and against the presence of Soviet forces." The central committee said these demonstrations constitute "a grave danger." Poland, it said, whould not have the same kind of chaos as Hungary.

In East Germany, Premier Grotewohl also pointed to the "chaos" in Hungary and said the Russians have 22 divisions in East Germany "to protect the democratic work of our people."

Adlai Stevenson suggested today that Soviet forces may have been "emboldened to re-enter Hungary, due to what he called the "breakdown" of the Western alliance. Stevenson said..in a Cleveland speech.."The Communists have always been quick to exploit disunity in the free world."

Tonight, Vice President Nixon is making a nationwide speech...in reply to Stevenson's speech last night, attacking the Administration's foreign policy. Nixon told a Republican rally in Hershey, Pennsylvania today that Mr Eisenhower is "the best man in America" to lead the country in a time of international crisis.

It is only a slight over-simplification to say that what has happened in the last few days went something like this: Israel, Britain and France "reappraised", with what agony we do not know, American leadership of the free world. They decided it was not good enough, did not serve their national self-interests; so they decided to use force. President Eisenhower decided to let them stew in their own juice.

The difference in attitude about the Suez Canal can be easily summarized. For us, it is a convenience; for the British and French it is a condition of economic and national survival.

The primary intention of Russian policy for ten years has been to split the Western alliance; and now for the time being at least, it has at least been split without any substantial help from the Russians.

Our policy in the Middle East has been bewildering. We justified the contradictions by saying we were trying to preserve the peace. We did than any other nation to persuade the British to get out of Suez. That meant abandonment of a position of power. We refused to sell arms to Egypt. The Egyptians told us they would buy them from Russia. We apparently thought the Egyptians were bluffing, but they wern't . The deal was made, and Russia for the first time had a firm foothold in the Middle East.

The Israelis wanted to buy defensive arms to offset the threat of the Communist weapons bought by Egypt. We delayed and discussed. We encouraged the French, the Canadians and the British to sell a few obsolete aircraft and weapons to Israel. Either it was right or it was wrong- either it was in our national self- interest or it wasn't, to see to it that Israel was not driven to desperation by the lack of defensive weapons. We did not make up our mind, but rather tried to arrange for Israel to get a few weapons under the counter.

We tried to bribe the Egyptians not to join the Soviet camp, by promising to help build the Aswan Dam. Presumably we had figured the odds as to whether Nasser could carry out his end of the deal. Then we abruptly withdrew the offer. Both the offer and the withdrawal were political.

Nasser's answer was to seize the Suez Canal. Nasser's stature increased in the Arab World. We rejected the use of force, and insisted that the British and French renounce it too. That meant that in the negotiations that followed Nasser knew that force would not be used -- that he was safe in rejecting any attempt to restore international control of the Canal.

Mr. Dulles created the User's Association, which is already forgotten. The matter came to the Security Council -- we voted with the British and French for international control; but the Russians vetoed it. It was stalemate. We had gained no friends in the Middle East and had lost the firends we already had.

Now a word about what the British and French intend. They have announced that they want only a temporary occupation of the Canal Zone. Sir Anthony Eden stressed the word "temporary" in his statement in Parliament. They do not want to go all the way back to the time of permanent occupation. They want international control, as advocated in the resolution the Soviet Union vetoed in the Council. They want international control, as advocated in the resolution the Soviet Union vetoed in the Council. They want a guarantee that Egypt will not be able to strangle their economies. They failed to get it following our lead. Now they are going their own way. Many Americans consider their methods and devices reprehensible, but we already have agreed to their objectiv..

This is Ed Murrow. I'll be back in a moment with the Word for Today.

BRYAN:

MURROW: The Communist leaders of Poland are anxious ..lest the anti-Communist revolution that swept Hunaary recur in their own land. Well they might be anxious. For as Sir Winston Churchill once remarked, "The soul of Poland is indestrubtible, and she will rise again like a rock which may for a time be submerged by a tidal wave, but which remains a rock."

Goodnight and good luck.

C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK
TUESDAY, NOVEMBER 6, 1956

7:45:--8:00: P.M., E.S.T.

ELECTION NIGHT COVERAGE: EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS TIME SLOT INCLUDED THE FOLLOWING SPOT FROM ISRAEL:

This is Tel Aviv:

This particular phase of this war is over. The Israelis control everything on this side of the canal. They aren't going anywhere else. At least not yet. The end came on a shirt-sleeve day, when people were bathing in the Mediterranean here at 7:00 o'clock this morning. And this afternoon a few Israelis troops were bathing in the Gulf of Aqaba, way down at the end of the Sinai Peninsula. They were mostly farmers and farmers' sons, called up under the reserve. In 48-hours they had started moving, one brigade, about 1800 men, across the desert to the Negev which is no bargain for track vehicles, and then they moved into the Sinai Desert. They had five days' supply of water. They had no armor at all. Just jeeps, four-by-four and six-by-sixes - a few mortars. And the maps didn't tell them very much. That country is the most rugged I have ever seen. There was nothing like it in Korea. It all stands up on edge. There are no roads. They climbed (?) the wadis, and dry beds of streams cut by flash floods. The ...(?) commanding had been a driver for the British 8th Army in the western desert in the late war. He cut the load from a six-by- sixes to two tons per vehicle. They hit sand dunes. And for 40-miles they had to push and pull the trucks by hand. They had one small-fire fight; lost four men killed. At one time a C-47 dropped them some gasoline. They ran short of water. They been a civilian a week before but they had all had their 2½ years of military service.

When they reached the dip of the peninsula, when the Egyptians had 6- inch naval guns covering the entrance to the Gulf of Aqaba, they had to come out of a narrow wadi. The Egyptians were just starting to dig in, trying to put a stopper in the mouth of that narrow valley. The Israelis called for their air; it could operate unopposed because of the British and French destruction of Egyptian airfields. An Israeli pilot flying a Mystere Make Four (?) was hit by flak. He bailed out, started to run. The Egyptians were chasing him. Other Israeli fighters drove them off. And then a Pipe Cub came in and picked him up just (indistinct) . And this afternoon, a brigade was formed on three sides of a hollow square. It was dusty and the flies were busy. On the fourth side of the square, stood a weapons' carrier, a nine-foot bamboo pole lashed to the bumper. The blue-and-white Israeli flag was broken from that little pole. Moshe Dayan, Israel's Chief of Staff, made a little speech, standing on some ammunition boxes. He read a letter from Prime Minister Ben Gurion, giving the Israeli casualty figures: 150 killed, 700 wounded, and 20 taken prisoner by the Egyptians.

Down there at the tip of the Sinai Penninsula, there were no cheers, no demonstrations. The Israelis had been killed in this fastastic operation. There were about 700 Egyptian prisoners behind barbed wire and more coming in; those who had ' . . taken to the hills and came in when they were cold and thirsty

That Israeli formation had traversed a out 300 miles of desert. They were equipped with Bren guns, Sten guns, Italian Machine guns, carbines, 45's. Some of them had tin helmets; some didn't. Some had stout leather boots; some wore sandals. Some were driving captured Egyptian vehicles, which are a lighter brown than the Israelis'. Someone from the quartermasterCorps suggested that it would save tanks and money to paint all the Israeli vhhicles the same color as the Egyptians'. There were no overt signs of emotion down there at the rim of the Peninsula today. The Gulf of Aqaba is now open to Israeli shipping. The 6-inch naval guns which controlled the entrance are silent. The farmers and their sons did it, a reserve outfit.

Men are not supposed to serve in the Reserve here in Israel after the age of 45. But there were a lot of gray beards among those tired, dirty and unshaven men today. It was l little action. When I ventured to congratulate one of the officers on his small casualty list, he said "That will be small comfort for the mothers and fathers of those who were killed, both in Egypt and Israel."

We went down to film some of the Egyptian prisoners. An Israeli guard at the check point said "American tourists, already?" Those Israelis to whom I have talked today feel they have passed an examination. They thought their mobilization system was good. Now they know it is. It worked.

As for the future, they all say they just don't know. They have other frontiers that threaten. They are confident, but not cocky. Or at least so it seems to me. They don't pretend to know what the great powers will do. Out here the United Nations and the American elections seemed very far away indeed. The Israelis believe they have demonstrated to the Egyptians that murder does not pay. They have picked up a very considerable number of usable tanks and military stores.

It was a quick victory. Israeli causalties were almost unbelievably small. Most of the Israelis I have talked with today are inclined to think the other Arab states will not move, unless policy(?) probably stimulated and aided by Russia. But they have a victory. And they're not inclined to question the cause or the origins or the conflict. And are prepared to wait for the next move. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 7, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING:

Good Evening:

For President Eisenhower, the day after re-election was a day devoted largely to dealing with world problems. One of his first actions was to summon congressional leaders..of both parties..to a meeting at the White House on Friday. News Secretary Hagerty said the President would review, with them, the serious international situation. At the present time, he said, Mr. Eisenhower has no plans to call a special session of Congress. For the next two years, of course, the President will be dealing with a Democratic Congress. That became certain this afternoon when Democratic Senator Alan Bible, of Nevada, won re-election over Republican Representative Clifton Young. The victory gave Democrats their 49th seat and a clear majority in the Senate. However Ohio's newly elected Democratic Senator Frank Laushhe said some time ago that under certain conditions circumstances he might voted with the Republican to organize the Senate. He hasn't said anything since election. They already had won a clear majority in the House. (Incidentally, only one Senate race remains in doubt---that in Kentucky between Democratic Senator Earle Clements and Thurston Morton. Late returns give Morton a small, inconclusive lead.

Tonight, President Eisenhower sent Prime Minister Ben Gurion of Israel an uegent appeal to pull Israeli troopsout of Egypt. A brief White House statement siad the President urged Ben Gurion "to act pursuant to the resulution of the General Assembly of the United Nations with respect to the prompt withdrawal of Israeli forces from Egyptian territory."

Ben Gurion made a major policy speech today before the Israeli parliament and indicated that Israel intends to hold onto much, if not all, of the territory seized by Israeli forces last week. (We'll have a direct report on that from Tel Aviv in a few minutes.)

Here in New York today, United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold told the General Assembly that Israel must withdraw its forces from Egypt, or face United Nations action. If, he said, Israel refuses to comply with the General Assembly resolution..requiring the withdrawal..it would then be his duty to bring the matter before the world organization "for such action as its members would decide upon." The General Assembly voted tonight to create on international police force for immidiate use in the Middle East.

Egypt told the General Assembly today that the international police force.. proposed for the battle area..is impracticable until British, French and Israeli forces get out of Egypt first.

Hammarskjol said negotiations with British, French and Egyptian authorities to arrange for the stationing of such a force in the Middle East are underway. Two Russian satellite countries...Roumania and Czechoslovakia.. offered today to contribute troops, making 12 nations that have offered to participate so far.

Today...in the British House of Commons..Prime Minister Eden refused to say whether British troops would leave Egypt , if the U.N. refuses to grant them participation in the police force.

The Egyptian government insists that "heavy fighting" is in progress in Port Said..and it denies that Anglo-French forces have captured the city of Ismalia , situated on the Suez Canal about 50 miles south of Port Said. The capture of Ismalia was climed last night by a French defense ministry spokesman in Paris. Indications are that the report may have been premature. It appears certain that French and British troops have advanced at least 30 miles southward along the Canal.

The Cairo radio claimed tonight that British oil reservoirs have been blown up in Libya. There is no confirmation of this report.

Russian troops are still meeting resistance in Hungary, four days after the Red Army launched its all-out drive to put down the rebellion by brute force. Reports reaching Vienna say the Russians conducted their heaviest shelling of Budapest last night and that civilian casualties were "very heavy" One revel strongpoint...still holding out..is reported to be the Killian barracks, which survived continuous Communist attack two weeks ago. The barracks is now described as " a virtual rubble.", defended by women, as well as men.

In Paris today, a mob...singing the "Marsellaise."...stormed the Communist Party headquarters and set it on fire. The crowd, which had been demonstrating at the Arch of Triumph against Soviet oppression in Hungary, suddenly swept toward the part headquarters, broke through a barrier of steel-helmeted police and began running through the buildin in a scene reminiscent of the French Revolution, smashing everything in sight. Finally they set the wrecked furniture and scattered papers on fire. The firemen of Paris, it was noted, seemed in no hurry to put out the flames and the damage was considerable.

Moscow celebrated the anniversary of the Bolshevik revolution today with a military parade in Red Square. Western obserbers say no new weapons were displayed, and bad weather prevented participation by the Red Air Force. The Kremlin held a reception tonight..in honor of the anniversary...but CBS News Correspondent Daniel Schorr reports that it was boycotted b many diplomats in protest against Russia's intervention in Hungary.

We have another report tonight from Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv...also a report from Winston Burdett on hat speech Prime Minister Ben Gurion made today before the Israeli parliament. So ...for both those stories, we switch by recording now to Tel Aviv.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. Reporting from Israel these days means trying to say what you see. The big world is a big picture far away. In the course of this day's travels, no one asked about the Presidential election at home. Only the immediate is important over here. This morning, at a kibutz, a colleceive farm, right on the edge of what used to be the Gaza Strip, a youngster named Ori (?) was a little dazed by what had happened. It would no longer be necessary to man the watch towers every night. They could pull up the barbed wire and cultivate the perimeter around the buildings. They could become farmers and not part-time soldiers. And he said "It is so quiet". His cows, he said, hand't minded the shelling last week - but the people had. He looked across at the hill in front of the Gaza -- Allenby had lost 10,000 British and Australian troops on that ridge in the first world war. Ori thought he would like to go to Gaza with us. So he did. Crossing the fert le little valley, there was no trouble. A couple of trucks blown up by a land mine. And the Israelis took the town last Friday. It is intact. I havenever seen a city taken in war where there was so little damage. A few pock marks on walls from small arms fire, a few windows knocked out. A little bombing around the railway station. That was all. And at the railway station the reason for this cheap victory was apparent. The trucks were coming in with captured Egyptian equipment, rifles, machine guns, boxes of ammunition, land mines, mortars, a couple of British six- pounders. None of the guns I saw had been damaged or destroyed. The Egyptians had just run away. There were helmets and shows, blankets and hand grenades, rifles and rations, jeeps with Egyptian markings on them. We saw a blood-red Oldsmobile, with Egyptian plates, driven by young smiling Israelis. Then came a Russian truck towed by an American jeep. The booty was being unloaded by prisoners. Most of them had no shoes. They were glum and sullen, as prisoners always are. Not one wore even the remnants of a military uniform. Were they Egyptian officers in disguise or commando raiders? No one knew.

Interrogation had not been completed. Meanwhile they worked. Were fed with Egyptian army rations captured by the Israelis.

We want to see the military governor of Gaza. He said his main job was the old one of any military governor, to restore order, medical facilities and work with the local authoritie.. Some of the local police, who had been there under the Egyptians, are back on the job, in a uniform. There is a curfew which comes down at 4:00 o'clock in the evening. About dusk the trucks start coming into town, loaded with Arabs. They're searched, provided with Egyptian army field rations, and the interrogation begins. It isn't comfortable for them. No one likes to stand with his hands over his head. But I saw no brutality, no one prodded with a bayonet, or clubbed on with a rifle butt. So far, about 2,000 Arabs have been brought into Gaza, most of them of military age. A few had been found to have small arms on their persons. They'll be held for further questioning.

So far as I could observe today in Gaza, the Israeli are determined to do what they can to a void the outward signs of old fashioned imperialism. And then this afternoon, the Israelis did something which is difficult to understand. They literally beat down the doors of the United Nations truce observer's organization and took over the communication system. This means that the UN relief organization, responsible for feeding almost 300,000 Arab refugees from Palestine, now in Gaza, is without communication with the outside world. The director of UNRAA told me this afternoon that there is enough foon on hand for another onth. But he couldn't see why the Israeli forces had cut his communication wink with the outside world. Now, here is Winston Burdett, who can tell you more of what Israel proposed to do about the rest of the world.

BURDETT: Prime Minister Ben Gurion made his victory speech today before the Israeli Parliament, and gave a very clear indication of Israel's long-term aims. In effect, Ben Gurion answered and rejected the major points of the United Nations General Assembly resolution. He denounced the armistice agreemen with Egypt, said it was dead and buried, and that consequently, the armistice lines between Israel and Egypt are no longer valid. This means that Israel has no intention of pulling her forces back behind those lines as the Assembly c requested. Secondly, Ben Gurion, (indistinct) that Israel intends to hold permanently some of the territory she has conquered. He did not say what territory, but it's certain he means the entire Gaza Strip and presumably a sizeable part of the Sinai Peninsula. Thirdly, Ben Gurion made clear that Israel is unwilling to accept an international police force either on her own territory or on the territory she holds. On no account, he said, will Israel agree to stationing there of a foreign force no matter how it is called. These were his terms, the terms of a victor who is onfident what he's bargaining from strength.

And now back to CBS News in New York.

COLLINGWOOD. I'll be back in a moment with a Footnote to the News. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN.

COLLINGWOOD: The news we have been hearing tonight--of fighting still going on in Hungary, more tension in the Middle East, hardly veiled threats and defiance -- this news is heard in Norway as well as here. Today the Nobel Prize committee announced in Norway that it had found no one worthy of receiving the Nobel Peace Prize this year. This is the second striaght year in which no prize for peace seemed appropriate.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

THURSDAY, NOVEMBER 8, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING:

Good Evening:

Israel announced tonight that it will evacuate its forces from Egypt in compliance with the United Nations resolution calling for the withdrawal from Egyptian territory of all British, French and Israeli troops. The announcement was made...simultaniously..by the Israeli delegation at the United Nation and by the Israeli prime minister, David Ben Grrion, while speaking before the Israeli Parliament. Edward R. Murrow who is in Tel Aviv, heard the Ben Gurion speech. U.N. Secretary General Hammarskjold said "We have arrived at a point where a new phase should begin. Here are Ed Murrow's impressions as he recorded them an hour ago.

MURROW: I understand no Hebrew, but I listened carefully to Ben Gurion's speech tonight -- it is a voice that I know well. He was a man who was obviously, tired, weary, depressed and infinitely sad. And as I listened to him, I watched the faces of Israelis who were listening to his speech, and suddenly it occurred to me that I had seen faces like that before -- some Czechoslovakian friends of mine at the time of Munich. The world may be somewhat relieved at what has happened here, but the Israelis will suffer two hammer blows tomorrow morning. One, the announcement of the withdrawal and, two, the information that the United States does not choose to contribute to the United Nations police force. One thing is now clear, and that is that unless the United Nations does in fact develop an effective police force then the Middle East will come increasingly under the domination of the Soviet Union.

Prime Minister Ben Gurion sent a letter to President Eisenhower on the Israeli decision. The President, you remember, had appealed to Israel to withdraw her troops. In his message to the President, Ben Gurion says, "We have never planned to annex the Sinai Desert. In view of the United Nations resolutions regarding the withdrawal of foreign troops from Egypt, we will-- upon conclusion of satisfactory arrangements with the United Nations in connection with this international force entering the Suez Canal area -- willingly withdraw our forces. The Israeli prime ninister goes on to say, "We must repeat our urgent request to the United Nations to call upon Egypt (which has consistently maintained that it is in a state of war with Israel) to renounce this position, to abandon its policy of boycott and blockade, to cease the incursions into Israeli territory of murder gangs, and to enter into direct peace negotiations with Israel." White House News Secretary Hagerty says Mr. Eisenhower will send a reply to the Israeli prime minister, expressing his appreciation for what has been done.

The United Nations truce supervisor..General Burns..arrived in Cairo today to set up arrangements for stationing the U.N. police force on Egyptian territory. Burns talked with Presedent Nasser and other high officials of the Egyptian government and told reporters that Egypt had agreed to let a group of 10 United Nations cease-fire observers set up a headquarters in Egypt. Burns said he expected these observers, who will serve as the vanguard of the United Nations police force, to arrive in Egypt within the next 48 hours. Some of them, he said, will be stationed in Port Said, which British and French troops captured on Monday. Burns, incidentally, arrived in Egypt early this morning aboard the first overseas flight to land at Cairo Airport in 10 days. The Associated Press reports that Port Said was quiet today for the first time since it was captured.

British Foreign Secretary Selwyn Lloyd is reported to have told conservative members of parliament that Britain is now willing to withdraw her forces from Egypt when the U.N. police force takes over. However, until then, Prime Minister Eden reiterated tonight, Britain and France "must go on with the job." British colonial secretary..Lennox-Boyd has hinted that Great Britain had a secret reason for intervening in Egypt. "When the whole story unfolds," he said, "there will be widespread recognition that the United Kingdom, as the center of the Commonwealth, was right to take the action it did. " But another member of the conservative Government resigned today in disagreement with the British action. He was Sir Edward Boyle, economic secretary to the Treasury. Minister of State Anthony Nutting resigned for the same reason on Saturday.

Tonight, the House of Commons gave the Conservative Government another vote of confidence. Prime Minister Eden won the test by a margin of 58 votes.

There is a rather alarming report tonight from Paris. Dispatches from there are quoting the French foreign minister..Christian Pineau..as saying that Russia has sent "an important formation of military aircraft into Syria. These planes are identified as Mig-17 jet fighters.

Soviet Premier Bulganin has sent a message to President Eisenhower, rejecting Mr. Eisenhower's proposal that Russian troops get out of Hungary. Bulganin said..bluntly..that the question of Soviet troop withdrawals is solely a matter between Russia and Hungary.

Tonight, President Eisenhower ordered the cutting of "red tape", so that 5-thousand Hungarian refugees may be admitted to this country.

In the United Nations today, the General Assembly argued the Hungarian question. And, significantly, Yugoslavia joined the non-Communist countries in demanding the withdrawal of Soviet troops from Hungary. The Yugoslav delegate said, "The Hungarian people are capable of solving their own problem " He did not, however, support the resolution calling for a United Nations investigation of the situation in Hungary. "The less interference from whatever source", he said, "the better it is for the Hungarian people and the people of the world." Yugoslavia steered a middle course in today's General Assembly debate. The delegate from Hungary protested that the situation is none of the Assembly's business. He said he wad "compelled" to make the protest on instructions from Budapest. Denmark promptly challenged his right to represent the Hungarian people, and the question was referred to the Assembly credentials committee. Cuba accused Russia of committing genocide, in what he called the "assassination" of thousands of Hungarians at the hands of Soviet troops. And there is a report tonight that Secretary General Hammarskjol is going ahead with plans for investigating the Hungarian situation.

The Republican Thurston Morton, appears to have won that close senatorial race in Kentucky. Latest returns show Morton leading Democratic Senator Earle Clements by 4 - thousand , 500 votes. His apparent victory (less than a hundred precincts have still to report) means the Republicansn now have 47 seats in the new Senate and the Democrats 49 seats. Democratic GovernorLausche of Ohio, who won election to the Senate, indicated some time ago that he might vote with the Republicans in organizing the Senate --he's quite an independent. That would mean a tie, with Vice President Nixon casting the deciding vote in favor of the Repuclicans. It would, in other words, give the Republicans control of the Senate. But now this appears highly unlikely. Lausche indicated today that he will stay on the job as governor of Ohio until his term expires. that won't be until January 14th. And, by that time, the organization of the Senate will have been completed. Barring unexpected developments, the Democrats will be in control.

A Navy balloon, manned by two scientists set an altitude record today of 76-thousand feet. And then, more than 14 miles above the earth's surface, something went wrong and the balloon spun out of control. It began plummeting to earth. The two Navy scientists worked desperately to restore control, without success. Finally, at the last possible moment, they cut their pressurized gondola free from the big plastic bag and floated down in the gondola by means of a huge parachute. Neither of them was hurt. They had made the ascent from Rapid City, South Dakota. And they came down on a Nebraska farm, 140 miles from where they started.

In North Bergen, New Jersey, a twin-engind plane crashed into an unused television tower, killing seven persons, including the pilot and co-pilot. After striking the 810-foot tower, the aircraft plunged into a five-story apartment house, shearing off the two top floors and setting it on fire. The plane as flying in heavy fog.

Earlier today...before the Ben Gurion announcement..Ed Murrow reco another report for us from Tel Aviv, and here is that report now.

MURROW: As viewed from this samll peace of real estate, about the size of New Jersey, the rest of the world is pretty confused and divided. Here there is uncertainty about the future, but victory is a strong cement. And there is no division or victory near this little country. The Western Alliance had been dealt a blow which may or may not prove mortal. There is bitterness between Washington on the one hand and London and Paris on the other. Then there is bickering beween London and Paris. The British Commonwealth is divided as neve before. The Russian empire has shown signs of coming apart in Poland and Hungary. Old wounds have opened in both east and west. N tionalism and frustration andhistory have combined to leave the free world divided, leaderless and confused. Contradictions in policy have become commonplace. Resoluteness has been replaced by hesitation and vacillation. The unity of the West may be in some measure restored, for out common objectives outweigh our differences. But it will neve be the same again. The Russians, with terror, torture and sheer weight of men and metal, may be able to hold their satellites in line. But their empire will never be the same.

Add to this fact taat recent events have demonstrated out here, namely, that so-called unity of the Arab world is a myth. Nasser's neighbors did not come to his aid. Add all these events together and you have a world situation which is more fluid and therefore more dangerous than at any time in the past ten years. It is a time for bluffing and maneuver. Also a time for leadership. The hard fact is a stubborn one that must be faced and won't go away, it is that the leadership in Russia, in the West and in the Arab world just has not worked. No one of them has achieved its objective. This means, presumably that all will try again. It may mean a wider realization that this (indistinct) may not long exist without an agreed body of international law, and the means of enforcing it. There are elements of four Arab armies now in Jordan. And last night groups of terrorists were active along the Israeli border. No Israeli casualties. But there are certainly enough Arab groups in that country to ee to it that these provocations cease -- if they wanted them stopped. Apparently, one of Israel's most respected military figures is lost. Colonel E.....(?) , who led the Sinai campaign in the field, took off for (indistinct) in a Piper Cub. Is reported..is unreported and presumed lost. A Jordan communique last night claimed the shooting down of a Cuby by Jordanian anti-aircraft.

The Israeli government tonight released an gyptian military document, which, its says, was captured in a file of the Egyptian general at Gaza. It says - among other things - that every officer must prepare himself and his subordinates for the inevitable war with Israel, "with the object of realizing our noble aim, namely, the annihilation of Israel and her destruction, in the shortest possible time, and in the most brutal and cruel battle." This document is marked "Top Secret", which is rather unusual, inasmuch as Colonel Nasser has said substantially the same thing in public.

Military logic indicates that the Arab States will not attack across the Jordanian frontier. But logic, military or otherwise, seems to in in short supply in vast areas of the world.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: As you know, Fire is one of the newest members of the United Nations and today the first Irish delegation to the General Assembly took off for New York. It is led by Liam Cosgrave, the Irish Minister of External Affairs. He said, "We hope to play a contrucctive role...but not to be a pawn of any of thebig delegation." No one who knows the Irish would think for a moement that they would be the pawn of anyone.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening: A few minutes ago, the United Nations General Assembly passed a a resolution condemning Russia's armed intervention in Hungary. The Soviet intervention in Hungary, it said, is "an intolerable attempt to deny the Hungarian people freedom and independence." The resolution was sponsored by five countries -- Cuba, Ireland, Italy, Pakistan and Peru.

And still the fighting in Hungary continues. For almost 48 hours the rebel radio stations were silent, and then...early today..one of the freedom stations went on the air to report that rebel forces holding out in Budapest had managed, somehow, to shoot down one of Russia's new jet bombers. Budapest Radio itself, under the control of the Communist puppet government, admits fighting is still going on in northwestern and central Hungary. And refugees, reaching Austria, report the blowing up of a uranium mine in Southern Hungary. Radio Budapest now says it will allow Red Cross relief shipments to be made into Hungary, if they come by way of Yugoslavia. Hungarian railway workers are still on strike.

United Nations Secretary General Hammarskjold said today that the vanguard of the U.N. police force...for the Middle East..would fly to a staging area in Italy "probably within 24 hours." These first troops sill be from Colombia, Norway and Denmark. And the Defense Department in Washington says a U.S. Air Force plane will leave tonight for Bogata, to pick up the first contingent of Colombian troops.

The Navy announced today that its largest sea - based jet place -- the XP-6-M had crashed in Delaware on a test flight. Its 4-man crew parachuted to safety. So far as it knows, the huge flying ost called "The Seamaster", was the only one the Navy had. Its sister ship crashed last December.

President Eisenhower and top administration officials briefed Congressional leaders today on that they referred to...afterward..as the "grave" threat to peace. The meeting at the White House lasted two and a half hours. Senate Democratic Leader Lyndon Johnson told reporters, "It's obviously a very serious situation." And speaking for the Democrats, he said: "We will give responsible consideration to any suggestion from the Administration. We will not play politics with the foreign situation." There was no discussion he said, of calling a special session of Congress. Republican Senator Smith of New Jersey told reporters, "We had a complete briefing of the world situation in Hungary and the Middle East." He said, "The whole gathering left me with a feeling of confidence."

White House News Secretary Hagerty commented today on reports that British Prime Minister Eden and French Premier Mollet may soon come to Washington for three-power talks. Hagerty said there are no plans "at present" for such a conference, although the possibility has been discussed.

The United States, he said, has received the Swiss proposal for a new "summit" conference to discuss the worsening international situation. Hagerty said that, so far, neither President Eisenhower nor the State Department has made a reply.

In London tonight...at the annual Lord Mayor's banquet..Prime Minister Eden praised the Swiss proposal as both "generous and helpful." "Clearly", he said, "my response to this must depend on others beside myself. But for my part, I am prepared to go anywhere to meet anybody, to help in a situation of such danger to Europe and the Middle East." The French government told Switzerland today that a new summit conference might be difficult to organize, due to what it called the present "instability" in the world situation.

Secretary of the Air Force Quarles said today..in a New York speech...that without "in any degree" condoning the actions of Great Britain, France and Israel, it should nevertheless be borne in mind that vital interests were involved...and that there had, indeed, been provocations.

President Nasser made a speech of explanation today to the Egyptian people. It is not true, he said, that the Egyptian air force has been destroyed. He said "dummy" planes were set out on the Egyptian airstrips and it was those wooden dummies, and not real planes, that were bombed and strafed by the British and French. Nasser claimed that three Arab countries--Jordan, Syria and Saudi Arabia -- offered to send military aid to Egypt, but that he had declined because he didn't want to see them become involved in the fighting. He said the main force of the Egyptian Army was moving to deal Israel " a death blow", just when Britain and France struck. Russia and the United States, he said, are "with" Egypt when Egypt defends itself. And Egypt, Nasser said, will not allow the Suez Canal to be cleared, as Britain has said it plans to do, "as long as there is a single foreign soldier on Egyptian soil." Altogether, the speech lasted two hours.

Iraq announced today that it is breaking off diplomatic relations wth France..and that it will no longer meet with Britain in the five nation Baghdad Pact. The Iraqui government charged Britain with aggression.

Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel, and tonight he has recorded his analysis of what caused Israel, suddenly, to agree to withdraw its forces from the Sinai Penninsula..a move that constituted a complete reversal of policy. We switch now, for that report, to Tel Aviv.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. Bulganin threatened us with extermination, and Eisenhower threatened us with the cutting off of aid. That's the way one israeli described the events of last night - and if you strip both letters of its superfluous words, that's about what it comes down to. Bulganin's letter was one of the most cynical propaganda documents ever (indistinct) from the hand of the butcher of Budapest, and of an entire nation. Mr. Eisenhower recalled our past support to Israel in so many ways, and he asked Ben Gurion to make his decision in this contex . The people of Tel Aviv appear to this reporter to have taken the decision to pull back with calm resignation but with no illusions. A few have remarked that "we appear more concerned about the fate of an Egyprian dictator than with the fate of patriots being slaughtered in Hungary." Mr. Eisenhower spoke of new energetic steps to solve the problems of the Middle East. Certainly, they will have to be both new and energetic if they're to have a chance of succeeding.

A few hard facts should be faced about this situation out here. All the urgent meetings, all the communications, have dealt only with Egypt. There is quiet on that frontier. But there is continuing small activity on the Jordanian frontier. And the Israelis may be expected to punish those incursions in due course. There are elements of four Arab armies in that country. There is no peace in the Middle East. Merely a cease-fire between Egypt and Israel The Egyptian dictator has been saved, mainly through Russian and American intervention. You man be sure the Russians in their propaganda will take full credit for that, claiming that they were responsible for saving him from the combined weight of British, French and Israeli aggression. So the end could be that Eden would be ousted while Nasser stays. Nothing has happened to change Nasser's mind about the need to expunge Israel from the map. He has suffered a humiliating defeat, worse than in 1948, plus new and better Russian arms will probably only increase his determination and fanaticism.

The Russians are now in the Middle East. That is probably, in the long run, the most substantial victory they have won since the end of the war. Suddenly more important than the taking of Czechoslovakia - because that caused the Western world to unite. Now, the West is divided, and not likely to reunite on this issue. The methods in the two cases were rather alike. They didn't move the Red Army into Czeshoslovakia, they didn't need to. It was poised on the border. In this case, the Russian bombers were just over the border, and Israeli officials thought they would be used if Israel failed to agree. Had they bombed, the Arab world would have cheered, and much of the free world would have thought they were only bombing an aggressor. The Russians now have equipment and technicians not only in Egypt but in the neighboring Arab states as well. No real solution or agreement in this area is possible without their consent. Certainly, none is possible throug the United Nations unless the Russians agree. And their practice, in such situations, is to prevent agreement, to prolong the confusion, to further divide the Western alliance. This is a cheap victory they have won out here. They can, and probably will, replace the military gear Nasser lost in the Siaai, and as a result of the Anglo-French bombings. Maybe it will all end up at this: there is no solution in the Middle East unless there is a solution to the power struggle between the United States and the Soviet Union.

The confusion and the conflict in the Middle East has not been ended. It hasn't even been stopped temporarily, except between Egypt and Israel. It will go on and on. There will be moves and counter-moves. We may argue whether Israel was sufficiently provoked to undertaken this action, whether Britain and France were not the greater aggressors and with less reason. We might even agree that America can't buy her way out of tough decisions. But if we try to buy Arabs and Israelis equally we end up back of where we started. But it is important to recognize that the Russians are here - in strength ; that American prestige in Israel and in the Arab world has diminished; that the Western alliance has been dangerously weakened and Russian influence increased .

For the past two years, clearly (indistinct) reporters out here, and in Washington, have not been able to discover just what American policy in the Middle East is. Some American officials out here have confessed that they didn't know either. Unless the new and energetic steps of which President Eisenhower spoke are promptly applies, then Western influence in this area is finished and Russia will have won a victory of great magnitude. This area out here is generally called the Middle East. It ought to be called the middle ground, where two forces, freedom and dictatorship , or if you prefer - good and evil are contending. And the outcome of this struggle will determine how men live in Texas as well as Tel Aviv. This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: We'll be hearing from Mr. Murrow from Israel next week. This is Charles Collingwood. I'll be back in a moment with the footnote to the news. Now, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: The conflict in the Middle East is already having its effects on European oil supplies, so much of which moves through the Suez Canal. For instance, France begins gasoline restrictions tomorrow night. And you can imagine the complications over who is to be allowed to drive freely and who is not. Everyone is limited to a certain range of travel elxcep certain professions like doctors, journalists and, you wouldn't think of this, nomadic gypsies in France.

This is Charles Collingwood. See you Monday.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
C.B.S. RADIO NETWORK

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 12, 1956
7:45--8:00 P.M., E.S.T.

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

Good Evening:

The Cairo radio announced tonight that agreement for entry of a United Nations police force into Egypt had been reached "on all points.". Then it proceeded to list the conditions it said are tacked onto that agreement. And the conditions are formidable. According to the Cairo announcement, the in- [illegible] police force will have no duties in Port Said..or anywhere else in the Suez Canal.Zone..after the withdrawal of the British and French troops. The work of the international force will be confined to the demarcation line between Israel and Egypt as established by the 1949 armistice.

Here are other contitions Egypt says she is imposing. Egypt's consent is necessary for the participation of each country in the international police force and the entry of that force into Egypt. Egypt's consent is necessary to determine the place where the international force is to be stationed. And, finally at any time that the Egyptian Government withdraws its agreement, the international police force will withdraw immediately. As we said, quite a list of conditions.

The Israeli government announced today that it "adheres" to its decision to withdraw its force from Egypt "upon conclusion of satisfactory arrangements with the United Nations in connection with the international forces as we stated last week." The announcement did not specify whether the withdrawal of Israeli troops would apply to the Gaza Strip. (Edward R. Murrow is still in Israel, and we will have another first-hand report from hin in a few minutes.

The secretary general of the United Nations...Dag Hammarskjold..announced earlier today that Egypt had agreed to allow the entry of a United Nations police force. But he made no mention of conditions. Hammarskjold said he will leave New York tomorrow afternoon to help coordinate the operation--in his words, "to see that there are no unnecessary loose ends." The first group of about 200 men from Denmark, Norway and Colombia will take off from their staging area in Italy by noon tomorrow, Italian time.

Hammarskjold expects to reach Cairo Thursday morning and return to New York on Sunday. He said that on the way back he might stop in Hungary--if United Nations observers were admitted into the country by that time. Well, tonight the puppet government of Hungary informed Hammarskjold that it would refuse to admit these observers, including, apparently, Hammarskjold.

The United Nations General Assembly took no action on either the Hungarian or Middle East questions, as it convened today for its regular annual session. Most of the action was routine...of an organizational character... but the newly elected assembly president , Prince Wan of Thailand, took note of the critical world situation in his inaugural speech when he appealed to the delegates to work in a spirit of renewed dedication to the cause of peace. The importance of the occasion was also evident in the presence of 40 foreign ministers.

Reports coming out of Budapest say that a delegation of Soviet leaders--headed by no less a personage than Party Boss Khruschcev--have arrived at the Hungarian capital to take a hand in trying to end that bloody revolt. The word is that these Russian dignitaries are trying to persuade ex-Premier Nagy to join the puppet government, in the hope of gaining popular support. Nagy himself is reported to have taken refuge in the Yugoslav Embassy.

The Soviet newspaper Pravda insisted today that the Russian people favor the sending of "volunteers" to help Egypt, if British, French and Isreeli troops delay their departure from Egyptian soil. "The Soviet people, said Pravda, "realize where the extension of a military conflict in Egypt might lead, if a rebuff is not given to the aggresors."

The Egyptian ambassador in Moscow claimed today that more than 50-thousand Russiand reservists have volunteered to fight on Egypt's side. He said their applications had been forwarded to Cairo.

A Moscow broadcast called on workers in Arab countries to deny oil to the Egyptian "aggressors"--even, it said, "if this should mean blowing up oil installations." The broadcast also urged the blowing up of foreign bases in the Arab countries, "so that they cannot be used as bases of attack against Egypt."

The heads of five Arab states gathered today in Beirut, the capital of Lebanon, to discuss the Middle East crisis. Besides the president of Lebanon, the talks are attended by the president of Syria and the kings of Saudi Arabia, Jordan and Iraq. According to informed sources, these countries are worried -- not only by the attacks on Egypt--but also by Russia's growing influence in the Middle East. President Nasser is not attending. He will be represented by his ambassador.

The prime ministers of India, Burma, Ceylon and Indonesia discussed both the Egyptian and Hungarian situations today in New Delhi. An Indian Government spokesman says the talks may run through Wednesday.

Informed sources in Washington say that Prime Minister Nehru may make his delayed visit to this country sometime next month. The main purpose of such a visit would be to confer with President Eisenhower.

A note from President Eisenhower was delivered in Paris today to Premier Mollet. CBS News Correspondent David Schoenbrun cables me that..in his note.. President Eisenhower agreed to a top-level meeting with Mollet and British Prime Minister Eden, but that Mr. Eisenhower believes the meeting should not be called "in haste." A similar note is reported to have gone to Eden.

According to Washington sources, the President feels the United Nations General Assembly should be allowd further opportunity to act.

The Senate Foreign Relations Committee was briefed on the situation today by Acting Secretary of State Hoover and other Administration leaders.

The committee briefing lasted four hours. Chairman George said afterward, "I'm encouraged that the problem, although difficult, is one that can be worked out -- and will be worked out." Democratic Senator Fulbright said, "We still have no affirmative policy, no signs of any new ideas."

The White House announced today that General Gruenther, the retiring NATO commander, has been named president of the American Red Cross. The appointment is effective January first.

Postmaster General Summerfield underwent a successful throat operation today in Ann Arbor Michigan. The Post Office Department said the operation was successful -- "no malignancy was found." Mr. Summerfield is the third member of the cabinet to undergo major surgery in recent weeks. The other two, of course, are Secretary of Defense Wilson and Secretary of State Dulles. Mr. Wilson already is back on the job.

And now here is that report we promised you from Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv. He recorded it this evening, on returning from a trip to the Jordanian and Syrian frontiers.

MURROW: This is Tel Aviv. This might be called notes from a week-end of wanderings through Israel. I can report that Armageddon was quiet on Armistice Day. The small brown birds still fly in formation. There is a hotelman here near the Sea of Galilee, who wants me to tell you that Isreel remains a fine place for a winter holiday. He is right, (indistinct) to have been told. Just across the lake there is a collective farm, a kibbutz. For most of the past two weeks, the children there have been sleeping in the air raid shelters. They don't mind it as much as the adults. It's something of an adventure.

There is bougainvillia growing around the entrance to the air raid shelters. The kids get their exercise jumping over trenches and crawling under the barbed wire. The shepherds tend their flocks with rifles on their shoulders. The place is just about a mile from the Syrian border.

There is no fishing on the Sea of Galilee right now; the men are standing watch.

Up north, about fifteen miles, just below the Lake of Ulah.(?) the Syrian and Israeli lines are about 300-yards apart. Barbed wire, mines, field telephones, trenches, pill boxes, all the gear and paraphenalia of war, except the shooting. And occasionally at night, there's a little bit of that.

A day old newspaper says a spokesman of our Defense Department says violence on the Syrian-Jordanian border may erupt at any time. He's quite right. At night, you can hear the Syrian horses (indistinct) and horses' hoovs on the road to Damascus. It's a quiet front (indistinct) before the armistice. The Israelis say they are not going to start anything up there. And they are exceedingly careful not to do anything that might draw fire. There may be peace on the fronti r with Egypt. But the silence is very uneasy up north. A fighter pilot tells you the Mystere.. did very well against the MIG's, at low altitude. He tells you, too, that the original plan for disrupting telephone lines, in the Sinai, didn't work. They were going to trail wires and hooks behind the aircraft and pull the wires down. But it didn't work. So they flew old P-51's, right down on the desert, and shoot up the lines with the propellers. He said it was (indistinct) - they didn't lose a plane. And the Egyptians lost their telephone lines.

There was also time on this wandering week-end to (?) something of a big picture. All of it, of course, from the Israeli point of view. Here is a summary of the way it was: There will be no peace with Egypt so long as that country is ruled by a dictator, who is under the complete domination of a foreign power, which means Russia. Israel has made no decision about pulling out of the Gaza Strip, or about staying. In other words, it remains a bargaining point. Meanwhile, most of the Egyptian war material captured there has been rushed bask to Israel.

What is the most important thing to be done right now? The answer given here is, - the reareation of some unity within the free world. For Israel feels herself a part of that world, realized that the Russians have won a great victory in the Middle East, and appreciates that the free world is now divided and that time for the creation for a new joint policy is desperately short.

The Israelis have won small military victories. They do not overrate its importance. It has eased the pressure on one flank. They are determined not to be provoked into attacking elsewhere. For they suspect that the Russians are merely waiting for such an excuse to intervene. At the same time, they're appalled at the victory Russia has won in this area. They do not believe that this is the end of the road. They believe that Russia will now exploit Western differences, and try to create a pretext, after a reasonable interval, for supporting and directing an attack against Israel.

This Israeli Army, like most armies, wants to go home. But it doesn't think it's going to soon. Israeli leaders do not think they have control of the situation. They believe that America might determine the outcome. And (indistinct) reported that civilian and military leaders here to not think that we will do it.

This is Ed Murrow in Tel Aviv.

COLLINGWOOD: Mr. Murrow will remain in Israel for several days more and will continue his reports. I'll be back in a moment with a footnote to the news. But first, here is George Bryan.

BRYAN:

COLLINGWOOD: In celebrating veterans day the thoughts of many have turned to the precarious international situation. In an address today Chief Justice Earl Warrem dwelt on the world cirsis and drew from it the lesson that we must be alert to intolerance and cruelty wherever it arises, at home, as well as abroad, "in our states, in our cities, in our neighborhoods." "Unless we keep such acts of intolerance in our minds eye", he said, "freedom can be endangered."

This is Charles Collingwood. See you tomorrow.

SEE FOLDER #3-C-28, SPECIAL PEOPLE - MOISH PEARLMAN

"The Murrow Invasion - and Capture - of Israel" by

Moish Pearlman

Columbia Broadcasting System, Inc.

F. 883C

To Jesse Zousmer

From John Aaron

Station

OFFICE COMMUNICATION

I've been giving a lot of thought to "Word For Today". And my own feeling is that it's going to be a tough gimmick to sustain over any period of time.

As you know, Reference Library had two people working on quotes for nearly ten days. And they came up with virtually nothing that can be used. I've been going through all the books I can get my hands on and we're just about able to make it each night.

For one thing, most of the good quotes are short. And if you back them up with five or six lines of incidental stuff, the quote looks that much shorter my comparison.

The longer quotes I've discovered are all pretty heavy and the tendency lately seems to be to aim toward lighter stuff.

If we're going to continue to use these quotes, I have a couple of suggestions. I think they'd be improved if: (1) We keep them short - a line or two - so they have a punch (2) eliminate the date and author which I think only tends to distract from the thought of the quote and drag it down (3) aim for quotes not so much as they pertain to the news of the day, but more along the lines of "a thought for today." This would give us greater choice and more variety because when you stop and think about it, with rare exceptions, the news events are either more or less continuous from day to day or have an annoying way of repeating themselves.

Now, for alternatives. I have three to suggest.

(1) We take an event that happened so many years ago today - let's say the first public sale of the automobile took place 20 years ago today. We then look up the papers for that day and give a brief account of the event. Or the Opening of "Abie's Irish Rose" or any one of a hundred things. On days when we find no outstanding event to play with, we can always quote some of the advertisements with their fantastic prices, ancient book reviews and the like. I think most people enjoy hearing about "the good old days". And it would be a different as well as light touch. Think of the fun we could have had during the World Series, by simply going back into the accounts of the first world series!

(2) Another possibility is to stay strictly current. Wh at we'd do is go through the weekly and monthly magazines, current books, even newspaper columns and either condense the contents of a couple of the best paragraphs or take one good paragraph. This would serve two ends: it would be timely and it would bring to the listener's attention, articles and pieces he might otherwise miss.

(3) As a third possibility, we could digest the day's speeches: at U.N., at press conferences, at meetings, etc. and use the best ten line quote of the day. This also has the advantage of being timely and would give us far greater variety than we have under the present setup.

In any event, it's something to think about. And I'd like to get your reactions after you've talked it over with Ed. Meanwhile, I'll go bury my nose in an anthology.

JAA

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING JUNE 26, 1959

MONDAY

"It is evident that many great and useful objects can be obtained in this world only by cooperation. It is equally evident, that there cannot be efficient cooperation if men proceed on the principle that they must not cooperate for one object unless they agree about other objects."

Macaulay
British historian

TUESDAY

"A good scare is worth more to a man than good advice."

E.W. Howe

WEDNESDAY

"Mr. Podsnap even acquired a peculiar flourish of his right arm in often clearing the world of its most difficult problems by sweeping them behind him."

Charles Dickens
of character
Mr. Podsnap

THURSDAY

"Logic is logic, that's all I say."

Oliver Wendell
Hdmes, the elder

FRIDAY

"It's better to know less than so much that ain't so."

Josh Billings

"Silence is one of the hardest arguments to refute."

Josh Billings

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 19, 1959

MONDAY

"Nobody can guarantee the world against the ugly passions that sometimes get abroad. But if the nations of the world will in deed and truth agree to put arbitration and discussion always first and war always last, I say that we have an immense insurance against war." — Woodrow Wilson

TUESDAY

"He never wants anything but what's right and fair; only when you come to settle what's right and fair, it's everything that he wants and nothing that you want. And that's his idea of a compromise." — Thomas Hughes

WEDNESDAY

"The people are the only sure reliance for the preservation of liberty." — Thomas Jefferson

"Blood, though it sleep a time, never dies." — George Chapman

THURSDAY

"We don't understand that progress is not inevitable. Progress depends on courage to face facts, and then to take decisions based on those facts." — Field Marshall Montgomery

FRIDAY

"You might as well fall flat on your face as lean over too far backward." — James Thurber

"One sure way to get the last word in an argument is to say 'all right.'" — Benjamin Franklin

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 22, 1959

MONDAY

"Possess your soul with patience."	John Dryden
"Patience and fortitude."	Fiorello LaGuardia

TUESDAY

"Nothing is more pleasing than to know all the facts."	Meander, Athenian dramatist
"You may prove anything by figures."	Thomas Carlyle

WEDNESDAY

"The little foolery that wise men have makes a great show."	Publilius Syrus
"He that will have a cake out of the wheat must tarry the grinding."	Shakespeare

THURSDAY

"Give me your tired, your poor, your huddled masses yearning to breathe free."	Emma Lazarus on Statue of Liberty

FRIDAY

"Ah, it will end like all of them----with a communique."	A French diplomat of an international conference

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 15, 1959

MONDAY

"Nobody ever forgets where he buried a hatchet." — Kin Hubbard

TUESDAY

"What you Americans do not always understand is that the game being played is not poker but chess. In this game, each player sees what pieces the other has, and there is no bluffing about them. What is unknown is how the pieces will be played." — Unidentified person quoted by Walter Lippmann

WEDNESDAY

"You have heard of how the Illinois farmer disposed of the log that was too wet to burn, too big to haul away, and too knotty to split? He plowed around it." — Abraham Lincoln

THURSDAY

"It would, I think, be a mistake to assume that nothing can be settled with the Soviet Union unless all has been settled. Settlement of two or three of our difficulties would be an important gain." — Winston Churchill

FRIDAY

"There is a wall between." — Cicero

"One does not have to believe everything one hears." — Cicero

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 8, 1959

MONDAY

"For the wisest man preaches no doctrines; he has no scheme. He sees no rafter, not even a cobweb, against the heavens. It is clear sky." — Thoreau

TUESDAY

Of force - "the immediate parent of despotism" — Thomas Jefferson

"At the turning point it is force...and force alone...which makes the crucial decision." — Mussolini

WEDNESDAY

"Six Hopi Indians came to this tall house of glass walls today to warn the nations of the world that they were fast approaching a great struggle between the forces of good and evil. They were told to put their message in writing. The Hopis said their message was one of the heart and mind." — New York Times Dateline U.N.

THURSDAY

"The price of greatness is responsibility." — Winston Churchill

"If you alone can do what ought to be done, then that 'oughtness' rests on you. You can't dodge it. It is yours." — Lynn Landrum

FRIDAY

"When you become 40, you should take it a little slower, work a little harder, take a little more time to think, and you will be all right." — H.S. Truman on 70th birthday

"I am an optimist. I wish I could live another 50 years to see the progress of the free world." — H.S. Truman on 75th birthday

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 1, 1959

MONDAY

"A little word hath often marred or made men's fortunes."	Sophocles
"I have never been hurt by anything I didn't say."	Calvin Coolidge

TUESDAY

"How strong an influence works in well placed words!"	George Chapman, the dramatist
"The greatest homage we can pay to truth is to use it."	Emerson

WEDNESDAY

"It is with our judgments as with our watches. No two go just alike, yet each believes his own."	Alexander Pope
"One watch set right will do to set many by."	Dilwin

THURSDAY

"I don't think many of us will live to see a time free of troubles."	Secretary Herter
"We must expect that the future will disclose dangers. It is the duty of the future to be dangerous."	Professor Alfred Whitehead

FRIDAY

"Trust not the horse, ye Trojans."	Homer
"Hast thou given the horse strength? Has thou clothed his neck with thunder?"	From Book of Job

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 24, 1959

MONDAY

"Some men are uncommon to extraordinary degree, others to lesser. And perhaps most uncommon of all is the common man whose achievements are exalted beyond the expectation of his circumstances."

Crawford Greenewalt in The Uncommon Man

TUESDAY

"Communism is not love. Communism is a hammer which we use to destroy the enemy."

Mao Tse-tung

WEDNESDAY

"the biggest and most formidable mass movement in human history."

Richard Crossman, the British Socialist of Chinese communism

THURSDAY

"Africa is awake, Africa is alert. It has seen the example of Asia, even if its circumstances are different from those of Asia, and for good or ill it is marching with the times."

John Gunther
INSIDE AFRICA

"Africa is part of our frontier nowadays, whether we like it or not."

"

FRIDAY

No direct quote

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 17, 1959

MONDAY

"We would achieve the perspective of peace amidst conflict, of serenity amidst turmoil, and fortitude amidst the twilight of despair." — Frederick Mayer

TUESDAY

"The risks of inaction have never been so alarming; the political rewards of vision have never been so great." — Barbara Ward

WEDNESDAY

"His mind was clear and strong, his will was unwavering, his convictions were uncompromising...his confidence in himself was implicit, his love for his country was real and intense." — Woodrow Wilson of the elder Pitt

THURSDAY

"I am for those who have never been mastered." — Walt Whitman

FRIDAY

"Artificial optimism alienates more friends than it makes." — F.C. Appley

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 10, 1959

MONDAY

"This is a world in which each of us, knowing his limitations, will have to cling to what is close to him...to what he knows... to what he can do...to his friends and his tradition and his love...lest he be dissolved in a universal confusion and know nothing, and love nothing." — Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer

TUESDAY

"The devil is a very cunning phellow. But the blunders he makes always eats up the profits in his business." — Josh Billings

WEDNESDAY

"Take time to deliberate, but when the time for action arrives, stop thinking and go on." — Andrew Jackson

THURSDAY

"The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it." — John Galsworthy

FRIDAY

"Let us not be content to wait and see what will happen... but give us thedetermination to make the right things happen. Give us the courage to be either hot or cold... to stand for something, lest we fall for anything." — Peter Marshall

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 27, 1959 + APRIL 3

MONDAY

Larry LeSueur reporting for week - No word for today

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MARCH 20, 1959

MONDAY

none

TUESDAY

"All rising to a great place is by a winding stair. Let none falter who thinks he is right...for if we never try, we shall never succeed. But it is only in concert that we can succeed." — Abraham Lincoln

WEDNESDAY

"If you judge, investigate." — Seneca

"One cool judgment is worth a thousand hasty counsels. The thing to do is to supply light and not heat." — Woodrow Wilson

THURSDAY

"A man is capable of understanding how the ether vibrates... and what's going on in the sun. But how any other man can blow his nose differently from him, that he is incapble of understanding." — Turgenev

FRIDAY

"Let us make sure that the supreme fact of the 20th century is that they tread the same path." — Churchill

Bismarck said the supreme fact of the 19th century was that Britain and the United States spoke the same language.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 13, 1959

MONDAY

"All we got to go by is history. And history don't record that economy ever won a war." — Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"What's past is prologue." — Shakespeare from The Tempest

WEDNESDAY

"A decent boldness ever meets with friends." — Horace

THURSDAY

"The will of man is by his reason swayed." — Shakespeare

FRIDAY

"By union the smallest states thrive. By discord, the greatest are destroyed." — Sallust

"Whatever the issue, we share one common danger, one safety." — Virgil

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 20, 1959

MONDAY

"Many of us have not concealed our consternation at the public atttitudes of Mr. Dulles. Yet one respects his stony dedication, his personal honesty, his physical industry and endurance against manifest human pain."

Charles Collingwood quoting a British writer

TUESDAY

"A clash of doctrines is not a disaster, it is an opportunity. We must produce a great age or see the collapse of the upward striving of our race."

Professor Alfred North Whitehead

WEDNESDAY

"It is statesmanship...not medicinemanship...which is required."

Hans J. Morgenthau

THURSDAY

"Great men are the guide-posts and the landmarks of the state."

Edmund Burke

FRIDAY

"We wonder if the liberty's done; the dreaming is finished. We can't say; we aren't sure. Or if there is something different men can dream, or if there is something different men can mean by liberty. We wonder---we don't know--- we are asking."

Archibald MacLeish in one of his poems

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 13, 1959

MONDAY

"Only in unimportant things do we dare not trust to appearance." LaRochefoucauld

TUESDAY

"There is properly no history, only biography." Ralph Waldo Emerson

WEDNESDAY

"The difficult is that which can be done immediately; the impossible that which takes a little longer." Santayana

THURSDAY

"To the mountain and sea and star men turn forever in unwearied homage. And thus with Lincoln, for he was mountain in grandeur of spirit; he was sea in undervoice of mystic loneliness; he was star in steadfast purity of purpose and service. And he, too, abides." Homer Koch (see script) for background

FRIDAY

"The greatest of all human benefits is independence." Parke Godwin

"Liberty belongs to the individual, or it does not exist." Woodrow Wilson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 6, 1959

MONDAY

Abraham Lincoln said he once heard of a warrantee bill of sale for a horse... avowing that the animal was "sound of skin and skeleton and without faults or faculties."

TUESDAY

"Let reason be opposed to reason and argument to argument, and every good government will be safe." — Thomas Erskine

WEDNESDAY

"As long as the Free World holds together...and especially Britain and the United States...and maintains its strength, Russia will find that peace and plenty have more to offer than exterminatory war." — Winston Churchill

THURSDAY

"And stalemate, let's face it, means the end of our way of life." — Paul Hoffman

FRIDAY

"He is taking steps. Indeed, he is making haste with prudent deliberation." — Albert Camus

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 30, 1959

MONDAY

"If a man is right, he can't be too radical. And if he is wrong, he can't be too conservative." — Josh Billings is not "a man to whom you could safely stretch out your fingers in the dark." — Cicero

TUESDAY

WEDNESDAY

David Hinshaw once said that politicians could save themselves much trouble and second-rate thought by adopting the policy of Mike Sutton, "arare, vigorous, shaggy, uninhibited lawyer of Dodge City." When Sutton ran for mayor, his platform had only one plank: "Like Caesar's wife, he said, "I will be all things to all men."

THURSDAY

"There was a South of fears and misgivings; that South is dead. There is a South of human kindness and law, of justice and of peace." — Henry W. Grady wrote more than seventy years ago

FRIDAY

"If the arrangement of society is bad and a small number of people have power over the majority and oppress it, every victory over nature will inevitably serve only to increase that power and oppression." — Tolstoy

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 23, 1959

MONDAY Budget

"the balance wheel of the economy." — Douglas Abbott referring to budget

"Nothing is dear, if it is good." — H. G. Wells

TUESDAY

"You can't have Falstaff and have him thin." — Santayana

WEDNESDAY

"No action, whether fair or foul, is ever done but it leaves somewhere a record written by fingers ghostly as a blessing or a curse." — Longfellow

THURSDAY

"Prevention is better than cure." — Erasmus

FRIDAY FREEDOM

"He alone is free who lives with free consent under the entire guidance of reason." — Spinoza

"a universal license to be good." — Hartley Coleridge of Freedom...rightly understood

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 16, 1959

MONDAY

"...incessant maneuver and struggle with a vigorous and inventive foe." — Barbara Ward

TUESDAY

"The time has come for us to make a move...to concentrate on the possibilities of agreement, rather than on the disagreements and failures...the evils and wrongs...of the past." — Lester Pearson on accepting Nobel Prize

WEDNESDAY

"Anyone can win unless there happens to be a second entry." — George Ade

THURSDAY

"I just wanted to see did he eat, drink, sleep, laugh." — Will Rogers after calling on a Communist big-shot

FRIDAY FACTS - INFO

"He that judges without informing himself to the utmost cannot acquit himself of judging amiss." — John Locke

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 9, 1959

MONDAY

"When you meet your antagonist, do everything in a mild and agreeable manner. But let your courage be as keen... and as polished...as your sword." — Richard Brinsley Sheridan

TUESDAY

"Divide and conquer." — Machiavelli

WEDNESDAY

"In politics, when you're through, you're the last one to find out." — Ed Flynn

THURSDAY

"The greater the reform needed, the greater the personality you need to accomplish it." — Walt Whitman

FRIDAY PREPAREDNESS

"Our country calls not for the life of ease but for the life of strenuous endeavor. If we stand idly by... if we seek merely swollen, slothful ease and ignoble peace...then the bolder and stronger peoples will pass us by and win for themselves domination of the world." — Theo. Roosevelt

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 2, 1959

MONDAY

"If the egotist is weak, his egotism is worthless. But if the egotist is strong, acute, full of distinctive character, his egotism is precious...and remains a possession of the race." — Alexander Smith

Of Egotism, "the very essence of a noble soul." — Nietzsche

TUESDAY

"These problems have deep roots. They are explosive aspects which can surprise us at any time." — Secretary J.F.Dulles

WEDNESDAY

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little understanding, and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year." — Heinrich Heine

THURSDAY

"A revolution is as natural a growth as an oak. It comes out of the past. Its foundations are laid far back." — Wendell Phillips

FRIDAY

"Destiny is not a matter of chance, it is a matter of choice. It is not a thing to be waited for, it is a thing to be achieved." — William J. Bryan

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 27, 1958

MONDAY

None

TUESDAY

"What price salvation?" G.B. Shaw

WEDNESDAY

"Providence seems by every means intent on making us a great people. May our virtues, public and private, grow with us and be durable... that liberty, civil and religious, may be secured to posterity." Benjamin Franklin

THURSDAY X mas

"The legend of St. Nick is the last living relic of the vanishing world of dreams. The fairies are gone, the witches and ghosts are gone. Santa Claus alone lingers with us. Let us keep him as long as we can. Children learn to see soon enough, too clearly, too well. After all, in this universe of ignorance anything may be true---even our dreams." Gamaliel Bradford

FRIDAY

"The imbecility of men is always inviting the impudence of power." Emerson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 19, 1958

MONDAY

"If we are to achieve our supreme reward, we must lay aside every impediment and conquer ourselves." — Winston Churchill

TUESDAY

"Close alliances with despots are never safe for free states." — Demosthenes said more than 2,000 years ago

WEDNESDAY

"Communism to me is one-third practice and two-thirds explanation." — Will Rogers

THURSDAY

"We can keep our freedom through the increasing crisis of history only if we are self-reliant enough to be free---- dollars, guns, and all the wondrous products of science will not be enough. 'This night thy soul shall be required of thee.'" — William o. Douglas

FRIDAY

"I feel like a child who, playing by the seashore, has found a few bright colored shells...while the whole vast ocean of truth stretches out almost untouched and unruffled before my eager fingers." — Isaac Newton

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 12, 1958

MONDAY

"Old lines of discrimination between justice and injustice, liberty and oppression, suddenly seem to be as indistinct as lines drawn in water. Somewhere, somehow, new lines will be drawn." — Sidney Hyman

TUESDAY LIBERTY

"Liberty when it begins to take root is a plant of rapid growth." — George Washington

WEDNESDAY

THURSDAY

"There is always victory where there is unity. Discord destroys." — Publilius Syrus

FRIDAY REVOLUTION

"Any people anywhere, being inclined and having the power, have the right to rise up and shake off the existing government and form a new one that suits them better." — Abraham Lincoln

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 5, 1958

MONDAY

"Grant us the wisdom and the vision to comprehend the greatness of man's spirit that suffers and endures so hugely for a goal beyond his brief span. Grant us honor for the dead who died in the faith." — Stephen Vincent Benet

TUESDAY

"You cannot buy what is not for sale." — Selwyn Champion

WEDNESDAY

"We think our civilization is near its meridian. Yet we are only at the cock-crowing and the morning star." — Ralph Waldo Emerson

THURSDAY

"We declare war upon you in the peaceful field of trade." — Khrushchev

"The question ispurely a political one. Since we have the means to counter a demonstrable crisis, shall we in fact do so?" — Barbara Ward

FRIDAY

"To the millions who have to go without two meals a day, the only acceptable form in which God dare appear is food." — Ghandi -

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 28, 1958

MONDAY

"The hole and the patch must be commensurate." — Thomas Jefferson

TUESDAY

"Everything hath its time, and that time must be watched." — Thomas Fuller, 17th Century

WEDNESDAY

"Force unaccompanied by prudence sinks under its own weight. The gods give effect to force regulated by wisdom. They pursue with wrath, bold, unhallowed schemes." — Horace

THURSDAY THANKSGIVING

"Give us brotherhood, not only for this day, but for all our years, a brotherhood not only of words but of deeds." — Stephen Vincent Benet in Thanksgiving prayer

FRIDAY

"If the race is to the swift, it is also to the imaginative." — John K. Hutchens

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 21, 1958

MONDAY

"They are going to be dangerous competitors. We just can't laugh it off. It's a terrible way to live...and do...but you can't beat hard work, sacrifice, and unlimited resources. It's liable, if it just half way works out, to have us winging on our foreign trade."

Will Rogers (speaking of Russians)

TUESDAY ANY CHANGE

"There is a certain relief in change, even though it be from bad to worse. I have found, that in traveling in a stage-coach that it is often a comfort to shift one's position and be bruised in a new place."

Washington Irving

WEDNESDAY ACTION

"There are some situations in which we are unable to take action. All we can do is brace ourselves against the shock. But there are other situations, in which we have the power to act. And that is when we need all our firmness and singleness of purpose."

Jan Struther

THURSDAY

"The vital impulse is optimistic."

Henry Bergson the philosopher

FRIDAY

Calvin Coolidge once remarked that he was never hurt by anything he didn't say.

Calvin Coolidge

WORD FOR TODAY
FROM EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 14, 1958

MONDAY

"Fate with impartial hand turns out the doom of high and low. Her capacious urn is shaking out the names of all mankind." — Horace, 2 thousand years ago

TUESDAY

"Diplomacy is the verbal technique of saying what you don't mean and making it mean what you don't say." — Dagobert Runes

WEDNESDAY

"Beware an obliging bear." — Old Russian proverb

THURSDAY

A scorpion once asked a frog to let him ride on his back across a wide river. "Ah," said the frog, "but you may sting me while I'm busy swimming." "Nonsense," said the scorpion, "that would be the end of me, too. I can't swim." But the scorpion stung him anyway and both perished.

FRIDAY

"It was the best of times, it was the worst of times. It was the age of reason, it was the age of foolishness. It was the spring of hope, it was the winter of despair." — Charles Dickens' opening sentence in his Tale of Two Cities

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 7, 1958

MONDAY

"Blow your horns, my brethern, for who so bloweth not his own horn, the same shall not be blown. But who so bloweth his own horn, the same shall be blown with a muchness." — Petroleum V. Nasby

TUESDAY ELECTION NIGHT

"When the votes are counted, let's everybody get into a good humor as quick as they got into a bad one. Let's offer no alibis, but cooperate with the winner. Let's all be friends again." — Will Rogers

"The results of political changes are hardly ever those which their friends hope or their foes fear." — Thomas Huxley

WEDNESDAY ELECTION RESULTS - SEE SEPT 12, 1958

"The people is everyman, everybody. Everybody is you and me and all the others. And what everybody says is what we all say." — Carl Sandburg

THURSDAY

"Great leadership and greatness in capacity for popular response are two sides of the same coin. Unless both are firmly stamped, the coin will not pass current." — Allan Nevins

MACHINES OF DESTRUCTION

FRIDAY "There will one day spring from the brain of science a machine, or force, so fearful that even Man, the fighter who will dare torture and death, will be appalled." — Thomas Edison

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 31, 1958

MONDAY

"Revolutionaries who take thelaw into their own hands are horrifying, not because they are criminals, but because they are like machines that have got out of control like runaway trains."

Boris Pasternak in "Doctor Zhivago"

TUESDAY

"The true meaning of religion is not merely morality but morality touched by emotion."

Matthew Arnold

WEDNESDAY

"I grant democracy is an experiment, but it is the only direction society can take that is worth taking. Every other possible step is backward."

Henry Adams

THURSDAY

BLUFF

"To threaten and to strike are not always the same thing."

Potanus, the old Roman

FRIDAY

"The solar system has no anxiety about its reputation."

Emerson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 24, 1958

MONDAY CAUSE + EFFECT

"The knowledge of an effect depends on and involves the knowledge of a cause." — Spinoza

"Every effect becomes a cause." — Old Buddhist maxim

TUESDAY CAMPAIGNING FOR OFFICE

"I feel it due my Dimekratik brethrin that I stait the reasons. They run az follows: First, I want a offis. Second, I need a offis. Third, a office wood suit me---therefore, fourth, I shood like to have a offis." — Petroleum V. Nasby

WEDNESDAY

"Each mind has its own method." — Ralph Waldo Emerson

THURSDAY CAMPAIGNING

"One of the most remarkable pecularities of the present time, is that the principal leaders of the political parties are traveling about the country from state to state holding forth...like preachers...hour after hour." — John Quincy Adams 1840

FRIDAY POWER OF WORDS

"But words are things, and a small drop of ink...falling like dew...produced that which makes thousands, perhaps millions, think." — Lord Byron

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 17, 1958

MONDAY SENSE

"It seems as though as soon as people are old enough to know better, they don't know anything at all." — Oscar Wilde

TUESDAY

"A revolution does not march a straight line. It wanders where it can, retreats before superior forces, advances wherever it has room...attacks whenever the enemy retreats or bluffs...and, above all, is possessed of enormous patience." — Mao-Tse-tung wrote some 20 years ago

WEDNESDAY

"Kissing babies is a politician's way of offering lip service to the voters." — Edmund Kiefer

"Don't kiss the babies, kiss the mothers. They're the ones who vote." — William O'Brion

THURSDAY

"For Glory gives herself only to those who have always dreamed of her." — DeGaulle

FRIDAY

"Before I built a wall, I'd ask to know what I was walling in or walling out." — Robert Frost

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 10, 1958

MONDAY

"Bare words are no good bargain." — John Clarke

"If you buy the cow, take the tail into the bargain." — John Fuller

TUESDAY

"The most successful politician is he who says what everybody is thinking most often and in the loudest voice." — Theo. Roosevelt

WEDNESDAY POPE PIUS - PEACE

"In the name of religion, of civilization, and of right human sentiment, let there be an end to illegal and brutal repressions... to plans for war...to political preponderance among powers...all of which change earthly life into an abyss of anxiety and terror...and deaden the spirit." — Pope Pius

THURSDAY

"Goodness and greatness do not always go together." — John Clarke

FRIDAY COMPROMISE

"such an adjustment of conflicting interests as gives each adversary the satisfaction of thinking he got what he ought not to have and is deprived of nothing except what was justly his due." — Ambrose Bierce (definition of compromise)

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 3, 1958

MONDAY - PUBLIC OPINION

"Public opinion is almost omnipotent." — Harry Ward Beecher

"Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it." — Thomas Jefferson

TUESDAY DIPLOMAT

"For parlor use, the vague generality is a life-saver." — Anonymous

WEDNESDAY DE GAULLE

"He marched us full speed to the Rubicon and then told us to get out our fishing rods." — Andre Malraux of DeGaulle in 1949

THURSDAY INDEPENDENCE

"Declarations of independence make no one really independent." — George Santayana

FRIDAY U. N.

"The United Nations is not just a product of "do-gooders." It is harshly real. When people---just people---stop thinking of it as a weird Picasso abstraction, and see it as a drawing they made themselves, everything will be all right." — Dag Hammarskjold

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
SEPTEMBER 26, 1958

Monday EDUCATION

"We honor learning, but do not believe in it. We reward it with lengthy obituaries." — President Griswold of Yale

"We are in a race between education and catastrophe." — G.K. Chesterton (during the first World War.)

TUESDAY PRESIDENCY

"It is so much greater than any man could honestly imagine himself to be that the most he can do is look grave enough and self-possessed enough to seem to fill it." — Woodrow Wilson (of the presidency)

WEDNESDAY PERSEVERENCE

"Perseverence is more efficacious than violence...and many things which cannot be overcome when they stand together yield themselves up when taken little by little." — Sertorius

THURSDAY

"Nothing in progression can rest on its original plan. We might as well think of rocking a grown man in a cradle." — Edmund Burke

"The only difference between a rut and a grave is their dimensions." — Ellen Glasgow

FRIDAY FOREIGN TRADE

If nations cannot send goods across their borders, they eventually send soldiers." — Cordell Hull

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
SEPTEMBER 19, 1958

MONDAY MOTIVES

"In the works of Man, as in Nature, it is really the motives that merit attention." — Goethe

TUESDAY EAST vs. WEST

"The challenge is plain. The century during which the Chinese had to live in our Western world is past. Now we both have to learn to live on the same planet." — Professor Fairbank in his new book on China

WEDNESDAY UNEMPLOYMENT

"When many people are out of work, unemployment results." — Calvin Coolidge

THURSDAY

"Diplomacy is the art of keeping cool." — Wm. Jennings Bryan'

FRIDAY

"Danger strikes the sooner when it is despised." — Publilius Syrus

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
SEPTEMBER 12, 1958

MONDAY LEADER

"In nine instances out of ten, the highest type of democratic leader is made---not born. And he proves his leadership rather in anticipating a crisis than in rising out of one." Allan Nevins

TUESDAY ELECTION RESULTS

In 1920 the Democratic presidential candidate, James Cox was overwhelmed at the polls by Warren G. Harding. And after the vote was in, a friend said to Cox...consolingly..."Well, governor, it looks like the people have spoken." "Yes," was Cox's grim rejoinder, "but they didn't have to speak so loud."

WEDNESDAY EXPLANATIONS

"I fear explanations explanatory of things explained." Abraham Lincoln

THURSDAY

"Equal justice under law." (Inscription chiseled into the marble of the Supreme Court building)

FRIDAY UNITY

"Whatever the issue, we shall share one common danger, one safety." Virgil

"All power is feeble, unless it is united." Plutarch

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 27, 1958

MONDAY LAW

"Law is nothing unless behind it stands a warm, living public opinion." — Wendell Phillips

"No law is entirely convenient for everyone." — Cicero

TUESDAY FORESIGHT

"It were well, my friends...it were well while the vessel is still in port to see the approaching storm." — Agrippa II

WEDNESDAY REFORMER

"A man who would expect to train lobsters to fly in a year is called a lunatic. But a man that thinks men can be turned into angels by an election is a reformer, and that man remains at large." — Finley Peter Dunne, American humorist

THURSDAY U.N.

"The United Nations can't guarantee peace, any more than a doctor can guarantee health. But would that be a good reason for doing away with doctors?" — Andre Maurois

FRIDAY NATURE

"In these vernal seasons of the year...when the air is calm and pleasant...it were an injury and sullenness against Nature not to go out and see her riches...and partake of her rejoicing with heaven and earth." — John Milton

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 20, 1958

MONDAY

"Our problem is not to ape their methods, and thus lose what we value most, but rather to prove that under our free institutions we can now the less exhibit the economic self-discipline to put first things first." — Leon Keyserling

TUESDAY

"If you would avoid suspicion, do not lace your shoes in a melon field." — Old Chinese proverb

WEDNESDAY ACCEPTANCE OF GIFTS

Upon receiving a piece of silk goods woven by a lady admirer, George Washington told her it was his policy not to accept presents. "But," he said, "as evidence of what our climate...aided by industry...is capable of yielding, I receive and thank you for this effort of your skill." — George Washington

THURSDAY HISTORY

"There is a vile phrase of which bad historians are exceedingly fond---'the dignity of history.'" — MacCaulay - the British historian

FRIDAY

"There is nobody who is not dangerous for someone." — Marie de Sevigne

"A man's wisdom is most conspicuous where he is able to distinguish among dangers and make choice of the least." — Machiavelli

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 13, 1958

MONDAY

"It is common sense to take a method and try it. If it fails, admit it frankly and try another. But above all, try something." — Franklin Roosevelt

TUESDAY

"Perhaps it was right to dissemble your love, but--- why did you kick me downstairs?" — John Kemble

WEDNESDAY

"To blow and swallow at the same time is not easy." — Plautus

THURSDAY EXPEDIENCY

"Politicians drive the nail that goes the best." — John Gay
18th Century

FRIDAY

"So, in the Libyan fable it is told
That once an eagle, stricken with a dart,
Said when he saw the fashion of the shaft
'With our own feathers, not by others' hand
Are we now smitten." — Aeschylus

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 6, 1958

MONDAY

"Never take the bull by the horns, but take him by the tale. Then you can let go when you want to." — Josh Billings

TUESDAY

"Good and evil grow up together almost inseparably... and the knowledge of good is so involved and interwoven with the knowledge of evil that it is in many cunning resemblances hardly to be discerned." — John Milton

WEDNESDAY

"Deliberate with slowness, but execute with speed. All things come too late for those who wait." — Publilius Syrus

THURSDAY VACILLATION

"Lot's wife hesitated, though angels led the way. Naturally she was petrified where she stood, a monument of vacillation." — Leon Harrison

FRIDAY REVOLUTION

"Revolutions are not made; they come. A revolution is as natural a growth as an oak." — Wendell Phillips

"Let us remember revolutions do not always establish freedom." — Millard Fillmore

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 30, 1958

MONDAY

"Presumably, the human race will in the future...as in the past...find means of getting along somehow probably for the better, rather than for the worse." — Walter Millis, Arms and Men

TUESDAY

"Things and actions are what they are, and the consequences of them will be what they will be. Why then, should we desire to be deceived?" — Joseph Butler

WEDNESDAY BLUFF

"The government that shakes its fist first and its finger afterward falls into contempt." — Elihu Root

THURSDAY

"Suit self to circumstances." — Old Chinese proverb

"The wise man does no wrong in changing his habits with the times." — Cato

FRIDAY DEATH IN WAR

"Tell me, friends, how came you here? How did you die?
If you fell as I, alone, unknown upon some bloody field,
then tell me this:
How came the wars in which you fought? Whither went eternal peace for which I died?"

— Dud Chamberlain, Jr.
a newspaperman

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 23, 1958

MONDAY

"This Republic was not established by cowards, and cowards will not preserve it." — Elmer Davis

TUESDAY PATCHING UP

"Never underestimate the French talent for tinkering and patching up." — Anonymous

"The hole and the patch should be commensurate." — Thomas Jefferson

WEDNESDAY NO ONE INDEPENDENT

"Independence? That's middle-class blasphemy. We are all dependent on one another, every soul of us on earth." — George Bernard Shaw

THURSDAY LEADER - DICTATOR

"To take action on one's own responsibility...to want no mark upon it but one's own...to face destiny alone---this is the harsh, exclusive passion of a Chief." — General De Gaulle

FRIDAY

"There are more ways of killing a cat than choking her with cream." — Charles Kingsley

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 16, 1958

MONDAY

None

TUESDAY

None

WEDNESDAY

None

THURSDAY

None

FRIDAY DICTATOR

"The latent Bonapartism of the French people is always there under the surface, ready to erupt."

David Schoenbrun
As France Goes

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 9, 1958

MONDAY

"What's lost today may be won tomorrow." OPTIMISM — Cervantes

"Tomorrow will give us something to think about." — Cicero

TUESDAY RUSSIANS

"We are dealing with people who are unpredictable and, at times, they are practically inexplicable...so far as we are concerned." (about the Russians) — President Eisenhower

WEDNESDAY

"Preparation gives more to hope than it brings with it. A man doth often strip himself into his doublet to leap shorter than he did in his gown." — Montaigne

THURSDAY

"If you miss the first button-hole, you will not succeed in buttoning up your coat." — Goethe

"If a man had half as much foresight as he has hindsight, he'd be a lot better off." HINDSIGHT — Robert Burdette

FRIDAY

NONE

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 2, 1958

MONDAY

"In this world, a man must be either anvil or hammer." — Longfellow

"When you are an anvil, hold you still. When you are a hammer, strike your fill." — John Florio

TUESDAY SUSPICION

"Two roughs were playing cards for high stakes...when one of them, suspecting his adversary of foul play, straightway drew his bowie knife from his belt and pinned the hand of the other player upon the table... exclaiming, "If you haven't got the ace of spades under your palm, I'll apologize." — Abraham Lincoln

WEDNESDAY LAW

"You must have the right kind of law." — Theodore Roosevelt

"Tis easier to make certain things legal than to make them legitimate." — Nicolas Chamfort

THURSDAY FREEDOM

"I was not born to be forced." — Thoreau

"Freedom isn't something to be won and then forgotten. It must be renewed like soil after yielding good crops." — Norwin Corwin

FRIDAY

"There is no greater evil than taking the enemy lightly." UNDERESTIMATE — Lao-tsze

"We would be sitting pretty, if we all pulled together as much to put over a siege of peace as we do a spell of war." — Will Rogers.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 25, 1958

MONDAY

"What we want is more cider and less talk." — Artemus Ward

TUESDAY OPTIMISM

"Everything is possible, including the impossible and the absurd." — Benito Mussolini

WEDNESDAY CHANGE

"Today is not yesterday. We ourselves change. How can our works and thoughts if they are always to be the fittest, continue always the same?" — Thomas Carlyle

THURSDAY ISRAEL

"In Israel, in order to be a realist, you have to believe in miracles." — Ben Gurion

"A great city is that which has the greatest men and women." — Walt Whitman

FRIDAY DOUBT

"To have doubted one's own first principles is the mark of a civilized man." — Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 18, 1958

MONDAY PREPPAREDNESS

"We have had the lesson before us over and over again--- nations that were not ready and were unable to get ready, found themselves overrun by the enemy." — Franklin Roosevelt

TUESDAY

"Logic and politics seldom slip their feet between the same sheets." — French maxim

WEDNESDAY

"Talking with your antagonist to avoid strife is a moral duty. Appeasement comes when, in order to avoid strife and to achieve a supposed security, you sacrifice a principle which you know to be a sacred right." — Brian McMahon

THURSDAY

"Beyond his strength may no man fight, however eager he be." REALISI — Homer

FRIDAY

"A man's wisdom is most conspicuous where he is able to distinguish among dangers and make a choice of the least." — Machiavelli

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 11, 1958

MONDAY MISSILES VS IDEAS

"The goal of the United States should not only be to send up bigger missiles, but also to send up bigger ideas." — Norman Cousins

"The world is run by ideas. Only the fool thinks otherwise." — Woodrow Wilson

TUESDAY DEMOCRACY

"The best government rests on the people, and not on the few; on persons and not on property; on the free development of public opinion, and not on authority." — George Bancroft

↓

WEDNESDAY

"I was not born to be forced. I will breathe after my own fashion. If a plant cannot live according to its nature it dies...and so a man." — Thoreau

THURSDAY

"Speech is the index of the mind." — Seneca

"And curiosity, is little more than another name for hope." — Julius Charles

FRIDAY FRONTIER

"The frontiers are not East or West, North or South, but wherever a man fronts a fact." — Thoreau

"On reaching the frontier, do not turn back." — Pythagoras

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 4, 1958

MONDAY

"The practice of politics in the East may be defined by one word---dissimulation." — Disraeli

TUESDAY SPRING

"Dandylions planted this month are almost sure to bad out, so are bad stools. This month is also healthy for planting onions. Onions are a luxury and are good for a bad breth, or are bad for a good breth, I have forgot which. But either way is right." — Josh Billings

WEDNESDAY

"Those men alone deserve life and freedom who earn both anew each day." — Goethe

THURSDAY

"The Hungarian revolt blew to bits the biggest lie of the century---a lie that tried to pass off as proletarian revolution, a regime of police tyranny." — Albert Camus

FRIDAY BEGINNING

"We are reading the first verse of the first chapter of a book whose pages are infinite." — Unknown

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 28, 1958

MONDAY

"What war can ravish, commerce can bestow." — Alexander Pope

TUESDAY

"Even a doubtful remedy is better than none at all." — Old Latin proverb

WEDNESDAY INVENTION

"It was only yesterday that man invented navigational techniques as ingenious as those used by bees, who steer by polarized light from the sun." — Joseph Wood Krutch

THURSDAY

"All despotisms, under whatever name they masquerade, are efforts to freeze history." — Charles A. Beard

FRIDAY

"What counts is not the personality of the tyrant, but the essence of tyranny." — Stendhal

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 21, 1958

MONDAY PERSEVERANCE

"If at first you don't succeed, try, try again." — William Nickson

TUESDAY FRANCE

"France is a country where miracles have become a tradition. Proof lies in the fact that we're still here. For a miracle to happen, things must be really bad. Our ministers are taking care of that. You can tell they are preparing the ground for a really fine miracle." — A French writer

WEDNESDAY

NONE

THURSDAY ATOM

"The main question about the atom is simple indeed--- Does it stand for twilight or for dawn?" — New York Times editorial

"The choice is ours---yours and mine." — Dr. Wendell Stanley

FRIDAY

"Like all other forms of theology, Communism runs around on the fact that there are frequent bitter rows between its prophets." — H. L. Mencken

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 14, 1958

MONDAY

"Ambition is like hunger. It obeys no law but its appetite." — Henry W. Shaw

TUESDAY

None

WEDNESDAY FREEDOM

"The heavy-hanging chains will fall
The walls will crumble at a word;
And freedom greet you in the light,
And brothers give you back your sword!" — Pushkin

THURSDAY SURPRISE

"What we anticipate seldom occurs. What we least expect generally happens." — Disraeli

FRIDAY

"He who rides a tiger is afraid to dismount." — Lao-tse

PROGRESS

"No steps backward is the rule of human history." — Theodore Parker

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FRIDAY, MARCH 7, 1958

MONDAY

OPTIMISM

"One cannot doubt that a resolution of some kind will be found for it is too difficult to accept a millennial view of history---a Twilight of the Gods, a prognosis of universal catastrophe and extinction." — Walter Millis

TUESDAY

"Civilization without adventure is in full decay." — Alfred North Whitehead

WEDNESDAY

"The probabilities is that the probabilities will assimilate themselfs tew the prinsipal probabilities in the case. If they don't, du notiss will be giv. In the meantime, be halm, be dignified...and don't be sheered." — Josh Billings

THURSDAY

"It is endless to dispute upon everything that is disputalbe." — William Penn

"The best way out is through." — Robert Frost

FRIDAY

"There is a time to fish and a time to dry nets." — Mencius

"Don't tell fish stories where the people know you. But, particularly, don't tell them where they know the fish." — Mark Twain

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 28, 1958

MONDAY STUBBORN

"A foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds." Ralph Waldo Emerson

TUESDAY

"We Americans, are peculiar chosen people...the Israel of our times. We bear the ark of the liberties of the world." Herman Melville

WEDNESDAY

"There is no prophecy in our day but history. History alone is a trustworthy prophet." Mark Twain

THURSDAY

"Never pin your flag so tightly to one mast that if a ship sinks, you cannot rip it off and nail it to another. It is sometimes good to remember that." President Eisenhower

FRIDAY ANGER

"Anyone can become angry. That is easy. But to be angry to the right degree, at the right time, for the right purpose and in the right way---this is not easy." Aristotle

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 7, 1958

MONDAY

"Whatever we accomplish is of little importance because what we accomplish is always measured by what others do in relation to it." — John G. Winant

TUESDAY

"The occasion is piled high with difficulty, and we must rise high with the occasion." — Abraham Lincoln

WEDNESDAY

"The daily drama of the Presidency, the reciprocal interplay of human character and legal concepts that no other office on earth can quite emulate." — Edward Corwin

THURSDAY

"A man always has two reasons for doing anything--- a good reason and a real reason." — J.P. Morgan

FRIDAY

None

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 31, 1958

MONDAY STRENGTH

"It is excellent to have a giant's strength... but it is tyrannous to use it like a giant." — Shakespeare

TUESDAY

"It is better to leap one rod and strike on your feet than to leap two rods and strike on your head. This is a well-known fact." — Josh Billings

WEDNESDAY LITERACY

"The best friend a man can ever have is the man who teaches him to read, and who helps him get good books. For a man who cannot read is like a blind man." — Unknown

THURSDAY

"He serves himself and his party best who best serves his country." — Rutherford B. Hayes

FRIDAY

NONE

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 24, 1958

MONDAY

"Our duty is to act upon things as they are, and to make reasonable provision for whatever they may be." — Thomas Jefferson

TUESDAY

"They make a solitude and they call it peace." — Tacitus

WEDNESDAY

"All money that is well spent is a good investment." — Josh Billings

"Pity costs nothing and ain't worth nothing." — Josh Billings

THURSDAY

"I think it is best to put up with information the way you get it...and seem satisfied with it, and grateful for it...and say, 'My word!' and never let on." — Mark Twain

FRIDAY

"This is of the utmost interest to scientists every one of whom owes his existence to the earth's having cooled off." — E. B. White

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 17, 1958

MONDAY

"Nothing is achieved until it is thoroughly attempted." — Sir Philip Sidney

"A small key opens big doors." — Old Turkish proverb

TUESDAY

"In the worst of times, do the best things." — Dr. Charles Gibbony

WEDNESDAY

"Believe in the future! But don't sit back and wait for the future to work itself out. Get into action and make it the kind of future you want it to be." — Theodore Roosevelt

"Walk softly, and carry a big stick." — Theodore Roosevelt

THURSDAY

"If you miss the first buttonhole, you will not succeed in buttoning up your coat." — Goethe

"He who considers too much will perform little." — Socrates

FRIDAY

"Negotiate from strength, not from weakness, or else you will find yourself negotiating first at someone else's expense---which is dirty---and then at your own, which is disastrous." — Lord Vansittart

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 10, 1958

MONDAY

"The best government rests on the people, and not on the few ...on persons, and not on property...on the free development of public opinion...and not on authority." — George Bancroft

TUESDAY

"Fellow citizens, we cannot escape history. We of this Congress and this Administration will be remembered in spite of ourselves. No personal significance or insignificance can spare one or another of us. The fiery trial through which we pass will light us down in honor or dishonor to the latest generation." — Abraham Lincoln 1862

WEDNESDAY

"A platoon leader doesn't get his platoon to go by getting up and shouting, 'I am bigger, I am stronger. I am the leader.' He gets his man to go along with him because they believe in him." — President Eisenhower

THURSDAY

None

FRIDAY

"Propagandists have existed ever since Eve persuaded Adam to eat the first apple...and they will exist as long as one person attempts to convince another of anything." — Edward Bernays

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 3, 1958

MONDAY

"This will never be a civilized country until we expend more money for books than we do for chewing gum." — Elbert Hubbard

"I am more worried about our own faults than about the plans of our enemies." — Pericles

TUESDAY

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little understanding and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year." — Heinrich Heine

WEDNESDAY

"It is not the going out of port but the coming in that determines the success of a voyage." — Henry Ward Beecher

"Let us shrink from no strife, moral or physical, provided we are certain that the strife is justified." — Theodore Roosevelt

THURSDAY

"If the frenzy of searing hope can never be realized, we can also avoid the panic of plunging despair---if we learn to think our problems through, decide what it is we value most, and organize ourselves to see that first things come first." — Bernard Baruch

FRIDAY

"As an apple is not in any sense an apple until it is ripe, so a human being is not in any proper sense a human being until he is educated." — Horace Mann

"What better or greater gift can we offer the republic than to teach and instruct our youth?" — Cicero

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 27, 1957

MONDAY

"It is a gloomy moment in history. Russia hangs like a cloud, dark and silent upon the horizon of Europe. Of our troubles, no man can see the end."

Harper's Weekly, 1857

TUESDAY

"The mouse that always trusts to one poor hole can never be a mouse of any soul."

Alexander Pope

WEDNESDAY

"Let no pleasure tempt thee, no profit allure thee, no ambition corrupt thee, no example sway thee, no persuasion move thee to do anything which thou knowest to be evil. So shalt thou live jollily, for a good conscience is a continual Christmas."

Benjamin Franklin
(Poor Richard's Almanac)

THURSDAY

"This time like all other times is a very good one--- if we but knew what to do with it."

Ralph Waldo Emerson

FRIDAY

"If a nation expects to be ignorant and free in a state of civilization, it expects what never was and never will be."

Thomas Jefferson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 13,1957

MONDAY

"Describe the man...and paint his person, character, and views."	William Cowper
"Biography is the only true history."	Thomas Carlyle

TUESDAY

"Truly there is a tide in the affairs of men, but there is no Gulf Stream setting forever in one direction."	James Russell Lowell

WEDNESDAY

"He who expects much will often be disappointed, yet disappointment seldom cures us of expectation...or has any other effect than that of producing a moral sentence or peevish exclamation."	Samuel Johnson

THURSDAY

"Life imposes on nations, as on men, the obligation to strive without despair."	Charles B. Marshall

FRIDAY

"Long speeches will not insure peace."	Alfred Nobel
"Words count only when they give expression to deeds or are to be translated into them."	Theodore Roosevelt

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 6, 1957

MONDAY

"Science is a first-rate piece of furniture for a man's upper chamber, if he has common sense on the ground floor." — Oliver Wendell Holmes

TUESDAY

"Method is the architecture of success." — H. W. Shaw

WEDNESDAY

"Politicians neither love nor hate. Interest, not sentiment, directs them." — Lord Chesterfield

"Politics and self-preservation come first." — Will Rogers

THURSDAY

"The voices of the republic are not mere discord. Conflicts there must be from time to time...for when all conflicts cease, the spirit of political institutions dies." — Edmund Cahn

FRIDAY

"The roughest test of courage on earth is to bear defeat without losing heart." — Robert Ingersoll

"When I make a mistake, it's a beaut." — Mayor LaGuardia

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 29, 1957

MONDAY

"He'll ne'er get a pennyworth, that is afraid to ask a price." — Thomas Fuller

"It's a bad bargain, where nobody gains." — Old English proverb

TUESDAY

"The first wealth is health. Sickness is peer-spirited and cannot serve anybody." — Ralph Waldo Emerson

"Misfortune...and particularly the misfortune of illness...brings to all of us an understanding of how good people are." — Dwight D. Eisenhower

WEDNESDAY

"We cannot cross a bridge until we come to it... but I always like to lay down a pontoon ahead of time." — Bernard Baruch

THURSDAY

"Give us brotherhood, not only for this day, but for all our years, a brotherhood not only of words but of deeds." — Stephen Vincent Benet

FRIDAY

"Change is inevitable." — Benjamin Disraeli

"The old is cracking. Something new is rising to take its place." — George Soule

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 22, 1957

MONDAY

"God made man to go by motives...and he will not go without them any more than a boat without steam, or a balloon without gas." — Henry Ward Beecher

TUESDAY

"St. Patrick had no politics. His sympathies lay with the right---that was politics enough. When he came across a reptile, he forgot to enquire whether he was a Democrat or Republican...but simply exalted his staff and let him have it." — Mark Twain

WEDNESDAY

"It's a long step from saying to doing." — Cervantes

"The man who is prepared has his battle half fought." — Cervantes

THURSDAY

"...not to spend too much time debating the past... lest they lose the future." — Winston Churchill

FRIDAY

"I knew no safe depository of the ultimate powers of society, but the people themselves. If we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with a wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them...but to inform their discretion by education!" — Thomas Jefferson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 15, 1957

MONDAY

"The arts of power and its minions are the same in all ages. It marks its victim...denounces it... and excites the public odium and the public hatred to conceal its own abuses and encroachments." — Henry Clay

TUESDAY

"No person will have occasion to complain of the want of time who never loses any." — Thomas Jefferson

"Seize the present. Trust the future as little as you may." — Horace

WEDNESDAY

"In whatever direction the future moves, whether the earthquake is long in coming or not, we must from now onward, learn to live and act in the knowledge, that we are all responsible to and for one another." — Pierre van Paassen

THURSDAY

"If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to battle?" — St. Paul

FRIDAY

"The greatest gift is the power to estimate correctly the value of things." — Le Rochefoucauld

"Pure motives do not insure perfect results." — C.N. Bovee

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 8, 1957

MONDAY

"He who strikes terror into others, is himself in continual fear." — Claudian

"Tyranny is always weakness." — James Russell Lowell

TUESDAY

"As our case is new, so we must think anew and act anew. We must dis-enthrall ourselves." — Abraham Lincoln

WEDNESDAY

"Modern politics is a struggle, not of men, but of forces." — Henry Adams

THURSDAY

"Confidence is not a thing to be produced by compulsion. Men cannot be forced into trust." — Daniel Webster

FRIDAY

"The things that will destroy America are prosperity at any price, peace at any price, safety first instead of duty first, and love of soft living, and the get-rich-quick theory of life." — Theodore Roosevelt

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 1, 1957

MONDAY

"Those who have been once intoxicated with power, can never willingly abandon it." — Edmund Burke

"Power flows to the man who knows how." — Elbert Hubbard

TUESDAY

"The Nautilus is a symbol of man's dreaming -- his bright dreams, certainly. And, if man is not wise, his nightmares, too." — Admiral Carney

WEDNESDAY

"The United States has not the option as to whether it will not play a great part in the world. It must play a great part. All that it can decide is whether it will play that part badly or well." — Theodore Roosevelt

THURSDAY

"Education is a weapon whose effect depends on who holds it in his hand--and who is struck by it." — Stalin

FRIDAY

"Laffing devils are the most dangerous. If I had a mule that wouldn't kik nor bite, I would watch him dredful spry." — Josh Billings

Monday, June 3, 1957

Harriman (of Stalin) "He wrote us pretty hard."--George Bidault "When it comes to laying cards on the table, the Russians never play anything but clubs."

Tuesday

Woodrow Wilson "Unless justice be done to others, it will not be done to us."

"Justice has nothing to do with expediency."

Wednesday

Einstein---"I do not believe that civilization will bw wiped out. Perhaps two-thirds of the people of the earth might be killed. But enough men capable of thinking...and enough books...would be left to start again and civilization would be restored."

Thursday

Will Durant--"The crossroads of tradeare the meeting place of ideas, the attrition ground of rival customs and beliefs.

Friday

Thoreau---"To know that we know what we know and that we do not know what we do not know, that is true knowledge."

Monday--June 10, 1957

Daniel Webster "Justice is the great interest of man on earth."
H.L. Mencken "Injustice is relatively easy to bear. What stings is justice."

Tuesday

Sidney Hyman "If anything is certain in politics, it is the habitual way fate intrudes overnight."

Will Rogers--"It's sorter like a World Series. You got to have the breaks"

WEDNESDAY

Alfred North Whitehead "Without adventure, civilization is in full decay."
David -Grayson "Adventure is not outside a man. It is within."

Thursday

Josh Billings--"Faith is no milksop but a live fighter.She don't set down and grow stupid with resignation and get weak with the buty of her attributes. She iz the heroine of forlorn Hope.'

Friday

Chinese Proverb - like a man eating fish - "He dare not swallow, for fear of a bone, nor spit it out - for fear there is flesh

WORD FOR TODAY (LL REporting June17--21) 1957

Monday, June 24

Sarah Doudney" The waiting time is the hardest time of all"

Tuesday

Hesiod--"Rivalry is good for mortals." But in the realm of defense, there has to be a delegation of tasks. For as Emerson said, "Concentration is the secret of strength."

Wednesday

Charles E. Memmiam "It was a great day for the human race when the idea dawned that every man is a human being."
Someone--Else---"We need not worry so much about what man descends from. It's what he descends to that shames the human race. "

Thursday

Woodrow Wilson "Men's hearts wait upon us. Men's lives hang in the balance. Men's hopes call upon us to say what we will do."

Friday

Josh Billings--"search for things that are little, for things that are lonesum.. avoiding all torch lite proseshuns, bands of brass and wimmins rights conventions.

WORD FOR TODAY

MONDAY__ May 20, 1957

Warren Austin, "It is better for aged diplomats to be fored than for young men to die."

Tuesday--Ap 21

Josh Billings--"It iz dredful easy to mistake what we think for what we know."

Wednesday
Frank VAnderlip--"Since nothing is settled until it is settled right, no matter how unlimited power a man may have, unless he exercises it justly, his action will return to plague him."

Thursday

Hastings Doerr "Making a budget is a method of worrying before you spend, instaad of afterward."

Pubilius Syrus "There are remedies worse than the disease."

Friday

Arthur Schnitzler--"One can positively never be deceived, if one mistrusts everything inthe world, even one's own skepticism"

Monday, May 27

XXXXXX Finley Peter Dunne "At cards or world politics, there are no friends."

Tuesday

Livy--"Envy--like flame--soars upward
Cicero--"The higher we are placed, the more humbly we should walk"

Wednesday
Apocrypha "There is a city full of good things, but its approach is narrow, along a steep path, flanked by fire on one side and deep water on the other. Now if this city is given to man for an inheritance, how shall he receive it unless he pass through the danger set before him?"

Thursday
C rl Sandburg-"When we say a patriot is one who loves his country, what kind of love XXXXXXis it we XXXX mean? You have heard that thw shroud has no pockets. You have also heard the dead hold in their clenched hands only that which they have given away. In this we begin to approach the meaning of a patriot."

FRIDAY
Petroleum Nasby--"A man who duz things from principle kin stand a good deal."

"My conscience won't allow me to support it any longer. And besides, it dont pay."

WORD FOR TODAY

MONDAY, MAY 6, 1957

George Elliot'"And hope, folding its wings, looked backward and became regret."

Tuesday--William Allen White (describing production line) "a kind of democracy to transportation, without marching cohorts, or banners or Congress passing a law."

~~Tuesday~~--
Wednesday
Mohammed---Actions will be judged according to their intentions
~~XXXXXXXXXXXX~~
~~XXXXXXXXXXXX~~
~~Wednesday~~ Thursday

Einstein--"Science brought forth this danger, but the real problem is in the minds and hearts of men."

Friday

Nitzsche "The highest type of free man must be sought where the greatest resistance has to be overcome---five paces away from tyranny"

Monday--May 13

Thoreau "Some circumstantial evidence is very strong..as when you find a trout in the milk."

Tuesday--Ike--""For their own salvation...men are under a compulsion to turn this furious power from ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ the devastation of war."

Wednesday
Churchill--"If the present now engages in a quarrel with the past, then surely the future will be lost."

Thursday

WEndell Phillips "There is no Cannaan in politics." Edwin WHipple "A politician amiably in the right is no match for a politicisn tenaciously and pugnaciously in the wrong."

Friday--

George MacDonald "Always make a definite bargain. Never trust to the flattering lie, 'We shan't disagree about trifles'." ---Shakespeard--"to cavil on the ninth part of a hair."

Monday, A ril 22, 1957
Senator George--"I cannot think that Divine Providence has permitted us to become the responsible leaders of the world, only to break that hope now. If the free peoples lose condidence in us, we will have disappointed the last hope of mankind."

Tuesday
E. B. White " Do not be confused by the noise of the atom bomb." "The bomb is a pea shooter come home to roost. But when you dream, dream of essential matters -- of mass - energy relationships, of relationships of man to man. The scientists have outdreamed you, so dream well."

Wednesday--

Henry Townley Heald "The possession of factual information is the beginning of understanding. Understanding is the prerequisite of intelligent action. And intelligent action is what makes democracy work.

Thursday--
Trotsky-- " The Twentieth Century is the most disturbed century in the history of humanity. Any contemporary of ours who wants peace and security above all else has chosen a bad time to be born

Friday--ancient prov3rb--hasten slowly and ye shall soon arrive.
monday

Friday--

Ambrose Bierce (on experience) "the wisdom that enables us to recognize as an undesirable old acquaintance the folly we have already embraced." ---H. L. Menkken--

"What reallyteaches man is not experience but observation."

Tuesday--Ap 30

Charles B. Marshall "The problems of power are endless. Wars only occur.Politics endures."
Bismarck -- "Politics is not an exact science."

Wednesday
Somerset Maughm "If a nation values anything more than freedom, it will lose its f freedom. And the irony of it, is that if it is comfort or mone that it values more, it will lose that, too."

Thursday
Spinoza "All noble things are as difficult as they are rare."
Thoreau "There is ruin in want of calculation."

Friday--May 3

Walter Bedell Smith--"We dare not allow ourselves any false sense of security. We must anticipate that the Soviet tactic will be to attempt to wear us down. And we must cultivate firmness and patience to a degree we have never before required."

WORD FOR TODAY
Monday, April 1, 1957

Herman Melville--"To produce a mighty book--you must choose a mighty theme. No great and enduring volume can ever be written on the flea--ahough I must say, many have tried."

Tuesday
Abraham Lincoln--"In times like the present, men should utter nothing for which they would not willingly be responsible through time and eternity."

Wednesday
Will Rogers--"Congress is a mythical beanbag. Congress votes mythical beans into it and then tries to reach in and pull real beans out."

Thursday-

R. W. Emerson--"This aged England. I see her not dispirited." "I find the Englishman to be him of all men who stands firmest in his shoes."

Friday

"'Tis a well spent penny saves a gerat." "An empty bag cannot stand upright."

---Ben Franklin

ILL REPORTING APRIL 8-12

MONDAY, APRIL 15, 1957

Prof. Jacques Barzun "Whoever wants to know the mind and heart of America had better learn baseball---the rules and realities of the game."

Tuesday--Thomas Huxley--"Logical consequences are the scarecrows of fools and the beacons of wise men."

Wednesday--
R. W. Emerson--"The difference between landscapes is small. But there is a great difference in the beholders."

Thursday

W. B. Smith--"Propaganda as employed by the Soviets is a full scale aggressive device.....which shifts its emphasis with the freatest flexibility in the struggle for men's minds."

Friday --Mark Twain--"They chartered a ship called Mayflower and set sail. And I have heard it said that they pumped the Atlantic Ocean through that ship sisteen times."

WORD FOR TODAY

Monday, March 18, 1957

Galen--"The chief virtue language can have is clearness."

George Ade--"For parlor use, the vague generality is a livesaver."

Tuesday--
G. Washington--"Actions, not words, are the true criterion of the attachment of friends."

Wednesday
Samuel Johnson--"The use of travelling" "is to regulate imagination by reality and, instead of thinking how things may be, to see them as they are."

Thursday
Woodrow Wilson--

"Friendship is the only cement that will ever hold the world together."

George Washington-- "Friendship is a plant of slow growth and must withstand the shocks of adverstiy."

Friday

John Ruskin"What nature does generally, is sure to be more or less beautiful. What she does rarely will either be very beautiful, or absolutely ugly."

Monday, March 25, 1957

Old Saying----"It's but little good you'll do , watering last year's crops."

Santayana--"Those who cannot remember the past, are condemned to repeat it."

Tuesday--

Ben Franklin--"When the expectation is raised too high, 'tis a disadvantage to the thing expected."

Wednesday

Josh Billings--"It is now 30 years since a phellow with green goggles on offered tew sell me sumthing for 50 cents, whithc he sed waz worth 5 dollars. I've forgot what it waz, but i remember it waz a beat. And as often as once a year ever since I hav tried the same thing over and got beat every time."

Thursday
T. R.----"The Vice President is really a fifth wheel to the coach. It is not a stepping stone to anything except oblivion."
Thomas Paine.."A new method of thinking has arisen."

Friday

Tommy Heinrich "Catching a fly ball is a pleasure. Knowing what to do with it after you catch it is a business."

WORD FOR TODAY__EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

MONDAY__,ARCH 4, 1957

Bible--"Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. Faith withoug works is dead."

Tuesday--Thomas Hobbes--"[redacted]

"There are very few so foolish that they would not rather govern themselves than be governed by others."

Wednesday--March 6

Frank Crane--"You may be deceived if you trust too much, but you will live in torment if you do not trust enough."

F?P? Dunne "Trust everybody----but cut the cards"

Thursday--Senator Borah"--We cannot stand up before the world and say--'We will help to save civilization' and then in the next breath say--'We will do so only if you pay cash.'"

Friday--Archibald Mac Leish--
Freedom of speech is the freedom th hear and freedom to hear is indeed the whole foundation and reason of freedom to speak.

Monday--March 11, 1957

The Red Queen (Alice in Wonderland) " "It takes all the running you can do to keep in the same place." "If you want to get somewhere else, you must run at least twice as fast as that."

Tuesday
Paul Hoffman--(while speaking of an aid program for dependent nations) "Any-program with any narrower goal), (than to make countries genuinely independent of US and Russia), "would be bad politics, bad psychology, and bad morals"

Wednesday--
Nasser---" History is charged with great historic roles for which we do not find actors."
J.B. Priestly--"In every country we see them rise, the actors who will not use the theatre. And always they bring down disasters from the gods."

Thursday--Lincoln "The legitimate objective of government is to do for a community of people, whatever they have need to have done, but cannot do a t all, or cannot so well do for themselves in their separate capacities."

Friday--Josh Billings--'Courage without discretion is a ram with horns on both ends--he will hav mae fuss on hand than he can well attend to

Monday--February 4, 1957

Frederick William I--"When one in this world wants to decide something with the pen, he does not do it unless supported by the strength of the sword."

Tuesday--Henry Ward Beecher

"Not that which men do worthily, but that which they do successfully is what history makes haste to record."

Wednesday--Elizabeth Jackson--"Whatever our characteristic American virtues are, logic isn't one of them."

W.D. Howells--"Try as you may", you can't be logical and complimentary at the same time."

Thursday Nathaniel Hawthorne

"No man can for any considerable time imploy two standards without finally getting bwildered as to which of them is true.

Friday--Bronson Alcott

"The deepest truths are best read between the lines and for the most part refuse to be written."

CC REPORTING FEB ~~XXXXX~~ 11-14 and FEB 18-22

Monday, Feb 25

ERasmus--Every definition is dangerous

Tuesday--Leonardo da Vinci

"Perspective is the bridle and rudder of painting"

WEdnesday--

James Thurber--"fools rush in where angels fear to tread"--"The angels are all in heaven", "but few of the fools are dead" thursday O. W. Holmes--The great thing is not where we stand , but in what direction we are moving"

Friday--

Benjamin Franklin-- "Energy and persistence conquer all things" "Applause waits on success"

WORD FOR TODAY

MONDAY--JANUARY 21--Innauguration Day 1957

Sidney Hyman--"The American Presidency is as much a sum of outlook and word as it is of law and deed. It is what all Presidents ahde said and felt about the place they held and what the President of the moment may add or alter in this legacy of the past."

Tuesday--Jan 22

U. S. Grant--"We want no more land. We do want to improve what we have..and to see our neighbors improve and go strong that the design of any other could not endanger them.:

WEdnesday--Publilius Syrus--"It is better to have a little than nothing."..."Nothing can be done at once hastily and prudently."

Thursday --Daniel WEbseter

"Confidence is not a thing to be produced by compulsion. Men cannot be forced into trust."

Friday--Churchill-
"If the United States and England do fall apart..and wander astray from the beacon light of their destiny..there is no tnd or measure to the misiries and the confusion which await."

Monday--Jan 28, 1957
Elbert Hubbard--"We get anything we prepare for. Everything that happens is a sequence. This happened today because we did that yesterday."

Tuesday--Theodore Parker

"Politics is the science of exigencies."

Benjamin Franklin--"There is a time to wink as well as to see."

WEdnesday--

Benjamin Franklin--"He that pursues two horses at once does not catch one... and lets the other go."

Thursday--Thomas Fuller--"The wise baker doesn't set the loaf in till the oven's hot."

Friday--Feb 1--

No "Word"

Word for Today
Charles Collingwood reporting December 17--21, 1956

Monday--December 24
Thoreau--"The smallest seed of faith is better than the largest seed of happiness."
G. Washington--"Cultivate peace and harmony with all."

Tuesday--
Peter Marshall--THE Christmas message can never be changed nor quite forgotten although there are many things that tend to make us forget.

Wednesday--
Southey--
"Easier were it to haul the rooted mountain from its base than force the yoke of slavery upon men determinte to be free."

Thursday--
Edmund Burke--
"All that is necessary for the triumph of evel is tyat good men do nothing."

Friday--
Wilson (On the League of nations.)
" ---a reign of law based on the consent of the governed and sustained by the organized opinion of the mankind."

NEW YEAR"S EVE
Heinrich Heine--"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little under standing and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may baackguard each othe r as little as possible iuring the New Year.

Tuesday--
Robert Frost--"I don't hold with people who say 'What's the use?' I wouldn't get up in the morning if I thought we didn't have a direction to go in. Despite our fears and our worries, life continues. It goes on."

Wednesday
Lenin--"The strictest loyalty to the ideas of communism, must be combined with the ability to make all the necessary compromises--to tack, make agreements, zig-zag and retreat."
Thursday
John Adams
"Every man in Congress is a great man--an orator, a critic, a statesman. Therefore every man upon every question must show his oratory, his critisism, and his political abilities."

Friday

David Burnham--"Make big plans. Little plans have no magic to stir man's blood."

WORD FOR TODAY

MONDAY DECEMBER 3, 1956

Churchill--"The price of greatness is responsibility. If the people of the United States has remained in a mediocre station, a factor of no consequence in the movements of the world, they might have remained forgotten and undisturbed beyone their protecting ocean."

Tuesday--Theodore Roosevelt
"The American people abhor a vacuum."
Descartes
"A vacuum is repugnant to reason

Wednesday--Henry Hodson
"In this new world, as in the world that the H-Bomb has destroyed, it remains true that divided we fall.And we have seen enough to know that this objective cannot be won by pious hopes."

Thursday--Lewis Carrol

Battle incident--"Through the looking glass"

Friday--Stephen Vincent Bennet

"If our borthers are oppressed, we are oppressed. If they hunger, we hunger. If their freedom is taken away, our freedom is not secure."

Monday, December 10
Archibald MacLeish
"We should not forget in all the suffering and pain , that we owe the people of Hungary more than our pity. We owe them also pride and praise.

Tuesday

William Penn--"Opportunities should never be lost, because they can hardly be regained."

Wednesday

F.D.R.--"When peace has been broken anywhere, peace of all countries everywhere is in danger."

Thursday
Fred Allen--"A conference is a gathering of important people who singly can do nothing but together can decide that nothing can be done."

Friday--
Jan Masaryk--"In a world where there is no security for little nations, there is no security for big nations."

WORD FOR TODAY

MURROW IN ISRAEL NOVEMBER 5--9----12-16 (back on 16) 1956

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 19

Wendell Holmes--"The great thing in this world," "is not so much where we are but in what direction we are moving. "

Tuesday

John Adams--"The prospect now before us ought to engage the attention of every man of learning to matters of power and of right. That we may be neither led nor driven blindfolded to irretrievable destruction, let every sluice of knowledge be opened and set aflowing."

Wednesday

E. B. White--"When you sit down," "sit down as an American if that makes you feel comfortable. But when you think with longing of the place where you were born, remember that the sun leaves it daily to go somewhere else." (LL. Subbing)

Thursday--
Samuel Morrison--" poor in the goods of this world. They were not of gentle or noble blood. Yet these simple folk were exalted to the stature of statesmen and prophets in their limited sphere, because they firmly believed, and so greatly dared, and firmly endured." (Blair Calrk subbing)

Friday

Kossuth--"The cause of freedom is identified with the destinies of humanity. And in whatever party of the world it gains ground, by and by it will be a common gain for all who desire it."

LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING NOVEMBER 26--30 1956

MONDAY, OCTOBER 22, 1956

Churchill--"I cannot forecast to you the action of Russia." "It is a riddle, wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma. But perhaps there is a key. That key is Russian national interest."

Tuesday--George Washington--"Nothing short of independence, it appears to me, can possibly do."

James R. Lowell--"Tyranny is always weakness."

Wednesday--Edmund Burke--"When I see the spirit of liberty in action, I see a strong principle at work. But we ought to suspend judgement until the first effervescence is a little subsided. I must be tolerably sure before congratulating men upon a blessing that they have really received one."

Thursday--Russel Lynes--"The only graceful way to accept an insult is to ignore it. If you can't ignore it, top it. If you can't top it, laugh at it. If you can't laugh at it, it is probably deserved."

Friday--Prof. Edmond Cahn"The voices of the Republic are not mere discord. Conflicts there must be from time to time. For when all conflicts cease, the spirit of political institutions dies."

Monday, October 29, 1956

Bonner Law--There is no such thing as an inevitable war. If war comes, it will be from the failure of human wisdom."

Tuesday--General George Marshall --"We must take the nations of the world as they are, the human passions and prejudices of people as they exist, and find some way to secure a peaceful world."

Wednesday--Alvin Johnson --"However bravely man may talk, they shrink from the appeal to force until there appears to be no other way out."

Thursday, November 1

Abraham Lincoln (on foreign policy) "Indeed I have none. I live in preventing the storm from blowing down the tent. I drive in the pegs as fast as they are pulled up."

Friday--Churchill-- "The soul of Poland is indestructible, and she will rise again like a rock whicm may for a time be submerged by a tital wave, but which remains a rock."

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 29, 1956
(LAST WEEK OF 1956 SEASON)

MONDAY

"It is one of the most fatal errors to spoil a good cause by ill management" — William Penn

"The virtue of man lies in his ability to correct his mistakes" — 15th Century Chinese philosopher

TUESDAY

"The power that is supported by force alone will often have cause to tremble." — Francis Kossuth

"The measure of civilization is the degree to which cooperative intelligence replaces the method of brute conflict." — John Dewey

WEDNESDAY

"In politics, you must never retreat, never retrace your steps, never admit a mistake. If you have made a mistake, you must persevere. That will put you in the right." — Napoleon

THURSDAY

"Every why has a wherefore." — Shakespeare

"The louder he talked of his honor, the faster we counted our spoons." — R. W. Emerson

FRIDAY

"RThe Lord kinder looks us over and says, wait, you folks are going too fast...Slow up and look yourself over...a bit of silent meditation will do you good." — Will Rogers

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 22, 1956

MONDAY

"As long as ideas influence the minds of men, and as long as men and their ideas are a major component of power, ideas--good or bad--will continue to upset nations, defy armies, and write history."

Chester Bowles

TUESDAY

"I should not regard this as an advance. Nothing is gained by teaching a parrot a new word." George Orwell

"Everything nailed down is coming loose." Marc Connolly

WEDNESDAY

"Nature, when she adds brain, adds difficulty." R. W. Emerson

"With stout hearts and strong arms, we can surmount all difficulties." Henry Clay

THURSDAY

"If all men defined 'wise' and 'honorable' alike, there would be no debate on earth."

Euripides

"In two opposite opinions, if one be perfectly reasonable, the other cannot be perfectly right." Oliver Goldsmith

FRIDAY

"All men desire by nature to know." Aristotle

"To be forewarned is to be forearmed." Old Latin Proverb

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 15, 1956

MONDAY

"Tis easy to see, hard to foresee." — Ben Franklin

"After the event, even the fool is wise"." — Homer

TUESDAY

"Everything comes to him who waits." — (Old English Proverb)

"People count up the faults of those who keep them waiting." — (Old French Proverb)

WEDNESDAY

"Science is a first rate piece of furniture for a man's upper chamber if he has common sense on the ground floor." — Oliver W. Holmes

THURSDAY

"If we could first know where we are, and whither we are tending, we could then better judge what to do." — Abraham Lincoln

FRIDAY

"Simplicity is most rare in our age." — Ovid

WORD FOR TODAY FROM

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 8, 1956

MONDAY

"The disease somehow inheres in tyranny to have faith in no friends." — Aeschylus

"Though the tyrant dies, the tyranny persists." — Cicero

TUESDAY

"It takes two to speak the truth---one to speak, another to hear." — Thoreau

"There is no worse lie than a truth misunderstood by those who hear it." — William James

WEDNESDAY

"It takes great skill and wisdom to make use of victory." — Polybius

"What is defeat? Nothing but education." — Wendell Phillips

THURSDAY

"It seems to me that we want to stand for steadfastness and courage and constructive imagination in our approach to world problems. If we want our influence in the world to be as strong as it should be, we need only think and act as befits our strength." — Henry Ford II

FRIDAY

"The basis of neutrality is not indifference. It is not self interest. The basis of neutrality is sympathy for mankind. It is impartiality of spirit." — Woodrow Wilson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 1, 1956

MONDAY

"A good scare is worth more to a man than good advice."

E. W. Howe

"Defer no time. Delays have dangerous ends."

Shakespeare

TUESDAY

"Whenever the non-Communist left has accepted an alliance with Communism, its fate has been sealed. Initially it serves as a cloak for Communism. It ends by surrendering its power and disappearing into a ditch."

Susanne Labin

WEDNESDAY

"There never has been a time that there were not clouds upon the horizon of this country, and there was one crisis after another that could be named. And always there has been a saving remnant. Always there has been a small faithful minority, faithful to the death."

Carl Sandburg

THURSDAY

"There is a time for all things."

Shakespeare

"He who waits for the right time may wait forever."

Ancient proverb

FRIDAY

"Let us not merely be entertained by the tale. Let us draw a small moral from it. "

Benjamin Franklin

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 25, 1956

MONDAY

"The science that was to make life beautiful has made it hideous."

Irwin Edman

"No man has learned anything rightly until he learns that every day is Doomsday."

R. W. Emerson

TUESDAY

"Man in this moment of history has emerged in greater supremacy over the forces of nature than has ever been dreamed of before. There lies before him, if he wishes, a golden age. He has only to conquer his worst and last enemy---himself."

Winston Churchill

WEDNESDAY

"In all debate, let Truth be your aim, not victory or an unjust interest. And endeavor to gain, rather than expose thy antagonist."

William Penn

THURSDAY

"France is the only country in the world where, if you add ten citizens, you have not made an addition. You have made twenty divisions."

Pierre Daniel

"Even without hope, a man can try."

William the Silent

FRIDAY

"Education is a better safeguard of liberty than a standing army.

Edward Everett

"If the growth of modern science has taught anything, it is that the method of progress is the method of evolution, not revolution."

Robert Millikan

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 18, 1956

MONDAY

"Iowa comes here and goes crazy" — Walter Duranty on Hollywood

"Hollywood is a place where people from Iowa mistake each other for movie stars. It is no place for a professional comedian. The amateur competition is too great." — Fred Allen

TUESDAY

"A man may smile and smile and be a villain still." — Shakespeare

"Imagination rules the world." — Napoleon

WEDNESDAY

"God give me strength to face a fact, though it slay me." — Julian Huxley

"The obvious we see eventually. The completely apparent takes longer." — H.L. Gold

THURSDAY

"If I am worth wooing, I am worth winning." — Longfellow

"The use of traveling is to see things as they are." — Samuel Johnson

FRIDAY

A hero cannot be a hero unless he is in an heroic world." — Nathaniel Hawthorne

"Youth sees through sham with sharp and terrible eyes." — H.L. Menken

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 11, 1956

MONDAY

"The sight of human affairs deserves admiration and pity. And he is not insensible who pays them the undemonstrative tribute of a sigh which is not a sob -- and of a smile which is not a grin."

Joseph Conrad

TUESDAY

"Avoid the pin-pricks that precede the canon shots of war."

Napoleon

"We lose much by fearing to attempt." J. N. Maffitt

WEDNESDAY

"The spy is the king's eye, and he who hath him not is blind."

Ancient saying

"The life of spies is to know, not to be known." George Herbert

THURSDAY

"A disposition to preserve and an ability to improve would be my standard of a statesman."

Edmund Burke

FRIDAY

"By suasion, not by force of arms"... Plutarch

"A wise neuter joins neither but uses both." William Penn

WORD FOR TODAY--1956-57

Monday--Oct 8--Thanks to CC & LL

Tuesday-- Litvinov--"Peace and security cannot be organized on the shifting sands of verbal promises and declarations."

Wednesday--Will Rogers--"All politics is apple sauce"
P.T. Barnum--"More persons, on the whole, are humbugged by believing in nothing, than in believing in too much."

Thursday--O. W. Holmes--"The great thing is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving."
Sherwood Anderson--"Nothing approaching accomplishment grows wearisome."

Friday--Bernard Shaw--"What better do you expect ? You are, I hope, on the side of the angels. But you cannot join them until you die."

Monday-- October 15
Woodrow Wilson--"Nobody can guarantee the world against the ugly passions that sometimes get abroad. But if the nations of the world will in deed and truth agree to put arbitration and discussion always first and war always last, I say that we have an immense insurance against war."

Tuesday--October 16--Ellen Glasgow--the only difference between a rut and a grave is their dimmensions
William Sumner--"Motives and purposes are in the brain and heart of man. Consequences are in the world of fact."

Wednesday--Plautus--"One eye-witness weighs more than ten hearsays. Those who hear, speak what they have heard. Those who see, know beyond mistake."

Thursday --Corey Ford-- "Every political campaign campaign I hear the same old factional arguements back and forth again, and I'm convinced that what this country needs is another party. There's nothing like a party to give everyone a chance to relax."

Friday-- Walt Whitman--I am for those who have never been mastered
Stanley Pargellis-- Everyone knows where liberty begins. It is at the point where people resent being shoved about.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 4, 1956

MONDAY

"Reason.....the power to guess at right and wrong."

Wm. Congreve

"Behold the turtle. He makes progress only when he sticks his neck out."

James Conant

TUESDAY

"As a creature of time, man must approach his problems piece meal. When he does so, he finds that good conflicts with good, and that we pay a price for every step of progress."

Sidney Hook

WEDNESDAY

"Those who would treat politics and morality apart will never understand the one or the other."

John Morley

"Nothing is politically right which is morally wrong."

Daniel O'Connell

THURSDAY

"It is a thing of no great difficulty to raise objection against another man's oration, but to produce another one, a better one, in its place is extremely troublesome."

Plutarch

"Blessed be agriculture, if one does not have too much of it."

Charles Dudley Warner

FRIDAY

"...a disagreement conference..nothing but a Democratic convention with a silk hat on."

Will Rogers

"You go back home, Will, and announce that one of America's muchly advertised talents has been over-estimated. We are not the masters of bunk."

Henry L. Stimson (to Will Rogers)

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 27, 1956

MONDAY

"The emphasis placed solely on the military aspects of world affairs does a disservice to the cause of peace. The more present differences are talked about and treated exclusively as a military problem, the more they tend to become so. "

General Marshal

TUESDAY

"Declarations of independence make nobody really independent." Santayana

"I was not born to be forced. I shall breathe after my own fashion." Thoreau

WEDNESDAY

"I do not believe that civilization will be wiped out. Perhaps two-thirds of the people of the earth might be killed, but enough people capable of thinking, and enough books would be left to start again, and civilization would be restored."

Einstein

THURSDAY

"Fraud lurks in generalities". Old legal maxim

"Every step of progress the world has made has been from scaffold to scaffold and from stake to stake."

Wendell Philipps

FRIDAY

Soviet policy....by Khrushchev

"History is the essence of innumerable biographies." Thomas Carlyle

"Diplomacy is a great thing, if it wasn't so transparent." Will Rogers

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 20, 1956

(CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING FOR THE PREVIOUS THREE WEEKS AND NO QUOTES WERE USED IN HIS FOOTNOTE TO THE DAY'S NEWS)

MONDAY

"I have always claimed that if every farmer eats all he raised, he would not only get fat himself, but farm prices might probably go up. Course, on account of this not being an Economist's idea, it might not work."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"All great changes are irksome to the human mind, especially those attended by great dangers and unsertain effects."

John Adams

"What is more unwise than to mistake uncertainty for certainty, falsehood for truth?"

Cicero

WEDNESDAY

"Lay down a method for everything." Lord Chesterfield

"Unite and lead is the watchword of the wise."

Goethe

THURSDAY

"I have never known a peace made, even the most advantageous, that was not censured as inadequate, and the makers condemned as injudicious or corrupt."

Benjamin Franklin

FRIDAY

"Moscow was not built in a day." Bulganin

"What a good thing Adam had!! When he said a good thing, he knew nobody had said it before." Mark Twain

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 23, 1956

MONDAY

"Nothing is dear if it is good." — H. G. Wells

"A piece of a kid is worth two of a cat.
One leg of a lark is worth the whole body of a kite." — John Heywood

TUESDAY

"It is lawful, and hath been so through the ages, for anyone who has power, to call to account a tyrant." — John Milton

"I have sworn upon the altar of God, eternal hostility against every form of tyranny over the mind of man." — Thomas Jefferson

WEDNESDAY

"All government, indeed every virtue, and every prudent act, is founded on compromise." — Edmund Burke

"Compromise makes a good umbrella, but a poor roof." — James Russell Lowell

THURSDAY

"Nothing can be done hastily and prudently." — Pubilius Syrus

"Whatever the issue, we shall share one common danger, one safety." — Virgil

FRIDAY

"By and by, when each nation has 20-thousand battleships and 5-million soldiers, we shall all be safe. And the wisdom of statesmanship shall stand confirmed." — Mark Twain

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 16, 1956

MONDAY

"We are fighting our sins as practiced by the enemy." — Bernard Shaw

"I am a citizen not of Athens or Greece but of the world." — Socrates

TUESDAY

"Democracy is a charming form of government, full of variety and disorder." — Plato

"Thoughtful, bold and independent minds are essential to wise and considered self government." — Justice Robert Jackson

WEDNESDAY

"Every man should keep a fair sized cemetery in which to bury the faults of his friends." — Henry Ward Beecher

THURSDAY

"Change is inevitable" — Disraeli

"Whosoever adapteth himself shall be preserved to the end." — Lao-Tse

FRIDAY

"Force can not give right." — Thomas Jefferson

"Wherever wisdom is called for, force is of small avail." — Herodatus

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 9, 1956

MONDAY

"If you have time, don't wait for time."
" You may delay, but Time will not." — Ben Franklin

TUESDAY

" The measure of civilization is the degree in which the method of cooperative intelligence replaces the method of brute conflict." — John Dewey

WEDNESDAY

"Though the problems are new, though the tasks set before us are different from the tasks set before our fathers who founded and preserved this Republic, the spirit in which these tasks must be undertaken, is our duty is to be well done, remains essentially unchanged." — Teddy Roosevelt

THURSDAY

"Realities govern wise men." — William Penn

"The line between hunger and anger is thin." — John Steinbeck

FRIDAY

"I shall never ask, never refuse, or never resign an office." — Ben Franklin

"There is nothing in words...believe what is before your eyes." — Ovid

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 2, 1956

MONDAY

"Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it."

Santayana

"Law is merely the expression of the will of the strongest, for the time being."

Charles Madison

TUESDAY

"The hardest tumble a man can make is to tumble over his own bluff."

Ambrose Bierce

WEDNESDAY

"There is grief in indecision."
"No phase of life..whether public or private..can be free from duty."

Cicero

THURSDAY

"Courage, wisdom, an understanding of the democratic procedures. Tolerance. You can't operate the democratic system without tolerance."

General George Marshal
(on "indispensable qualitities for public service)

FRIDAY

" Nationalism is an infantile disease, the measles of mankind."

Albert Einstein

"Born in aniquity and conceived in sin, the spirit of nationalism has never ceased to bend human institutions to the service of dissension and distress."

Veblen

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 24, 1956

MONDAY

"Two sisters by the goal are set --cold disappointment and regret." — Sir Walter Scott

"Defeat never comes to any man until he admits it." — Josephus Daniels

TUESDAY

"This guy Marx, why he was like one of those effie-iency experts. He could explain to you how you could save a million dollars, and he couldn't save enough himself to eat on. He never did a tap of work." — Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"No matter so hard but policy can prevail." — George Pettie

"He says one thing standing up, another sitting down." — Erasmus

THURSDAY

"Men's common failing is to confide their plans." — Spinoza

"Look for a tough wedge for a tough log." — Pubilius Syrus

FRIDAY

"The only guide to a man is his conscience; the only shield to his memory is the recitude and sincerity of his actions. It is very imprudent to walk through life without this shield..because we are so often mocked by the failure of our hopes." — Winston Churchill

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 17, 1956

MONDAY

"The shortest answer is doing." — George Herbert (re segregation)

"I shall do nothing in malice, for what I deal with is too vast for malicious dealing." — A. Lincoln

TUESDAY

"A man often pays dear for a small frugality." — R. W. Emerson

"To make a fine choice, yet decline to pay for it, is folly." — Dorothy Fosdick

WEDNESDAY

"Doctrines get inside a man's reason, and betray him against himself." — William Graham Sumner

THURSDAY

"Realities are less dangerous than fancies." — Carl Becker

"The race is not always to the swift, but that is the place to look." — Hugh Keough

FRIDAY

"What has been done, indicates what can be done." — Irwin Edam

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 27, 1956

MONDAY

"It is far more convenient to commit an act of violence, and afterwards excuse it, than laboriously consider the arguments, and lose time in listening to objections."

Immanual Kant

TUESDAY

"Rather go to bed supperless than rise in debt." Ben Franklin

"Let us be happy and live within our means, even if we have to borrow money to do it." Artemus Ward

WEDNESDAY

"There are some who complain of nothing to do. For my own part, I cannot get enough Nothing to do. I feel as if I never had leisure to unpack a tenth part of the luggage of my life and thoughts." G.K. Chesterton

THURSDAY

"We are two halves of a pair os scissors when apart, Pecksniff. But together, we are something."

Dickens in Martin Chusslewith

FRIDAY

"Diplomacy is a disguised war in which states seek to gain by barter ind intrigue, the objectives they would have to gain more clumsily by means of war."

Randolph Bourne

"A diplomat is a man who always remembers a woman's birthday, but never her age." Robert Frost

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 20, 1956

MONDAY

"You have a budget like you have a limit in a poker game. You are not supposed to go beyond it till at least an hour after the game has been started."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"Small words sometimes grow into mighty strife." Cato

"A word before is worth two behind." Scottish proverb

WEDNESDAY

"It is the motives which chiefly merit attention in the ways of Man."

Goethe

"Every difficulty slurred over is a ghost to disturb you later on." Frederick Chopin

THURSDAY

"Thinking is like loving and dying. Each of us must do it for himself."

John Dewey

FRIDAY

"Better no words than words unfitly placed." Randle Cotgrave

"I have always had poor eyes, and I couldn't read a lot. I think I have been spared a lot of confusion."

Charles F. Kettering

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 13, 1956

MONDAY

"Were we directed from Washington when to sew and when to reap, we should soon want bread."

T. Jefferson

"Those who labor in the earth are the chosen people of God."

" "

TUESDAY

"A man may have the finest automobile, be the best driver, have perfect vision, and a heart of gold. But if he tries to find his way around Paris with a map of Chicago, he just will not arrive where he set out to go."

Walter Lippman

WEDNESDAY

"The central point of all civil liberty, the crucial factor in all neighborly confidence, is the citizens reaction to those whose views he does not share."

Barbara Ward

The history of the world is none other than the progress of the consciousness of freedom."

Hegel

THURSDAY

"Nobody knows which way you turn, after you have learned to destroy the world in a single night."

E.B. White

FRIDAY

"Talk much about a thing and you will put it into peoples' heads."

H.H. Brackenbridge

Monday--January 7, 1956

James Thurber--"What is the difference between a statesman and a politician?"
Elder Thurber--"The statesman is a politician in a position to get us all into trouble and if we're lucky, out of it."

Tuesday--

Bismarck--"Russia seems to be impregnable, but she is not. Poland is her weak spot."

Wednesday
Talleyrand--"the reputation of a man is like his shadow, gigantic when it precedes him and pigmy in tts proportions when it follows."

Thursday--
Churchill--"The past should be forgiven, even when it cannot be forgotten.If it cannot be forgotten, it should not set the pattern for the future."

Friday
Charles Coldon--"The pains of power are real, its pleasures imaginary."

Monday--January 14

E. B. White--"New York City perfectly illustrates both the dilemma and the solution..at once the perfect target and the perfect demonstration of non-violence-capital of everything, housing the deliberations by which the planes are to be stayed and their errand forestalled."

Tuesday--Jan 15
Dr. John Hutchinson--"Democracy is imperriled if in a crisis men want security more than they want the burdens and struggles of freedom."

Wednesday--
Kin Hubbard"There's too blamed many ways to spend money and not enough new ways to get it. "
Stephen McKenna--"We can always live on less when we have more to live for. "

THursdya
Pubioius Syrus "It is the unity of feelings and affections that makes the strongest relationship."

Friday--
Willis Fisher--"Men have learned to travel faster and faster, though on erands not conspicuously improved. This, I believe, is called progress."

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 6,1956

MONDAY

"What is peculiarly French in the French character is but a cloak. The French are rather fond of that cloak and take good care of it. But they are fully aware that it is a cloak which they are free to alter and even discard."

Albert Guerard

TUESDAY

No "Word"--Howard K. Smith with Footnote--no quote

WEDNESDAY

"The farmer is covetous with his dollar, and with reason. He knows how many strokes of labor it represents. His bones ache with the day's labor that earned it."

Ralph W. Emerson

THURSDAY

"Destiny has laid upon our country..the responsibility of leadership in the free world."....."Whatever America hopes to bring to bring to pass in the world must first come to pass here in the heart of America."

Eisenhower

FRIDAY

"There is a place where love begins and a place where love ends, and love asks nothing."

Carl Sandburg

"Love supreme defies all sophistry."

George Elliot

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 30, 1955

MONDAY

"It is a bad plan that cannot be altered". — Pubilius Syrus

"Never promise more than you can perform." — " "

TUESDAY

"Thou shalt not raise a false report." — Exodus

"That which passes out of one mouth passes into a hundred ears." — Ernest Bramah

WEDNESDAY

"Democracy is based on the conviction that there are extraordinary possibilities in ordinary people." — Harry Emerson Fosdick

THURSDAY

"The times do change and move continually." — Edmund Spenser

"There are no birds in last year's nest." — Longfellow

FRIDAY

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little understanding. And for the understanding, a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 23, 1955

MONDAY

"Do not drive the horses with a whip, but with oats."

Old Russian Proverb

"Times change & we change with them"

Cellarius

TUESDAY

"The fundamental principles which govern the handling of postage stamps and millions of dollars are exactly the same. They are so simple that a fool can't learn them, so hard that a lazy man won't try. "

Phillip Armour

WEDNESDAY

"It was considered to be something of a nuisance for it made a racket and scared the horses. After a thousand miles I sold it to Charles Ainsley of Detroit for 200 dollars. That was my first sale, although I had built the car not to sell, but only to experiment with. Then I wanted to start another car.

Henry Ford --on his first car.

THURSDAY

"It has been said that trees are imperfect men and seem to bemoan their imprisonment rooted in the ground. But they never seem to me. They grip the ground as though they like it, they go wandering in all directions with every wind --going and coming like ourselves. I never saw a discontented tree."

John Muir

FRIDAY

"The legend of St. Nick is the last living relic of the of the vanishing world of dreams. The faries are gone, the witches and ghosts are gone. Santa Claus alone lingers with us. Let us keep him as long as we can. Children learn to see soon enough, too clearly, too well. After all, in this universe of ignorance anything may be true - even our dreams."

Gamiel Bradford

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 16, 1955

MONDAY

"There is millions of people in this country who know the color of Mary Pickford's hair but think the presidential office is hereditary."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"The discipline that is identical with trained power is also identical to freedom. Genuine freedom, in short, is intellectual. It rests in the trained power of thought."

John Dewey

WEDNESDAY

"We can not always oblige, but we can always speak obligingly."

Voltaire

"Diplomacy is like good book keeping. He don't believe you and you don't believe him. So it always balances."

Will Rogers

THURSDAY

"The great advantage of the Americans consists in their being able to commit faults which they may afterwards repair."

De Tocqueville

"We should never do wrong when people are looking."

Mark Twain

FRIDAY

"You shall learn by experience."

Terrence

"To most men, experience is like the stern lights of a ship, which illumine only the track it has passed."

Coleridge

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 9, 1955

MONDAY

"A word unspoken is, like the sword in thy scabbard, thine.
If vented, thy sword is in another's hand."

Francis Quarles

TUESDAY

"Bigness can become an expression of the heroic size of man himself as he comes to new found greatness."

David Lilienthal

"The great and the little have need of one another."

Thomas Fuller

WEDNESDAY

"The more present difficulties are talked about and treated as a military problem, the more they tend to become so."

General Marshal

THURSDAY

"There is, properly, no history, only biography."

Emerson

"The first and essential quality towards being a statesman is to have a public spirit."

Richard Steele

FRIDAY

"Americans have little faith. They rely on the power of the dollar."

Emerson

"Upon a good foundation, a good building may be raised.
And the best foundation in the world is money."

Cervantes

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 2, 1955

MONDAY(FOOTNOTE TO NEWSCHARLES COLLINGWOOD)

"It is not customary for the corpse to reply to a funeral oration." — Faure

TUESDAY (C.C. NO QUOTE)

WEDNESDAY (MURROW"WORD")

"How little do my countrymen know what precious blessings they are in possession of and which no other people enjoy."

Thomas Jefferson

THURSDAY

"A leopard does not change its spots." — Latin proverb

"I will arm me, being thus forewarned." — Shakespeare

FRIDAY

"~~[illegible]~~ Save me from my friends. I can defend myself from my enemies." — Villars

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 25, 1955

MONDAY

"A great nation is not lead by a man who simply repeats the talk of the street corners or the opinions of the newspapers. A nation is lead by a man who hears more than those things, who speaks a new principle for a new age--who speaks what no man else knows -- the common meaning of the common voice."

Woodrow Wilson

TUESDAY

No quotes

WEDNESDAY

"If you love and serve men you cannot, by any hiding or stratagem, escape the remuneration. Serve and thou shalt be served."

Emerson

THURSDAY

"Whatever prosperous hour Providence bestows, receive it with a thankful hand, and defer not the enjoyment of the comforts of life."

Horace

"Rest and be thankful" .

William Wordsworth

FRIDAY

"In a democracy the opposition is not only tolerated as constitutional, but must be maintained because it is indispensable."

Walter Lippman

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 18, 1955

MONDAY

"There is little friendship in the world, least of all between equals." — Francis Bacon

"Friendship is a creature that always seeks a companion." — Plutarch

TUESDAY

"You can commit no greater folly than to sit by the roadside until someone comes along and invites you to ride with him."

John Gough

WEDNESDAY

"As soon as there is life, there is danger...." "And there is nothing which more quickly throws us into dangers than a hunger to avoid them."

Emerson & Montaigne

THURSDAY

"The cause of freedom is identified with the destinies of humanity. And in whatever part of the world it gains ground, by and by it will be a common gain to all those who desire it."

Louis Kossuth

"Depend upon it, the lovers of freedom will be free." — Edmund Burke

FRIDAY

"Truth itself hath not the priviledge to be employed at all times and in every kind - be her use ever so noble." — Montaigne

"Truth is truth, to the end of reckoning." — Shakespeare

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 11, 1955

MONDAY

"Travel is fatal to prejudice, bigotry, and narrow mindedness, and many of our people need it sorely on these accounts. Broad, wholesome, charitable views of men and things can not be acquired by vegetating in one little corner of the earth all one's life."

Mark Twain

TUESDAY

"In politics, it is difficult sometimes to decide whether the politicians are humorless hypocrites or hypocritical humorists."

Frank Kent

"The results of political changes are hardly ever those which their friends hope or their foes fear."

T. H. Huxley

WEDNESDAY

"I've never subscribed to the theory that coming events cast their shadows before."

Kathleen Knight

"Often do the spirits of great events stride on before the events, and in today, already walks tomorrow."

Shiller

THURSDAY

"There is often a scarsity of friendship, but not of friends. When competition brings us to the test, then we find friendship is self interest."

Thomas Fuller &
Sir Samuel Tuke

FRIDAY

"By so much more you are welcome, by how much more you are wished for."

John Lyly

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 4, 1955

MONDAY

"A goal, to be worthy of us, must be far above our faltering feet. Life is no one day's journey; there will be a tomorrow and our goal must fit that, too."

Harold Dye

TUESDAY

"In the moral battle that engulfs the world, we must make firm our faith that the voluntary association of informed, free men is stronger than any police whipped multitude--liberty has restraints...but no frontiers.

TUESDAY

"In the great battles of life, no brilliancy or intellect, no perfection of bodily movement will count when weighed in the balance against that assemblage of virtues, of moral qualities which we group together under the name of character."

Elizabeth Dunn

THURSDAY

"Nothing is to thy interest that ever forces thee to break thy promise, surrender thine honor, hate, suspect or curse anyone, or to lust after anything behind walls or curtains"

Marcus Aurelius

"Even wisdom yields to self interest."

Pindar

FRIDAY

One will not go far wrong if one attributes extreme actions to vanity, average ones to habit, and petty ones to fear."

Nietsche

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 28, 1955

MONDAY

"Thoughtful men, once escaped from the blinding influences of traditional prejudice, will find in the lowly stock whence man has sprung, the best evidence of the splendor of his capacities; and will discern in his long progress through the past, a reasonable ground of faith in the future. "

Thomas Huxley

TUESDAY

"Man will not only endure, he will prevail. He is immortal, not because he alone among creatures has an inexhaustible voice, but because he has a soul, a spirit capable of compassion and sacrifice and endurance."

William Faulkner

WEDNESDAY

"A federation of all humanity, together with a sufficient measure of social justice to insure health, education and a rough equality of opportunity, would mean such a release and increase of human energy as to open a new phase in human history."

H.G. Wells

THURSDAY

"We must not regard a representative of the people as a sentinel on the watchtower of liberty....public officers are the servants and agents of the people."

Daniel Webster &
Grover Cleveland

FRIDAY

"No one expects Utopia, and no one person can prepare a land fit for heroes. But almost anyone can try to understand the past and the present to enrich the future."

Houston Peterson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 21, 1955

MONDAY

"True wisdon consists not only in seeing what is before your eyes but in foreseeing what is to come....9/10 of wisdom is being wise in time."

Terrance and TR

TUESDAY

"Governments, like clocks, go from the motions men give them; ans as governments are made and moved by men, so by them they are ruined. Wherefore, governments rather depend upon men than men upon governments.

William Penn

WEDNESDAY

"Duty is whatever the day demands."

Goethe

"There is no duty we underrate so much as the duty of being unhappy."

R.L. Stevenson

THURSDAY

Liberty comes alone and lives alone where the hard won rights of men are held inalienable, where governments themselves may not infringe. It was this concept for which America's sons have died on a hundred battlefields."

Herbert Hoover

FRIDAY

"There is a danger in rickless change, but a greater danger in blind conservatism...when you're through changing, you're through."

Henry James &
Bruce Barton

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 14, 1955

MONDAY

"The lessons of great men are lost unless they reinforce upon our minds the highest demands we make upon ourselves, unless they drive sluggish wills forward in the direction of their highest ideals."

Jane Addams

TUESDAY

"Even a mistake can turn out to be the one thing necessary to a worthwhile achievement...Mistakes are often the best teachers."

Henry Ford &
James Froude

WEDNESDAY

"A knowledge that another has felt as we have felt and seen things not much otherwise than we have seen them, will continue to the end to be one of life's choicest blessings."

R. L. Stevenson

THURSDAY

"The conduct of a wise politician is ever suited to the present posture of affairs. Often, by foregoing a part, he saves the whole, and by yielding in a small matter, secures a greater."

Plutarch

"No man is so savage that he cannot become civilized if he will lend a patient ear."

Horace

FRIDAY

"Things and actions are what they are, and the consequences of them will be what they will be; why then should we desire to deceive?

Bishop Joseph Butler

ORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 7, 1955

MONDAY

"It is the sense of greatness that keeps a nation great." — William Watson

"In the last analysis -- a nation is the unity of the people". — S.T. Coleridge

TUESDAY

"The secret of success is always constancy to purpose." — Disraeli

"Success is little more than a chemical compound of man with moment." — Philip Guedella

WEDNESDAY

"New times demand new measures and new men; the world advances and in time outgrows the laws that in our father's day were best. And doubtless, after us some purer scheme will be shaped out by wiser men than we. — James Russell Lowell

THURSDAY

"Where is the man who owes nothing to the land in which he lives? Whatever the land may be, he owes to it the most precious thing possessed by man -- the morality of his actions and the love of virtue." — Rousseau

FRIDAY

"A moment's insight si sometimes worth a life's experience." — O. W. Holmes

"The only guide to man is his conscience." — Churchill

ORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
SEPTEMBER 30, 1955

MONDAY

"Hope and patience are two soverign remedies for all; the surest repesals, the softest cushions to lean on in adversity." — Robert Burton

TUESDAY

"The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution, which at any time exists, until changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people, is sacredly obligatory upon all." — George Washington

WEDNESDAY

"Let truth and falsehood grapple, for whoever knew truth put to the worse in a free and open encounter?" — John Milton

"The dignity of truth is lost with much protesting."

THURSDAY

"You may often make excuses--but you can never make excuses for yourself.....so don't make excuses...make good." — Publius Syrus & Elbert Hubbard

FRIDAY

"We have wind today, let us get drunk today. The sorrows of tomorrow can be borne tomorrow." — Doolittle

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
SEPTEMBER 23, 1955

MONDAY

"Tis good to have a shelter against every storm." — Sir Robert Howard

"To see a storm is better than to feel it." — Thomas Fuller

TUESDAY

"Pride can be the spring of malice and desire of revenge, of rash anger and contention." — Robert Leighton

"Hatred is self punishment." — Hosea Bellou

WEDNESDAY

"A populace never rebels from passion for attack, but from impatience with suffering. Where there is content there will be no revolution." — Edmund Burke & Confucius

THURSDAY

"The curse of a universal state is that it is a product of 'slavery by thw sword'--and we have seen that to be no salvation at all. What we are looking for is a free consent of free peoples to dwell in unity, and to make, uncoerced, far reaching adjustments and concessions without which this ideal cannot be realized." — Arnold Toynbee.

FRIDAY

"Inward sincerity influences outward deportment. Where one is wanting, there is great reason to suspect the absence of the other." — Laurence Stern

"The greatest friend of truth is time." — Charles Colton.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
SEPTEMBER 16, 1955

MONDAY

"An empty stomach is not a good political adviser... for a hungry man is always an angry man." — Albert Einstein & James Howell

TUESDAY

"I have noticed that when chickens quit quarreling over their food, they often find there is enough for them. I wonder if it might not be the same way for the human race." — Don Marquis

WEDNESDAY

"A wise man will make more opportunities than he finds." — Francis Bacon

"He who seizes the right moment is the right man." — Goethe

THURSDAY

"Quarrels would not last long if the quarrel was only on one side." — La Rochefoucauld

"God has made us neighbors; let justice make us friends." — Senator Borah

FRIDAY

"Life is a test, and this world is a place of trial. Always the problems, (or it may be the same problem), will be presented to every generation in different forms." — Sir Winston Churchill

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
SEPTEMBER 9, 1955

MONDAY

"When I was at home, I was in a better place." — William Shakespeare

"Of journeying, the benefits are many; the freshness it brings to the heart, the seeing and the hearing of marvelous things, the delight of beholding new cities, the meeting of unknown friends." — Sadi

TUESDAY

"Have patience and endure" — Ovid

""Write on your doors this saying wise and old--be bold, be bold and everywhere be bold--but not too bold. Yet, better the excess than the defect, better more than less." — Longfellow

WEDNESDAY

"If you want peace, the thing you've got to do is just show you're up to fighting, too--because--the safety of the people is the highest law." — Cicero & James Russell Lowell

THURSDAY

"My nearest and dearest enemy." — Thomas Middleton

"Man's greatness can be measured by his enemy." — Don Piatt

FRIDAY

"Laws and institutions must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind. As new discoveries are made, new truths disclosed, and manners and opinions change with the change of circumstance - institutions must advance also and keep pace with the times." — Thomas Jefferson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
SEPTEMBER 2, 1955

MONDAY

"When a man is busy, why liesure strikes him as a wonderful pleasure. Faith and at liesure once he is--straightaway he wants to be busy."

Browning

TUESDAY

"It would be an unspeakable advantage, both to the public and private, if men would consider that great truth that no manis wise or safe but that he is honest."

Sir Walter Raleigh

"Let us run with patience that race that is set before us."

New Testament

WEDNESDAY

"The cause of freedom is identified with the destinies of humanity, and in whatever part of the world it gains ground, by and by it will be a common gain for all who desire it. "

Louis Kooth

THURSDAY

"No man has the power to let another prescribe his faith. Faith is not faith without believing --and no outward chain nor outward force of any kind could ever compel the soul of any man to believe or disbelieve.

Thoma s Jeffe
& Thomas Ca

FRIDAY

"He travels the fastest who travels alone" Kipli

"For my part, I travel not to go anywhere but to go for the travel's sake. The great affair is to move. " R.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JULY 1, 1955
(THIS WILL BE MR. MURROW'S LAST BROADCAST UNTIL THE FALL)

MONDAY

"Working together is even more effective than talking together." Ralph Sockman

"Often by foregoing a part we save the whole, and by yielding in a small matter, secure a greater." Plutarch

TUESDAY

"This is a good world. We need not approve of all the items in it, nor of all the individuals in it. But the world itself is more than its parts or individuals-- it has a soul, a spirit, a fundamental relation deeper than all relations."

Jan Smuts

WEDNESDAY

"To us, he is no more a person now, but a 'climate of opinion'."

W.H. Auden

"You can't build up a reputation on what you're going to do." Henry Ford

THURSDAY

"The wickedest work in this world is symbolized , not by a wine glass, but by a looking glass. " Lord Chesterfield

"She wears her clothes as if they were thrown on her with a pitchfork." Jonathan Swift

FRIDAY

"Every now and then, be completely idle- do nothing at all." Sydney Smith

"It is impossible to enjoy idling unless one has plenty of work to do." Jerome K. Jerome

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 24, 1955

MONDAY

"It is necessary to hope, though hope should always be deluded, for hope itself is hapiness; and its frustrations, however frequent, are yet less dreadful than its extinction."

Samuel Johnson

TUESDAY

"Summer will not last forever" — Erasmus

"Heat! Maam, it's so dreadful that I find there's nothing left but to take off my flesh and sit in my bones." — Sydney Smith

WEDNESDAY

"It is more painful to do nothing than something." — George Herbert

"What you do in this world is a matter of no consequence. The question is what can you make people believe you have done." — A. Conan Doyle

THURSDAY

"If we work upon marble it will perish. If we work upon brass, time will efface it. If we rear temples, they will crumble to dust. But if we work upon men's immortal minds, if we embue them with high principles, we engrave on those tablets something no time can efface."

Daniel Webster

FRIDAY

"The power of ideas is incalcuable. We see no power in a drop of water. But let it get into a crack in the rock and be turned into ice and it splits the rock; turn it into steam and it drives powerful engines. Something has happened to that drop of water which makes it active and effective... the power that is latent in it."

Albert Schweitzer

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 17, 1955

MONDAY

"Blessed is he who expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed."

Alexander Pope

"To travel hopefully is a better thing than to arrive and the true success is to labor."

R.L. Stevenson

TUESDAY

"Men are often like knives with many blades; they know how to open one and only one--all the rest are buried in the handle, and they are no better than they would have been if they had been made with but one blade. Many men use but one or two faculties out of the score they are endowed with."

Henry Ward Beecher

WEDNESDAY

"A man surprised is half beated"

Thomas Fuller

"Not with dreams, but with blood and iron shall a nation be built."

Swinburn

THURSDAY

"Religious controversy does only harm. It destroys humble inquiry after truth and throws all the energies into an attempt to prove ourselves right--a spirit in which no man gets at the truth."

Frederick Robertson

"We have just enough religion to make us hate--but not enough to make us love."

Jonathan Swift

FRIDAY

"Word" was replaced at the last minute with a late news bulletin.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 10, 1955

MONDAY

"Perhaps the most valuable result of all education is to make yourself do the thing you have to do when it ought to be done, whether you like it or not. It is the first lesson that ought to be learned, but it is probably the last lesson we learn thoroughly."

Thomas Huxley

TUESDAY

"There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct, or more uncertain in its success than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of things."

Machiavelli

WEDNESDAY

"The first law is that the historian shall never dare to conceal the truth; the second that he shall not set down what is false; the third that there shall be no suspicion in his work of either favoritism or prejudice."

Cicero

THURSDAY

"A man of sense may be in haste, but can never be in a hurry, because he knows that whatever he does in a hurry, he must necessarily do very ill."

Lord Chesterfield

"Move slowly; never negotiate in a hurry."

Aaron Burr

FRIDAY

"If a man will begin with certainties, he will end with doubts. But if he will be content to begin with doubts, he shall end in certainty."

Francis Bacon

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JUNE 3, 1955

MONDAY

"The principal task of friendship is to foster ones friends illusions." Arthur Schnitzler

"I respect faith, but doubt is what gives you an education." Wilson Mizner

TUESDAY

"Justice demands that legitimately constituted authority be respected and obeyed; that laws wisely made for the common good be conscientiously observed by all." Pope Pius 12

WEDNESDAY

"Alice in Wonderland to the King---Where shall I begin, please, your Majesty?"
"Begin at the beginning", the king said very gravely. "And go on til you come to the end. Then stop."

THURSDAY

"What another would have done as well as you, do not do it; what another would have said or written as well, do not say or write it. Be faithful to that which exists nowhere but in yourself and thus make yourself indespensible."

Andre Gide

FRIDAY

"Nothing is ever forgotten; and not an oath is ever uttered that does not continue to vibrate through all time -- in the wide spreading current of time." William Cowper

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING MAY 27, 1955

CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING. NO WORD FOR TODAY

CC's "Footnotes" on Selling Bull — Editorializing — Stork at the Maternity Ward — Davy Crockett Boom —

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 20, 1955

MONDAY

"There can be no greater service to mankind and no nobler mission than devotion to world peace." — H.S. Truman

"The good will that conditions peace must be positive and active. Men of good will must be agents of peace." — W.O. Carver

TUESDAY

"Speech that deals with important truths should be unadorned and plain." — Seneca

"It is man that makes truth great, not truth that makes man great." — Confucius

WEDNESDAY

"There are interests by the sacrifice of which peace it too dearly purchased. One should never be at peace to the shame of his own soul." — E.H. Chapin

THURSDAY

"I don't care for a man who can spell a word only one way." — Mark Twain

"I will sit down now, but the time will come when you will hear me again." — Disraeli

FRIDAY

"The greatest asset of any nation is the spirit of its people. And the greatest danger that can menace any nation is the breakdown of that spirit -- the will to win and the courage to work". — George Cortelyou

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 13, 1955

MONDAY

"The brave man is not one who feels no fear - for that were stupid and irrational. The brave man is he who bravely dares the danger nature shrinks from."

Joanna Baille

TUESDAY

"When our hopes tend to break, let our patience hold." Thomas Fuller

"In the end, patience will achieve more than force." Edmund Burke

WEDNESDAY

"No one can with safety, long expose himself to danger. Whom disaster often passes by, she finds at last."

Seneca

He that fears danger in time seldom feels it." Randle Cotgrave

THURSDAY

"It is hope alone which maintains most of mankind." Sophocles

"There are no hopeless situations. There are only hopeless men." Clare Booth

FRIDAY

"It's the way a man uses luck that brings him eminence and makes us all pronounce him wise."

Plautus

Be firm. One constant element in luck is genuine solid Teutonic luck." O. W. Holmes

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MAY 6, 1955

MONDAY

"Satire has always shone among the rest and is the boldest way, if not the best -- to tell men freely of their foulest faults, to laugh at their vain deeds and vainer thoughts."

John Dryden

TUESDAY

"There is no limitation to what you can do except the limitations of your own mind as to what you cannot do."

Darwin Kingsley

"Nothing is settled until it is settled right." Frank Vanderlip

WEDNESDAY

"All too often we pay statesmen for what they say instead of what they do." C.C. Collon

"The greatest orator in the world is success." Napoleon

THURSDAY

"Many politicians lay it down as a self evident proposition that no people ought to be free until fit to use their freedom. But this maxim is worthy of the fool in the old story who had resolved not to go into the water until he had learned to swim."

Thomas MacCauley

FRIDAY

"It is a good horse that never stumbles, and a good wife that never grumbles." John Ray

"Victory and defeat are each of the same price." Thomas Jefferson

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 29, 1955

MONDAY

"To know what to mistrust is the mother of safety." — La Fontaine

"A superabundance of suspicion is a kind of political madness." — Francis Bacon

TUESDAY

"A moment's insight can be worth a life's experience." — O. W. Holmes

"A desire for knowledge is the natural feeling of mankind, and every human being whose mind is not debauched will be willing to give all he has to get it." — Samuel Johnson

WEDNESDAY

"When you can guard against danger, it is stupid to let it get near you." — Terrence

"The mere apprehension of a coming danger has put many into a situation of utmost danger." — Lucan

THURSDAY

"Mankind lives on promises." — T.C. Haliburton

"Be careful with your promise. Undertake not what you cannot perform." — George Washington

FRIDAY

"Difficulties are a severe instructor, but it is difficulties which show what men are." — Edmund Burke

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 22, 1955

MONDAY

"The spirit of liberty is not a jealousy of our own particular rights, but a respect for the rights of others; an unwillingness that anyone, whether high or low, should be wronged or trampled under feet."

William Ellery Channing

TUESDAY

"There needs a long time to know the world's pulse."

Edward Herbert

"Regard life on earth not as a place for enjoyment, but a place where humanity is on trial."

Abdulla Ansari

WEDNESDAY

"The injuries we do and those we suffer are seldom weighed on the same scales."

Aesop

"The only way to measure injury is by malice."

Thomas Fuller.

THURSDAY

"Anyone can commence a war. It's always easy to begin one...but very difficult to stop one."

Sallust

"The real and lasting victories ~~of~~ are those of peace not war son

FRIDAY

"In language, clearness is everything."

Confucius

"It is sweet language that multiplies friends."

Thomas Fuller

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FRIDAY, APRIL 15, 1955

MONDAY

"In health, there is freedom. Health is the first of all liberties."

Henri-Frederick Amiel

TUESDAY

NO WORD

WEDNESDAY

"The only stable state is one in which all men are equal."

Aristotle

"The one time when we are all equal is in the presence of death!

Pubilius Syrus

THURSDAY

"There is no method of drawing up an indictment against a whole people."

Edmund Burke

"Nature never deceives us; it is always we who deceive ourselves."

Rosseau

FRIDAY

"The friendships of the world are often confederacies in vice."

Joseph Addison

"Without confidence, there is no firendhsip."

Epicurus

WORD FOR TODAY
FROM EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 8, 1955

MONDAY --Foot Note to the News--Larry Lesueur reporting)

"It Just won't be the same without him) (A Londoner referring to Churchill's retirement.)

TUESDAY No footnote

WEDNESDAY

"Sir Anthony Eden is a great successor to a great Prime Minister!" (Eisenhower on Eden)

THURSDAY (The Word--Murrow)

"Silence at the proper season is wisdom and better than speech." Plutarch

"People who make no noise are always dangerous" de la Fontaine

FRIDAY

"When you incline to have new clothes, remember that a patch on your coat and money in your pocket is better."

Ben Franklin

"A modest woman, dressed out in all her finery is the most tremendous object of the whole creation." Oliver Goldsmith

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
APRIL 1, 1955

MONDAY

"No technical knowledge can outweigh the knowledge of humanities. Our inheritance of well-founded, slowly-conceived codes of honor, morals and manners are far more precious than anything which scientific discoveries could bestow."

Churchill

TUESDAY

"In the case of news, we should always wait for the Sacrament of confirmation."

Voltaire

"As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

The Bible

WEDNESDAY

"Talking is like playing upon the harp; there is as much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their vibration as in twanging them to bring out their music.

Oliver W. Holmes

THURSDAY

"From saying to doing is a long step."

Italian Proverb

"Let us match deeds with words."

Plautus

FRIDAY

"It is the restfullest vocation there is. When the spirit of prophecy comes upon you, you merely take your intellect and lay it off in a cool place for a rest; and unship your jaw and leave it alone. It will work itself. The result is prophecy."

Mark Twain

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 25, 1955

MONDAY

"Don't think of retiring from the world until the world will be sorry that you retire. I hate a fellow whom pride or cowardice or laziness drive into a corner and who does nothing when he is there but sit and growl. Let him come out as I do and bark."

Samuel Johnson

TUESDAY

"What all men are really after is some form -- or perhaps some formula - for peace."

Joseph Conrad

" We can go forward hopefully only if we build on the solid recognition that things are as they are and not as we should like to have them."

Elmer Davis

WEDNESDAY

"I have small patience with the antiquarian habit which magnifies the past and belittles the present." "Change is inevitable -- at once a penalty and a privilege."

James Buchnan

FRIDAY

"He must fear many whom many fear."

Publius Syrus

"The thing that numbs the heart, is that men cannot devise some scheme of life to banish fear."

James Hall

THURSDAY

"With effervescing opinions, as with the not-yet-forgotten champagne, the quickest way to let them go flat is to let them get exposed to the air."

Oliver Wendell Holmes

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 18, 1955

MONDAY

"With a common origin, a common literature, a common religion -- and common drinks -- what is longer needful to the cementing of the cementing of the two nations."

Mark Twain
(Speaking of the British)

TUESDAY

"It's not really worth much being rich. Too much money seems to take the taste and color out of things. It oughtn't to, but it does."

J.B. Priestly

WEDNESDAY

"What another would have done as well as you, do not do it. What another would have said as well as you, do not say it. Be faithful to that which exists nowhere but in yourself."

Andre Gide.

THURSDAY

"The first law, is that the historian shall never dare to set down what is false; the second, that he shall never dare to conceal the truth; the third, that there shall be no suspicion in his work of either favoritism or prejudice!

Cicero

FRIDAY

"Peace...Peace is what I seek and public calm; endless extinction of unhappy hates."

Matthew Arnold

Thomas a Kempis--"We should have much peace if we would not busy ourselves with the sayings and doings of others.

THE WORD FOR TODAY FROM

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS

FOR THE WEEK ENDING

MARCH 11, 1955

MONDAY

"The illustration which solves one difficulty by raising another solves nothing."

Horace

TUESDAY

"The reason why worry kills more people than work is because more people worry than work."

Robert Frost

"As soon as one is at rest in this world, off he goes on something else to worry about."

Mark Twain

WEDNESDAY

"The two great tasks of mankind down through the ages are also tasks for the individual down through the years of his alloted span---to come to terms with nature and with ones fellows."

Stuart Chase

THURSDAY

"We are mad, not only individually but nationally. We check manslaughter and isolated murders, but what of war and the much vaunted crime of manslaughtering whole peoples."

Seneca

FRIDAY

"The weather and my mood have little connection. I have my foggy and my fine days within me."

Pascal

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
MARCH 4, 1955

MONDAY

"When taxes first started, Noah must have taken into the ark two taxes:one male and one female - and did they multiply bountifully! Next to guinea pigs, taxes must have been the most prolific animal."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"The composition of a speech is indeed difficult; the art of speaking in public is one I have never completely mastered."

Winston Churchill to E.R. Murrow

"If this be true, let all of us who attempt to practice the art desist in despair."

E.R. Murrow

WEDNESDAY

"How little can we foresee the consequences, either wise or unwise action; of virtue or malice. Without this measureless and perpetual uncertainty, the drama of human life would be destroyed."

Churchill

THURSDAY

"Justice is the end of government. It is the end of civil society. It ever has been and ever will be pursued until it is obtained, or until liberty be lost in the pursuit."

Alexander Hamilton

"Judging from the main portions of the history of the world so far, justice is always in jeopardy."

Walt Whitman

FRIDAY

"Anybody can become angry; that is easy. But to be angry with the right person, and to the right degree, and at the right time, and for the right purpose, and in the right way - that is not within everybody's power and is not easy.

Aristotle

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 25, 1955

MONDAY

"There are but two powers in the world --the sword and the mind. But in the long run, the sword is always beaten by the mind."

Napoleon

TUESDAY

"In Washington's day there was no income tax, no cover charge, no disarmament conferences, no luncheon clubs, no stop-lights, no static, no head winds, no drinking problem, no margins, no ticket speculators, no golf pants, and no Scotch jokes. My Lord, living in those times, who wouldn't be great."

Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"He who feels the respect due to others, can not fail to inspire in them regard for himself."

General Schofield

THURSDAY

"The greatness of man does not lie in his being faultless. Error is sometimes inevitable. Real virtue lies in recognising the faults that can be set right and striving to correct them. From the willingness to make such an effort, there must emerge a new and better individual."

Helen Kuo

FRIDAY

"It is curious that our own offences should seem so much less heinous than the offenses of others. I suppose the reason is that we know all the circumstances that have occasioned them and so manage to excuse in ourselves what we can not excuse in others."

Somerset Maugham

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
FEBRUARY 18, 1955

MONDAY

"Our most threatening enemy is not the evil intention of the ordinary man, for his intention is usually good. A far worse danger is the increasing confusion of our time."

G. Lowes Dickinson

TUESDAY

"In this atomic age, at the gray dawn of 'one world', patience is more useful than ever before. Life is growing more complex. We have to deal with more and more people and things. And in a high speed age, with many choices, the faster we move the surer it is that haste makes waste.

Walter Pitkin

WEDNESDAY

"The progress of civilization has been uneven, but every generation can add something, be it little or much, to the heritage of the past. Today we face the greatest challenge history has ever known; we must live up to our heritage and add something to it."

Roy Chapman Andrews

THURSDAY

"A word is not a crystal --transparent and unchanging. It is the skin of a living thought and may vary greatly in color and content, according to the circumstances and time in which it is used."

Oliver Wendell Holmes

FRIDAY

"The tissue of the life to be we weave with colors all our own. And in the field of destiny we reap as we have sown."

John Greenleaf Whittier

FOOTNOTE TO THE NEWS (Larry LeSueur Reporting) on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday
WORD FOR TODAY (Mr. Murrow Returned) on Thursday, and Friday)

EDWARD R. MURROW & THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 11, 1955

MONDAY

"When work loses its interest and becomes a labor; when you are hesitant about taking on new work because of age and fear of getting tired; when you are frightened by new ventures and start looking back on an imaginary past-- that's the time to retire."

Archbishop of York

TUESDAY

"We have anxious thoughts about the problems of nuclear energy. The latest discoveries confront humanity with a force which is almost beyond the capacity of man's brain to comprehend or measure. They present a choice and a challenge. Is this vast power to be developed for the benefit of man, or is it to be used to bring ruin upon the human race?"

Communique from the Meeting of the Prime Ministers of the British Commonwealth.

WEDNESDAY

The Russians, who've taken credit for the invention of just about everything, and association with everyone in history who serves their ends, are now "proud to announce" that research shows that the Greek playwright, Aristophanes, 24 hundred years ago gave evidence of being on the side of "progressive mankind". The Russians base their association with Aristophanes on the fact that he recognized "the inhumanity of war".

THURSDAY

"These are the days when the world is less in need of supine comfort than of high gallantry and faith in an inner integrity. During times of distress, doubt and weariness, we can find inspiration in the words of Columbus:This day, we sailed on."

Cornelia Otis Skinner

FRIDAY

"In each man's life, situations arise when he can take the gambler's chance and -- sometimes -- carry it off. In the long run, however, true success belongs to those whose strength is real, because it is backed by courage and character."

General Vandergrift

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
"EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS"
FOR THE WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 4, 1955

MONDAY

"If we pulled together as much to put over a siege of peace as we do a spell of war, we would be sitting pretty. But we can't hardly wait for a war to end to start taking it out on each other. Peace is kinder like prosperity. There is mighty few nations that can stand it."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"There is a secret greater than the atom bomb which mankind has not yet discovered: How, out of complexity to distill simplicity; out of knowledge, essential understanding; out of confusion, clarity. Upon its discovery will depend survival."

Sir Norman Angell

WEDNESDAY

"Whatever the number of a man's friends, there will be times in his life when he has one too few. But if he has only one enemy, he is lucky indeed if he has not one too many."

Lord Lytton

THURSDAY

"There are some situations in which we are unable to take action, when all we can do is brace ourselves against the shock. But there are others in which we have the power to act. And that is when we need all our firmness and singleness of purpose. For with patience and strength, we can endure all things, and achieve many."

Jan Struther

FRIDAY

"No one of us can possibly know all the forces acting in each human situation." "Perhaps others, also ready to despair, are also working - digging to undermine the foundations of the Dark Tower of Wrong.""Who knows - with all of us working together for what we believe in - perhaps tomorrow the tower will fall."

Dorothy Canfield Fisher.

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 28, 1955

MONDAY

"Where is the man who owes nothing to the land in which he lives? Whatever the land might be, he owes to it the most precious thing possessed by man:the morality of his actions."

Rousseau

TUESDAY

"If there is righteousness in the heart, there will be beauty in the character. If there is beauty in the character, there will be harmony in the family home. If there is harmony in the home, there will be order in the nation. When there is order in the nation, there will be peace in the world."

Old Chinese Proverb
Quoted from Mary Martin
Used on Person to Person
last season

WEDNESDAY

"In the works of man, as in those of nature, it is really the motives that merit attention."

Goethe

THURSDAY

"Life is just one revolution after another, a series of crises in which we take farewell of the past and, if we are wise, meet the future. Every time is a good time to live in -- if we know what to do with it."

John Erskine

FRIDAY

"In the forum of reason and deliberation, was can never be anything but a makeshift. A statesman who proposes war as an instrumentality admits his incompetency; a politician who makes war as a counter in the game of parties is a criminal."

William Graham Summer

WORD FOR TODAY FROM
EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
FOR THE WEEK ENDING JANUARY 21, 1955

MONDAY

"A duty dodged is like a debt unpaid; it is only deferred, and we must come back and settle the account at last."

Joseph Newton

"The span of life was lent for lofty duties, not selfishness."

Aubrey de Vere

TUESDAY

"This government is ours. It doesn't belong to anybody but the people of America. Don't treat it as an impersonal thing; don't treat it as something to snear at; treat it as something that belongs to you."

Harry Hopkins

WEDNESDAY

"We have all the comforts brought by all the new inventions of one sort or another. We can talk over the telephone to a friend 10 thousand miles away. We have control of power never dreamed of by man. Yet, we have still lost much of our sense of security."

James Adams

THURSDAY

"The chief ingredients in the composition of those qualities that gain esteem and praise, are good nature, truth, good sense and good breeding."

Joseph Addison

FRIDAY

"Beware of rashness, but with energy and sleepless vigilance go forward."

A. Lincoln

"That man is prudent who neither hopes nor fears anything from the uncertain events of the future."

Anatold France

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOT TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 14, 1955

MONDAY

"There is nothing too little for so little a creature as man. And it is by studying little things that we attain the great art of having as little misery and as much hapiness as possible."

Samuel Johnson

TUESDAY

"Nothing is lost upon the man who is bent upon growth; who is preparing for his work by keeping his eyes, mind and heart open. For often what he gathers will serve him in unexpected moments in unforseen ways."

Hamilton Mabie

WEDNESDAY

"In diplomacy, we often talk on principle and act on interest."

Walter Lander

"The cost of a thing is the amount of life which is required to be exchanged for it -- immediately or in the long run."

Thoreau

THURSDAY

"Cannons and fire arms are cruel and damnable machines. I believe them to have been the direct suggestion of the devil. If Adam had seen in a vision the horrible instruments his children were to invent, he would have died of grief."

Martin Luther

FRIDAY

"One secret act of self-denial, one sacrifice of inclination to duty, is worth all the mere good thoughts, warm feelings, passionate prayers in which idle people indulge themselves."

Cardinal Newman

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
JANUARY 7, 1955

MONDAY

"I honor the man who is willing to sink half his present repute for the freedom to think. And when he thought - be his cause strong or weak - will risk the other half for the freedom to speak."

James Russel Lowell

TUESDAY

"There is an idea abroad among moral people that they should make their neighbors good. One person I have to make good - myself. And my duty to my neighbor is much more nearly expressed by saying that I have to make them happy - if I may."

Robert L. Stevenson

WEDNESDAY

"Education is the leading of human souls to what is best and making what is best out of them. These two objects are always attainable together - and by the same means. For the training which makes men happiest in themselves also makes them most serviceable to others."

John Ruskin

THURSDAY

"A man's country is not a certain area of land, of mountains, rivers and woods. It is a principle; and patriotism is loyalty to that principle."

George Curtis

FRIDAY

"A doctrine is an article of faith. It is something which you are bound to believe - not always because you have some rational ground for believing it true, but because you have to. "

William Summer

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 31, 1954

MONDAY

"Great occasions do not make heroes of cowards; they simply unveil them to the eyes of men. Silent and imperceptable, as we make or sleep, we grow strong or we grow weak and at last some crisis shows us what we have become."

Canon Wescott

TUESDAY

"You can ask a Russian any question in the world and if you give him long enough, he will explain their angle, and it will sound plausible enough. Communism to me is one third practice and two thirds explanation."

Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"Ask what you please, look where you will, you can not get to the bottom of the resources of Britain. No demand is too novel or too sudden to be met. No need is too unexpected to be supplied; no strain is too prolonged for the patience of our people. No suffering or peril daunts their hearts. "

Churchill

THURSDAY

"We need new friends. Some of us are cannibals who have eaten their old friends up. Others must have renewed audiences before whom to reenact an ideal version of their lives."

Logan Pearsall

FRIDAY

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid, a little understanding. And for the understanding, a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year."

Heinrich Heine

12/27/54

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer: "This is a world in which each of us, knowing his limitations, will have to cling to what is close to him, to what he knows, to what he can do, to his friends and his tradition and his love, lest he be dissolved in a universal confusion and know nothing and love nothing."
Dec. 27, 1954, in addressing closing Columbia University bicentennial celebration.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 24, 1954

MONDAY

"What you have said, I will consider; what you have to say I will with patience hear, and find a time both meet to hear and answer such high things."

Shakespeare

TUESDAY

"We will have to want peace, want it enough to pay for it, before it becomes an accepted rule."

Eleanor Roosevelt

"Nothing gives one person so much advantage over another as to remain always cool and unruffled under all circumstances."

Thomas Jefferson

WEDNESDAY

"Nothing remains the same. When a man goes back to look at the house of his childhood, it has always shrunk. There is no instance of such a house being as big as the picture in memory and imagination called for. But the house hasn't altered. It's just the first time it has been in focus."

Mark Twain

THURSDAY

"There is nothing more difficult, more perilous, or more uncertain in its success than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of things."

Machiavelli

FRIDAY

"There is a feeling of eternity in youth which makes amends for everything, and to be young is to be among the immortal gods."

William Hazlitt.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 17, 1954

MONDAY

"When dealing with people, let us remember that we are not dealing with creatures of logic. We are dealing with creatures of emotion, creatures bustling with prejudices, and motivated by pride and vanity."

Dale Carnegie

TUESDAY

"For good or ill, air mastery is today the supreme expression of military power and fleets and armies, however necessary and important, must accept subordinate rank. This is a memorable milestone in the march of man."

Churchill

WEDNESDAY

"Freedom from fear, oppression and injustice will be ours only in the measure that men who value such freedom are ready to sustain its possession, to defend it against every thrust from within or without."

Eisenhower

THURSDAY

"No form of society can be reasonably stable in which the majority of the people are not fairly content. People can not be content if they feel that the foundations of their lives are wholly unstable."

James Truslow Adams

FRIDAY

"I do service that I may have a horse to ride and be fed by a prince."

Horace

"Nor are we to use the living creatures like old shoes, or dishes, and throw them away when they are worn out and broken with service."

Plutarch

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK
ENDING NOVEMBER 19, 1954

MONDAY

"Into your hands will be placed the exact results of your own thoughts; you will receive that which you earn, no more, no less. You will fail, remain, or rise with your thoughts, your vision, your ideal. You will become as small as your controlling desire, as great as your dominant inspiration."

James Allen

TUESDAY

"Conversation should touch on everything and concentrate on nothing."

Oscar Wilde

"It is better to debate a question without settling it, than to settle it without debate."

Joseph Jaubert

WEDNESDAY

"The Frenchman who, with a fund of virtue, learning, and good sense, has the manners and good breeding of his country, is the perfection of human nature."

Lord Chesterfield

THURSDAY

"Peace has to be created in order to be maintained. It is the product of faith, strength, energy, will, sympathy, justice, imagination and triumph of principle." "It will never be achieved by passivity and quietism."

Dorothy Thompson

FRIDAY

"There is one form of hope which is never unwise and which certainly does not diminish the increase of knowledge. In that form it chances its name and we call it patience.

Edward Bulwer Lytton

"Life is not easy for any of us. But what of that? We must have perseverance and above all, confidence in ourselves."

Marie Curie

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 10, 1954

MONDAY

"Firmness of purpose is one of the most necessary sinews of character and one of the best instruments of success. Without it genius wastes its efforts in a maze of inconsistencies."

Lord Chesterfield

TUESDAY

"No man lives without jostling and being jostled; in all ways he has to elbow himself through the world, giving and receiving offense."

Lord Chesterfield

"Always behave as if nothing has happened, no matter what has happened."

Arnold Bennet

WEDNESDAY

"What men need today in this time of trouble is not so much a way out as a way of high and manly living within."

Wilmont Lewis

"We shall prosper as we learn to do the common things of life in an uncommon way. Let down your buckets where you are."

Booker T. Washington

THURSDAY

"The tarrif is an instrument invented for the benefit of those who make against those who buy. As there is more buys than there is makes, it is a document of the minority...but what a minority."

Will Rogers

FRIDAY

"Justice without power is inefficient; power without justice is tyranny. Justice and power must therefore be brought together so that whatever is just may be powerful and whatever is powerful may be just."

Pascal

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
DECEMBER 5, 1954

MONDAY

"We fret ourselves to reform life, in order that posterity may be happy, and posterity will say, as usual, 'In the past it used to be better...the present is worse than the past.'"

Anton Chekov

"Strange that posterity jumps at making atomic bombs, but it is stopped cold by a heavy snow storm."

Herb Graffis

TUESDAY

"The price of greatness is responsibility" — Churchill

"Great hopes make great men" — Thomas Fuller

"It is great to be great, but it is greater to be human." — Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"Discourtesy does not spring merely from one bad quality, but from many...foolish vanity, from ignorance of what is due to others, from indolence, from stupidiyt, from distraction of thought, from contempt of others, from jealousy."

La Bruyere

THURSDAY

"The most precious of all possessions is power over ourselfes, power to withstand trial, to bear suffering, to front danger... the power to follow up our convictions however resisted by menace and scorn...the power of calm reliance in scenes of darkness and storms."

John Locke

FRIDAY

"The minute a thing is long or complicated it confuses. Whoever wrote the 10 Commandments made em short. They may not always be kept, but they can be understood. And in Moses time, people didn't gang up on you and say:you change that commandment or we won't play."

Will Rogers

WARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 26, 1954

MONDAY

"Ideas are, in truth, forces. Infinite, too, is the power of personality. A union of the two always makes history."

Henry James

TUESDAY

"Always vote for a principle, though you vote alone, and you may cherish thw sweet reflection that your vote is never lost."

John Q. Adams

"Integrity in men is to be measured by their conduct, not their professions."

Junius

WEDNESDAY

"It is not alone the fact that the amateur carver misses the joints and tries to cut through the largest bones that fills him with regret and his lap full of sage and onions. It is the horrible thought that the entire company is looking at him."

Bill Nye

THURSDAY

"Let our object be our country. And, by the blessing of God, may that country itself become a vast and splendid monument, not of oppression and terror, but of wisdom, of peace and of liberty, upon which the world may gaze with admiration forever."

Daniel Webster

FRIDAY

"If you want war, nourish a doctrine - the most frightful tyrants to which men ever are subject. Doctrines get inside of a man's reason and betray him against himself. Civilized men have done their fiercest fighting for doctrines."

William Summer

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 12, 1954

MONDAY
"Live in deeds, not years; in thought, not breath; in feelings, not figures on a dial. Do not count time by heart throbs. He most lives, who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best."

Phillip Bailey

TUESDAY
"The most solid comfort one can fall back upon is the thought that the business of ones life is to help, in some small way, to reduce the sum of ignorance, degredation, and misery on the face of this beautiful earth."

George Elliot

WEDNESDAY
"Logic is logic, and by disagreeing with its laws, even emperors can be beguiled into charges which should not beventured upon except in the shelter of plenty of lightning rods."

Mark Twain

THURSDAY

"Here rests in honored glory, an unknown soldier, known but to God".

Tomb of the Unknown Soldier

"Kid, you are an emblem and a symbol, black or white, rich or poor, hero or just a guy who did his best. You have much to say to us and you could 'tell us off'. But we can say little to you except, 'Thanks, soldier, and we're sorry we haven't been exactly worthy of it.'"

Hy Phillips

FRIDAY REPUTATION

"It's a maxim with me that no man was ever written out of a reputation but by himself."

Richard Bentley

"A wounded reputation is seldom cured"

"Reputation is often got without merit, and lost without fault."

Old Proverbs

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK ENDING
NOVEMBER 5, 1954

MONDAY

"The promising season ends on Tuesday and the same night the alibi season opens. To show you what campaign promises amount to, can you remember back a few weeks ago when the promise was made on both sides that the campaign was to be run on a high plane. The campaign ends on Tuesday, but it will take two generations to sweep up the dirt."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"There is only one redeeming thing about this election. It will be over at sundown. And when the votes are counted, let everybody, including the candidates, get into a good humor as quick as they got into a bad one. Let's all be friends again, for one of the evils of Democracy is that you have to put up with the man you elect whether you like him or not. That's why we call it Democracy."

Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"It's all over, and what a relief. Of all the inconsistences, of all the back-tracking, of all the hanging opinions, of all the waiting to see what the majority will do; of all the trading back and forth with each other for support--and what has it proved? That this country runs in spite of parties. And if we didn't have to stop and play politics, and administration could almost make a Garden of Eden out of us."

Will Rogers

THURSDAY

"The qualities specially belonging to a leader are reason and calm judgement."

Tacitus

"Hail to the Chief who triumphant advances."

Sir Walter Scott

FRIDAY

"Those, who in confidence of superior capacities or attainments, neglect the common maxims of life, should be reminded that nothing will supply the want of prudence; and that negligence, long continued, will make knowledge useless, and genius contemptible."

Samuel Johnson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK
ENDING OCTOBER 29, 1954

MONDAY

"A good report maketh the bones fat." Old Testament

TUESDAY

"Come pretty near having two holidays of equal importance in the same week: Haloween and Election---and of the two, Election Day provides the most fun. On Haloween they put pumpkins on their heads. On Election Day they don't have to."

Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"No saint, no hero, no discoverer, no prophet, no leader ever did his work cheaply and easily and painlessly....and he only is advancing in life whose heart is getting softer, whose blood warmer, whose brain quicker, and whose spirit is entering into a living peace."

Walter Lippman &
John Ruskin

THURSDAY

"Power is the most intoxicating of all immortal drugs."

Percival Wren

"Want of principles is power. Truth and honesty set a limit to our efforts which impudence and hypocricy easily overlap."

Hazlit

FRIDAY

"I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." Patrick Henry

"The dreams of the future are better than the history of the past." Thomas Jefferson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK
ENDING OCTOBER 22, 1954

MONDAY

"There are many 'isms' to perplex us --Nazism, Communism, Fascism, etc. But most of them will cancel each other out. There is only one 'ism' that kills the soul and that is pessimism."

Lord Tweedsmuir

TUESDAY

"The depth of onces conviction measures the breadth of his influence."

J. N. Hunt

WEDNESDAY

"That old alibi about the country not being able to pay is all applesauce. There is no debt in the world too big for this country to pay if they owe it. And the best insurance against another war is to take care of the boys who fought the last one. You may want to use them again."

Will Rogers

THURSDAY

"If one advances confidently in the direction of his dreams and endeavors to life the life which he has imagined, he will meet with a success unexpected incommon hours."

Thoreau

FRIDAY

"Society, we believe, is constantly advancing in knowledge. The tail is now where the head was some generations ago. It is delightful to think that in due time, the last of those who struggle in the rear of the great march will occupy the place now occupied by the advanced guard.

McCauley

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR THE WEEK
ENDING OCTOBER 15, 1954

MONDAY

"Governments, like clocks, go from the motion men give them. And as the governments are made and moved by men, so by them they are ruined, too! But if men be good, government can not be bad."

William Penn

TUESDAY

"Knowing pups are like dogs and kids are like goats, so used I to compare great things with small."

Virgil

"Take heed that thou make no comparisons, but if anybody happened to be praised for some brave act or virtue, praise not another for the same virtue in his presence, for every comparison is odious."

Francis Hawkins

WEDNESDAY

"Be no ashamed to say what you are not ashamed to think."

Montaigne

"Frankness always invites frankness."

Emerson

THRUSDAY

"Age is a quality of the mind. If you have left your dreams behind, if hope is cold, if your ambitions fires are dead, then you are old. But if from life you take the best, and if from life you hold the jest, if love you hold--then no matter how the years go by, no matter how the birthdays fly, you are not old.

Edward Tuck

FRIDAY

"We watched the weather all through that awful night, and kept an eye on the barometer for the least change, but there was none. Words can not describe the feeling that that friendly, hopeful, steadfast thing was in that season of trouble. It was a defective barometer. But if I should be in such a situation again, I would not wish to be with any barometer but that one.

Mark Twain

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 8, 1954

MONDAY

"To improve the golden moment of opportunity, and catch the good that is within our reach is the great art of life."

Samuel Johnson

TUESDAY

"A statesmen gains little by arbitrary exercise of iron clad authority upon all occasions for this wounds the just pride of his subordinates and thus tends to undermine his strength. A little concession, now and then, where can do no harm, is the wisest policy."

Mark Twain

WEDNESDAY TIME

"Time is money, and very good money too, to those who reckon interest by it."

Charles Dickens

"Make use of time. Let not advantage slip."

Shakespeare

THURSDAY

"Talent alone cannot make a writer. There must be a man behind the book."

Emerson

"What a writer asks his reader is not so much to like as to listen."

Longfellow

FRIDAY

"When dealing with people, let us remember that we are not always dealing with creatures of logic. We are dealing with creatures of emotion, creatures bustling with prejudices and motivated by pride and vanity."

Dale Carnegie

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR WEEK ENDING
OCTOBER 1, 1954

MONDAY

"Silence, at the proper season is wisdom, and better than speech."

Plutarch

"There is an eloquent silence that serves sometimes to approve, sometimes to condemn; there is a mocking silence; there is a respectful silence."

LaRochefoucauld

TUESDAY

"It is just now becoming generally known that a hot head and cool feet are enough to bring disaster even to a well man."

O. Byron Cooper

WEDNESDAY

"Our actions are like our rhymes to which anyone can fit such lines as he chooses."

LaRochefoucauld

"Brave actions never want a trumpet."

Thomas Fuller

THURSDAY

"Blessed is he who expects nothing, for he shall never be disappointed....what we anticipate seldom occurs and what we least expect generally happens."

Pope &
Disraeli

FRIDAY

We often cloak our weaknesses in big words."

Ovid

"Words may show a mans wit, but his actions show his meaning."

Ben Franklin

EDWARD. R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 24, 1954

MONDAY

"Society is built upon trust and trust upon confidence in one another's integrity."
Robt. South

"One can positively never be deceived if one mistrusts everything, even one's own skepticism."
Arthur Schnitzler

TUESDAY

"Responsibility gravitates to the power that can carry out the responsibility. If you alone can do what ought to be done, then that oughtness rests on you. You can't dodge it."
Lynn Landrum

WEDNESDAY

"Liberty is a conquest. It does not lie at the beginning of history and the struggle of the human race on this earth; it lies at the end of it. And it is one of the richest and finest fruits of civilization."
William Summer

THURSDAY

"Grant us brotherhood, not only for this day but for all our years -- a brotherhoos not of words, but of deeds. We are all of us children of the earth; grant us that simple knowledge. If our brothers are oppressed, then we are oppressed."
S.V. Benst

FRIDAY

"When we conquer enemies by kindness and justice we are apt to win their submission than by victory in the field. In the one case they yield to necessity; in the other, by their own free choice."
Polibius

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 17, 1954

MONDAY

Russia likes to worry the whold world. She just loves to put a thumb in the soup and let the guests see it's in there. The whole world's nerves are jumpy anyhow. Right now anybody with a sheet over his head can run the whole world home and under the bed.

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"Politics is not an exact science." Bismarck

"Everything is twice as large, measured on a three-year-old's three-foot scale as on a thirty-year-old's six foot scale." O.W. Holmes

WEDNESDAY

There never yet was human power which could evade, if unforgiven, the patient search and vigil long, of him who treasures up a wrong.

Lord Byron

THURSDAY

"Education is a companion which no misfortune can depress, no crime can destroy, no enemy can alienate, no despotism can enslave. Without education, what is man? A splendid slave, a reasoning savage."

Jos. Addison

"The nation that has the schools has the future." Bismarck

FRIDAY

"Up to a certain point it is good to know that there are people in the world who will give us love and unquestioned loyalty. I doubt, however, if it is good for us to feel assured of this without the accompanying obligation of having to justify this devotion by our own behavior.

E. Roosevelt

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR THE DAY" FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 10, 1954

MONDAY

"What is more blessed than to put care aside, and spent with distant travel, we come home again, and rest on the couch we longed for? This, this alone, is worth all such toils."

Catulus

TUESDAY

"Whilst we deliberate how to begin a thing, it often grows too late to begin with...he has accomplished half who has made a beginning; so dare to be wise--begin;"

Quintillian &
Horace

WEDNESDAY

"Undertake not what you cannot perform, but be careful to keep your promise."

G. Washington

"Integrity in men is measured by their conduct, not their professions."

Junius

THURSDAY

"Careless of things which are near, we pursue eagerly things which are far away."

Pliny the Younger

"The more you know, the more you can save yourself and that which belongs to you."

Charles Kingsley

FRIDAY

"We may achieve climate, but weather is thrust upon us." O Henry

"The Man who is prepared has his battle half fought." Cervantes.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 3, 1954

MONDAY

"Memory, what wonders it performs."

Plutarch

"Prudence, like experience, must be paid for."

Sheridan

TUESDAY

"A man's true greatness lies in the consciousness of an honest purpose in life, founded on a just estimate of himself, and a steady obedience to the rule which he knows to be right, without troubling himself about what others may think"

Marcus Aurelius

WEDNESDAY

"Difficulty is a severe instructor"

Edmund Burke

"whatever we accomplish is of little importance, because what we accomplish is always measured by what others do in relation to it."

John Winant

THURSDAY

"The mind anxious about the future is full of misery." Seneca

"He is wise, who places neither fear nor hope in the uncertain future."

Anatole France

FRIDAY

"There is no real wealth but the labor of man. Were the mountains made of gold, and the valleys of silver, the world would not be one grain of corn richer; no one comfort would be added to the human race."

Shelly

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JULY 2, 1954

MONDAY

"Our children, relations, friends, honors, houses, lands and enjoyments, the goods of nature and fortune, are only loan. It is our misfortune and our sin to fancy they are given. We start, therefore, and are angry when the loan is called in. We think ourselves masters when we are only stewards and forget that to each of us one day it will be said: 'Give an account of thyself.'" — Bishop Thomas Horne

TUESDAY

"Without knowing the force of words, it is impossible to know men." — Confucius

"A word that is not spoken never does any mischief." — Charles Dana

WEDNESDAY

"There are two days of the week about which and upon which I never worry. One of these days is Yesterday and the other day I do not worry is Tomorrow." — Robert Burdette

THURSDAY

"The table is the only place where a man is never bored during the first hour." — Savarin

"Man is the only animal that can remain on friendly terms with the victims he intends to eat until he eats them." — Samuel Butler

FRIDAY

"Never is as much politics indulged in under the guise of freedom and liberty. They are five percent of what George Washington did, and 95 percent what the speaker intends to do. What this country needs on July the Fourth is not more liberty or more freedom - it's a Roman candle that only shoots out of one end." — Will Rogers

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JUNE 25, 1954

MONDAY

"I hold it a noble task to rescue from oblivion those who deserve to be eternally remembered." — Pliny the Younger

"History is sometimes the shadow of a great man or woman." — Pierre Van Paassen

TUESDAY

"There is a vast difference between toleration and liberty. Toleration is a concession; liberty is a right; toleration is a matter of expediency; liberty a matter of principle; toleration is a grant of man; liberty is a gift of God." — George Truett

WEDNESDAY

"A man must see before he can say." — Thoreau

"In the mountains of truth, you never climb in vain. Either you already reach a higher point today or you exercise your strength in order to be able to climb higher tomorrow." — Nietzsche

THURSDAY

"Nothing is more troublesome than the effort of thinking." — Sir James Bryce

"It is much less what we do than what we think which fits us for the future." — Philip Bailey

FRIDAY

"Mishaps are like knives, that either serve us or cut us, as we grasp them by the blade or handle." — Herman Melville

"Hope and patience are two sovereign remedies for all, the surest repasals, the softest cushions to lean on." — Robert Burton

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JUNE 18, 1954

MONDAY

"Education is the cheapest defense of nations - one thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning." — Edmund Burke and James Russell Lowell

TUESDAY

"The consciences of the weak are the consciences of fear." — Edmund Burke

"Weak things united often become strong." — Thomas Fuller

WEDNESDAY

"The miserable have no other medicine but hope." — Shakespeare

"Every production of genius must be the production of enthusiasm." — Disraeli

THURSDAY

"There is nothing more tragic in life than the utter impossibility of changing what you have done." — John Galsworthy

"God offers to every mind its choice between truth and repose. Take which you please - you can never have both." — Emerson

FRIDAY

"He who would acquire fame must not show himself afraid of courage." — William Simms

"Fame comes only when deserved and then it is as inevitable as destiny, for it is destiny." — Longfellow

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JUNE 11, 1954

MONDAY

"We make little account of that vague, formless, inert mass, that mighty underlying force which we call "the people," but the throne which the people supports, stands; when that support is removed, nothing in this world can save it." — Mark Twain

TUESDAY

"No form of society can be reasonably stable, in which the majority of the people are not fairly content. People cannot be content if they feel the foundations of their lives are wholly unstable." — James Truslow Adams

WEDNESDAY

"Humor is gravity concealed behind the jest." — John Weiss

"Everything is funny as long as it is happening to somebody else." — Will Rogers

THURSDAY

"The problem involves a spiritual resurgence and improvement of human character that will synchronize with our almost matchless advance in science, art, literature and all material developments of the past two thousand years. It must be of the spirit if we are to save the flesh." — Gen. Douglas MacArthur

FRIDAY

"The best way to keep good acts in memory is to refresh them with new." — Francis Bacon

"Our actions are judged good or evil according to our intentions." — Edward Lane

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JUNE 4, 1954

MONDAY

"It is well to learn caution by the misfortunes of others." — Publilius Syrus

"Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." — New Testament

TUESDAY

"What art was to the ancient world, science is to the modern." — Disraeli

"The reason science, which saves work and makes life easier, brings us little happiness is because we have not yet learned to make sensible use of it." — Einstein

"What art was to the ancient world, science is to the modern." — Disraeli

WEDNESDAY

"You impress others by your own faith and they will have faith in you only in the degree that you have faith in yourself." — Granville Kleiser

"Modesty cannot be taught; it must be born." — Syrus

THURSDAY

"The greatest things ever done on earth have been done by little and little, little agents, little persons, little things, by everyone doing his own work, filling his own sphere, holding his own post and saying: 'Lord, what wilt thou have me do?'" — Thomas Guthrie

FRIDAY

"There could be no honour in a sure success but much might be wrested from a sure defeat." — Lawrence of Arabia

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING MAY 28, 1954

MONDAY

"Moderation is a fatal thing. Nothing, he said, succeeds like excess." — Oscar Wilde

"There is due measure in all things. There are fixed limits, beyond and short of which right can find no place." — Horace

TUESDAY

"Threats without power are like powder without ball." — Nathan Bailey

"Arms have never yet saved a nation from war, nor have they given security to either strong or weak from attack." — Ramsey MacDonald

WEDNESDAY

"Let him who gropes painfully in darkness of uncertain light lay this precept well to heart. Do the duty which lieth nearest to thee, which thou knowest to be a duty. The second duty will already have become clearer." — Thomas Carlyle

THURSDAY

"There is no force which can stand up against a fierce, a free and stalwart spirit. The voice of such a one is louder than the roll of guns. And though it sags down to a whisper, it will be heard around the world." — Heywood Broun

FRIDAY

"An two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind." — Shakespeare

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING MAY 21, 1954

MONDAY

"The Government is us; we are the government - you and I." Theodore Roosevelt

"A secret ceases to be a secret if it is once confided. It is like a dollar bill - once broken, it's never a dollar again." Josh Billings

TUESDAY

"Education is a companion which no misfortune can depress, no crime can destroy, no enemy can alienate, no despotism can enslave." Joseph Addison

"The important thing is not that every child be taught, but that he be given equal opportunity to learn." Sir John Lubbock

WEDNESDAY

"Truth is not only violated by falsehood, it may be equally outraged by silence." Henri Amiel

"Every truth has practical consequences and these are the tests of truth." William James

THURSDAY

"The pivot on which our lives must turn is the deep realization that every person is a dignified, essential human soul and that we are being guilty of gross inhumanity when we snub or abuse him." Joshua Liebman

FRIDAY

"The minute a thing is long and complicated it confuses. Whoever wrote the Ten Commandments made 'em short. They may not always be kept, but they can be understood. They are the same for all men." Will Rogers

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING MAY 14, 1954

MONDAY faith

"It is cynicism and fear that freeze life; it is faith that thaws it out and sets it free." — Harry Emerson Fosdick

"Tis not the dying for a faith that's so hard; tis living up to it that is difficult." — Thackeray

TUESDAY

"Peace has to be created in order to be maintained. It is the product of faith, strength, energy, will, sympathy, justice, imagination, and the [illegible] of principle. Peace will never be achieved by passivity and quietism." — Dorothy Thompson

WEDNESDAY - leadership

"Leadership is the art of getting somebody else to do something you want done because he wants to do it." — President Eisenhower

"If you ever live in a country run by a committee, be on the committee." — William Graham Sumner

THURSDAY sentiment, ideas

"The sentimental echo of ideas, either good or bad, unfortunately influences man more than do the ideas themselves." — Dunoir

FRIDAY

"Bravery founded on hope of recompense, experience of success, or rage or ignorance of danger is common bravery. True bravery proposes a just end, measures the dangers and meets the result with calmness and unyielding decision." — LaRue

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING MAY 7, 1954

MONDAY

"We learn wisdom from failure much more than from success. We often discover what will do by finding out what will not do. And probably he who never made a mistake never made a discovery." Samuel Smiles

TUESDAY

"If you use the heart with which you reprove others to reprove yourself, there will be fewer faults; if you use the heart with which you forgive yourself to forgive others, there will be perfect friendship." S.G.Champion

WEDNESDAY

"In valor there is hope." Tacitus

"If all the world were just, there would be no need for valor." Plutarch

THURSDAY

"To bear injuries or annoying and vexatious events patiently, prayerfully and with self-control is more than taking a city." Charles Simmons

"If we say apathetically 'one notion is as good as another', we are not being tolerant, but merely lazy." Joshua Liebman

FRIDAY

"Happy is the city which in time of ~~gxx~~ peace thinks of war." Robert Burton

"Against danger it pays to be prepared." Aesop

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING APRIL 30, 1954

MONDAY

"No man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is often more than a man can bear." — George McDonald

"Indecision brings its own delays. What you can do, or think you can, begin it. Boldness has genius, power, and magic in it." — Goethe

TUESDAY history

"History is the witness of the times, the torch of truth, the life of memory, the teacher of life." — Cicero

"What experience and history teach is this: that peoples and governments never have learned anything from history." — Hegel

WEDNESDAY diplomacy

"Diplomacy was invented by a man named Webster to use up all the words in his dictionary that didn't mean anything. A diplomat tells you what he don't believe himself and the man that he is telling it to don't believe it any more than he does. But at least it's always equal." — Will Rogers

THURSDAY duty

"Every human being has a work to carry on within, duties to perform, influences to exert which no consciences but his own can teach." — Wm. Channing

"Duty done is the soul's fireside." — Browning

FRIDAY

"Let the victory fall where it will, we are on that side." } About Kentucky — Emerson

"Hast thou given the horse strength? Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder?" } Derby — Old Testament

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING APRIL 23, 1954

MONDAY faith

"As an illogical belief in the occurrence of the improbable." (Defining faith) — H.L. Mencken

"The only faith that wears well in all weathers is that which is woven of conviction and set with the sharp mordant of experience." — James Russell Lowell

TUESDAY

"The things a man believes most profoundly are rarely on the surface of his mind or on the tip of his tongue. The ideas that make up a man's philosophy of life are somewhere way down below." — Eric Johnston

WEDNESDAY truth

"You needn't fear to handle the truth roughly; she is no invalid." — Oliver Wendell Holmes

"The grand character of truth is its capability of coming unchanged out of every possible form of fair discussion." — Sir John Herschel

THURSDAY speech

"Be humble and gentle in your conversation; and of few words, I charge you; but always pertinent when you speak." — William Penn

"A word in earnest is better than a speech." — Dickens

FRIDAY

"The English have an extraordinary ability for flying into a great calm." — Alexander Woleott

"The inability to stay quiet is one of the most conspicuous failings of mankind." — Walter Bagehot

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING APRIL 16, 1954

MONDAY liberty

"It is true that liberty is precious - so precious that it must be rationed." — Lenin

"The inescapable price of liberty is an ability to preserve it from destruction." — MacArthur

TUESDAY truth

"Let truth and falsehood grapple; who ever knew truth put to the worst in a free and open encounter. — John Milton

"There is no problem in dealing with error if truth is presented intelligently." — W.R. White

WEDNESDAY right

"Nothing is settled until it is settled right. And no matter how unlimited the power man may have, unless it is exercised fairly and justly, his actions will return to plague him." — Frank Vanderlip

THURSDAY

"Into your hands are placed the exact results of your own thoughts; you will receive that which you earn; no more, no less. Whatever your present environment may be, you will fail, remain or rise with your thoughts, your vision, your ideal. You will become as small as your controlling desire; as great as your dominant aspiration." — James Allen

FRIDAY

"There is not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress." — Joseph Addison

"Never run after your own hat if it blows off. Others will be delighted to do it. Why spoil their fun." — Mark Twain

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING APRIL 9, 1954

MONDAY

"We cannot always think first and act afterwards. From the moment of birth we are immersed in action and can only fitfully guide it by taking thought." Alfred N. Whitehead

TUESDAY

"Nothing in life is so exhilarating as to be shot at without result." Churchill

"The only guide to a man is his conscience; the only shield to his memory is the sincerity of his actions." Churchill

WEDNESDAY

"There is no room in the modern world for easy indifference to the world's needs - we are all our brother's keeper. And only by translating this truth into terms of daily life can we hope to establish true understanding between men and nations - and make the world more worthy of all the sacrifice that twice in a generation has been spent to save it." Lord Halifax

THURSDAY

"Union is river, lake, ocean and sky;
Man breaks not the medal when God cuts the die.
Though darkened with sulphur, though cleaven with steel,
The Blue Arch will brighten, the waters will heal." Oliver W. Holmes

FRIDAY dictator

"I am the State. I alone am here the representative of the people. Even if I had done wrong, you should not have reproached me in public - people wash their dirty linen at home. France has more need of me than I of France." Napoleon

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING APRIL 2, 1954

MONDAY

"We are taught by great actions that the universe is the property of every individual in it and it sometimes is better to sink beneath the shock than moulder piecemeal on the rock." — Emerson and Lord Byron

TUESDAY

"Do I seem to be seeking the good of the world? That is the idea. It is my public attitude; privately I am merely seeking my own profit. We all do it, but it is sound and it is virtuous, for me public interest is anything other or nobler than a massed accumulation of private interests. — Mark Twain

WEDNESDAY

"The thing that numbs the heart is this, that man cannot devise some scheme of life, to banish the fear that lurks in most men' eyes." — James Hall

"We must expect everything, and fear everything, from time and from man." — - -

THURSDAY

"No technical knowledge can outweigh knowledge of the humanities. Our inheritance of well-founded slowly conceived codes of honor, morals and manners, the passionate convictions which so many hundreds of millions share together of the principles of freedom and justice, are far more precious to us than anything which scientific discoveries could bestow." — Churchill

FRIDAY

"However brilliant an action may be, it should not be accounted great when it is not the result of a great purpose." — La Rochefoucauld

"The noblest motive is the public good." — Richard Steele

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING MARCH 26, 1954

MONDAY

"Every invention during our lifetime has been to save time and time and time is the only commodity that every American has plenty of. Half our life is spent trying to find something to do with the time we have rushed through life trying to save." Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"He that is warned is half armed. So, to sound warnings let prudence lend an ear." Cato

WEDNESDAY

"Responsibility gravitates to the power that can carry out that responsibility. If you alone can do what ought to be done, then that "oughtness" rests on you. You can't dodge it. It is yours." Lynn Landrum

THURSDAY

"To endure is greater than to dare; to tire out hostile fortune; to be daunted by no difficulty; to keep heart when all have lost it; to go through intrigue spotless; to forego even ambition when the end is gained - who can say this is not greatness." Thackeray

FRIDAY

"It is not difficult to get away into retirement and there live upon your own conviction; nor is it difficult to mix with men and follow their convictions; but to enter into the world, and there live firmly and fearlessly according to your own conscience - that is Christian greatness."

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING MARCH 19, 1954

MONDAY

"Great events seldom happen and affect few. But trifles happen every moment to everybody. And though one occurance of them adds little to the happiness or misery of life, the sum total of their continual repetition is of the highest consequence." Daniel Webster

TUESDAY

"A good cause makes a stout heart and a strong arm." Thomas Fuller

"Opportunity passes by those who are not prepared to avail themselves of it." G.R.H. Shafto

WEDNESDAY

"Into your hands will be placed the exact results of your own thoughts; you will receive that which you earn; no more, no less. Whatever your present environment may be, you will fall, remain, or rise with your thoughts, your vision, your ideal. You will become as small as your controlling desire, as great as your dominant aspiration." James Allen

THURSDAY

"Whenever one has anything unpleasant to say, one should always be quite candid." Oscar Wilde

"A man's wisdom is most conspicuous where he is able to distinguish among dangers." Machiavelli

FRIDAY

"No man can live happily who regards himself alone, who turns everything to his own advantage. Thou must live for another if thou wishest to live for thyself." Seneca

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING MARCH 12, 1954

MONDAY

"Taxpayers cheer not from the heart, but from the pocketbook." — Will Rogers

"Knowing how to make money and also how to keep it - either of these gifts might make a man rich." — Seneca

TUESDAY

FAITH

"You may be deceived if you trust too much, but you will live in torment if you do not trust enough." — Frank Crane

"We walk by faith, not by sight. Faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." — New Testament

WEDNESDAY

"America began with hungry men who thought a free fast was better than a fettered feast. Yet something more than hunger came out of that preference. And the glory of America is not in its tall towers nor vast acres. The glory of America is the American citizen, free, sovereign and unafraid. We do well to thank God for that." — Lynn Landrum

THURSDAY

"It is error only, and not truth, that shrinks from inquiry." — Thomas Paine

"Nothing is sodifficult, he said, but that it may be found out by seeking." — Terence

FRIDAY

"I hope I am overwary, but if I am not, there is even now something of illdemen amongst us. I mean the increasing disregard for law which pervades the country; the growing disposition to substitute the wild and furious passions, in lieu of the sober judgment of courts; and the worse than savage mobs, for the executive ministers of justice." — Lincoln

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING MARCH 5, 1954

MONDAY

"No mortal man has ever served at the same time his passions and his best interests." Salust

"If passion drives, let reason hold the reins." Benjamin Franklin

TUESDAY

"You often must ask your neighbor if you shall live in peace." John Clarke

"Your own property is at stake when your neighbor's house is on fire." Horace

WEDNESDAY

"Integrity in man is measured by their conduct." Junius

"One may be better than his reputation but never better than his principles." Henry Ward Beecher

THURSDAY

"If you would win a man to your cause, first convince him that you are his true friend. Therein is a drop of honey that catches his heart, which is the greatest high-road to his reason. Once this is gained, you will find little trouble in convincing his judgment of the justice of your cause." Lincoln

FRIDAY

"Ours is an age of action, hair-trigger action, and we cannot resign from it. But what is to become of us when action no longer finds inspiration or discipline in thought because thought has not been able to find inspiration or discipline in books." Alfred Griswold

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR TODAY FOR WEEKENDING FEBRUARY 26, 1954

MONDAY

"What he accomplished, was only of minor value. His major value to us, the world and future ages and peoples lies in his permanent and sky-reaching conspicuousness as an influence. (About George Washington) — Mark Twain

"Labor to keep alive in your heart that little spark of celestial fire - conscience." — Washington

TUESDAY

"The truth for us to remember at all times, and especially in these times, is the truth that the hope of the nation is not in its forms of government, not in the wisdom or equity of its executives, nor in the justice or purity of its administration, so much as in the evaluation and redemption of individual character among its people." — Bishop Henry Codman Potter

WEDNESDAY

"There is one who is wiser than any of us - and that is everybody." — Napoleon

THURSDAY

"Perseverance, patience and strength." (About keeping peace in a tired and tense world with Russia.) — Churchill

"Few during their lifetime come anywhere near exhausting the resources dwelling within them. There are deep wells of strength that are never used." — Admiral Byrd

FRIDAY

"Morality is simply the attitude we adopt towards people we personally dislike." — Oscar Wilde

"Nothing is more needed in this world than a revival of simple goodness and genuine uprightness." — Clifton Allen

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING FEBRUARY 19, 1954

MONDAY

TUESDAY

WEDNESDAY - CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING - NO WORD FOR TODAY.

THURSDAY

"A peace is of the nature of a conquest, for then both parties nobly are subdued, and neither party loses." Shakespeare

FRIDAY

"We stand in need of some durable plan which will forever put an end to our hostilities, and unite us by the lasting ties of mutual affection and fidelity." Socrates

"Peace is today, at best, a balancing of fears." Arnold Brecht

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING FEBRUARY 12, 1954

MONDAY

"How little can we foresee the consequences either of wise or unwise action, of virtue or of malice. Without this measureless and perpetual uncertainty, the drama of human life would be destroyed." — Winston Churchill

TUESDAY

"Be as ready to pardon the moral errors of mankind as if you were every day guilty of some yourself; at the same time, be as cautious of committing a fault as if you never forgave one." — Pliny the Younger

WEDNESDAY

"Russia sees Europe as a prey which dissensions will sooner or later deliver up to her; she foments anarchy in the hope of profiting by a corruption she promotes because it is favorable to her views." — Marquis de Custine

THURSDAY

"Fear, like pain, looks and sounds worse than it feels." — Rebecca West

"Even the bravest are frightened by sudden terrors." — Tacitus

FRIDAY

"If we have patience, if we restrain ourselves, if we allow ourselves not to run off in a passion, I still have confidence that the Almighty, the Maker of the Universe, will, through the instrumentality of this great and intelligent people, bring us through this, as he has through all the other difficulties of our country." — Abraham Lincoln

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING FEBRUARY 5, 1954

MONDAY

"We have scarcely any faults which are not more excusable than the means we adopt to conceal them." — La Rochefoucauld

"Men ought to be most annoyed by the sufferings which come from their own faults." — Cicero

TUESDAY

"We can talk all the politics we want, but business rises above politics in this country. There is not a country in the world that can change our outlook as quick as we can. Just a dollar in our pocket makes a different man out of us. The minute any of that dough commences reaching us, we think it's a pretty good place." — Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"It is unwise to do unto others as you would that they do unto you. Their tastes may not be the same." — George Bernard Shaw

"Coffee has two virtues - it's wet and it's warm." — Dutch proverb

THURSDAY

"If you wish to persuade, speak of interest, not of reason." — Franklin

"There is a danger in being persuaded before one understands." — Thomas Wilson

FRIDAY

"The Constitution of the United States was made not merely for the generation that then existed, but for posterity - unlimited, undefined, endless, perpetual posterity." — Henry Clay

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JANUARY 29, 1954

MONDAY

"Each is given a bag of tools, a shapeless mass, a book of rules. And each must make, ere life has flown, a stumbling block or a stepping stone." — R.L. Sharpe

TUESDAY

"Strong and bitter words indicate a weak cause - most controversies would seem be ended if those engaged in them would first accurately define their terms and then adhere to their definitions." — Victor Hugo and Tryon Edwards.

WEDNESDAY

"News is history in its first and best form, its vivid and fascinating form, and history is the pale and tranquil reflection of it. " — Mark Twain

"Let the greatest part of the news you hear be the least part of what you believe, lest the greater part of what you believe, be the least part of what is true." — Francis Quarles

THURSDAY

"Justice without power is inefficient; power without justice is tyranny. Justice and power must therefore be brought together so that whatever is just may be powerful and whatever is powerful is just." — Pascal

FRIDAY

"The only way to keep men from agitating against grievance is to remove the grievances; an unwillingness even to discuss these matters produces only dissatisfaction and gives comfort to the extreme elements in our country which endeavour to stir up disturbances in order to provoke governments to embark upon a course of retaliation and repressions. The seed of revolution is repression. — President Wilson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JANUARY 22, 1954

MONDAY

"One thorn of experience can be worth a whole wilderness of warning." James R.Lowell

"It takes longer to hardboil a man than an egg." Frederick L.Allen

TUESDAY

"When dealing with people, let us remember we are not dealing with creatures of logic. We are dealing with creatures of emotion, creatures bustling with prejudices and motivated by pride and vanity." Dale Carnegie

WEDNESDAY

"Such and so magnifying is the virtue of a large and liberal theme. We expand to its bulk. To produce a mighty book you must choose a mighty theme. No great and enduring volume can ever be written on the flea, though many there may be who have tried." Herman Melville

THURSDAY

"You have a budget like you have a limit in a poker game. You are not supposed to go beyond it till at least an hour after the game has started." Will Rogers

"The budget is a mythical bean bag. Congress votes mythical beans into it and then tries to reach in and pull the real ones out." Will Rogers

FRIDAY

"When chickens quit quarrelling over their food they often find that there is enough for all of them. I wonder if it might not be the same way with the human race." Don Marquis

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
CBS RADIO NETWORK
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JANUARY 15, 1954

MONDAY

"Of all occupations from which gain is secured, there is none better than agriculture, nothing more productive, nothing sweeter, nothing more worthy of a free man." — Cicero

"The farmers are the founders of human civilization. When tillage begins, other arts follows" — Daniel Webster

TUESDAY

"It is circumstance and proper measure that give an action its character and make it either good or bad." — Plutarch

"Our own actions are our security - not others' judgments." — George Herbert

WEDNESDAY

"Many a man threatens while he quakes for fear." — French proverb

"There are more threatened than struck." — John Ray

THURSDAY

"What you have said I will consider; what you have to say I will with patience hear, and find a time both meet to hear and answer such high things." — Shakespeare

FRIDAY

"If we define freedom we limit it. And if we limit it, we destroy it." — Edith Nourse Rogers

"There is a vast difference between toleration and liberty. Toleration is a concession; liberty is a right; toleration isa matter of expediency; liberty is a matter of principle." — George Truett

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JANUARY 8, 1954

MONDAY

"The world population finds itself where it must work harder if it is to get out of the hole that it is in. If we do not use opportunity wisely, we will get pushed aside by other forces. For the weeds stand ever ready to replace the plants." — Ray Lyman Wilbur

TUESDAY

"'Tis easy to see but hard to foresee." — Benjamin Franklin

"I base my faith on the fact that 98% of all predictions are wrong." — Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"It's a lucky thing the wheel was invented before the automobile." — Samuel Hoffenstein

"Be wary, for best safety lies in fear." — Shakespeare

THURSDAY

"The club exists to club men who otherwise would remain unclubbable, to their everlasting detriment. It softens the precocious, gives countenance to the weak and comfort to the solitary; it educates the overlearned and silences the argumentative - the club exists to club men who otherwise would remain unclubbable." — Rudyard Kipling

FRIDAY

"I know no safe depository of the ultimate powers of society but the people themselves, and if we think them not enlightened enough to exercise their control with wholesome discretion, the remedy is not to take it from them but to inform their discretion by education." — Thomas Jefferson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING JANUARY 1, 1954
(No Word for Today for Weekending Dec. 25, 1953 - Charles Collingwood reporting.)

MONDAY

NONE - CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPORTING

TUESDAY

"Traveling makes a man wiser, but sometimes less happy." Jefferson

"Travel, [illegible], teaches toleration." Disraeli

WEDNESDAY

"Nothing in life is so exhilerating as to be shot at without result." Churchill

"It thrives on criticism, it is impervious to newspaper abuse or taunts from any quarter. It is capable of digesting almost anything or anybody of gentlemen - whatever be the views with which they arrive." (Speaking of the House of Commons.) Churchill

THURSDAY

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid, a little understanding - and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year." Heinrich Heine

FRIDAY

"It is necessary to hope, though hope should always be deluded; for hope itself is happiness - perhaps the chief happiness this world affords. And its frustrations - however frequent - are yet less dreadful than its extinction." Samuel Johnson

NO WORD FOR TODAY FOR WEEKENDING DECEMBER 25, 1953
(Charles Collingwood reporting.)

Dec. 18.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS 12/18/53
"WORD FOR TODAY"

MONDAY

"Mankind lives on promises." — Sam Slick

"Often promises don't fill the belly." — Charles Spurgeon

TUESDAY

"Nothing is more plausible in theory than equality but nothing is more impracticable." — Vovnarg

"The supreme worth of life is not wealth, not ease, nor fame or even happiness - but service. Nothing else counts." — Alfred Martin

WEDNESDAY

"Success doesn't just happen." — Frances Willard

"There are only two ways of getting on in the world: by one's own industry or by the stupidity of others." — Jean De La Bruyere

THURSDAY

"Truth is not only violated by falsehood - it may be equally outraged by silence." — Henri Amiel

"There is nothing so powerful as truth - and often nothing so strange." — Daniel Webster

FRIDAY

"It takes two to speak the truth; one to speak and another to hear." — Thereau

"Nothing is ever said that has not been said before." — Terence

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEKENDING DECEMBER 11, 1953

MONDAY

"Strange how much you've got to know before you know how little you know." — Confucius

"A good edge, he said, is good for nothing, if it has nothing to cut." — George Fuller

TUESDAY

"Every word is vain that is not completed by deed." — Xenophon

"I endeavor not to laugh at human actions, not to lament them, despise them - but to try to understand them." — Spinoza

WEDNESDAY

"We are all of us more or less echoes, repeating involuntarily the virtues, the defects, the movements and the character of those among when we live." — Joseph Joubert

"The depth of one's convictions measures the breadth of his influence." — J.N. Hunt

THURSDAY

"Humanitarianism consists of never sacrificing a human being to a purpose." — Albert Schweitzer

"If you wish to converse with me, define your terms." — Voltaire

FRIDAY

"The secret of history is to know what to neglect and the great object in trying to understand history is to get behind men and grasp ideas." — Sir James Bryce
Lord Acton

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 4, 1953

MONDAY

"No matter how punk you might think your local newspaper is getting, just take it away from you and see how you feel. There's no substitute. Don't underestimate your paper no matter how small it is. For a breakfast without a newspaper is a horse without a saddle. — Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"A word that is not spoken never does any mischief." — Charles Dana

"All words are pegs to hang ideas on." — Henry Ward Beecher

WEDNESDAY

"The gravest events often dawn with no more noise than the morning star makes in rising." — H.W. Beecher

"The woman named 'tomorrow' sits with a hairpin in her teeth and takes her time and does her hair the way she wants it." — Carl Sandburg

THURSDAY

"The incurable itch of writing possess many." — Juvenal

"The problem is to teach ourselves to think - the writing will take care of itself." — C. Morley

FRIDAY

"Other nations have got it on us. They always bring a pack of experts and technical men along to advise, while with us, if we can find a man to send to one, we are lucky and we always feel uneasy until he gets home. But I've always noticed any time a man can't come and settle without bringing his lawyer - look out." — Will Rogers

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 27, 1953

MONDAY

"Nothing great is ever achieved without enthusiasm." Emerson

"Life is act, and not to do is death." Lewis Morris

TUESDAY

"We hear much of people calling out to punish the guilty, but very few are concerned to clear the innocent - a guilty man punished is an example for the rabble; an innocent man condemned is the affair of all honest men." Daniel Defoe

WEDNESDAY

"When you start telling France something about Germany, the French will say: that's fine from an American angle, but we happen to live right across the river from 'em and we know what's going to happen to us soon as they are able again. Don't try to shorten our lives." Will Rogers.

THURSDAY

"One small candle lighted near Plymouth Rock on a dull December day in 1620 has burned with a steady flame that no misfortune could quench. Let us have confidence that divine providence, who kept alight that one small candle from which a thousand have been lit, has some great purpose for the million-candle power nation to perform." Samuel Morison

FRIDAY

"Men cannot be forced into trust." Daniel Webster

"Confidence placed in another often compels confidence in return." Livy

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 13, 1953

MONDAY

"I think there is no sense in forming an opinion when there is not enough evidence to form it on. If you build a person without any bones in him, he may look fair enough to the eye, but he will be limber and cannot stand up; and I consider that evidence is the bones of an opinion." — Mark Twain

TUESDAY

"Association is the simplest mode of attaining accord between men." — William Sumner

"Lack of confidence is not the result of difficulty; the difficulty comes from lack of confidence." — Seneca

WEDNESDAY

"Far different do things appear far off than close at hand." — Euripides

"It is the worst impressions which are the most lasting." — Quintilian

THURSDAY

"Personally Senator, I'd like to reopen the whole Cherry Tree Inquiry. I figure he was shielding someone." — Conservative Daily Express

(front page cartoon - showing two American Senators standing beneath a bust of George Washington. Says one Senator to another, etc.)

FRIDAY

"It is a proverb used long ago, we seen believe the thing we would have so." — Sir John Harington

"I can believe anything provided it is incredible." — Oscar Wilde

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 6, 1953

MONDAY

"Ignorance is a blank sheet on which we may write, but error is a scribbled one from which we must first erase." — C.C. Colton

"Even a mistake may turn out to be the one thing necessary to a worthwhile achievement." — Henry Ford

TUESDAY

"Time as he grows old, teaches many lessons: to be ruled by time is to be ruled by the wisest counsellor of all." — Aeschylus & Pericles.

WEDNESDAY

"Courage stands before everything; it is what preserves our liberty, safety, life and our homes and our country and our children. Courage comprises all things. A man with courage has every blessing. — Plautus

THURSDAY

"Seas only join the regions they divide." — Alexander Pope

"The ship - a fragment detached from the earth - went on lonely and swiftly like a small planet." — Joseph Conrad

FRIDAY

"It is sufficiently clear that all things are changed and nothing really perishes and that the sum remains absolutely the same." — Francis Bacon

"Matters change and morals change but men remain." — John Galsworthy

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 30, 1953

MONDAY

"The strongest friendship yields to pride unless the odds be on our side." — Jonathan Swift

"When competition brings us to the test, then we find friendship is self-interest." — Samuel Tuke

TUESDAY

"A man can be free even within prison walls. Freedom is something spiritual. And whoever once had it, can never lose it. For while the body can be bound with chains, the spirit can never." — Bertolt Brecht

WEDNESDAY

"If you want war, nourish a doctrine. They are tyrants that get inside a man's own reason and often betray him against himself. Civilized men have done their fiercest fighting for doctrines." — William Sumner

THURSDAY

"The work an unknown good man has done is like a vein of water flowing hidden underground, secretly making the ground green." — Thomas Carlyle

FRIDAY

"Truth often suffers more by the heat of its defenders than from the arguments of its opposers." — William Penn

"A little fact can be worth a whole limbo of dreams." — Ralph Waldo Emerson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 23, 1953

MONDAY

"It is troubles that bring men together." — Athenaeus

"There is nothing which persevering effort and unceasing and diligent care cannot overcome." — Seneca

TUESDAY

"Though living near a river, do not waste water." — William Scarborough

"It is with rivers as it is with people - the greatest are not always the most agreeable nor the best to live with." — Henry Van Dyke

WEDNESDAY

"Interest will make a man do that which otherwise he would not do - he will seek his own good at the whole world's cost." — John Bunyan & Robert Browning

"Preserve always an even mind in adverse circumstances." — Horace

THURSDAY

"The only way in which one human being can properly attempt to finfluence another is encouraging him to think for himself instead of endeavoring to instil ready-made opinions into his head." — Sir Leslie Stephen

FRIDAY

"Responsibilities gravitate to the person who can shoulder them and power flows to the man who knows how." — Elbert Hubbard

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WROD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 16, 1953

MONDAY

"The man who is prepared has his battle half fought." — Don Quixote

"It is they who have the will to act who most often win the prizes." — Xerxes

TUESDAY

"Free trade is not a principle but an expedient." — Disraeli

"What war could ravish, commerce could bestow; he often returns a friend who came a foe." — Pope

WEDNESDAY

"To know the pains of power, we must go to those who have it; to know its pleasures, we must go to those who are seeking it; for the pains of power are real, its pleasures imaginary." — C.C. Colton

"The power that makes men terrible is a terror first to its possessor." — Saint Cyprian

THURSDAY

"The great difficulty in life is first to win a reputation; the next to keep it." — Benjamin Haydon

"A little integrity is better than any career." — Emerson

FRIDAY

"The consciousness of having done a splendid action is itself sufficient reward." — Cicero

"For great responsibilities there should be great rewards." — Sallust

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 9, 1953

MONDAY

"On the 13nd day of the 13th month of the 8th day of the week, on the 25th hour and the 61st minute, we'll find all things we seek." — Walter Foss

TUESDAY

"You may often make excuses for another but never for yourself." — Publilius Syrus

"Everyone is bound to bear patiently the results of his own example." — Fedrus

WEDNESDAY

"Whenever one has anything unpleasant to say one should always be quite candid." — Oscar Wilde

"One should not be ashamed to say what one is not ashamed to think." — Montaigne

THURSDAY

"Mankind lives on promises." — Sam Slick

"Promises don't fill the belly - promises may get friends, but it is performance that nurses and keeps them." — Owen Feltham

FRIDAY

1 PEAS

"An invasion of armies can be resisted, but an invasion of ideas cannot." — Ralph Waldo Emerson

"There is no adequatedefense, except stupidity, against the impact of a new idea." — P.W. Bridgman

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 2, 1953

MONDAY

"Choosing the course which offers the slightest obstacles to the feet is often a downhill one." — Thoreau

"When once a man is determined to believe, the very absurdidy of the doctrine does but confirm him in his belief." — Junius

TUESDAY

"Shall I ask the brave soldier who fights by my side in the cause of mankind if our creeds agree? Shall I give up the friend I have valued and tried, if he kneel not before the same altar as me?" — Thomas Moore

WEDNESDAY

"So long an interval has room for many a hope." — Seneca

"I had hoped for better things." — Ovid

"Only the dead are hopeless" — Theokritus

"The Dodgers is not dead yet." — Manager Dressen

THURSDAY

"Nothing is lost that comes at last." — Thomas Shelton

"It is defeat that turns bone to flint, gristle to muscle; it is defeat that makes men invincible." — H.W. Beechers

FRIDAY

"You often grow hard and stiffen with adversity." — Dreyden

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 25, 1953

MONDAY

No Word - Larry LeSueur reporting.

TUESDAY

No Word - Larry LeSueur reporting.

WEDNESDAY

"Too many promises always lessen confidence." — Horace

"Be careful to keep your promise; undertake not what you cannot perform. — Washington

THURSDAY

"When hope breaks, let patience hold; often nothing is so full of victory as patience." — Thomas Fuller and S.G. Champion

FRIDAY

"There is nothing in the world more pitiable than an irresolute man, oscillating between two feelings, who would willingly unite the two, and who does not perceive that nothing can unite them." — Goethe

FOOTNOTE TO THE DAYS NEWS (CHARLES COLLINGWOOD REPLACED MR.
MURROW FOR TWO WEEKS)

MONDAY (No quote)

TUESDAY

"One of the crying needs of the times in this incomparable republic is for a suitable burial service for the admittedly damned." ---H.L. Menken

WEDNESDAY

"The Kremlin is the biggest of all grifters, operating a gigantic global shell game. The world is always being asked to guess under which shell will be found the pea which stands for peace. The tragedy is that this is no petty pastime for an oversized carnival. The stakes are nothing less than the freedom of all free men."---Secretary of the Army Brucker

THURSDAY

"It's not so much that they're all wrong, but they aren't all right for all times and all places." --The Weather Bureau on ground hogs.

FRIDAY (No quote)

MONDAY (No quote)

TUESDAY (No quote)

WEDNESDAY (No quote)

THURSDAY (No quote)

FRIDAY (Mr. Murrow returned from Israel--"The Word")

"He that would travel much should eat little" Ben Franklin

"Best clean your finger before you point to any spots." " "

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS June.
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING 12, 1953

MONDAY

"Freedom is an indivisible word. If we want to enjoy it and fight for it, we must be prepared to extend it to everyone, whether they are rich or poor, whether they agree with us or not, no matter what their race or the color of their skin. For if we takeaway the liberties of those we hate, we are opening the way to the loss of liberty for those we love." Wendell Wilkie

TUESDAY

"After thestrife of war, begins the strife of peace." Carl Sandburg

"Peace hath her victories no less reknowned than war." John Milton

"The block of granite which is an obstacle in the pathway of the weak becomes a stepping stone in the pathway of the strong." Carlyle

WEDNESDAY

"Safety lies in the middle course." Ovid

"The only security is the constant practice of critical thinking." William Sumner

THURSDAY

"There is no such thing as a little country. The greatness of a people is no more determined by their number than the greatness of a man is determined by his height." Victor Hugo

FRIDAY

"Correspondences are like clothes before the invention of suspenders - it's impossible to keep them up." Sydney Smith

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JUNE 5, 1953

MONDAY

NO WORD FOR TODAY

TUESDAY

NO WORD FOR TODAY

WEDNESDAY

NO WORD FOR TODAY

THURSDAY

"It is better not to know so much than to know so many things that ain't so." Josh Billings

"Everybody is ignorant, only on different subjects." Will Rogers

FRIDAY

"Comprehension must be the soil in which grow all the fruits of friendship." Woodrow Wilson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WEEK ENDING MAY 29, 1953

NO WORD FOR TODAY FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 29, 1953

(LARRY LESUEUR REPORTING)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 22, 1953

MONDAY

"The preference of the good man for dying on his own soil instead of abroad is a serious handicap to the democratic state." — N. Spykman

"Justice without force is impotent, force without justice is tyrannical; we must therefore combine justice with force." — Pascal

TUESDAY

"The line of least resistance is always the most difficult in the long run." — Peter Chayney

"There's some folks standing behind the president that ought to get around where he can watch em". — Kin Hubbard

WEDNESDAY

"The word right is one of the most deceptive of pitfalls for most rights are qualified." — Oliver W. Holmes

"Only by self-respect will you compel others to respect you." — Dostoevski

THURSDAY

NO WORD FOR TODAY

FIRDAY

NO WORD FOR TODAY

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 15, 1953

MONDAY

FRIENDSHIP

"I have discharged the duty of a friend, in that I have not winked at thy folly." John Lyly

"Many a friendship can be lost for lack of speaking." Aristotle

TUESDAY

"Seize now and here the hour that is, nor trust some later day." Horace

"The right man is he who seizes the right moment." Goethe

WEDNESDAY

POETRY

"A poet is a person who puts things together, not as a watchmaker, steel or a shoemaker leather, but who puts life into action." John Ruskin

"Good poetry has a latency of meaning beyond the simple statement of facts." E.S.Dallas

THURSDAY

"Doctrines are the most frightful tyrants to which man ever are subject, because doctrines get inside of a man's own reason and betray him against himself." Wm. Sumner

"Anger is a blind thing; it often prevents our seeing obvious matters or obscures matters already understood." Chrysippus

FRIDAY

"In a republic we must learn to combine intensity of conviction with a broad tolerance of difference of conviction." Teddy Roosevelt

"I tolerate with the utmost latitude the right of others to differ from me without imputing to them criminality." Jefferson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 8, 1953

MONDAY

"A cause may be inconvenient, but it's like champagne or high shoes - one must be prepared to occasionally suffer for it." — Arnold Bennett

"If you cannot bite, never show your teeth." — John Ray

TUESDAY

"We must move on a rigorous line. We can neither when we will enjoy, nor when we will, resign." — Matthew Arnold

"One often meets his destiny on the very road which he took to escape it." — La Fontaine

WEDNESDAY

"Who would guess what it cost to move two buttons one inch on the war map here in front of the newspaper office where the freckle-faced young man is laughing at us." — Carl Sandburg

"The only excuse for war is that we may live in peace unharmed." — Cicero

THURSDAY

"To be conscious that you are ignorant is a great step to knowledge." — Disraeli

"It's better to know nothing than to know what ain't so." — Josh Billing

FRIDAY

"What is food to one man, may be fierce poison to another." — Lucretius

"Part of the secret of success in life is to eat what you like and let the food fight it out inside." — Mark Twain

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 1, 1953

MONDAY

"The worth of a thing is best known by the want." — John Ray

"The cost of a thing is the amount of life which is required to be exchanged for it, immediately or in the long run." — Thoreau

TUESDAY

"The greatest gift is the power to estimate correctly the value of things." — La Rochefoucauld

"Things are only worth what one makes them worth." — Moliere

WEDNESDAY

"By burning Luther's books, you may rid your bookshelves of him, but you will not rid man's minds of him." — Erasmus

"He who destroys a good book kills reason itself." — Milton

THURSDAY

"There is nothing more difficult to take in hand, more perilous to conduct or more uncertain in its success than to take the lead in the introduction of a new order of things." — Machiavelli

"When you're through changing, you're through." — Bruce Barton

FRIDAY

"Let the victory fall where it will, we are on that side." — Emerson

"Hast thou given the horse strength? Hast thou clothed his neck with thunder? — Old Testament

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 24, 1953

MONDAY

"There are times in the lives of all people when freedom is the twin of duty, sacrifice the companion of happiness, and when courage - parent of fortitude, endurance and determination - is the first virtue." Dorothy Thompson

TUESDAY

"Weight, not merely count, men's judgments." Seneca

"A clear case brings the right verdict with it." Publilius Syrus

"The judgment of the world will be conclusive." St. Augustine

WEDNESDAY

"Those who would give up essential liberty to purchase a little temporary safety, deserve neither liberty nor safety, the condition upon which God has given liberty to man is eternal vigilence." Franklin & John Curran

THURSDAY

"It is hope which maintains most of mankind." Sophocles

"Despair is a greater deceiver than hope." Vov-narg

FRIDAY

"Courage stands before everything; it is the best gift of all. It is what preserves our liberty, safety, life and our homes and parents, our country and our children. Courage comprises all things: a man with courage has every blessing." Ple-tus

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 17, 1953

MONDAY

"Do not anticipate the relish of any happiness, nor feel the weight of any misery before it actually arrives." — Joseph Addison

"It is folly to expect man to do all that they may reasonably be expected to do."

TUESDAY

"New benefits cannot obliterate old injuries." — Machiavelli

"A benefit consists not always in what is done or given, but in the intention." — Seneca

WEDNESDAY

"The selfish spirit of commerce knows no country and feels no passion or principle but that of gain." — Thomas Jefferson

"The crossroads of trade are the meeting place of ideas, the attrition grounds of rival customs and beliefs; diversities beget conflict, comparison, thought; superstitions cancel one another and reason begins." — Will Durant

THURSDAY

"If a principle is good for anything, it is worth living up to, but important principles may and must be flexible." — Franklin and Lincoln

FRIDAY

"In the past we had a light which flickered, in the present we have a light which flames, and in the future there will be a light which shines over all the land and sea." — W. Churchill

"Any feather head can have confidence in times of victory, but the test is to have faith when things are going wrong and when things happen which cannot be explained in public." — Churchill

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 10, 1953

MONDAY

"Man is so inconsistent a creature that it is impossible to reason from his belief to his conduct, or from one part of his belief to another." — Macaulay

"One may go wrong in many different directions, but right only in one." — Aristotle

TUESDAY

"A nation is a thing that lives and acts like a man." — Josiah Holland

"The Psychological growth of man must keep pace with his physical powers; every increase in power must be matched by an increase in understanding." — Harry Overstreet

WEDNESDAY

"No man's knowledge can go beyond his own experience." — John Locke

"Facts are apt to alarm us more than the most dangerous principles." — Janius

THURSDAY

"It was, I am convinced, two other guys, in another,place, a long time ago." — Spencer Bayne

"I fear our mistakes far more than the strategy of our enemies." — Thucydides

FRIDAY

"Time is money, and very good money too, to those who reckon interest by it." — Dickens

"Very often the worst thing about time is that we know not what to do with it." — Emerson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 3, 1953

MONDAY

"Perseverance is more effective than violence, and many things which cannot be overcome when they stand together, yield themselves up when taken little by little." — Serterious

"Where we are free to act, we are also free to refrain from acting, and where we are able to say No, we are also able to say Yes." — Aristotle

TUESDAY

"Human society would not last long if man were not deceived by one another. It is as easy to delude ourselves unknowing, as it is difficult to delude others without their knowledge." — La Rochefoucauld

WEDNESDAY

"The extreme of Pessimism is that life is not worth living. The extreme of optimism is that everything is for the best in the best of worlds. Neither of these is true." — William Sumner

"All I know is that I know nothing." — Socrates

THURSDAY

"Men are able to trust one another knowing the exact degree of dishonesty they are entitled to expect." — Steven Leacock

"Most of our suspicions of others are roused by what we know of ourselves." — F.E. Hulme

"To know what to distrust is the mother of safety." — La Fontaine

FRIDAY EASTER

"A modest woman, dressed out in all her finery, is the most tremendous object of the whole creation." — Oliver Goldsmith

"We are not fond of a new hat. There is a certain insolence about it. But Happy Easter anyway." — Leigh Hunt

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 27, 1953

MONDAY

"Deliberate with slowness, but execute with speed. All things come too late for those who wait." — Publilius Cirus

"He who will not when he may, may not when he will." — John of Salisbury

TUESDAY

"Ask what you please, look where you will, you cannot get to the bottom of the resources of Britain. No demand is too novel or sudden to be met, no need too unexpected to be supplied, no strain too prolonged for the patience of our people. No suffering or peril daunts their heart." — Winston Churchill

WEDNESDAY

"Life is a long lesson in humility." — James Barry

"A part of man's praise may be told in his presence, the whole in his absence." — Talmud

THURSDAY

"Grains of sand are small. Yet if enough are placed on a ship they sink it." — St. Augustine

"Events of great consequence can spring from trifling circumstances." — Livey

FRIDAY

"Let us be resolute in prosecuting our ends, and mild in our methods of so doing." — Aquaviva

"Crafty men condemn study; simple men admire it; wise men use it." — Francis Bacon

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 20, 1953

MONDAY

"There is nothing which power cannot believe of itself." — Juvenal

"Atomic power shoves us into a realm in which wealth and fortitude are not enough." — Francis Drake

TUESDAY

CHANCE

"The affairs of men hang by a slender thread and sudden chance can ruin what once was strong." — Ovid

"Chance fights even on the side of the prudent." — Europides

WEDNESDAY

ART

"Art is the desire to a man to express himself, to record the reactions of his personality to the world he lives in." — Amy Lowell

"I do not paint a portrait to look like a subject, but rather, the person grows to look like his portrait." — Salvador Dali

THURSDAY

"Every delay is too long to one who is in a hurry." — Seneca

"Want of patience can often confound great plans." — Confucius

FRIDAY

"Who is there, if he shoots at a mark all day long, will not occasionally hit the white?" — Cicero

"How can you pretend to foretell the affairs of others when you cannot foresee your own." — Aesop's Fables

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 13, 1953

MONDAY

"We easily persuade ourselves to hope the things we wish." — Samuel Tuke

"I grow daily to honor facts more and more and theory less and less." — Thomas Carlyle

TUESDAY

"If people would dare to speak to one another unreservedly, there would be a good deal less sorrow in the world a hundred years hence." — Samuel Butler

"There is no wisdom like frankness." — Benjamin Franklin

WEDNESDAY

WOMEN

"Charm is a sort of bloom on a woman. If you have it, you don't need to have anything else, if you don't have it, it doesn't much matter what else you have." — Sir James Barrie

"Women have only one role - their own charm. All the rest is mimicry." — F.Scott Fitzgerald

"A woman's advice is not worth much, but he won't take it is a fool." — Cervantes

THURSDAY

"Always remember to preserve an even mind in adverse circumstance." — Horace

"A man should study ever to keep cool. He often makes his inferiors his superiors by heat." — Ralph Waldo Emerson

FRIDAY

"Let not thy hand be stretched out to take and closed in the time of giving." — Ben Sira

"Everywhere in life the true question is not what we gain, but what we do." — Thomas Carlyle

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 6, 1953

MONDAY

"Where there is no maturity there is no vision. The evils of our life come not from deep evils within us, but from ungrown-up responses to life. Our obligation then is to grow up. This is what our time requires of us. This is what may yet be the saving of us." — Harry Allen Overstreet

TUESDAY

"We are inclined to believe those whom we do not know because they have never deceived us." — Samuel Johnson

"The surest way to be deceived is to think one's self more clever than others." — La Rochefoucauld

WEDNESDAY

"All wholesale judgments are loose and imperfect." — Montaigne

"Most men judge the acts of others by what they would have done themselves." — Halikarnasus

THURSDAY

"To be positive is sometimes like being mistaken at the top of one's voice." — Ambrose Bierce

"The rarest of all human qualities is consistency." — Jeremy Bentham

FRIDAY

"Men live by believing something, not by debating and arguing about many things." — Carlyle

"When once a man is determined to believe, the very absurdity of the contrine does but confirm his faith." — Janius

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 27, 1953

MONDAY

"The holiest of all holidays are those kept by ourselves, in silence and apart." — Henry W. Longfellow

"That still small voice of gratitude." — Thomas Gray

TUESDAY

"Stories run on wheels and every hand oils the wheels as they run." — Wo-da

"Be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath." — New Testament

WEDNESDAY

TALK

"talk that does not end in any kind of action, is better suppressed althogether." — Thomas Carlyle

"Talking is like playing on the harp; there is as much in laying the hands on the strings to stop their vibration as in twanging them to bring out their music." — Oliver W. Holmes

THURSDAY

"Hope is as cheap as despair." — Thomas Fuller

"The fates have given man an enduring soul." — Homer

"The only justification of rebellion is success." — Thomas Reed

FRIDAY

"Compromise is a temporary expedient, often wise in party politics, almost sure to be unwise in statesmanship." — James Russell Lowell

"We talk on principle, but we act on interest." — Walter Lander

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 20, 1953

MONDAY

"Nothing can be of less importance than the fortune of those who have been long lost in the grave and from whom nothing can be feared." — Samuel Johnson

"Speak only what is true of the living and honorable of the dead." — Robert Hland

TUESDAY

"To speculate without facts is to attempt to enter a house of which one has not the key, by wandering aimlessly around and around, searching the wall and now and then peeping through the windows. Facts are the key." — Julian Huxley

"A little fact is worth a whole limbo of dreams." — Emerson

WEDNESDAY

"Actions are not always true sons of great and mighty resolutions." — Samuel Butler

"It is because nations tend to stupidity and baseness that mankind moves so slowly; it is because individuals have a capacity for better things that it moves at all." — George Gissing

THURSDAY

"As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." — Old Testament

"There is still sunshine on the wall." — Cervantes

FRIDAY

"Motives and purposes are in the brain and heart of man. Consequences are in the world of fact." — William Sumner

"The noblest motive is the public good." — Richard Steele

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 13, 1953

MONDAY

"Justice is a certain rectitude of mind whereby a man does what he ought to do in the circumstances confronting him." — Thomas Aquinas

"No human judgment is so vigilant that it does not nod at times." — Montaigne

TUESDAY

"The secret of success is constancy of purpose." — Disraeli

"The real thing is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving." — Oliver W. Holmes

WEDNESDAY

"The problem is how to avoid safety; the very word has a mean sound." — Constance Wagner

THURSDAY

"The best thing that history yields us, is the enthusiasm it generates." — Goethe

"Look not mournfully into the past. Wisely improve the present. It is thine. Go forth to meet the shadowy Future, without fear and with a manly heart." — Longfellow

FRIDAY

"Justice is commonly more merciful in the long run than pity, for it tends to foster in men those stronger qualities which make good citizens." — James R. Lowell

"No man is above the law and no man is below it; nor do we ask any man's permission when we require him to obey it." — Theodore Roosevelt

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 6, 1953

MONDAY

"I AM of those who must be taught and am seeking for teachers." — Peter the Great

"The reward of study is understanding." — Talmud

TUESDAY

"Good order is the foundation of all good things." — Edmund Burke

"When you've got a thing where you want it, it is a good thing to leave it where it is." — Churchill

WEDNESDAY

"Words will build no walls." — Plutarch

"It is the duty of all persons when affairs are the most prosperous, to reflect in what way they are to endure adversity." — Terrence

THURSDAY

"No opportunity for security should be let slip." — Publilius Syrus

"The word 'right' is one of the most deceptive pitfalls. Most rights are qualified." — Oliver W. Holmes

"Give to every other human being every right that you claim for yourself." — Robert Ingersoll

FRIDAY

"Men usually scorn what they don't understand." — Arthur Conan Doyle

"The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it." — John Galsworthy

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JANUARY 30, 1953

MONDAY

"Education is indispensable to a society of free men." — Dr. Conant

"Only the educated are free." — Epikeytus

"A little general learning has come to be a useful thing in a world where from its infrequency, it has ceased to be dangerous." — W.C.Brownell

TUESDAY PERSECUTION

"Wherever you see persecution, there is more than a probability that truth is on the persecuted side." — Hugh Latimer

"The history of persecution is the history of endeavors to cheat nature, to make water run up-hill, to twist a rope of sand." — Emerson

WEDNESDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

THURSDAY

"Beware of rashness. But with energy and sleepless vigilance go forward and give us victories." — Abraham Lincoln.

FRIDAY

"There are two days in a week about which and upon which I never worry. Two carefree days, kept sacredly free from fear and apprehension. One of these days is Yesterday, and the other day I do not worry about is Tomorrow." — Robert Burdette

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JANUARY 23, 1953

MONDAY

"There's atime for some things and a time for all things: A Time for great things and a time for small things." — Cervantes

"Miracles don't happpen nowadays." — Shaw

TUESDAY

"Nothing is so good as it seems beforehand." — George Eliot

"What we anticipate seldom occurs and what we least expected generally happens." — Disraeli

WEDNESDAY

"Difficulty is the excuse history never accepts." — Samual Grafton

"No degree of knowledge attainable by man is able to set him above the want of hourly assistance." — Samuel Johnson

"The strongest man in the world is he who stands most alone." — Ibsen

THURSDAY

"The most curious aspect of truth seems to be that nobody will believe it." — J.S. Strange

"Get your facts first, and then you can distort them as much as you please." — Mark Twain

"Do not fear to grate tender ears with sharp truths." — Erasmus

FRIDAY

"He serves honorably who yields to circumstances." — Publilis Syrus

"The highest of all distinctions is service to others." — King George VI

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JANUARY 16, 1953

MONDAY

"If all men should carry their own private troubles to market for barter with their neighbors, not one but when he had looked into the troubles of other men, would be right glad to carry home again what he had brought." — Herodotus

TUESDAY

"This is one of those cases in which the imagination is baffled by the facts." — W. Churchill

"I cannot forecast to you the action of Russia. It is a riddle wrapped in a mystery inside an enigma." — W. Churchill

WEDNESDAY

"Censure is the tax a man pays to the public for being eminent." — Jonathan Swift

"Let us not pray for a light burden, but a strong back." — Teddy Roosevelt

THURSDAY

"I have never been able to maintain a consistent attitude toward life or reality or anything else. This may be entirely due to nervousness." — James Thurber

"There is one safeguard known generally to the wise, which is an advantage and security to all - but especially to democracies - distrust." — Demosthenes

FRIDAY

~~"Discourage~~

"The law obliges us to do what is proper, not simply what is just." — Crosheus

"Law is a pledge that the citizens of a state will do justice to one another." — Liko

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JANUARY 9 1953

MONDAY

"I do not hesitate to travel from court to court like a wandering minstrel. But always with the same song or set of songs." W. Churchill

"When great causes are on the move in the world, we learn that we are spirits, not animals; that something is going on in space and time and beyond - which, whether we like it or not, spells duty." W. Churchill

TUESDAY

LANGUAGE

"The purpose of language is an idea to be expressed. When the idea is expressed, the language may be ignored." Chinese proverb

"The accent of one's country dwells in the mind and the heart as well as on the tongue." La Rochefoucauld

WEDNESDAY

LEADERSHIP

"Today the entire world is looking to America for enlightened leadership to peace and progress. Such leadership requires vision, courage and tolerance. It can be provided only by a united nation, deeply devoted to the highest ideals." Harry Truman

THURSDAY.

"To be prejudiced is always to be weak." Samuel Johnson

"In the last analysis, we see only what we are ready to see, what we have been taught to see. We eliminate and ignore everything that is not a part of our prejudices." Sharko

FRIDAY

"We build and defend not for our generations alone. We defend the foundations laid by our fathers. We build a life for generations yet unborn. We are defending and building a way for life not for America alone, but for all mankind." Franklin Roosevelt

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JANUARY 2, 1953

MONDAY

"Tis easier to make certain things legal than to make them legitimate." Chamfort

"Justice is simply truth in action." Joseph Joubert

TUESDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

WEDNESDAY

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid, a little understanding, and for the understandings little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year." Heine

THURSDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

FRIDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 26, 1953

2

MONDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

TUESDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

WEDNESDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

THURSDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

FRIDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

MONDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

TUESDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

WEDNESDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

THURSDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

FRIDAY

"NO WORD FOR TODAY"

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 15, 1951

MONDAY

"No nation is fit to sit in judgment upon any other nation." — Wilson

"There are two horns to my dalemma. If I don't get hooked on one, I might on the other." — E.S. Gardner

TUESDAY

"No law perfectly suits the convenience of every member of the community; the only consideration is whether, upon the whole, it be profitable to the greater part." — Livyus

"Where is there any book of the law so clear to each man as that written to his heart." — Tolstoy

WEDNESDAY

"It is much harder to turn word into deed than deed into word." — Maxim Gorky

"Look out how you use proud words. When you let proud words go, it is not easy to call them back." — Carl Sandburg

THURSDAY

"That which is morally wrong, can never be politically right." — Vincent Lean

"There is always a right and a wrong way, and the wrong way always seems the more reasonable." — George Moore

FRIDAY

"We are all travelers in the wilderness of this world. And the best that we can find in our travels is an honest friend. He is a fortunate voyager who finds many. For they are the end and the reward of life - they keep us worthy of ourselves." — Robert Louis Stevenson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING DECEMBER 5, 1953

MONDAY

"Your tongues and words are soaked in honey; your hearts and deeds are soaked in gall and bitter vinegar." — Plautus

"The actions of men are the best interpreters of their thoughts." — John Locke

TUESDAY

"We confine our love of peace to paper. We profess friendship but practice vengeance." — William Borah

"Promises may get friends, but it is performance that nurses and keeps them." — Owen Feltham

WEDNESDAY

"There are some situations in which we are unable to take action. Then, all we can do is brace ourselves against the shock. But when we have the power to act, we must strike quickly, hard and above all, in the right place. With patience and strength we can endure all things and achieve many." — Jan Struther

THURSDAY

"We fret ourselves to reform life in order that posterity will say (as usual) in the past it used to be better, the present is worse than the past." — Chekov

"Science is always wrong, it never solves a problem without creating ten more. — Thomas Huxley

"What we call 'progress' is the exchange of one nuisance for another." — Havelock Ellis

FRIDAY

"There are many isms to perplex us - Naxism, Communism, Fascism and so forth. But most of them will cancel each other out. There is only one ism which kills the soul, and that is pessimism." — Lord Tweedsmuir

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 28, 1952

MONDAY

"Many a time I have wanted to stop talking and find out what I really believe." Walter Lippman

"The things a man believes most profoundly are rarely on the surface of his mind or on the tip of his tongue - they are somewhere way down below." Eric Johnston

TUESDAY

"Responsibility's like a string we can only see the middle of. Both ends are out of sight." William McFee

WEDNESDAY

"Justice, with change of interest, learns to bow, and what was merit once is murder now." Daniel DeFoe

"Fear and guilt are not the same things. And when our actions are not, our fears are crimes." Sir John Denham

THURSDAY

"One small candle lighted near Plymouth Rock on a dull December day in 1620 has burned with a steady flame that no misfortune could quench. Let us have confidence that divine providence who kept alight that one dmall candle from which a thousand have been lit, has some great purpose for the million-candle power nation to perform." Samuel Eliot Morison

FRIDAY

Hope

"It is hope that maintains most of mankind." Sophocles

"It is necessary to hope, the hope should always be deluded, for hope itself is happiness and its frustrations, however, frequent, are yet less dreadful than its extenction." Samuel Johnson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 21, 1952

MONDAY

"If only the whole world could feel the power of harmony. And yet, it is impossible, for it seems humanity cannot endure the paltrinness of existence." — Mozart

"With all thy getting, get understanding." — New Testament ~~Mozart~~

TUESDAY

"A trouble shared is a trouble halved." — Dorothy Sayers

"Borrow trouble for yourself, but don't lend it to your neighbors." — Kipling

WEDNESDAY

"If you wish to converse with me, define your terms." — Voltaire

"it is easy for disputants to evade facts by entrenching themselves behind a definition." — A.J. Gordon

THURSDAY

"You can never plan the future by the past." — Edmund Burke

""I like the dreams of the future better than the history of the past." — Jefferson

FRIDAY

"Can honour set a leg, or an arm, or take away the grief of a wound?No$" — Shakespeare

"I shall remember while the light lives yet, and in the night-time I shall not forget." — Swinburg

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 14, 1952

MONDAY

"Those friends are a nuisance who spring into being whenever fortune smiles." Aristophanes

"The problems af victory are more agreeable than those of defeat, but are no less difficult." Winston Churchill

TUESDAY

"Today is not yesterday, we ourselves change. How can our works and thoughts continue alwasys the same. Change indeed is painful yet ever needfull, and if memory have its force and worth, so also has hope. Thomas Carlyle

WEDNESDAY

"Already we have stopped jumping nervously at every whisper of anger from behind the Iron Curtain. Now if our security programs do not fall victim to the insincere inducements of communist propaganda, Americans and their allies may live in a brighter world." Gen.Bradley

"Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed, lest he fall." New Testament

THURSDAY

"What cannot be removed becomes lighter through patience." Horace

"Life is not easy for any of us. But what of that? We must have perseverance, and above all, confidence in ourselves." Marie Curie

FRIDAY

"It is easy for men to say one thing and think another." Publilius Syrus

"Egad, I think the interpreter is the hardest to be understood of the two." Richard Sheridan

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING NOVEMBER 7, 1952

MONDAY

"Two men look out through the same bars; one sees the mud and one the stars." — Frederick Langbridge

"The promising season ends tomorrow. And at about 8 o'clock the alibi season opens and lasts for the next 4 years." — Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"The election is over at sundown and let everybody pray that it's not a tie. For we couldn't go through with this thing again. When the votes are counted, let's everybody get into a good humor as quick as they got into a bad one. Let's offer no alibis, but cooperate with the winner. Let's all be friends again. For one of the evils of a Democracy is you have to put up with a man you elect whether you want him or not." — Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY

"The people is everyman, everybody. Everybody is you and me and all others. And what everybody says is what we all say." — Carl Sandburg

"Why should there not be a patient confidence in the ultimate justice of the people. Is there any better or equal hope in the world?" — A. Lincoln

THURSDAY

"There is an eloquent silence that serves sometimes to approve, sometimes to condemn. There is a mocking silence and there is a respectful silence." — La Rochefoucauld

"Silence, like a poultice, comes to heal the blows of sound." — Oliver Holmes

FRIDAY

"Humor is the great thing, the saving thing, after all. The minute it crops up all our hardnesses yield, all our irritations and resentments slip away and a sunny spirit takes their place. Besides, humor is the good-natured side of any truth..it sets the "thinking machinery" in motion. — Mark Twain

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 31, 1952

MONDAY

"Give every man thy ear, but few thy voice; take each man's censure, but reserve thy judgement." — Hamlet

"Believe nothing rashly." — Cato

TUESDAY

"What can't be cured must be endured." — Robert Burton

"Never any weary traveler complained that he came too soon to his journey's end." — Thomas Fuller

WEDNESDAY

"There ain't noghing more to write about, and I'm glad of it. Because if I'd aknowed what a trouble it was, I wouldn't a tackled it. And I ain't ageing to no more." — Mark Twain

THURSDAY

"One had a toy the other wanted, and clamored for. At last, when told to let his brother have it in order to keep him quiet, he blurted: No sir, I must have it to quiet myself." — Carl Sandburg

FRIDAY

"The end of man is action not thought. But everybody knows that it's much harder to turn word into deed than deed into word." — Thomas Carlyle) Maxim Gorky)

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 24, 1952

MONDAY

"Things are seldom what they seem. Skim milk masquarades as cream." Gilbert & Sullivan

"The clear-sighted may not rule the world but they sustain and console it." Agnes Repler

TUESDAY

"It is what we give up, not what we lay up, that adds to our lasting store." Hosea Ballou

"The value of a sentiment is the amount of sacrifice you are prepared to make for it." John Galsworthy

WEDNESDAY

"Everyone believes very easily whatever he fears or desires." La Fontaine

"What we need, is faith - that is : believing what you know ain't so." Mark Twain

THURSDAY

"Breer Tarrypin sez Brer Fox you ain't seen no trouble yet." "Uncle Remus"

I sometimes wonder whether the pleasure of making a daisy chain would be worth the trouble of getting up and picking the daisies." "Alice in Wonderland"

FRIDAY

"Most controversies would soon be ended if those engaged in them would first accurately define their terms and then adhere to their definitions." Tryon Edwards

"Strong and bitter words usually indicate a weak cause." Victor Hugo

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 17, 1952

MONDAY

"We often make more enemies by what we say than friends by what we do." — John Collins

"All generalisations are dangerous - even this one." — Alexander Dumas

TUESDAY

"Progress is not an accident, but a necessity." — Herbert Spencer

"When the oil is exhausted the lamp will go out." — Wm. Scarborough

WEDNESDAY

"He's (middleman) a man who bamboozles one party and plunders the other." — Disraeli

"The selfish spirit of commerce knows no country and feels no passion or principle except gain." — Thomas Jefferson

THURSDAY

"A shoemaker is not a good craftsman who puts big shoes on a small foot. Because no one, including the shoemaker, can tell me where my shoe pinches me." — Plutarch

FRIDAY

"Parables are not lies because they describe events which never happened." — George B. Shaw

"Why laugh at satire? change but the name and the tale is told of you." — Horace

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 10, 1952

MONDAY

"There are some defeats more triumphant than victories." Montaigne

"In one short hour's space can come swift death or joyful victory." Horace

TUESDAY

"Whether I come to my own today or in ten thousand or ten million years, I can cheerfully take it now or with equal cheerfulness, I can wait." Walt Whitman

WEDNESDAY

"No critic has ever settled anything." James Huneker

"The public is the only critic whose opinion is worth anything at all." Mark Twain

THURSDAY

"It is only this present - a moment of time - that man lives." Marcus Aurelius

"There is nothing in words. Believe only what is before your eyes." Ovid

FRIDAY

"There are alot of words in this world and many of them are lying around loose." Whit Burnett

"One ought, every day at least, to speak a few reasonable words." Goethe

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING OCTOBER 3, 1952

MONDAY

"We should look at the lives of all as at a mirror and take from others an example for ourselves." — Terrence

"Few things are harder to put up with than the annoyance of a good example." — Mark Twain

TUESDAY

"Who can hope to be safe, who sufficiently cautious, guard himself as he may, for every moment's an ambush." — Horace

"To make sacrifices in little things is what we are seldom equal to." — Goethe

WEDNESDAY

"The advantage of the emotions is that they lead us astray." — Oscar Wilde

"We don't reason where we feel; we just feel." — Mark Twain

THURSDAY

"Mystery is the antagonist of Truth. It is a fog of human invention that obscures the truth and represents it in distortion. Truth never has to envelop itself in mystery." — Thomas Paine

"I wish he would explain his explanation," — George Byron

FRIDAY

"I shall always consider the best guesser the best prophet." — Cicero

"A prophet is a man that foresees trouble." — Finely Peter Dunne

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 26, 1952

MONDAY

"If men would consider not so much wherein they differ, as wherein they agree, there would be far less angry feeling in this world." — Joseph Addison

"Men are never so good or so bad as their opinions." — Sir James MacIntosh

TUESDAY

"A man's character is revealed by his speech...a man cannot speak, but he judges himself." — Menander and Ralph Waldo Emerson

WEDNESDAY

"From now till November, neither of the boys can be themselves...They are on parade...They are eating and sleeping in a show window...They are acting...every minute...and I don't care how smart you are...If you say something, you are liable to say something foolish, and the longer you talk, the more fool things you will say..." — Will Rogers

THURSDAY

"Because of the slowness of the railway, we advised the conductor to put the cowcatcher on the other end of the train, because we were not going to overtake any cows, but there is no protection against their climbing aboard at the other end, and biting the passengers..." — Mark Twain

FRIDAY

"If you speak insults you will also hear them." — Plautus

"One insult pocketed, soon produces another." — Thomas Jefferson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 19, 1952

MONDAY

"America is a nation that conceives many odd inventions for getting somewhere, but can think of nothing to do when it gets there." — Will Rogers

"We are called the nation of inventors. And we are. We could still claim that title and wear its loftiest honors if we had stopped with the first thing we ever invented -- human liberty." — Mark Twain

TUESDAY

"The proper qualities of a general are judgement and deliberation." — Tacitus

"Artificial optimism alienates more friends than it makes.. every man of sense is a pessimist, that is to say, he is cautious." — F.C. Appley and William Sumner

WEDNESDAY

"Why does magnificiently applied science bring us so little happiness? The simple answer is that we have not yet learned to make sensible use of it." — Albert Einstein

"Science never solves a problem without creating ten more." — George Bernard Shaw

THURSDAY

"What is moral is what you feel good after. What is immoral is what you feel bad after." — Ernest Hemingway

"Actions will be judged according to intentions." — Mohammed

FRIDAY

"Men must be decided on what they will not do, and then they are able to act with vigor in what they ought to do." — Men-shy-us

"Decide not rashly. The decision made can never be recalled." — Longfellow

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 12, 1952

MONDAY

"Most men wonder at things which deceive them by distance." Seneca

"Paintings and fightings are best seen at a distance." Benjamin Franklin

TUESDAY

"I am invariably of the politics of people at whose table I sit or beneath whose roof I sleep." George Borrow

"Principles become modified in practice by facts." J. Fennimore Cooper

WEDNESDAY NAME

"It doesn't matter what kind of a label you put on an empty bottle." Anonymous

"Names are much more persistent, than the functions upon which they were originally bestowed." Woodrow Wilson

THURSDAY

"Society is constantly advancing in knowledge. The tail is now where the head was some generations ago. It is delightful to think that in due time, the last of those who struggle in the rear of the great march will occupy the place now occupied by the advanced guard." Thomas Macaulay

FRIDAY

"All great alterations in human affairs are produced by compromise." Sydney Smith

"Compromise is a temporary expedient---often wise in party politics, but almost sure to be unwise in statesmanship." James Russell Lowell

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING SEPTEMBER 5, 1952

MONDAY

"In a narrow road look out for a dagger." — Chinese proverb

"Excessive precaution does no harm." — Sir Edward Coke

TUESDAY

"Most men's politics sit much too loosely about them." — William Draper

"Politicians neither love nor hate. Interest, not sentiment, directs them." — Lord Chesterfield

WEDNESDAY

"You must not speak of secret matters in a field that is full of little hills." — John Ray

"A secret may sometimes best be kept by keeping the secret of its being a secret." — Henry Taylor

THURSDAY

"It's just like two bald-headed men arguing over a comb." — Russian proverb

"Who has a longer view of things, anyway? A Prime Minister in a closet, or a man on a barn roof?" — E.B. White

FRIDAY

"Man is born with the faculty of speech. But why should he be able to speak before he has anything to say." — Benjamin Wishkut

"His speeches are those of one who has something to say, not of one who has to say something." — Alfred Blemfield

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING AUGUST 1, 1952

MONDAY

"Great changes can best be brought about under old forms." Henry George

"A modesty in delivering our sentiments leaves us at liberty of changing them without blushing."

Thomas Wilson

TUESDAY

" We on our side, are praying to Him to give us victory, because we believe we are right; but those on the other side pray to Him, too, for victory, believing they are right. What must He think of us?"

Abraham Lincoln

WEDNESDAY

"An error doesn't become a mistake until you refuse to correct it."

O. A. Battista

"If it was an error, its causes were honorable." Ovid

THURSDAY

"Character is made by what you stand for, reputation by what you fall for."

Robert Quillen

"Few people have enough character to endure the truth, and to speak it."

Vovnarg

FRIDAY

"A life at ease is a difficutl pursuit." William Cowper

"Write me a verse, my old ~~XXXX~~ machine; I lack for an inspiration. The skies are blue and the trees are green, and I long for a long vacation."

Ted Robinson

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JULY 25, 1952

MONDAY

"Everything is as quiet, restful and beautiful; you wouldn't think there was a Democrat in a thousand miles. But if the boys are not shouting and singing here, it's because they not only have a convention on their hands, but a problem."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"We shall see but a little way, if we are required to understand what we see." How few things can a man measure with the tape of his understanding."

Thoreau

WEDNESDAY

"It is ordinary to see a man change his tastes. It is extraordinary to see him change his inclinations."

La Rochefoucauld

"When it's ready, there won't be a wire-walker in America that can stand on it."

Will Rogers

FRIDAY

"Believe nothing rashly." Cato

"It is the unexpected that constantly happens." E. J. Hardy

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JULY 18, 1952

MONDAY

"I generally give the party in power, whether Republican or Democratic, the more digs, because they are generally doing the country the most damage. And besides, I don't think it's fair to jump too much on the fellow who is down. He is not working. He is only living in hopes of getting back in on the graft in another four years, while the party in power is drawing a salary to be knocked."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"Some are born great; some achieve greatness; others have greatness thrust upon them. But whatever the case, be not afraid of greatness."

Shakespeare

WEDNESDAY

"Censure is the 'tax' a man pays to the public for being eminent."

Jonathan Swift

"Never try to explain. Your friends will understand, and your enemies will not believe you anyhow."

Elbert Hubbard

THURSDAY

"I wouldn't stay for the thing, but I know that a Democrat is just like a baby. If it's hollering and making a lot of noise, there is nothing serious the matter with it. But if it's quiet and still, and don't pay much attention to anything, why that's when it's really dangerous."

Will Rogers

FRIDAY

"The secret of success in life is for a man to be ready for his opportunity when it comes."

Benjamin Disraeli

"Merry is the feast-making till we come to the reckoning." John Wray

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JULY 11, 1952

MONDAY

"It was an impromptu address that he had been working on for six months. But after all, a Keynote Speech is really press notices of the Republican Party written by its own members."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"The rung of a ladder was never meant to rest upon, but only to hold man's foot long enough to enable him to put the other somewhat higher."

Thomas Huxley

WEDNESDAY

"In statesmanship, to strike too soon is oft to miss the blow." Tennyson

"He who will not when he may, may not when he will." John of Salisbury

THURSDAY

"Make every speaker, as soon as he tells all he knows, sit down. Or make them be conserved and not allow one man to repeat what some other man had already said. That would cut it down to just one speech at each convention."

Will Rogers

FRIDAY

* * * * * * * * * *

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE CBS RADIO NETWORK
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JULY 4, 1952

MONDAY

"Fear, instead of avoiding danger, only invites it." — Lord Chesterfield

"The less there is of fear, the less there is of danger." — Livy

TUESDAY

"All men desire by nature to know." — Aristotle

"No anchor, no cable, no fences avail to keep a fact a fact." — Emerson

WEDNESDAY

"Without free speech, no search for truth is possible and no discovery of truth is useful. Better a thousand-fold abuse of free speech than denial of free speech. The abuse dies in a day, but the denial slays the life of the people and entombs the hope of the race." — Charles Bradlaugh

THURSDAY

"We usually dread least the danger nearest at hand." — Seneca

FRIDAY

"When you have decided on doing something, never avoid being seen in the act, even though it is disapproved by some. If the thing is right, don't be afraid of those who incorrectly disapprove it of it." — Epictetus

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JUNE 27, 1952.

MONDAY

"If we abuse the earth - destroy its soils by erosion, lay waste its cover of forest and grassland, pollute its waters - our world can not long protect and support us."

Stuart Chase

"Without natural resources, life itself is impossible. Conservation is the basis of permanent prosperity among men and lasting peace among nations."

Gifford Pinchot

TUESDAY

"Party Platform committees are the world's greatest appeasers. Harmony is their watchword, and the greatest vote from the greatest number is their golden goal."

David Hinshaw

WEDNESDAY

"The strongest tower has not the highest wall. Think well of this when you sit safe at home."

Williams Morris

"We usually dread least the danger nearest at hand." Seneca

THURSDAY

"It is better to light one small candle than to curse the darkness."

Confucius

"Men credit most easily things which they do not understand; they believe most easily things which are obscure. People can be made to follow a line of action, but they cannot be made to understand it."

Tacitus

FRIDAY

"There are two things a man should never be angry at; what he can help, and what he can not help."

Thomas Fuller

"There are no friends at cards or politics." Finlay Peter Dunne

"By different methods, different men excell." Charles Churchill

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JUNE 20, 1952

MONDAY

"Compromise makes a good umbrella, but a poor roof." James Russel Lowell

"The essence of politics is compromise." Thomas Macaulay

TUESDAY

"Situations arise in which people take a gambler's chance, and sometimes carry it off. But true success belongs to those whose strength is real because it is backed by courage and character. In the long run, real artillery is more reliable than ruses.

Marine Commandant
Vandergrift

WEDNESDAY

"Talk about economizing and cutting out all unnecessarys. What's the idea of holding conventions? The papers announce all the campaign plans, the platform will be the one they have read for 40 years and have never used, and the speeches will be the same ones delivered for 40 years but never listened to."

Will Rogers

THURSDAY

"There is nothing so consoling as to find that one's neighbor's troubles are at least as great as one's own."

George Moore

"Pay no attention to what the critics say. There has never been set up a statue in honor of a critic."

Sibelius

FRIDAY

"We have heard nothing since ten o'clock this morning, but 'the man I am going to name.' There are so many being nominated that some of the men making the nominating speeches had never even met the man they were nominating. I know they had not from the way they talked about them."

Will Rogers

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JUNE 13, 1952

MONDAY

"A convention is the one place where our public man can do foolish things, and due to the surroundings, they look kinda' plausible at the time. It takes weeks after one is over to see what was really inside it. Then is when our sense of humor asserts itself."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY

"The trade of a soldier is war." Sir Henry Parkes

"Tis his cause that makes or mars a soldier's strength." Propertius

WEDNESDAY

"Very few can meet life's crises in one short, exalted hour of fighting."

Dorothy C. Fisher

"Never despair; but if you do, work on in despair." Edmund Burke

THURSDAY

"Our most threatening enemy is not the evil intention of the ordinary man, but the increasing confusion of our time."

G. Lowes Dickinson

"Now, out of complexity to distill simplicity; out of knowledge, essential understanding; out of confusion, clarity. Upon its discovery will depend survival."

Norman Angell

FRIDAY

"The same men that straw vote are the ones who can sit down all day and play solitaire. It's like winning on the races in your mind. No mathematician has been able to figure out how many hundred straw votes it takes to equal one legitimate vote."

Will Rogers

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING JUNE 6, 1952

MONDAY

"The law is the last result of human wisdom acting upon human experience for the benefit of the public."

Samuel Johnson

"A thousand things occur for which laws can not provide, where authority ought to interpose."

Samuel Johnson

TUESDAY

"To the stars through difficulties."

State Motto by the Kansas legislature

WEDNESDAY

"Fame usually comes to those who are thinking about something else - very rarely to those who say to themselves 'go to now; let us be a celebrated individual'."

Oliver Wendell Holmes

THURSDAY

"Hard questions must have hard answers."

FRIDAY

"It's not a bright future that we ask the college graduate to enter into. They feel they are the ones to right it; we feel we are the ones that lost it and will find it. We can't help but look back; they can't help but look forward. But we are both standing on the same ground - and their feet are there as firmly as ours."

Will Rogers

M.30

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 30, 1952

MONDAY:

"It is a vain attempt to bind the ambitious by treaties." — James Thompson

"No action, whether fair or foul, is ever done but it leaves somewhere a record - as a blessing or a curse; and mostly in the greater weakness or greater strength of the acts which follow it." — Longfellow

TUESDAY:

"Laws were made that the strongest might not in all things have his way." — Ovid

"I am a man, and nothing that concerns mankind is alien to me." — Roman Terence

WEDNESDAY:

"If you will give the American people an opportunity to function, not by fear nor yet by favor, and let every segment of society feel that it is not disfavored to the advantage of another, in a few months you'll see an amazing change." — Baruch

"It's easy to dodge our responsibilities, not so easy to dodge the consequences of dodging our responsibilities." — Josiah Stamp

THURSDAY:

"The Russians would rather stir up a strike than eat; they thrive on adversity; they play with the biggest and most dangerous toy in the world - liberty. But Communism is one third practice and two-thirds explanation." — Will Rogers

"Civil dissension is the enemy's chance." — Publilius Syrus

FRIDAY:

"Freedom is everybody's job. When freedom shrieks, everybody should listen. And should the question be asked continuously, oh constantly, like this: who paid for my freedom, and what the price, and am I somehow beholden. The question is not rhetorical. It is a burning and terrible historical question." — Carl Sandburg

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 23, 1952

MONDAY:

"It is an axiom in my mind that our liberties can never be safe, except when they are in the hands of the people themselves."

Thomas Jefferson

"How lightly, how often, do we sanction a law unjust to ourselves." Horace

TUESDAY:

"War is merely the continuation of politics by other means." Von Clausewitz

"The real and lasting victories are those of peace and not of war." Emerson

WEDNESDAY:

"Life does not stop while we build the nation's strength. Children are born and grow up. They go to school and to college. You can not put a generation into educational cold storage, and then later put them into an educational hothouse."

Earl James McGrath

THURSDAY:

"An invasion of armies can be resisted, but an invasion of ideas cannot."

Victor Hugo

"It is easier to fight for one's principles than to live up to them."

Alfred Adler

FRIDAY:

"If we could first know where we are and whither we are tending, we could better judge what to do and how to do it."

Abraham Lincoln

"It's a pretty quarrel as it stands; you only spoil it by trying to explain it."

Richard Sheridan

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 16, 1952

MONDAY:

"Our way of living together in America is a strong, but delicate fabric. It is made up of many threads, woven over many centuries by the patience and sacrafice of countless liberty loving man and women. Let us not tear it asunder. For no man knows, once it is destroyed, when or where man will find its protective warmth again."

Wendell Wilkie

TUESDAY:

"Those who make the worst use of their time, are the first to complain of its shortness."

La Bruyere

"Time is often said to be money. But it can be more. It can be life itself."

Sir John Lubbock

WEDNESDAY:

"It is good to sometimes wash away the salt-water taste with a fresh-water discourse."

Plato

"Give it an understanding, but no tongue." Shakespeare "Hamlet"

THURSDAY:

"The proper qualities of a general are judgement and deliberation."

Tacitus

"The greatest general is he who makes the fewest mistakes." Napoleon

FRIDAY:

"I hope I never get so old, that I can't peek behind the scenes and see the amount of politics that's mixed before it is dished out to the people as pure statesmanship. Politics is the best show in America, and I'm going to keep on enjoying it; so on with the show."

Will Rogers

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 9, 1952

MONDAY:

"The wise man guards against the future as if it were the present."

Publilius Syrus

"They are wisest, who even in the likelihood of good, provide for ill."

Sir Thomas Overbury

TUESDAY:

"Use the little to get the big; throw a brick to get a gem." William Scarborough

"If you make a bad bargain, hug it all the tighter." Abraham Lincoln's father

WEDNESDAY:

"We must expect everything and fear everything from time and man."

Luc de Vauvenargues

"It is the unexpected that constantly happens." E. J. Hardy

THURSDAY:

"To know how to refuse, is as important as to know how to consent. A gilded 'no' often gives more satisfaction than a dry 'yes'."

Baltasar Gracian

FRIDAY:

"Our whole life is but a greater and longer childhood." Thomas Fuller

"By reason, not by force, is youth to be mastered." Publilius Syrus

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MAY 2, 1952

MONDAY:

"Opinion is like water. It flows easily downhill, but it takes a lot of pressure to pump it up." — Dr. Robert McMurray

"There are many who deplore but few who are willing to act." — General Marshall

TUESDAY:

"No power ought to be above the laws." — Cicero

"No law is entirely convenient for everyone." — Livius

WEDNESDAY:

"Whatever you say may be held against you." — Old legal phrase

"There is an eloquent silence which serves sometimes to approve, sometimes to condemn." — La Rochefoucauld

"If a man is right, he can't be too radical." — Josh Billings

THURSDAY:

"All men desire by nature to know." — Aristotle

"He that shortens the road to knowledge, lengthens life." — C. C. Colton

FRIDAY:

"The horse thinks one thing, and he that saddles him another." — George Herbert

"You never accumulate, if you don't speculate." — David Dodge

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 25, 1952

MONDAY:

"Stafford is a queer duck. When he talks, you stand shivering from the ice blasts of cold logic. Yet, I never met anyone with more heart who wore so little of it on his sleeve."

An Old Friend

TUESDAY:

"So many of our ideas and attitudes have been vaporized by the atomic bomb that an inventory of what is left has assumed a high priority rating."

Gerald Johnson

WEDNESDAY:

"Duty too often is what one expects from others." Oscar Wilde

"Do the duty which lieth nearest to thee, which thou knowest to be a duty, and the second duty will already have become clearer."

Thomas Carlyle

THURSDAY:

"How can anyone pretend to foretell the affairs of others, when they cannot foresee their own?"

Aesop

"Who is there, if he shoots at a mark all day, will not occasionally hit the white?"

Cicero

FRIDAY:

"How far must suffering and misery go before we see that even in the day of vast cities and powerful machines, the good earth is our mother, and that if we destroy her, we destroy ourselves."

Paul Sears

"If man cheats the earth, the earth will cheat man." H. H. Hart

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 18, 1952

MONDAY:

"To an eye trained to read the landscape, the tragic disaster of flood has but one meaning: our continent is sick."

Paul Sears

TUESDAY:

"Diplomacy is a great thing, if it wasn't transparent." Will Rogers

"The decline of nations inevitably follows the possession of great power without the exercise of great leadership."

Joseph C. Grew

WEDNESDAY:

"Only where law prevails can people prevail." Publilius Syrus

"The best government, he said, is that in which the law speaks instead of the lawyer."

M. L. Byram

THURSDAY:

"In doubtful matters, courage may do much: in desperate patience."

Thomas Fuller

FRIDAY:

"I will have no part of any celebration which does not include every river rat, every man, who has been on those levees."

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 11, 1952

MONDAY:

"The selfish spirit of commerce feels no passion or principle but that of gain."

Thomas Jefferson

"What war e'en ravish, commerce can bestow. And he returns a friend who came a foe."

Alexander Pope

TUESDAY:

"Be not ashamed to say what you are not ashamed to think." Montaigne

"Whether you be a man or a woman, you will never do anything in this world without courage."

James Allen

WEDNESDAY:

"Questions are never indiscreet, but answers sometimes are." Oscar Wilde

"I fear explanations explanatory of things explained." Lincoln

THURSDAY:

"Nations are governed by self-interest, but they prefer to believe that their aims are altruistic."

Somerset Maugham

"Right is whatever profits a nation: wrong is whatever harms it."

Hans Frank

FRIDAY:

"When a man assumes a public trust he should consider himself public property."

Thomas Jefferson

"As we must account for every idle word, so we must for every idle silence."

Benjamin Franklin

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING APRIL 4, 1952

MONDAY:

"If one waits until a thing happens and then declares that it happened, you can't go wrong: science, statistics, legal documents and everything else is on your side."

William Saroyan

"No matter what happens, there is always someone who knew it would."

TUESDAY:

"Times change and people change their ideas."

C. W. Grafton

"To pretend to change anyone is an illusion. He picks up his first trail at the first occasion."

La Fontaine

WEDNESDAY:

"The greatest gift is the power to estimate correctly the value of things."

La Rochefoucauld

"Even when all the experts agree, they may well be mistaken."

Bertrand Russell

THURSDAY:

"Knowledge is acquired through a careful investigation of things. With things investigated, knowledge becomes complete."

Confucius

"Nothing's more pleasing than to know all the facts."

Menander

FRIDAY:

"A friendship that is begun for an end will not continue to the end."

Francis Quarles

"Nothing is of more service to mankind than a prudent mistrust."

Euripides

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 28, 1952

MONDAY:

"Promises may make friends but 'tis performances that keep them." Arthur Henderson

"It is a maxim founded on the universal experience of mankind, that no nation is to be trusted farther than it is bound by its interests."

George Washington

TUESDAY:

"Even the final decision of a war is not to be regarded as absolute. The conquered nation often sees it as only a passing evil to be repaired in after times by political combinations."

Carl Von Clausewitz

WEDNESDAY:

"No army can withstand the strength of an idea that has materialized." Victor Hugo

"The buzz of a mosquito can sometimes drown out the ocean's roar." Henry Miller

THURSDAY:

"Discussion is the anvil on which the spark of truth is struck." _____

"Speak the truth freely, though the truth be hard." Cato

FRIDAY:

Silence is still a noise." Josh Billings

"Yes, I am a Democrat still - very still." David Hill

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 21, 1952

MONDAY:

"All actions beyond ordinary limits, are subject to sinister interpretations."

Montaigne

"Well timed silence hath more eloquence than speech." M. F. Tupper

"He who will not when he may, may not when he will." John of Salisbury

TUESDAY:

"If you want to get on in this world, make many promises but don't keep them."

Napoleon

"Talk much about a thing, and you will put it in the people's minds."

H. H. Brackenridge

"It is often easier to believe than to doubt." E. D. Martin

WEDNESDAY:

"If I was as bad as they say I am, and you were as good as you look, I wonder which one would feel the worse, if each for the other was took."

George Barr Baker

"Each man believes what he wishes to believe." Demosthenes

THURSDAY:

"Take time to deliberate. But when the time for action arrives, stop thinking and go in."

Andrew Jackson

"I will utter what I believe today, even if it should contradict all I said yesterday."

Wendell Phillips

FRIDAY:

"If a man begins with certainties, he will end with doubts. But if he will be content to begin with doubts, he shall end with certainties."

Roger Bacon

"The way to be safe, is never to feel secure." Roger Bacon

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 14, 1952

MONDAY:

"I don't care how smart you are. If you say something, you are liable to say something foolish, and the smarter you are and the longer you talk, the more fool things you will say."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY:

"I believe that there is more real nerve and gameness under the most discouraging circumstances in the picture business than any other place on earth. It's a heart-breaking racket, but they don't sit around and tell you about it. Their heads are always up."

Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY:

"A little stone can overturn a great cart. A mouse can put the finishing touches to a castle wall."

Henderson

"Don't lose heart. What's lost today may be won tomorrow."

Cervantes

THURSDAY: TAXES

"It annoys me to discover that the state assumes that we are a race of bookkeepers, and that every citizen has at his fingertips the myriad items of his costly little existence."

E. B. White

"Youth today must be strong, unafraid, and a better taxpayer than its father."

H. V. Wade

"The tax, contrary to general opinion is quite simple; it is you and I who are complex."

Frank Sullivan

FRIDAY:

"I never saw any good that came of telling the truth." Dryden

"The fewer the voices on the side of truth, the more distinct and strong must be your own."

William Channing

"Deeds will show themselves and words will pass away."

Le Roux de Lincy

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING MARCH 7, 1952

MONDAY:

"We are all servants of the law to the end that it may be possible for us to be free."

Cicero

"No wise man would ever inhabit a country where men have more authority than laws."

Sir Walter Raleigh

TUESDAY:

"How seldom we weight our neighbor in the same balance with ourselves."

Thomas Kempis

"A critic is a man who expects miracles." James Huneker

WEDNESDAY:

"No mathematician has ever been able to figure out how many hundred straw votes it takes to equal one legitimate vote. More men have been elected by straw votes to office, and fewer received salary, than any other industry in America."

Will Rogers

THURSDAY:

"Talk about a thing long enough and you will put it in the people's minds."

H. H. Brackenridge

"Each man believes what he wishes to believe." Demosthenes

"Nothing happens from saying so." Oswald Dykes

FRIDAY:

"No duty the executive has to perform is so trying as to put the right man in the right place. Yet how are vacancies to be obtained when few die, and none resign."

Jefferson - 1801

"Politics make strange postmasters." Kin Hubbard

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 29, 1952.

MONDAY:

"Democracy needs more free speech, for even the speech of foolish people is valuable, if it serves to guarantee the right of the wise to talk."

David Cushman Coyle

"Above all liberties, give me liberty to know, to utter and to argue freely according to conscience."

John Milton

TUESDAY:

"There isn't much to be seen in a little town, but what you hear makes up for it."

Kin Hubbard

"Gossip is what no one claims to like, but everybody enjoys." Joseph Conrad

WEDNESDAY:

"There is a certain relief in change, even though it be from bad to worse; as I have found in travelling in a stage-coach, that it is often a comfort to shift one's position and be bruised in a new place."

Washington Irving

THURSDAY: DIVORCE

"Love is the quest, marriage the conquest, divorce the inquest."

Helen Rowland

"Paper napkins never return from a laundry nor love from a trip to the law courts."

John Barrymore

FRIDAY:

"Let men decide firmly what they will not do, then they will be free to do vigorously what they ought to do."

Chinese philosopher
Mencius

"Dynamic progress is not made with dynamite." Herbert Hoover

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 22, 1952

MONDAY:

"One secret act of self-denial, one sacrifice of inclination to duty, is worth all the mere good thoughts and passionate prayers in which idle people indulge themselves.

Cardinal Newman

TUESDAY:

"I see that saying and doing are two different things; and hereafter, I shall better observe this distinction."

John Bunyan

"It is not at the altar that we should deliberate." Erasmus

WEDNESDAY:

"This is the only country in the world that experiences a constant and repeated rebirth, by constantly drinking strength out of new sources from other lands. And so, by the gift of the free will of independent people, it is renewed from generation, by the same process, by which it was originally created."

Woodrow Wilson

THURSDAY:

"The history of the world is but the biography of great men." Carlyle

"Observe good faith and justice toward all nations; cultivate peace and harmony with all; and remember always, to keep alive in your breast that little spark of celestial fire - conscience."

George Washington

FRIDAY:

"We must promote as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. As the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened."

George Washington

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 15, 1952

MONDAY:

DEATH

"Death, to a good man, is but passing through a dark entry, out of one little dusky room of his father's house, into another that is fair and large, lightsome and glorious and divinely entertaining."

MacDonald Clark

"Let not the eyes by dry when we have lost a friend, nor let them overflow. We may weep, but we must not wail."

Seneca

TUESDAY:

"As bad as we are, and as funny as we do things, we are better off than the other c countries. So bring on the conventions - the bigger, the noisier, the crazier, the better. No nation likes noise and hooey like we do. We are cuckoo but we are happy."

Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY:

"There is nothing so unfortunate, as entering lightly into battle, for by so doing, we are in danger of losing that which is most precious."

Old Chinese Proverb

"Nothing is more delightful, than to look upon danger from a place of perfect safety."

Patricia Wentworth

THURSDAY:

LOVE

"True love is like a ghost; everyone talks of it, but few have seen it."

La Rouchefoucauld

"Love may be blind, but 'tis not for want of eyes." Thomas Fuller

"Whoever loves a frog, thinks the frog Diana." Alfred Henderson

FRIDAY:

"The tumult and the shouting dies, the captains and the kings depart; still stands thine ancient sacrifice, an humble and a contrite heart."

Rudyard Kipling

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FEBRUARY 8, 1952

MONDAY:

"If people establish a claim, I claim a crown. But if deeds are needed, I am helpless as the ant."

Abdullah Ansari

"Do not hope without despair; nor despair without hope." Seneca

TUESDAY:

"Super abundance of suspicion is a kind of political madness."

Francis Bacon

"It is a maxim founded on the universal experience of mankind, that no nation is to be trusted further than it is bound by its interests."

George Washington

WEDNESDAY:

"Do not judge life by what you have seen of it in the grimness and waste of war; nor yet by the confusion of the first years of peace. Have faith in life at its best, and bring to it your courage, your hopes and your sense of humor."

King George VI

THURSDAY:

"O Wisdom, who, with power infinite, utterest death to every creature born - grant to us now the mercy of thy light - with comfort to beloved queens, who mourn."

John Masefield

FRIDAY:

"A genuine statesman should be on his guard if he must have beliefs, not to believe them too hard."

James Russell Lowell

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1, 1952

MONDAY:

"Alliances are useless things; for if human nature does not knit men together, the faith of promises will have no great effect on them either."

Thomas More

"No amount of treaties can be relied on to prevent war so long as nations continue to have and exercise the unrestricted right of arming themselves against each other."

Lord Robert Cecil

TUESDAY:

"A brave man may fall, but he cannot yield." Old Latin Proverb

"Courage is the knowledge of what ought to be endured." Philo

WEDNESDAY:

"History shows us quite clearly that the signature of a treaty in defeat, is a means of regathering strength." Lenin

"All treaties cease to be binding, when they come into conflict with the struggle for existence." Bismarck

THURSDAY:

"There are too many fancy people in this country who abhor politics and politicians. What they fail to understand - like it or not - all of us are in politics - and in it up to our necks, from the day we're born until we die."

Dr. Peter Odegard

"The people cannot always see, but they can feel." James Harrington

FRIDAY:

"Even from an enemy, a man may learn wisdom." Aristophanes

"If thou suppose thee sure, whilst thou hast an enemy, thou puttest thyself in peril."

Saint Bernard

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR THE WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, JANUARY 25, 1952

MONDAY:

"The chief enemy of liberty is authoritarian, the very thing which liberty itself created."

Prof. James T. Shotwell

"States do not consist of lath and plaster, but of hearths and altars."

Cicero

TUESDAY:

"The evils of tyranny are rarely seen but by him who resists them."

John Hay

"Everything yields with time; even the stiffest patriots falter and compromise."

Emerson

WEDNESDAY:

"Nothing is more precious than life." Euripides

"Life is not to be purchased at any price." Seneca

THURSDAY:

"That which is easily begun is not always lightly ended." Robert Green

"It is commonsense to take a method and try it. If it fails, admit it frankly, and try another. But above all, try something."

Franklin Roosevelt

FRIDAY:

"When I was a boy I was told that anybody could become President. Now I'm beginning to believe it."

Clarence Darrow

"Before men possessed the right to vote, they were ready to die for it. When they got it, a large proportion do not use it, especially if it rains on election day."

Sir Norman Angell

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR THE WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, JANUARY 18, 1952

MONDAY:

"How is it possible to expect that mankind will take advice, when they will not so much as take warning?" Jonathan Swift

"We better start doing something about our defense. All we got to go by is history, and history don't record that economy ever won a war." Will Rogers

TUESDAY:

"Education is a debt due from the present to the future generations." George Peabody

"The best way to ensure implicit obedience is to commence tyranny in the nursery." Disraeli

WEDNESDAY:

"I am glad Chicago's children didn't come by on their way to school, and see how this wonderful system of choosing our country's leaders was conducted. They would never again have asked: 'What's the matter with the country.' " Will Rogers

"There are always the little people who have no voice, no knowledge, and no choice." Phyllis McGinley

THURSDAY:

"To improve is to change; to be perfected is to have changed often." Mr. Churchill

"We must move on, with cool eyes, undimmed by heat or passion, guided by righteous inspiration and not uncheered by hope." Mr. Churchill

FRIDAY:

"I desire to so conduct the affairs of this administration, that if, at the end, when I come to lay down the reins, I have lost every other friend on earth, I shall at least have one friend left - and that friend shall be down inside of me." Abraham Lincoln

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR THE WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, JANUARY 11, 1952

MONDAY:

"I can never take a politician seriously. They are always shouting that such and such a thing will ruin us and that this is the eventful year in our country's life. But all the years are the same. Each one has its little temporary setbacks, but they don't mean a thing in the general result. Nobody is making history. Everybody is just drifting along with the tide."

Will Rogers

TUESDAY:

"We are a good-natured bunch of saps in this country. When the President is wrong, we charge it to inexperience. When Congress is wrong, we charge it to habit. And when the Senate is right, we declare a national holiday. Everything is cockeyed. So what's the use kidding ourselves."

Will Rogers

"His conversation does not show the minute hand; but he strikes the hour very correctly."

Samuel Johnson

WEDNESDAY:

"Silence is one of the hardest arguments to refute." Josh Billings

"There is nothing believed so firmly as that of which one knows the least."

Montaigne

THURSDAY:

"There is nothing, sir, too little for so little a creature as man. It is by studying little things that we attain as little misery and as much happiness as possible."

Samuel Johnson

"It is hard to shave an egg." Thomas Fuller

FRIDAY:

"The only safeguard against tyranny in a time of expanding power, is increasing and never-ceasing confidence in the people themselves." Jonathan Daniels

"The proper office of a friend is to side with you when you are wrong. Nearly anybody will side with you when you are in the right."

Mark Twain

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR THE WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, JANUARY 4, 1952

MONDAY:

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid, a little understanding, and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year." Heinrich Heine

TUESDAY: HOPE

"Hope alone makes us willing to live." Thomas Fuller

" 'Tis better to hope than to despair." Goethe

"Hope is the pillar that holds up the world; hope is the dream of a waking man." Pliny

WEDNESDAY:

"The sincerity of a friendship is tested by some danger, as gold is by fire." Cicero

THURSDAY:

"He has not learned the lesson of life who does not every day surmount a fear." Emerson

"True bravery is shown, by performing without witness, what one might be capable of doing before all the world." La Rochefoucauld

FRIDAY:

"The greatest corrective for anger is delay." Seneca

"Let your talk be such as is worthy of belief, and your words such as are commonly used." Ovid

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR THE WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, DECEMBER 28, 1951.

MONDAY: - Xmas

"The legend of St. Nick is the last living relic of the vanishing world of dreams. The fairies are gone, the witches and ghosts are gone. Santa Claus alone lingers with us. Let us keep him as long as we can. Children learn to see soon enough, too clearly, too well. Leave them at least one thrill that may linger with them when the years begin to grow too plain and dull and bare. After all, in this universe of ignorance, anything may be true -- even our dreams."

Gamaliel Bradford

TUESDAY: - PATIENCE

"There is one form of hope that never is unwise and which certainly does not diminish with the increase of knowledge. In that form, it changes its name and we call it 'patience'."

Edward Bulwer Lytton

WEDNESDAY:

"Money is the symbol of nearly everything that is necessary for man's well-being and happiness. Money means freedom, independence, liberty."

Edward Beals

"Every compromise is surrender and invites new demands."

Emerson

THURSDAY:

"Both parties might save themselves much trouble and second-rate thought by adopting the policy of Mike Sutton, a rare, vigorous, shaggy, uninhibited lawyer of Dodge City, Kansas, in the early days. When he ran for Mayor, Sutton's platform had only one plank: 'Like Caesar's wife, I will be all things to all men.' "

David Hinshaw

FRIDAY:

"If you will be a traveller, have always the eyes of a falcon, the ears of an ass, the face of an ape, the mouth of a hog, the shoulder of a camel, the legs of a stag, and see that you never want two bags very full: that is, one of patience and another of money."

John Florio - 1591

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
"WORD FOR TODAY" FOR THE WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, DECEMBER 21, 1951

MONDAY:

"It is my conviction that the necessary and wise subordination of the military to civil power will be best sustained, and our people will have greater confidence that it is sustained, when lifelong professional soldiers, (in the absence of some obvious and over-riding reasons), abstain from seeking high political office."
General Eisenhower

TUESDAY:

"It is not necessary for all men to be great in action. The greatest and sublimest power is often simple patience." Horace Bushell

WEDNESDAY:

"Lawyers are men who hire out their words and anger." (?)

"Anyone can become angry. That is easy. But to be angry with the right person, to the right degree, at the right time, for the right purpose, and in the right way - that is not easy." Aristotle

THURSDAY:

"A belief is not true because it is useful." (?)

"A man lives by believing something, not by debating and arguing about many things."
Thomas Carlyle

"We believe that mustard bites the tongue; that pepper is hot; friction-matches incendiary; revolvers are to be avoided; and suspenders hold up pantaloons."
Emerson

FRIDAY:

"Deviate an inch and lose a thousand miles." Old Chinese Proverb

"He who turns to look a second time will lose nothing."
William Scarborough

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1951

MONDAY:

"It is not the crook in modern business that we fear, but the honest man who doesn't know what he's doing." Owen D. Young

"Youth today must be strong, unafraid, and a better taxpayer than its father." Harry Wade

TUESDAY:

"German commerce is getting back strong. This proves that war is useless. Germany was getting too strong commercially for some other nations fifteen years ago. It don't do no good to whip a man if he is beating you at anything. When he gets up, he can still beat you at the same thing. You only delay him. You don't stop him." Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY:

"Count that day won, when turning on its axis, this earth imposes no additional taxes." F. P. Adams

"We talk about getting back to the good old days. Well, the good old days, with most of us, was when we didn't earn enough to pay an income tax." Will Rogers

THURSDAY:

"Everybody in this world has one special friend that he's glad to do favors to. You've only to find the first friend - that is all. He finds the next friend and then it's like a chain - and you go up it or down it, as high as you like or as low as you like." Mark Twain

"The name of friendship endures as long as there is profit in it." Petroneus

FRIDAY:

"Don't knock the weather. Nine-tenths of the people couldn't start a conversation, if it didn't change once in a while." Kin Hubbard

"There is no good in arguing with the inevitable. The only argument available with an east wind is to put on your overcoat." James Russell Lowell

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1951

MONDAY:

"Honor is like an island, rugged and without a beach; once we have left it, we can never return."
Nicholas Boileau

TUESDAY:

"There are no hopeless situations; there are only hopeless men."
Some diplomat -

"Be not hope without despair, nor despair without hope." Sennon

"Man propounds negotiations; man accepts the compromise. Very rarely will he squarely push the logic of a fact to its ultimate conclusion in unmitigated act."
Kipling

WEDNESDAY: OPINION

"Too often we are inclined to do something to suppress opinions just because we do not like them. What is important to remember is that free speech works better than any form of censorship. For as long as everyone has the right to speak, the truth is bound to emerge."
Arthur Garfield Hayes

"Error of opinion may be tolerated where reason is left free to combat it."
Thomas Jefferson

THURSDAY:

"Cursing, or under-valuing an enemy is not the way to beat him."
Oswald Dykes

"In cases of defense, 'tis best to weigh the enemy more mighty than he seems."
Shakespeare's
"Henry the Fifth"

FRIDAY:

"Fellowship in treason is a bad ground of confidence." Edmund Burke

"The friendships of the world are oft confederecies in vice."
Joseph Addison

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 30, 1951

MONDAY:

"What gets my goat is hearing constantly: Why don't those people move out of there; there are floods every year! But how are they going to move; who is going to move them; where are they going to move to, and what are they going to do when they move there? To these sort of people I say: Why don't you try moving?" Will Rogers

TUESDAY:

"One mustn't criticise other people on grounds where he can't stand perpendicular himself." Mark Twain

"Do not fear to grate their tender ears with sharp truths." Erasmus

WEDNESDAY:

"It is something to think that a half-dozen men can sit down and casually sign a pact to stop millions of men from killing each other." Will Rogers

"Distrust and caution are the parents of security." Benjamin Franklin

THURSDAY:

"We need full mobilization now: we must mobilize all our resources - men, money, material, and morale - so that whatever happens, our armed forces can get what they want when they want it. If war comes we won't have time to hold the line until we get ready." Bernard Baruch

"He that is not in the war, is not out of danger." Sydney Herbert

FRIDAY:

"A fool may ask more questions in an hour, than a wise man can answer in seven years." John Ray

"Questions are never indiscreet; answers sometimes are." Oscar Wilde

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 23, 1951

MONDAY:

"All of us are prone to put the blame for our inefficiency and failure upon society, environment, early training - any place, but on our own precious selves."
H. K. Nixon

"If you are standing upright, you don't have to worry if your shadow is crooked."
Old Chinese Proverb

TUESDAY:

"Trust not a reconciled friend, for good turns cannot blot out old grudges."
George Chapman

"Enemies are wealth to anyone who can derive profit from them."
Xenophon

WEDNESDAY:

"He hath no power that hath not power to use."
P. J. Bailey

"Beyond his strength, may no man fight, however eager he may be."
Homer

THURSDAY: Thanksgiving

"Grant us the wisdom and the vision to comprehend the greatness of man's spirit that suffers and endures so hugely for a goal beyond his own brief span. Grant us honor for the dead who died in the faith; honor for our living, who work and strive for the faith; redemption and security for all captive lands and peoples. Grant us a common faith that man shall know bread and peace, justice and righteousness, freedom and security. We are all of us children of earth: grant us that simple knowledge."
Stephen Vincent Benet

FRIDAY:

"An idea isn't responsible for the people who believe in it."
Don Marquis

"There is no adequate defense, except stupidity, against the impact of a new idea."
P. W. Bridgeman

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 16, 1951

MONDAY:

"Only a peace between equals can last: only a peace, the very principle of which is equality and a common participation in a common benefit."

Woodrew Wilson

"You are not going to get peace with millions of armed men. The Chariot of Peace cannot advance over a road littered with cannon." David Lloyd George

TUESDAY:

"His speech was a fine sample, on the whole, of rhetoric, which the learned call regamarole." Byron

"Far more numerous is the herd of such who think too little and talk too much."

John Dryden

WEDNESDAY:

"Because men do not fortify justice, they try to justify force."

Pascal

"The clearness of a cause is diminished by argument." Cicero

THURSDAY:

" 'Tis not contrary to reason to prefer the destruction of the whole world to the scratching of my finger." David Hume

FRIDAY:

"We think so, because other people think so...or because after all, we do think so...or because we were told so, and think we must think so...or because we once thought so, and think we still think so...or because having thought so, we think we will think so."

Henry Sedgewick

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 9, 1951

MONDAY:

"He who feels the respect which is due to others, cannot fail to inspire in them, regard for himself; while he who feels disrespect to others, cannot fail to inspire hatred against himself." Bronze Tablet at West Point

TUESDAY:

"In politics nothing is insignificant." Disraeli

"A man's first duty is to his conscience and honor. The party comes second to that - never first." Mark Twain

WEDNESDAY:

"If we all pulled together as much to put over a siege of peace as we do a spell of war, we would be sitting pretty. But we can't hardly wait for a war to end to start taking it out on each other. Peace is kinda like prosperity; there is mighty few nations that can stand it." Will Rogers

"There are no manifestos like cannon and musketry." Duke of Wellington

THURSDAY:

"I have never seen an instance of one or two disputants convincing the other by argument; but I have seen many, on their getting warm, become rude and shoot one another." Thomas Jefferson

"Talk often, but never long. In that case, if you do not please, at least you are sure not to tire your hearers." Lord Chesterfield

FRIDAY:

"Deem not the irrevocable past as wholly wasted, wholly vain, if rising on its wrecks, at last to something nobler we attain." Longfellow

"Remember this always: the future is not in the hands of fate, but in ours." Jusserand

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, NOVEMBER 2, 1951

MONDAY:

"Force rules the world and not opinion, but opinion is that which makes use of force." Pascal

TUESDAY:

"Union gives strength even to weak men." Homer

"Divide and rule, the politician cries. Unite and lead is the watchword of the wise." Goethe

WEDNESDAY:

"They were at last overthrown - not by their enemies, but by themselves and their own internal dissension." Thucydides

THURSDAY:

"No anchor, no cable, no fences, avail to keep a fact a fact." Emerson

"All power corrupts, and absolute power corrupts absolutely." Lord Acton

FRIDAY:

"If man does not find a solution for world peace, it will be the most revolutionary reversal of his record we have ever known." George Marshall

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, OCTOBER 26, 1951

MONDAY:

"If a man begins with certainties, he will end with doubt. But if he will be content to begin with doubt, he shall end with certainties."

Roger Beacon

"Though we cannot outvote them, we will out-argue them." Dr. Samuel Johnson

TUESDAY:

WEDNESDAY:

"In what year do you think the danger of war will be most acute?" a well-known statesman and diplomat was recently asked. He replied: "Last year."

THURSDAY:

"A politician is not as narrow-minded as he forces himself to be."

Will Rogers

FRIDAY:

"Power - it has come to me too late. There were days when on waking, I felt I could move dynasties and governments, but that has passed away."

Benjamin Disraeli

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, OCTOBER 19, 1951

MONDAY:

"Tis a principle of war, that when you can use the lightening, 'tis better than cannon."
Napoleon

TUESDAY:

"In a political year, it is easier to make heroes out of jackrabbits, than patriots of Congressmen."
Edgar Mowrer

"This country has gotten where it is in spite of politics, not by the aid of it. That we have carried as much political bunk as we have, andstill survived, shows we are a super nation."
Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY:

"We can not say the past is the past, without surrendering the future."
Winston Churchill

"You can never plan the future by the past."
Edmund Burke

THURSDAY:

"Ideals are all a question of who's talking. Those with power call their ideals justice. Those without power call their ideals rights."
Roger Baldwin

FRIDAY:

"A man should be clear of his meaning before he endeavors to give it any kind of utterance. And having made up his mind what to say, the less thought he takes how to say it, more than briefly, pointedly and plainly, the better."
Samuel Butler

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1951

MONDAY:

"What we are facing is a world-wide crisis, which appears in different forms in each land, different according to national conditions, habits and circumstances. But the problem is still world-wide, and the cure must be world-wide."
Nicholas Murray Butler

TUESDAY:

"By union, the smallest states thrive. By discord, the greatest are destroyed."
Sallust

WEDNESDAY:

"True opinions can prevail, only if the facts to which they relate are known. If they are not known, false ideas are just as effective as true ones - if not a little more effective."
Walter Lippman

THURSDAY:

"The Stupid speak of the past, the Wise of the present, and the Fools of the future."
Napoleon

"The dogmas of the quiet past are inadequate to the stormy present."
Abraham Lincoln

FRIDAY:

"No voter in the world ever voted for nothing. In some way, he has been convinced that he is to get something for that vote, and he usually jumps the way his bread looks like its buttered the thickest."
Mark Twain

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, OCTOBER 5, 1951

MONDAY:

"The Southerner is often inspired to do his best when the odds are heaviest against him, when he knows it, and when he knows further that the world knows it and is looking on." Thomas Wolfe

"Fishing in the South is pursued for its own sake and not as a means of recuperation between business deals." Clarence Cason

TUESDAY:

"Lo the poor Indian whose untutored mind sees God in clouds, or hears him in the wind." Pope

"We infer the spirit of a nation in great measure from its language, which is a sort of monument to which each individual, in a course of many hundred years, has contributed a stone." Emerson

WEDNESDAY:

"You can easily determine the calibre of a man by ascertaining the amount of opposition it takes to discourage him." Disraeli

"One more such victory, and we are undone." Pyrrhus

THURSDAY:

"The vanity of being known to be trusted with a secret is generally one of the chief motives to disclose it." Samuel Johnson

"Over here you can write whatever you want to; the only trouble is getting somebody that will read it." Will Rogers

FRIDAY:

"Dean is kidding the American people; he knows that those weapons are a long way off." Representative Van Zandt of the Atomic Energy Committee

"Brave actions never need a trumpet." Thomas Fuller

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, SEPT. 28, 1951.

MONDAY:

"Few men are better than their interest bids them." Thomas Fullers

"Germany is the only country which lacks both a hero to Liberty and a monument to Liberty." Emil Ludwig

TUESDAY:

"To many men, and many governments, the life of the human mind is a danger to be feared more than any other danger. And the word, which cannot be purchased, cannot be falsified, and cannot be killed, is the enemy most hunted for, and most hated." Archibald MacLeish

WEDNESDAY:

"The chief difficulty with the harmony of nations, is that every power wants to beat the war drum, and none is willing to play second fiddle." Unknown

"There are no friends at cards or world politics." Finley Peter Dunne

THURSDAY:

"There is a time to wink as well as to see." Thomas Fuller

"Drop the subject when you cannot agree. There is no need to be bitter because you know you are right." Mrs. Charles Cowman

FRIDAY:

"There is not a social, political or religious privilege that you enjoy today that was not bought for you by the blood and tears and patient suffering of the minority. It is the minority that have vindicated humanity in every struggle. It is a minority that have stood in the van of every moral conflict and achieved all that is noble in the history of the world." John Gough

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, SEPT. 21, 1951

MONDAY:

"Nothing is so fallacious as facts, except figures." George Canning

"The most useful and interesting letters we get are from children, seven or eight years old: they tell all they know, and then stop."
Mark Twain

TUESDAY:

"Our press is distinctively and preciously American; its mission is to stand guard over a nation's liberties, not its humbugs and shams."
Mark Twain

"When I finally go nuts, and the sanitorium officials hand me my paper hat, I hope it's the last edition." Bugs Baer

WEDNESDAY:

"There is no fortress so strong, that money cannot take it."
Cicero

"Be you ever so high, the law is above you." Thomas Fuller

THURSDAY:

"Treaties, at best, are complied with so long as interest requires their fulfilment. Consequently, they are binding on the weaker party only. And in plain truth, they are not binding at all."
Washington Irving

FRIDAY:

"I have never seen an instance of one of two disputants convincing the other by argument. But I have seen many, on their getting warm, become rude and shoot one another." Thomas Jefferson

"After all, what's lost today may be won tomorrow." Cervantes

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, SEPT. 14, 1951

MONDAY:

"Next in importance to freedom and justice is popular education, without which neither freedom nor justice can be permanently maintained."
James Gardield

"A debt, due from the present, to the future generations."
George Peabody

"School houses are the Republics line of fortifications."
Horace Mann

TUESDAY:

"To tax and to please, no more than to love and to be wise, is not given to men."
Edmund Burke

"The one thing that hurts more than having to pay an income tax, is not having to pay an income tax."
Thomas Dewar

"A pig, bought on credit, is forever grunting."
Spanish Proverb

WEDNESDAY:

"I am a soldier and unapt to weep or exclaim on fortune's fickleness."
Shakespeare's Henry the Sixth

"What I must do is all that concerns me - not what the people may think."
Emerson

THURSDAY:

"Disagreement makes agreement more precious...Harmony seldom makes headlines."
Silas Bent

FRIDAY:

"Nations are governed by self-interest. It is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another."
George Washington

"Fear will jar a man into action when common ordinary things like facts won't budge him."
Luke McLuke

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, SEPT. 7, 1951

MONDAY:

"As people grow older the weather looms larger, but with the young any kind of day has possibilities of a picnic." William Feather

"Thy blessing, Lord, on all vacation days, for weary ones who seek the quiet ways." Molly Anderson

TUESDAY:

"I bet San Francisco was a city from the very first time it had a dozen settlers...Cities are like gentlemen, they are born, not make..you are either a city or you are not...size has nothing to do with it...New York is "yokel", but San Francisco is 'city at heart'."

Will Rogers

WEDNESDAY:

"Much food brings on indigestion; much talk brings on trouble."

Old Chinese Proverb

"Why should I spare words? They cost nothing." Seneca

THURSDAY:

"Optimism is the spirit that makes the tea kettle sing when it's up to its neck in hot water." J. Whitcomb Broughter

"You can preserve fruit under pressure but not peace."

Joseph Quinnin

FRIDAY:

"Many people have the childish idea that once a treaty is signed, one is sold to Satan and received into Hell.. That is simply nonsense; history shows us quite clearly that the signature of a treaty in defeat is merely a means of re-gathering strength."

Lenin

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, AUGUST 31, 1951

MONDAY:

"There is more new deeds for land signed at these peace conferences than there is good will." Will Roges

"All treaties between great states cease to be binding when they come into conflict with the struggle for existence." Bismark

TUESDAY:

"The enemy of my enemy is my friend." Old French Proverb

"He who does something at the head of one regiment will eclipse him who does nothing at the head of a hundred." Lincoln

WEDNESDAY:

"No man needs a vacation so much as the person who has just had one." Elbert Hubbard

"The glory of America is not in its tall towers or vast acres. The glory of America is the American citizen; free, sovereign and unafraid. We do well to thank God for that." Lynn Landrum

THURSDAY:

"God grant that not only the love of Liberty, but a thorough knowledge of the rights of man may pervade all the nations of the earth, so that a philosopher may set his feet anywhere on its surface and say: 'This is my country'," Benjamin Franklin

"An individual is as superb as a nation." Walt Whitman

FRIDAY:

"...the safest way of passing such days (holidays) is to sit and yawn your head off." Voltaire

"We usually dread least, the danger nearest at hand." Seneca

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING FRIDAY, JUNE 29, 1951

MONDAY:

"Those whose ways are different do not make plans together" Confucius

"In honorable dealing we must consider what we intended, not what we said". Cicero

TUESDAY:

"To most men experience is like the stern lights of a ship, which illumine only the track it has passed". Coleridge

"One should learn to row before taking the rudder". Aristophanes

WEDNESDAY:

"Perseverance is more efficacious than violence, and many things which cannot be overcome when they stand together, yield themselves up when taken little by little". Sertorius

THURSDAY:

"When we come to judge others, it is not by ourselves as we really are that we judge them, but by an image that we have formed of ourselves. Actually there is not much to choose between men. They are all a hotchpotch of greatness and littleness, of virtue and vice, of nobility and baseness. Potentially they are the same". Somerset Maugham

FRIDAY:

"There is a price which is too great to pay for peace, and that price can be put into one word; one cannot pay the price of self-respect" W. Wilson

"'Tis safest making peace with sword in hand". George Farquhar

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY FOR WEEK ENDING JUNE 22, 1951

MONDAY:

"Disillusionment is always the enemy of peace. It comes from expecting too much, too easily, too soon. In our impatience, we must never forget that fundamental differences have divided this world; they allow no swift, no cheap, no easy solution". Gen. Omar Bradley

TUESDAY:

"As the purse is emptied, the heart is filled". Victor Hugo

"Existance is a strange bargain. Life owes us little. We owe it everything. The only true happiness comes from squandering ourselves for a purpose. (For no one can be happy who lives only for himself)".
John Mason Brown

WEDNESDAY:

(THESE ARE WORDS THAT WERE SPOKEN BY A YOUNG VILLAGER WHEN [redacted] visited IRAN).

"At election time the army comes with the ballot box, and the ballots - already printed. There is one name on them. We line up, receive our ballots and march by the box, and drop them in". Douglas suggested that the villagers write in a different name, if they didn't like the candidate. And the villager replied: "That is impossible. The soldiers are here with bayonets. This is not America".

THURSDAY:

"Procrastination is the art of keeping up with yesterday". Don Marquis

FRIDAY:

"The truth is never gentle". Eugene Walter

"You must give liberty to the tongue when you ask for the truth".
Publilius Syrus

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS - THE COLUMBIA BROADCASTING SYSTEM
WORD FOR THE DAY...MONDAY, JUNE 11, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, JUNE 15, 1951

MONDAY:

"The paleest ink is better than the most retentive memory". S.G. Champion

TUESDAY:

"A conspiracy so immense, and an infamy so black as to dwarf any previous such venture in the history of man". Senator McCarthy

"Never be boastful; someone may pass who knew you as a child".
S.G. Champion

"Where boasting ends, there dignity begins" Edward Young

WEDNESDAY:

"Fear of itself is the greatest of all terrors, the deepest of all dread, the commonest of all mistakes". David Seabury

"You draw a line and make other chaps toe it - that's what I call morality".
George Bernard Shaw.

THURSDAY: - MIND

"Seeking to know is only too often learning to doubt". Anonymous

"My mind is in a state of philosophical doubt". Coleridge

"My mind don't function". Frank Costello

FRIDAY:

"When I was a boy of fourteen, my father was so ignorant, I could hardly stand to have the old man around. But when I got to be twenty-one, I was astonished at how much the old man had learned in seven years".
Mark Twain

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY,.....MONDAY, JUNE 4, THROUGH FRIDAY, JUNE 8, 1951

MONDAY:

"where law ends, tyranny begins". William Pitt

"The American constitution with its laws and guarantees, is but the roof and walls of a faith which dwells within. As long as the people keep their faith, that faith will keep the nation".

Maxwell Anderson

TUESDAY:

"You may rob an army of its commander, but you cannot rob a common man of his will". Confucius

WEDNESDAY:

"America in the assembly of nations since her admission among them, has invariably, though often fruitlessly, held forth to them the hand of honest friendship, of equal freedom, of generous reciprocity. She has uniformly spoken among them, though often to heedless and often to disdainful ears, the language of equal liberty, equal justice and equal rights".

John Quincy Adams.

THURSDAY:

"It was invented by a man named Webster, to use up all the words in his dictionary that didn't mean anything". (This in reference to definition of diplomacy)

Will Rogers

"There is no need for propaganda to be righ in intellectual content".

Dr. Paul Goebbels

FRIDAY:

"There are some situations in which we are unable to take action; all we can do is brace ourselves against the shock. But there are other situations in which we have the power to act: and that is ~~XXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXXX~~ when we need all our firmness and singleness of purpose - to strike quickly, hard and above all in the right place. With patience and strength we can endure all things and achieve many".

Jan Struther

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY.....MONDAY, MAY 28....THROUGH FRIDAY, JUNE 1, 1951

MONDAY:

"modest doubt, is called the beacon of the wise".....Shakespeare

"How a minority...reaching majority...seizing authority...hates a minority".
Leonard Robins

TUESDAY:

"There is no greater evil than taking the enemy lightly". A Chinese Philosopher

"If you miss the first buttonhole, you will not succeed in buttoning up your coat". Goethe

WEDNESDAY:

"God grants liberty only to those who love it, and are always ready to guard and defend it. Let our object be our country. And by the blessing of God, may that country itself become a vast and splendid monument, - not of oppression and terror, - but of wisdom, of peace and of liberty, upon which the whole world may gaze with admiration forever".
Daniel Webster

THURSDAY:

"Sir. I was struck by a gentlemen". Annonymous

FRIDAY:

"If people are unwilling to hear you, better it is to hold your tongue than them". Lord Chesterfield

"Man's silence is wonderful to listen to".
Thomas Hardy

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORDS FOR THE DAY....MONDAY, MAY 21 THROUGH FRIDAY, MAY 25, 1951

MONDAY:

"It is a maxim founded on the universal experience of mankind that no nation is to be trusted farther than it is bound by its interests". GEORGE WASHINGTON

TUESDAY:

"We are not satisfied to be right unless we can prove others to be quite wrong".
WILLIAM HAZLITT

WEDNESDAY:

"Jumping at conclusions is not half as good exercise as digging for facts".

"How much the sense is deceived by distance". DANTE

THURSDAY:

"There is no sweetness in a cabbage twice boiled, nor in a tale twice told".
THOMAS FULLER

FRIDAY:

"Who cares about spelling? Milton spelt dog with two g's. The American Milton when he comes, may spell it with three g's...while all the world wonders".
AUGUSTINE BIRRELL

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE WORD FOR THE DAY.....MONDAY, MAY 14 - THROUGH - FRIDAY, MAY 18, 1951

MONDAY:

"Why should I spare words, they cost nothing". Seneca

"In cases of defense, tis best to weigh the enemy more mighty than he seems". Shakespeare

"All the affairs of men hang by a slender thread and sudden chance can ruin what once was strong". Ovid

TUESDAY:

"If you cannot bit it is better not to show your teeth". John Ray

"The future is purchased by the present". Samuel Johnson

"Nothing is so full of victory as patience". S.G. Champion

WEDNESDAY:

"He who serves the public is a poor animal. He worries himself to death, and no one thanks him for it". Goethe

THURSDAY:

"We dare not blind ourselves to thefact that we are in a race against the enemy and so far we are lagging in that race. While we were stockpiling our homes with refrigerators and television sets, the Russians were stocking tanks and radar". Bernard Baruch

"Let us not underrate the value of a fact; it may one day flower into a truth". Thoreau

FRIDAY:

"Disillusionment is always the enemy of peace. It comes from expecting too much, too easily, too soon. In our impatience we must never forget that the fundamental differences which divide this world allow no swift, no cheap, no easy solutions. But it is time that we steered by the stars, not by the lights of each passing ship. Time that we realized that we can not abdicate in this present struggle and leave the whole problem to the armed forces".

Gen. Omar Bradley

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY.....MONDAY, MAY 7, - THROUGH - FRIDAY, MAY 11, 1951

MONDAY:

"You say the little efforts that I make will do no good: they never will prevail, to tip the hovering scale where justice hangs in balance. I don't think I ever thought they would. But I am prejudiced beyond debate in favor of my right to choose which side shall feel the stubborn ounces of my weight"..

Bonaro Overstreet

TUESDAY:

"There are those who are too easily discouraged when the news is unfavorable. It is not the tradition of those who love liberty to yield to discouragement. Our country owes its place in history to the fact that the people become more resolute and determined as danger and difficulty increase".

Cordell Hull

WEDNESDAY:

"For youth the future is long, the past short. It is easily deceived because it is quick to hope". Aristotle

"Youth and white paper take any impression". John Ray

THURSDAY:

"In olden times sacrifices were made at the altar - a custom which is still continued". Helen Roland

FRIDAY:

"If you suppose yourself sure while you have an enemy you are putting yourself in peril". Saint Bernard

"Wise men can learn much from an enemy". Aristophanes

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE WORD FOR THE DAY.....MONDAY, APRIL 30 THROUGH FRIDAY, MAY 4, 1951

MONDAY:

"A good parson once said that where mystery begins, religion ends"

"Can I say as truly at least of human laws that where mystery begins, justice ends"

"Whenever separation is made between liberty and justice, neither is safe"
EDMUND BURKE

TUESDAY:

"It takes years in this country to tell whether anybody's right or wrong. It's kinder a case of just how far ahead you can see. The Fellow that can only see a week ahead is always the popular fellow, for he is looking with the crowd. But the one that can see years ahead, he has a telescope - but he can't make anybody believe he has it". WILL ROGERS

WEDNESDAY:

"The vanity of being known to be trusted with a secret is generally one of the chief motives to disclose it" SAMUEL JOHNSON

"Fortunately nothing in this world is provable". JOHN KEATS

THURSDAY:

"When you assemble a number of men, to have the advantage of their joint wisdom, you inevitably assemble with those men all their prejudices, their passions, their errors, of opinion, their local interests, and their selfish views. It therefore astonishes me to find this system approaching so near to perfection as it does, and I think it will astonish our enemies, who are waiting with confidence to hear that our counsels are confounded like those of the builders of Babel".
BEN FRANKLIN

FRIDAY:

"The race is not always to the swift, or the battle to the strong - but that's the way to bet". DAMON RUNYON

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY....MONDAY, APRIL 23 THROUGH FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 1951

MONDAY,

"Our most threatening enemy is not the evil intention of the ordinary man, for his intention is usually good. A worse danger is the increasing confusion of out time". G.L. Dickenson (A Cambridge Professor)

"The greatest thing in this world is not so much where we are, but in what direction we are moving". Oliver Wendell Holmes.

TUESDAY:

"Nothing is of more service to mankind than a prudent mistrust". Euripides

"Half our mistakes in life arise from feeling where we ought to think, and thinking where we ought to feel". John Collins

WEDNESDAY:

"The wise man guards against the future as if it were the present". (A Roman Philosopher)

"Who heeds not the future will find sorrow close at hand". Confucius

"Everyone loves power, even if they do not know what to do with it". Disraeli

THURSDAY:

"It is important for men in power to remember that people at a distance from power are not fools; and that even if they are, a fool can sometimes put on his clothes better than a wise man can do it for him". Jonathan Daniels

FRIDAY:

"A modesty in delivering our sentiments leaves us a liberty of changing them without blushing". Thomas Wilson

"Altogether they puzzle me quite. They all seem wrong; and they all seem right". Robert Buchanan

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY....MONDAY, APRIL 16 THROUGH FRIDAY, APRIL 20, 1951

MONDAY:

"Man is a gregarious animal, much more so in his mind, than in his body. He may like to go alone for a walk, but he hates to stand alone in his opinions." George Santayana.

"The least pain in our little finger gives us more concern and uneasiness, than the destruction of millions of fellow-beings". William Haslitt.

TUESDAY:

"So what, I had a better year than he did"....BabeRuth

WEDNESDAY:

"If the great American people will only keep their temper on both sides of the line, the troubles will come to an end. Let the people keep their self-possession, and just as other clouds have cleared away in due time, so will this great nation continue to prosper as heretofore". Abraham Lincoln.

THURSDAY:

"In the determination of our global policy, care must be exercised to avoid committing our resources beyond what we can safely spare, to sap our national strength to the point of jeopardy to our own security. For it would be illogical for us to yield our own liberties in the safeguard of the liberties of others....to forfeit our own heritage of freedom in securing the freedom of others". GEN. D. MacArthur

FRIDAY:

"The conquering hero comes, sound the trumpets, beat the drums. But let us not forget that the idol of today pushes the hero of yesterday out of our recollection, and will in turn be supplanted by his successor of tomorrow". Thomas Morrell & Washington Irving.

"We can't all be heroes because someone has to set on the curb and clap as they go by". Will Rogers.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
THE WORD FOR THE DAY....MONDAY, APRIL 9, 1951 THROUGH, FRIDAY, APRIL 13, 1951

MONDAY:

"Let every man practise the art he knows best". CICERO

"The less we know the more we suspect". Josh Billings

"Behind an able man there are always other able men". Chinese proverb.

TUESDAY:

"Without salesmanship we could not sell anything. If we could not sell anything we might as well not make anything; because if we made things and could not sell them, it would be as bad as if we sold things and couldn't make them". Stephen Leacock

WEDNESDAY:

"In a storm at sea, no one on board can wish the ship to sink; and yet, not infrequently all go down together because too many will direct and no single mind can be allowed to control. So with an army - it is better directed by a single mine, (though inferior) than by two superior mnes, at variance and cross-purposes with each other". Lincoln

THURSDAY:

"The most precious of all possessions is the power over ourselves; power to withstand trial, to bear suffering, to front danger, to follow our convictions - the power of calm reliance in scenes of darkness and storms" John Locke

"Self-control is more often called for than self-expression". William Wister Comfort.

FRIDAY:

"A General must be skillful in preparing the materials of war, and in supplying his soldiers; he must be a man of mechanical ingenuity, careful, persevering, sagacious, kind and yet severe, open yet crafty, cautious yet enterpriging." Socrates.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, APRIL 2, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, APRIL 6, 1951

APRIL 2

"Next in importance to freedom and justice is popular education, without which neither freedom nor justice can be permanently maintained".....James Garfield.

All men among themselves are by nature equal, the inequality we now discern hath its spring from the civil law". .....Thomas Hobbs.

APRIL 3

"Dress not thy thoughts in too fine a raiment. Be not a man of superfluous words"....
Marcus Aurelius

"If you don't advertise yourself, you will be advertised by your loving enemies"...
Elbert Hubbard

APRIL 4

"Self-respect is the noblest garment with which a man may clothe himself - the most elevating feeling with which the mind can be inspired". ....Samuel Smiles

"Some members of Congress would best promote the country's peace by holding their own".....George Prentice.

APRIL 5

"If you're going to find out the facts of a thing, what's the sense in guessing out what ain't the facts, and wasting ammunition?".....Mark Twain.

"We cannot live on probabilities, the faith in which we can live bravely and die in peace must be a certainty, or it is nothing". .... J.A. Froude.

"In this world truth can wait - (she's used to it)".....Douglas Jerrold.

APRIL 6

"I believe it is universally understood and acknowledged that all men will act correctly, unless they have a motive to do otherwise". .... A. Lincoln.

"Now my friends, there appears to be a difference of opinion between you and me, and I really feel called upon to decide the question for myself".....A. Lincoln.

EDWARD R. MURROW WITH THE NEWS
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, MARCH 26, 1951, THROUGH FRIDAY, MARCH 30, 1951

March 26

"Next in importance to freedom and Justice is popular education without which neither freedom nor justice can be permanently maintained"...James Garfield.

"Education is a companion which no misfortune can depress, no crime can destroy, no enemy can alienate, and no despotism can enslave"....Joseph Addison.

March 27

"If the trumpet gives an uncertain sound who shall prepare himself for the battle".

"Opinion is like water...it flows easily downhill but it takes a lot of pressure to pump it up".....

"artificial optomism alienates more friends than it makes".....Corinthians.

March 28

"Let thy speech be short, comprehending much in a few words"....Anonymous

March 29

"It is prudent for a man to abstain from threats or contemptuous expressions, for neither weaken the enemy. Threats make him more cautious; and contemptuous remarks excite his hatred and a desire to revenge himself"....Machiavelli

"The reasoning of the mightiest is always the best"...Jean De La Fontaine.

March 30

"Give your decisions, never your reasons. Your decisions may be right, but your reasons are sure to be wrong"....Lord Mansfield.

"Men's judgments sway on that side fortune leans"....George Chapman.

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, MARCH 19, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, MARCH 23, 1951

March 19

"Some critics are like chimney-sweepers: they put out the fire below and frighten the swallows from their nests above; they scrape a long time in the chimney; cover themselves with soot and bring nothing away but a lot of cinders and then sing from the top of the house as if they had built it". -- Longfellow

March 20

"Governments accuse the other of perfidy, intrigue and ambition as a means of heating the imagination of respective nations, and incensing them to hostilities". Thomas Paine

"There is no need for propaganda to be righ in intellectual content". -- Goebbels.

March 21

"Certainly there are lots of things in life that money won't buy, but have you ever tried to buy them without money?" -- Ogden Nash.

"The price we pay for money is sometimes paid in liberty". -- R. L. Stevenson.

March 22

"Remember, though a thousand men agree upon a subject, if they know nothing about that subject, their opinion is of no value". -- Anonymous

"It takes two to speak the truth; one to speak and another to hear". -- Thoreau.

March 23

"There's not so variable a thing in nature as a lady's headdress". Joseph Addison.

"All good hats are made out of nothing". Oscar Wilde.

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, MARCH 12, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, MARCH 16, 1951

March 12

"We cannot expect to have an honest horse race until we have an honest human race". —— (Anonymous)

"The gambling known as business looks with austere disfavor upon the business known as gambling". —— Ambrose Bierce

"Do not trust, nor contend nor lay wagers, nor lend, and you'll have peace to your life's end". —— Thomas Fuller.

March 13

"The average American citizen is true to his Christian principles three hundred and sixty-three days in the year....on the other two days of the year he leaves those principles at home and goes to the tax office, and the voting booths, and does his best to damage and undo his whole year's faithful and righteous work". Mark Twain.

March 14

"I maintain, contrary to the general opinion, that the sinews of war are not gold, but good soldiers; for gold alone will not produce good soldiers; but good soldiers will always produce gold". ——Machiavelli

"Modern warfare is an intricate business about which no one knows everything, and few know very much". — Frank Knox.

March 15

"My mind don't function". —— Frank Costello

March 16

"Whoever profits by the crime is guilty of it". —— (Old French Proverb)

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, MARCH 5, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, MARCH 9, 1951

March 5

"Two roughs were playing cards for high stakes, when one of them - suspecting his adversary of foul play - straightaway drew his bowie knife from his belt and pinned the hand of the other player upon the table, exclaiming: 'If you haven't got the ace of spades under your palm, I'll apologize.'" —Lincoln

March 6

"As things, by making them too thin and fine, are soon broken, so by too much contention, the truth is made intricate and doubtful." —Stefano Guazzo

"The only true spirit of tolerance consists in our conscientious toleration of each other's intolerance." —Coleridge

March 7

"He who merely knows right principles is not equal to him who loves them."
—Confucius

"If you your lips would keep from slips, five things observe with care: to whom you speak, of whom you speak, and how and when and where. If you your ears would keep from jeers, these things keep meekly hid: myself and me, or my and mine, or how I do or did." —W.E. Norris

March 8

"One thorn of experience is worth a whole wilderness of warning." —J.R. Lowell

"Experience is our only teacher, both in war and in peace." W.S. Landor

"We must all creep before we can walk and all be bitten before we can bite."
—R.S. Surtees

March 9

"I wants it so arranged so that honest English working men can sleep peaceful in their bed at night; so that nothing will come through the roof and explode; and nobody will come through the door without a search warrant." —Ernest Bevin

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, FEB. 26, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, MARCH 2, 1951

February 26

"Revolutions are not made: they come. A revolution is as natural a growth as an oak. It comes out of the past. Its foundations are laid far back."
—Wendell Phillips 1852

February 27

"If you will give the American people an opportunity to function, not by fear nor yet by favor, and let every segment of society feel that it is not disfavored to the advantage of another, in a few months you will see a tremendous change." —Baruch

February 28

"The public buys its opinions as it buys its meat or takes in its milk—on the principle that it is cheaper to do this than to keep a cow. So it is. But the milk is more likely to be watered." —Samuel Butler 1890

"Optimism is the noble temptation to see too much in everything." —Chesterton

March 1

"I shall exert myself in every way...I shall use method in my exercises... I shall change and change about - not lying under one tree until injury from over-exertion sets in, but changing to another now and then." —Mark Twain

"Florida's all right if you can keep from catching a sailfish and going to the expense of having it mounted." —Kin Hubbard

March 2

"'Tis not seasonable to call a man a traitor that has an army at his heels; one with an army is a gallant man." —John Seldon

"A modesty in delivering our sentiments leaves us a liberty of changing them without blushing." —Thomas Wilson

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, FEB. 19, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, FEB. 23, 1951

February 19

"Promises may get friends, but it is performance that must nurse and keep them." --Owen Feltham

"If a man begins with certainties, he will end with doubts. But if he will be content to begin with doubts, he will end with certainties."
--Roger Bacon

February 20

"Never have we had a greater need for the greatness of soul which was his...for his unshakeable faith in God...for his unswerving devotion to duty...for his nobility of nature, his integrity, his courage and his wisdom..."
--General Matt Ridgeway's message to his field commanders on Washington's Birthday

February 21

"One man is as good as another - and a great deal better." --Thackeray

"Workmen are soldiers with different weapons but the same courage." --Churchill

"It is well to remember that the rights to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness are based on: work." --Leigh Hodges

February 22

"We don't know one millionth of one per cent about anything." --Thomas Edison

February 23

"It is easy to make plans in this world - even a cat can do it. But when one is out in remote oceans it is noticeable that a cat's plans and a man's are worth about the same." --Twain

"The peace of Europe may test our stability even more than the war of Europe." --Robert H. Jackson

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, FEB. 12, 1951 THROUGH, FRIDAY, FEB. 16, 1951

February 12

"In times like the present, man should utter nothing for which they would not willingly be responsible through time and eternity."
—Lincoln (1862)

"I believe I shall never be old enough to speak without embarrassment when I have nothing to talk about." —Lincoln (1864)

"People attach too much importance to what I say, anyhow." —Lincoln

February 13

"Why does the statement of a new fact always leave us cold. Because our minds have to take in something which deranges our old ideas. We are all like that in this miserable world." —J.M.Charcot (1857)

"The best way of answering a bad argument is to let it go on." —Sydney Smith

"If you lose in an argument you can still call your opponent names."
—Elbert Hubbard

February 14

"Folks will always take a chance. Old Noah gambled on not getting the foot and mouth disease in there with all those animals. And old King Solomon bet a hundred women he wouldn't pay 'em alimony and won his bet. —Will Rogers

February 15

"When a thing ceases to be a subject of controversy, it ceases to be a subject of interest." —William Hazlitt

February 16

"In diplomacy, an ultimatum is a last demand before resorting to concessions." —Bierce

"To threaten and to strike are not always the same thing."
—Pontanus

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, FEBRUARY 5, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, FEB. 9, 1951

February 5

"In this great struggle every form of human right is endangered if our enemies succeed. I say this in order to impress upon you that no small matter shall divert us from our great purpose. There may be some inequalities in taxation; there may be mistakes made sometimes; things may be done wrong. But I beg of you, as citizens of this great republic not to let your minds be carried off from the great work we have before us. This struggle is too large for you to be diverted from it by any small matter." —Lincoln, 1864

February 6

"This thing of talking about somebody's life being too valuable to risk in an airplane is not only the bunk but an insult to the men we ask to do our flying. Aviation is not a fad but a necessity. And it will be our mode of travel long after all the people who are too valuable to fly have met their desired deaths by the roadsides on Sunday afternoons." —Will Rogers

February 7

"Neutrals are doused from above and singed from below." —German Proverb

"In statesmanship, get the formalities right. Never mind about the moralities." —Mark Twain

February 8

"Our public men are speaking every day, on something; but they ain't saying anything...You take a boy's life, don't you? When you take boys away, you take everything they have in the world, that is their life. Well, that's the way to do with wealth. Take all he has; give him a bare living the same as you do the soldier; give him the same allowance as you gave the soldier - (all of us that stay at home). But no, it will never get anywhere. The rich will say it ain't practical; and the poor will never get a chance to find out if it is or not." —Will Rogers

February 9

Not with dreams, but with blood and with iron shall a nation be moulded to last." —Swinburne

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, JAN. 22, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, JAN. 26, 1951

January 22

"The essence of politics is compromise." —Macaulay

"Compromise is never anything but an ignoble truce between the duty of a man and the terror of a coward." —R.W. Kauffman

January 23

"We must mobilize all our resources - men, money, material and morale - so that whatever happens our armed forces can get what they want when they want it...While we were stockpiling our homes with refrigerators and television sets, the Russians were stockpiling tanks and radar. Let's not forget, this isn't a game of mumblety-peg; when you lose you lose once and for all." —Bernard Baruch

January 24

"The true rule in determining to embrace or reject anything is not whether it have any evil in it, but whether it have more of evil than good. There are few things wholly evil or wholly good. Almost everything, especially of government policy, is an inseparable compound of the two." —Abraham Lincoln

January 25

"Authority without wisdom is like a heavy axe without an edge - fitter to bruise than polish." —Anne Bradstreet

"He who gives fair words feeds you with an empty spoon." —H.G. Bohn

"Speak out in acts: the time for words has passed and deeds alone suffice." —Whittier

January 26

———

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, JAN. 15, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, JAN. 19, 1951

January 15

"The Budget is a mythical beanbag. The Congress votes mythical beans into it, and then tries to reach in and pull real beans out." --Will Rogers

"The one thing that hurts more than having to pay an income tax is not having to pay an income tax." --Thomas Dewey

January 16

"Constitutions are intended to preserve practical and substantial rights, not to maintain theories." --Oliver Wendell Holmes

"The trouble with arguments is that they ain't nothing but theories. And theories don't prove nothing. There's another trouble about theories: there's always a hole in them somewheres, sure, if you look close enough."
--Mark Twain

January 17

"Morality is simply the attitude we adopt towards people we personally dislike." --Oscar Wilde

"Having said, from our respective points of view, the worst thing we could say about each other, having uttered the ultimate insult, there is no reason we can't be friends." --S. N. Behrman

January 18

"If the words establish a claim, I claim a crown. But if deeds are needed, I am helpless as the dust." --Abdullah Ansari

"Peace and security cannot be organized on the shifting sands of verbal promises and declarations." --Maxim Litvinov

January 19

"People will believe anything you tell them if you whisper it."
--Joseph Armstrong, Fall River, Mass.

"It takes less time to do a thing right than to explain why you did it wrong." --Longfellow

NARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, JAN. 8, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, JAN. 12, 1951

January 8

"The fruit of a just reliance upon the patriotism and intelligence of a free people...The same reliance will always produce the same result when the independence and liberty of our country are assailed." —Andrew Jackson

January 9

"No man was ever yet so devoid of sense as to debate the right of self-defense." —Defoe

"The public do not know enough to be experts..but they do know enough to decide between them." —Samuel Butler

January 10

"Almost everything that is great has been done by youth...The youth of a nation are the trustees of posterity." —Disraeli

"The destiny of any nation..at any given time..depends on the opinions of its young men under five and twenty." —Goethe

January 11

"I wish it could be fixed up so the men that start the wars do the fighting." —F.P.Dunne

"While the right to talk may be the beginning of freedom, the necessity of listening is what makes the right important. Nothing has been accomplished if the wisest man proclaims his wisdom in the middle of the Sahara Desert." —Walter Lippmann

January 12

"We better start doing something about our defense...All we got to go by is history...And history don't record that economy ever won a war." —Will Rogers

"Liberty is often mistaken for license..In truth, liberty is restraint of selfishness..Liberty belongs to all..But you have to give up a lot to preserve it." —Confucius

EDWARD R. MURROW'S "THIS IS THE NEWS"
WORD FOR THE DAY, MONDAY, JAN. 1, 1951 THROUGH FRIDAY, JAN. 5, 1951

January 1

"The New Year is at the door. I wish for the stupid a little understanding, and for the understanding a little poetry. I wish a heart for the rich, and a little bread for the poor. But above all, I wish that we may blackguard each other as little as possible during the New Year." —Heinrich Heine

January 2

"We are just here for a spell and pass on. Any man that thinks that civilization has advanced is an egotist. Fords and bathtubs have moved you and cleaned you, but you was just as ignorant when you got there. We know lots of things we used to didn't know, but we don't know any way to prevent 'em happening." —Will Rogers

January 3

"Expediency, or choosing that course which offers the slightest obstacles to the feet, that is the downhill one." —Thoreau

"Behind every argument is someone's ignorance." —Louis Brandeis

January 4

"Trust men and they will be true to you. Treat them greatly and they will show themselves great." —Emerson

"It is not a question of talking but of steering the ship."
—Seneca, 64 a.d.

January 5

"Nothing will ever be attempted if all possible objections must be first overcome." —Samuel Johnson

"Most people have ears, but few have judgment. Tickle those ears and depend upon it: you will catch their judgments... such as they are." —Lord Chesterfield, 1749

EDWARD R. MURROW - COMMERCIAL TIMINGS

7:45:00-7:45:45 - Opening Commercial, ending with:

"..AND NOW, HERE IS EDWARD R. MURROW"

7:45:45-7:45:47 - 2-second Pause

55:15 7:45:47-7:57:15 - Main News Portion, ending with

"THIS IS ED MURROW - I'LL BE BACK IN A MOMENT WITH THE WORD FOR TODAY" - NOW

7:57:15-7:57:17 - 2-second Pause

* 7:57:17-7:58:28 - "BUT FIRST, BOB DIXON" and 2nd Commercial, ending with

"NOW HERE'S MR. MURROW WITH HIS WORD FOR TODAY"

7:58:28-7:58:30 - 2-second Pause

58:30 (3) 7:58:30-7:58:55 - Word For Today, ending with:

"GOOD NIGHT AND GOOD LUCK"

7:58:55-7:58:57 - 2-second Pause

7:58:57-7:59:30 - Closing Commercial, ending with:

"THIS IS THE CBS...RADIO NETWORK"

* Note: 7:57:17 is an approximate timing. However, the PAUSE, and the 2nd Commercial must time to 1 min and 13 secs.